PREFACE.

Many judicious persons were decidedly of the opinion that the welfare of community required the publication of a work like the one here presented. It was thought that the public ought to be put in possession of facts, sufficient to enable them to form a correct judgment, in relation to the moral character of the Society which has lately arisen under the auspices of Mr. John H. Noyes. It was also deemed important that the pernicious principles, propagated by Mr. Noyes and his coadjutors, should be exhibited in such a manner that their immoral tendency and ultimate ruinous results might be clearly seen.

Moreover, several professional gentlemen of high standing—who were familiar with the principal facts elicited by some startling disclosures made at Putney, Vt., in the autumn of 1847—were consulted in reference to the propriety of publishing the present work;
cumstances not only justified, but loudly called for such a publication.

Furthermore, a prospectus was issued, briefly stating the design of the work, and about three hundred copies were readily subscribed for in the town where the Society under the immediate supervision of Mr. Noyes was located, and which, for several years, was the head-quarters of the sect, self-styled Perfectionists. Many subscribers were also obtained in adjacent towns, and in other places at considerable distance—thus affording unmistakable indications of public sentiment relative to the propriety of the present undertaking.

The writer, for a few years past, having been a resident of the village where the Community under the immediate control of Mr. Noyes had its location, and also having had access to the published documents of the Perfectionists, has thus been favored with many facilities for acquiring a knowledge, not only of the doctrines of the sect, but of the character and policy of the Society in Putney—their head-quarters, until recently. The work, however, owing mainly to the mass of material and the peculiar character of the subject, has been one of much labor and many difficulties. To prepare, select, and arrange such matter as would be suitable for the public eye, adapted to the design of the work, and prof-task. How far the object in view has been successfully accomplished, is left for the reader to decide.

The following pages contain matters, not merely of local or sectional interest, but bring to view some important facts and principles in which all classes of community have a common interest. Disclosures have been made, clearly exhibiting the practical tendency of the pernicious principles held and promulgated by the Perfectionists. An account of recent developments—so far as deemed advisable—has been given; and one of the most iniquitous systems ever devised and propagated under the name and garb of Christianity, is brought to view—exhibiting a deeply laid scheme of personal aggrandizement—a scheme designed to sever the ties of consanguinity—sunder the social relations—subvert the present order of society—sap the foundations of civil government—and erect upon the ruins of republican institutions and the relics of morality, a petty Monarchy, with a head as dogmatical and merciless as the Papal Throne, and the whole throughout as corrupt and shameless as the "MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS"—thus exalting an ambitious individual who aspires to be sole dictator of all under his direction and control; and who has assumed that he and his adherents, in their present "advanced position," are Matters connected with recent disclosures, have, to some extent, been legally investigated, and the results of that investigation are given—also all events worthy of note connected with the history of the sect, so far as known, have been recorded.

Owing doubtless to the nature of the facts which have gone out from the head-quarters of the sect—accompanied it is presumed by some exaggerated statements and false rumors—some persons entertain slight fears as to the moral influence of an exposure. But it is probable that this impression prevails only to a limited extent; and arose doubtless from a misapprehension of the design and character of the work. Facts sufficient to exhibit the most prominent features of the sect, must necessarily be given; but this has been done in language the least objectionable. Although it was necessary to speak of vice with some degree of freedom, under the peculiar aspect which, in the present instance, it has assumed; yet it has been the design throughout to do it in the most proper manner; and at the same time the most correct moral sentiments have been strictly inculcated and strongly enforced. An extended detail of disgusting scenes has not been given; neither a repetition of much that has been said by Mr. Noyes. This was uneccessary and highly improper. One prominent present work has been to place upon record such matters as the times imperiously demand. Were this not done at the present juncture many facts might be forgotten, and at some future period this hideous monster of iniquity—which still exists—might rise up, with renewed vigor, when the facts necessary to counteract its deadly influence could not be rescued from oblivion.

It does not enter into the design of the present work to discuss the subject of perfection as presented in the Bible. Every person conversant with the Scriptures is familiar with the fact that the terms perfect and perfection are employed to designate a state or standard of moral attainments, especially under the Gospel Dispensation, which men are exhorted to strive to attain. As to the height or definite point to which we may arrive in the present life, there is some difference of opinion among evangelical denominations. In regard to this question sincere Christians may honestly entertain different views without being derogatory to their Christian character. Touching this matter it does not come within the province of this work to give even an opinion; but to exhibit the kind of perfection taught by Mr. Noyes and his followers. Bible perfection and Noyesism are as diverse as light and darkness. The one is the highest state of moral purity at which man is capable of arriving: the other is the worst of spiritual unhappiness.
with which man's moral nature was ever infected. Bible perfection is moral purity,—the perfection of Noyes and his followers is perfection in sin!

The issue of the work has been delayed beyond the time originally intended. This was rendered necessary in consequence of the impracticability of obtaining at an earlier date some important facts and documents deemed very essential. The delay, however, will doubtless add to the permanent value of the work. The subject has lost none of its importance; meanwhile, matters of considerable interest have been in a course of gradual development, and it is believed that the additional information obtained will amply compensate for the necessary delay.

Having been prepared to meet the present exigencies, this unpretending volume is now commended to the favor, and submitted to the candid consideration of the public, with an earnest desire that it may be instrumental of good. Should it contribute something toward effectually correcting the existing evil—which it is designed to expose—and thereby subserve, to some extent, the cause of truth and correct morals, the end of its publication will be answered.

INTRODUCTION.

In every age and among all nations impostors and fanatics have existed—ruinous errors and pernicious heresies have prevailed—and delusions dark and deep have exerted a wide-spread and destructive influence. But the present appears to be an unusually prolific period, distinguished for the multiplicity of erroneous systems and idle theories, which are starting into existence in rapid succession on every hand; and which, after continuing for a time, will undoubtedly share the fate of many which have gone before—be exploded and pass away, or remodelled and merged in other systems of kindred character, between the essential elements of which there is a close affinity.

But a few years have elapsed since a singular sect, claiming a religious character of the highest grade, arose in New England, called Perfectionists. This sect—which has advanced—has attracted but little attention until very recently. Its adherents, however, during the brief period of their peculiar tenets; have been industriously disseminating the most pernicious principles. Almost from the advent of this newistical demon dency of their distinctive doctrines; but of late there has been such a disgusting exhibition of their legitimate fruits among the leading Perfectionists at head-quarters as to shock the moral sense of the community, demand some legal action, and call for a public exposure of the enormities of this sect.

Perhaps, as a general rule, the best method to overthrow error is to present its opposite—plain, simple, unvarnished truth. But when new and erroneous systems, and especially such as are peculiarly iniquitous, are first being promulgated and urged upon public attention, a presentation of such facts as may have come to light, tending to exhibit their true character, and an investigation of their fundamental principles, are sometimes, if not always, demanded. This the public good imperiously requires.

Recent disclosures of a startling character have elicited some astounding facts, which, together with sentiments heretofore published by the Perfectionists, place this sect, but more especially the leaders and most prominent members, before the public in a very unfavorable—yea, in a most contemptible—light; and they now occupy a no very enviable position. The veil, which had been spread, and had long hung, over this hydra-headed monster of iniquity, has at length been removed, and the principal actors in the scene behind the curtain are now exposed to public view. And
N. was arrested in the fall of 1847, for some very high crimes—that he was placed under heavy bonds—that he absconded soon after his arrest—that the Grand Jury for Windham County found a Bill against him—and that he did not appear at Court when his case came on for trial, and his bonds were forfeited. Now, these circumstances are sufficient to fasten the conviction upon every mind that Mr. N. is guilty of the charges alleged against him; but in addition to this, there is abundant proof in relation to this matter, and not a shadow of doubt remains as to his guilt.

Prior to his arrest, Mr. N. and his coadjutors had put in motion a somewhat complicated machinery, which required some ingenuity to invent, and considerable time and labor to construct and bring to completion. This engine, the product of so much labor and skill, was designed to operate against all existing organizations, both of Church and State.

Many of the views advanced by Mr. Noyes are so peculiar to himself, and the doctrines taught so diverse from evangelical truth, and the system in all its fundamental principles and practical tendencies so evidently anti-Christian, that we think it should hereafter be known by the more appropriate name of Noyesism, in preference to Perfectionism. But for the sake of convenience these terms are used as synonymous in the present work.

Noyesism is evidently near akin to, if not the worst
there is not a shadow of doubt—this its advocates acknowledge and assert. It aims a deadly blow at the foundations of the civil and social fabric, and is as detrimental to the moral interests of a community where its influence is felt, as the pestiferous Sirocco is to the health of the person who inhales its baneful breath—and it is as fatal to the moral principles of those who are brought fully under its power, as the deadly Simoom is to the hapless wanderer who may chance to fall in its way.

Such being the character and tendency of Noyesism, arguments for its refutation may seem almost superfluous. Indeed, so numerous are the discrepancies in the writings of Mr. N. and his co-laborers, and such palpable absurdities appear in almost every part of the system, that it carries to every considerate mind its own refutation. The contagion contains, to some extent, its own antidote.

That the character of the sect, and the tendency of the entire system of doctrines which they advocate and to which they pertinaciously adhere, are what they are here represented to be, is abundantly sustained by a multitude of well authenticated facts; and when divested of the false glosses which its principal advocates have thrown around it, the whole system is so utterly revolting that it can gain no credit in an intelligent and virtuous community;—it needs only to be known, to be discarded.

extent, its true character and direct tendency concealed from public view; and although much was inferable from the language used at different times, yet such confused explanations of terms and phrases were often given, and so many artful disguises thrown around it, that the mind of the reader would be darkened, and the whole subject mystified, except to those who had been initiated into the secrets of the system. Moreover, when facts discreditable to the characters of the leaders were in danger of being disclosed, every possible effort was made for their suppression.

It is deeply to be regretted that this enormous system of error and iniquity ever had an existence, and rendered an exposure necessary; but it must be a matter of heartfelt rejoicing to every lover of truth and good morals, that facts have been so far divulged as to undeceive the public in relation to the character of the sect, and the tendency of their distinctive doctrines. And even now, rather than exhibit the guilt of those concerned, it would be more agreeable—were it compatible with the public good, and in keeping with correct principles—to throw the mantle of charity, or the pall of oblivion, over the whole matter, and let it forever rest in undisturbed repose. But this can never be consistently done;—then if it cannot be buried in oblivion, nor covered with the broad mantle of Christian charity, it should be held up to public view with all its "imperfections upon its head," and its most glaring features exposed to the gaze of an outraged and justly indignant community.
INTRODUCTION.

The subject, we are aware, is naturally uninviting and even quite repulsive; but, however irksome or unpleasant the task imposed, exposure is necessary in order to afford timely warning to the unwary, and guard against further encroachments of one of the most fatal delusions which ever had an existence—not unaptly termed a mushroom growth of all modern fanaticisms. How exceedingly strange that men will plunge into those follies which make them the derision of their race! But "the more egregious a foolery, the more greedily do men swallow it down, and the more anxious are they to be gull'd with still more monstrous absurdities."

Had the principal advocates of this system renounced their errors, and abandoned their vicious course of conduct, the necessity of exposure would have been greatly diminished, if not entirely obviated. But this is not the case. They have renounced none of their principles—they have abandoned none of their practices; but on the contrary are laboring, and evidently intend to labor with renewed zeal and redoubled energy for the dissemination of their heretical and dangerous doctrines; and they will continue to exist and exert a fatal influence wherever their touch is felt, unless some counteracting influences are brought to bear against them.* Information of what has trans-

---ing Putney, Mr. Noyes located at a place called Oneida --- ---entral New York, and is now building up a Community
---me principles of the one formerly under his supervis-pired at Putney should be communicated to all parts where the contagion has spread. But says one—"Let it alone and it will die of itself—let it take its natural course and it will work its own cure." This is just the doctrine the leaders would like to have preached—such a course would essentially subserve the interests of their own cause. The history of the past clearly exhibits the incorrectness of such sentiments. If applicable in one case they would be in all, and if universally applied it would be a death blow to every moral enterprise of the age. Moral evil finding in the unregenerate heart a congenial soil, if not timely eradicated, shoots up with the rapidity and luxuriance of a noxious plant.

Aside from occasional references to this sect by a few public journals, it has passed almost entirely unnoticed. The movement has generally been regarded as a mere chimera of a distempered brain, and looked upon as an insignificant and harmless affair, utterly unworthy of notice. A public attack, it was thought, would give it a notoriety and importance to which it was not entitled. Thus it was permitted secretly to diffuse its poison through society, until it began to assume a threatening aspect, and call loudly for exposure.

But the peculiar character of the subject renders it extremely embarrassing. To give publicity in a proper manner to a sufficient number of facts, and exhibit the peculiar doctrines of the sect in such a manner as to give the public a correct idea of its character, and the tendency of the whole system, and at the same time not outrage the moral sense and offend the correct taste of an intelligent and virtuous community, is a difficult work. Moreover, objections are sometimes made to any disclosures or efforts for the suppression of the sin of licentiousness. It is true, there are extremes to be avoided on either hand. Indiscriminate disclosures and injudicious efforts on the one hand, and profound silence and a heartless apathy on the other, are equally to be deprecated. The proper position is a medium point equi-distant from these two extremes.

Noyesism, in all its essential elements, tends to immorality, and has resulted in systematized licentiousness! This is the sum and end of the system! But what renders it doubly dangerous is the fact that it originated with, and is sustained by, a few persons of considerable talent; but delusions are not confined to the ignorant, and vice in its most revolting forms often appears among persons of acknowledged talent. The odious sin of licentiousness, in whatever form it makes its appearance, is debasing in its character, and ever ruinous in its results. That it exists throughout the land, and prevails to an alarming extent in our principal cities, we are compelled to believe; and this state of things calls for combined and energetic efforts for its suppression. In view of its bearing upon this subject, we think it proper here to notice briefly some recent action in one of our principal cities. A large number city, in consequence of the increase of licentiousness, held, in the winter of 1848, a series of meetings for consultation, and for the purpose of directing attention to this subject. The various Protestant denominations of the city were represented, and more than seventy clergymen were present at different periods in the course of the proceedings. At one of the meetings a resolution was adopted, appointing a committee to prepare an Address to the citizens of Boston, which was to be confined "to the consideration of the opinion entertained by many persons, that licentiousness is a subject of such a nature as not to admit of any direct notice; an opinion which, so far as it prevails, must prevent any action that would be effectual in restraining the increase of this sin."

The committee appointed reported an Address to an adjourned meeting, which, after being amended, was adopted, and, by a special committee appointed for that purpose, presented to the citizens of Boston through the public prints. That Address contains some sentiments so truthful and well-timed, touching matters under consideration, that we shall make no apology for quoting a few paragraphs. In reference to licentiousness, the Address speaks thus:—

"It is the impression of many thoughtful and excellent persons, that this is a vice so peculiar in its chareffort for its suppression, lest the evil should be aggravated, rather than diminished. We do not wonder at this apprehension, or at the silence and inaction which it produces. But we entreat our friends to review their judgment under the light of this single consideration, that, if nothing be done, or said, or attempted, the evil must go on increasing, multiplying its means of destruction, and augmenting the number of its victims.

"This is not a vice that declines by being 'let alone.' It thrives under concealment. It spreads its aneses, and destroys its prey, with the advantage which it gains from being left to pursue its plans unreproved and unobserved.—It seems to us clear, therefore, that disregard of its existence is unwise and wrong. To do nothing, to attempt nothing, to say it is so difficult or so delicate a subject that we cannot even speak of it without aggravating the evil, is to yield to a despair, as unjustifiable on principles of reason and experience, as it is unworthy of those who have faith in Christ and his religion. We know that harm has come from injudicious action and inconsiderate speech. We know that the subject is environed with difficulties. But we also believe, that the difficulties which lie in the way of abating any moral nuisance, and the mistakes which have been made by others, should only quicken our endeavors to discover and apply the proper means for its suppression. . . . . All history and observation, the tendencies of human nature, and the facts of universal experience, contradict the supposition, that this vice, having its origin in an abuse of our nature which many of the habits of modern civilization tend rather to encourage than to check, will cease from the land through its own want of ability to perpetuate itself.
of social circumstances. It is found among the poor and among the rich, the coarse and the refined, in the country and in the city. . . . . There is no alternative; as we conceive, but direct effort for the suppression of this vice, or its unchecked continuance and probable increase. We say probable, but we might more justly speak of its certain increase. . . . . We are persuaded, that the reluctance which so many feel, to have any connection with it even in thought, keeps them in ignorance of much that ought to be known. And worse still, it prevents that contemplation of the real character of the evil, which could not but awaken an anxious desire to be instrumental in its removal. If a proper sense were entertained of the enormity of the vice; if its mournful and fatal consequences were rightly apprehended; if the wise and good would allow themselves to think about it long enough to see what it is, and what it produces—we cannot believe they would rest in that inactivity which now leaves the mischief to its own natural power of diffusion."

Emanating from so high a source, the foregoing sentiments are entitled to serious consideration. They are so candid and weighty that they can hardly fail to carry conviction to every unprejudiced mind, of the propriety and importance of judicious action in relation to this subject. A strong reason for directing special attention to this matter at this time, is found in the fact that licentiousness as an integral part of Noyesism has come up in a new form—has assumed an aspect before unknown. Hitherto this vice has shunned the public gaze, and been content to live and thrive in its own secret haunts. All have been ready to admit its heinousness, not excepting its votaries and victims.
But Mr. Noyes has undertaken to transform this enormous vice into an exemplary virtue, and make it ultimately stalk unblushingly abroad at noon-day! And with this unholy mantle drawn around him, Mr. N. has impiously thrust himself forward into the front rank of the "sacramental host," professing to be conducting the tribes of the true Israel on to glorious achievements and ultimate triumph; when in fact he appears to be leading on to certain defeat the very van of Abaddon's inglorious army!
CHAPTER I.

Error assumes almost every conceivable aspect, and presents itself to public view in various forms. It is often arrayed in a gorgeous attire, and brings to its aid the most plausible arguments. But however pleasing or imposing in aspect—however ably advocated or artfully adorned, error is ever delusive and dangerous, misleading and tending to ruin those who embrace it, and are brought under its fatal influence. Its victims, however, are often unconscious of danger, even when sudden destruction awaits them; and its advocates not infrequently labor with quenchless zeal and tireless assiduity for its dissemination.

Error, in all its diversified forms, is ever dangerous and destructive, but never more so than when it masquerades as truth, and is so far traceable through all its facts and details and exposed—an almost hopeless task
But happily our Savior has given us a plain, simple rule by which all difficult and doubtful cases may be readily decided. He said, in reference to the false teachers of primitive times—"By their fruits ye shall know them." This rule is not only applicable to all teachers of like character in every age, but it contains a principle by which all false systems of religion may be tested. The nature of doctrines may be known by their legitimate fruits. Practical consequences ever stand as a fair commentary upon principles—the character of which may be as definitely determined by their results, as the nature of the tree is known by its fruit. The ruinous results of erroneous doctrines should be faithfully exhibited, that their true nature may be known, and their certain tendency clearly seen—that thus a sufficient number of beacon-lights may be set up along the dangerous coast of error to afford a timely warning to the inexperienced voyager upon the ocean of life, lest his bark be suddenly wrecked upon the hidden rocks below.

Without a knowledge of facts, the innocent and unsuspecting would often be unapprized of the dangers to which they stand exposed—and, lured by a syren song, they might be unconsciously drawn aside from the path of rectitude, and fall victims to a fatal delusion. For the purpose of exhibiting the nature, tendency and practical results of Novesism, we proceed to give a
NOYESISM UNVEILED.

John H. Noyes claims to have been the founder of this sect—which claim it is presumed no one will feel disposed to contest, for such honors are not to be coveted.

To gratify, to some extent, a natural curiosity, existing in the public mind, in regard to persons who have published new doctrines and founded new sects, we shall briefly refer to the parentage and early history of the founder of modern Perfectionism.

John H. Noyes was born at West Brattleboro, Vt., Sept. 3, 1811, and was the eldest son of John and Polly Noyes.

Hon. John Noyes, the father of John H., was a man of respectable talents, had a liberal education, and in early life proposed to enter the Christian ministry, but subsequently abandoned the idea, and devoted himself to mercantile pursuits, in which for many years he was extensively engaged. Being successful in business, he accumulated considerable property; and subsequently acquired some political distinction—being a Representative in Congress in 1816, from the Southern Congressional District of Vermont. He became a resident of Putney about the year 1823, where he afterward lived, —and died in 1841. At his decease the lawful heirs to his estate—consisting of three sons and three daughters— inherited each a handsome patrimony.

Thus it appears that the founder of the sect of Perfectionists had a respectable, and even somewhat honorable parentage. But in a country like this, where every person must rely... resources if he would rise to eminence, or be extensively useful, the question of pedigree can never be one of very great importance in a moral point of light. Ancestral titles and artificial distinctions can never screen the guilty, and make vice honorable—neither will a want of them detract from true merit, and render virtue valueless.

We are not apprized of any thing remarkable in the early history of Mr. Noyes; we shall, therefore, pass over the scene of his boyhood as affording little worthy of note, simply adding an item of information, which he has given of himself:—"Much of my youth was spent in reading history, romance and poetry, of a martial character, such as the Life of Napoleon, The Crusaders, Marmion, &c."

Mr. N. graduated at Dartmouth College in 1830, being then nineteen years of age. Soon after leaving college, he commenced the study of the law. After having studied law about one year, or, in August, 1831, his attention—as he says, in giving an account of himself—was directed to religious subjects, and he soon after made a profession of religion, at a protracted meeting held in Putney, Vt., and became a member of the Congregational church in that town. Soon after uniting with the church in Putney, Mr. N. determined on entering the ministry, and commenced his studies preparatory to engaging in that work. In about four weeks from the time of his professed conversion, he entered the Theological Seminary at Andover, Mass., where he remained one year, and then went to New Haven, Ct., and entered the Theological Seminary connected with Yale College, in the fall of 1832. In August, 1833, he was licensed to preach, by the New Haven Association. After receiving license, he labored for six weeks as pastor of a small church in North Salem, N. Y. In February, 1834, he came out a Perfectionist, so called.

Soon after this took place, the Association from which Mr. N. received license to preach, withdrew that license; and subsequently, he was excommunicated from the Congregational church in Putney—of which he had been a member—for heresy and breach of covenant, on the ground of the following "specifications of charges," which, together with several others of a more local character, were fully sustained:—

"1. That he has taught that the ordinances, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, are done away.

"2. He has spoken of social and public prayer in terms of condemnation, as being hypocritical.

"3. He has inculcated the sentiment that the Sabbath is abolished, and that the whole moral law, as summarily contained in the ten commandments, is abrogated:"

CHAPTER II.

Origin of Modern Perfectionism—Brief Sketch of its Early History.

In February, 1834, as we have seen, Mr. Noyes became a Perfectionist—he being then a student in the theological department of Yale College. For many months prior to this period, Mr. N. had been approximating toward this point. He had become connected with a "little band of revivalists" in New Haven, which was called the "Free Church," and labored with them in some new measure movements. For some time Rev. James Boyle, a revivalist of that day, was pastor of the Free Church. During the excitement under the labors of Boyle in the winter of 1833–4, Noyes hoisted his colors. In the following spring Boyle became a Perfectionist. Noyes and Boyle, being associated, soon commenced the publication of a paper. This was the germ, and here was laid the foundation, of the sect of Perfectionists, which, in a few short years, has fully developed its true character. This was the origin of the new ism, and from New Haven went forth the moral contagion, which has since been diffusing its poison through society.*

It may be proper here to remark that Noyes and Boyle did not long labor in unison—they soon separa-

* A gentleman residing in Central New York has given a brief sketch of the origin of a sort of Perfectionism, in that State, which carries us back toward the movement in New at New Hav ted, and Boyle subsequently renounced his Perfectionism. Boyle, though an early, was not the first convert of Noyes. Abigail Merwin, a member of the Free Church, was the first to embrace Perfectionism after Noyes. She made rapid proficiency, and rendered efficient service to Mr. N., but soon left him. Mr. N. afterward in the "visions of his head" had a view of her, and says:

"I saw her, standing, as it were, on the pinnacle of the Universe, in the glory of an angel; but a voice appears that one Hiram Sheldon raised up a small society in Central New York, about the year 1833 or 1834. The gentleman just alluded to thus speaks of him:

"During his lifetime his influence was great in Central New York, and he used it to develop and sustain order. He is now dead. His followers scarcely retain a separate identity, except a few 'New Lights' in the vicinity of his place of residence."

The same writer continues:

"The lumen of Eastern New York Perfectionism is referred to John B. Foote, a theological student in Kirk's School, at Albany. Modest and timid to excess, the revival spirit soon impelled him with its deep-toned enthusiasm. Around him gathered the most devoted of the class. Mr. K. tried to quell the storm, but failed. The refractory students became the preachers of the new faith. To their labors most of the Perfectionists in Mass. and westward owes its existence."

"Chauncey F. Dutton had breathed the afflatus. In 1833 he left Albany and entered the theological department at New Haven, Ct. Here he infused the new enthusiasm into John H. Noyes, a young man from Putney, Vt., with whom he had become familiar. Thus began the logos of New Haven Perfectionism."

Whatever influence the move in New York might have had at New Haven, it is evident that Noyes has advanced views so peculiar to himself, and so diverse from all that had gone before, that he may properly be said to be the founder of modern Perfectionism in its present peculiar aspect.
from which I could not turn away, pronounced her title—'Satan transformed into an angel of light.' I gave her up, and cast her from me as one accursed."

Many of the members of the Free Church embraced Perfectionism and left the Church, but afterward seceded from Noyes and returned.

Noyes, having lost most of his influence at New Haven, left, and spent considerable time in travelling in different parts of the country. During his peregrinations he made a few converts to his faith; but at length he gave his "wanderings o'er," and returned and seated himself at Putney in 1838, where he resumed the publication of a paper called "The Witness," which had been suspended about a year previous, in consequence of the odium brought down upon him by the publication of the Battle-Axe Letter, which we shall hereafter notice.

A minute detail of events which have from time to time transpired among small societies of Perfectionists in different parts of the country—possessing as they do more of local than of general interest—would not be very entertaining to the reader, and would swell this little volume beyond its intended limits. Therefore we shall pass over many things as unworthy of note. Suffice it to say, that enough transpired long since to clearly indicate the course of the current among Perfectionists, and point with unerring accuracy to ultimate results. One writer who has been acquainted with
"It has been the standing reproach of Perfectionists, that their views of the peculiar binding nature of the Decalogue, were such that the grossest licentiousness might be indulged, and then would be in strict accordance with their theology. And, in fact, their views have been so carried out. We omit the late rumors, which appear to be well founded, of the abominable lewdness of Noyes and his immediate disciples.* From the outset of New Haven Perfectionism, there have been a succession of individuals, receivers of that peculiar type of Perfectionist doctrine, who have been guilty of overt acts of immorality. . . . But what makes this look more abhorrent, is that those involved, asserted the favorite tenet that they were "born of God," "not under law, but under grace," and led, as all Perfectionists profess to be, by the Spirit of the Lord in all these matters! It being a sentiment of the sect, that all who believed (setting charity so far aside as to seldom speak even its name, it being all faith) became so perfectly free from sin, as to be no more able to commit any transgression of moral law; all the wrath, malice, evil speaking, harsh denunciations, and other evils in which they indulged, were stamped with the seal of the Almighty—all was inspired by God! I have known Perfectionists in the highest excitement of rage, assert that it was a holy anger, well pleasing to God."

Passing by other places and matters of minor consequence, we shall direct the attention of the reader more particularly to Putney. Here, at an early period, Mr. N. planted his standard—here he unfurled his banner—here his press teemed with his heresies—here was a society under his immediate eye and supervision—here was, the head quarters of the whole sect—here Perfectionism was disconnected from all other doctrines—and here was a fair criterion by which to judge. What Noyesism has been in Putney it will be elsewhere—for the streams will partake of the nature of the fountain whence they flow.

CHAPTER III.

Legal Proceedings.

Persons familiar with the doctrines taught by Mr. Noyes, would naturally expect that, sooner or later, there would be an outbreak—an exhibition of their practical results; for the legitimate fruits of those doctrines would, in due time, naturally make their appearance among those who adhered to them. What was expected, has come to pass. Almost from the very commencement of the promulgation of those doctrines there have been occasional demonstrations; and—according to Mr. N.'s own acknowledgments—frequent violations of moral and statute law, among small societies of Perfectionists in different parts of the country. But Mr. N. denied at the time that such immoralities were the proper fruits of his doctrines, and attributed them to an admixture of what he was pleased to term spurious doctrines, with his own, in such societies. But he pointed to Putney, Vt., as the place where Perfectionism was pure—unmixed with other doctrines—and asserted that he was willing it should be judged by its moral fruits there. But it was soon found that Mr. N. and the society under his supervision at Putney were quite as deeply involved in guilt as others had been—showing conclusively that the conduct of other societies elsewhere was in perfect keeping with his principles. It is true, he denounced such conduct after it was made approbation of the course pursued by some of the precocious members of such societies, because they had commenced carrying out his doctrines before consulting him—thus committing an act of insubordination against the acknowledged head—or he secretly favored such conduct, and openly denounced it when made public, merely for the purpose of blinding the eyes of the people. The latter is the more probable, for he taught his followers at Putney that such conduct was right among them!

But facts of a startling character at length came to light, in relation to the conduct of Mr. Noyes, and the civil authorities deemed it their duty to institute a legal process against him; and he was accordingly arrested, Oct. 25, 1847, charged with adultery and fornication. He waived an examination before a Justice of the Peace, and came forward and gave bonds for his appearance at the County Court. If innocent of the charges alleged against him, why did Mr. N. waive an examination? He could not have feared false witnesses, for the witnesses were from among his own people. If innocent, an examination would have resulted in an honorable acquittal. But he well knew that an investigation would bring out facts highly discredeitable to his moral character; hence he waived an examination, and remarked, as we learn, that the people of Putney should not have sport that day at his expense.

But let us glance at the course pursued by the Perfectionists in relation to the examination of the case of Mr. N. by the Grand Jury. When it was ascera-tained that a subpoena was about being issued for the purpose of summoning the witnesses, there was quite a stir and scattering among the Noyesites at Putney. Several important witnesses hastily left the State, before the officer could serve the subpoena upon them, and they remained away till after Court. Why all this? If those persons knew nothing against the moral character of their leader, why abscond? The reader can draw his own inferences.

Let us look a little farther. The Grand Jury before whom the case was examined found a bill against Mr. Noyes for adultery and fornication. The witnesses in the case were all Noyesites except one or two who were formerly followers of him, but, faltering by the way, had lost their fellowship with him. Now it cannot be supposed that Mr. N.'s own disciples would testify falsely against him;—they were very reluctant to testify at all, and acknowledged no more than they were obliged to; and undoubtedly they told the truth as far as they went, but whether they told the whole truth, it is not for us to say—they know in relation to that.*

Now the fact that a panel of eighteen Grand Jurors, without one dissenting voice, found a bill against Mr.

* It may be proper here to remark that the testimony taken before the Grand Jury is of such a character, that, as a whole, it would be improper to publish it. It brings to view language so obscene, and conduct so base on the part of Mr. Noyes, that it would be unfit for every human ear to hear. Moreover, the end may not be yet, in relation to legal proceedings, for the whole of the testimony before all such mat-Noyes, and that too upon the testimony of his own followers, speaks volumes, and makes the case exceedingly clear.

But again:—At the session of the County Court for Windham County, held in September, 1848, the case of Mr. N. came on for trial; but he did not appear, and his bonds were of course forfeited. Now it is always to be presumed that an accused person who holds himself ready for a legal investigation before a proper tribunal, is innocent until he is proved guilty. But fleeing from a legal investigation is always deemed prima facie evidence of guilt. This case at the commencement, in regard to Mr. N.'s character, was quite dark, but it grew darker and darker at every successive step of the legal proceedings; and the manner in which those proceedings were closed up, leaves not a shadow of doubt in the public mind as to the guilt of Mr. N.

We give a certified copy of the Record in the office of the Clerk of the Court for Windham County, in the case of Mr. Noyes. It contains the indictment against Mr. N., together with all other legal proceedings which were matters of record:

Noyes, charged before me with the crimes of adultery and fornication, shall make his personal appearance before the County Court next to be holden at Newfane, in and for the County of Windham, on the 4th Tuesday of April, A. D. 1848, and answer to the matters and things which shall then and there be objected to him in that behalf, and shall abide the order of said Court thereon, and not depart without leave of Court—then this recognizance to be void, otherwise of force.

Taken and acknowledged this 25th day of October, A. D. 1847.

Before me, Royall Tyler, Justice of the Peace.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be true copies of Records and Files, remaining in my office.

Royall Tyler, Justice of the Peace.

As by the Files and Copies of the said Royall Tyler, Justice of the Peace, here on file, more fully and at large appear.

And the cause was entered in this Court, at a term thereof begun and held at Newfane, in said County, on the fourth Tuesday, being the 25th day, of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty eight.
And the said John H. Noyes stands indicted by the Grand Jurors within and for the body of the County of Windham, at said April term of said Court, which indictment is in the words following, to wit:—

STATE OF VERMONT, |
\text{Be it remembered, that at Windham County,...}38. \]

Noyes, late of Putney, in the County of Windham aforesaid, on the tenth day of June, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-seven, at Putney aforesaid, in the County of Windham aforesaid, he the said John H. Noyes then and there being a married man, with force and arms did carnally know one Fanny M. Leonard, she the said Fanny M. Leonard then and there being a married woman, the wife of one Stephen R. Leonard, and with her did commit adultery—contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the State.}

And the Grand Jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present:—That the said John H. Noyes, on the twentieth day of August, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-seven, at Putney aforesaid, in the County of Windham aforesaid, he the said John H. Noyes then and there being a married man, with force and arms did carnally know one Achsah Campbell, then and there being a single woman, and with effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the State, as by said indictment on file.

The said John H. Noyes appeared at the last term of this Court, by Larkin G. Mead and William C. Bradley, his Attorneys; it was then ordered by the Court that this cause be, and the same was, continued to the present term of this Court.

And now upon this twenty-sixth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, and during the session of this Court, the said John H. Noyes being thrice called in open Court to appear in Court, and save himself and bail, appears not, but thereof makes default; and the said John R. Miller, who recognized to have the body of the said John H. Noyes in Court, being thrice called in open Court to have the said John H. Noyes now in Court and save his recognizance, does not appear, neither does he have the body of the said John H. Noyes in Court here, but thereof makes default.

Whereupon it is considered by the Court here, that the said recognizance be, and the same is, forfeited to the Treasurer of the State of Vermont.

CHAPTER V.

Confessions of John H. Noyes.

Mr. Noyes, in his organ—the Spiritual Magazine of Aug. 5, 1848—announced the intention of publishing a book of several hundred pages, to be entitled

"CONFESSIONS OF JOHN H. NOYES."

This work we are informed is to comprise—1. The "religious history" of Mr. N.; 2. A "history of the Putney Community, including the transactions which led to the agitation, prosecutions and dispersion" in the fall of 1847; 3. "A full theoretical exhibition of the social organization of the kingdom of heaven, including all the principal articles" which Mr. N. had published in his papers on that subject.

"Confessions of John H. Noyes"! Now this title is certainly calculated to raise, at first sight, the expectation that the book would contain some acknowledgment of his offences; but we are informed that nothing of the kind is to appear. In common usage, the term confession signifies an acknowledgment of guilt; using it in this sense, Mr. N.'s book and its title would be as far apart as opposite points of the compass. But the term in the present instance is used in an entirely different sense. We are to have a confession of Mr. N.'s "Religious Experience"!—a confession of his "Social Experience"!—and a confession of his "Social Principles"! Wonderful confessions indeed!
sion of guilt, for he has assumed that he cannot sin; and when a person arrives at this point, a quietus is put upon conscience. And we can never expect convictions of wrong, or confessions of guilt, from a person who has completely stultified or lost his conscience!

Mr. N. has made a clean sweep of all legal barriers, by assuming that he is exempt from all "written law"; and as an offset for rejecting law, he professes to be under grace; but facts show conclusively that he is under neither law nor grace!

We learn from Mr. N. that he has delayed the publication of the book which he announced as forthcoming, for the purpose of having the "advantage." of saying something in relation to "Noyesism Unveiled." He is perfectly welcome to all the "advantage" he can gain in this respect. We intend the present work shall stand upon its own merits, and if it does not carry to the mind of the reader a conviction of its truthfulness, we ask no credit for it.

But Mr. N. has recently published the "First Part" of his promised book, as there was no "advantage" to be gained by delaying the publication of this part. It contains a "Confession of Religious Experience." Now it is rather late in the day for this. It is about as proper as it would be for a criminal, standing upon the gallows, to relate his religious emotions when committing the crime for which he is about to be executed! A confession of Mr. N.'s irreligious acts would be better suited to the times.
This is a pamphlet of 96 pages, rather poorly "got up." A parcel of these books was sent to Putney and offered for sale at fifty cents per copy! Not finding a ready sale at that, they soon went down to twenty-five cents, and we learn that they are a drug in the market at that. One thing is certain—the buyer could have the satisfaction of reading 96 pages, made up almost entirely of old, stale matter which was published four or five years ago by Mr. N. in his paper at Putney. It was thought by some that this was a little akin to Mormons "milking the Gentiles"! So much for the "First Part" of Mr. N.'s book.

The Second and Third Parts are coming "sooner or later." Perhaps, from the intimations given by Mr. N., we can so far anticipate the character of what is forthcoming as to say all that may be necessary in reference to it.

Part Second is to contain a "history of the Putney Community, including the transactions which led to the agitation, prosecutions and dispersion" in the autumn of 1847. We think we shall give a pretty full history of the Putney Community, and "shall endeavor to complete, if we do not supersede" Mr. N.'s "work." We know something about Putney matters, and touching the "transactions" the whole may be summed up in few words—a knowledge of the high-handed offences which Mr. N. had been committing, was the cause of
"We think we can do better than to engage in a small quarrel with an excited village. We thought so last fall, and chose the peaceable, non-resistant course—'giving place unto wrath.'"

We had not supposed Mr. N. was so extremely "peaceable and non-resistant"—a change must have come over him. After his arrest, he roared like the lion at the end of his chain; but when he found that the grappling of the law were fast upon him, he became quite "peaceable and non-resistant." There was a powerful motive for this. The prospect of being encompassed by granite walls, and looking through iron grates, was not the most pleasing; and in view of this, he might well become so very "peaceable and non-resistant" as to leave the State—thus voluntarily absenting himself from a legal investigation, which was a virtual acknowledgment of his guilt.

The Third Part of Mr. N.'s work is to comprise a "full theoretical exhibition of the social organization of the kingdom of heaven." In this part Mr. N. is going to bore the reader again with old, stale—not to say, obscene—matter, published in his paper long ago. But in addition to this we expect he will give us something new. After leaving Putney, Mr. N. drew up a long article, entitled "Institutions and Organization of the Kingdom of Heaven," i.e. a Noyesite Community! He sent this article to the "believers" at Putney, and they copied it and sent it to three persons in different parts of the country, and gave them instruc-

CHAPTER VI.

Soon after his arrest at Putney in the autumn of 1847, Mr. Noyes absconded; and about the same time several members of his society there, left town. But some of the most prominent members still remained; the Association was not disbanded, and they continued the publication of the Spiritual Magazine, their official organ. Mr. N., though at a distance, could keep up an open communication, by letter, with the society at Putney, and still control their affairs; and although under arrest, with not a shadow of doubt remaining as to his guilt,—through the medium of his press, which was still in operation at Putney, he could disseminate his pernicious principles with almost as much facility as before.

Under this state of things the citizens of Putney would of course feel dissatisfied; and they deemed it advisable, in a collective capacity, to take some action, and in a proper manner give an expression of public sentiment. They accordingly assembled for consultation, and several resolutions were adopted expressive of their sentiments, and those resolutions were as mild as could have been expected under the circumstances. Several public meetings were held in December, 1847, the principal proceedings of which, as reported by the Secretary, we give below:
The inhabitants of the village of Putney met at the vestry of the Congregational Meeting-House, on the evening of the second day of December, inst., for the purpose of taking into consideration the outrageous proceedings of the Perfectionists, so called.

1. Organized by appointing Preston W. Taft, Chairman, and William Houghton, Secretary.

2. On motion of Dr. John Campbell, appointed a committee of five to draft and report some appropriate resolutions at a future meeting.

3. Israel Keyes, Esq., Rev. A. Foster, Rev. H. Eastman, Hon. John Kimball, and James Keyes, Esq., were appointed said committee.

3. On motion, adjourned to Monday evening, Dec. 6, 1847.

Monday, Dec. 6. Met agreeably to adjournment, and Israel Keyes, Esq., reported the following preamble and resolutions, which, after being discussed, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, An Association of Perfectionists, so called, has existed in the town of Putney for several years past, who, among other things, have declared that the Moral Law is abolished, and have inculcated sentiments of a licentious tendency, and exerted an influence detrimental to the moral interests of the community;—and whereas, from recent disclosures it is evident that those licentious principles have been carried out in practice to an alarming extent in said Association, threatening to ruin the characters of all connected therewith or brought under its deadly influence;—and whereas, John H. Noyes, the founder and leader of said Association, has recently been arrested for his penalty of the law;—and whereas, said Association is publishing a periodical, denominated the Spiritual Magazine, through the medium of which they are disseminating their pernicious principles, and are thus exerting a demoralizing influence, not only upon the community in the more immediate vicinity of its publication, but in different parts of the country where it is circulated;—and whereas, the principles of said Association are evidently disorganizing in their tendency; and adapted, if carried out to their utmost extent, to abolish all law and government, both of Church and State, and erect upon their ruins an irresponsible hierarchy: Therefore,

"1. Resolved, That the moral interests of this community demand the immediate dissolution of said Association.

"2. Resolved, That the Spiritual Magazine, which is the principal organ of said Association, through which they are disseminating their pernicious sentiments, and which has evidently become a public nuisance, ought immediately to be discontinued; and that no publication whatever ought hereafter to be issued by said Association inculcating those principles which, if carried out in practice, would result in a violation of the laws of the land.

"3. Resolved, That those Perfectionists who still remain in this town, ought publicly to renounce those principles which tend to, and abandon those practices which are, a violation of the statute laws of the State.

"4. Resolved, That those persons in this town who have received serious injuries from said Association, ought to be suitably remunerated by said Association.

"5. Resolved, That the Editors of the Vermont Phoenix, Windham County Democrat, Semi-Weekly Eagle, and Bellows Falls Gazette, be respectfully requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting. and that the Secretary furnish each of them with a copy of the same.

"WM. HOUGHTON, Secretary.

"Putney, Dec. 6, 1847."

The foregoing Preamble and Resolutions embody the deliberate sentiments of the citizens of Putney, who were resolved, by all prudent and lawful measures, to vindicate the rights of the injured, bring the guilty to justice, and remove this gangrene which had fastened upon the morals of the community.

The first resolution, the purport of which was that the moral interests of the community demanded the immediate dissolution of the Perfectionist Association, contains a self-evident truth, as clear as the shining of the sun at noon-day. No right-minded person, acquainted with affairs at Putney, could doubt this. But the Association was not dissolved. It is true, the public meetings at the chapel were discontinued; but the few still remaining continued to have little gatherings at private dwellings, and have kept them up to the present time—March, 1849.

But we have a little information touching this point, which came direct from headquarters. In the spring of 1848, about four months subsequent to the passage of the foregoing resolutions, one of the master spirits in the Putney Community held the following lan-

- World may think our Association dissolved,
- been going on from strength to strength
- last winter, in union with the heavenly
- among ourselves."
Among the Noyesites, "fellowship" has a peculiar meaning and an unusual significance. Thus it appears that in regard to the dissolution of the Association there was a total disregard of the deliberate sentiments of the citizens of Putney as set forth in the first resolution. By the expression, "Union with the heavenly world," which is coupled with "Fellowship among ourselves," the reader will readily perceive how impiously the Noyesites connect the most sacred things with the most crying abominations!

The second resolution in the series has reference to their organ, the Spiritual Magazine. The substance of that resolution is, that their paper, having become a public nuisance, ought forthwith to be discontinued; and that no publication of a licentious tendency ought to be issued from the press of the Putney Association.

This was taken in high dudgeon by the "acknowledged head" of the sect of Perfectionists. Touching this matter, Mr. Noyes, in the Spiritual Magazine published at Oneida Reserve, Aug. 5, 1848, speaks thus:

"It is sufficient to say here, that the immediate cause of the suppression of our paper at Putney, was a resolution passed at an 'indignation meeting' of the citizens of that place, denouncing our publication as licentious, and requiring an immediate stoppage of our press. If we had been fond of squabbling, it would have been natural for us to have resisted this arbitrary requisition; and it would be easy for us now to comment severely on the entire mistake of the citizens in regard to the character of our paper (which is too well known to its subscribers to need justification from the charge of licentious tendency); and we might say something about the inquisitorial, anti-republican character of proceedings which demanded the summary closing of a printing-office in a free country."

In the foregoing paragraph Mr. Noyes denies that his paper has been licentious in its tendency. The numerous extracts from his own writings found in this volume are prima facie evidence against him; and with this testimony before them, we could submit the question to the public without any doubt in regard to the decision. But we wish to ask a few plain questions touching this point. Will Mr. Noyes deny that his paper from the very commencement has been the exponent of his principles, and that he has designedly set them forth, though often in an ambiguous and mistified manner? Will he deny that the infamous conduct among the Perfectionists at Putney, which was a gross violation of the civil law, and gave rise to the prosecutions in the fall of 1847, was the legitimate fruit of those very principles? Will he deny that in the Community over which he presides the marriage covenant is virtually nullified? Will he deny that the seventh commandment in the Decalogue is set aside by Perfectionists? Will he deny that he and his most enthusiastic admirers believe and teach that the crimes known in law as adultery, fornication and incest, are the "Cross of Christ"? And will he deny that his paper has been set for the defence and promulgation of most or all of these doctrines, and that they have been openly are at once carried to the conclusion that the paper has been grossly licentious in its tendency, Mr. N.'s naked assertion to the contrary notwithstanding. In view of all the facts, it appears that the citizens of Putney were not mistaken in regard to the character of Mr. N.'s paper. Was it, then, "inquisitorial" and "anti-republican" for them to ask for the stoppage of such a print? Certainly not. But Mr. N. thinks he ought to be permitted to do as he pleases in this "free country."
His views of freedom evidently coincide with those of a certain foreign emigrant who once landed upon our shores. A son of Erin's "swate" Isle had heard of the land of liberty, and had long and ardently desired to enjoy its inestimable privileges. At length he was permitted to reach this happy country; and he sought an early opportunity to give a practical demonstration of his freedom. Scarcely had his feet pressed American soil, when he dealt a heavy blow at the first person he met, and laid him prostrate upon the ground. When called to an account for his offence, before the civil authorities, he remarked, in justification of his conduct, that he thought this was a free country, where every man might do as he "pleased."

So Mr. N. would like to do as he pleases; and is not only determined to "pass and repass as he pleases the usual boundaries of technical theology," but resolved if possible to carry away all the legal landmarks in the tious character and tendency of Mr. N.'s official organ, by here introducing a few pertinent remarks of O. H. Platt, Esq., Editor of the Vermont Phoenix. The opinion of Mr. Platt is entitled to weight from the fact that he is a barrister by profession, and consequently conversant with judicial matters, and competent to judge in relation to the character of Mr. N.'s paper when viewed in a legal point of light. It is as follows:

"A paper so licentious and indecent—so seditious and immoral in its character, as this has been ever since its commencement, would not, even in the tainted atmosphere of the city, be tolerated for a single week. It would be indicted as a nuisance, before a second number could be issued, and suppressed by the strong arm of the law."

The purport of the third resolution of the series under consideration, was, that those Perfectionists still remaining in Putney "ought publicly to renounce those principles which tend to, and abandon those practices which are, a violation of the statute laws of the State." No attention was paid to this resolution—or at least no evidence was given that there was any reformation in their conduct; and it is a well known fact that they renounced none of their principles.

The substance of the fourth resolution was, that the Perfectionists ought suitably to remunerate those persons in Putney whom they had seriously injured. This no one pretends that an ample remuneration was made for the damages done to different individuals in consequence of the infamous conduct of Noyes and his colleagues.

We have thus briefly referred to the character of the resolutions passed by the citizens of Putney. Were those resolutions unreasonable? Not in the least. In view of the circumstances, we do not see how the citizens of Putney could have consistently expressed themselves in milder terms. Moreover, they did not imperatively demand that the resolutions should be complied with, for they did not consider that this was their prerogative; but they deliberately said in a collective capacity that they ought to be complied with; and it was then left optional with the Perfectionists to heed the voice of the people, or abide the issue. The resolutions were but partially complied with. The people said the moral interests of the community demanded the dissolution of the Perfectionist Association at Putney, which was a self-evident truth; but it was not dissolved, according to their own declaration. The people said that their paper ought to be discontinued, but it was not. It is true, a notice was issued, announcing the suspension (not discontinuance) of the publication of the paper, but that only "for the present." And the publication of the paper has since been resumed at Oneida Reserve, N. Y. A remark here, touching the topic of newspaper liberty, may not be ill-timed. The freedom of the press has the sanction of a constitutional guarantee; but the largest authorized liberty is subject to control.
license. Every denomination professedly religious has the right, through the medium of the press or otherwise, to promulgate their peculiar tenets, provided they are not contrary to the laws of the land, nor injurious to public morals. But whenever any sect professedly religious incorporate into their creed principles which tend to, and countenance and even enjoin those acts which are, a gross violation of statute law, and introduce vice and immorality in their most revolting forms, they forfeit the protection of law, and render themselves obnoxious to its penalties. Now it is a notorious fact, that the principles taught by Mr. Noyes are diametrically opposed to, and the course pursued by him and his followers is a gross violation of, the laws of the land, and are fatal to public morals wherever their touch is felt. This being the case, was it unjustifiable in the citizens of Putney to say that their press ought to be stopped? By no means. Yet Mr. N. denounces it as "inquisitorial" and "anti-republican." Such a charge comes with an ill grace from such a source.

Again—the citizens of Putney said that the Perfectionists ought to renounce their pernicious principles, but this was not done. In the notice which was issued by the publishers of the Spiritual Magazine, announcing the suspension of the publication of that paper, the doctrines which they had formerly taught, and all along had been inculcating, were commended, "for the present, to the re-examination of Perfectionists." Thus their disciples were put back upon a review. that they with the sentiments already taught, until circumstances would admit of their resuming the publication of their paper, which, as we have seen, has already been done. No evidence has been given that they have renounced a single iota of their principles; and the course which they are pursuing clearly indicates a settled determination on their part to disseminate still the same principles as heretofore published, so far as circumstances will admit. If they pertinaciously adhere to their pernicious principles, and are resolved to carry them out, unless prevented by the rigid supervision and administration of municipal law, it is time for the conservators of the public morals to be on the alert.

When at Putney, the Noyesites necessarily mingled to some extent in their business matters with the citizens of the village; and this state of things they found to be a little unfavorable to the carrying out of their peculiar social principles—being subject to public observation; which, together with their published principles, made no very favorable impression as to the state of morals among them. And when the law would allow them to remain no longer without feeling its penalties, the leaders left, and retired to a somewhat secluded spot, and now congratulate themselves on being "clear of the clashings of village interests." At Oneida Reserve, in Central New York, they have planted their standard, and are now beating up for recruits; and they hope to be permitted there to "work out" their social principles, unmolested. At the very outset in their operations, they gave the people in the vicinity of Oneida Reserve quite a smart sprinkling of "soft solder," obviously with a design to ingratiate themselves into their favor. But probably this worthless commodity will be duly appreciated by the intelligent citizens of that section of country. Mr. Noyes tells the people there that they are "less bigoted" than the inhabitants of New England, and he presumes they will let him "work out and publish his principles of association in peace." As much as if he had said, "If you will let us do as we please, and give us your sons and daughters to aid in building up our kingdom, we will call you pretty good fellows—otherwise, we shall think you no 'less bigoted' than the people of New England. Meanwhile we will keep up a very fair exterior—you shall have no occasion to complain of 'our general behavior to our neighbors,' but you must not meddle with our domestic affairs—you must not come within the 'charmed circle,' unless you will submit to all the rules and regulations." The heads of families in the vicinity of Oneida Reserve, if they would protect their own firesides, and preserve the sanctity of "sweet home," would do well to keep a vigilant eye upon the Noyesite Community there, although they will need no such caution after a full account of the doings at Putney is fairly laid before them. Should they suffer their sons and daughters to be enticed from under the parental roof, and by the soft hand of persuasion drawn within the "charmed circle," their certain ruin would be sealed.

But to return:—The citizens of Putney said that the Noyesites ought to renounce their pernicious principles. Was this improper? Not in the least. It will be readily granted that in matters of mere belief, not affecting the moral interests of the community, nor tending to the infraction of statute law, a resort to coercive measures would be an unauthorized invasion of the rights of conscience. But this was far from being the case in the present instance. The doctrines taught by Noyes tended directly to, and had actually resulted in, gross violations of law. The outrageous conduct complained of at Putney, was not contrary to, but in perfect keeping with, their principles. It was not only a necessary consequence, but a positive mandatory injunction of their doctrine; and they have at last taken the Heaven-daring and utterly outrageous position, that such infamous conduct is the “Cross of Christ”!!! Now it is perfectly plain that nothing short of a renunciation of the principles which were the basis of such conduct, would be satisfactory, or afford any security for the future. Circumstances might be such that they might deem it expedient, or consider it good policy, to promise an outward observance of the law; but what confidence could be placed in such promises? How far could we trust a person hardened in crime, upon a mere verbal promise, when he contended that he had a perfect right to transgress the laws of the land? He might be compelled by the pressure of exterior circumstances to change his course of conduct for a season, but without a renunciation of those pernicious principles which naturally lead to offensive conduct, there could be no radical reform: A Noyesite who passionately adheres to his principles, would not obey the law unless compelled to. Obedience to law would be disobedience to his leader, whose authority is considered paramount to all law.

We know full well what Mr. Noyes will say in regard to some points which we have noticed. He contends that he and his followers are exempt from law; hence in their view there is no immorality in perpetual violations of legislative enactments, or the letter of Divine law. Such absurd assumptions, and the sophistical arguments brought to sustain them, will have no force in an intelligent and candid community.

Let it be remembered that the resolutions to which we have already referred, were passed at a public meeting of the citizens of Putney, held Dec. 6, 1847. At that meeting a committee was appointed to lay the proceedings before the heads of the Corporation,* and they were instructed to urge particularly upon their attention the propriety of complying with the resolution relative to making remuneration to those whom the Perfectionists had injured. This committee was also to confer with them in relation to their future course of conduct, and report to an adjourned meeting to be held.

* Mr. Noyes, when at Putney, tried the experiment in a small way of conducting his pecuniary affairs on a plan similar to that of the Fourierists. He adopted the principle of a community of goods, and on the 9th of the same month. It was hoped that by this course the necessity of further prosecutions might be evaded. The committee reported that the heads of the Association refused to acknowledge that they had injured any one; but promised that for the future they would regard the requisitions of moral and statute laws, and that nothing of a licentious tendency should appear in their paper. This report was laid upon the table, not being satisfactory for the reason that they refused to remunerate those whom they had seriously injured, and because the promises made were considered worthless. But it may be asked—were the promises made by the Noyesites of any real value, and ought the citizens of Putney to have been satisfied with them? Let us see. The Committee appointed to confer with them, reported, that the leading Noyesites remaining in Putney, promised that their conduct, and that of the members of the Association, so far as they could control their action, should be governed in future by the requisitions of Moral and Statute Laws. Now, this language among common people would mean something, but in the mouth of the Noyesites it amounts to a "solemn nothing." They positively assert that the Moral Law is abolished! They have proclaimed it upon the hill-tops, and rung it through the valleys, that they are exempt from all "written law," and they glory in their freedom. They utterly scout the idea that the letter of the Moral Law, and the enactments standing in the Statute Books, are binding upon them, or should, regarded as a rule of life. They set themselves up as a privileged fraternity—exempt from all external law—having a law within them which is the rule of action—and they pretend that they are divinely inspired! They may be inspired, but if so, their inspiration is certainly of a very questionable character. If they will have it that they are inspired, we will not here contest the point, but must be allowed the privilege of expressing the settled conviction that they are inspired from the WRONG SOURCE! If their doctrines are doubted, or the correctness of their course of conduct questioned, the objector is met with the "mouth-stopping" declaration—"WE ARE DIVINELY INSPIRED!" This answers all questions—this ends all controversy in their estimation! However vicious their conduct and aggravated their crimes, they will not admit that they transgress any law that is binding. The law within them, by which they are governed, they assert to be paramount to all external, or written law! Of how much value would a promise be, coming from persons adhering to such principles? If they believed the Moral Law to be abrogated, they could not consistently obey it; for obedience to it would be disobedience to that internal principle which they declare to be paramount to all law. Moreover, it was declared by one of their number several months after this promise was made, that they had been pursuing the same course as formerly.

But it was reported that they promised that nothing of a licentious character or tendency should appear in this paper. This at first view appears very specious,
NOYESISM UNVEILED.

Again alluding to the public meeting at which the resolutions noticed in the preceding chapter, were passed, the same writer says:—

"We most cordially participate in the sentiments and indignant feelings expressed by the meeting. It is almost incredible, that in this intelligent community, people can be found so deluded, or so shameless, as boldly to avow and practice the doctrines attributed to this sect; and we should be much more amazed, if they were for a moment tolerated or suffered to exist. We are only surprised, that the citizens of Putney have exercised so much forbearance and moderation, and have not sooner extirpated so disgraceful an outrage upon society and Moral and Statute Law."

In fine, it has been matter of much surprise to people abroad, that the citizens of Putney have been so tolerant. Often have individuals in different places made remarks to this effect:—"Had the Perfectionists been located in our village or vicinity, they would not have been tolerated for any length of time. A community professing and practicing such doctrines as the one at Putney, if it could not be reached any other way, would come under the jurisdiction of mob law."

But an individual is occasionally to be found whose sympathies are wonderfully moved toward the Noyesites; the reason for this we are utterly at a loss to conceive, unless it be found in the fact that such persons find in the Perfectionists, congenial or kindred spirits. The plea of repentance was gratuitously set up for some of the Noyesites without for of palliating their criminalities. It was thought at Putney—whether by more than one person we are not prepared to say—that a promise of amendment by a few of the remaining Perfectionists was sufficient; which promise, as we have seen, was utterly worthless. That the Noyesites have reformed or ever intend as a body to reform, we have not a particle of proof to show. The course which Mr. N. and his followers are pursuing is a living commentary upon the utter futility of all promises of amendment coming from that quarter. But even admitting such promises to be reliable, would they satisfy the demands of justice against offenders? Not in the least. Such a principle applied to pecuniary matters would liquidate every debt which a person might have contracted. Just let him promise not to augment his liabilities, and he might demand exemption from payment. On the same principle the most notorious culprit might demand acquittal at the hand of the minister of justice.

Some persons have extremely lax views of repentance. Repentance has mostly to do with the past and present, although its genuineness is evinced by an exemplary future walk. Conviction of wrong done is indispensable to true repentance. Now the Noyesites have no such convictions, for they will acknowledge no sin: it is a leading doctrine with them that they cannot sin, do what they may. Here then is an insuperable barrier to repentance.
conscience whatever—do what they may, they are ready to wipe their mouths and say—"We have done no evil." Moreover, the legitimate fruits of genuine repentance appear not only in reformation of conduct, but in reparation for injuries already inflicted, so far as circumstances will admit. At Putney, crimes were not only committed against the "peace and dignity of the State," but individuals were seriously injured; and the Noyesites there have manifested no disposition to make voluntary restitution. They have done no more than they were compelled to do by law.

But gentlemen, in trying to make it appear that the Noyesites have repented, have undertaken to do a work of supererogation; but perhaps they are not aware that they are rendering a gratuitous and thankless service. The Noyesites cannot consistently ask for, or accept of, any such work; for repentance has no place among them. It implies the existence of sin, and this they will never admit. The security of the saints, i. e. Noyesites, is represented as the key-stone in the arch of Noyesism. Should they acknowledge that they have sinned, or even admit it possible for them to sin, they would thereby knock the key-stone out of their own arch, and the whole superstructure would tumble down. They profess to be "standing on the plain eternity, beyond the judgment," and we might as soon expect to find repentance among the sinless intelligences of heaven, as to obtain an admission of its existence among the Noyesites.
CHAPTER VIII.

Reproaches cast upon the citizens of Putney—Cry of persecution raised by the Noyesites.

The inhabitants of Putney have, for several years past, suffered more or less in the estimation of people abroad, according to the amount of information which the public have possessed in relation to the character of the Perfectionist Community located there. This, under existing circumstances, could not well be avoided. Although the citizens of Putney had, for some length of time, had reason to suspect there was "something rotten in Denmark;" yet facts did not come to their knowledge sufficient to warrant a prosecution until the autumn of 1847. In the mean time, however, the Perfectionists, through the medium of a periodical published at Putney, and the efforts of a few public teachers, had been scattering their licentious doctrines broadcast over the country. People abroad had become familiar, at least to some extent, with these doctrines; and guided by the sentiment that men are not better than their principles, they arrived at the legitimate conclusion that they were a licentious people. Moreover, facts confirming this conclusion had also come to light. The practical results of their pernicious principles, had appeared among some societies of Perfectionists elsewhere. Hence, people abroad supposed they were not mistaken as to the true character of the Putney. This was the model, and other societies at a distance receiving their impress from this, were regarded as so many mirrors reflecting its true features. And the people of Putney, for several years, suffered the reproach of permitting them to exist in their midst. But in this they acted wisely. Had they on mere suspicion, however strong and well founded, resorted to violent measures, or commenced a legal process without sufficient evidence to sustain it, the cry of persecution, long and loud, would have gone up—the sympathies of some would have been enlisted in their behalf—a prejudice would have been created against the citizens of Putney, and the evil which they wished to eradicate, would have taken deeper root, and they would have been under the painful necessity of enduring it for a much longer time. But at length sufficient facts were elicited, and a wholesome corrective was applied.

But, alas! strange as it may seem, we are evidently doomed to hear the cry of persecution. This is a weapon which impostors ever have at hand, but one that culprits seldom have the confidence to use. But it evidently appears that in the present instance it is to be brought into requisition. Mr. Noyes, we understand, when arrested, remarked to his followers, that the more they were persecuted the nearer they came to the Primitive Church!

And from present indications it would not be at all surprising if Mr. N., in a work which he has announced as forthcoming, should give us a doleurous account of his persecutions at Putney. But the cirzens of Putney have asked for no more than overhanded justice; and should that be administered, and any considerable portion of them remain dissatisfied, and proceed to unjustifiable acts, there would then be sufficient time to talk about persecution. The subtle incendiary, the daring highway robber, and the cold-blooded midnight assassin, might with as much propriety raise the cry of persecution when pursued by the officer of justice, as the Noyesites, or any of their minions, can lift their voices and raise such a cry before justice is administered.

Persecution implies the infliction of unjust punishment for crimes committed, or the doing of injuries for adherence to any particular religious creed, or mode of Divine worship.

Has Mr. Noyes or any of his followers been injured, for adhering to their peculiar irreligious notions, simply considered? Not in the least. Has any unjust punishment been inflicted for the heinous crimes which they have committed? Not at all. The sequel will clearly show that not even a moiety of justice has yet been administered. Irreparable injuries have been done to some of the citizens of Putney—injuries for which dollars and cents would be a poor remuneration. Thus it appears that the cry of persecution comes with an extremely ill grace from the Noyesites, especially as far as the action of the citizens of Putney is concerned.
tion to the Perfectionists—and the charge may be reiterated from a certain quarter—we have deemed it proper to say thus much in vindication of their course, and for the purpose of laying the whole matter before the reader.

Perhaps before dismissing this subject it may be proper to say, that Mr. Noyes had a standing and influence at Putney, which he could not have acquired elsewhere. The family to which he belonged were formerly very respectable and highly respected. Possessing, as they did, talent, education, wealth, and consequently considerable influence, there was a combination of favorable circumstances calculated to give them a somewhat elevated position. Several members of the family to which Mr. N. belonged, having embraced his views at an early period, added something to his influence in Putney. Although many of the citizens of Putney regarded the move as wholly chimerical, and did not even read the publications of Mr. N., yet there were some inclined to favor his notions. There were also others—and among them some of the sober and staid citizens—who, notwithstanding his published sentiments, were slow to believe that he would plunge into iniquity—but they were at length compelled to believe that he had; showing that what he taught in theory he intended to carry out in practice.

Noyesism, it has been seen, unlike many of the isms of the age, had a respectable origin—having been started by men of considerable talent and intelligence.
This circumstance probably gave it character and influence; but the delusion is none the less deep and dangerous, and its enormities none the less alarming, but even the more so—for the greater the amount of perverted talent, the more disastrous the results.
CHAPTER IX.

Noyseism at Putney.

Noyseism as a system—if a heterogeneous mass of the grossest errors and most palpable absurdities can be called a system—is peculiar in its character, and as diverse from pure Christianity as the darkness of midnight is from the light of noon-day. Although it claims to be a perfect embodiment of the Christian virtues and the very beau ideal of moral beauty, yet it will be seen on examination that it has no affinity whatever with the Gospel of Christ. That it is diverse from the doctrines taught by Evangelical denominations is evident not only from its general features, but is acknowledged and asserted in unequivocal language by the founder of the system. Mr. N. says:—"New Haven Perfectionism is a new religion... has affinity with no sect this side the primitive church.... As a system it is distinct from all the popular theologies." Perfectionist, Vol. iv. No. 4.

Mr. N. terms it a new religion to distinguish it from the popular theologies now extant; but in calling it a new religion he has unwittingly spoken an important truth. Noyseism is verily a new religion—another gospel; and St. Paul says: "But though we or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed!" Gal. i. 8.

But where shall we find the Simon Pures of this new system? Has there ever been a full development —a practical demonstration of this new ism? In what follows we shall find an answer to these questions.

Mr. Noyes visited Belchertown, Mass., in Feb. 1842, and in reference to a meeting held there, he says:—

"I made one remark at B., in reply to rumors which had begun to circulate there, about the licentiousness of Perfectionists in Southampton, Brimfield, and other places, which I will repeat here; viz.,

"New Haven Perfectionism is a doctrinal system, standing by itself, distinct from Wesleyan, New York, and Oberlin Perfectionism, as it is from non-resistance, 'comeoutism,' &c. As such it is to be judged by its own proper fruits, not by those of its supposed kindred. And its own proper fruits are to be looked for in those fields where it has had an opportunity to take root and grow to maturity by itself, not in fields where it has been sown incidentally among other seeds, and has been corrupted and choked. The only place that I know of where it has had an extended and fair opportunity to manifest its own proper nature and tendency, is Putney, Vt.; and I am willing it should be judged by the moral fruits which it has produced in that place. Perfectionism in other places, so far as I know, (individual instances excepted,) has been mixed up with New York fanaticism, Boyleism, Gatesism, non-resistance, &c., &c., and must stand or fall by itself. New Haven Perfectionism is not responsible. In Putney, during an experiment of seven years in the faith of perfect holiness, there has been no tendency towards licentiousness among believers; and excepting a temporary leaning toward Skaberman, there has been no practical departure from ordinary sexual morality."

The italicising in the above language of Mr. Noyes is his own. We have given his statement entire; and it is a happy circumstance that he has taken a position, and so distinctly, defined his position...
public mind is thus fortunately directed by Mr. N. himself, to a point where Perfectionism exists pure and unalloyed—unmixed and uncorrupted. Here it appears in its native dress, and exhibits its true character.

For the purpose of evading the charge of licentiousness, which had been brought against Perfectionism, Mr. N. asserts that the distinctive doctrines of his system, with a few individual exceptions, have been mixed with the doctrines of Boyle, Gates, and others, which he disavows, and for which he says New Haven Perfectionism is not responsible. Hence, whatever improprieties may have appeared among societies of Perfectionists elsewhere, he would attribute to other doctrines which had been incorporated with his own; and he seems to be quite unwilling to acknowledge such improprieties as the legitimate fruits of genuine Perfectionism. But in the society at Putney we have a genuine embodiment of the principles of Perfectionism. This society from its very infancy has been under the immediate watch-care and control of Mr. N., the father and founder of the sect. Mr. N. Speaks in behalf of the whole society respecting their conduct; and we should infer that he has been perfectly familiar with all their movements, and has controlled the whole internal regulations,—which has undoubtedly been the case.

In Putney, then, and only there, according to Mr. N.'s own statement, Perfectionism "has had an extended and fair opportunity to manifest its own proper nature and tendency." Here it stands and in this fair field, where it has not been "corrupted and choked," we are to look for its legitimate fruits. Here it has taken deep-root, and been tenderly nurtured under the fostering care of its own parent, and has "grown to maturity"—has exhibited its legitimate fruits—and we will add, has recently gone to seed!

The reader cannot be in doubt. The foregoing pages have thrown a flood of light upon this matter. The moral fruits which Perfectionism has produced in Putney, have been exhibited in a manner which cannot be mistaken. The true features of Noyesism are portrayed, and it is held up to public view in its native aspect. And a more disgusting picture cannot well be imagined.

The society in Putney, having been a perfect pattern, other societies formed elsewhere, so far as they have been moulded after the true model, have borne its impress, and exhibited its distinctive features.

Moreover, should Noyesism for a season survive the shock which it has lately received, and like a wounded reptile "drag its slow length along," and linger out a miserable existence, still its nature and tendency would be the same. What it has been, it will, in all probability, continue to be, except it be to "increase unto more ungodliness;" for in Putney we have not had a false and corrupted form of Perfectionism, but the true one—not a counterfeit coin, but the genuine intage. There it has taken its natural course—sked out, so far as its influence has extended, its timate results—and exhibited its own proper fruits.
Mr. N. having affirmed that he is willing it should be judged by the moral fruits which it has produced in Putney, it seems to be very necessary, in order that a correct judgment may be formed in relation to it, that its moral results there should be faithfully and fully exhibited. It is hoped this volume will accomplish that work.

In Feb. 1842, as seen by the extracts already given, Mr. Noyes holds the following language:—"In Putney, during an experiment of seven years in the faith of perfect holiness, there has been no tendency toward licentiousness among believers; and excepting a temporary leaning toward Shakerism, there has been no practical departure from ordinary sexual morality."

In a letter bearing date, Putney, July 2, 1839, addressed to a Mr. Hollister, Mr. Noyes alludes to the "temporary leaning toward Shakerism" above mentioned, in the following terms:—"In 1838, after an absence of more than a year, from the Lord's flock in this place, I returned, and found a considerable number of them strongly disposed to adopt the legality of Shakerism on the subject of sexual intercourse. I testified plainly against it, and the brethren and sisters above mentioned have since unanimously renounced their legality."

The reader will readily perceive from the above language, that the members of the society in Putney have been so completely under the influence of Mr. Noyes, that they could be swayed by him at will, with the ease of the sapling by the hand of the child.
woodman. Mr. N. was fearful that his followers were getting too much under the influence of legality—were getting to be too strict, and he sets himself about rescuing them from under the rules of law, and bringing them into a state of liberty.

If the statements of Mr. N. are entitled to credit, we must believe that the Putney Perfectionists had regarded the common rules of morality up to Feb. 1842. But as we pursue the subject we shall find other statements which conflict with these, and the reader will be left to form his own conclusions after the whole subject is fairly laid before him.
CHAPTER X.

Principles taught by Noyes.

In addition to the facts already presented, so strikingly illustrative of the character of Noyesism, we shall now proceed to notice some of the principles taught by Mr. N., and considered as essential parts of the system. It will be seen on examination that the principles and practices of Noyes and his followers go hand in hand, and are in perfect keeping the one with the other.

But we would frankly acknowledge that we continue the investigation of the subject with extreme reluctance; and no consideration whatever, but a settled conviction of the necessity of so doing, in order to apprise the public, and especially the young, of the danger to which they are exposed, would induce us to proceed in the work. Much perplexity arises from the fact that Mr. Noyes, in speaking of some points, has descended so low, and unblushingly published sentiments so sensual and debasing in their character and tendency, and in some instances used language so very obscene and vulgar, that it is extremely difficult and almost impossible to present the subject in a just light, without transgressing the common rules of propriety. But we will endeavor to avoid corrupting the mind of the reader while we seek to remedy the existing evil.

The utter impiety and solemn mockery to which Mr. Noyes descends in trying to couple his gross licen-tiouness with the sublime mysteries of Christianity, and is an utter outrage upon the moral sense of a Christian community! Never was the grace of God more completely turned into lasciviousness!*—Never was the demon of darkness more effectually transformed into an angel of light, than in the instance before us! The characters spoken of in scripture as—“Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin,” come up before us in all their native corruption under the cover of Noyesism!

In investigating the subject, we shall quote somewhat largely from the writings of Mr. Noyes, thereby presenting his principles to public view in their native dress. We shall however withhold some portions of his language which he has unblushingly blazoned abroad through the medium of his official organ. Though it may have been read with pleasure by the Noyesites, who have cast out all the bond-woman’s children not excepting “decency”—yet it is utterly unfit for the public eye. In the letter addressed to Mr. Hollister, and which has already been alluded to, Mr. N. writes as follows:—

"About three months from the time when I received Christ as a whole Savior, my mind was led into long and deep meditation on the subject which principally interests Shakers—the relation of the sexes. I then came to the conclusions in which I have since stood, viz. that the outward act of sexual connection is as innocent and comely as any other act, or rather, if there is any difference in the character of outward acts, that is the most noble and comely of all. This sentiment, covered with any covering but that of the Spirit, is licentiousness. The same is true of every principle of human action. 'Whatsoever is not of faith is sin;' and to him that believeth, 'all things are lawful.' God tells me that He does not care so much what I do, as how I do it, and by this word I walk in all things. I never inquire whether it is right to do this, or wrong to do that, but whether God leads me to do it or not. I look not at the thing to be done, but at the influence by which it is done. These principles I apply to the use of women, ardent spirits, money, carnal weapons, &c. So I have testified for the past five years; and every day sinks me deeper and deeper in the certainty that these are the principles of God, and his heavenly hosts."

The above are the settled principles of Mr. Noyes, and they throw a flood of light upon the whole system which he has laid down. And they have been the rule by which he has walked from 1834 up to the present time.

Now, if sentiments of like character, or equally licentious in their tendency, should come out from those hot-beds of iniquity, city brothels, it would not be very surprising; but coming as they do from a man claiming to be a Christian, and setting himself up as the founder of a sect which is called religious, it surpasses any thing which has ever existed either in ancient or modern times. Verily this is a "master stroke of Satanic policy—a refinement of wickedness which puts papacy to the blush," and is the "very incarnation of impurity." As a kind of screen for his
it is difficult to believe this while, his protestan
But let us hear him again.—In the Spiritual Moralist of June 13, 1842, he writes as follows:—

"In the winter of 1834, I abandoned the popular religious system in which I had been educated, and became a perfectionist. The change in my views at that time, was not confined to the subject of holiness, but extended to every department of theology and morals. Finding gross error in the foundation of my previous faith, I suspected error in every part of the superstructure. I therefore gave it up altogether, and commenced a new course of investigation, trusting myself more exclusively than I had before done, to the guidance of the Bible and the Spirit of truth. The subject of sexual morality was early forced upon my attention, by its close connection with those peculiar views of the law, of the leadings of the Spirit, and of the resurrection, which are among the principal elements of my testimony in the Perfectionist and in the Witness. Personal circumstances of an interesting character, the startling and in some instances the corrupt suggestions of men with whom I was then connected, and a variety of scandalous reports concerning the licentious doctrines and practices of certain Perfectionists, conspired to urge me to a thorough examination of the matter. On the one hand my practical propensities, trained as they had been in the school of New England sobriety, and confirmed by the deep interest which I had taken in the Moral Reform enterprise, strongly attached me to the ordinary maxims of sexual virtue. On the other hand, I cared nothing for reputation, for I had none to lose, and was therefore free to adopt any theory, however heretical and offensive, which the gospel of the resurrection might require. Under these circumstances, I meditated on the subject much of the time for two years. My mind was particularly exercised in relation to it during several long seasons of spiritual trial. In the winter of 1836-7 my views assumed a definite and satisfactory form.”

What the “definite and satisfactory form” was, which the views of Mr. Noyes assumed in the winter of 1836-7, we gather from what is familiarly called and generally known as the “Battle Axe Letter.” This letter bears date, Jan. 15, 1837, and on account of the peculiar doctrines which it contains has acquired considerable notoriety, and exhibits the views of Mr. N. in a—to him—“definite and satisfactory form.”
CHAPTER XI.

The Battle Axe Letter and its History.

The famous Battle Axe Letter of which so much has been said, was written by Mr. Noyes, when at Ithaca, N. Y., and was addressed to Mr. David Harrison, of Meriden, Ct.—Mr. Harrison, in accordance with the liberty given by Mr. Noyes, lent the letter to an acquaintance, and after passing round among a few Perfectionists, it fell into the hands of Theophilus R. Gates, of Philadelphia, who published a part of it—in Aug. 1837—in a periodical which he was then issuing, called the Battle Axe. From the circumstance of its being published in that paper it took the name of the Battle Axe Letter. The following extract contains the substance of the letter, or that portion of it which relates to the subject under consideration:

"I will write all that is in my heart on one delicate subject, and you may judge for yourself whether it is expedient to show this letter to others. When the will of God is done on earth, as it is in heaven, there will be no marriage. The marriage supper of the Lamb, is a feast at which every dish is free to every guest. Exclusiveness, jealousy, quarrelling, have no place there, for the same reason as that which forbids the guests at a thanksgiving dinner to claim each his separate dish, and quarrel with the rest for his rights. In a holy community there is no more reason why sexual intercourse should be restrained by law, than why eating and drinking should be—and there is as little occasion for shame in the one case as in the other."
God has placed a wall of partition between the male and female during the apostasy, for good reasons, which will be broken down in the resurrection, for equally good reasons. But woe to him who abolishes the law of the apostasy before he stands in the holiness of the resurrection. The guests of the marriage supper may have each his favorite dish, each a dish of his own procuring, and that without the jealousy of exclusiveness. I call a certain woman my wife—she is yours, she is Christ's, and in him she is the bride of all saints. She is dear in the hand of a stranger, and according to my promise to her I rejoice. My claim upon her cuts directly across the marriage covenant of this world, and God knows the end."

It will be remembered that in 1834, after "long and deep meditations" about certain Shaker doctrines, Mr. N. came to some definite conclusions, in which he declares he had "stood" up to 1839, a period of five years. In connection with his conclusions he had also adopted certain principles, in which he had walked during the same period, and which he says he applied to the "use of women, ardent spirits, &c."—Now it is evident that the "conclusions" to which Mr. N. came after "long and deep meditations," and also the "principles" which he adopted as a rule of action "in all things," were in perfect keeping with the sentiments of the Battle Axe Letter; for he "stood" and "walked" in them, and "applied" them in all cases from 1834 up to 1839: although they did not few choice spirits, for Harrison to whom it was written was a staunch Perfectionist. Noyes undoubtedly designed to broach the subject of the Battle Axe Letter to different individuals as circumstances might warrant, and thus secretly and silently diffuse among thorough-going Perfectionists the specious doctrines contained in that letter.

But through the agency of T. R. Gates it was published without the knowledge of Noyes, and he was evidently not a little chagrined and disconcerted at its sudden appearance; but it could not be recalled, and the only alternative was to make the best of it he could. Gates published the letter without giving the author's name, and there were many conjectures relative to the source whence it emanated. Some attributed the authorship of the letter to James Boyle, who was an early convert to Perfectionism, and for some time an associate of Noyes.—Others supposed Noyes to be its author, and a number of letters were soon written to ascertain whether it originated with him. He acknowledged that he was the author of the letter; and in the Witness published at Ithaca, N. Y., Sept. 23, 1837, he holds the following language relative to the matter:

"Several persons have written to inquire whether I or Mr. Boyle was the author of the letter lately published in the Battle Axe. I answer, I am the author, but not the publisher, of the letter. As an anti-mason, I cannot object to its publication; and as an optimist I am bound to rejoice. Yet I must be permitted to say that it contains doctrines and allusions which I should never have obtruded upon the public, not for fear of persecution or reproach, but lest my liberty should become a stumbling-block to others."

In the Spiritual Moralist published at Putney, Vt., June 13, 1842, Mr. N. again refers to the same point. Speaking in reference to the publication of the Battle Axe Letter, he says:—

"He (Gates) published a part of it in a periodical he was then issuing, called the Battle Axe, without any suggestion of the circumstances under which it was written, or of the person to whom it was addressed, leaving his readers to suppose that it was written to himself and designed for publication. I was then at Ithaca, just commencing the publication of the Witness. I had scarcely seen the paper containing the letter, before I received several letters of inquiry about it. Some supposed Boyle to be the author of it; others attributed it to me. I immediately acknowledged myself the author of it in the Witness, avowed my continued conviction of the truth of its sentiments, and promised a full explanation.

"I confess I had previously shrunk from the responsibility of bringing forward into public discussion a matter so delicate and inflammatory; not because I was ashamed of the truth, or afraid of the wrath of man, but because I dreaded the ruinous offences which it would occasion. Yet I had seen the ultimate necessity of the open warfare to which I was now summoned, and was waiting on the providence of God for a leading movement. Gates's publication of my letter, fraudulent and foolish as it was on his part, was to me the
It may be proper here to introduce a brief account of the circumstances connected with the publication of the Battle Axe Letter, given by Mr. Harrison, to whom the letter was written. This account is found in an extract from a letter written by Harrison to Noyes, and is as follows:

"I have never told you how the Battle Axe Letter escaped me. I kept it several months without showing it to any one; but the Lord gave me no liberty to suppress it. I first showed it to Lovett—he liked it and wished it to peruse—I consented, but requested him to return it. While it was with him, Elizabeth Hawley got hold of it, and insisted upon sending it to Gates, or 'she would leave the house in a thunderstorm that night for New Haven.' So it went. I soon heard of it, and anticipated the result, and should have written immediately to Gates 'forbidding its publication, but I could not get the Lord's consent. So you see, the Lord obtained the letter from me as it were by stealth.'"

This account must have been very satisfactory to Mr. Noyes. What a wonderful providence in the affair! But Mr. N. says:—"The letter was written not for the public, but for the perusal of a familiar friend, with due regard to the delicacy of its subject, and without any intention of ostruding it upon the notice, even of Perfectionists—much less of casting it before dogs and swine. * * * While I cast from me the fear and shame of guilt, I nevertheless acknowledge myself a follower of Paul in my views of expediency, (See I. Cor. ix. 19–22,) believing that there are things spoken of 'in the third heaven, which..." not lawful to be uttered,' and that there is wisdom which ought to be communicated only to 'the perfect.'"

The allusions of Mr. Noyes in the foregoing language cannot be mistaken. Such sentiments indicate a mind grossly sensualized, and irrecoverably lost to all chaste and delicate feelings!

But in the Witness of Sept. 23, 1837, Mr. N. speaks in reference to the publication of the Battle Axe Letter as follows:—

"As I am not responsible for the consequences of its publication, I might easily escape in a measure the fury of the storm which must follow it, but I choose to 'hide its brunt,' and therefore say, that *I know the doctrine of that letter! is God's truth, and that whosoever contends with it, 'rushes upon the thick bosses of His buckler.'"

"As to the expediency of its publication at the present time, I say nothing. God understands his own business, and I leave it with him and T. R. Gates to settle that matter. One thing I know, viz: that before the will of God is done on earth, as it is in heaven, that doctrine will be preached upon the house-tops."

In the Spiritual Moralist of June 13, 1842, Mr. N. again alludes to the sentiments of the Battle Axe Letter and its publication by Gates as follows:—

"From that time I have never faltered in my purpose of 'publishing on the house-tops,' the truths contained in that letter."

The foregoing extracts have been made from the writings of Mr. Noyes, for the purpose of presenting.
times in reference to the circumstances connected with the publication of the Battle Axe Letter.

The attentive reader will readily perceive, from the concluding language of the foregoing extracts, that, according to Mr. N.'s view, the time when the will of God would be done on earth—at least by a portion of its inhabitants—as it is done in heaven, could not be very far distant. He says that before the ushering in of that period, the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter would be preached upon the house-tops. These doctrines had been partially preached from the time of the publication of that letter by Gates in 1837, up to 1842; and at that time Noyes and Cragin, by the publication of the Spiritual Moralist, addressed themselves "to the task of making a full exposition" of those doctrines, and they were proclaimed abroad, and preached not only upon the house-tops, but upon the hill-tops, and scattered through the medium of the Spiritual Moralist broadcast over the country.

It is true, Mr. N. does not undertake to fix the precise time when this great event should take place, but as the tender branch and unfolding leaves of the fig-tree betoken approaching summer, so from the public manner in which the sentiments of the Battle Axe Letter had been sounded abroad, through the length and breadth of the land, in 1842, we can but see that "coming events were casting their shadows before," and should naturally infer that the time was drawing near!

case. The coming of the kingdom has been formally announced, and it seems that 1847 was the year in which, according to the views of Mr. N. and his followers, the long looked for event, which was the "hope of their calling," was ushered in! And a full disclosure of startling facts clearly shows that the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter have been carried out in the Perfectionist Community at Putney, to an alarming extent. A multitude of facts have already been presented touching this matter.

It will be recollected that Noyes wrote the Battle Axe Letter to D. Harrison, and left it discretionary with him to retain it in his own possession or show it to others, as he might deem it expedient. Harrison, it seems, lent it to a friend, and after having been examined by several Perfectionists, it fell into the hands of T. R. Gates, who was not, as Noyes asserts, a Perfectionist; but who certainly held doctrines in perfect keeping with the sentiments of the Battle Axe Letter, for he approved of, and published it. Gates, however, published the letter upon his own responsibility, without the knowledge of Noyes, who evidently was taken by surprise at its unexpected appearance in print, and deeply mortified in view of its publication. But as an anti-mason, he says he could not object to its publication. Certainly he could not object with any show of consistency, in view of his avowed anti-masonic principles in opposition to all secret movements.

But he also says, that as an optimist he was bound to rejoice. Although to be consistent with his principies as an optimist, or one who believes that all things are ordered for the best, he acknowledges himself bound to rejoice, yet it does not very clearly appear that he did rejoice. His attempt to make this appear is extremely lame. Although he says that he had seen the "ultimate necessity of open warfare," and was "waiting on the providence of God for a leading movement;" and although he asserts that the publication of the Battle Axe Letter by Gates, was regarded by him as the "voice of God calling him to his post," yet the language of Mr. N. relative to the matter, implies a severe censure upon Gates for publishing the letter! Manifest insincerity is here clearly exhibited. If he had really rejoiced, his gratitude to Gates should have been proportionate to his joy in view of the publication of the letter; and he should have regarded him as an honored instrument in the Divine Hand, in carrying out a wise purpose, and accomplishing a desirable end.

Neither would he have denounced the publication of the letter by Gates as a "fraudulent and foolish" act, if he believed that it was in accordance with the dictates of Infinite Wisdom, and the arrangements of an unerring Providence.

Mr. N. says that he knew the doctrine of the Battle Axe Letter to be God's truth, and that the contest in which he was engaged was the Lord's battle; yet he doubted the expediency of the publication of the letter at the time, and uses language implying a severe to be that it was right for the battle to be fought, but wrong to commence it!—That it was right for the thing to be done, yet wrong to do it!—That it was both right and wrong at the same time!

Mr. N. says that he shrank from the responsibility of bringing the subject before the public, simply because he dreaded the ruinous offences which it would occasion; and that he never should have obtruded the doctrines and allusions contained in the Battle Axe Letter upon the public, lest his liberty should become a stumbling block to others. From all this it appears that he intended to keep his peculiar doctrines a profound secret, or at least within certain prescribed limits, lest others not so wise and holy as he, should misapprehend and misapply them! But when published he tries to be reconciled to it, although he finds it very difficult to bring himself up to the sticking point, and humbly submit.

If the doctrine was God's truth; and the publication of it in accordance with His will, Mr. N. need not have entertained any fears about "ruinous offences." Truth never suffers by exposure to the light, nor shrinks from the public gaze, and its influence is ever salutary; but error and iniquity ever shun the light, and seek for the darkest seclusions.

The publication of the Battle Axe Letter brought down much odium upon the head of Mr. N., and he was compelled immediately to suspend the publication of the Witness, which was resumed, Putney in about one year, and that pap be the medium through which he disseminated his licentious doctrines. Mr. N. has never renounced the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter, but has repeatedly reaffirmed his belief in them, and he still pertinaciously adheres to them.
CHAPTER XII.

Principles on which the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter are based.

Mr. Noyes has laid down the principles on which the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter are based, and given the mental process by which he arrived at the conclusions contained in that letter. He says that the change which took place in his views when he became a Perfectionist in 1834, extended to every department of theology and morals. Finding, as he supposed, gross error in the foundation of his previous faith, he suspected error in every part of the superstructure, and gave it up altogether. Thus it appears that on mere suspicion, Mr. N. gave up the whole noble superstructure of Gospel doctrines and Christian morals as held by different evangelical denominations. Whatever different views may have been entertained by evangelical Christians relative to doctrinal points, many of which are non-essential, there has hitherto been perfect unanimity respecting the morals of Christianity. And it is very surprising that an attempt should be made to bring about a change relative to this department of the Christian religion. The morals of the community are all-important—the peace, the prosperity, and the welfare of the whole body politic are deeply involved in this matter.

But let us look at the manner in which Mr. Noyes came to the conclusions contained in the Battle Axe-Letter, and the principles from which they were derived. Says Mr. N.:

"The process by which I attained this result, was like that by which I had before found the truth in relation to holiness and the Second Coming of Christ. In the case of both of these subjects, after balancing a while in suspense between the apparent contradictions of Bible testimony, I found it necessary to fix my mind upon that part of the evidence which was direct and decisive, and believe it boldly, leaving that which was indirect and doubtful to after consideration, and assuredly expecting to find conclusions thus formed ultimately reconciled to all truth. In other words, my maxim was, not to allow uncertain objections to hinder my belief in certain testimony.

"Finding direct, indisputable evidence in favor of the doctrine of holiness, for instance in I. John, iii. 8, I made that an unchangeable land-mark of faith, and then waited patiently, with all confidence, for the removal of objections. So on the subject of the Second Coming, I found rest, only by stubbornly believing such certain statements as Matt. xxiv. 34, in spite of all uncertain evidence to the contrary. Guided by the same principle in my inquiry concerning the sexual relation, I at length formed two fixed points of belief, viz.,

1. "That God made mankind at the beginning male and female, and has given no intimation that this original constitution will ever be altered, but on the contrary has declared by the mouth of Paul, that 'the man is not without the woman, neither is the woman without the man in the Lord.'

2. "That in the resurrection, i. e. in the ultimate perfect condition of the human race, there will be 'neither marrying nor giving in marriage.'"
"It hardly need be said, that the conclusions which necessarily follow from these premises, are exceedingly alarming and offensive to those who sympathize with the fashions and feelings of the world. It will be the first object of this paper (the Spiritual Moralist) to exhibit those conclusions, and guard them from perversion. It is sufficient for the object of my present statement to say, that I mentioned them without disguise, in a private letter (dated Jan. 15, 1837) to David Harrison, of Meriden, Conn."

Thus we learn that the views of Mr. Noyes which assumed a "definite and satisfactory form" in the winter of 1836-7, and were embodied in the Battle Axe Letter, were legitimate conclusions necessarily following from the "two fixed points of belief" which we have already given; and which in the estimation of Mr. N. constitute the central point of truth relative to this whole subject, and are the "direct and decisive" evidence to which all other testimony must yield.

We do not object to the abstract principle which Mr. N. has laid down, viz., that we should believe "direct and decisive" evidence relative to any doctrinal point, but we object to the application in the case under consideration. The question arises, Is the testimony adduced touching this point "direct and decisive?" This Mr. N. asserts, but it will be found on examination, that the testimony on which he relies to sustain the "two fixed points of belief," instead of being "direct and decisive," is "indirect and doubtful." It appears that the foundation is false, the structure of the Battle Axe Letter and all will fall to the ground unless it can stand without any foundation. As the Battle Axe Letter, with all its concomitant sentiments, sprung from these "two fixed points of belief," they should be carefully examined.

The first principle which Mr. N. has laid down is, "That God made mankind at the beginning male and female, and has given no intimation that this original constitution will ever be altered."

We reply, the Scriptures do give intimations, and also positive proofs, that the original physical constitution of man will be changed. It is asserted by St. Paul that the resurrection body will be "spiritual" and "incorruptible." It will be entirely different from the natural body. The resurrection body will be built up on entirely new and wholly indestructible principles. It will be free from all infirmities and imperfections, and will not be dependent upon natural productions for its support; it will be exempt from disease, decay and dissolution. In the Apostle's description of the resurrection body we certainly discover very strong intimations that man's original constitution will be altered.

But the Apostle holds the following definite and emphatic language touching this point:—

"Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both it and them." I Cor. 6:13.

We infer from this language, that the Creator has given man an animal appetite, or a desire for food, and that He has provided various aliments to meet the demand of this nature. This is clearly demonstrated.
The appetite is adapted to the aliments, and the aliments to the appetite; but God shall destroy both it and them. These are not eternal; all the lower appetites and sensations will be destroyed by death, and have no existence in the resurrection body.

The only passage adduced by Mr. N. in support of the position which he has assumed, is one of doubtful import, found in the writings of St. Paul:—"The man is not without the woman, neither is the woman without the man in the Lord." I Cor. 11: 11.—Before uttering this language, St. Paul had argued the supremacy of the man over the woman in the established order of things; and lest this doctrine should be construed into a disparagement of the female sex, he intimates that there is a mutual dependence between them.

In the Lord, Theodoret renders in the world. Perhaps the meaning of the Apostle is, that the human race is continued by an especial providence of God. Thus the testimony of Mr. N. appears to be "indirect and doubtful," and is entirely swept away by the "direct and decisive" evidence which we have already adduced. The second position or "fixed point of belief" on which Mr. N. rests the superstructure of the Battle Axe Letter is, "That in the resurrection, i.e. in the ultimate perfect condition of the human race, there will be 'neither marrying nor giving in marriage.'"

The resurrection, or ultimate perfect condition of the human race, of which Mr. N. speaks, is not the discards this doctrine. The resurrection state, or "perfect condition of the human race," according to the view of Mr. N., is to be attained in this world—is to be wrought out by spiritual influences—and every "increment of faith" in the "body of believers," in the view of Noyes, is tending directly to this result—the exemption of the body from death! This state has long been the "hope of their calling," and it appears that at last they think that they have attained it. One of the master-spirits in the Putney Community, who is perfectly familiar with every point of doctrine among them, has asserted that they have attained the resurrection of the body. They have not made bold to publish this to the world, but have expressed it in a somewhat private manner. Their policy seems to be to keep such doctrines for a time, within the "charmed circle," lest they should be too fully committed, and get into difficulty by letting their "advanced position" be publicly known. The doctrine of "Bible secretiveness" is very convenient for Perfectionists, and quite applicable in this case.

But the passage on which Mr. N. relies mainly for support concerning his second position is this:—"In the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven." Matt. 22:30.

As Mr. N. evidently considers this passage his strong hold, and has drawn from it a stereotyped argument, let us endeavor to ascertain its true import. It will be seen, by considering the circumstances under which it was uttered, and the evident design which the Savior had in view, that it perfectly harmonizes with the commonly received opinion of a literal resurrection of the body, and yields no support whatever to Mr. N.'s new notion.

Our Savior was combatting a formidable objection of the Sadducees to the resurrection of the body. That objection rested on two grounds:

1. They denied that there was any future state whatever. "For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor Spirit: but the Pharisees confess both." Acts, 23:8. Denying that men have any souls after death, of course they would deny the resurrection of the body.

2. They supposed the doctrine was irrational, and absurd in itself, as is manifest from the case of the woman who had seven husbands, which they adduced, and from which they reasoned. Our Savior first clears away the difficulties which they had thrown around the subject, and then attacks their main position, which was a denial of the immortality of the soul. If the foundation of their theory could be removed, the superstructure would fall.

But their doctrine must be overthrown by the Scriptures. And they had rejected all the Scriptures, but the five books of Moses. Our Savior proceeds, therefore, to prove the immortality of the soul from passage, is, that "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Thus showing that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were living when this declaration was made to Moses, although their bodies were dead, and had been for centuries. Their souls, therefore, lived after their bodies were dead. Thus the Sadducees were confounded out of their own acknowledged Scriptures, and the foundation of their objection to the resurrection of the body removed. Never was an argument more logically constructed or strictly conformed to the established rules of argumentation than this, and it completely silenced the Sadducees.

Thus it appears that the passage under consideration, refers to a resurrection state entirely diverse from the one which Mr. N. has pictured in his imagination. For a better understanding of the views of Mr. N. relative to the subject under consideration, we will give some remarks of his made by way of comment upon the passage just quoted. Speaking of that portion of the Battle Axe Letter which treats of marriage, Mr. N. says it "teaches neither a community of wives nor plurality of wives," but a nullity of wives. Its doctrine is, 'When the will of God is done on earth, as it is in heaven, there will be no marriage;' which is a simple and necessary deduction from the saying of Christ, 'In the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God.' How are the angels? Answer. 'Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of God.' How are little children? Answer. They 'neither marry nor are given in marriage;' they are 'naked and are not ashamed,' as Adam and Eve were before they sinned, and as all God's creatures are in heaven and under heaven, except man. Moreover let it be marked that the Battle Axe Letter teaches not even a nullity of wives, as a matter of present practice.
Its language is, 'When the will of God is done on earth, as it is in heaven, there will be no marriage.'"

The above language was published in Jan. 1839.
Mr. N. evidently feared that his doctrine would appear too revolting without some guarding and garnishing—hence he denies that it was then to be a "matter of present practice," but was applicable to a prospective period—a state of things yet in anticipation.

But let us here draw, with all possible accuracy, an outline of the state anticipated. And in doing this we shall quote Mr. N.'s own language. He defines his position relative to this matter with all necessary precision. In 1838 he says:

1. "I believe, that marriage does not exist in heaven.

2. "I believe, that the will of God will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven: consequently that a time will come when marriage will not exist on earth.

3. "I believe, that for the present transition period, proper instruction for believers is contained in the 7th Chap. I. Cor.
especially 29–31 verses.

4. "I believe, that in the heavenly state—which is the hope of our calling—the Holy Spirit takes the place of written laws, and arbitrary ceremonies, in regard to the intercourse of the sexes, and all other matters.

5. "I do not believe, that any have attained to that state that are now on earth."—Witness, Vol. I, No. 4
Noyesism Unveiled.

In stating that none had attained to that state then on earth, Mr. N. flatly contradicts what he had previously said of himself. He says that in 1834 he had eaten of the tree of life, and partaken with Christ of the marriage supper; and certainly we are at a loss to conceive what higher attainments can be made in this life. But let us hear him further in relation to the state of things anticipated for the body of believers.

"I will state briefly my reasons for believing that the marriage supper of the Lamb, is a 'feast at which every dish is free to every guest.'

1. "I believe that distinction of sexes exists in heaven. . . . I have never found the slightest valid reason for the common nebulous impression that heaven is inhabited by a company of non-descript ghosts. I believe that the paradise of redemption, in its elementary constitution, in all respects, except those which involve evil, resembles the paradise of creation.

2. "Applying to the views which I have just stated several familiar passages of scripture, I cannot avoid the results described in the Battle Axe Letter. The passages are these—Luke xx. 25: 'They which shall be counted worthy to obtain that world, neither marry nor are given in marriage.' Luke xviii. 17: Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.' If the distinction of sexes exists in heaven, and yet there is no marriage, but the inhabitants are like little children, what else can the marriage supper be, but 'a feast at which every dish is free to every guest?' I am not frightened by this inevitable result, (however revolting it may seem to that kind of modesty which was the first fruit of sin,) because I know by experience, as well as by the testimony of God, that the Holy Spirit, which gives and executes the laws of heaven, is a surer safeguard of modesty, chastity, and whatsoever is pure, and lovely and of good report, than laws, and ceremonies, and public opinion.

"Having explained to you then, 1st, my views of present duties of Christians—2d, my views of a future heavenly state—it only remains to inquire 3d, Whether the heavenly state is to be expected in this world? I answer, I fully believe that the will of God will be done on earth as it is done in heaven, because it is predicted in Scripture.” Witness, Vol. I. No. 10.

Again says Mr. N.: "As Paul says of the second coming, ‘We which are alive and remain, shall be changed, and caught up’—it may now be said of the third coming, We which are alive and remain, shall be changed and take everlasting possession of this world.” Witness, Vol. I. No. 5.

It appears from the foregoing extracts that Mr. N. in 1838 was anticipating a glorious state—an eventful era not far distant, when the will of God would be done on earth—at least by a portion of its inhabitants—as it is done in heaven. This "heavenly state" was the hope of their—the Perfectionists—calling.—This paradise of redemption, which Mr. N. had pictured in his imagination, would be in its elementary constitution, in all respects, like the paradise of creation, except that sin could never enter there! And when this auspicious period should be ushered in, the saints—that is all genuine Perfectionists—would take everlasting possession of the earth! Would all set down together at the marriage supper of the Lamb.
But has the long-looked-for period arrived? Has the millennial day been ushered in?

On the evening of the first day of June, 1847, it was declared by a unanimous voice that the kingdom of God had come to the town of Putney, and the Perfectionist Community established there!

This was the "consummation" so long and devoutly desired, and appears to have been the signal for the carrying out of the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter through the ranks of the Perfectionists. The whole matter then may be summed up in few words, and in plain English stands thus:—The time had arrived for the Perfectionists to "take everlasting possession of this world"—The will of God was being done among them as it is done in heaven—They had entered the "heavenly state," which had long been the "hope of their calling"—Had taken possession of the "paradise of redemption"—And were banqueting at the feast—the marriage supper of the Lamb—where "every dish is free for every guest?" What impious mockery!! What daring impiety!!

Their ideas of heaven appear to be confined to a little clan of Perfectionists who have "joined their households under one common roof," with John H. Noyes at their head—where there is a "nullity of wives"—and where the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter are carried out! Such was the little company of Perfectionists at Putney until the strong arm of the law reached the leader and scattered the clan. And such is the Community of Perfectionists lately established and now existing at Onondaga Reserve in Central New York, under the immediate eye and supervision of John H. Noyes.

More grovelling sentiments and debasing views of heaven, with all its angelic purity, its hallowed enjoyments and ecstatic delights, cannot well be entertained! If this is not the "master stroke of Satanic policy," then it has no existence. If this is not the very incarnation of impurity" and "wickedness that puts Papacy to the blush," then it cannot be found.

This is a—if not the—"man of sin, the mystery of iniquity." It is a covering for—

"All wicked, all abominable things."

Of perfect wickedness, where deeds are done,—

Deeds! let them ne'er be named!—

From first to last it was an evil place:

And now such things were acted there, as made

The devil blush; and from the neighborhood,

Angels and holy men, trembling, retired:

And what with dreadful aggravation crowned

This dreary time, was sin against the light.

These men knew God, and, knowing, disobeyed;

And gloried to insult him to his face.

Of every order, sin and wickedness,

Deliberate, cool, malicious villany,

This age, attained maturity, unknown

Before; and seemed in travail to bring forth

Original, unprecedented guilt,

Perto been done most vile."

—The reader will understand the allusion---of Noyes is represented by Perfectionists as the stumbling-stone and rock of offence which God has laid in Zion; and the "confession of this doctrine" is declared to be the "cross of Christ in this dispensation, the end of the world, and the judgment of selfishness." Noyes's doctrine of "sexual morality" the cross of Christ!! This caps the climax! This is the chief corner stone of that edifice—or "monument of disgrace"—which Mr. N. has built upon the principles on which the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter are based. He professes to have received this doctrine at an early date—"when he received the doctrine of holiness, or soon after at the time he received his commission!" And his followers think that he "sustains it by as mighty truth as he does the doctrine of holiness or the Second Coming"—and Perfectionists declare that in their "experience they have had as many signs of its truth as they have had of any other doctrine!"

Now Mr. N. professes to have received the doctrine of holiness in February, 1884, and soon after received his commission. Indeed! He is divinely commissioned, then! From Mr. N.'s account of some peculiar exercises which he experienced in May, 1834, we infer that he received his commission about that time. His doctrine of "sexual morality" he received at as early a period as this; thus it appears that it is no new thing with him, however it may have been with some of his followers.

It appears that Mr. N., at least, so far as doctr.
is concerned—has fairly outstripped Mahomet himself, and thrown the great Arabian Impostor far back into the shade! Mahomet promised his faithful followers a paradise of sensual pleasures after this life, or in a future state of existence; but Mr. Noyes has fitted up such a place in this world, and offers to his followers in this life what Mahomet promised after this life. Thus it appears that Noyesism is an improved and enlarged edition of Mahometanism!

Noyes is holding out to his disciples the promise of exemption from death. And it appears that his heaven is to be composed of a little company of immortals—i.e. a Perfectionist Community—in which he pretends that the "Holy Spirit takes the place of written laws and arbitrary ceremonies, in regard to the intercourse of the sexes and all other matters"—or in other words, where the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter are carried out. What blasphemous sentiments! Such a Community appears to be all the heaven the Noyesites know any thing about!
CHAPTER XIII.

Ultimate results of the sentiments of the Battle Axe Letter.

The reader has already been made acquainted with the sentiments of the Battle Axe Letter, and some of the disgusting fruits which a practical application of those sentiments has produced; but a further notice is necessary to a full understanding of the subject.

The Battle Axe Letter not only contemplates a complete annihilation of the conjugal relations, but it designs to sever the ties of consanguinity, and its ultimate object is to make a clean sweep of all the social relations! And when all the ties of kindred are cut asunder, there must be complete submission to the will and absolute control of Mr. Noyes! But let us look at a few more phases which the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter have assumed.

Speaking in reference to the Shaker doctrine of entire continence, Mr. N. quotes Luke xx. 35—"But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage"—and adds the following comment:—

"In order to avail themselves of this text, Shakers are obliged to take for granted that where there is no marrying there is of course no connection of the sexes—the only alternative of matrimony. Now, I aver, that all animals except man 'neither marry nor are given in marriage,' and yet are not Shakers. If it is objected that this is a degrading allusion, I aver again, that 'little children,' whom Christ expressly declares are patterns of the heavenly state, 'neither marry nor are given in marriage,' and yet are not Shakers. The truth is, marriage and the sexual connection are different things. The first is artificial, the second is natural. One is an ordinance of man, the other an ordinance of God. Christ simply declared, in Luke xx. 35, that the ordinance of man (which, alone, be it observed, creates the difficulty presented by the Sadducees) has no place in heaven. There, as among 'little children,' all belong to all. But marriage is nearer this state than Shakerism."—Witness, Vol. i. No. 10.

More unscriptural and debasing sentiments can scarcely be conceived, than those contained in the foregoing language. In view of the doctrines of Noyes and the facts which have been developed, who can refrain from exclaiming with Pollok—

"Poor, poor, poor man! fallen far below the brute!"

Such doctrines, carried out among mankind, as Noyes has here and elsewhere taught, would transform this beautiful earth into a complete Pandemonium—

"And make, on every side, so black a hell,
That spirits, used to night and misery,
Would far withdraw, and look another way."

The scheme which leads directly to the ruinous results which we are contemplating, was devised—

"In that dark den of shame,
Again."

This diabolical scheme was an—
But let us hear Mr. N. a little further—he says:

"Adultery, fornication and incest are horrible crimes, but they are crimes created by law. The acts which those crimes designate, are not bad in themselves, but bad because the law forbids them. The law that forbids them is good, and worthy of all reverence, because it is necessary, in the present apostate condition of the human race. Its value is proportionate to its necessity, and offences against it are criminal in proportion to its value. But observe, its necessity is caused by the sinfulness of mankind. Incest, for instance, is a crime of great magnitude, not by nature, . . . . but by a law for which experience has found a dreadful necessity: and that necessity is created by human wickedness."—Spiritual Moralist, Vol. I. No. 2.

The doctrine of Mr. Noyes is, that the necessity of the law prohibiting the crimes specified—adultery, fornication and incest—arises wholly from the "sinfulness of mankind." Then it follows, of course, that in a Noyesite Community professing to be free from sin, the necessity for a law prohibiting these crimes is entirely done away; and although the "acts which those crimes designate" exist, there would be no sin; for Mr. N. contends that they are "not bad in themselves!!" Argument is unnecessary—comment is uncalled for. It may be said of the man who has promulgated such doctrines under the guise of Christianity:

"He was the devil's pioneer, who cut
The fences down of virtue, sapped her walls,
And opened a smooth and easy way to death."

And he who can carry out, and were upon followers the practice of such doctrines, richly deserves the searching application of the keen and cutting language of the poet:

"Most guilty, villainous, dishonest man!
Wolf in the clothing of the gentle lamb!
Dark traitor in Messiah's holy camp!
Leper in saintly garb!—assassin masked
In Virtue's robe! vile hypocrite accursed?
I strive in vain to act his evil part.
The words that should sufficiently accurse,
And execrate such reprobates, had need
Come glowing from the lips of eldest hell."

It appears from the foregoing language of Mr. Noyes, that adultery, fornication and incest constitute the triple crown which has been placed upon the head of Noyesism!

But let us look at Mr. N.'s position in relation to marriage; in 1842 he defined it thus:

"We believe that we sustain a similar relation to the institution of marriage, that the Old Testament saints did to the first, or Old Covenant. The Old Covenant was good and adapted to their condition, as a course of discipline preparatory to their entrance into a perfect and future state, of which they were constantly reminded. But did they on this account abandon the dispensation under which God had placed them? By no means: Faithfulness in the discharge of duties devolving upon them, as servants under the law, was the qualification which fitted them to enter into the dispensation where their education would be perfected; So with us in regard to the institution of marriage: notwithstanding we find many objections to it, and pronounce it imperfect and adapted only to a state of trial and discipline, yet we believe the new order of things which we anticipate, will not take its place until we have attained the resurrection of the body; and then only by the manifest authority of God."—Spiritual Moralist, Vol. I. No. 2.

The "new order of things" which they were anticipating in 1842, contemplated the sundering of the ties of kindred, the crucifying of the natural affections, and the breaking up of all the social relations. The resurrection of the body was to introduce them into this "new order of things," in which marriage was to be done away. We are credibly informed that they believe they have attained that resurrection. And indeed this is fairly inferable from their published sentiments. Soon after the proclamation went forth early in the summer of 1837 that the kingdom of God had come, which it was declared included all the elements of the judgment and the resurrection, Mr. N. spoke as follows in behalf of the Putney Community:

"We have attained a position in which, before heaven and earth, we trample under foot the domestic and pecuniary fashions of the world. Separate household interests, and property exclusiveness have come to an end with us. Our association is established on principles opposed at every point to the institutions of the world."

Thus it appears that having entered into the "new order of things," they had thrown off all legal restraints; and subsequent developments clearly show that—

"They stole the livery of the court of heaven

And—

That common sinners durst not meddle with."
It appears to have been the settled policy of Mr. N. to keep the ruinous results of his licentious doctrines carefully concealed from public view. Knowledge of these things was to be communicated only to "the perfect"—not cast before "dogs and swine." In this Mr. N. exhibits some wisdom—his doctrines were too revolting for even "dogs and swine," however readily they might be received by "the perfect."

The process to which Mr. N. subjects his disciples, appears to be this: In the first place he holds up the doctrine of holiness surrounded with a tolerably fair show of Scripture, and mixed with a measure of truth to make it a little palatable; and as soon as they have fairly swallowed the somewhat pleasurable potation, Mr. N. sets himself to work to bring them up to the "sticking point" and fix them fast on the subject of miracles—and if by sleight of hand and "cunning craftiness" he can succeed in making them believe that he has power to work miracles, they must as a natural consequence acknowledge that he is a holy man, and if so, it would be very logical to believe that he could do nothing wrong. Thus the door is open to all manner of iniquity! Do what he might, it would not be wrong in the eyes of his followers. Murder, rapine, robbery, and all manner of evil, might come in Perfectionism, is a reference to the will of God, revealed by His Spirit."

Now they might take it into their heads that they were led by the Spirit to put an enemy out of the way; and even a member of the Putney Community was heard to say a few years since, that he would kill a man as quick as he would a serpent, if the Lord told him to do it! We do not say that Perfectionists stand charged with having committed any such crime, and we do not know that any one even suspects any such thing of them; but we do say that from the premises which they have laid down, this conclusion might be reached without any difficulty. We have no warrant against this; and some of the staid citizens of Putney would be no more, if as much surprised, to learn this of them, than they were when they were compelled to believe that they had violated extensively—and utterly rejected as a rule—the seventh commandment of the Decalogue. Should they say that the command—"Thou shalt not kill"—is of perpetual obligation, then they would recede from the position that the will of God is to be ascertained by special revelation, or the "direct communications of the Holy Spirit;" and they would have to fall back upon the external or written law as being, at least in part, an infallible rule of life.

If they have thrown away the command forbidding adultery, might they not that prohibiting murder on the same principle. These two commands are coupled together in the Decalogue, and stand upon the same basis. They each forbid crimes the most heinous in their nature; and in the order in which they are mentioned in the Scriptures, the crime of adultery sometimes takes the precedence of murder; and from the whole tenor of Scripture we are led to the conclusion that adultery, if not equal to, stands the next in order after, murder, in point of enormity.

If they have laid aside the command prohibiting adultery with such perfect coolness, and with a settled determination to carry out their principles, have we any assurance that they will never lay aside that forbidding murder? Past events may justly excite some fears touching future action.

Moreover, the Noyesites at Putney have buried some of their dead in the night. This course every one knows may sometimes be dictated by common prudence, and existing circumstances may not only render it expedient but necessary. But we have every reason to believe that in the present instance it has been matter of choice and not of necessity. But why take this course? Was it simply to show their utter contempt of all the customs and fashions of this world? Some of the people of Putney have suspected that in adopting this rule they had an eye to some future events. Past transactions show that they have generally had some design in their moves. Deeply laid schemes have existed where all was looked upon as very harmless. We express no personal opinion relative to the present case, but we must confess that to bury the dead in the night from choice looks a little dark. And our Great Teacher has taught us that the sole reason why men love darkness rather than light, is because their deeds are evil.

We have contemplated some of the ultimate ruinous results of the doctrines of Noyesism, and others equally sad, naturally follow in their train. Mr. N. is laboring to palm off the grossest errors and the worst of corruptions, under the guise of that ever-to-be-admired system of truth which issued from the Fountain of Wisdom and Purity, and was designed to reform, elevate and crown with the happiest of consequences the human race. And in some instances he is too successful—the young and inexperienced are sometimes drawn in—and occasionally persons of age and considerable experience. A person's safety lies only in a timely precaution. If once upon the outer circle of this whirlpool of ruin, there is great danger of being drawn into the awful vortex. If Mr. N. can succeed in getting a person into the rapids above the Niagara of licentiousness, he is quite sure to be carried over the fearful cataract, and make the fatal plunge; and perhaps he is gone ere he is aware of danger. In view of all the facts developed and doctrines taught by Mr. N., may it not be said that—

"He set himself, with most felonious aim
And hellish perseverance, to root out
All good, and in its place to plant all ill;
To rub and raze, from all created things,
The fair and holy portraiture divine,
And on them to enstomp his features grim:
To draw all creatures off from loyalty
To their Creator, and make them bow
The knee to him ------------------ Vilest of traitors! most dishonest man!--- Sat by the door of Ruin, and made there
A melody so sweet, and in the mouth
Of -------- debauch, that else had croaked
In natural discordance jarring harsh, Put so divine a song, that many turned Aside, and entered in undone, and thought,
Meanwhile, it was the gate of heaven, so like An angel's voice the music seemed.

--------------- Nor the saints elect,
Who walked with God, in virtue's path sublime,
Did he not sometimes venture to molest;
--------------- And in their way
Bestrewing pleasures, tongue so sweet, and so
In holy garb arrayed, that many stooped,
Believing them of heavenly sort, and soul;
And to their high professions, brought disgrace
And scandal."
CHAPTER XIV.

Extracts of letters addressed to Mr. Noyes—Noyes's letter to Miss Harriet A. Holten.

We present a few paragraphs from communications addressed to Mr. Noyes by different individuals who embraced Perfectionism at an early period in its history. They are curious specimens of religious (?) experience and emotions—mere echoes of the sentiments uttered by the great oracle of Perfectionism. The letters from which the extracts are taken, were published in the Witness of Jan. 23, 1839.

The first extract we shall give, is from a letter written by Wm. Green, Jr. in Jan. 1839.

"Dear brother Noyes—A few days since, the Spirit said to me, write to Noyes, and ever since, there has been a controversy in my mind whether to address you by brother Noyes, or dear brother Noyes. My feelings said the latter, but there were so many things that I could not understand, that safety said the former. . . . The Lord said to me last fall, that the doctrines advanced by you were from hell, and when I found within the few past weeks, that the opposition of my heart was gradually giving away, I could not for some time, reconcile it with what he had told me of your doctrines, but before I became free to write to you, the Lord cleared up my mind, by showing me that the views I received as being your real sentiments, were licentious, but that those were not your real sentiments as they lay in your mind."

of the poor man's mind in the midst of this perplexing bewilderment!

The next letter which we shall notice, is from a Mr.
H. C. Green, who appears to have been very much surprised at the first appearance of the Battle of Letter; so much so that she turned Mr. Noyes out of doors. But probably viewing it afterward through glasses placed before her eyes by Mr. N., she appears to have been perfectly enamored with beauties; and becoming "converted to the practical charms of Perfectionism," she hastily retraced her steps, and expressed herself thus, under date of 12, 1839.

"Dear brother Noyes—You have not to learn this stage of your experience not to be surprised by anything strange, or indeed, not to consider any thing as strange, since God's ways are not as man's ways, and seeing he has declared that a strange work will form in the earth. I shall therefore make no effort for calling you dear brother, but only say that the Lord has taught me that it is safe to love in cases where it is not safe to judge."

Mrs. Green appears to have been formerly a member of the Moral Reform Society, but on the of her sentiments was disowned by that society. Reference to whose members she continues:

"Poor souls; they are deadly opposed to the world. How can they, with such beams in their own eyes, pull out the mote out of their brothers' eyes? Worldly modesty and delicacy which they use to cover their nakedness, does but make the filth and rottenness within. I believe that this subject in every root and branch will have to undergo a most thorough reform, even until that which is now called purity will be seen to be utterly abominable in the sight of God. I believe that every thing ought to be done under the leadings and guidance of the Spirit, and every relation, so far as it has a tendency to interfere with that Spirit, has the curse of God resting upon it. I am beginning to learn the great secret that 'whatsoever is not of faith is sin,' and bless the Lord that he is cutting the cords one after another, that the 'word may have free course and be glorified.' The axe is laid at the root of the tree and the last stroke will complete the work. Glory to God, we are riding in chariots on the king's highway, and cry, 'Cast ye up, cast ye up, take the stumbling block out of the way of my people.' . . . We find the members of the body imperfectly formed and scattered—what wonder then that we cannot always fit smoothly together. While some are farther advanced and others behind, we have need of that cement of love which 'hopeth all things, believeth all things, endureth all things.'

"I feel that you are passing through a fiery furnace, and though we have helped kindle the fire, I am sure you will be more refined, and it is your turn to rejoice that we too have had our clothes scorched by the same fire. Bless the Lord—let it burn, until the last rag is consumed, it is not our fire but His. When he brings us out, we shall not have even the smell upon our garments.

"We should like one of the books, which you have been publishing. Should an opportunity present, will you send us one? I need not say to you, should the Lord lead the way, come yourself. I can assure you a hearty reception to the house, and at least one heart. The others are of age and must speak for themselves. It would give me pleasure to see that sister whom the world calls your wife. I hear you passed under something of a form. I hope it contained nothing of the ingredients which composed the first marriage ceremony ever pronounced upon woman—viz. Eve's curse—'Thy desire shall be to thy husband and he shall rule over thee.' Nay, I am persuaded you know what it is to live without being bound by any law, and yet be the more firmly united."

We next give some extracts from a letter written by Mrs. R. Black, about the time Mrs. Green indited her epistle. It appears that the virus of Perfectionism had already been diffused to some extent—that the infection had taken in some localities, and was becoming quite contagious among a certain class:—

"Dear brother Noyes—I have sat down to write to you because the Spirit of the Lord leads me to do so, and as he shall give me so shall I write, neither more nor less. At the time I saw you in N. Y. at brother Green's, I supposed that I understood your views, and with some of them was perfectly disgusted, and also with you for entertaining them, but I now believe that I was not prepared to receive them at that time, and I bless God that he has taught me all I know of the subject upon which we differed. Possibly my present sentiments would not agree with yours, indeed, I need not expect to have so extensive an acquaintance with the subject as yourself. Yet I think it probable, that as far as I have gone we shall agree: if I can get the evidence that we are in the same school, this will be sufficient for me. I anticipate your answer, that I this is not enough for me; although I want a candid expression of your sentiments, I want still more to know that you are my dear brother. I believe that you are, or I should not write thus plainly.

Every one has got some of the bond-woman's children clinging about them in some form or other. Sometimes I think I can discover one hanging about me, but my cry is, 'Cast out the bond woman and her children.' Some of them are safety, prudence, expediency, decency, and the like. I hate them all. Now I recollect to have heard the word expediency used by yourself, in a number of instances; you may mean something that I do not: do tell me brother, what you do mean. Do come and see us. The Lord is doing great things for us. He has made me to laugh, and all those that see me will laugh with me. It is indeed a strange work, it is just like my God—to Him be all the praise. Give my love to all who know him.'

This caps the climax! The "bond-woman's children" must be turned out, "decency" and all! Fanaticism here completely runs riot.

These sickening extracts serve as fair samples of the communications which Mr. Noyes was frequently receiving from different quarters thus early in the history of Perfectionism. These being specimens, the reader can judge as to the general character of the correspondence which was pouring in upon Mr. Noyes, from all points of the compass.

Straws show which way the current moves. And the tenor of the extracts given, as clearly shows the natural tendency of the doctrines taught by Noyes, at that period in his career, as the shining of the sun-day.
But it seems that some of the early converts to Perfectionism—some of the weak disciples of Noyes, were at first disgusted, and almost horrified, at the open avowal of his sentiments; but they appear to have made rapid proficiency under his tuition; for we soon find them looking with favor upon his doctrines, and liberally interlarding the wonderful change which had passed over them, with the most pious expressions. Thus hypocritically pretending that divine influences had brought about their conversion to these new notions; when in fact the natural inclination of their own unrenewed hearts must have caused them to drink the fatal poison, which Noyes had prepared and placed before them. And we find them at length blasphe-mously attributing the most sheer nonsense, the most indecent and even ridiculous conduct to a divine impulse!

Mr. Noyes, as if boasting of the victims he had secured and the converts he had made, unblushingly confronts the public with the letters—in the character of testimony—from which we have selected the extracts already given; which letters were accompanied by a note of unqualified approbation from Mr. Noyes. He asserts that the cause of truth required him to set aside "all considerations of personal delicacy," and he introduces the testimony of Mrs. Green and Mrs. Black, as "pertinent and necessary!"

Mr. Noyes, to exhibit his gallantry, and show that he was not a whit behind those zealous females in discarding the "true woman's children," publishes the substance of a letter which he wrote to a young lady, making proposals for a kind of "partnership" which the world commonly calls marriage. He undoubtedly designed this letter as a kind of offset to the productions of Mrs. Green and Mrs. Black; or a significant response to the sentiments they had uttered, which were probably called forth by the open avowal of his own liberal and licentious doctrines.

Mr. Noyes introduces the letter alluded to, by a few remarks:—

"To prove that I repudiate in myself as well as in others, all unreasonable delicacy, I will now introduce an epistle of my own, written on what is commonly considered a very 'delicate' occasion. I do this the more readily, because it has been requested by several friends, who judged it might be very serviceable as a practical explanation of the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter. Moreover, it is a sufficient reply to Mrs. Green's inquiry about forms, and Mrs. Black's inquiry about my views of expediency... A few paragraphs in the original letter are here omitted, as being irrelevant to my present purpose."

—From J. H. Noyes, to Miss H. A. Holton."

Putney, June 11, 1828.

"Beloved sister:—

After a deliberation of more than a year, in patient waiting, and watching for indications of the Lord's will, I am now permitted—and indeed impelled—by a combination of favorable circumstances—to propose to you a partnership, which I will tell I have defined it.

This primary and universal union..."
is more radical, and of course more important, than any partial and external partnership; and with reference to this, it is said, 'there is neither male nor female, neither marrying nor giving in marriage in heaven.' With reference to this, also, my offensive remarks in the Battle Axe Letter were written. With this in view, we can enter into no engagement with each other which shall limit the range of our affections, as they are limited in matrimonial engagements, by the fashion of this world. I desire and expect my yoke-fellow will love all who love God, whether they are male or female, with a warmth and strength of affection unknown to earthly lovers, and as freely as if she stood in no particular connection with me. In fact the object of my connection with her will be, not to monopolize and enslave her heart or my own, but to enlarge and establish both, in the free fellowship of God's universal family. If the external union and companionship of a man and woman in accordance with these principles, is properly called marriage, I know that marriage exists in heaven, and I have no scruple in offering you my heart and hand, with an engagement to be married in due form, as soon as God shall permit.

"At first I designed to set before you many weighty reasons for this proposal; but upon second thought, I prefer the attitude of a witness to that of an advocate, and shall therefore only suggest briefly, a few matter of fact considerations, leaving the advocacy of the case to God—the customary persuasions and romance to your own imagination—and more particular explanations to a personal interview.

1 "In the plain speech of a witness, not of a and especially for your faith, kindness, simplicity and modesty.

2. "I am confident that the partnership I propose, will greatly promote our mutual happiness and improvement.

3. "It will also set us free, at least myself, from much reproach, and many evil surmisings, which are occasioned by celibacy in present circumstances.

4. "It will enlarge our sphere, and increase our means of usefulness to the people of God.

5. "I am willing at this particular time, to testify by example, that I am a follower of Paul, in holding that 'marriage is honorable in all.'

6. "I am also willing to testify practically against that 'bondage of liberty,' which utterly sets at nought the ordinance of man, and refuses to submit to them even for the Lord's sake. I know that the immortal union of hearts, the everlasting honey-moon, which alone is worthy to be called marriage, can never be made by a ceremony, and I know equally well that such a marriage can never be marred by a ceremony.

"You are aware that I have no profession save that of a servant of God—a profession which has thus far subjected me to many vicissitudes, and has given me but little of this world's prosperity. If you judge me by the outward appearance, or the future by the past, you will naturally find in the irregularity and seeming instability of my character and fortune, many objections to a partnership. Of this I will only say, that I am conscious of possessing by the grace of God, a spirit of firmness, perseverance and faithfulness in every good work, which has made the vagabond, incoherent service, to which I have thus far been called, almost intolerable to me; and I shall welcome heaven's order for my release from it, as an exile after seven years pilgrimage would welcome the sight of his home.
see now no reason why I should not have a 'certain dwelling place,' and enter upon a course which is consistent with the duties of domestic life. Perhaps your reply to this will be the voice saying to me,— 'Watchman! let thy wanderings cease, Hie thee to thy quiet home.'

"Yours in the Lord, J. H. NOYES."

We have thus given the letter of Mr. Noyes, in full, as he published it. It seems to have been regarded with favor, by the lady to whom it was addressed; and in entering into the proposed "partnership" they "passed under something of a form," and that lady has since been known in law as the wife, or perhaps we ought to say, the "partner" of Mr. N.
Noyesite Community at Oneida—Rule in the Putney Community—State of things in New York.

In an article published in the Spiritual Magazine of Aug. 5, 1848, Mr. Noyes speaks of the dispersion of the believers at Putney, in the autumn of 1847—refers to their removal from Putney to Oneida,' and their settlement there, and says:

"We find ourselves now, after a short interval of comfortable confusion, by the invitation and cordial co-operation of Mr. Jonathan Burt, and others of this vicinity, in a position much better than Putney ever gave us... Our dispersion last fall, and the revolutions among believers generally, resulting from the new position of our cause, have opened and warmed many hearts, as the varied correspondence presented in this paper shows."

That the reader may be made acquainted with the character of the elements which lie at the bottom of the Noyesite Community at Oneida, it is necessary to state that Mr. Jonathan Burt—who invited Noyes to locate at Oneida Reserve, and who is cordially co-operating with him—went to Jesse Ball, of Canastota, N. Y., and demanded his (Ball's) wife, affirming that, "She was his, for God had given her to him." Mrs. Ball had been converted to Perfectionism, through the influence and agency of Burt, but she refused to follow her spiritual father in this matter. This information we have derived from a reliable source. Having such a foundation, with Noyes at its head, we cannot mistake as to the character of the Oneida Community. This Community is henceforth to be the rallying point, the centre of attraction to all "true believers" in the Noyesite heresy.

But let us glance at their "new," or "advanced position." There can be no doubt in regard to the stand which they have recently taken. Facts and circumstances abundantly show that the carrying out of the sentiments of the Battle Axe Letter, and consequently a virtual nullification of the institution of marriage among all Perfectionists, is the distinguishing characteristic of their present position. This, moreover, is in perfect keeping with doctrines which Mr. N. has long taught.

But let us look at a few facts. In the summer of 1847, soon after it was announced that the kingdom had come, Mr. Noyes made known the rule which was henceforth to govern the Putney community. It appears that prior to this period, the specious doctrines of Mr. N. had been confined principally to the leaders or master spirits in the society at Putney; but the time had arrived when there was to be a more general spread of those doctrines, and they were to be more extensively carried out in practice. But there must be some exercise of discretion. The subject must be laid before advanced scholars instead of young disciples. But Mr. N. broached the subject to a person in Putney village, who was a Perfectionist, but had not
The course marked out by Mr. N. for the Putney Community henceforth to follow," cuts directly across the marriage covenant of this world!" This rule was to be applied to all in the society, both married and unmarried; and those who refused to come under the rule, and submit to the regulations, were considered guilty of disloyalty to the "acknowledged head of the Corporation!" Mr. N., in order to induce the individual alluded to, to comply with his Jesuitical requisitions, told him that without taking this last step, and pursuing the course which he had marked out, they could not be perfect, or could not have perfect love! An associate of Noyes also labored with the individual, and asked him if he was not going to submit to Mr. N.—as though resistance to his authority would be a high handed offence. But they did not succeed; and lest some matters might be divulged not very creditable to the "acknowledged head,"—if a reconciliation was not brought about—they compromised the matter by Mr. N.'s agreeing to let the person referred to, be exempt from the rule which had been adopted. And thus the matter ended.

It appears that there were a few in the Putney Community, who, notwithstanding the teachings of Mr. N. for several years, had not seen the practical tendency of his doctrines, and did not actually know what the final results would be, until the matter was unblushingly laid before them, and every shadow of doubt was dispelled. Hence, as a matter of course, there would be some refractory spirits, who would not bow down in humble submission to Mr. N.—but such were given to understand that they must submit or leave the premises; and one elderly lady from an adjoining town, who had recently come under the "common roof," but who refused to submit to the rule, actually quit the premises and removed to an adjoining State.

But while strenuous efforts were being made in Putney, for the purpose of making thorough work, and carrying out the precious doctrine through the whole Community, other places came up in remembrance before the great leader. In the midst of the move, or while things were progressing at Putney, Mr. N. took a five weeks tour into the State of New York, and attended two Conventions—one at Lairdsville, Oneida Co., which met Sept. 3, 1847—and the other at Genoa, Cayuga Co., which met on the 17th of the same month.

These Conventions were called by John B. Foote, and John Corwin, both of New York. The object of the Conventions, as specified by those who called them, was to bring Eastern and Western—or New York and Vermont—Perfectionists together, "for the purpose of acquaintance, acknowledgment of each other, and co-operation."

One object—but whether a primary or secondary, we are not prepared to say—of Mr. N. in attending these Conventions, undoubtedly was to give the members a thorough baptism of the document called the "Battle Axe Letter." This is fairly inferable from the following circumstance:—At the Lairdsville Convention, Mr. Otis Sanford, of Clinton, N. Y., introduced a few resolutions, which, among other things, expressed entire approbation of the "general course of the press at Putney," and pledged a cordial co-operation with the brethren there in the circulation of their publications. The report of the Convention says that these resolutions were "discussed harmoniously and passed unanimously." Mr. Noyes, in a note appended to these resolutions, published in the Spiritual Magazine of Oct. 1, 1847, says:—"After the close of the meetings, Otis Sanford, in consequence of discovering that I was the author of the 'Battle Axe letter,' (which he had never seen before,) retracted his assent to these resolutions."

Now, from this circumstance, it plainly appears that Mr. Noyes introduced the Battle Axe Letter into those Conventions—perhaps as a feeler—or at least showed it to some individual members, for the purpose of securing their influence in favor of its doctrines. But it appears that they were not prepared, to any considerable extent, for the reception of such revolting sentiments. Even Mr. Sanford, who introduced the resolutions expressive of entire approbation of the course pursued by the Perfectionists at Putney, when apprized of the fact that Noyes wrote the Battle Axe Letter, immediately withdrew his assent from the very resolutions which he had himself introduced.

But let us look at the principles sanctioned and set forth by the Conventions already referred to. These principles are embodied in a series of resolutions passed at the Genoa Convention, which are as follows:

1. "Resolved, That we will devote ourselves exclusively to the establishment of the kingdom of God; and as that kingdom includes and provides for all interests, religious, political, social and physical, that we will not join or co-operate with any other association.

2. "Resolved, That as the kingdom of God is to have an extensive manifestation, and as that manifestation must be in some form of Association, we will acquaint ourselves with the principles of Heavenly Association, and train ourselves to conformity to them as fast as possible.

3. "Resolved, That one of the leading principles of Heavenly Association, is the renunciation of exclusive claim to private property.

4. "Resolved, That it is expedient immediately to take measures for forming a Heavenly Association in Central New York.

5. "Resolved, That Wm. H. Cook be authorized, on our behalf, to visit Perfectionists throughout the State, for the purpose of stirring up their minds in relation to Association, and ascertaining the amount of men and means that are in readiness for the enterprise."

These resolutions speak for themselves—they cannot be mistaken—comment is unnecessary. Let it be borne in mind that all the "Heavenly Associations" to be formed, must be based upon the principles embodied in the foregoing resolutions; and built up in all respects after the pattern of the one existing in Shuney. The site was selected, as we are informed, near Oneida Castle, for a great central "Heavenly Association" in the Empire State, and measures taken to obtain the necessary means. Mr. Noyes, having thus hoisted his colors in New York, and put in motion a train of operations which promised success, returned to Vermont; and soon after was arrested for several crimes of the darkest shade! Soon after his arrest at Putney, Mr. Noyes absconded, and finally fixed on Oneida Reserve—upon the very site previously selected, as we suppose, for founding a "Heavenly Association;" and as all the elite of the Putney Community have been transferred to that point, we take it for granted that they have there a genuine Noyesite Association.

It may be proper here to remark, that Jonathan Burt, to whom we have already referred, and who laid claim to the wife of Jesse Ball, of Canastota, was Moderator of the Lairdsville Convention; and he seems to be—at least, so far as pecuniary matters are concerned—the pedestal, on which the Oneida Community stands.

John B. Foote, for a considerable time, stood at the head of the Western division of Perfectionists, but at the Lairdsville Convention, the supremacy of Noyes was acknowledged; and Foote and his followers, as we are informed by a gentleman who was present, "paid the most servile homage and adulation to their chief." Noyes, and his associate leader, Foote, immediately concerted schemes for future operations. But this state of things was destined to be of short duration—a revulsion was at hand. The gentleman just alluded to, who attended the Lairdsville Convention, says:—

"A new difficulty threatened to spoil all. The Perfectionists of New York deserted Noyes hastily and incontinently, as they had just before rushed eagerly into his embrace.

"The 'Battle Axe Letter,' written by Noyes in 1837, declared that in the 'holiness of the resurrection there would be no marriage.' 'The marriage supper of the Lamb,' says the letter, 'is a feast at which every dish is free to every guest.' This sentiment, which they had hoodwinked their own eyes from beholding, now disconcerted his new allies. Speedily did they trumpet it forth as a new discovery, though they had had the evidence ten years. For although Noyes had quibbled around this letter, he had never denied its real meaning. For most inquirers, a little dust was sufficient to blur their eyes. Not till its practical bearings were brought into notice, did they allow it to be a doctrine of evil tendency. But as soon as they heard of cross-fellowship, and the fact that their chosen apostle was under bonds for the charge of adultery, they gave the alarm, when the evil was already their own by endorsement. Perhaps they were honest in all this; but certainly appearances are unfavorable. I except Wm. S. Hatch."

We infer from what follows, that Noyes and Foote are now arrayed against each other. Speaking in reference to the present position of affairs, the same writer continues:—

"In this curious predicament are the members of war. Their future course is a matter of curious speculation, but not a proper subject for present decision. One party bids fair to perish in its own corruption; the other to be swept hither and thither with every wind of doctrine."

The following remarks exhibit the leading characteristics of the two prominent individuals just alluded to—and refer to the early part of their career:—

"The aspirations of J. B. Foote were for spiritual glory. Power was the element of J. H. Noyes."

That the reader may the more clearly see the true position of Noyes, and the present state of things in New York, we quote still farther from the same writer:—

"To crown the whole, we must copy still farther from a letter written by Noyes, an extract of which was published in the Battle Axe and Weapons of War, 1837.

"'God is about to set a throne on his footstool, and heaven and earth, i. e. all spiritual and political dynasties, will flee from the face of him that shall sit thereon. The righteous will be separate from the wicked by the opening of the books and the testimony of the saints. Between this present time and the establishment of God's kingdom over the earth, lies a chaos of confusion, tribulation, woe, and such as must attend the destruction of the fashion of this world, and the introduction of the will of God, as it is done in heaven. God has set me to cast up a high way over this chaos.' . . .

"'When the will of God is done on earth, as it is in heaven, there will be no marriage. . . . God has female during the apostacy, for good reasons, which will be broken down in the resurrection for equally good reasons. But woe to him who abolishes the law of the apostacy, [i. e. marriage,] before he stands in the holiness of the resurrection. [Observe the expression: The holiness of the resurrection, not the resurrection state. So Smith, Lyvere and other associates of Noyes, affirm that he taught them.] The guests of the marriage supper may have each his favorite dish. [This probably refers to an external form of marriage,]—each a dish of his own procuring, and that without the jealousy of exclusiveness.' . . .

"It is due to Western Perfectionists, and many others, to state again that they have not subscribed to many of the more odious doctrines here copied. Yet as they have silently passed over them, without remark, the community is liable to attribute to them the sanction of deeds which they would regard with abhorrence. But the Antinomian elements infused into all their habits of thinking, are very evident in all their expositions of Scripture, and of course must be exhibited in their lives. In spite of their protestations, they are but too liable to be of the class whose spirit is exclusive, who are inflated with conceptions of personal superiority."
CHAPTER XVI.

Extracts from Correspondence—Visit of Mr. Lowell to the Oneida Community.

Immediately after the startling disclosures at Putney in the fall of 1847, there was quite a “revolution among believers generally, resulting from the new position” of things. Many, not only in the State of New York, but elsewhere, who had embraced the doctrines of Noyes, but did not discover their immoral tendency till their practical results were fairly exhibited, were alarmed, fell off, and rejected their leader. But the most prominent Noyesites at Putney professed to be more surprised at the expressions of confidence from believers in different places, than they were at their trials and the falling off among them. They now profess to believe—but how long they have so believed we are not informed—that the doctrine of “sexual morality” taught by Noyes, and which may now be considered the distinguishing doctrine of the sect, is the stumbling stone and rock of offence, which God has laid in Zion!! The Noyesites would of course expect that “the world,” i. e. all who were not Perfectionists, would take offence at this doctrine; and it seems that they were not surprised that weak believers were stumbled at it. But notwithstanding the falling off among them, there were some who were so far advanced, or who had such strong faith, that they were ready for the new position. Many of these
"kindred spirits" sent in their Christian(?) salutations by way of encouragement to the "body of believers" at head quarters. We make a few extracts from the "varied," and to them "interesting correspondence," which has been coming in from almost all points of the compass. The first is from a letter of encouragement from a correspondent at Barnstable, Mass., whose name is withheld. The letter bears date, March 14, 1848, and the extract is as follows:—

"Be not discouraged, my dear friends. Although you may be bound and crucified as was your Master, because you tell the truth, and do the works he inspires you to do, you shall rise again from the dead, and truth shall go forth from conquering and to conquer."

It seems that the dear man did not know that Noyes was dead against the doctrine of the "resurrection of that body which dies." This correspondent was trying to encourage them with the hope of that in which they have no belief, and for which of course they have no desire! Poor encouragement this.

The next extract which we give, is from a letter written by Wm. H. Perry, of New York City, and is dated March 26, 1848:—

"I am at Oneida now in spirit a good part of the time, and look forward with a good deal of anxiety, when the saints of the Most High will be associated and united together in the strong bonds of union, never to be separated."

It seems that Oneida is the point to which all eyes and the true believers scattered abroad, be "few and far between," although absent in body, are there "in spirit a good part of the time," and joyfully anticipate the day, when they shall be banded together under their "acknowledged head."
The course which they are pursuing is in perfect keeping with the saying of the Savior—"Where the carcass is, thither will the eagles be gathered together."

Next Joseph H. Thomas comes up from New Jersey, and tells what the "believers" are doing at Newark. Under date of April 25, 1848, he says:—

"We feel that we are fast condensing life in Newark; the power of love, which is God's magnetism, is increasing daily among us. . . . There never was a time when such a oneness was manifest as now.
We find ourselves speaking the same things, and thinking the same thoughts."

"THINKING THE SAME THOUGHTS!" This is truly wonderful!

Next, Enos Kellogg sends up Fifty Dollars of borrowed money from "the land of steady habits," to aid in the "establishment of God's kingdom on earth!" Writing from Somers, Ct., June 8, 1848, he says:—

"I have no funds that I can come at just now, but have borrowed fifty dollars, which I am happy in sending to you, to aid in the establishment of God's kingdom on earth."

What! The kingdom of God established with money! How apostolical! That individuals have a legal right thus to dispose of their money no one will question. But they would do well to take warning from those who have cast in their all to forward some fatal delusion, and in a few years found themselves penniless and forlorn. Many of the deluded followers of the Mormon Prophet have suffered immensely. Some of the mistaken Millerites foolishly threw away their property, and brought ruin upon themselves and wretchedness upon their families. If individuals will not heed these warnings, happy will it be for them, if they learn wisdom, though late, by the things which they may suffer.

Again, a voice from the "far west" proclaims high hopes of final triumph. Simon Lovett, writing from Bristol, Wisconsin, April 29, 1848, says:—

"One thing I know,—the stone is rolling which is to break in pieces all these kingdoms."

But last, though not least, Stephen R. Leonard speaks out from the very "paradise of redemption!" While others have hailed from distant lands and different regions, Mr. Leonard has given us an inkling of affairs at head quarters. In a letter dated Oneida, July 31, 1848, and addressed to John R. Miller of Putney, he says:—

"I have, with others, my 'impressions' of Oneida—and very interesting and edifying ones they are too. You are aware of course that before leaving Putney, I would speak of our prospects here with enthusiasm. I endeavored however at the same time, to look at things soberly also, and was assured in my own mind, that my enthusiasm was based on a substantial Spiritual foundation. Mere external adversity was no stumbling-block to my faith, and flattering external appearances were and eternal' were the groundwork of my anticipations. Amidst all the turmoil of the past winter, the consciousness of our having loving hearts was to me the surest earnest of success. I felt that this eternal principle within us could not help working its way through any difficulties that could possibly interpose, and in due time find its natural expression in an unselfish Association. With such a basis for my confidence, you may well suppose I am not about to confess myself to have been too ardent. 'Revelling in the halls of the Montezumas' is no comparison to me, with the privilege of living in a loving community—where we are free to have God wash away all exclusiveness from our natures, and teach us to worship Him in the beauty of holiness and love. Such a community we have here. The peace of God that passeth understanding, dwells in our midst; and the scouring of the material that is destined for the great battery which is to abolish death, elicits from time to time currents of the heavenly electricity that are worthy of a place in the paradise of God. The idea of learning to love one another as God loves us, without reference to the outward relations we are made to sustain to each other by law, I conceive to be the glory of the church; and if this is so, we shall ere long certainly be to the rest of the world as a city set on a hill. We are all 'earnest souls' for the practical development of this idea. It is plain to me that we are progressing steadily and swiftly towards the accomplishment of that great miracle—the unity of all believers—which is foreordained to convince the world of our identity with Christ."—Spiritual Magazine, Vol. II. No. 13.

Mr. Leonard is the printer in the "Heavenly Association" at Oneida, and in the foregoing extract he has certainly given us quite a glowing description of things there. Now, if "revelling in the halls of the Monte...sumes is no comparison to the privilege of living...omunity—and if "the idea of learning to...p upward relations they are made to sustain to each other by..." is "the glory of the (Noyesite) church"—and if they "are all 'earnest souls' for the practical development of this idea"—then we may fairly infer that the Community at Oneida is just like the one at Putney, and "a little more so!"

In the same paper from which the preceding extracts were taken, we find a brief notice of a visit which the Oneida Community had from a man by the name of Lowell. We give it entire—it is as follows:

"A Self-Trumpeter.—Our Community was honored with a call the other morning from a man by the name of Lowell, who professes, we understand, to be the blower of the 'seventh trumpet.' His pretensions, as put forth in our presence, were not so imposing as amusing. For instance, he observed with a most ludicrous air of mingled solemnity and caricature, 'When the Millerites talk about looking for the coming of Christ, I tell them they need not look any further; I'm the man!' We all had a very refreshing season of laughter at his rhodomontades of this kind; and, to do him justice, he bore our merriment with good nature, joined loudly, if not heartily, in the laugh, and seemed disposed, like a good actor, to give us a farce as extravagant and entertaining as possible. He said he was a 'wayfaring man,' which being interpreted, (as we have since been informed,) signifies in his case—a pedler. It is a curious and—almost incredible fact that several Perfectionists, heretofore thought to be men of sense, finding themselves in a starving, malcontent condition, have become the sucklings of this poor vagrant."

We were not aware that the kingdom of heaven was a place of merriment and farcical scenes! Perhaps such things are befitting a Noyesite company, but not a Christian community. We infer from the foregoing that when individuals leave the Noyesite ranks, they are no longer considered men of sense; but it is highly probable that they have as much sense after as they had before leaving. And if persons can swallow such a congeries of absurdities as Noyesism, with all its vile abominations, it would not be at all surprising if they should find themselves in a "starving" condition—seeing they are feeding upon "husks"—and certainly they would be fit subjects to become the "sucklings" of any "poor vagrant" that might chance to come along.
CHAPTER XVII.

Noyes searching for Stolen Goods.

We give below a particular account, by an eye-witness, of a little affair which took place several years ago, in Putney. It may be thought by some too small a matter to be recorded. Under ordinary circumstances it would not be entitled even to a passing notice; but as almost every thing connected with the history of distinguished individuals is read with some degree of interest, we think it proper to give an account of the affair just as it was related by the person under whose immediate observation it transpired. Small as the matter may seem, it appears to be a somewhat important link in a chain of events which are evidently destined to obtain some notoriety. Matters small in themselves sometimes throw great light upon the characters of noted men.

The account of which we speak was given by Alexander Wilder, Esq., of Verona, N. Y. Mr. Wilder embraced Perfectionism several years since, and for some time remained in fellowship with Mr. Noyes, but at length became convinced that he was an impostor, clearly saw the tendency of this new ism, and, like an honest man, renounced the error which he in sincerity had embraced. The account given by Mr. Wilder is as follows:—

"The affair of Noyes's search for stolen goods took place directly under my personal observation, and the ridiculous light into which it cast all his pretensions to infallibility of judgment, rendered it to me particularly valuable. It saved me from attributing to him a divine power which he did not possess, and eventually assisted in my emancipation from his thraldom.

"When John L. Skinner—to whose care I was committed, that I might be restored to confidence and fellowship—insisted on the superior spiritual wisdom of our chief, I alluded to this case, and never without success. The evil dispositions ascribed to me (for Perfectionists have made me their scape-goat) were increased by such occurrences. Now for the story:

"In the latter part of August, 1848, Austin Kent, a Mr. Hurlburt and wife and two other women, from Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., visited Putney. They were spiritualists, on a very similar plan with Noyes, but professing superior illumination. This offence was unpardonable. S. R. Leonard and myself were engaged in press-work, which occupied us for some two hours of this visit. During this time they had delivered a testimony to Noyes, disapproving of some parts of his course, and implying that though he had holiness of heart, his mind was still unsanctified." He would not cordially receive their words. They then requested permission to repose, as they were in feeble health and weary with travelling. Beds were accordingly furnished them. They took pillows from those couches which they did not occupy, as suited their convenience, and when they arose they left them where they had lain down. About the time we had finished our work at the office, and came in to see the new comers, they were giving a last testimony to our leader.

*Kent and his followers believe that the heart and mind are distinct entities, requiring separate conviction and conversion; and that a person may be saved from sin in heart, and still be a sinner in mind.
As Kent exclaimed, in a quiet tone, 'You have a bad spirit,' Noyes, in a sharp, loud tone, replete with rage, exclaimed five or six times, 'You are an impostor—You are an impostor.'*

"Probably his refusal to bow before the Putney chief was the stamp of his imposture; certainly his manner indicated no such thing. The company then retired from Mr. Noyes, going up to the old Noyes homestead, where they had left their conveyances, with which they proceeded to Mr. Perry's Inn, where they

* Kent and his company professed to be divinely commissioned to correct certain errors and reveal important truths. Noyes, in giving some account of the visit from these spiritualists, published in the Perfectionist of Sept. 15, 1843, says:—"They called upon me recently, and gave me to understand that they were commissioned to instruct me. I invited them to open their minds. . . . As the discourse proceeded, I insisted on having the privilege of questioning their positions, and answering their arguments. They were very averse to this, and strove hard to make me receive their testimony as a message from God, not to be argued with. . . . The dispute waxed warm toward the conclusion, and they finally averred in plain terms that they came to teach me, and not to be taught; and that it was my business to hear them, and not to argue. One of the men at last told me I had a 'wicked spirit.' I told him he was an impostor. He threatened me with the vengeance of God, and they departed. They remained till the afternoon of the next day at the tavern in this village. Several of the believers called, and had conversation with them. Their principal labor was to convince those that called that I am a very wicked man; and that persons saved from the 'sin of heart,' are not saved from the 'sin of mind.' . . . I recommend that they be called upon to prove their commissions. This is certainly no more than is reasonable, if we consider merely the mouth-stopping authority which they assume."

It appears that Noyes could not brook in others that dictatorial spirit, that "mouth-stopping authority," which he is wont to assume put up. That evening and the next day (Sunday) they were visited by the different Perfectionists in town, myself among the number. They received us courteously and treated us with urbanity.

"At the invitation of Mrs. Louisa Shaw, they on Sabbath afternoon left Mr. Perry's and went over to the 'East Part' of the town, where they remained several days. The Perfectionists generally over there gave them their fellowship. This was very offensive to our 'acknowledged Head.' From this period I date my declension in his favor, for I had treated them civilly. As I had not held conversation with them except as their guest, I could not decently do otherwise.

"They had taken the pillow from my bed when they laid down. As I am not very particular about such things, I slept without it several nights, not caring enough or even thinking to mention the affair. Fanny White, who generally was the chamber-maid, was gone to her father's. Mrs. Noyes at length asked me about the pillow. I told her that I had slept without it a number of nights, ever since the company were there. She told it to her husband. In an instant he exclaimed, 'They have stole it.' It was in vain that she affirmed that it could not be, for the people had gone out in full view of us all, so that we would have witnessed it. 'The old woman,' he would have it, 'could put it under her clothes, and it would serve for a cushion.'

"He hastened out and gave the alarm to the family at the upper house. I think he had it searched, but am not positive. He also went to Mr. Perry, to get him to search the tavern. His motions were unusually rapid, for he was much excited—and a malicious triumph characterized his manner. I had never seen him possessed by such a spirit. He was as though half insane."
"At this juncture, Fanny came over from home to the village, and called in. Finding out our uproar, she went up stairs, looked over the apartments, and found that the pillows were all there. Mrs. Noyes, who is usually a meek, quiet woman, exclaimed, 'I am sorry that all this fuss has been made.' It was a characteristic remark.

"This is the contemptible affair which is destined to obtain an importance, because of its forcible illustration of the weak spot in Noyes's character. I have given it at length, that other witnesses might recognize the facts the more readily."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Affidavit of Alexander Wilder—Expulsion of Mr. John B. Lybere and Miss Almira Edson.

In addition to the statements found in the foregoing Chapter, we give the following Affidavit, which Mr. Wilder has kindly furnished:—

"The question has often been put to me—'Why do you not forget past differences, and return into the fellowship of Perfectionists and of their leader, John H. Noyes?'

"I have sought, heretofore, rather to evade than to answer this interrogation. My reason for this was, that the well-known habit of the individual above referred to, has been to pursue with unrelenting severity every one who seceded from his connection. Indeed, whenever I have sought to give the desired information, it has been attributed to personal enmity rather than to the true motive. I have generally consented to be abused, without attempting any regular self-defence; preferring quiet and peace before justice to myself. Propriety requires, however, at the present crisis, that I should announce myself in my true colors. I cannot re-enter the fold of Perfectionism, because, in the first place, I do not believe several of its prominent doctrines; secondly, I have no confidence in the religious character, integrity, and fair dealing and wisdom of its acknowledged chief, John H. Noyes.

"Orthodox Perfectionists do not substantially admit that this man is capable of error of life, or even of judgment. They also require, as a test of fellowship, the acknowledgment of his pontifical supremacy as the successor of the apostle Paul. Indeed, he recently asserted his authority in a public meeting, (at Lairdsville, N. Y.,) because, (to use his own words,) 'like the strongest cow in the pasture, he had hooked down every rival.'

"The doctrines of the Eternal Devil, and of that state of things predicated in a letter written by Noyes, in which he teaches a resurrection state, on which Perfectionists are now entering; and in which, while the sexual distinction is not set aside, yet marriage is abrogated, are to me especially odious. I fear the moral influence of these sentiments. The more so, as he has already announced the advent of the kingdom of heaven at Putney, Vt., where he resides, and where he has an association of disciples. See the Witness, Vol. I. pp. 21, 22, 49, 50, 76; Perfectionist, Vol. V. p. 33; Spiritual Magazine, Vol. II. pp. 65, 69. It may be necessary to state that, so far as my knowledge extends, though several of his intimate friends have, through the influence of the 'Battle Axe Letter,' perpetrated acts of flagrant licentiousness, Noyes himself is innocent of any such impropriety." Other differences of doctrinal opinions are not worthy of present notice.

"The lack of confidence in his character was occasioned by several circumstances which occurred during my residence in his family. In February, 1840, after long and anxious deliberation, I rejected the religious sentiments which I had held, and in which I was educated, and became what was termed a Perfectionist. My firm, steady adherence to the new doctrines, is satisfactory evidence of my sincerity in embracing them. Some weeks after, I learned the existence of John H.

* W. H. Cook, of Syracuse, has since made it known that Noyes NOYESISM UNVRILED.

Noyes. With the simplicity of a child and the confidence of a brother, I sought to be acquainted with his character and publications. At length in November, 1842, I left my home in Verona, and went to Putney, where I resided till February, 1844. When I parted from him and his disciples, it was on my part with unfeigned good will. Since that time, however, I have been separated in feeling from him; nor do I expect, knowing the character of the man as I do, that the breach will be repaired. Before I left Vermont, I had suffered severely from him; but it was afterwards, that by reflection upon what had transpired, want of confidence and embittered feelings, on account of unkind treatment, sprung up in my mind, producing alienation. I will now state the principal facts which occasioned the estrangement.

"Returning from a tour in Massachusetts, in February, 1843, Mr. Noyes began to try his skill in Animal Magnetism. Being impressive, I was the subject of many of his experiments. By reason of their continuation for some weeks, and being operated upon by several of his family, a diseased state of mind and body was produced. For many months I suffered a very great depression of spirits. I felt myself in connection and rapport with influences which caused the keenest mental anguish, and knew not how to free myself. A nameless fear, despondency, gloom and despair, paralyzed my strength of mind. A morbid attachment for individuals was induced; and the whole corporeal system partook of the disorder. The intervals of pleasure, like the exhilarations of intoxicating drugs, gave relief for a little season, but only to plunge me into a deeper gloom. To heighten my misery, Noyes began to berate me, charging my sufferings to various causes, and even to the influence of the Devil. This devil, or evil genius, I now know emanated directly from him.

"Toward the latter part of the year, my health began to improve. I was more cheerful. A new and more serious difficulty awaited me. Report had gone abroad of his skill as a magnetizer. A young man named Baker requested him to visit his sister, [now Mrs. H. A. Hall,] who for several years had been confined to her bed. He did so a number of times. She also became a proselyte to his doctrines. In October she came to his house, and remained about three months. He continued his manipulations occasionally. Presently after I incautiously tried the experiment of casting her into the mesmeric slumber, and succeeded even better than Noyes himself. As I am of a temperament less harsh, forbidding, and repelling than he, the rapport was probably the more complete, so the patient acknowledged. She has since, however, I regret to say, set her hand to a version of this affair which widely contravenes the truth. Nor can I acquit her of falsehood because she seals her testimony with a miracle. I was persuaded to continue magnetizing her, because I was assured that Mr. Noyes wished it, and I was desirous to relieve suffering; it being also at the request of her brother, not at all imagining that I was assuming the responsibility of the case. I was informed subsequently that she grew better, and so continued till he disturbed her mind by bitter, angry reproach.

"I speedily abandoned a practice which, I am now convinced, is more corrupting and enervating than beneficial to the persons engaged in it. But I did not draw away her fellowship from Noyes. Indeed, she were benevolent; but I have been greatly misrepresented.

"At this time a protracted meeting was held at the Methodist Chapel in Putney, in which I took great interest. No party feeling directed me. I only desired the salvation of souls. This too was offensive to our leader. Spies watched my words and actions; they were reported to him; my language was misconstrued to a meaning which I thought not of. In short, by a trial behind my back, wholly ex parte, I was decided to be out of fellowship, and committed to discipline. My vindication was treated with scorn; I looked for friends, they were all as briers; and the best was sharper than a thorn hedge.

"One Monday morning in December, 1848, while the protracted meeting was going on in the Methodist Chapel at Putney, and in which I was greatly interested, not from sectarian motives, I arose before the rest of Noyes’s family, built a fire and began a French Lesson. Noyes soon got up, came out and began to commence directing me how to proceed with inquirers. I felt oppressed. The peculiar espionage of his family was very disagreeable to me. His false accusations were more tormenting. My own health was very poor. As he went on I timidly remarked, 'I think it were better to follow the lead of the Divine Spirit at the time. Arbitrary, set rules tend to confuse, and I am like an animal about to strike a given mark, if you seize the horn and attempt to guide it, he will falter, all confused and effect nothing.'

"With an eye sparkling with rage—for he possesses an infernal temper—N. exclaimed, 'If you think to get from under my control, you will find that I will take you by the horns.' These words struck a blighting feeling all over me; like a torpedo shock. Many hours passed before I recovered. Never again did I converse familiarly with that man, though I remained in Putney six or eight weeks. My eyes were opened. Not till the steel entered my own soul, was I willing to think evil of J. H. Noyes. But I know him to be a despot—an ambitious self-seeker—and my horror of him is as intense as my horror of a venomous serpent.

"Three times have I been assailed in his paper. These affairs have not given me pain. In those very articles that man lied—lied in his throat—and indorsed, if he did not instigate, others to lie. He gives liberty to his followers, provided they exercise it as he chooses. As the French officer addressed his soldiers—'Comrades you are at liberty to vote as you please on the question whether Napoleon shall be First Consul for life—but all who don't vote so shall be shot. Vive La Liberty.'

"Thus, in my youth, ignorance, and inexperience, was I involved in difficulties from which I lacked courage and power to extricate myself. I have since been published in the Perfectionist as a false brother and a hypocrite; but have never responded publicly to the attack. I doubt whether the majority of Perfectionists are sufficiently candid and honorable to give me a fair hearing. I have not found them the people which I had hoped. I make this exposition, not so much to justify myself as to show why I cannot co-operate with John H. Noyes and his adherents. I regret that I ever indulged personal bitterness of feeling toward him; but am glad to say that such is not now the case. I remember the past, not to feel ill will; but because it warns me to beware of that man for the future: that life and reason be not again endangered by his influence. I can excuse many of his... has spurned. He undoubtedly will retract nothing—not even his incorrect charges against my brother David.

"As to my own theological views, I regard all that is true in doctrine, all that is useful in practice to result from our union and conformity to God. This is the Gospel of the New Covenant.

"I belong to no sect in religion. I am identified with no body of people. Yet all that savors of piety, philanthropy and honesty attracts my warmest sympathy. For in every nation, every party and denomination, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness shall be accepted.

"It is proper to add, that I consider all obligations assumed by me, and devolving by reason of my relations to Perfectionists as now canceled.

"Alexander Wilder.

"Oneida Co., ss.

"Geo. C. Cadwell, Justice of the Peace."

The foregoing affidavit of Mr. Wilder speaks for itself. It certainly breathes a very commendable spirit, and will carry to the mind of the reader a conviction of its truthfulness. Though plain and pointed, it is devoid of harshness and unwarrantable severity. There is one important point, worthy of special notice, brought prominently to view, viz., the complete surveillance to which the followers of Mr. Noyes are subjected. They must bow in silent and humble submission to his sole dictation, or incur his hot displeasure, and feel the scorching flame of his fiercest indignation!
The case of Mr. Wilder is not a solitary instance in which Mr. Noyes has assumed the sole dictation of members of the Putney Association. These cases are of common occurrence, as the citizens of Putney well know. And indeed none are suffered to continue long in the Perfectionist Community unless they are found to be loyal subjects. The point under consideration is clearly illustrated by the excommunication of Mr. John B. Lyverre and Miss Almira Edson from the Perfectionist Association at Putney. The following is the form of expulsion, with quite a list of names attached:

"Whereas, faithful subordination is essential to the welfare of our association, and whereas John B. Lyverre and Almira Edson, by a clandestine marriage in defiance of the known will of the acknowledged head of the corporation, have committed an act of gross and deliberate insubordination, therefore—

"Resolved, That our connection with them be dissolved, and that they be requested to withdraw from the corporation.

John H. Noyes,       Harriet A. Noyes,
Geo. Cragin,          Mary E. Cragin,
Geo. W. Noyes,        Polly Noyes,
John L. Skinner,      Harriet A. Skinner,
John R. Miller,       Charlotte H. Miller,
G. W. Wilder,         Fanny Lord,
David Wilder,         Sally Cobb, Isaac Palmer, Jr.,    Polly Palmer,
William Sherwood,     Lauretta Sherwood, Clifford Clark,       Sally Clark."

Thus it appears that a Bull of excommunication was immediately issued by Mr. Noyes against Mr. Lyverre and Miss Edson, because they acted for themselves, and contracted a marriage—as they had a perfect right to do—agreeable to their own choice; but contrary to the "known will of the acknowledged head of the Corporation!"

And furthermore, it appears that a large number of the members of the Association in Putney were consenting to the act; and by attaching their names to the instrument of expulsion thereby became aidsers and abetters of the deed.

If any of those individuals whose names appear, were not fully persuaded in their own minds relative to the propriety and justice of thus summarily disposing of those members whom Mr. Noyes considered refractory, they were probably awed into humble submission and implicit obedience by beholding the rod of correction extended in terrorem over their heads; and lest a refusal on their part to affix their names to the fatal instrument should be construed by the "acknowledged head of the Corporation" into "an act of gross and deliberate insubordination." In such a case there would be no alternative but to submit to a fate similar to that of the victims before them, and suffer all the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

But, perhaps, we ought in justice to a few individuals whose names appear in the foregoing list, to say, that they have since renounced the doctrines of Noyes, and voluntarily withdrawn—to their praise be it spoken—from the Association; and now have no fellowship with, nor sympathy for, the Perfectionists.

But the question may be asked, Were Mr. Lyvere and Miss Edson Perfectionists? That they were professedly so there is no doubt; but were they really so? If they were Perfectionists merely in profession but not in fact, then in point of character they were on a level with common sinners, and were not entitled to the privileges and immunities of a society so holy as Mr. Noyes and his followers profess to be! That Perfectionists lay claim to all the heights and depths of perfect holiness, there can be no manner of doubt. The language of Mr. Noyes is plain and unequivocal touching this point. He says, "We verily believe and unblushingly maintain that we are free from sin!" Berean, p. 181. Here Mr. N. undoubtedly speaks in behalf of Perfectionists in general, and in reference to himself in particular.

Now if Mr. Lyvere and Miss Edson were Perfectionists in profession merely, then according to the doctrine of Mr. Noyes, they were entirely sinful; for he assumes that "Every being in the universe, at any given time, is either entirely wicked, or entirely holy"—that "all men are either as righteous as Christ, or as wicked as the devil." If Mr. Lyvere and Miss Edson were "entirely wicked," then they had no right to a place in a community as holy as the Putney Association professed to be, and might have been expelled at any time without any injustice—and indeed in that case they never ought to have been admitted to membership. If they were thus wicked what becomes of the arrogant claims of Perfectionists? They profess to be the true Church. They set them—selves up as a perfect model of primitive Christianity, and lay claim to all the miraculous gifts of the apostolic age; and they have promised "to surrender all pretensions of being a true Christian church," if they cannot "make out a case substantially like that of the primitive church."—Spiritual Magazine, Vol.II. No.10.

Now Mr. Noyes asserts that "the power of discerning spirits' was one of the gifts of the primitive church."—Berean, p. 45. But where is this gift among Perfectionists? If Mr. Lyvere and Miss Edson were "entirely wicked," then Mr. Noyes or some of his co-adjutors, had they possessed that gift, would have been able to discern such "wicked" spirits. But this they were unable to do.

Being unable, at least in this, as well as in other instances, to "make out a case substantially like that of the primitive church," will they now "surrender," in fulfilment of their promise, "all pretensions of being a true Christian church";—or will they falsify their word and still stand it out when stubborn facts stare them full in the face, and they are destitute of a particle of proof to substantiate the arrogant claims which they have impiously set up?

Turn this subject which way you please, Mr. N. occupies a no very comfortable position; and from what precedes, as well as from what follows, it plainly appears that he must hang upon one or both horns of a dilemma!

But the question recurs—Were Mr. Lyvere and Miss Edson Perfectionists? That they were professedly so, no one doubts; but we ask again, were they really so? Were they Perfectionists not only in name, but in deed and in truth?

If it be admitted that they were Perfectionists, in a full and proper sense, then Mr. Noyes is plunged into still deeper difficulties. It will be readily granted that in that case he might with the utmost propriety receive them into his society; but Mr. N. has assumed that real Perfectionists, or Perfectionists of a higher order, are not only free from sin, but that they can never fall into sin.

Now if Mr. Lyver and Miss Edson were really Perfectionists, they could not sin, according to Mr. N.'s doctrine. For what, then, were they expelled? For doing right? If so, injustice was done them, and the most downright despotism exercised over them. They had done no wrong—they had committed no sin—and yet they were summarily severed, at a single stroke, not only from the head, but from the whole "body of believers"! But will it be asserted, to avoid the charge of injustice, that they had really sinned? Then the security of the saints, so strenuously contended for by Mr. Noyes, goes by the board, and is clean gone forever.

But the mystery about the whole matter may be cleared up in few words:—If a person is perfectly submissive to the "acknowledged head of the Corporation," and commits the keeping of his conscience to that self-exalted functionary, do what he may, all will be well. But if he has a mind of his own, and acts for himself, the very first independent deed, however right of itself, will be denounced as "an act of gross and deliberate insubordination"—a mortal offence, worthy of immediate excommunication!

By Perfectionists the will of John H. Noyes must be regarded as the rule of right, and taken as the standard of judgment. Whatever accords with that will is pronounced praiseworthy; but whatever is contrary to it, if it is not set down as sin, yet in point of demerit and penal deserts, is considered tantamount to it. Quiet, humble and unceasing submission alone can secure the favor of the "acknowledged head of the Corporation."

But the case which has been under consideration, together with other important facts which have come to light in Putney, show conclusively that Mr. Noyes has assumed the prerogative of controlling all matrimonial arrangements among Perfectionists, or at least in the society over which he has the immediate supervision. Implicit submission in all such matters, or prompt expulsion, are the only alternatives!

Mr. Noyes recommends marriage, not because he believes in its validity, but because he deems it expedient under existing circumstances. The penalty of the law probably prompts his faith in that expediency; and he seeks to evade that penalty by a partial conformity to the law. Were there no penalty annexed to the law touching this matter, Mr. Noyes would utterly discard the marriage institution among his followers, and trample it under foot as a thing of nought. When a person marries a member of the Corporation under the direction of Mr. Noyes, that person is not united to one member only, but joined to the whole "body of believers." Thus when a bride is introduced to the Association, she is welcomed within the "charmed circle," and given to understand that she must consider herself a member of that body of which John H. Noyes is the head. And the bridegroom, to be a loyal subject and meet with favor in the eyes of the "acknowledged head," must be ready to adopt the sentiments of the Battle Axe Letter, and address Mr. Noyes as follows:—"I call this woman my wife—she is yours, she is Christ's, and in him she is the bride of all saints."
CHAPTER XIX.

Bible Secretiveness.

An editorial article under the above heading, published in the Spiritual Magazine of Sept. 1, 1847, clearly exhibits the process by which Mr. Noyes and his coadjutors indoctrinate their followers, and lead them along step by step till they reach the verge of ruin; and then, perhaps, pleased with the fatal delusion, they take a fearful leap into the dark abyss below, almost unconscious of danger, though doomed to destruction.

Although the article referred to reveals the modus operandi by which these master spirits initiate their disciples into the higher branches and sublimer mysteries of Noyesism, yet it is couched in such language and contains such allusions as would render it unintelligible, —aside from recent disclosures,—without a thorough knowledge and insight into the system. But happily the veil has been removed, and the clue obtained by which to unfold the hidden abominations of Noyesism.

The author of the article alluded to, in his modesty more than intimates that Noyesism is the key which unlocks the store-house of divine knowledge and reveals the wonders of the universe; and that unless a person becomes a Perfectionist, the Bible will be to him a sealed book, and the priceless treasures of divine truth never obtained!
It is, moreover, asserted that "infinite treasures" are reserved for "advanced minds." Thus it appears that although an individual should secure the key of knowledge by embracing Noyesism, he is not to be let into all the secrets at once, lest his moral sensibilities, not yet rendered obtuse, should be shocked, and being affrighted at the grosser parts of the system, he should retrace his steps, and the object thus be defeated and the prey lost. But their sentiments must be dealt out very cautiously, and the sublimer doctrines inculcated only as the mind is prepared by a regular training for their reception, and in accordance with the principles brought to view in the following extract from the article alluded to:

"Honesty will not suffer us to make a false statement of our views, but it will allow us to reserve them when we please. . . . Milk for babes, and strong meat for them that are of full age. . . . The Bible contains the germs of all truth—the distinct clue to all science. While, therefore, its meaning may be said to be so plain that 'he who runs may read'; and its straight path such, that 'the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein'; yet it is also certain that the revelation of its deep treasures is altogether a matter of attainment. Get hold of its clue at the right end, and you proceed steadily and safely to unfold the mysteries of the universe: come at it elsewhere, and either you find it a sealed up volume of dullness, or if you attempt to interpret it, you are liable to be lost in the ning of this clue, the primary station of departure from which we shall alone safely and certainly be led into all truth, is undoubtedly found in the doctrine and experience of salvation from sin."

Alas for us! the whole world en masse is doomed by these modern wise men to darkness impenetrable, and must hang their harps upon the willows and sit down in sad despair, never expecting to get the clue to a right understanding and correct interpretation of the Sacred Writings unless they become Perfectionists! These new lights, in some respects, appear to be near akin to the Romish clergy! If they do not, like Papal priests, lock up the letter of the Scriptures from the mass of the people, they profess to hold the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and they alone can give their true spiritual meaning! Hence we must wait on Mr. N.,—he being the "acknowledged head" of the "body of believers"—to turn the key, unlock the sacred volume, and reveal its hidden mysteries!

But the same writer, speaking in reference to the receivers of holiness after the Noyesite faith, proceeds as follows:

"That untruthful curiosity which disregards the principal, plain significance of their lives, and prefers rather to criticise and understand the details of their conduct and motives, will find in them the same enigma, the same occasion of error and stumbling, that they find in the Bible. 'The wind bloweth where it listeth,' says Christ, 'and ye hear the sound thereof; but ye cannot tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.'"
Thus Perfectionists, with their high-sounding professions of holiness and pretensions to super-eminent spirituality, shrink from the scrutiny of the world respecting the "details of their conduct and motives." But why so? The Savior assigns the sole reason why men prefer darkness to light, and that is, because their deeds are evil; and he asserts in the same connection, that "he that doeth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." John 3: 19–21.

Again—the same writer continues:

"While it is our business to present day by day to the world the great proposition which they most need, and which honest men can understand, viz., 'the righteousness of God which is by faith,' it is not our duty (because it would be injurious if not impossible) to set before them all the lessons which a spiritual man finds in perusing the revelation of God in the illumination of the Holy Ghost."

Undoubtedly there is direct reference in the above language to those peculiar sentiments characteristic of Perfectionism—those licentious doctrines which Mr. Noyes considers of great importance—holding them second only to theology itself!

Thus we are made acquainted with the course pursued by Mr. Noyes and his associates in conducting their followers, deluded and hoodwinked, along the road
It is not probable that all are thus deluded and unconsciously led like the lamb to the slaughter; for some, having acquired a tolerably correct knowledge of the character and tendency of the system, have, no doubt, viewed it with the eye of the libertine, and influenced by impure motives, joined the "body of believers," and thereby availed themselves of a favorable opportunity to carry out their base designs, and, gratify lawless lust. They may also fancy that they have found in Noyesism a kind of universal salvo for all conceivable sins; and may have appeased the upbraiding of conscience by viewing through the medium of the Noyesite faith this ruinous vice, transformed into an exemplary virtue!

It is ever dangerous to listen to the dulcet strains of the alluring syren, but some have listened to the voice of the charmer—being unacquainted with the nature and tendency of the doctrines taught by Noyes, they have, in the sincerity of their hearts and the simplicity of their souls, embraced them; and becoming at length intoxicated with the pleasing delusion, by the aid of subtle influences exerted upon them, have been brought to submit to the sole dictation of Noyes, who has regarded them as lawful prey; and they have in the end, and perhaps to their sorrow, found themselves fast bound in the meshes of Perfectionism. Being brought under powers and surrounded by influences with which they were unable to grapple, and against which it would be in vain to attempt to contend—the avenues of escape being closed around them, and terrified at the thunderbolts of wrath and indignation which not unfrequently burst forth from his "Holiness" whenever any uneasiness is manifested, they have been compelled to succumb, and have yielded themselves, though perhaps very reluctantly, to his sovereign sway, and have at length become the passive instruments of lust and cupidity. These hapless victims having lost their virtue, lay aside their modesty and are soon seen glorying in their shame. Their ruin went on rapidly—the work of destruction was cut short in wickedness; and from the very depths of degradation and the pits of pollution, these deluded votaries of vice send up the ringing shout of liberty, and loudly proclaim their fancied freedom! Freedom from law, but bondage in sin! They hug their chains with a death-like grasp, though boasting of freedom, and are the subjects of the most servile bondage while loudly proclaiming their liberty! Such are the results of this strange and almost unaccountable delusion!

But let us listen to their own language relative to the subject under consideration. In the Spiritual Magazine of Nov. 1, 1847, we find the following graphic account of events which had but recently transpired, and were frequently transpiring in the Association at Putney:—

"The concentration of interest, of will, of affection, in this body, demonstrates the presence of a moral magnet of inconceivable strength. Every kind of character has succumbed to its power. Iron wills have broken; excessive self-esteem has gathered within the charmed circle. The resistance of nature in many cases was tremendous. How often have we seen passion exasperated to the pitch of insanity, in the last agony of crucifixion—the last strain upon its attachments; but the inflexibility of truth conquers—the central attraction prevails, and immediately capture illumines the countenance where the darkness of despair was brooding. This process has been repeated till all its phenomena are familiar, and we are able to calculate results with precision. . . We have seen imaginations suddenly cast down, and thoughts captivated by one flourish of our spiritual weapons.

“The gravitation of hearts is irresistible. One daily intercourse is rapidly condensing life and intensifying the power of love. . . Private tastes are all offered up on the altar of universal love. Our senses perceive a jar or discord with increasing acuteness, and perfection must be the result of the revolution of our social machinery. It turns out daily miracles.”

If their social machinery turns out daily miracles, we may infer that they can be manufactured to order! Thus we have laid before us, by Perfectionists themselves, the breaking-down process—the bringing of wills and thoughts into captivity and complete subjection, not to the will of Christ, but to the will of John H. Noyes! And this, too, not in a solitary instance—a few isolated cases—but in numerous instances. All must bow the knee and lick the dust before this would-be Pontiff. The language above quoted was somewhat dark and mysterious before the recent disclosures, but the revelations in Putney have thrown a flood of light, and language which before was very obscure is now perfectly plain and intelligible. The process alluded to by Perfectionists appears, from their own language, to have been so often “repeated” that they had become adepts in the business of breaking-down; and the whole phenomena was so perfectly familiar that they could "calculate results with precision." They appear to have acquired wonderful skill in flourishing "spiritual weapons." And under the influence of the great "moral magnet of inconceivable strength," which was among them, is it at all strange that each devoted victim should be drawn within the "charmed circle," and doomed to irretrievable ruin?

Wherein does this "process" differ, in its essential features, from the course pursued at houses of ill-fame in our principal cities? A virtuous, inexperienced, and unsuspecting female is unfortunately thrown within the circle of influence which surrounds a city brothel; immediately the most unhallowed influences are brought to bear upon the hapless victim. Finding it impossible to extricate herself—after many unavailing efforts—the last ray of hope being extinguished, she yields herself into the hands of her destroyers and her fate is sealed. The rising emotions of a virtuous heart being suppressed, and the moral sensibilities rendered obtuse, sensual delights alone "illume the countenance where the blackness of despair was brooding."

The "process" which was so "familiar" to the master-spirits of the Perfectionist Association at Putney, agrees in all its essential features with the course pursued at those fountains of iniquity, those almost perfect. If the course pursued by Perfectionists is not in every respect so compulsory, it is none the less effectual and fatal. Virtuous females have been drawn in and ruined by the heads of the Association in Putney, yet Mr. Noyes called the company banded together there a holy Community, and impiously asserted that the kingdom of Heaven was established in that Association!
CHAPTER XX.

Pretensions of Perfectionists to Miraculous Power.

Perfectionists lay claim to all the miraculous gifts of the apostolic age; and strenuously contend that as signal displays of Divine power may be expected among them as were exhibited in the Primitive Church. A simple portraiture of the moral character of Perfectionism abundantly confutes this preposterous assumption, and the subject might thus be summarily disposed of; for we cannot suppose that supernatural gifts would be conferred upon persons who do not sustain a fair moral character. But the Perfectionists appeal to facts in confirmation of their assumptions, and present arguments to sustain the position which they have taken. The subject is one of some importance, and the question whether the age of miracles is past, has, for centuries, been one of hackneyed discussion throughout Christendom. Whatever views may be entertained in relation to this question, the sequel will present the pretensions to miraculous power by the Perfectionists to public view in a most glaring and even ludicrous light.

Miracles have been seized upon by all the petty impostors, from the days of Mahomet down to the times of Joe Smith and John H. Noyes. The mantle of pretended miracles has been thrown over the most marvellousness is fully developed, are struck with awe and wonder at the very mention of a miracle, and are easily deceived with pretensions to wonder-working power; and if an impostor by spiritual jugglery can produce the conviction that he is divinely commissioned, and thus gain the entire confidence of a person not accustomed to investigation, he can palm off the most glaring absurdities, and accomplish the most nefarious designs, with the utmost ease and facility.

The great magician* of Putney, as well as the wonderful seer of Palmyra, is no less an impostor than the far-famed Arabian Prophet! Mahometanism, Mormonism, Perfectionism, and a long catalogue of otherisms, are all of kindred character. They are but the varied species of the same genus. In addition to the Koran and the Golden Bible, we now have the Berean, a production of Mr. Noyes, which his followers firmly believe to be an inspired book!

The limits of this work will not allow of an extended investigation of the subject of miracles. The question of the cessation of miracles, we propose, Providence permitting, to examine in a separate publication; and shall here make only a single remark touching this matter. Much confusion in relation to this subject has

*The application of the term magician to Mr. Noyes is not gratuitous, or wholly unauthorized. A writer in the Spiritual Magazine, who was a member of the Putney Community, speaking in reference to that Community and its "acknowledged head," says—"He must be a magician indeed, if without any weapon but the wand of his word, he had reduced the intelligence, the pride, the natural independence of this company, to its present subordination."
undoubtedly arisen from a want of distinction between the ordinary and extraordinary gifts of the Spirit. The extraordinary gifts of the apostolic age, such as miracles, &c., were designed to substantiate the Divine commission of those who possessed them, and place upon a permanent basis the whole noble super-structure of Gospel doctrines. The specific object for which these miraculous endowments were conferred having been accomplished, they would of course cease, being no longer necessary. The first promulgators of Christianity, under a Divine commission, spread abroad the doctrines which they had received, and confirmed the truths which they taught by many infallible signs; and having accomplished their work, their acts were placed upon record and transmitted to after generations, accompanied by the ordinary influences of the Spirit, which were to continue to the end of time. If the record given does not convince a person of the truth of Christianity, he would not be convinced though one should rise from the dead.

Although it does not enter into our present design to discuss at length the question of the cessation of miracles, yet we propose to give a full account of the pretended miracles wrought by Mr. Noyes at Putney; and shall exhibit the utter shallowness of his pretensions to miraculous power, and also the gross wickedness connected with such pretensions and carried CHAPTER XXI.

Pretended Miracles of Noyes.

CASE OF MRS. HARRIET A. HALL.

Great prominence has been given by Perfectionists to the case of Mrs. Harriet A. Hall, and through their efforts to give it publicity, this case has obtained some notoriety. And in view of the fact that Mr. Noyes attaches much importance to it, and has even set it forth as an "unimpeachable" miracle, perhaps this case is entitled to some attention. Mr. N. seems to take it for granted that this case is unanswerable, and evidently considers it sufficient, in connection with many other cases of like character but of a lower order, to fully substantiate his claim to miraculous power, and settle the question of his divine commission!

In the Spiritual Magazine of Oct. 15, 1847, Mr. N. speaks thus in reference to this case:—

"The cure of Mrs. Harriet A. Hall is as unimpeachable as any of the miracles of the primitive church. It is notorious that she had been sick eight years, with a complication of diseases; that she was completely bed-ridden, and almost blind, lying in nearly total darkness. From this state, she was raised instantly, by the laying on of hands, and by the word of command, into strength which enabled her to walk, to face the sun, to ride miles without inconvenience and with excessive pleasure."

Now, if the case of Mrs. Hall is as "unimpeachable" as it is represented to be, we are certainly bound to acknowledge the supremacy of Mr. Noyes, and admit the claims which he has set up. But the case is open for inspection, and the people have a right to investigate the matter, and are not bound to concede the claims of Mr. N.—which appear to be quite arrogant—unless the facts in the case fully sustain the position which he has voluntarily assumed.

We think we hazard nothing in saying, when the subject is submitted to public scrutiny—has passed a careful examination—and the facts are brought out, the opinion will be almost or quite unanimous that it was a very visionary affair—one of the greatest apologies for a miracle ever got up; and having no sure foundation on which to rest, it will be left "air-suspended like the baseless fabric of a vision."

But let us look at a few of the most prominent features, and endeavor to take a just view of the whole affair. As it has been publicly announced by the Perfectionists as a miracle as "unimpeachable" as any in the "primitive church," perhaps the curiosity of many has been so far excited as to create some desire to know the circumstances connected with the "raising" of Mrs. Hall. It may not be improper to gratify, to some extent, that curiosity; and, indeed, this may be necessary to a right understanding of the case, although it must necessarily occupy more space than was origin-all we have, we must take it for what it is worth. We presume Mr. Noyes takes it for granted that every word is firmly established by the testimony of these three interested witnesses!

The testimony is published in the Spiritual Magazine of Sept. 15, 1847, and is introduced as follows:

"The testimony of the parties concerned was taken at the request, and in presence of John B. Foote, of Westmoreland, N. Y., for his private use, and not with a view to publication. We think, however, it may be appropriately inserted here.

The Testimony of Three Witnesses in the case of Mrs. Harriet A. Hall.* Given at Putney, July 3, 1847.

TESTIMONY OF HARRIET A. HALL.

Eight years ago I was taken sick. The physicians called my disease the dropsy, particularly of the chest and region of the heart. There was also at the same time a serious affection of the spine. I had previously had a liver complaint, for which I had been under Thompsonion treatment. This became much worse at the time above mentioned, insomuch that my breathing became very difficult, and I was under the necessity of being cupped frequently. I had night sweats and hectic fever—was thought to be in the last stages of consumption. My life was despaired of. A dreadful cough attended all these symptoms, which continued about eight months. After that period, the difficulties about my chest and lungs subsided, but my back became much worse. This disorder was connected with a terrible pressure on the brain. All exercise was attended with much pain, and evidently aggravated my disorder, so that I was at last forbidden by the physician even to walk, or stand on my feet; and I lay a year and a half without attempting any exercise. After that I was able to walk a little. Three years from the commencement of my sickness I was suddenly reduced to entire blindness. This continued six months. In the seventh month I began to see a little.

‘About this time my mind became interested in the subject of Animal Magnetism, and hearing that Mr. J. H. Noyes had made some successful experiments in that science, I sent for him. His operations had some good effect upon my eyes. I soon began to perceive that he was a Christian, and requested him to inform me about his faith. He sent me books and papers, and conversed with me, and I immediately saw the truth of his testimony, and confessed myself a believer in perfect holiness.—From that time I began to improve in health, took more exercise, and was able to walk more and more. Soon after this, (Oct. 27, 1843) I was conveyed to Mr. Noyes’s house. To the astonishment of my friends, the ride (distance two miles) did not pain or tire me, and I steadily grew better, under Mr. Noyes’s care, till I was able to walk about the house quite comfortably. My head and eyes improved, so that I could write again.

‘After several weeks, Alex. Wilder, who was in Mr. Noyes’s family, began to magnetize me, and assumed the charge of my case. He drew me away from Mr. Noyes, and by constant manipulation enveloped me in his own spirit. From this time I began to be worse.
lost much of my first confidence in Mr. Noyes. My health continued worse for the ensuing three years and a half.

'In the course of this time (viz. on the 2d of Nov., 1845) I was married to Mr. Hall, a man who made no profession of religion, and who, though somewhat friendly to Mr. Noyes's writings, was on the whole an infidel. I was barely able to sit up long enough to go through with the marriage ceremony. After this I was separated still farther from Mr. Noyes, and at last became nearly as much a skeptic as my husband.

'But in the mean time my brother and two sisters had returned fully to fellowship with Mr. Noyes, and so communication was kept open between him and our family. By this means my heart was finally turned back to my first love and confidence. Indeed, very soon after my feelings took a favorable turn, I was attracted and bound to Mr. Noyes more strongly than ever, and invited him to visit me. This took place in the fore part of June last.

'I had felt, through all my sickness, a dim, instinctive assurance that I should yet recover, and from the time of my first acquaintance with Mr. Noyes I had more or less expectation that I should be healed by faith. This expectation revived with much strength at the time of my return to his fellowship.

'It may be mentioned here, that in the whole course of my sickness, medicine of every kind proved ineffectual and injurious. I tried many kinds, and many systems of practice. I consulted at different times not less than ten physicians. At length I lost all confidence in medicines, and about the time of my renewal of intercourse with Mr. Noyes, entirely abandoned the use of them, committing my case to the care of God.

'On the 22d of June, Mr. Noyes, in company with Mrs. Cragin, visited me. I was at that time in a very low condition—lower than ever before. An additional disease, viz. ulceration of the kidneys, which commenced a year and a half ago, had become very painful and threatening. I was unable to move or to be moved, without excruciating pain in my back and kidneys. My eyes could not bear the light. A mere crack of the window, below the curtain, was all that I could endure. Yet I expected to be healed, and even to go home with Mr. Noyes, at his first visit, and had told my husband on that morning that I should certainly get well, and asked him what he should think if I should go away with Mr. Noyes.

'I will not attempt a particular account of the things that were said and done by Mr. Noyes and Mrs. Cragin during the three hours of their visit to my dark room. They will speak of these things themselves. I will only say that I was calm and happy through scenes which would once have been agitating and even frightful to me.

'Mr. Noyes at one time spoke of going home, but I could not believe that he would go till I could go with him. At length I told him that I would do anything that he would bid me. He told me to sit up in the bed. I did so with ease. He then commanded me, with great energy, to 'get up'; and taking me by the hand, led me to a chair. Without pain and with great delight, I sat before the window. Mrs. Cragin raised the curtain and let in the blaze of day. My eyes were perfectly well, and drank in the beauty of the world—all new to me, with wonderful pleasure. I was constrained to declare again and again that I was 'perfectly well.'
ary dress, without spectacles or veil, I took my seat in the carriage, and rode two miles, in a south direction, in the light of a mid-day summer's sun, without the least fatigue. That was indeed a joyful ride. I was conscious of perfect health. All pain in my head, back and kidneys had vanished.

'This event took place about two weeks ago. I have never doubted since that I was healed instantaneously by the power of God. I have gained daily in power over my muscles. I have been able to ride long distances, to attend meetings in the evening at home, and on Sunday at the Chapel, to take my meals with the family, &c. &c. My appetite is very good. My eyes are strong. I am fast overcoming the effects of the long disuse of my limbs, and am learning to walk as fast as can be expected of a child. On the whole I can honestly say, that whereas for eight years past I have been a miserable, bed-rid, half dead victim of disease, I am now well.'

TESTIMONY OF M. E. CRAGIN.

'During the past three months, I have been myself affected with a painful disease which I ascribed to various secondary causes. Despairing of help from human aid, I committed myself fully to Jesus Christ as physician for the body as well as the soul. After making this surrender the scales fell from my eyes, and I recognized unbelief as the first cause of disease and death. I saw that I must have a healthy spirit in order to have a healthy body. After much bodily suffering and mental conflict with the powers of darkness, I was enabled through the grace given unto me to confess Christ within me a Savior from the power of unbelief. The result was an almost immediate restoration to health. Sickness left me as suddenly as it had seized me, and I found myself able to prove by word and deed that the power of Christ's resurrection had taken effect in every part of my nature.

'Before I received final deliverance I thought much of the case of Mrs. Hall. From what I heard from time to time from her, I was sensible that she was fast approaching the same point with myself, namely, a thorough conviction that faith alone could save her from death. I fully believed that the work begun in her in 1843 would be completed, but was conscious that any testimony which I could give her respecting my confidence in the power of faith would be powerless so long as I was in bondage myself.' On the morning after my confession of Christ, I felt as though I was ready to visit her and testify to her of the power of God. On my way to her residence I was perfectly well, and very happy in the prospect of being a help to her. When I entered her darkened room and saw her helpless condition, I was struck with horror at the nightly power of unbelief, and the thought arose in my mind that she was in the same grave from which I had been raised. At the same time I felt a perfect willingness to go down into the grave again, if by so doing I could help her out. As these thoughts and desires occupied my heart, I was conscious of general sickness and distress of body unlike any thing I had ever felt before. But as my mind was filled with what I was anxious to say to her, I did not give my attention at all to my bodily feelings.

'When Mr. Noyes said to me that he had got through what he wished to say, and that I might talk to her, I immediately began to tell her what God had done for me in saving me from unbelief. I had not talked more than a minute before a 'horror of great darkness' seized me. I realized as I never did before a murderous nature of unbelief, and God's hatred to—My eyes grew dim so that I could not distinguish—objects, and my hearing left me so that I could not hear the sound of my voice. Still I resisted until my tongue was palsied and I did not know what I was saying. I had sufficient consciousness left to attempt to rise to go to the door, but I felt as though Mr. Noyes was not willing. I felt as though I was sinking lower and lower into a dreadful dark abyss. When I began to recover, I found myself sitting in my chair, and heard Mr. Noyes commanding me in a loud voice to look at him. The tones of his voice thrilled through me like a shock of electricity, and as soon as I looked at him life triumphed over death. I rose and walked the room, astonished and delighted at the power which I felt diffusing itself through my veins, recalling me to newness of life. I said to Mrs. Hall, This is the most effectual preaching you can have; I have tasted of death, and behold the power of the resurrection. After conversing with her some time, this same horror of unbelief began to paralyze me again. I rose and attempted to throw it off, but could not. I called to Mr. Noyes, and had sufficient presence of mind to look steadily at him until I partook of his strength, and it passed away. The remainder of the day I was stupid and sleepy, and felt as I imagine persons do who have been recovered from drowning; but since that time I am perfectly sound in health.'

TESTIMONY OF J. H. NOYES.

'Many circumstances have conspired to draw the attention of believers in this place within a few months toward the healing power of Christ, and to raise a belief in their minds that great manifestations of that power are at hand. The unity, internal and external, into which we have lately been brought, the power and success of our testimony to the world around, and the exigency of our situation in the midst of the raging enemies of faith, enlarged our expectations and stimulated us to demand more strength from God. Some instances of the victory of faith over disease, which were notable to us, though not to the world, occurred during the past winter and spring.

"Soon after we came together in family unity, Mrs. Cragin was attacked by disease of an obstinate and threatening character. This brought me into a necessity of examining our position in relation to sickness, death, medicines, &c. I settled my own principles more thoroughly than ever before, and gave a course of lectures, in which I declared my independence of the medical systems of this world, and claimed for Christ the office of physician to our community. There was but one heart and one voice among us about the matter. I treated Mrs. Cragin's case on faith principles entirely; and though the struggle with the power of death was long and desperate, life gradually prevailed.

"After Mrs. Hall returned to our fellowship, I began to have a strong impression that the first signal manifestation of healing power would be in her case. The fact that she had come under my care several years ago, and a cure had been commenced, which had been defeated for the time by evil powers, seemed a pledge of a complete work yet to come. Her connection with an infidel husband and an infidel father, made her case just such an one as we might suppose God would choose, if he wished to strike a death blow at unbelief. From the time when she invited me to visit her, I felt myself challenged to a public contest with death. I made up my mind not to go to her, till I could go in the fullness of faith; and I had an
Mrs. Cragin's case was yet upon my hands. Her enemies, though often routed, yet persecuted her from time to time, and I found at last that the traitor who let them in was a subtle spirit of unbelief. It became evident to me that a decisive and final victory over unbelief was essential to a permanent victory over disease of any kind, forasmuch as unbelief is the protecting cover of all subordinate powers of evil. It also became evident that I could not reasonably expect to carry victory over unbelief abroad, till I had obtained it at home. This then was the burden that lay upon my heart, viz., I must lift Mrs. Cragin out of the grave of unbelief, before I can hope to raise Mrs. Hall. On Monday (the 21st of June,) the contest of unbelief came to its crisis in the case of Mrs. Cragin. In the evening meeting she testified her assurance that Christ had saved her forever from the unbelieving spirit. The next morning, I saw that all was ready for a movement towards Mrs. Hall. Her sister was at our house and wished to be carried home. I and Mrs. Cragin went with her.

The first half hour of our visit to Mrs. Hall was spent in general discourse on the subject of faith. When I had finished what I had to say, I called on Mrs. Cragin to speak. She commenced, but had not proceeded far, when she began to be pale and faint. I took her hand and supported her while she sunk into death. I said to her several times in a loud voice, 'Look at me.' She heard me not. Her eyes were open, but fixed and glassy like a dead person's. I carried my head forward till my eye was in range with the direction of hers. At that moment there was a glimmer of recognition in her eye. I smiled and she replied by a smile (!). Immediately the deadly spell passed away, and Mrs. C. emerged into angelic life and beauty (!). This scene was afterwards repeated in a milder way.

'When these transactions were finished, Mrs. C. and I placed ourselves in more immediate communication with Mrs. Hall, by taking hold of her hands. I perceived that the power of unbelief was broken. Mrs. Hall declared with emphasis that she felt 'something good' taking place in herself while Mrs. Cragin was dying (!). Up to this time, I had no very definite idea of what was to be done for Mrs. H. The way seemed to be open for her release, but the circumstances in which I found myself were new, and I shrunk from anything like over-boldness or experimenting. I thought and spoke of returning home, and yet it seemed to me that she ought to go with me. On the whole I could not leave her so.

'At length as I walked the floor meditating on these things, an omnipotent will began to infuse itself into my consciousness. I said in my heart with a freedom which goes with the power of realization.—'God shall have his own way in this matter.'

'Soon after this the way was naturally and easily opened for me to call her forth from her prison, and I did it as she has described, with full consciousness of the co-operation and authority of God.

'After she arose, and while the women were changing her clothes, I walked in another room, and then again felt an omnipotent will going forth from my heart, decreeing as from the throne of the universe, that she should go home with me (!); which she did as she has related.'

An editorial note added to the above says:

"At the date of this paper [Spiritual Magazine of July 15, 1847] Mrs. Hall remains well. Her mra.
that she is able to walk with ease, and to work moderately."

We have thus given the testimony in full relative to the raising of Mrs. Hall, just as it was spread out before the public by the Perfectionists. As the transactions were of a somewhat private character, we take it for granted that we are now in possession of all the material facts respecting the whole affair, with which they intend to enlighten the public. Let it be remembered that the testimony relative to this wonderful case, was given by the "parties concerned"—the operator, the assistant, and the subject!

This case has been trumpeted abroad as a miracle, as "unimpeachable as any of the miracles of the primitive church;" but it will be looked upon as a contemptible affair by an intelligent community. The whole account from beginning to end is tinctured with the ludicrous, and some portions of it are extremely disgusting; yet it is spread out before the public by Mr. Noyes with all the minuteness of exact detail, as though every part of the transaction was of the utmost importance. And Perfectionists swallow the whole story, as a marvellous affair, without any scruples or hesitation. This is undoubtedly very gratifying to the ambitious spirit of Noyes; and seeing the affair took well among his followers, he spread his sails, caught the breeze, and attempted to advance the more rapidly, but his glorying and triumphing—like that of the wicked—

It may perhaps be thought by some to be a mere waste of words to dwell upon this case; but it is claimed to be a cure as "unimpeachable as any of the miracles of the primitive church;" and should it receive no special attention, Perfectionists might lift up their heads and triumphantly assert that it was such a notable miracle that it could not be gainsayed. Hence, it seems to be necessary to exhibit the shallowness of the pretensions of Mr. Noyes, and show that the attempt to palm off this affair as a miracle, is a perfect imposition upon the people, and an utter outrage upon the intelligence of the community.

It will be found on examination that this PRETENDED MIRACLE was no cure at all; but a mere temporary effect resulting from natural causes to which we shall hereafter allude. Cases of like character are of quite frequent occurrence; and we deny point blank that this was a miracle, or even a semblance of one; and shall endeavor to show to a demonstration that there was nothing at all supernatural in this case, the testimony of the "three witnesses" to the contrary notwithstanding. We deliberately take this position, although we thereby run the hazard of having the gentleman uncork anew the vials of his wrath — labelled "holy indignation" — and pour out their contents without mixture of mercy upon our head.

But let us look at a few of the statements contained in the testimony given. After Mr. Noyes had commanded her to "get up," Mrs. Hall says, "I was constrained to declare again and again that I was perfectly well." She also says that during her ride of two miles, she "was conscious of perfect health." Again, about two weeks after this event she says, "I have never doubted since, that I was healed instantly by the power of God." And finally, Mrs. Hall closes her testimony in the following emphatic language:— "On the whole, I can honestly say, that whereas for eight years past I have been a miserable, bed-rid, half dead victim of disease, I am now well."

But accompanying the strong and unequivocal assertions of Mrs. Hall, that she was "well"—"perfectly well"—and "conscious of perfect health," we find the following language used about two weeks after she was "healed instantaneously" and made "perfectly" whole:—"I have gained daily in power over my muscles... I am fast overcoming the effects of the long disease of my limbs, and am learning to walk as fast as can be expected of a child"!

How do these different statements agree with each other? Two weeks after she had come in possession of "perfect health," she says she had "gained daily in power over her muscles," and was "learning to walk as fast as could be expected of a child"! About three weeks after the wonderful occurrence transpired and she pronounced herself "perfectly well," the Editor of the Spiritual Magazine says:—"Her muscles have nearly recovered their strength, so that she is able to walk with ease, and to work moderately"!

But how, if she was "perfectly" healed at first, could she be gradually and constantly improving for a long time afterwards? Why, Mr. Noyes had told her—and she verily believed it—that the disease was entirely removed, but that her limbs had been so long inactive that they must be gradually restored to strength, and that she must learn to walk as the child learns!

How does this case compare with the miracles of Christ and his Apostles? If it is as "unimpeachable as any of the miracles of the primitive church," we may certainly expect to find a striking resemblance, in all their leading characteristics, between them. But is this the case? Not at all. Not a parallel case can be found—not an instance on record, either in the Old or New Testament, in which an individual who had been unable to walk, from whatever cause, or however long the period, and was miraculously healed, who was not restored to perfect soundness. And not unfrequently were persons thus healed immediately seen "walking and leaping," thus giving the most convincing and incontestable proofs of the application of superhuman agencies, and the genuineness and completeness of the work. We have an instance in Acts 14: 8—10, of striking instance, recorded in the 3d and 4th chapters of Acts. We have there an account of a man "above forty years old," who had been lame from his birth, whom Peter healed, "and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength; and he, leaping up, stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God." These persons, though they had never walked, and one was "above forty years old," did not have to learn to walk like a "child."

In all the miracles wrought by Christ, his Apostles, and the ancient Prophets, there was no half-way work. When commenced, the work was immediately carried forward to its completion.

Had the miracles wrought in the Primitive Church, which were designed to prove beyond a doubt the truth of Christianity and place it upon a permanent basis, been of a partial kind, or of an obscure character, doubts might have reasonably arisen, and been entertained in reference to the matter; hence the Divine Author of the Christian system, for the purpose of removing all cause of valid objections, and every reasonable ground of disbelief, presented the substantiating proofs in the clearest light and the strongest possible manner, so that if rejected, it must be in the face of evidence as clear as the shining of the sun at mid-day.

How strong, how clear, how convincing the proofs drawn from the miracles of the Primitive Church; and how weak, how dim, and even how contemptible, the evidence coming from the mere pretensions of Noyes!
It is as valueless, and far more insignificant, than the veriest taper in the full blaze of meridian day.

We might now dismiss the case of Mrs. Hall, and at this stage submit it to the public for decision, with a moral certainty—yea, without even a shadow of doubt—respecting the verdict which would be rendered; but as Mr. N. attaches so much importance to the matter, and as there are to him so many interesting circumstances clustering around this case, we deem it proper to notice it still farther, and give the public a few more items of information in reference to it.

Not a very long period had elapsed after Mrs. Hall was "raised" by Mr. Noyes, before she relapsed into her former condition—and her old complaints again exhibited all their original strength and virulence. After having remained at Mr. N.'s for a number of weeks from the time she was "healed instantaneously," Mr. Hall, her husband, becoming dissatisfied for some reason, was unwilling to let her remain longer, and accordingly removed her home. Being away from the presence of Mr. N., and beyond the reach of the influences with which she had been surrounded—whether mesmeric, or what not—while at his residence, the excitement, or whatever kept her up, subsiding, she immediately sunk into her former state, and was as bad or worse than ever. And Mr. Noyes had the privilege of again trying his miracle working (?) power, but without much effect, only affording temporary relief; and she has ever since remained much in her former condition, only alternately a little better or worse, as surrounding circumstances and her own feelings might affect her.

Does all this look like a miraculous work—a radical cure? Did any of those healed by Christ or his Apostles thus relapse? Certainly not. If they were not afterward proof against disease, they certainly were as likely to be attacked by some other disease as the one from which they had been healed. But says Mr. Noyes, "He [Christ] did not insure them [his patients] against relapse, but on the contrary said to one of them—'Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.'" The case here referred to is not parallel with the one under consideration. A relapse appears to have been suspended upon the condition of sinning, and it is certainly implied that there would be no relapse if no sin was committed. Mrs. Hall, being a Perfectionist and consequently not capable of sinning, according to the doctrine of Noyes, would be in no danger of a relapse. But she has relapsed; of course there was no radical cure.

Speaking in reference to this case some weeks after it occurred, Mr. Noyes says—"How many said, 'If Harriet Hall only holds out, we will believe.' She has held out, and is daily walking your streets; and how many of you have kept your promise?" It seems, that the pretended miracle not gaining much credit in the community, and proselytes not being multiplied according to his hopes and anticipations, Mr. N. felt disposed to take the people to task for their unbelief; and he manifests the... lacked the power—to force them up to the work, and compel them to believe. Being impatient of delay, he severely rebukes them for not acknowledging his power and submitting to his authority. He says—undoubtedly considering it a very convincing argument—"She has held out." But the truth is, she has not held out, and all the arguments based upon that circumstance go by the board.

Again: let us look at the means used for her recovery at a former period. In the summer or early part of the autumn of 1843, which was about four years after her sickness commenced, Mrs. Hall says her "mind became interested in the subject of Animal Magnetism, and hearing that Mr. J. H. Noyes had made some successful experiments in that science, I sent for him. His operations had some good effect on my eyes." After having been mesmerized a number of times, she embraced the doctrines of Noyes, and says—"From that time I began to improve in health, took more exercise, and was able to walk more and more. Soon after this, (viz. Oct. 27, 1843,) I was conveyed to Mr. Noyes's house. To the astonishment of my friends, the ride (distance two miles) did not pain or tire me, and I steadily grew better, under Mr. Noyes's care, till I was able to walk about the house quite comfortably. My head and eyes improved, so that I could write again."

It appears that some months previous to the time just alluded to by Mrs. Hall, Noyes had commenced as a magnetizer—for Mr. Wilder, as will be seen by referring to his affidavit, says—"Returning from a tour in Massachusetts in February, 1843, Mr. Noyes began to try his skill in Animal Magnetism." And it appears that in a few months he had acquired some celebrity, for Mr. Wilder continues—"Reports had gone abroad of his skill as a magnetizer. A young man named Baker requested him to visit his sister, [now Mrs. H. A. Hall,] who for several years had been confined to her bed. He did so a number of times. She also became a proselyte to his doctrines. In October she came to his house, and remained about three months. He continued his manipulations occasionally."

From all that is said in reference to the case of Mrs. Hall it is evident that no more wonderful agencies were employed in the partial restoration or temporary relief which she experienced in the autumn of 1843, than mesmeric influences; nothing supernatural was even pretended. And yet there were some things almost or quite as surprising as those which took place at the time of her pretended miraculous cure. She rode the same distance (two miles) to the astonishment of her friends, and she asserts that it "did not pain or tire" her. She also gradually improved in walking and in other respects, much as she did after the wonderful performance in the autumn of 1847.

Mr. Noyes says in his "testimony" touching this matter, that "the fact that she had come under my care several years ago, and a cure had been commenced, which had been defeated for the time by evil powers, seemed a pledge of a complete work yet to come." It seems then that Mr. Noyes would have it, that, though the cure was commenced under mesmeric influences, yet it was completed through supernatural agencies. He pretends that he went to her in the fullness of faith, and with the assurance that his dealings with her would not be like those of the former trial, but was confident before he commenced that the work would be "altogether more swift and decisive!"

But let us glance at the manner in which he affected to perform this wonderful work. He says, she was "raised instantly, by the laying on the hands, and by the word of command."

The Apostles, disclaiming all "power and holiness" of their own were accustomed to perform their works in the name of Christ. If this in every instance was not expressed, yet it was so common that it was understood to be invariably implied. But it appears that Mr. Noyes does not recognize the name of Christ in his attempts at miracles, but pretends to perform them by virtue of his own "power and holiness!"

Perhaps we ought to view him in the light of a competitor of the Apostles, aspiring at superior honors. From the testimony already given, the reader is left to draw his inferences respecting the agency and effect of mesmeric influences in the case of Mrs. Hall. This testimony, let it be remembered, comes wholly from those who have been, and mainly from those who still are staunch Perfectionists. Yet, however much or little mesmerism may have to do with the matter, the case of Mrs. Hall evidently comes under that class of diseases in which a powerful exercise of mind has a controlling influence, and may produce a sensible and very visible effect upon the system; thus naturally arraying itself under this head, the case of Mrs. Hall may be easily accounted for on this wise:

She placed implicit and even unbounded confidence in Mr. Noyes, and under the peculiar circumstances, a command coming from him with the thunder of a stentorian voice, would naturally play upon the extremely delicate net-work of the nervous system like a shock of electricity. With a mind intensely excited—with feelings wrought up to the highest pitch—and with nerves distended to the utmost, Mrs. Hall would of course be susceptible of very powerful impressions, especially those caused by influences coming from such a source!

And it is not at all surprising that under such powerful impressions she forgot her real or imaginary infirmities, and that she rallied, arose from her bed, and rode home with Mr. Noyes!

Perfectionists lost no time in trumpeting this farcical affair through Putney village as a wonderful work, a mighty miracle, equal to those in primitive times. And Mr. Noyes himself was seen riding through the street with Mrs. Hall, exhibiting that supercilious air, and that haughty bearing which ever betoken an approaching fall. The peculiar hauteur of his manner expression, which seemed to say in the most emphatic language to the villagers,—"SEE WHAT I HAVE DONE!"

The over-credulous were half inclined to believe it something marvellous and almost unaccountable; and those who are ever struck with awe at the very announcement of a miraculous work, without inquiring into the circumstances, were in suspense. Seeing the matter was not fully understood by all, and that it gave them some influence with a certain class, Perfectionists lifted up their heads, as though they expected their claim to miracle-working power was about to be substantiated. A spirit of vain boasting and self-confidence characterized all their movements, clearly exhibiting a lack of humility, that most valuable of all the Christian graces; also showing a want of that sense of dependence so essential to spiritual prosperity. The whole affair can be viewed in no other light than a mere ruse for the purpose of diverting the attention of the people and thus hiding their crying abominations. While professing the greatest spirituality and proclaiming their wonder-working power, it appears they were fast filling up the measure of their iniquities. This is the very tact of impostors. It has been said, and probably with much truth, that "Impostors cover licentiousness with great professions of spirituality."

Soon after Mrs. Hall was "raised," the Perfectionists were actively engaged as runners through the village—calling upon their neighbors—feeling of the public pulse—and sounding the people in relation to the matter, probably for the purpose of ascertaining what impressions they had made—what their prospects were ahead, and how much they might calculate upon in their future operations. And if any one did not readily acknowledge the "raising" of Mrs. Hall to be a manifestation of the power of God, and would not admit that John H. Noyes could work miracles, they would immediately take offence, as though the people were bound to believe in Noyes, and that they must and should believe at all events.

A Perfectionist belonging to the Putney Community called at the residence of the writer, and the matter of the notable miracle was introduced; and because the claim of Mr. Noyes was not unhesitatingly acknowledged, it was taken in high dudgeon, and all the petulance was manifested which is often exhibited in children governed by unrestrained passion. But Mr. Noyes gives to anger, which he and his followers not unfrequently indulge, the very soft and inoffensive appellation of holy indignation!

We are happy of the privilege of here introducing a statement of the case of Mrs. Hall, prepared expressly for this work, by her principal attending physician—Dr. David Allen of Putney—who has been familiar with her case from the very commencement, and who, it will be seen, has given it as his deliberate opinion that her disease has never been removed—that she has never been in reality any better, and that the favorable appearances at the time Mr. Noyes pretended to work a miracle, were produced by the power of imagination or mesmeric influences. Dr. Allen is an intelligent and highly respectable physician, and holds himself responsible for the correctness of the statement which he has made. He says:—

"Mrs. Harriet A. Hall, in her early sickness, was affected with a derangement of the liver and digestive organs generally, with a well marked scrofulous habit of constitution. In this state of debility, by making considerable over-exertion, she brought on an organic displacement, which prostrated her upon her bed; and with her early complaints, and a highly sensitive nervous development, was the cause of much suffering, and protracted confinement.

"Subsequently there came on a scrofulous disease of the kidneys, which has since produced ulceration; and is now progressing in a regular course, and ever has been, apparently, to a fatal termination.

"At the time Mrs. Hall first came out, she had been for some time more comfortable, the system had become so far accommodated to the state of her disease, that she was able, under a strong effort of the will, to exercise for a time as she did. But as might be expected, her essential symptoms of disease returned, with about the same violence as before. Medical aid was again called for.

"Another period of more than two years confinement and rest, with some appropriate remedies, enabled her again to rally for a time, under the well known power of a highly excited imagination, or mesmeric influence. But the reported cure, seems after all to prove no cure. Her diseased kidneys and other debility, have never been removed; and she is now, (July 28, 1848) and has been for some time past, closely confined to her bed; an object of much suffering and pity. Apparently, death will ere long relieve her of her sufferings.

"Cases where individuals were raised from long confinement, by a strong mental effort, are comparatively frequent. The case of Miss Martineau, the well known authoress, as reported in the English Journal in 1845, is in point. She reports herself as having been raised from a protracted confinement, under somewhat similar circumstances, by the influence of Mesmerism, though she was destitute of the incipient disease, that will doubtless in the event prove fatal to Mrs. Hall."

Another physician—shrewd and somewhat facetious—who was well acquainted with the case of Mrs. Hall, and who is not easily deceived in relation to such matters, remarked that Mr. Noyes had done no more for her than any common sinner in the land could have done if she had only had as much faith in him as she had in Noyes; and gave it as his opinion, that the agencies employed in raising her, were about as substantial as "moonshine" or "bottled fog." Speaking in reference to her immediately leaving her bed and being able to ride, the same gentleman also remarked, that highly charged with mesmeric influences, she could go through "fire and brimstone."

Facts abundantly show that the power of imagination, even in removing—which in this instance does not appear to have been the case—various diseases and infirmities, especially those of a nervous kind, is very great. From various circumstances, the effects produced may be shown to be the legitimate results of the operations of natural laws, although the principles of those occult laws, and their mysterious operations may forever elude the keenest philosophical research. The old adage, "Imagination kills and imagination cures," contains much truth. Numerous instances might be cited, in which different diseases have been caused and cured, and even death superinduced by working upon the imagination.

The following is in point:

"Many years ago, a celebrated physician, author of an excellent work on the effects of imagination, wished to combine theory with practice, in order to confirm the truth of his propositions. To this end, he begged the Minister of Justice to allow him to try an experiment on a criminal condemned to death. The minister consented, and delivered to him an assassin of distinguished rank. Our savant sought the culprit, and thus addressed him:

"Sir, several persons who are interested in your family, have prevailed on the Judge not to require of you to mount the scaffold, and expose yourself to the gaze of the populace. He has therefore commuted your sentence, and sanctions your being bled to death within the precincts of your prison; your dissolution will be gradual and free from pain."

"The criminal submitted to his fate; thought his family would be less disgraced, and considered it a favor not to be compelled to walk to the place of public execution. He was conducted to the appointed room, where every preparation was made beforehand; his eyes were bandaged; he was strapped to a table;
The patient believing it was his blood he heard flowing, gradually became weak; and the conversation of the doctors, in an under tone, confirmed him in his opinion.

"'What fine blood,' said one. 'What a pity this man should be condemned to die! he would have lived a long time.'

"'Hush,' said the other; then approaching the first, he said in low voice, but so as to be heard by the criminal, 'How many pounds of blood is there in the human body?'

"'Twenty-four. You see already ten pounds extracted; that man is now in a hopeless state.'

"The physicians then receded by degrees, and continued to lower their voices. The stillness which reigned in the apartment, broken only by the dripping fountains, the sound of which was also gradually lessened, so affected the brain in the poor patient, that although a man of very strong constitution, he fainted, and died without having lost a drop of blood."

Not only extreme fear, but excessive joy has produced death, often instantaneously.

Dr. Ramsey asserts, on well authenticated testimony, that the door-keeper of Congress was so overjoyed on hearing of the surrender of the British commander, Lord Cornwallis, at Yorktown, during our revolutionary struggle, that he immediately expired under the rapture caused by the joyful intelligence.

"It is said that Sophocles, the tragic writer, died in consequence of a decision being given in his favor in a contest of honor. Diogoras died at the instant when his three sons were crowned on the same day as victors at the games. Pope Leo X. died of a fever produced by the joyful news of the capture of Milan."
We make the following extracts from a course of lectures delivered by Professor Hitchcock of Amherst College, in 1830, before the students of that institution. They forcibly illustrate the power of imagination in curing as well as producing diseases:—

"Imagination and passion have often proved of the highest benefit in the cure of diseases. History is full of examples of this kind. The Animal Magnetism of Mesmer, and the metallic tractors of Perkins, whereby thousands were actually cured of most obstinate disorders, by means which were proved in the most satisfactory manner to be mere mummary, curiously illustrates this subject; although I have no time to enter into details. . . . At the siege of Breda in 1625, the scurvy raged to an alarming degree; so that the garrison was about to surrender; when the Prince of Orange sent into the fortress a few phials of sham medicine, which was distributed among the sufferers, as most costly and invaluable. The effect was almost miraculous. 'Such as had not moved their limbs for a month before, were seen walking in the streets, sound, straight, and whole. Many, who declared that they had been rendered worse by all former remedies, recovered in a few days, to their inexpressible joy.' . . . The remarkable cures celebrated as miracles in the Romish Church, by touching bones, relics, &c., all belong to the same class; and are well worth the student's attention, as illustrating the power of imagination over the body, and as showing the facility with which mankind may be duped by the crafty and designing.

"Murat, king of Naples, received a letter from his wife, while absent in Bonaparte's celebrated Russian campaign, detailing some proceedings of his government, which he thought encroached upon the royal prerogative; and so great was the effect of jealousy, that before he had finished the letter, his whole skin became completely jaundiced. . . . A boy was once let down the side of a very high precipice in a basket, to rob an eagle's nest: while suspended some hundreds of feet above the rocky base, he was attacked by the eagle; and on cutting at the bird with the sword which he carried with him, he struck the rope by which he was suspended, and cut it nearly off; on drawing him up, his hair was found changed to white. . . . A widow in Paris, on learning that her daughter with her two children had thrown herself from an upper story of the house and was dashed in pieces, became in one night as black as a negro. . . . A Jew in France came in the dark, over a dangerous passage on a plank that lay over a brook, without harm; the next day, on viewing the perilous situation he had been in, he fell down dead. . . . Philip V. of Spain died suddenly on learning the disastrous defeat of his army; and on dissection it was found that his heart was literally burst asunder; showing that the common phrase, a broken heart, is sometimes pathologically correct. . . . The case of a man cured of the gout by terror and alarm, as mentioned by physicians, is striking. Another person, disguised as a spectre, entered his chamber while he was in a paroxysm of the disease, seized him and dragged him down stairs with the gouty feet trailing behind him. Then the ghost disappeared; when the sick man sprang upon his feet with the utmost ease, ran up stairs, and never afterwards felt another symptom of gout."

To the foregoing we will add an instance or two of more recent date, and which occurred in this vicinity. A person in a neighboring town, having an organic affection, applied to a physician in whom he had unbounded confidence. The physician, wishing to try an experiment, simply administered bread pills; the patient in the mean time believing he was taking some very efficacious medicine. The experiment proved successful. The patient was healed not by the efficacy of the pills, but by the power of imagination.

Again—an amusing incident occurred several years since in an adjoining town. A person at some distance publicly announced that he could heal diseases if persons afflicted would send their names to him legibly written upon a slip of paper. A woman afflicted with real or imaginary maladies, wrote her name according to order, and safely lodged it in the hands of a person who designated a certain day on which he intended to start for the place where the wonder-worker resided, and promised to deliver the billet containing the name. A few days after the time specified for the person to start, a neighbor called upon the sick woman, and to her surprise found her at the tub, laboring with might and main. "Well," said the woman, "my name has got there and I am cured." But it so happened that the person who was to carry the name to the wonderful physician, for some cause, had not left his home.

When informed of this fact, the poor woman was very much chop-fallen, and immediately felt the symptoms of indisposition—soon took to her bed—and her old complaints returning like a spring-tide, rushed in upon her apace, and she was soon as bad or worse than ever.

Had this woman remained ignorant of that one fact,
probably she would not have relapsed. The power that raised her, was no doubt as mysterious and wonderful as that which raised Mrs. Hall from her bed and sent her home with Mr. Noyes! There was as great a miracle in one case as the other; with this difference, however; the case of the woman laboring under a sheer mistake appears to be the more striking of the two; it exceeds that of Mrs. Hall. This woman was enabled to labor immediately with her accustomed strength, but Mrs. Hall, though able to walk, had her infirmities still lingering about her, and was able to perform but very little labor; and as soon as she left the residence of Mr. Noyes and returned home, she relapsed into her former condition.

We have cited the foregoing cases to show the power of imagination manifested in various ways. Cases of a similar character are of common occurrence; and they so far exceed the case of Mrs. Hall that it is thrown far back into the shade; and yet Mr. Noyes has the effrontery to declare it as "unimpeachable as any of the miracles of the primitive church." The surprising effects in the cases cited were produced by natural laws in their mysterious and inscrutable operations, and it would be utterly absurd to attribute such results to any supernatural agency.

In conclusion, perhaps we ought to say, for the information of the reader, that the whole affair respecting Mrs. Hall, was crowned with the crying abominations of Noyesism. Mr. Hall, the husband of Mrs. Hall, becoming convinced of the wickedness of Noyes, brought an action against him for adultery; but the matter was hushed up and kept as still as possible. Although the case was not legally investigated, yet not a shadow of doubt remains as to the guilt of Mr. Noyes. His criminality in the case is a "fixed fact"—a fact known and read of all the people of Putney—a fact substantiated by the statement of Mrs. Hall herself. So much for the pretended miracle of Noyes, which he has exultingly proclaimed to the world, and impiously asserted to be as "unimpeachable as any of the miracles of the primitive church;" while the facts in the case fix upon his brow in legible and indelible characters one of the most heinous crime which man is capable of committing!
CHAPTER XXIII.

CASE OF MISS MARY A. KNIGHT.

Having been encouraged and emboldened in a measure by the partial success which, for a time, appeared to attend their efforts in the case of Mrs. Hall, the masterspirits in the Putney Community were evidently waiting with some degree of anxiety for another opportunity to present itself for them to display their miraculous (?) power! Expecting, no doubt, that if they should be so successful as to humbug the people to any considerable extent, the bright day of prosperity would be fairly ushered in; and in that case they were undoubtedly determined to ride rough-shod over all who did not rally around their standard.

The next case that came in their way, and to which their special attention was directed, was that of Miss Mary A. Knight, a respectable young lady residing in Putney village, who was not a Perfectionist. Miss Knight for several months had been in a decline, and at length was pronounced by her physician to be in a confirmed consumption, and beyond the reach of medical aid.

While in a feeble state and gradually sinking, though able to ride out occasionally, John R. Miller, a zealous Perfectionist and an associate of Noyes, frequently called on Miss Knight with a carriage, and gave her an opportunity to ride; and took occasion at such times to exhort her to give up the use of medicine entirely, and seek to be healed by faith alone.

Mr. Noyes, in giving an account of the case of Miss Knight, published in the Spiritual Magazine of Oct. 15, 1847, after speaking of calling on her at the request of her father, says:—"Soon after, John R. Miller took her to ride a considerable distance, and, contrary to the forebodings of her friends, his faith sustained her, and she returned much invigorated." His faith sustained her! Wonderful indeed!

The next day after Mr. Miller's faith so signally sustained (!) her, Mr. Noyes says that he called on her, and offered to take her to the "hospital," as Perfectionists were pleased to term it—a dwelling somewhat retired, and which they evidently wished to have regarded as a kind of modern Bethesda.

Miss Knight being in a state of great debility, but still having a strong desire to be restored to health if possible—all hope of being healed by medical aid having fled, and knowing that she must die if she remained where she then was, and that she could but die if she went, and the nature of Mr. Noyes's conversation probably inspiring a faint glimmering of hope—she finally concluded to go, and her friends generally consented. She accordingly was conveyed to the "hospital" on the 16th of Aug., 1847; and a somewhat singular scene ensued.

After having removed Miss Knight to the "hospital," the first business would naturally be to instil into her mind the most important principles of their creed, and make her a proselyte to their faith, for they are not backward in relation to such matters; and by presenting plausible arguments and holding out to Miss Knight the hope that she might be healed if she would embrace their views and follow their directions, they in some measure succeeded. Perhaps we ought here to state that Miss Knight was not a professing Christian, and had never become established in any particular religious belief. Being in a state of great debility, and consequently incapable of much reflection and investigation, she was not able to detect—as she might have done under different circumstances—the fallacy of their reasoning and the untenableness of their positions; and it is not at all surprising that she fell in with their views to some extent.

Having prepared the way for future operations by securing the degree of faith, in Miss Knight, which was deemed pre-requisite to a procedure, the next move by the Perfectionists was to pass through a ridiculous and disgusting performance, thereby exhibiting a most impious scene of solemn mockery, in which Mrs. Cragin, who acted so conspicuous a part in the raising of Mrs. Hall, pretended to die, or descend into the grave of unbelief for Miss Knight, and then to rise to newness of life and deliver her from the power of death! And it was then proclaimed around that she was cured, and would soon recover from the effects of the disease, which still remained; and Miss Knight was so far deceived herself that she believed and asserted that she was well, that is, that the disease was removed, and that she should soon have her usual strength. The Perfectionists unitedly and positively asserted that she would be restored to soundness, and they repeated it again and again, and held on with a strange pertinacity till the very last. Their confident and repeated assertions probably had much to do in inducing Miss Knight to join in the belief that she should recover, and her mind, through their influence, was wrought up to the highest pitch, and being kept in a state of constant excitement, for a number of days she maintained the belief that she should soon have perfect health.

But while the pleasing phantom was playing before the imagination, and holding out the beautiful bow of hope, the disease, deeply seated and far advanced, was rapidly hastening to a fatal termination. Miss Knight at length became convinced that she could not recover. She sank rapidly, and in less than three weeks from the time she left her father's house, she died. And so strangely were the Perfectionists infatuated that they believed, or at least professed to believe, that she would be raised! And we are credibly informed—and this information is derived from a person who was present at the time—that after Miss Knight died, a company of Perfectionists assembled in the room in which the corpse was placed, and there remained for some length of time, expecting to see her restored to life. But she slept the sleep of death, and notwithstanding all their professions of faith and preten-sions to miraculous gifts, they possessed no power to break the dreamless slumber!

"Like a staunch murderer, steady to his purpose,"

Thus it appears that they were carried away with the same strange infatuation into which individuals in all ages have fallen, viz., that they could raise the dead!

Now it is a well known fact that Mr. N. discards the doctrine of the resurrection. He asserts that he has "long argued against the notion of the resurrection of that body which dies." Here then we find Mr. Noyes stoutly contending against the resurrection of the body which "dies;" and at the same time Perfectionists are trying to raise such a body! Trying to do what Mr. N. says is never to be done! This is a fair specimen of Perfectionist consistency!

All their efforts in the case of Miss Knight were unavailing. Here was a deeply seated disease which the power of imagination could not overcome—no deception could be practiced. Here was a fair trial, and it proved a complete failure.

Mr. Noyes appears to have been at his wits' ends to escape the odium which this case has brought upon him and his followers. He has undertaken to make the very best he could of an extremely bad case; but the attempt to clear himself and his followers is a very lame and ineffectual one. In reference to this matter he says:—

"In the first place, supposing this case to have been as complete a failure as it has been represented by our enemies, it was no worse failure than the disciples met with, when they undertook to cast out the arch-devil described in Mark 9: 17. . . . The worst that can be said of us in relation to Mary Knight's case, is what Christ said to his disciples, viz., that we failed 'because of our unbelief;' that we needed more 'prayer and fasting' in order to encounter successfully so tremendous a devil as consumption in its last stages."

"Arch devil"!—"So tremendous a devil as consumption in its last stages"! The reader will readily perceive the state of mind indicated by these expressions; such a state borders upon the blasphemous, and is naturally induced by the unhallowed and grossly debasing influences of Perfectionism. But let us look at the implied admission of Mr. Noyes found in the foregoing language. He seems to admit that they had a measure of unbelief. He says the worst that can be said of them is that they failed through unbelief—and he does not deny but it might be said in truth. In the Spiritual Magazine of Oct. 1, 1847, Mr. Noyes holds the following language,—"We say that unbelief is not a mere lack of faith, but a positive baptism of the devil." Now if Perfectionists harbor any unbelief whatever, according to the doctrine of Mr. Noyes, they have a "positive baptism of the devil." And if a person has a "positive baptism of the devil" he must of course be in a measure sinful; and the doctrine of Mr. Noyes is, that if a person is sinful at all he is "entirely" so. Thus it appears that Mr. N. with one stroke of the pen put up a gallows on which to hang the whole unbelieving world, but by a slip of the same he drops himself and his company from the scaffold and leaves the whole body of believers suspended upon the gallows of his own erecting. But let us look at the doings of Mr. Noyes, and what transpired after Miss Knight was removed to the "hospital." We will give his own language in relation to the matter:—

"She was conveyed to the 'hospital,' and Mrs. Achsah Campbell, the widow of a physician and a very successful nurse, undertook the care of her. I visited her frequently during the ensuing ten days. My spirit was brought into several severe contests with her disease, the details of which need not be given. The presence of the power of God was very manifest in the results. Mrs. Campbell is not inclined to fanatical faith, and is certainly sagacious in regard to the symptoms of the sick. She says she saw in that time a miracle which no subsequent reverse can efface from her mind.* She testifies that every symptom of Mary's disease was subdued; that her fever left her; that her cough became like that of a person recovering from a cold; that the pain in her limbs ceased; and that there was every indication of new life.—The day before I left, after witnessing a distressing drawback, caused, as Mary herself declared, by a protracted visit from an unbelieving friend,† I said to Mr. Knight—'The success of our treatment depends entirely on faith in the

* By turning to the 44th page of the present work the reader will see that Mrs. Achsah Campbell, who "saw" this "miracle," was implicated in the indictment against Mr. Noyes! And she is the only witness which Mr. N. brings forward to prove that he wrought a miracle in the case of Miss Knight! Thus he presents a person involved with himself in guilt, to prove his miraculous power!

† The unbelieving friend alluded to, was a respectable young gentleman to whom Miss Knight was engaged to be married. The Noyesites were very unwilling to have him visit her, and he was given to understand that if she recovered he would have to become a Perfectionist or never enjoy her society.
patient and those around; and if we are not at liberty to shut off from her unbelieving friends, you may as well take her home and let her die, for die she will.'
He gave us the liberty we demanded, and the next day, at the time of my departure, she was riding abroad, meeting her friends with a joyful smile, and declaring herself well. So much for my agency, in this case."

The foregoing language, and especially the concluding sentence, savors strongly of the consequential.
Were we to admit all that he says, we must acknowledge that there was a signal display of Divine power—that a miracle even was wrought—and that Miss Knight was nearly or quite healed. But Mr. Noyes continues:

"On the eve of my departure, I earnestly forewarned Mary, and all who were to have the charge of her, that if unbelieving spirits could not be kept away from her, and if her testimony of faith could not be kept firm, she would certainly die. I wrote, while on my way to New York, that her case was like a tie on a vote in Congress, where the Speaker has the casting vote; meaning that she would live or die according to her own faith and testimony."

"I shall leave it for others to relate the particulars of what took place after I left. It is sufficient to say in general, that Mary soon began to decline from her confidence and her strength; that her worldly friends closed around her, that the believers who had charge of her fought the king of terrors heroically, desperately, and even fanatically; that she failed in spite of them, and on the eighth day from my departure, died."

It will be perceived that the "departure" of Mr.
Noyes from Putney just previous to the death of Miss Knight, is spoken of in such a manner as to indicate that it was considered an important event, fraught with deep interest, and that it was very unfortunate for Miss Knight that he was under the necessity of leaving at that juncture; and in fine, the tenor of the language used by Mr. Noyes seems to say—"If I had been there she had not died!"

But if she was well, as we are left to infer, at the "departure" of Mr. Noyes, how are we to account for her sudden relapse, her rapid declension, and her almost immediate death? Why, Mr. Noyes would lay it all to the "unbelieving spirits" about her. These "unbelieving spirits" troubled them very much, and it seems they fought them very manfully, but were not able to conquer them! A great ado was made about these troublesome, "unbelieving spirits;" and from the language of Mr. N. we should infer that the Perfectionists had a "pitched battle" with them—that it was a mortal affray! But it appears to have been a mere mock battle—a kind of "sham fight," if the expression is allowable. The whole affair, so far as the Perfectionists were concerned, appears to have been a ridiculous, contemptible farce, utterly unworthy of people of sane minds.

At one time when Miss Knight had a sinking turn, an apparently half-crazy Perfectionist professed to have a great struggle with "unbelieving spirits," and confidently asserted that if it had not been for his faith she would have died! His faith kept her alive! When she rode out, if her friends came to the carriage to speak with her, the Perfectionists appeared vonnwilling to have them remain any length of time, and would apparently hurry away lest the influence of "unbelieving spirits" should have a bad effect upon her!

Mr. Noyes appears to have been so troubled with "unbelieving spirits" that he asked and obtained liberty of Mr. Knight, the father of Miss Knight, "to shut off from her unbelieving friends;" not even excepting the young gentleman to whom she was engaged to be married.

When the friends of Miss Knight consented to have her removed to the "hospital," it was with the understanding that they should have the privilege of visiting her agreeably to their own wishes. This the Perfectionists had promised, and we are assured that without this condition her friends would not have consented to her removal. But very soon after she went, Mr.
Noyes "demanded" the liberty to "shut off unbelieving friends," assigning as a reason for the requirement that the success of their treatment was involved in the matter. But if this was really the case, did not Mr.
N. know it as well before as after she went? Why then did he not, like an honest man, inform her friends in the beginning?

The "unbelieving friends" spoken of were those who did not acknowledge the supremacy of Noyes and adhere to his doctrines. Such an act was requisite in order to constitute a believer in the view of Mr. N.
A person might be a humble Christian, a devout disiple of Christ, but if he did not believe in this new
, in the estimation of Mr. N., he would be no Christian at all! Those who were favorably disposed toward the Perfectionists, and gave indications of being inclined towards the new faith, were considered as "hopeful" cases, and received a little more favor at the hand of the "acknowledged head."

Perfectionists made efforts to induce some of the relatives of Miss Knight to embrace their views, and the circumstances go to show that in taking her under their care they hoped thereby to gain readier access to her friends; and by an open communication through this medium with the different members of the family, they could exert an influence which they could not otherwise do, and would have a greater prospect of making proselytes, and drawing some into this vortex of ruin.

They assigned as a reason for asking the privilege of shutting off "unbelieving friends," that the success of their treatment depended entirely on faith in the patient and those around; but probably one great object was to secure the privilege of managing matters according to their own liking, and that others might not be acquainted with all that might transpire. After having shut off her "unbelieving friends," Mr. N. then threw the whole upon her own faith; and says after he left her "that she would live or die according to her own faith and testimony."

But notwithstanding Miss Knight died, Mr. N. will have it that a miracle was wrought in the case! We have his naked assertion—which is not very valuable at this late day—that, the "presence and power of God" was very manifest." And this assertion seems to be backed up by a statement from Mrs. Campbell. She thinks she saw a miracle, but the sole reason assigned for so thinking seems to be the favorable aspect which the symptoms at one time appeared to assume! It is a well known fact that consumption is a very flattering disease—that those who are gradually sinking under its irresistible power, are often deceived and entertain hopes of recovery to the very last. And not only is the patient deceived, but friends also not unfrequently partake of the same deception, unless they have had considerable experience and have some degree of discernment. To those who are familiar with the workings of the disease in its different stages, favorable appearances occasionally manifested are not at all unexpected, neither are they regarded as omens of lasting good; but to anxious friends and relatives who are watching with intense interest, and marking even the slightest change in the disease, favorable appearances—often mistaken for indications of returning health—serve to revive desponding hopes; but such hopes are revived for a little season, only to be suddenly dashed by a sad reverse, followed by a more rapid advance of the disease which is hastening to a fatal termination. The favorable symptoms in the case of Miss Knight, as the result clearly showed, were no more than what frequently occurs in cases of like character. So much for the miraculous work in this case.

After trying to make it appear that he had performed a wonderful work, and asserting that on the eve of his "departure," Miss Knight was riding abroad and declaring herself well, Mr. Noyes says with much apparent self-complacency, and in a spirit of vain boasting—"So much for my agency in this case."

But he says that soon after his "departure" Miss Knight "began to decline from her confidence and her strength."* And might not this have been reasonably expected? — and indeed how could it have been otherwise? Her mind had been wrought up to a very high pitch, and for a number of days kept in a state of extreme excitement, which served to keep her spirits and courage up, and caused her to exert to the uttermost what little remaining strength she had; but the disease in the mean time had been steadily advancing, and was rapidly hastening to a fatal termination. Nature being exhausted, her strength gone, and the lamp of life just flickering in its socket, all hope of recovery would naturally and necessarily expire; and she could no more reasonably and consistently believe that she should be restored to health, than a person could expect to rise independently of the laws of gravitation, soar above, and range the aerial regions without the aid of pinions. But says Mr. Noyes; — "Her worldly friends closed around her, and the believers who had charge of her

* A Perfectionist at one time remarked that Miss Knight's faith was so strong that she should recover, that she—the Perfectionist—believed she would. Thus Miss Knight's faith was represented as being very strong, and seems to have been the basis of the faith of the Perfectionist; yet the language of Mr. N. implies that she died in con fought the king of terrors heroically, desperately, and even fanatically." What! Perfectionists fanatics! This is a strange concession for Mr. Noyes to make in behalf of the "body of believers." What! Divinely inspired—"a miraculous instinct every day shaping their ends"—and yet fighting "fanatically!" Surely so far as they fought fanatically, so far they were fanatics! If they were fanatical in relation to this matter they may be in relation to all others. If fanatical in a measure, there certainly is danger of their becoming wholly so. If the door is thrown open, where shall the bounds be set?

Notwithstanding all the efforts made and all the faith exercised, this case proved a complete failure. Mr. Noyes met with a stern repulse which ended in a signal defeat. Having been completely vanquished, but still determined not to yield the point, Mr. N. turns every way to find some relief; and finally flees for "aid and comfort" to the Battle of Bunker Hill! But what—the half-astonished reader is ready to inquire—has the Battle of Bunker Hill to do with the case under consideration? Let us see; says Mr. Noyes:

"In the Battle of Bunker Hill, the Americans were defeated. They repulsed three terrible charges of the British troops, and after their ammunition was exhausted, they clubbed their muskets, and stood their ground against the storming column. But finally they were compelled to retreat. Yet this battle is glorified by Americans as a substantial victory. The day will come when this first battle of faith with the terrible despotism of consumption, though it ended in a retreat, will be glorified as the Bunker Hill of the Faith-Revolution."

This caps the climax! Mr. Noyes will have to look far down the vista of future ages, to behold the day which he anticipates, and wait for several successive centuries before he realizes the "consummation so devoutly to be wished!" Before leaving the subject let us look at the motives which probably induced Mr. N. to take Miss Knight to the "hospital." By a plausible statement he designed to palm the matter off as an act of pure benevolence. But when all the circumstances are taken into the account, it evidently appears, that if there were not sinister motives, there were some selfish ends to be subserved; that personal aggrandizement was the leading object in view, and had success attended his efforts, in all probability self-glorification would have been the crowning act. But let us hear Mr. N. in relation to the matter. He says that the next day after she rode out with Mr. John R. Miller, whose faith wonderfully sustained her:

"Seeing that her father was disposed to place her under our care, I called on her, and said to her in the presence of her friends, — 'Your room is very small and near the street, exposed to noise and dust and troublesome visitations. We have a room in our 'hospital,' a retired house, where you will be much more comfortable than you can be here. That room is at your service. You will certainly have as good chance to live there as here, and if you cannot live, it will be a pleasant place to die in. We will nurse you as well as we can, and do our best to save you.' I made this offer after deliberately counting the cost.
had no special confidence that she would live, and I knew if she should die on our hands, we should be disgraced, as we have been. But I said in my heart, 'No fear of the cruel mockings of those who watch for evil, shall hinder me from doing a simple act of benevolence which is fairly set before me. Let the consequences be what they may, I will do as I would be done by.'"

Now all this appears very well on paper—although the one-sided allusion, or rather back-handed thrust at those whom he suspected of watching for evil, does not exhibit a super-abundance of Christian charity—and we should be glad to regard it as a bright spot amid the surrounding darkness if we could consistently do so. But do the circumstances warrant the statement made, and sustain the assumed position that it was "a simple act of benevolence?" How does the language used agree with the course pursued?

As soon as Miss Knight was fairly in their hands and fully under their care, extraordinary instrumentalities were employed, and mysterious appliances were resorted to by the Perfectionists, and it was confidently affirmed by them that she would be cured. And was soon sounded abroad that her disease was removed, and asserted that she only needed time to entirely recover her usual strength.

Mr. Noyes asserts that before Miss Knight came under his care, he "had no special confidence that she would live;" but his confidence in her recovery appears to have increased very rapidly, for he soon after says—"The success of our treatment depends entirely on faith in the patient and those around."
Thus it appears that in his view there was no insuperable barrier in the disease—that there was one only pre-requisite, viz. faith—that a due degree of faith in the patient and those around would accomplish the work! Having the privilege granted of shutting off "unbelieving friends," Mr. N. says on the eve of his "departure"—"That if unbelieving spirits could not be kept away from her, and if her testimony of faith could not be kept firm, she would certainly die." This language plainly implies that if "unbelieving spirits" could be kept away, and her testimony could be kept firm, she would certainly live. Lest he should stand fully committed, Mr. N., it will be perceived, at last suspended the case upon that insignificant yet all-important word, if; so that if there should be a failure, he could attribute that failure to the non-fulfillment, on the part of Mrs. Knight, of the conditions, and thus clear himself.

Mr. N. asserts that it was "a simple act of benevolence," but he does not appear to be content with the mere honor of having performed such an act, for he very complacently takes to himself the credit of having wrought a miracle! And he would have his signal defeat celebrated as a "substantial victory!" And he seems to think that ere long it will be "glorified as the Bunker Hill of the Faith-Revolution!"

Mr. Noyes said to Mr. Knight at one time—"If we are not at liberty to shut off from her unbelieving friends, you may as well take her home and let her die, for die she will." Thus it appears that if Mr. N.
could not have his own way in all things, he was ready to turn her back upon her friends, and let her die; and yet he holds it up as an act of pure benevolence! If it was a "simple act of benevolence," and if Mr. N. "had no special confidence that she would live" when he took her, why did he say to Mr. Knight—"You may as well take her home and let her die, for die she will, if we are not at liberty to shut off from her unbelieving friends"? He had said to Miss Knight previous to her removal, that if she could not live, the "hospital" would be "a pleasant place to die in," yet, if his requests were not granted, and his doctrines complied with, he uses language which seems to imply a threat to return her home. If it was a simple act of benevolence, why not let her remain and die at the "hospital"? The idea of its being an act of benevolence appears to have been an after-thought, designed to meet the emergency; for the whole affair shows upon the very face of it that the thought of an act of benevolence was lost and swallowed up in the strong desire of Mr. N. to accomplish something; if by sheer humbuggery, that would redound to his own glory and self-aggrandizement. The circumstances we think warrant this conclusion.

Had Mr. N. been so fortunate as to have found in Miss Knight a case like those which sometimes occur, in which persons apparently near the close of life recover; who are pronounced beyond the reach of medical aid, but nature rallying throws off the disease and health returns, it would have been trumpeted through the land as a miraculous work, and Mr. N. would have made capital of it, and turned it to his own account. But he had to grapple, not with an imaginary or mild disease, but with a stubborn case, and he found himself unequal to the combat; the odds were against him, and he was completely vanquished.
CHAPTER XXIV.

SUNDER CASES.

In concluding our notice of the pretended miracles of Noyes, we shall quote several cases, published in the Spiritual Magazine of Oct. 15, 1847. Says Mr. Noyes:—

"Instances of recovery by faith among us have been very numerous. We will present a few samples of them.

"My own case deserves to be recorded. The facts are these:—In consequence of long and loud speaking, and the wear and tear of a laborious life, I contracted in 1842 a disease of the throat and lungs, which deprived me of the use of my voice in public, and rendered ordinary conversation painful. I was evidently threatened with consumption. At first I listened to friends and physicians, so far as to make some slight experiments of medication. But I obtained no help in this way, and finally, in the face of Dr. John Campbell's warning and advice, I gave up my case to the sole treatment of Jesus Christ. I grew worse till September 1845, and at that time had abundant internal reason to expect a speedy death. When the symptoms were at the worst, Jesus Christ advised me to neglect my disease, and act as though I was well. I did so, and entered upon a course of new and severe labor with my voice, in meetings and in conversation. From that time I have been substantially well, and have performed more hard labor with my tongue in the last two years, than in any other two years of my life.
"The case of Mrs. Fanny Leonard is well known in this community. About a year ago, after the birth of a child, she began to decline. The symptoms of her disease were severe pain in her breast and side, and sinking weakness. She became worse, till her friends had little hope of her recovery. In March of the present year, a general persuasion manifested itself in our association, that she would be healed by the power of God. As that persuasion arose, she still sunk. At length the crisis of faith and of her disease came together. She received strength at the very time when our faith predicted it, and she received it by the laying on of hands.* She has been visibly improving ever since, and is now a healthy woman.

"The case of Mrs. E. Cragin may be briefly referred to here, though she has given some account of it in a previous paper. From the period of her sixteenth year till the past summer, she has been subject to frequent attacks of the 'sick headache.' The disorder increased upon her till its visits were expected regularly as often as once a week. Many attempts were made to subdue it by medicine, but nothing availed. In May last it became constant and terribly distressing. Death seemed inevitable. We resisted the disease as a spiritual power, not by medicine, but by the faith and will of our hearts. The devil was

*Mr. Noyes, in conversation with a person professing to be a Perfectionist, said that in this instance the laying on of hands meant sexual intercourse. The person alluded to has testified under oath that Noyes made this statement. By turning to the 44th page of this work, the reader will see that Mrs. Leonard is implicated in the indictment against Noyes. Whether the phrase laying on of hands when used by Noyes always means the same, we have never been informed; but in the absence of all knowledge to the contrary, we are left to infer that it does! Such baseness cannot well be surmised.
cast out of her stomach, and she has not had an attack of this 'sick headache' since.

"John R. Miller has long been subject to severe attacks of headache. On one of these occasions in the course of the last summer, I went into his room and found him on the bed, suffering dreadfully. I laid my hands on his head, and told him to shake off the devil. He arose at once, perfectly free from pain, and has not been troubled with this disease since."

There! the world must "give in" now! Such a mass of miracles, and such miracles too, are overwhelming!!

But we must give the reader another precious memoir. An article published in the Spiritual Magazine of Nov. 1, 1847, supposed to be from the pen of Mrs. Harriet A. Skinner, a sister of Mr. Noyes, and one of the most prominent members of the Putney Community, contains the following language:—

"There is one miracle which the world gives us credit for, which we cannot arrogate to ourselves; and that is, the combination of peace and licentiousness. Licentiousness and quarreling are as inseparable as fear and guilt; and with all our power, we cannot sunder what God has joined together in these two cases. . . . Are we not a miracle to ourselves, that when all hell is stirred to do us harm, we are not only trustful and calm, but light-hearted and merry? . . . Stripes and imprisonments have not come yet, but they impend—and not a heart quails. And do not our hearts tell us that we 'love not our lives unto death,' should enmity be excited to the desperation of mur-

... A miraculous instinct every day shapes our see the direction of the current, and every thing sets that way; our smallest affairs are foreordained, conspiring to the general effect. We fire, and expect to hit the centre of the mark. How often the ringing shout announces the unerring aim."

Thus we have noticed the most prominent pretended miracles of Noyes. That we should notice all, could not be expected; for if their "social machinery," is so highly charged with a "miraculous instinct," that it turns out "daily miracles," this would be a hopeless task.

Mr. Noyes appears to have been quite busily engaged in casting devils out of his followers; but the reader may be curious to know how, if it is impossible for the Noyesites to sin, it happens that they are so extensively possessed with devils. Can Mr. N. tell us?

Mr. Noyes stoutly contends that the age of miracles is not past, but it is quite certain that the age of his miracles is past in Putney, and it is presumed that the people generally are very much rejoiced that it is so.

In conclusion, let us gather up the divergent rays, throw them into one common focus, and take a bird's-eye view of Mr. N.'s field of miracles. And first in importance—though not in the order of time—is the case of Mrs. Harriet A. Hall, declared to be a cure as "unimpeachable as any of the miracles of the primitive church;" but she is still and ever has been the subject of the same disease that she was before Mr. N. pretended to work a miracle! And in this very case Mr. Noyes was guilty of adultery!!

In the case of Mrs. Leonard, whom he declares was healed by the "laying on of hands," he was also guilty of adultery! Mr. N. also cast the devil out of Mrs. Cragin's stomach, her sick headache! Probably there might be devils cast out of her, for she was Noyes's seraglio!

He cast the devil out of John F. Miller was one of the joint owners of Noyes; and under this "common believers" were banded together!

Mr. Noyes asserts that he wrote the case of Miss Mary A. Knight to Acheah Campbell to prove it—the indictment brought against Thus we have a panoramic miracles. Such an array of miracles before beheld, and for the home hoped that it will never be cast a spectacle again!!

CHAPTER XXV.

Prominent Trait in the Character of Noyes—His Censuriosity—Intolerant Spirit of Noyesism—False statements of Noyes—Martyr-Spirit of ancient Christianity.

There is one very prominent trait in the character of Mr. Noyes which deserves a passing notice. He appears to have possessed by nature a despotic disposition—was evidently inclined to break away from restraint, and disposed to rule those under his authority with a rod of iron. This independent, aristocratic spirit began early to develop itself, and it appears to have been long cherished, and has evidently come to maturity. Thus from his youth up he appears to have been afflicted with a kind of mental malady termed by Pollok,

"Incurable insanity of will."

Not only the course which Mr. N. has pursued, but his own language uttered at different times, clearly exhibits this same disposition. Soon after determining on entering the ministry, and when preparing for admission into the Theological Seminary at Andover, he says:

"On one occasion, at this period, in conversation with my father, who was fond of theological argument, I suggested an interpretation of some passage in scripture, which he thought was new. 'Take care,' said he, 'that is heresy.' 'Heresy or not,' said I, 'it is true.' 'But if you are to be a minister,' said he, 'you must think and preach as the rest of the ministers do.'" you get out of the traces, they will whip you in.' I was indignant at the idea of being obliged to think by other people's rules, and replied, 'Never! Never will I be whipped by ministers or any body else, into views that do not commend themselves to my understanding, as guided by the Bible, and enlightened by the Spirit.'"

The sentiments contained in the above language, properly expressed under ordinary circumstances, might not be very objectionable; but the reader cannot fail to perceive the peculiar spirit, predominant in Noyes, which looks out from every part of the paragraph.

The following unmistakable language, uttered a few years later, is found in the first number of the "Witness," published at Ithaca, N. Y:—

"I have long traversed unshackled the broad field of universal truth, and have learned to scale or trample down the fences with which that field has been disfigured by scientific fools. As an inhabitant, and, with others, a joint proprietor, of the universe, I will not be robbed of the right of universal thought. I shall therefore pass and re-pass as I please the usual boundaries of technical theology, knowing that the theology of heaven includes every other science."

The idea of a new sect probably originated in the indomitable disposition of Noyes to "trample down" all others; and but for this cause Noyesism would, in all probability, never have had an existence.

We shall quote a few paragraphs from the writings of Mr. N., which will serve as choice specimens of the quest spirit which he has exhibited at different times, various occasions, and which appears to have been long cherished, and evidently exerts a controlling influence.

Charles H. Weld became an associate of Noyes at an early period in the history of Perfectionism—sincere friendship appears to have existed between them for a time, and even ripened into great intimacy. Noyes approved of the general course of Weld, and spake of him in terms of high commendation. Some differences of opinion at length arose between them, and they separated. The disagreement which subsequently existed between them appears to have arisen, however, not so much from mere differences of opinion, as from a disposition on the part of Noyes to exercise the supremacy over Weld, and from an unwillingness on the part of Weld to succumb in all things to the control and dictation of Noyes.

This, in the eye of Noyes, was an unpardonable offence, and he gave vent to his indignation in unmeasured terms. The feelings which he indulged toward Weld after the rupture, as well as the manner of expressing himself, appear in a letter written by Noyes, and addressed to Weld, bearing date Sept. 1836, and was published in the "Witness" in Sept. 1837. The following is the language of Noyes, addressed to Weld:

"Our relations to each other, during two or three years past, have been, apparently, those of sincere Christian affection. On my own part, the appearance corresponded to the reality, until a little more than a the conviction that you were an enemy in disguise.—Yet I was not disposed to publicly utter this conviction, until every shadow of doubt had passed away. I have since had full time and opportunity to analyze your character. The darkness is passed and I am now prepared not only to assert, but to prove, to you and to all men, that you are 'a child of the devil, an enemy of all righteousness.'

After speaking somewhat at length relative to the subject of supremacy—the "war of wills," and a "death-struggle" for the mastery, which took place between him and Weld, Mr. Noyes resumes the strain as follows:—

"I was compelled to give you up as a reprobate, and to scrutinize you as an adversary. ... The proofs of your hypocrisy have since been constantly accumulating, until now I can no longer shrink from believing and declaring you to be in very deed, and beyond hope, according to your own confession, a Prince of Devils. ... I have suffered personally more, by the cruelty of your benevolence, than by all other causes put together; and the way of truth has been evil spoken of more by reason of the perverse things which have come in through you, than for all other reasons. For God's sake, therefore, and for his elect's sake, I will lay bare your nakedness, till you receive your full portion of everlasting shame and contempt." !

How unlike the meekness and gentleness of Christ must be the spirit which can prompt such expressions. How diverse from the spirit of Him, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered, threatened not. No person would cherish such a spirit, and indulge in the use of such language, who was striving to comply with the apostolic injunction—"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."—Phil. 2: 5. It is the solemn asseveration of an inspired apostle—"If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9.

But Mr. N. appears to have arrogantly assumed the character of a judge, and seems to be strongly disposed to deal the bolts of his wrath "round the land," on all whom he deems his foes!

That years have not diminished, but rather strengthened this disposition, is evident from the fact, as the writer is credibly informed, that an elderly lady, who had connected herself with the Corporation in Putney, but who refused to submit to the sole dictation of Mr. N., and determined on leaving—was charged by Noyes not to divulge what she knew of his heinous offences, and was told by him, that in case she did, he would sink her to the lowest depths of hell; blasphemously asserting that he had power to do it in this world, and in the world to come!

The same spirit that has been manifested toward individuals, has also been exhibited toward all evangelical denominations in Christendom. Writing to James Boyle, who was an early convert to Perfectionism, but afterwards renounced the system, Mr. Noyes expresses himself in the following characteristic language:—

"God speed to you, my brother, in the work of unmasking and proclaiming the shame of the mother of abominations. Professors of orthodox religion in day, fill the front rank of the army of hell. Their mouths are 'the gates of hell.'"

Comment is unnecessary. Such uncharitable expressions and sweeping denunciations speak for themselves. But let us look at the instructions which Mr. N. has given his followers relative to the subject under consideration. He teaches the very principles which he carries out in practice. He makes the following remarks on anger:

"'Be ye angry and sin not.'—Eph. iv: 26. I take this passage as a precept; and regard anger as one of the most important duties of a Christian. The apostle places it in immediate connection with cessation from sin, as if he had said, 'Be ye angry that ye may sin not.' No man will ever cease from sin, till he so abhors it, as to be angry with himself and with all sinners. No man will ever love God with all his heart, till he 'hates the wicked with a perfect hatred.'—Where there is 'love stronger than death,' there must be 'jealousy, cruel as the grave.'"

The foregoing singular comment of Mr. Noyes, looks very much like giving liberty to throw a loose rein upon the neck of passion, and put spurs to the fiery steed.

As an offset to the exposition of Mr. N., we will give a few remarks from the pen of a learned and critical commentator* on the same passage; and we think they are far more rational and consistent, and entitled to quite as much weight as the remarks of Mr. Noyes. They are as follows:

Adam Clarke.
"Be ye angry, and sin not.—We can never suppose that the apostle delivers this as a precept, if we take the words as they stand in our version. Perhaps the sense is, Take heed that ye be not angry, lest ye sin; for it would be very difficult, even for an apostle himself, to be angry and not sin."

It is said of the Savior, that at a certain time he looked upon the Pharisees with anger.

"And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, he saith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand."—Mark iii. 5.

The commentator from whom we have just quoted, well remarks upon the term, anger, as applied to our Lord, in the following brief manner:

"What was the anger which our Lord felt? That which proceeded from excessive grief, which was occasioned by their obstinate stupidity and blindness: therefore it was no uneasy passion, but an excess of generous grief."

St. Paul exhorts the Christians at Ephesus and Colosse in the following emphatic language:

"Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice. But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth."—Eph. iv. 31; Col. iii. 8.

Thus it appears that every degree of anger, using the term in its common acceptation, is prohibited by express apostolic injunction.
But let us look at the intolerant spirit of Noyesianism. Early in the autumn of 1847, the writer took occasion publicly to express some general views relative to the subject of miracles—to exhibit the absurdity and shallowness of the pretensions to miraculous power, of the many little chimerical sects which are springing up at the present day—and also to expose the deception which the Perfectionists were attempting to practice upon the people of Putney. This of course gave offence to the leading Perfectionists; and soon after, the following characteristic language was found in the Spiritual Magazine, the intended application of which no one could doubt:

"I have seen a man—perchance a priest—take advantage of the times and push aside the truth of the gospel, giving its place to a mass of falsehood which the people stumble over, and he thinks he has made a successful revolution; but every lie is on its way to Tophet, and that man has raised himself a monument of disgrace; we can only deplore for him the certain vengeance of time, which is hurrying towards the triumph of the right."

This language is supposed to be from the pen of Mrs. Harriet A. Skinner, the so-called wife of Mr. John L. Skinner, an associate of Noyes. Mrs. Skinner is a sister of Mr. Noyes—was a liberal contributor to the Spiritual Magazine, and is a Perfectionist of the deepest dye. The language quoted clearly indicates the intolerant spirit prevalent among Perfectionists. Sentiments conflicting with their views are at once pronounced falsehoods; and whoever dares speak the truth must expect to be denounced by them. As to the "monument of disgrace," we cheerfully submit it to the judgment of the public, whether an exhibition and refutation of the errors of such a system are as great a "monument of disgrace" as the facts which recent disclosures have clearly brought to view. If we mistake not they, by their conduct, have erected a "monument of disgrace" which will stand through all coming time—whose towering head shall be distinctly visible from far distant regions.

But the fair writer professes to "deplore" for us the "certain vengeance of time." This language indicates a disposition to assume a threatening aspect for the purpose of intimidating; and we greatly fear that the wish to have "vengeance" executed was father to the thought expressed.

We cannot find it in our heart to indulge aught but feelings of the most profound commiseration for those who cherish the spirit from which such language emanates.

We would gladly have been excused from performing the disagreeable task of stirring this stagnant pool of pollution, could it have been consistently done; but he proves himself recreant to duty, who refuses to speak and act when time and circumstances demand it.

Again, in the autumn of 1847, we addressed a few questions to the editor of the Spiritual Magazine, touching the subject of miracles. These questions were couched in respectful, and we think unobjectionable language, and were published in the above mentioned paper of Oct. 15, 1847. Mr. Noyes replied at length, and that reply contained the tocsin of alarm; and was taken for the signal to let slip the dogs of war which bore down with their loudest bay, and many a cur manifested a disposition to join the pack and hunt down our humble self.

Various questions, unworthy of notice, were proposed to the writer by different correspondents of the Magazine and termed, by the astute editor of that paper, "pertinent;"—and all this because we dared to propound a few questions expressive of doubt as to the infallibility and miraculous power of the Putney Pontiff! This was an unpardonable offence! A more dictatorial, mouth-stopping spirit is seldom manifested. Perhaps they fancy that their residence is in such exalted regions that they are exempt from the common civilities of civilized and social life, and that those who are so unfortunate as to dwell in this lower world are not entitled to the common courtesies of life.

Mr. Noyes has made some exceedingly erroneous statements relative to the leading denominations of the land, which are entitled to a passing notice. For a better understanding of the subject we will quote a few paragraphs from the writings of Mr. N. He in his modesty says:—

"We believe that all true knowledge of the New Covenant, and of the holiness which it gives, was lost after the apostolic age, and that the system which has existed since, both in Popish and Reformed Christen- called Christianity, has been, so far as it has had in it any divine element, only a second edition of Judaism—a continuation of the spiritual testimony of Moses and Elijah. . . . We have seen no evidence that the New Covenant was ever known or preached after the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 70, till it was published at New-Haven in 1834."—Perfectionist, Vol. iv. No. 4.

Again, speaking in reference to an expectation of the near approach of the Millennium, which prevailed to some extent about the year 1830 and for some time after, Mr. N. says:

"In 1834, premonitory symptom of expectation came to its highest point. Then the truth of the primitive gospel was developed. It stood on the top swell of the spirituality of that period. The revival spirit and the attainments of the church had reached their highest tide, and on that basis the gospel of holiness rose up again before the eyes of men. . . . What has been the history of the churches since? They have had no revivals. . . . Since the time we speak of, the churches have been steadily wilting, drooping, and losing their influence over the minds of men. The Methodist Church has fallen off largely in numbers, as have also the others."—Spiritual Magazine, Vol. ii. No. 13.

We wish to call the reader's special attention to the concluding statement of the foregoing language. Mr. N. roundly asserts that the "Methodist Church has fallen off largely in numbers" since 1834. Let us compare this statement with the statistics of that denomination. It appears that the Methodist Church in different parts of the world . . .
" 1847 - - - - - - - 1,765,580

Increase - - - - - - - 781,320

In the United States the statistics stand as follows:

In 1834 - - - - - - - 602,186
" 1847 - - - - - - - 1,183,426

Increase - - - - - - - 581,240

But Mr. N. asserts that other denominations have also fallen off in numbers. Let us look again at statistics:

The Congregational, Presbyterian, and Baptist Churches numbered in the United States:

Increase - - - - - - - 736,332

We have no data from which to ascertain the numbers of the Congregational, Presbyterian, and Baptist Churches, throughout the world, consequently we have given them for the United States only. There has probably been a proportionate, and perhaps even a greater increase in other parts of the world than in the United States. Many of the foreign Missions have been in a prosperous condition, and some of them have approximate as nearly to the truth as can be expected. They show an aggregate increase in the four leading evangelical denominations in the United States, of one million three hundred and seventeen thousand six hundred and seventy-two, between 1834 and 1847, or during the period in which Mr. Noyes says that the churches have "fallen off largely in numbers"!

Such random statements ill comport with the high professions of Mr. N., and yet his disciples who believe in his infallibility, are ready to receive any statement he may make as undoubted truth, however false it may be. If he and his followers can look the foregoing facts full in the face without any misgivings, then they are prepared for almost anything. If this is a fair sample of Mr. N.'s veracity, his word is of little value. If he cannot state simple facts with the ordinary accuracy of a common chronicler of passing events, he had better moderate his claim to inspiration, or the public will be justified in believing that he is inspired from a very questionable source.

Mr. Noyes gives a lesson upon the martyr-spirit exhibited in the Primitive Church; and strange as it may appear, he condemns that spirit, and speaks, as will be seen, very reproachfully of those worthy men who counted not their lives dear unto themselves, but joyfully received the crown of martyrdom, and whom the church in all ages has delighted to honor. The reader would be struck with utter astonishment at what follows, were he not prepared from the preceding.
to expect almost any thing, however heretical and anti-christian, from the great Perfectionist leader.

Even the holy martyrs have not escaped the wholesale slanders and sweeping denunciations brought by Mr. Noyes against every thing of a religious character, which does not bear the impress, and is not in perfect keeping with Perfectionism. Let us hear him:—

"When we have learned from the scriptures, that Christ came the second time immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem, and took away the spiritual part of the primitive church, we are compelled to infer that the moiety which was left, though it bore and transmitted the name and forms of Christianity, was actually an apostate church. But then the question urges itself upon us—'What shall we think of the splendid and innumerable martyrdoms which have been the glory of that church through so many ages?' We will endeavor to answer this question 'without partiality, and without hypocrisy.' For this purpose we will present a specimen of the martyr spirit that prevailed in the next generation after the apostles, and then we will offer several remarks showing our opinion of that spirit.

'Ignatius is universally regarded as one of the most illustrious of the early martyrs. Indeed he was the chief father of what may be called the martyr-mania of the first three centuries. He is therefore an example to our purpose. The writers of the Oxford Tracts give the following account of him:—

'St. Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, and Martyr, is reported to have been the child whom Christ took in his arms, in order to give his disciples a pattern of christian humbleness. But, however this was, he certainly was a disciple and friend of the Apostles, particularly of St. Peter and St. John.
NOTESISM UNVEILED: 257

' St. Peter and St. Paul are said to have laid on him their hands, and made him Bishop of Antioch. In A.D. 106, when he had been Bishop nearly 40 years, the persecuting Emperor Trajan came to Antioch; and on finding Ignatius resolute in confessing the faith of Christ, he ordered him to be carried prisoner to Rome, and there thrown to the beasts in the idolatrous heathen show—a command which was strictly obeyed. During his journey, he wrote letters to various Churches, by way of taking leave of them, and to confirm them in Christian zeal, love, and unity.'

After giving a few extracts from an epistle which Ignatius wrote to the Romans, while on his way to Rome, in which he exhorts his fellow disciples to steadfastness in the faith, and expresses his willingness to suffer martyrdom, Mr. Noyes proceeds to remark:

"So far as mere courage in coveting death, or mere religious zeal, is concerned, we might easily find examples among the worshippers of Juggernaut that would fully match Ignatius. The martyr spirit which Ignatius exhibited, and which became so fashionable afterwards, was not necessarily connected with holiness and truth. . . . . We have no fear in declaring our belief that the ambitious thirst for martyrdom, manifested by Ignatius and the mass of those who have been glorified with him, as the 'martyr church,' was the very climax of 'spiritual wickedness in high places'—a strong delusion of self-righteousness, supplanting the atonement, making death instead of faith the way to perfection, and planting the seeds of the whole system of penances, self-torture, and purgatorial salvation, which have since gained for Popery the name of Antichrist.'—Witness, Vol. II. No. 5.

Thus the noble army of martyrs, who, with true Christian fortitude, maintained their position against fearful odds, and manfully breast the torrent of persecution which burst upon the Church in the early ages, are traduced by Mr. Noyes. He does not hesitate to impute to them the most unworthy motives, and impiously asserts his belief that the spirit by which they were controlled was the "very climax of spiritual wickedness" !

Mr. N. also virtually asserts his superiority, in point of moral excellence and spiritual attainments, over that veteran band of worthies who laid down their lives rather than renounce their religion and treacherously betray the cause of their Master which they had espoused—thus would he disrobe them of the mantle of righteousness, wrest the palms of victory from their hands, and with a sacrilegious hand take the crowns of glory from their sainted heads, and unblushingly place them upon his own!
CHAPTER XXVI.

Article from the Advocate of Moral Reform—

In delineating the character of Perfectionism, we deem it proper, not only to present such facts and doctrines as will exhibit its true features, but also to give the opinions of different individuals who have informed themselves relative to the subject, and whose position and standing in society entitle them to confidence and give weight to their opinions.

Thoughts emanating from different individuals, and information derived from various sources at different periods in the history of Perfectionism, being gathered into one common focus, throw a flood of light upon this "abomination of desolation, standing in the holy place," and present it to public view in all its native deformity!

We deem it appropriate here to introduce an able editorial article, published several years ago, in the Advocate of Moral Reform. This article was published when Perfectionism was comparatively in its infancy, but had so far developed itself as to give unmistakable indications of its true character—its direct tendency and inevitable consequences. It may be proper here to remark, that Geo. Cragin, who for some time was the publishing agent of the Advocate of Moral Reform, probably finding the principles of the Moral Reform Society too strict for him and the place he occupied too straight, renounced those principles and embraced Perfectionism, which afforded him more latitude. He soon after removed to Putney, and became an associate and intimate of Noyes. He then deliberately turned round and denounced the "Advocate of Moral Reform as the greatest of religious humbugs."

There are certain persons of whom it is sometimes said, "Their censure is praise." The present is an instance in point.

In 1842, Cragin was associated with Noyes in the publication of a paper called the Spiritual Moralist, devoted expressly to the dissemination of licentious doctrines. This paper contained such offensive matter, and was so extremely disgusting, that it received but little favor except from those who had lost all sense of delicacy and propriety; and it was discontinued—probably for want of patronage—after the publication of two numbers.

The article from the Advocate of Moral Reform given below, is well-timed and very truthful. We bespeak for it an attentive and candid perusal:

"Perfectionism."

"We have not hitherto thought it advisable to introduce any topics of discussion into the Advocate, which were foreign to its immediate object; and our readers will bear us witness, that we have never contended for the shibboleth of a party. Our high aim has been to combine all the moral and religious influence in the tional differences seem to have been merged in one common feeling of interest in this great work. We have not departed from the rule heretofore laid down, in bringing forward the subject which stands at the head of this article. Sentiments have of late been openly advanced by those who call themselves Perfectionists, of such an immoral and destructive tendency, that it becomes our duty as humble conservators of the public morals, to bear a decided testimony against them, particularly as the names of some among us have been coupled with this dangerous and seductive heresy. To those who are happily ignorant of the name and nature of Perfectionism, we fear we shall hardly be able to make ourselves intelligible; for we shrink from the task of disturbing this stagnant pool of corruption, even for the sake of warning the unwary from its brink. But we dare not close our eyes to the fact, that while some whom we loved and honored, have fallen into this snare of the devil, there are others in equal, or greater danger, who may be induced by the warning voice of truth, to examine the ground on which they stand, and escape for their lives, while yet escape is possible.

"In some recent publications by the leaders of this sect, the doctrines of Robert Dale Owen and Fanny Wright are boldly espoused and advocated, and the institution of marriage set aside, as a part of the system of bondage from which Christ is to make us free. We will not stain our pages with specimens of this reasoning, which makes the blessed Redeemer the minister of sin, and converts the bread of life into a deadly poison. Indeed the language so much resembles the jargon under which the ancient mystics used to veil their meaning, that our readers would not probably understand at once its full import. From the words of our Savior concerning the inhabitants of heaven," They neither marry, nor are given in marriage,' they argue the abolition of the institution here, in a resurrection state which it seems some of them have already attained. It will at once be seen, that this master stroke of satanic policy opens a flood-gate to every species of licentiousness; and by a refinement of wickedness which puts papacy to the blush, sanctifies the very incarnation of impurity. A state of society such as these doctrines would inevitably produce, cannot be adequately conceived or described. The sacredness of the domestic constitution invaded—the marriage covenant annulled—parental and filial obligations trampled in the dust—while unbridled license stalks among the ruins, smiling at the havoc she has made, and feasting on the last bleeding remnants of chastity and virtue! Surely, when sentiments like these are advocated under the mask of high-toned piety, it is the duty of all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, to 'contend earnestly for the' purity of 'the faith once delivered to the saints.'

"But this doctrine, monstrous as it is, is only the growth of another, which may be termed 'the root of the evil,' viz. 'that believers under the Gospel dispensation, are delivered from the obligation of personal obedience to the moral law.' The violation of this law does not, they say, necessarily involve transgression, for the spirit which is in them being an infallible guide, may in many supposable cases lead them contrary to the letter of the law, without bringing guilt upon their souls. Those who are familiar with Ecclesiastical History, will recognize in this belief the essential own country, sent forth the warning voice. It is indeed true that we have become incapable of keeping the law, as a covenant of works, 'the man that doeth these things, shall live in them,'—but as a rule of action, it is still obligatory on us, and must continue to be so, while those rights of God and man exist which it is designed to protect. The Christian believer not bound to obey the moral law of God! That law which binds all created intelligences together with a golden chain, and links them indissolubly to his holy throne! That law, in which, as in a glass, we see all the perfect attributes of Jehovah's character, while love, like the sun, sheds a full-orbed splendor over the whole,—insufferable from its brightness, did we not behold it tempered in the face of Him who came to be 'the end of the law for righteousness, to every one that believeth.'

"Those who can thus turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, may endeavor to take refuge in the gospel from the unwelcome requisitions of the law, but it will be found in another day to be a refuge of lies which the hail shall sweep utterly away. 'Think not I am come to destroy the law or the prophets,' said the Savior, 'I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil.' 'Do we then make void the law through faith?' is the language of the apostle; 'God forbid; yea, we establish the law.' But time would fail, were we to attempt an enumeration of the passages which prove that the law of God, like his nature, is unchangeable and eternal in its spirit and sanctions.

"We have not attempted to go into an exposition of the views of the Perfectionists, or an argument against them; a task for which we have neither leisure nor inclination. In common with many others, we have been shocked and alarmed at the avowal of sentiments which seem to us the very refinement of licentiousness, and a declaration of our views was deemed necessary for the satisfaction of those interested in our course. We desired likewise to warn the sincere inquirer after holiness, to beware of embracing an error, which if not abandoned in time, will certainly sink the soul to a deep and dark perdition. The church must come up to a higher standard of personal consecration and holiness, before the world can be converted; but in doing this, let her not run into an extreme more dangerous than the one she seeks to avoid. 'The tree is known by its fruits.' This doctrine leads its advocates to neglect prayer, both social and private—to throw away the Sabbath, with all its inestimable blessings—to despise the ordinances and means of grace, as shadows which vanish at the appearing of the substance—in fine, to withdraw from all benevolent, moral and religious associations, as a system of legality, in which they have no interest. These are not good fruits; we must therefore pronounce the tree corrupt, and refuse all fellowship or countenance to those who walk thus disorderly, though the act of excision be as painful as the amputation of a limb, or the plucking out of an eye.'

The above language is strong and decisive, and cuts every way, like the keen two-edged sword of truth. Though penned several years since, it applies with as much if not more propriety to Perfectionism now than when it was first published.

In continuing our quotations from the writings of distinguished individuals who have spoken in reference to Perfectionism, we give a few remarks of Rev. Joseph Tracy, an eminent Congregational clergyman. Mr. Tracy was formerly editor of the Boston Recorder, and is extensively and favorably known, especially in New-England. He speaks of Perfectionism as early as 1835; thus showing that its nature was known—its tendency seen—and that even its fruits began to appear at that early period, or very soon after it came into existence:

"This thing of Perfectionism is an affair which will happen now and then. The previous condition, the predisposing cause of it, in a community, is Ultra-Calvinism, taking the form of Antinomianism. It commences by a reaction, more or less thorough-going, towards Arminianism. Next, the theoretic possibility of becoming perfect is embraced as a speculative truth. Next, it is reduced to pretended practice, by persons who think they give themselves up, unreservedly, to be guided by the immediate suggestions of the Spirit; accompanied by the belief that they can tell a movement of the Spirit by the feeling of it. Next,—which is scarcely another step,—they believe themselves inaccessible to temptation; either because they have become so holy that the devil can have no access to them, or because they can tell the movements of the Spirit from every thing else so easily and infallibly. Next, certain feelings which some of the male and female members of the sect have for each other, being of the nature, not of hate but of love, are taken for the motions of the Spirit, and followed accordingly; ending, theoretically, in certain nonsense about spiritual marriage, and practically, in the grossest licentiousness. This is the last stage of the disease. Those who have not yet joined them understand their character, and they cease to make proselytes. They themselves—that is, such of them as are not really insane,—become undeceived. Some few, very few probably, who have not been quite so 'perfect' as the rest, recover so much of their Christian character as to be tolerable; others take up the business of religious imposture as a trade; and the greater part become avowed infidels. Some years since we watched the progress of a little sect of Perfectionists through all these stages, from its predisposing cause to its final termination. Several months since, we received a communication, on good authority, stating that some of the Perfectionists of this day had begun to practice their spiritual marriage very disreputably."

We subjoin a more extended article, written with considerable ability, by Rev. S. B. Yarrington, a Methodist clergyman residing in the interior of New-York. It was published in 1843. Mr. Yarrington brings to view some of the mental phenomena attendant upon the reception of Perfectionist doctrines. He directs the mind to a subject for contemplation worthy of special attention. This is an all-important point. We should cautiously guard against that morbid state of mind, and that unhealthful tone of moral feeling which tends to induce this dangerous disease. The entrance should be sedulously watched, for it is much easier keeping the enemy out than it is expelling him when he has once entered. Mr. Yarrington speaks briefly, though pertinently, of "the rise, progress, cause, tendency and cure of modern Perfectionism." He says:—

"This egregious error arose about twelve years since, at a time of almost unparalleled excitement in these States. under the labors of certain eccentric revivalists.
"The heresy spread rapidly for a time. The mass, however, being composed of heterogeneous materials, having little affinity, soon gave signs of disintegration, and the fire that burnt strong at first, presently smouldered away for want of sustenance. Still, the dying embers remain in society, scattered in every direction, and wherever they have fallen, to a certain extent burn and sterilize the moral soil, destroying the seed of truth that is sown therein. It is not probable that this error is on the advance at present, but rather, it is to be hoped, on the decline. Yet, like the wounded bear, it makes an effort to live, and to recover its energies that it may revenge itself on its assailants."

"The cause of this delusion may be traced to the effervescence of certain minds about 1880. As Venus is said to have arisen from the froth of the ocean, so this heresy was begotten in the fumes of fanaticism. As one extreme is attended by another, so the wild, unscriptural notion of necessary indwelling sin, by the collision of antagonist minds, gave place to the no less extravagant and anti-biblical idea of impeccability. An overweening self-esteem, doubtless, conduced somewhat to the production of such an opinion. Cultivating one class of faculties to the neglect of others, probably contributed to the same end. It is pernicious to mental improvement to become the 'creature of one idea.' The human mind has more than one faculty. In it many different powers inhere. These powers should be cultivated so as to balance each other, or equilibrate. The modern Perfectionist seems to have cultivated self-approbation and marvellousness, whilst he has barred the door to such intruders as comparison, causality and veneration; whereas the latter had most need of tuition. Intense, unabated study of divine subjects may have, more innocently, beguiled some unwary individuals into the arms of this Delilah. Man is so constituted that he cannot for a very long season, without interruption or relaxation, prosecute one train of thought without shattering somewhat the pillars of the intellectual edifice. No doubt many imbibe error by first blunting their mental powers in this way; and not a few, by the same course, conduct reason to certain and long, perhaps life-long, interment. Some well meaning persons have imagined that the height of piety consists, not in active labors for the salvation of souls, but in uninterrupted contemplations of religious themes. Let a person pursue this course one year, and his mind, however strong in the commencement, will have become somewhat imbecilicated. Probably some individuals of more than ordinary talent, have in this way neutralized their influence, and well nigh rendered themselves nuisances in community. Variety in things lawful and expedient is truly the spice and food of the mind.

"The tendency of Perfectionism is 'evil, only evil, and that continually'. The suicidal efforts of its advocates can but be injurious to the physical economy. As well might the volcano remain undiminished within at the time of its irruption, as such persons retain their health in the midst of such awful disembroguations. Never did a system of error have a more withering, scathing influence upon intellect, than does this, where it is allowed to have full scope, put forth all its energy, and stamp its own image on its votary. Indeed, it is an idiotic theory; and cannot be expected to gender aught but its like. The stream can rise no higher than the fountain. Like system, like advocate. Follow the lightnings in all their zig-zag through the sky, before attempting to trace the trackless flight of such an intellect! True religion can be no possibility be hostile to science and intellectual improvement. What-religion: To assume that man may not be deeply pious without impairing at least some of his faculties, is to present Christianity in a sorry attitude. On the contrary, it may be asserted, fearless of refutation, that there is nothing so well calculated to develop the native powers of mind as the Christian religion. What injury did Christianity inflict upon the sublime genius of a Milton, or the philosophic mind of a Newton? Men never surpassed, the former in the department of poetry, the latter in that of mathematics. No doubt religion was the intellectual food of these men. Milton was greatly indebted to his knowledge and love of the Bible for his unrivalled sublimity of thought and expression. Newton's reverence and love of Deity contributed much to the profundity and acumen of his gigantic mind. The absolute Perfectionist runs a meagre chance of rivalling these or any other great men in any department of science or literature, from the fact that in the outset of his career he lays suicidal hands upon the best faculties of his nature, and yields himself up to the control of powers that ought to operate in obedience to the guidance of their superiors. The moral tendency of this presumptuous notion is equally deleterious. As well, might the Sirocco enter Italy, or the Simoom rush upon a caravan in the desert without inflicting injury, as this system be other than a 'Bohon Upas' to the morals of any vicinity where it prevails. By it the 'fruitful field is converted into a wilderness', and the song of the nightingale into the croak of the raven. It sweeps by the board all the stated formal means of grace. Family religion is blighted with mildew. The breezes of the Sabbath sing the funeral dirge of Jehovah's day of rest, while the monster prepares a sepulchre for its entombment.

"Little hope can be indulged of restoring to a healthy state of mind the modern Perfectionist whose belief is of long standing. The reason is, no access can be had to those faculties which ought to be addressed, on account of their dormancy, if not extinction of functions. Where the reception of this error is of recent date, however, there is some prospect of producing a state of convalescence by making a loud appeal to these nobler powers, their languishing energies not having as yet become completely prostrated. The following directions may not, therefore, be altogether unavailing. Make an effort to reflect on a variety of subjects, rejecting none that are lawful and expedient. This is absolutely necessary to restore a sickly mind, and also to preserve it in that state. Monomania is a mental disease of alarming prevalence at the present time. It is produced by taking an opposite course from the one here advised. Be sociable with all, and converse as instructed to meditate, that is, on various topics, provided they are useful. Deeply ponder the depravity of the human heart, aside from grace; and consider the imbecility and folly even of the best of men compared with the potency and wisdom of the Infinite Unknown, and yet sufficiently known to the wise, in their judgment eternally to eclipse all created excellence. Feel like a mere point amid the splendors of the Great Adorable. In fine, pray to be made and to be kept humble. Remember, so far from being able to equal the Omnipresent here, no man or angel, though constantly increasing in knowledge and holiness, will ever approach so near to divine perfection, as not to find himself infinitely in the rear. Be humble, therefore, and be wise.”
CHAPTER XXVII.

Remarks of O. H. Platt, Esq.

The extracts given in the preceding chapter refer to Perfectionism, both at an early period, and also after it had existed several years, and had given some practical demonstrations of the direct tendency of its doctrines. At an early date its character was discerned and its tendency clearly seen by the intelligent and observing, and the sad consequences which it was evident would naturally follow its promulgation were anticipated and deeply deplored by the virtuous part of community. From the time of its commencement at New Haven in 1834, the tide of events took their natural course among Perfectionists, and at length assumed an alarming aspect.

Mr. Noyes, however, from time to time resorted to various expedients to screen himself and his followers from merited reprobation, and by repeated shufflings succeeded in keeping, to some extent, from public view the practical tendency and results of his pernicious principles. But they have at length fully come to light, and doubt no longer hangs over the subject.

But let us for a season leave the past and come down to matters of more recent date. We shall not, however, here enter into any minute detail of transactions which have taken place in Putney; but shall quote some general expressions of opinion relative to the posture of affairs after certain developments had been made.
Up to the time of the demonstration at Putney, in the autumn of 1847, the press in this section, both secular and religious, had passed the matter by as an insignificant and harmless affair, unworthy of notice and even undeserving of the notoriety which a public attack would give it. But affairs assumed such an aspect as to attract public notice not only in this section of the country, but elsewhere; and several public journals bestowed considerable attention upon them.

We shall give some extracts from several editorial articles published in the Vermont Phoenix, at Brattleboro'. Those articles received the approbation of the community, and were not only expressive of the views of the Editor of that paper, but will serve as a fair exhibition of the sentiments which universally prevailed and which still prevail in the community at large, at least so far as the facts in the case are known.

O. H. Platt, Esq., Editor of the Phoenix, in his paper of Nov. 24, 1847, holds the following language:—

"Since the last issue of the Phoenix, we have taken some pains to inform ourselves, as well of the present conduct and condition of the Society calling themselves 'Perfectionists,' in Putney, as of the tenets and doctrines they profess. We learn that though some of the individuals of this sect have dispersed, the Association itself is not broken up, nor their organ discontinued—but on the contrary, that the peculiar tenets which, with them, justify the conduct complained of, are still pertinaciously adhered to; that meetings are still held, and the community have a right to believe, though popular indignation may suppress for a the public exhibition of their conduct, they still continue to practice what they boldly preach and justify. . . . We confess to utter ignorance, until the last week, of the origin and history, as well as of the nature and tendency of the peculiar doctrines of this sect of 'Perfectionists.' With a desire to do impartial justice, and to be satisfied whether the ebullition of feeling manifested by the citizens of Putney, was justified as well by the published principles, as the actual practices of the 'Perfectionists,' we have taken some pains to procure their publications, and to examine them. . . . The acts complained of are not only the natural result of the doctrines they hold and teach, but actually constitute in themselves one of their published tenets. . . . The avowal of them, [their doctrines] though plain and positive, was so covered up by subtleties, by mystification, and confused explanation, and by bold denial of imputed licentious consequences and results, that the unwary and the unsuspicous might well be deceived. This consideration should inculcate feelings of charity towards those who seem innocently to have been misled, and drawn into the vortex of ruin. It has also determined us to give our readers who may be as ignorant on this subject as we have been, the history of this sect, and the proof which their published tenets afford, that in their domestic relations they are not only absolved from the observance of the moral law, but the constant infracion of it, is required as a necessary consequence of the state of perfection they lay claim to—in fine, that as to all sexual relations, they are strictly Antinomians.

"It is not within the province of this journal to discuss controversial points of religious doctrine, unless they tend directly to the infracion and subversion of the laws which uphold the fabric of society and government; and we shall therefore endeavor to keep within this limit. But when such monstrous doctrines as these are promulgated and practiced, and when there is such indubitable evidence as the history of this sect has furnished us, to prove that the young, the innocent and unsuspicious, are enticed to disgrace and ruin by them, and that systematic seduction and licentiousness are practiced under the specious garb of religion—or rather, made impiously a part of religion itself—it is time for the public press to expose the true character of its principles, and warn the young and credulous, at least, of the snares that are spread for them."

"The organ of this sect has been treated in general, by the religious and political press, with silent censure, as the weak and harmless effusion of a distempered brain; but it has nevertheless obtained a wide circulation, made converts, and secured for the sect a foothold in many parts of the country. Its pernicious principles, choked with artful disguises, have thus been suffered to infuse their poison far and near, unchecked by exposure and warning, and almost unnoticed. The names of contributors, subscribers, and converts, with their religious experience in the form of letters, appear conspicuously in the paper, and have accompanied it, as endorsers of the doctrines it inculcates. . . .

"The female converts seemed to take pleasure in blazoning abroad their shameless doctrines, under the authority of a multitude of Bible quotations, and the solemn mockery of obedience to the promptings of the Holy Spirit. We have given enough to show the avowed principles and practices of the 'Perrets,' at this early stage of their existence.
"These principles were industriously disseminated in all parts of the country, both by the gratuitous circulation of the paper, and the personal preaching of Mr. Noyes; and many societies formed. The idea of perfect holiness, of being in a state where it is impossible to sin, where salvation is secured beyond a peradventure, is no doubt alluring and sweet; and it is not wonderful that many persons, credulous and unreflecting, or tempest-tost and shipwrecked upon the waves of controverted points of religious doctrine, should fly for refuge to this infallible soul-preserver, in which every fear and every anxiety is banished forever, and all the passions hold a jubilee. It is a tempting bait to the anxious and inquiring mind; and, garnished as it is, with plausible passages of Scripture, requires but a little self-deception to make it palatable and safe. The utter licentiousness and wickedness to which this doctrine of Perfection leads, is glossed over and buried, by specious denials, and a multitude of words, which mean nothing. The new converts, unconscious perhaps at first, of the practical results of their religious belief, are led along, step by step, and their minds gradually prepared to swallow Perfectionism, with all its revolting abominations.

"If Mr. Noyes is charged with holding himself exempt from all obedience to law, he boldly denies it—he admits his independence of external law, but he will tell you he is guided by an internal law, the law of the Spirit, which is paramount to all others. If you charge him with licentiousness in his doctrines and practice, he will deny this also, and tell you, that though, in domestic relations and sexual intercourse, the Perfectionists disregard the civil and moral law, yet they are still acting under the 'law of the Spirit,' and therefore it is not licentiousness. In other words, they may sin freely, but unbridled vice and debauch ery, and may trample with impunity upon all the rules of morality and decency, and still it is right, because prompted by the 'law of the Spirit.'

"Many of the societies, that sprung up in other sections of the country, practiced the doctrines of the 'Battle-Axe' letter so openly as to bring down upon them the indignation of the community, and the penalties of the law. . . . In Putney under the immediate eye of Mr. Noyes, things were conducted more prudently; and while asserting, as he does in the 'Berean,' that believers 'are released from the law, without the danger of licentiousness,' he kept their practices secret for a time. . . . Not only is unbridled license given to the passions by this state of 'perfect holiness,' but the exercise of every natural affection is forbidden. Husband and wife, parent and child, brother and sister, must banish every feeling of affection, and regard each other as not of kin, and if they are all Perfectionists, have the same freedom of intercourse with each other, as with other members. In fine, the ordinary parental, matrimonial and blood relations are annihilated, and have no existence among the 'perfect'—they are all brothers and sisters, and husbands and wives together. Some of the female correspondents seem to take special delight in boasting of their contempt of natural affections. One of them, whose father attempted to reprove her abandoned conduct, says she 'stepped up and struck him in the face and said to him, he had got the biggest devil she had seen, and if he would believe she would cast him out.'

"We sicken with this disgusting and revolting exhibition of the very incarnation of beastly licentiousness community to his proceedings, Mr. Noyes induced the 'body of believers' in Putney to join their 'households under a common roof.' This was probably to facilitate the promiscuous intercourse enjoined upon believers— for, heretofore, though constantly urging upon them the duty and necessity of submitting to this free community of intercourse, he still stoutly denied the actual practice of it himself. But the impunity of his previous conduct at length determined him to throw aside the thin cloak of pretended decency he had heretofore maintained, and to practice openly, what he had constantly preached openly, and doubtless secretly practiced.

"On the first of June 1847—as related by him in the 'Spiritual Magazine' for July—at a meeting of his flock, he argues the question fully, and thus states it:

"'I will put the question, Is it not now the time for us to commence the testimony, that the Kingdom of God has come? to proclaim boldly that God, in His character of Deliverer, Lawgiver and Judge, has come in this town, and in this association?"

"After noticing the discussion to which it gave rise, he states the conclusion thus:

"'It was unanimously adopted, therefore, as the consistent testimony of the believers assembled, that the Kingdom of God has come.'

"This was nothing more than the public transfer of themselves, by resolution, to that state of 'perfect holiness' which sanctifies vice and profligacy as a religious duty. . . . It may seem strange that Mr. Noyes should deem it necessary to hold a meeting and put it to vote, whether the 'Kingdom of God' had come; but it is probable there were some refractory members—some who could not see how an act that was wicked and criminal on earth, could be holy and innocent in Heaven, and it might be necessary to bring a little public opinion to bear upon them. It is however, that after this public vote, the doctrine Perfection, in all its length and breadth, was carried into practice by the Association at Putney, publicly and professedly.

"It would seem, from his paper, that Mr. Noyes had occasionally some difficulty in breaking down barriers of virtue and decency; and considerable is devoted to the removal—by plausible sophists—threatened expulsion from Heaven—of such scruples and reluctance, and the complete over shame, modesty, and the worldly ideas of and chastity, is treated as a Christian duty, of a preliminary to the attainment of perfect holiness.

After having given numerous extracts from writings of Mr. Noyes, and from communications received from his correspondents, accompanied by appropriate comments, Mr. Platt concludes his able editorial, published in the Phoenix on Oct. 1848, and from which we have made several with the following appropriate and forcible remark.

"We forbear further extracts to show what doctrine and practice of the Perfectionists, in the moral law. We have been thus particular in making quotations, to show and convince especially those who, unaware of their tendencies inclined to espouse their principles, that demonstration at Putney is no well as their practice; to show, that they are utterly subversive of the whole fabric of society, and of moral and civil law; and annihilate, at a blow, every vestige of virtue, decency, and natural affection. These shocking consequences of the doctrine of Perfection are carefully concealed, however, from the young and unsuspicious converts. To them, nothing is revealed but the beauty of a state of 'perfect holiness'; of the bliss of believing, that though on Earth, they may actually enter Heaven, where it is impossible to sin, and where salvation is certain. Many, anxious for the future, and having no fixed ideas upon religious subjects, clutch eagerly at this doctrine of 'perfect holiness', as a drowning man catches straws; and shutting their eyes upon doubts and consequences, believe because they want to believe it. Others doubtless look upon Perfectionism with the eye of the libertine, and see in it only an easy and safe mode of deluding and destroying.

"We would hope there are many who have been deceived into the embrace of this pernicious doctrine, and yet kept in ignorance of its true character and tendency; and who, when informed of it, will hasten to escape from the fathomless abyss which yawns at their feet.

"Let it not be supposed that such impious ribaldry and weak sophistry can do no mischief, and does not require exposure and reprobation by the press. It has already penetrated, and found advocates and victims, in almost every county of New-England and New-York.
The newspaper organ has been mostly filled with letters from recent converts, scattered through the whole country; and it plainly shows that many of them are ignorant of the practical tendency of Perfectionism, and have been deceived. The paper has attained, by gratuitous distribution, a very considerable circulating-and the 'Berean,' containing matter quite as infamous, is meeting with a rapid and extensive sale. It was only in September last that two conventions of Perfectionists were held in the State of New-York—one at Lairdsville, and one at Genoa—and associations formed upon the model of that at Putney. The association at Putney has been the fountain of the poisonous stream of Perfectionism, wherever it flows; and though its founder and some of the members have been driven away by outraged public feeling, it still maintains its organization, and the remaining members still adhere to the doctrine of Perfection, as stated above. The paper, which has been the instrument of all this widespread mischief and ruin, is merely suspended in deference to public sentiment, not discontinued; and the whole machinery of the association is evidently waiting only for the excited public feeling to subside, to be again set in motion.

"Under these circumstances, we have felt it a duty devolving upon the public press, to strip the veil from this monster of iniquity—standing up in society like the fabled Upas tree in the desert, alluring the hapless wanderer by its luxuriant foliage and fragrant perfume, to seek repose under its shade, but dealing instant death to all who come within the influence of its poisoned atmosphere. We have thought it a duty to expose it to view, in all its naked hideousness, peradventure it may open the eyes of some, who have been enticed within its influence, and forewarn the unwary and innocent.

"If people have regarded this doctrine as harmless and contemptible, they will do so no more. The persevering and systematic attempts to entice the young and unsuspecting into their association—some it is to provide a prompt and efficient remedy. It is the duty of every citizen, who would not see the sacred family and domestic institutions broken down, to lend his voice and influence to extirpate this evil. It is to be hoped, that those now connected with it, will see its destructive tendency, and abandon it; but there should be, in regard to it, neither toleration nor compromise. The public should understand—what is in fact true—that every household, holding and practicing doctrines similar to this at Putney, is in fact a brothel. It should be marked and shunned as infamous. It should be known that each member of it holds to principles that justify theft, robbery, arson, and murder, and all other crimes his evil passions prompt; for he cannot sin, and his impulse is the only law he recognizes. After all efforts to reclaim them have failed, let every member of such association be followed, wherever he goes, by public infamy and public abhorrence, and marked and shunned as a public enemy.

"We have charity to believe, that many have embraced this doctrine honestly, and without any suspicion of its consequences or true character. All such will hasten to abandon and denounce it. It might be charitable to believe that the founder of this association is a monomaniac, on the subject of religion; and it may have been true in the beginning of his course; but a monomaniac is honest and truthful. His opinions may be absurd, and his reasoning ridiculous, yet he will never flinch from the position he takes, nor tell a wilful untruth to escape the odium of it. It is possible Mr. Noyes was honest in his letter to the 'Advocate of Moral Reform,' denying his own doctrines, as asserted and acted upon by him both before and afterwards. It is possible he was sincere in holding 'believers' to be in a state of 'perfect holiness,' and incapable of sinning, when he was constantlv denouncing as hypocrites, those believers, whose licentious conduct happened to become public. We say, it is possible, but is it probable? To us, there seems to be in his conduct a marvellous exhibition of scheming, insincerity, and libertinism, for a monomaniac.

"We dismiss the subject with a single remark. Many of the friends of the individual identified with this sect, are respectable and highly respected; and may consider themselves somewhat implicated in the exposure and reprobation of his conduct. It is not, however, the exposure nor the reprobation, but the profession and practice of his infamous doctrines which are truly disgraceful. These doctrines have been boldly avowed and promulgated by him, here, for ten years past, and scattered by means of his paper, all over the country; yet no efforts of friends or relatives have sufficed to suppress, either the publication or the practice of them. A paper so licentious and indecent—so seditious and immoral in its character, as this has been ever since its commencement, would not, even in the tainted atmosphere of the city, be tolerated for a single week. It would be indicted as a nuisance, before a second number could be issued, and suppressed by the strong arm of the law. That it has so long been endured by the respectable and intelligent inhabitants of Putney, is owing probably to the respectability of his family, and a reluctance to wound their feelings by any public proceedings. But to whatever cause it may be owing, that the dissemination of the infamous doctrines has been so long tolerated—whether from the disability or disinclination of friends, or the apathy or forbearance of the people—the welfare of society demands that these pernicious principles should be held up to public detestation and abhorrence.

"We shall make no apology for the length of this article. The subject is one that concerns the whole community, and if we have been remiss in bringing it to their notice, it is because we had no conception of the character or magnitude of the evil. In respect to it, we may truly say, 'the half has not been told;' but we trust enough has been said to put the public on their guard, here and elsewhere."
CHAPTER XXVIII.

Putney Perfectionism.

Below will be found the substance of an article which was published, under the above heading, in whole or in part, in several public journals, soon after the developments at Putney in the autumn of 1847. The article was prepared by the writer, and although it gives but a very succinct account of what had transpired, yet, as far as it goes, it is believed to be a correct statement of facts, and a fair representation of existing circumstances:

Events deeply interesting to the community have recently transpired in this place. Disclosures have been made, and facts elicited, which can but shock the sensibilities of every virtuous mind; and it is due to the public that they should be made acquainted with existing circumstances, and thus be guarded against further encroachments of errors most demoralizing in their influence, and destructive in their tendency.

A small sect or community of Perfectionists, so called, has had an existence in this town for several years past. They have been under the direction of John H. Noyes, who, to some extent, is known abroad, and who stands at the head of this modern sect. Mr. Noyes, for a number of years, has been industriously recently published a work entitled "The Berrian," which contains his views relative to various topics, and is for sale in different parts of the country. But it does not appear that his efforts to spread his heretical and dangerous doctrines have been crowned with any very signal success, though some small societies have been formed in different places.

Mr. Noyes has taken the strange and unwarrantable position, that the moral law is abolished, and that he and his followers are governed and guided by direct inspiration and revelation, as were the inspired Apostles. They claim to be the true church, and pretend that they have all the miraculous gifts of the apostolic age. They repudiate the Sabbath, reject all religious ordinances, deny the validity of the Christian ministry, sip at the intoxicating cup, and indulge in common amusements to any desirable extent. Some years since, Mr. Noyes made war upon the marriage institution, and advanced sentiments of a most licentious tendency, which he has never retracted, but has repeatedly re-affirmed. He contends that in a holy community, such as they claim to be, the marriage covenant is virtually null and void!

From recent developments, the civil authorities deemed it their duty to institute a legal process against Mr. Noyes, and he was accordingly arrested, and placed under heavy bonds for his appearance at the next term of the County Court, for Windham County; but has since absconded. From the facts which have come to light, it appears that he has committed crimes of the deepest dye—crimes of such a character that delicacy forbids that they should be mentioned. Under the seal of secrecy, and the assumed garb of sanctity, he has practiced the grossest iniquities; but his deeds of darkness have at length been revealed in open day—the strong arm of the law has reached him—and he has hastily fled from the face of justice to seek a shelter and find a lodging place in some secluded retreat.

For several months past, a number of families have resided together in a large dwelling in this village, with Mr. Noyes at their head. The recent disclosures have placed them before the public in no very enviable position; and the same odium is now attached to them that there is to a house of ill-fame. All who adhere to their doctrines and remain among them, are now looked upon by a virtuous community, as immoral characters; and no person who wishes to maintain a respectable standing in society, will hereafter be identified with them. The course which they have pursued for some time past, has been well calculated to deceive, seduce, and ruin the young and unsuspecting. Efforts have been made, and allurements held out, for the purpose of enticing the young, drawing them in, and sealing their certain ruin; and in some instances they have been successful. The domestic circle has been invaded, hearts have been broken, hopes blasted, and characters ruined.

Although the most flattering invitations were extended to several young ladies of this village and vicinity, yet it is a happy reflection that the victims of their guilt have not been very numerous; the spell is now broken, and some have escaped, like the bird from the snare of the fowler, or the fascination of the wily serpent. In this town they have heretofore numbered only about forty, and that number has, of late, been very materially diminished; some have withdrawn, others have left, and but a mere remnant now remains.

Mr. Noyes and his followers have made the highest pretensions to moral purity and spiritual attainments, and have boldly assumed that they could not sin; and have thus thrown the mantle of high professions over at hideous deformities, and practiced the grossest iniquities under the assumed garb of superior sanctity! Not only have individuals been ruined, and families irreparably injured, but they have exerted an influence as fatal to the morals of this community as the deadly miasma is to man's physical constitution. Under such a state of things, the people have become alarmed and incensed to a high degree, and have arisen en masse to correct the evil and ask for redress.

The disclosures already made have brought to light a degree of moral turpitude seldom surpassed by the most degraded and abandoned; and it can but be a painful reflection that they have assumed the name of Christians, and that too of the highest grade; thus claiming that to which they have no right, and casting a reproach upon the Christian religion, which condemns in the most unqualified terms, every species and degree of moral impurity. Noyesism is the veriest infidelity in its most dangerous form. If infidelity and irreligion would appear in their native dress, and sail under their own black colors, we should then know the character of the foe with which we had to contend; but when they fling to the breeze false colors and appear in a borrowed garb of superior goodness, they prove doubly dangerous, and often deceive and ruin the unwary and unsuspecting.
CHAPTER XXIX.

Assumed and acknowledged supremacy of Noyes—
His female co-workers at Putney—Remarks of Mrs. S. T. Martyn.

"There be, indeed,—I say it in all sorrow,—bad, apostate souls, Deserted of their ministering angels, and given up to liberty of sin:
—— For these, my counsel is, avoid them if thou canst;
For the fine edges of thy virtues will be dulled, by attrition with their vices."

Mr. Noyes has assumed the supremacy over all Perfectionists proper, throughout the country. His arrogant claims have been acceded to, on the part of his disciples, almost by universal consent; and his supremacy was publicly acknowledged by two Conventions of Perfectionists held in Central New-York, in 1837; the one at Lairdsville and the other at Genoa.

But particularly at Putney has his vanity been flattered, and his ambitious feelings gratified. For a number of years past he has been emphatically the "acknowledged head" of the Perfectionist Association in that place. And it appears that he has recently reached the very apex of ambitious desire. A few months after the dispersion in the fall of 1847, a prominent member of the Putney Community said—
"Those who stand by John now have given him every thing"!  If his followers have made a full surrender, Mr. N.'s ambition must be saturated. Moreover, he has had quite a number of special agents employed in his service in different places, but especially in Putney, who have lent their entire aid, who have exerted all their influence, and made every possible effort for the furtherance of his nefarious schemes, and the accomplishment of his unhallowed designs.

The company of co-workers in Putney included several females of considerable talent, and formerly of some influence among the people of Putney. They were liberal contributors to the periodical published by Noyes, and were very fit instruments, and rendered efficient aid, in carrying out his base purposes. The persons particularly alluded to, together with other members of the Association, were using their influence and making special efforts to draw innocent and unsuspecting females into the vortex of ruin, at the time the startling disclosures were made in the autumn of 1847. In some instances they were successful, but in others they failed. The active efforts of those special agents at home, and the exertions of certain runners abroad, together with the paper, which, with a liberal hand, was scattered through the length and breadth of the land, contributed largely to the great object which Mr. Noyes had in view. These agencies all combined, were exerting considerable influence. And at the time of the great eruption in Putney, followed by the breaking up of that strong hold of iniquity, the "kingdom" established by Noyes, but undoubtedly under the special supervision of his Satanic Majesty, great exertions were being made to gather the outcasts in; and the forcible saying of the Savior was being strikingly exemplified, "Wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together."

Below will be found the substance of an article from the pen of an intelligent female,* who saw with deep regret, that even some of the most talented of her sex were lending their aid to the growing evils of the age, especially that of licentiousness. This excellent lady, in common with many others, has interposed her influence to impede, if not arrest, the progress of that tide of sensuality which is setting in with a strong current upon the land, and which, if not turned back, will, it is to be feared, roll on with accumulated strength and accelerated velocity, and ere long acquire a momentum, against which all efforts would be unavailing; which would carry away, as with a flood, all opposing influences, and fearfully sweep, like a desolating tornado, over the land, spreading devastation around on every hand, and making a moral waste of many of the fairest portions of our happy country, and working the temporal and eternal ruin of thousands and millions of our race.

The remarks which we are about to give will apply with much propriety to various classes in different parts of the land, but they are peculiarly applicable to the Perfectionists, and especially to the most prominent and active female members of the Association at
Among the various phases assumed by the infidel philosophy, which preceded and accompanied the outbreak of the French revolution, in 1798, there was one, which, more than all the rest, tended to destroy the last vestige of social order and happiness during that fearful period. The same unhallowed lips that denied the existence of a God, and proclaimed 'death and eternal sleep,' taught also, that marriage was an intolerable monopoly,—a burden which none but the vulgar should bear, and that a 'union of souls,' was the only union to be recognized by the enlightened disciples of the new code. This doctrine was openly promulgated in the splendid saloon of Paris, by the fashionable and high-born dames who worshipped at the shrine of Voltaire, Condorcet and Mirabeau; it was echoed by the fierce spouters of the Jacobin clubs, and re-echoed in the faubourgs, the garrets and the cellars of the metropolis, where crime and misery rejoiced in the prospects of unbounded license thus opening before them. To the scenes that followed, we need only refer. The annals of the French revolution,—its unimaginable horrors and atrocities,—have been so long familiar to the ear, that we may well be spared the revolting task of dwelling upon them here. It is enough to say, that the tree thus blended, bore its legitimate fruit; and that beneath its poisonous shade, every thing honorable, lovely and of good report, perished, until the land became a moral desert, almost through the length and breadth of it.

The same sentiments with regard to obligation of law, human and divine, and particularly in relation to the sanctity of the marriage covenant, as those which prepared the way for the scenes to which we have alluded in France, are at the present moment prevailing to an alarming extent in our country. They come different aspect, it is true; but their character and tendency are always the same. Instead of furnishing the material for a flowery discussion between male and female philosophers in a splendid saloon, or a Jacobin club, these principles, in some quiet and unsuspecting guise, enter our domestic circles, seat themselves at our firesides, and wait patiently for the best opportunity of gaining a foothold which shall never again be surrendered. Their apostles may be known by the cant words forever on their lips, of 'spiritual attraction,' 'secret sympathy,' 'affinity of souls,' &c.—words which sound very sweetly to the uninitiated, but full of deep and bitter meaning to those who know their hidden signification. For when explained, as they too often are by acts, these seemingly harmless syllabbles signify domestic discord and disunion, followed perhaps, by actual separation, misery and death. It is generally (we blush to admit it) by our own sex, that the pernicious doctrines to which we allude are most ably and fearlessly advocated. We know women, whose personal accomplishments, and standing in sociey, give weight to their opinions, and who do not hesitate to affirm, that 'affinity of soul' forms the only real bond of union between the husband and the wife, and that where, in the judgment of either, this does not exist, the legal ceremony of marriage is null and void, to all intents and purposes. Of course, the parties thus situated are at liberty to form a 'union of souls' wherever they find the mysterious 'affinity' of which they speak; and no law, human or divine, has a right to contravene their choice.

"As there are certain falsehoods of such intense bitterness and potency, that one drop would be sufficient to poison the whole well in which truth was said to have dwelt, so there is in this 'deception of sentients,' enough specious error, mingled with some important truth, to disorganize and destroy society, wherever it is adopted. It is undoubtedly true, that a union of hearts is absolutely necessary to marriage in the sight of God; but it does not therefore follow that a public recognition of this union by others, is unimportant; or that the legal ceremony which ensures this recognition, is unnecessary. Still less does it follow, that a union thus legally recognized, may be dissolved at the will or caprice of either of the parties, without incurring fearful guilt, and the reprobation of society. We know that some who have wantonly cast off all domestic ties, and thus bid defiance to the laws of God and man, talk eloquently of their sufferings and wrongs, of the want of sympathy they have experienced, and the thirsting of heart they feel for 'spiritual union and affinity;' but under all this gloss of honied words, there is concealed a principle which aims at nothing less than the subversion of all existing institutions, and the entire banishment of God from the world He created, and the hearts of the creatures who were formed by his power, and sustained by his goodness. It is this union of the ideal with the sensual, (for disguise it as they may, it is sensually in its most dangerous form with which we are contending,) that gave to the philosophy of France its deadly venom—and it gives strength and vigor to the same sentiments in our own day. Divested of the mantle of ideality, which so gracefully drapes it, the gross deformity of this imaginary deity would at once shock and disgust every beholder, while beneath its ample folds it is doing its work of death unperceived and almost unsuspected....

"There are too many educated, intelligent women, who do not hesitate, whenever they meet a 'kindred spirit,' to repay the most generous confidence and hospitality, by a systematic attempt to appropriate the affections of the husband and the father. While themselves gloriing in having spurned the matrimonial yoke, they inculcate in other families the most blind and unquestioning obedience on the part of the wife, and the right of the husband to do as he will in all respects, unfettered by even the shadow of duty or obligation toward the being whose earthly happiness has been confided to his care. Such is the egregious inconsistency of these victims of a moral leprosy, ininitely more loathsome than that which banished the poor Israelite from the society of his fellows, and consigned him to a living tomb. It would be well for society were laws equally stringent now, where the danger of infection is as much more imminent, as our moral nature is higher and of more value than the body, or wounds inflicted on the heart more grievous than physical pain and suffering.

"Our remarks on this subject may be deemed harsh by those who have not met the evil of which we speak; but the case is not one which in our estimation demands forbearance or toleration. It is not an impulse of the heart which has led its subjects into unintentional error, which we are condemning—but a belief of the head—a perversion of intellect, deliberately conceived, and carried out to its consequences, as coolly as though no earthly interests were involved in the result.
Indeed, in many cases it would be impossible, in the utmost exercise of charity, to believe that the affections of the heart had any thing to do with the matter. The thief who steals to satisfy the cravings of want, or the homicide who takes the life of his fellow under the sudden impulse of passion, may be subjects of pity and forgiveness; but the woman who unblushingly avows her disregard of all law, human and divine—who corns the restraints of marriage, and casts off its ligations, has, by this act, thrown herself out of the pale of society; and the sentence of outlawry it passes upon her, should be as complete and effectual as that which separated Robin Hood and his band of 'merry men' in Sherwood Forest, from the yeomanry of England.

"We have not yet spoken of the source of all this moral evil—the hidden spring from which these streams of bitterness flow out to desolate and destroy. It may emphatically be said of the class to which we allude, 'There is no fear of God before their eyes.' Never, until the sanctions of religion are forgotten or disregarded, and the Bible trampled under foot, can a woman so far unsex herself as to promulgate a doctrine which, more than all others, degrades and debases her, and leaves her a defenceless prey to the passions and caprices of the stronger sex. The want of religious principle is at the foundation of all these errors in belief and practice—and where this is wanting, the human heart is like a ship at sea, without helm or rudder, tossed about by the whirlwinds of passion, and liable at every moment to be driven on the rocks, and wrecked irretrievably. The humble cottager, who who reverences and obeys its precepts, and looks upward for divine guidance, lives usefully and happily, and goes down to the grave in full hope of a blessed immortality—while the woman of splendid intellect and varied acquirements, who proudly rejects the light from Heaven that would direct her steps, wanders from the path of rectitude into the mazes of error, and after a few years of eager and fruitless search after the phantom happiness, she sinks like a falling star into the blackness of darkness forever."

The foregoing extracts speak a strong and impressive language; they faithfully portray in characters of living light the enormous sin of licentiousness; and should serve as a timely warning, especially to the youth, against the dangers to which they are exposed, and the seductive influences which are abroad in the land, under various guises. The evil is the same, however specious the garb in which it may be arrayed, or imposing the aspect which it assumes. The sentiments which we have quoted bear directly against the Perfectionists, and press heavily upon Mr. Noyes and his followers; but we are well aware that Mr. N. will strive to evade the force of the concluding remarks of Mrs. Martyn, by asserting that Perfectionists do not reject the Bible, and are not destitute of religious principle; but possess every virtue in the highest possible degree. O, shame! where is thy blush! And modesty, where hast thou fled!

Mr. N. assumes that he and his followers have advanced far beyond the Bible—they reject it as a true standard, and treat it as a dead letter! Mr. N. impiously and presumptuously affirms that he is living under a new dispensation, and is constantly receiving fresh communications and revelations from Heaven!

It makes but little difference whether a person rejects the Bible in toto, or, professing to believe it, virtually nullifies it, by discarding it as an infallible standard—whether he does not come up to it, or whether he goes professedly beyond it—whether he virtually done! Infidelity lies at the bottom in the one case as well as the other.

Does Mr. Noyes expect that such miserable subterfuges as he has got up and is laboring to palm off upon the people as religious verities, will obtain credence and currency, to any considerable extent, in an intelligent community? It is true that occasionally a renegade from all respectable society falls into his ranks—and from what motives they do it at this late day, the reader is left to judge. If Mr. N. is really anticipating any formidable accessions to the company under his control, he certainly cannot place a very high estimate upon the intelligence of the community, or at least a considerable portion of them. He must suppose that they are yet in their leading strings—that they have not arrived at their teens—that they are even in their veriest dotage.

Common sense people with no extraordinary degree of discernment, can clearly see through the gauzy garb which Mr. N. has thrown over this monster of iniquity. Reason with even half an eye could readily penetrate the flimsy veil which has been somewhat dexterously drawn over the most hideous deformities.
CHAPTER XXX.

Latitudinarianism — Effects of Licentiousness.

One of the errors of the present age is a prevailing disposition to theorize in relation to religious matters. A great diversity of views and conflicting sentiments, and the consequent multiplication of erroneous systems, is a prolific source of evil. Indifference to practical piety prevails to an alarming extent, and the tide of infidelity is setting in. The endless speculations indulged, and the frequent discussion of theological questions, tends to mar, in the eye of the spectator, the just proportions and beautiful symmetry of the fabric of Christianity. The restless elements unsettle the faith of some, and threaten to carry away the ancient landmarks of religion. Noyesism is but one of the offspring of a parent evil whose numerous progeny are coming up, like the plagues of Egypt, to afflict and desolate the land. Much sickly sentiment exists, and many are becoming perfect latitudinarians in relation to all religious matters.

A morbid appetite which loathes the plain, simple, substantial food of gospel truth, and craves the crude and indigestible mass of errors which are afloat in the world, has for many years been making advances upon the public mind, and has never, it is believed, prevailed to a greater extent than at the present period. This spirit not only prevails to an alarming extent without, but to some extent within, the pale of the Church.
There always will be a few restless spirits who spurn wholesome restraints and cry out against all rules and regulations as oppressive. These characters may be termed religious croakers, and are near akin, at least in spirit, to downright latitudinarians, though making exceedingly high professions of piety at first. A few scathing remarks from the burning eloquence of Rev. E. T. Taylor, the mariner's preacher who ministers at the Bethel in Boston, shows up these croakers in their true light:—

"They are religious overmuch," says he; "they eat religiously, and breathe religiously, and walk religiously, and dress religiously, and comb down every hair religiously. With such I have no connexion. There is a great gulf between us. I have been watching them for thirty years. They soon begin to fall out with the world; fall out with their brethren; fall out with the church; and become too holy to remain in it; and finally quarrel with Almighty God himself; and then turn rank infidels, walking pestilences, scattering mildew and death over society, staggering to their graves under the curse of God, and cursing God as they go!"

These 'ever restless and troublesome spirits, are, from time to time, calling loudly for deserters, and by continually beating up for volunteer recruits, have at length succeeded in mustering quite a company of Come-outers, who have renounced, and are now, for want of better employment and in perfect keeping with their peculiar calling, loudly denouncing the Church in no measured terms.
fectionists are a fractional part, have in a most reckless spirit, thrown the rein loosely upon the neck of the fiery and furious steed of uncontrolled passion and unholy ambition, and are heedlessly hurrying hoodwinked, onward toward the vortex of ruin.

We shall make no apology for transferring to our pages from the Christian Observatory, some very truthful and well-timed remarks upon the subject under consideration. These remarks are entitled to an attentive perusal:

"There is a foolish notion stealing abroad, and creeping into small and unoccupied heads, that Christianity is about to present itself in an entirely new aspect, so broad as to have no outside, so comprehensive as to include every thing but sound scriptural orthodoxy, so liberal as to give away all the Gospel which is worth keeping, so 'spiritual' as to contain nothing more substantial than metaphysical fog, and 'the stuff that dreams are made of,' so 'transcendental' as to get far beyond the bounds of common sense and dull reality, and so progressive that it will go to Beelzebub without troubling him to come after it. It is thought by many that some new exposition of religion is to be made, which is to serve as a solvent for all sorts of opinions, to regenerate society as by some magic spell, and to usher in the light of the millennium as it were by the combustion in the old candlestick of some newly invented gas. In some way or other, instruction is to be drawn from the teachings of Christ, which they have never imparted before.

"It is an insult to the Bible to cherish any such prayerfully studying for two thousand years, without discovering its most important meaning. In bringing about this impossible expectation, much account is to be made of the philosophy of religion, whereby men will be able to philosophize the Assembly's Catechism so that they can at the same time subscribe it and ridicule it, with perfect consistency. It is from this propensity to tamper with and tinker the philosophy of religion, or to fit it up and rig it in some new philosophy, that all the depravings and corruptions of the Gospel from the days of the Apostles have originated. The dark ages were caused by the thick clouds of speculation and moral invention, which clouded Christendom in gloom, and hid her radiant Sun.

"It is also necessary, in order to clear the way for this style and fashion of Christianity, to explode every 'form of sound words,' and to cry up a crazy crusade against creeds and dogmas. A great clamor must be raised about creed-bondage. And the panic-stricken fugitives fleeing from this bug-bear, are ready to rush into a triple bondage of doubt, delusion and distress.

"To have clear views, and settled convictions, and fixed principles, involves no sacrifice of independence. He who is overcome by the force of truth, is not brought into bondage thereto; but has for his own share, all the fruits of this victory over himself. As was said by the valiant Puritan, Thomas Hooker, of Hartford, it is the honor of a man truly wise, to be conquered by the truth; and he hath attained the greatest liberty, that suffers himself to be led captive thereby. But our modern seekers after progress, account it a species of slavery, if a man have attained to decision of character, and to indulge in the luxury of moral certainty on any point whatever.

"Hence they find it necessary for their purpose to which used to be proverbially ‘a jewel,’ has no beauty in their eyes. They regard it as a gilded chain, fettering the free motions of the mind, and vexatiously restraining the ‘largest liberty’ of thought. They are for obeying the impulse of the hour, and the inspiration of the moment; and look upon it as a piece of impertinence if you expect to find them of some certain way of thinking to-day, because they professed it eloquently, poetically, and with a fine scorn of all opposers, yesterday or the day before.

"But the worst of it is, that this passion for theological progress cannot be vented without perilously tampering with the Bible. It is in vain to think of educing any new Christianity out of the whole Bible as it is. The plenary inspiration of the Holy Scriptures must be denied at the outset; for it were an intolerable grievance to the freeborn ‘oversoul,’ to be obliged to bow implicitly to the dictates even of Infinite Wisdom and Eternal Truth. There is no such thing as is now in demand, if we must listen to the canonical books as the utterance of the infallible Arbiter of all truth, righteousness and goodness. Accordingly it is proposed, that we regard the Bible as inspired only in part, and that it be left to our ingenuity to discriminate as well as we can between ‘the divine and the human in the sacred records.’ Take away from revealed religion as much as need be of its supernatural and authoritative character, and then you may invent as many patent Christianities as you please.

"It is not considered at what a ruinous price we must purchase this rare privilege of going to destruction, each in his own way. All the external evidences of Christianity must be cast aside; for if these do not prove the inspiration of the whole Bible they prove nothing. These evidences go to substantiate the claims of the entire book to an inspired origin; and hence our men of the movement party undervalue them, and treat them as of no account. The fulfilled prophecies they regard as random hits, or the forecastings of political sagacity. The miracles they either utterly deny, or ascribe them to the use of natural means. As to this, we shall be more ready to believe them when we see them able to repeat any one of the mighty works of the Savior. Let them walk upon the sea, heal the lepers, give sight to the blind, or raise the dead. There is no lack of opportunity. And if any one of them will do any one of these things after our Savior's manner of doing them, we will consent that the successful operator shall prepare an improved edition of the Bible, with the text corrected according to his judgment, the divine part stamped with golden capitals, and the human part printed in the humblest minion and brevier, or, better still, wholly omitted. But till some messenger comes from God, commissioned as evidently by signs and seals from heaven, as were the Prophets and Apostles who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, we must adjure the new-theology men to keep their profane hands from that scripture which is 'all given by inspiration of God.' Till the same authority which enacted the Bible shall repeal it, in whole or in part, we must submit to it in its full force and power.'

Mr. Noyes, it has been seen, has set himself up as a worker of miracles, thus following in the wake of all the impostors which have gone before, and exhibiting to the world another sad spectacle of human folly.

We think it proper here to present a few general, but very pertinent remarks, in reference to the sin of have already alluded—which was presented by the citizens of Boston, public prints by a special Committee, and a large body of the clergymen of different denominations in that city. As this great evil is the same in its nature, its tendency, its results, whatever aspect it may assume, whatever guise it may present itself to, Mr. Noyes and his followers have been abettors, and promoters of this alarming evil in a very singular way, and a peculiar and strange way they naturally come under the general head, as is but one species of a genus whose progeny is quite too numerous. It is a hideous monster, dressed in the richest drapery, decked with the nicest embroidery, and the whole trimmed with the finest phrases. The remarks which were originally addressed to the citizens of Boston are in such a general character that they possess a mere local interest, and are equally applicable to all latitudes:

"It [licentiousness] is a sin which must be devised some means of restraining and extinguishing;—a sin against God, against the law, and against a man's own body, debasing and destructive sin in which the character, impairs self-respect, principles, shuts out piety from the soul, religion a pretence, and faith a name stronger than facts.
civilized or barbarous lands, in Christian or in heathen countries, shall we find such a wreck of humanity, such a perversion of all that is noble or lovely, such an example of the debasement to which our nature may be reduced, as in a woman who has given herself up to a life of guilty pleasure? And who merits the condemnation of his fellows, or may be regarded by them with loathing, if it be not the man who has destroyed female innocence, or helped to quench the lingering reproaches of female virtue? There is but one more heinous crime than that which she commits who sells herself to pollution, and that is his who sacrifices woman to his own base passion.

"Look at the consequences of this vice. Take the lowest point of view. Consider its economical relations. We dare not tell you what sums are lavished upon the support of establishments whose inmates are themselves led, while they lead others, to destruction. We might remind you of the temptations to fraud and theft, which many of those who have little money of their own to spend upon their vices, have found themselves unable to resist. We might cite examples of open disgrace, of beggary and misery, arising from this cause; but we will only hint at these things.

"Look at the effect on health. Physicians tell us, that illicit indulgence is the cause of a large amount of the diseases which come within their practice. The physiologist instructs us, that such indulgence must impair the constitution, and lay the foundation of lifelong suffering or premature death.

"Look at the moral connections of this vice. Beyond any other, it depraves the whole man, enslaves the reason, pollutes the imagination, deadens the conscience, hardens the heart, tramples upon the affections and rights of domestic life, and makes the soul a moral pest-house. Beyond any other, it inflames every low desire, adds vehemence to every animal appetite, and brings whatever is spiritual and immortal in man to subjection to that which is carnal. It is even worse, far more injurious in its effects upon the character, than intemperance. The drunkard will have his seasons of abstinence, and his hours of repentance: the man of dissolute habits is a continual sinner, without shame and without remorse.

"Look at its influence on the community in which licentiousness is suffered to exist without rebuke. The standard of character is lowered; the sanctity of home is less carefully cherished; the tone of sentiment imperceptibly, but steadily declines; and, when few perhaps understand, or can trace the cause, a general deterioration of morals takes place. The poison has insinuated itself through the life of the community, whose whole appearance indicates a secret malady.

"Look at the effect on Christian character and Christian institutions. The latter may obtain an outward respect, but the former can only exist in a name, among those who are the servants of uncleanness. We might with as much propriety talk of a profane, or a dishonest, as of a licentious Christian; with as little misapplication of language speak of Christian forgery, as of Christian profligacy. Sensuality and spirituality are as opposite as darkness and light; they can meet in the same person, only when heaven and hell can meet in the same experience.

"Consider, finally, the consequences which in a future life must follow the indulgence of lewd desires and the enjoyment of infamous pleasures, here. The soul stained and branded with its vices, goes into eternity. to a God whose authority it has despised.
not avert? From that fate must we not desire to save those who share with us the gift of immortality?

“Fellow Christians! our Lord and Savior came to seek and to save that which was lost—to redeem them who were ready to perish, from the evil of their ways—to bear the quickening and renewing influences of divine truth to souls that were buried in sin. Have we not a duty to perform as his followers? Is not the ministration of his gospel committed to our hands? If we have experienced the salvation that is through him, and have ‘tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come,’ do we not owe it to those who are held in the captivity of their own lusts, heirs of corruption and strangers to the promise, to exert ourselves for their deliverance, that if possible, we may bring them to God, through him who is ‘the way, the truth, and the life?’ Do we not owe it to those who are beset by temptations with which they are unable to cope, to assist them in their great peril, or to diminish, if we may, the hazards of their condition? Do we not owe it to the community in which we live, at least to inquire whether we may not do something to limit the ravages of the most fearful evil that can fasten itself upon the moral life of a people?

“Friends and fellow Christians! we appeal alike to your conviction of duty, and to your sense of personal interest. We appeal to your reverence for the Bible, and remind you of the plainness and severity of the language which is there used respecting those who ‘fulfil the lust of the flesh.’ Is a vice denounced in such unequivocal terms in the Holy Scriptures, one on which Christian sensibility or Christian delicacy may not even utter a word? We appeal to your faith in the religion of Christ, whose name you bear. We entreat you to remember not only his condemnation of every impure desire, but his rebuke of those who, having much committed to them, yet, through negligence or timidity, are unfaithful to their opportunities of usefulness. We beseech you to bear in mind his example, and the encouragement he has given to those who shall follow him in the regeneration of the world."
CHAPTER XXXI.

DOCTRINES OF THE PERFECTIONISTS.

Perfectionist Creed—Theses of the Second Reformation.

Having disposed, in the main, of the historical part of Noyesism, we now proceed, in pursuance of our plan, to notice some of its leading doctrines. We shall in the first place give the Perfectionist Creed, at least so far as it has been presented to the public in a tangible form.

In the Witness of Aug. 20, 1837, we find the following:

"What we believe."

1. "We believe, that God is the only rightful interpreter of the Bible, and teacher of theological truth,—hence,

2. We believe, that no doctrine can become an article of true faith, which is not recognized by the believer as an immediate revelation to him from God,—yet,

3. We believe, that God, "who worketh all in all," can and does teach his own truth, through his written word and through the testimony of his sons,—therefore,

4. We believe it is proper, that we should state, as witnesses for God, the fundamental articles of our own faith.

5. We believe "there is none good but one, that is God,"—that all the righteousness in the universe is God's righteousness.

6. We believe, that God's righteousness may be revealed in his creatures, as a man's spirit is revealed in the motions of his body.

7. We believe, that "the works of the flesh, [i. e. human nature,] are adultery, uncleanness, envyings, strife, and such like" only.

8. We believe, that all attempts to produce better results from human nature, by instruction and legal discipline, only increase the evil,—inasmuch as they refine and disguise, without removing it.

9. We believe, that the Son of God was manifested in human nature for the purpose of destroying, (not reforming,) the works of the flesh, and revealing the righteousness of God.

10. We believe, that the righteousness of God was never revealed in human nature, till the birth of Jesus Christ.

11. We believe, that the object of all God's dealings with the human race before the birth of Christ, was, not to promote the righteousness of the flesh, i. e. self-righteousness, i. e. the perfection of sin; but to prepare the way for the manifestation of his own righteousness through Jesus Christ,—hence,

12. We believe that the righteousness of the saints, under the law before Christ, was only "a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things," bearing a relation to the true righteousness of God, like that of a type to its anti-type.

13. We believe, that the servants of God under the law, by submission to the discipline of the dispensation in which they lived, were prepared for, and became heirs of the righteousness of God, afterward revealed by Jesus Christ.

14. We believe, that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself,"—that the union of human and divine in him, made the righteousness of God accessible to all men.
15. We believe, that Christ is properly called the second Adam, and as the human race in spirit is one body, that he became, by his incarnation, "the light that lighteth every man."

16. We believe, that all who are apprized by the gospel of the fact, that the Son of God has come, are thereby called to choose whether they will hold the fallen or the risen Adam as their head.

17. We believe, that faith alone receives, and unbelief alone rejects, the blessings given to men by the second Adam,—by faith men awake to a perception of the truth as it is in Christ,—unbelief is the devil's dream.

18. We believe, that Christ, as he is in his resurrection and glory, is given to every member of the human race.

19. We believe, that all the faith, righteousness, liberty and glory of the risen Son of God, are given to every man.

20. We believe, that Christ in his incarnation was "made under the law," and that the Christian dispensation did not commence, in any sense, until he ascended up on high.

21. We believe, that none are Christians, in any sense, till they receive Christ in his resurrection,—hence,

22. We believe, that the disciples of Christ, during his personal ministry in the flesh, were not Christians.

23. We believe, that Christ in the resurrection is free from sin, from the law, from all ordinances, and from death; hence all who are subject to any of these, are not properly called Christians, as not having attained the hope of their calling.

24. We believe, that the history which the Bible contains of the Church, after Christ's ascension, com-of the latter-day glory of Judaism, than of the commencement of Christianity.

25. We believe, that the apostles and primitive believers, so far as they were subject to sin, law, and death, were Jews and not Christians.

26. We believe, that Christ plainly and repeatedly promised to his disciples, that he would come to them a second time and complete their salvation within the life-time of some of his immediate followers.

27. We believe, that the primitive church, living in the transition period, from the first to the second coming of Christ, were more or less partakers of the resurrection, holiness, liberty, and glory of Christ according to their faith.

28. We believe, that at the destruction of Jerusalem, the end of the Jewish dispensation, Christ came to believers the second time, according to his promise.

29. We believe, that at the period of the second coming of Christ, Christianity, or the kingdom of heaven, properly began.

30. We believe, that this was the period of the full development of the New Covenant, (Heb. viii.) which secures to believers perfect and eternal salvation from sin, full freedom from written law and human instruction.

31. We believe, that the whole body of Christ, i.e. the church, attained the perfect resurrection of the spiritual body at his second coming.

32. We believe, that Antichrist, at the same period, attained the perfect resurrection of damnation.

33. We believe, that this was the period of the fect redemption from the law and legal instruction—a perfect resurrection of the spiritual body, and a standing on the plain of eternity beyond the judgment."

Below will be found a few remarks made by Abner Kneeland relative to the above creed. Perhaps we owe an apology to the reader for here introducing the name of Kneeland, the great champion of modern infidelity. We would simply say, that we were induced so to do from the consideration that his remarks would serve a very important purpose. They show conclusively that avowed infidels consider the practical results of the principles held by Perfectionists as identical with their own, at least, as it respects religious worship, both tending directly to do it entirely away.

The remarks above alluded to were published in connection with the Perfectionist creed by Mr. Kneeland in his infidel organ, the Boston Investigator, of July 24, 1885, and are as follows:

"We have published this week the creed of the 'Perfectionists,' as they modestly call themselves, merely to let our readers know what a confused mess of meaningless and ridiculous nonsense religious people can adopt as sublime mysteries. This is a mystery a thousand times more mystified than any thing in the Bible; and if it be revelation, taken as a whole, it is a revealed mess of hodge-podge. We like this creed on one account, because, as no one can tell what it means, there is no risk in either believing or disbelieving it; and as it is intended to do away, and in fact does do away, all necessity of worship, or religious teaching of any kind, all being taught immediately from the pure fountain, and all know that they are right, however much they differ from each other, it comes, practically at least, if not in principle, exactly to our views. Our only fears are, that they will know so much, and so perfectly, about religion, there will not be much room for knowledge of any other kind. If they will be only satisfied with what is revealed, so as to be perfectly contented and unconcerned about it, giving themselves time and opportunity to attend to every thing else that is useful for the time being, there will be practically no manner of difference so far as regards all religious mummeries, between the believers in this creed and those who have no creed at all—between the consummation and perfection of all religion and no religion. The only difference will be, the Perfectionists will be unavoidably superstitious, while those who make no pretensions to religious faith, are mere rationalists."

We protest against the apparent coupling of the Perfectionist creed with the doctrines of evangelical denominations, which appears in the above language. Aside from this, the remarks of Mr. Kneeland contain more truth than fiction—he makes many just allusions and gives the Perfectionists several happy hits. One important fact, worthy of special attention, stands out very prominently to view, viz., that the doctrines of Kneeland and Noyes tend directly to the same point—that Perfectionism and the rankest infidelity practically, if not in principle, coincide "exactly"—both aiming a deadly blow, though in a different way, at the very vitals of true religion.

It is not at all strange that Abner Kneeland liked the Perfectionist creed in some respects, seeing there between the perfection and consummation of that kind of religion and no religion at all!

Of the two, Kneeland occupied the more honorable position. He and his adherents had the boldness to openly avow their sentiments—take a position antagonistical to all religion, and bide the consequences; while Noyes and his company, like a piratical crew or a set of cowardly miscreants, have been sailing under false colors. The one has worn its own true attire and fully exhibited its native deformity, while the other has appeared in disguise and concealed its disgusting features.

Theses of the Second Reformation.

To give a more extended view of the doctrines of Noyesism, we quote the following sentiments published under the above heading, in the Perfectionist of Feb. 22, 1845.

1. God is a dual being, consisting of the Father and the Word; and man, as male and female, is his image and likeness.

2. By the Word, 'all things were made that were made, viz., heaven and earth, and all the 'principalities, thrones and dominions' that belong to them.

3. All things that God made were 'very good,' and evil never originated by his act or in his works or with his consent.

4. 'The old serpent called the Devil and Satan' was a 'sinner from the beginning,' and is the uncreated source of all evil as God is the uncreated source of all good.

5. This evil being was permitted to seduce Adam and Eve into sin, and thus to incorporate into himself spiritually the parent stock of the whole human family.
6. One consequence of this event has been that the whole posterity of Adam and Eve have been born in spiritual captivity to the author of sin and death.

7. Another consequence has been that Satan, availing himself of the reproductive powers of human nature, has intermixed his own proper seed with the posterity of Adam.

8. The depravity of mankind is therefore of two sorts. The 'seed of the woman' are depraved by spiritual incorporation with Satan; while the 'seed of the serpent' are depraved by vital identity with him.

9. Both of these classes are involved in a ruin that would have been eternal, had not a system of redemption been instituted.

10. The depravity of the latter class is such that they will never avail themselves of the offer of redemption, and of course their ruin be eternal.

11. The former class being less radically depraved, will hear the voice of mercy and attain eternal salvation.

12. God foreknowing these diverse results of the two sorts of depravity, predestinated men accordingly—the 'seed of the serpent' to perdition, and the 'seed of the woman' to eternal life.

13. The proximate object of the system of redemption is the disengagement of men from the evil spirit with which they are incorporated, and their restoration to spiritual unity with God.

14. To the end the entire administration of God in this world has been directed from the beginning.

15. Yet the means of its actual accomplishment were not introduced into the world till the times of the gospel.
his communications and the theatre of the final act of redemption.

17. By the law and the prophets he purged the chosen people of idolatry, advanced them in external morality and civilization, excited their hopes of a future dispensation of holiness, and so prepared the way for the gospel.

18. Yet there was thus far no radical redemption from the spirit of evil, either in this world or in that which is beyond death. The reunion of God and man was a 'mystery hid from the generations and ages' of the old testament; and without that there could be no effectual resurrection of the spirit from the power of sin or of the body from the power of death, i.e. no Second Birth.

19. Nevertheless, they who feared God and died in faith, under the legal dispensation, were reserved in a state of partial happiness in the world of souls till the revelation of the gospel mystery, and then received perfect salvation.

20. But their sinful experience under the law, as recorded in the Old Testament, is not to be admitted as evidence against the completeness of the salvation which came by the gospel.

21. The incarnation of the Word or Son of God, was the beginning of the process by which the effectual redemption of mankind from the evil one, and their re-union with God, was accomplished.

22. By the incarnation and its concomitants the power of the uncreated God was introduced into human nature, and brought to bear upon the power of the uncreated Devil.

23. Jesus Christ, by the strength of his divine nature, overcame sin in his own flesh from the beginning, and so maintained open communication with the
24. By the influence of his spirit, by the confidence which his miracles elicited, and by the wisdom of his words and deeds, he drew about himself such a body of disciples as was necessary to constitute a medium of spiritual communication between himself and the world.

25. By his death he completed his obedience to the Father, and his sympathy with the temptations of humanity, and at the same time established communication with Hades, the abode of the dead.

26. From this lowest point of his descent, the Father by his mighty power drew him back to his own bosom; and in this ascent he burst the gates of Hades and Mortality, the dominions of the evil one, and left them open behind him.

27. As his descent into fellowship with humanity had not broken his communication with the Father, so his ascent to the bosom of the Father did not break his communication with humanity. He was now, on the one hand, 'Lord of the living and the dead,' (i.e. in spiritual union with men in the flesh and men in Hades,) and, on the other, fully reinstated in his primeval partnership with the Father. Thus the train was fully laid for the at-one-ment.

28. By the intercession of Christ, the spirit of truth was next poured out; and active communication between God and man commenced.

29. It was the office of the Spirit to show believers 'the things of Christ,' and in process of time it revealed to them his divine nature, his victory over sin and death, the judgment of the prince of this world, and the spiritual reconciliation of God with man.
31. This was the Second Birth; and before this, no man had ever been born.

32. As the dispensation of the second birth dates from a period subsequent to the personal ministry of Christ, and subsequent to the out-pouring of the spirit, it is manifest that the sins of the disciples while Christ was in the flesh, and during the early part of the apostolic age, are not to be received as evidence against the perfectness of gospel regeneration.

33. The second birth of the primitive believers, was in fact the beginning of their resurrection.

34. As such, it transferred them in spirit from this world to immortality, and thus released them from the law of ordinances and carnal commandments.

35. It set them free from all sin.

36. It gave them eternal security of holiness.

37. The life which it gave to the soul, extended its influence more or less to the body.

38. It terminated, after a few years, in a full resurrection and glorification of the body, and a translation to the presence of the Father.

39. The second Advent took place immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem, according to the plain predictions of Christ, and the acknowledged expectations of his followers.

40. The saints in Hades and Mortality were then raised from the dead, and judgment was administered upon them and upon their enemies.

41. These transactions took place in the spiritual world.

42. This was a resurrection and judgment of only a part of mankind.

43. The world, as a whole, had not then received the preparatory legal training, necessary to the spiritual apprehension of the gospel. The universal resurrection and judgment, therefore was deferred.
44. The legal dispensation which had been given to the Jews, was transferred, after the destruction of Jerusalem, to the Gentiles.

45. The religion of Christendom, since the apostolic age, though it has borne the name and external of Christianity, has in fact been a second edition of Judaism.

46. The second birth, founded as it was in the primitive church on a spiritual apprehension of the resurrection of Christ, and effectual as it was to save from all sin, has not been known in the nominal Christian church since the Second Advent.

47. The second and final resurrection and judgment are yet future.

48. But within a few years the primitive faith of regeneration by the resurrection of Christ has again been given to the world; and thus the process has commenced, which, according to the order of the former dispensation, must ere long terminate in the second resurrection and judgment.

49. No radical reformation of mankind will ever be effected by any other agency than that which God has employed, viz., the power of Christ's resurrection, which overcomes the evil one and saves from all sin; and no end of the tribulations of this world will ever be attained, but by the judgment which separates the righteous from the wicked.

50. When the power of the resurrection and judgment shall have done its work, uncreated Good will commence its perfect and eternal triumph over uncreated Evil—Christ will assume the dominion which or, at least, so much of it as Mr. Noyes has ever drawn up in consecutive order, and given to the public in a condensed and tangible form. Other portions of the creed, considered no less important by them, have been kept back, in perfect keeping with Perfectionist policy. This creed, in the main, appears to be of a speculative character—though not without some important practical bearings of evil tendency, as the sequel clearly shows—and is made up, for the most part, of absurd and fanatical notions which all right-minded persons would immediately reject; but as there is nothing too absurd for a certain class of the community to embrace, this creed, as unscriptural, contradictory, and even ridiculous, as some parts of it evidently are, is cordially received by those who are extremely fond of new things, however inconsistent and erroneous they may be.

In addition to what has already been given, there are also many broken fragments and detached portions of the Perfectionist creed, scattered throughout their multifarious writings, which it will be our object, so far as they are worthy of notice, to gather up and present in their proper place. Moreover, it is evident, from recent disclosures and the present aspect of affairs, that Mr. Noyes resorted to some well-devised stratagems, and had used considerable adroitness in the aggressive warfare, which, for a number of years, he has been carrying on against religion and the best interests of society. He appears to have studiously avoided publishing his real sentiments relative to some points, and has so mystified others by confused explanations and dextrous manoeuvres of the pen, as to keep his readers in almost total darkness respecting his real designs. Thus by his artful policy he kept the worst features of the system concealed for several years from the community at large; and he undoubtedly did this lest it should be so disgusting, when viewed in its native dress and most revolting form, as to be instantly discarded by those whom he wished to secure, and thus his hopes be blasted and his plans frustrated.

He evidently laid the heaviest contributions upon his available energies, and toiled almost incessantly to make the fatal draught of error and iniquity assume the pleasing aspect of a rich and wholesome repast, that the specious poison of sin, like a gilded bait, might be swallowed ere the devoted victim should be apprized of the danger to which he was exposed. And in some instances he has been too successful.

By garnishing the most fatal errors and seductive heresies with the tinsel drapery of his false philosophy, Mr. Noyes has deceived and drawn in those who had not sufficient discernment to penetrate the flimsy veil which he had thrown over this monster of iniquity, modern Perfectionism! And those who have been duped and deluded by his artful disguise, perhaps in
"On speculations wild,
And visionary theories absurd,
Prodigiously, deliriously absurd,
Compared with which, the most erroneous flight
That poet ever took when warm with wine,
Was moderate conjecturing!"

Nevertheless he has sought to sustain his visionary notions by proofs drawn from the Bible; and by utter perversions of scripture, and an imposing array of sophistical arguments, he has confirmed his deluded followers in the belief that he is a sound and logical reasoner; and this is not very surprising, for it is evident that—

"He had an art,
A kind of hellish charm, that made the lips
Of truth speak falsehood, to his liking turned
The meaning of the text, made trifles seem
The marrow of salvation."

And undoubtedly to the full satisfaction of his followers, he—

"Proved still his reasoning best, and his belief,
Most rational, most scriptural, most sound,
Though propped on fancies wild as madman's dreams;
With mortal heresy denouncing all Who in his arguments could see no force."
CHAPTER XXXII.

We deem it proper in this connection to give the views of Mr. Noyes respecting the Deity. In reference to the Godhead he lays down the following proposition as an article of faith:—

"God is a dual being, consisting of the Father and the Word; and man as male and female, is his image or likeness."

Again, speaking of the unity of our first parents, and assuming that they are "an image or miniature by which we are to form our conceptions of the nature of God," he says,

"We are led to the simple conclusion, that the uncreated Creator, the Head of the universe, like the head of mankind and the head of every family, though one, is yet 'twain;" (Mark 10:8;) in a word, that the creation has a Father and a Mother."

Again in reference to the same point he says:—

"If we reason from the seen to the unseen, assuming that the essential nature of the effect is in the cause, we have proof as broad as the universe, that the Godhead is a duality; for every link of the chain of productive life, in its whole visible extent from the lowest region of the vegetable kingdom, to the highest of the animal, is a duality. The function between male and female is as universal duality, and all visible evidence goes to prove that is the indispensable condition of reproduction vital creation. If we find two elements in all the streams of life, why should we not infer that the same two elements are in the Fountain?"

Once more—as more fully explanatory of his views Mr. N. holds the following language:

"I do regard the Father and the Son, as two Spirits, who bear a similar social (not physical) relation to each other as that which exists between man and woman, one of whom is greater than the other, (as the man is greater than the woman) who love each other and have pleasure in their fellowship, (as man and woman love and have pleasure in spiritual fellowship) who are the joint parents of all created things, (as man and woman are the joint parents of their offspring) who are thus the prototype in whose image Adam and Eve were made."

Lastly, in his preface to the Berean Mr. N. says:

"We believe, not in the Trinity, nor in the Unity, but in the Duality of the Godhead; and that Duality in our view, is imaged in the two-fold personality of the first man, who was made 'male and female.' Gen. 1: 27. As Adam was to Eve, so is the Father to the Son; i. e. he is the same in nature, but greater in power and glory."

The reader will undoubtedly find it very difficult to discover the propriety of representing the Son of God as the female part of the Godhead! Moreover, Christ is represented in the above language as being inferior in "power and glory" to the Father, which is diametrically opposed to the most plain and unequivocal declarations of Scripture. St. Paul says Christ "thought it not robbery to be EQUAL with God."
Phil. 2: 6. And the Evangelist John declares that the "Word was God." John 1: 1. These passages with many others of similar import clearly show that the Son was not inferior in power and glory to the Father, the assertions of Mr. N. to the contrary notwithstanding.

The untenableness of the positions and the fallacy of the reasoning found in the foregoing extracts, must be apparent to all.

The Godhead is represented by Mr. N. as a duality, in opposition to the doctrine of the Trinity, so clearly taught and abundantly supported by the Scriptures. The Bible teaches us that there is one God — and that there are three distinct persons united and existing in the Godhead, co-equal and co-existent, viz: — The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

From the whole tenor of Mr. N.'s writings, but more especially from tracing his views of Deity, the reader cannot fail to perceive, and must be forcibly impressed with the fact that his sentiments are extremely low and grovelling. He turns every thing that he touches into a polluted channel: and his mind appears to be almost or quite incapable of soaring above sensual objects. From the corrupt vein running through all his writings, the current of his thoughts and drift of his feelings are most apparent.

Image of God.

He imagines that he is an image of our original progenitors having been created male and female! This is supremely contemptible, and the most absurd of all absurdities. God being an infinite and eternal Spirit, no visible form or physical organization can be an appropriate symbol of the Divine Nature. God being a Spirit, can have no corporeal image whatever. That great prohibitory precept with which the decalogue opens, and which was designed as an antidote to every species of idolatry, forbids the making of any “image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth.” Ex. 20: 4.

Moses, in exhorting the children of Israel to beware of the idolatry so prevalent in Egypt, says:—“Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves; (for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire;) lest ye corrupt yourselves, and make a graven image, the similitude of any figure, the likeness of male or female.” Deut. 4: 15, 16.

There were some among the corrupt and idolatrous Egyptians, who, like Mr. Noyes, found in the male and female figure the fittest image to gratify the impure workings of their own depraved hearts and sensualized imaginations; and Moses, in cautioning the Israelites against such gross idolatry, uses specific language—language plainly, implying that a figure or image representing the male or female form would be as improper and inappropriate to shadow forth the Godhead as any representation whatever, which would not have been the case were it what Mr. N. be. All material forms whatever, in his utterly fail to give us any adequate concept of incomprehensible Jehovah. There is no approximation in any figure toward the Being who has neither "body nor parts."

The language just quoted is fatal to Noyes, and clearly shows that the position assumed is utterly untenable.

For scriptural proof to sustain his position he relies solely upon Gen. 1:27, "So God created..." in his own image, in the image of God he male and female created he them. This affords no support to Mr. N.'s favored grammatical construction does not lead to the conclusions to which he has arrived. The subject in this passage both to the image in which he is created, and his physical structure of separately and not conjointly—there is no evidence from the other.

Moreover, the image of God, as he is created, could not have been physical or mental, nor been intellectual or moral; for God is a spiritual essence—an intellect. The image then of the creature must be in harmony with the nature of the Creator.

But the Scriptures are not subject. St. Paul fixes this idea of an image and definiteness that no truth need err or be in doubt.
in knowledge, in righteousness, and true holiness. In writing to the Colossians he says:—"Ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him."—Col. 3:9,10. Again, to the Ephesians he says:—"Put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."—Eph. 4:24.

Thus it appears that man was originally wise in understanding, holy in heart, and righteous in life; which moral qualities constituted the image in which he was created. Here we have proof touching this point which is "direct and decisive," and that which is "indirect and doubtful" must yield to it.

This point is settled, then, by incontestible proofs; but it will appear in a clearer light on further examination. The great end of the mission of Christ into the world was to recover man from the ruins of the fall—reinstate him in the Divine favor—and restore the image which was lost by transgression. The image to be restored by Christ was that which was lost by the fall—the image lost by the fall was the image in which man was created—hence the image which Christ came to restore was that which man originally possessed; and we have already ascertained that it was a moral image, consisting in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness.

The Scriptures abundantly sustain the position that it is the peculiar and appropriate work of Christ as a Redeemer and Savior to restore to man that which was lost by the fall. If the image in which man was created was physical, then the loss of that image by the fall was a physical loss, and the restoration by Christ must be physical also. But the fall produced no change in man's physical structure, and the restoration—at least so far as relates to what takes place in the present life—is not physical; hence the image in which man was created was not physical.

But again—if the image was physical, then all men, irrespective of moral character, possess that image, and will to all eternity, according to Mr. N.'s views; for he believes that image will never be effaced, much less obliterated, but that the identity if not the present peculiar structure of man's physical organization will continue forever. Mr. Noyes also believes in the future punishment of the wicked—then it follows, according to his notions, that the wicked, while writhing under the scalding vials of Jehovah's wrath, will retain, with as much distinctness and in as high a degree of perfection, the image of God, as man possessed when he came pure from the plastic hand of his Maker! Forever suffering and yet forever possessing the image of God, in which he was created!

But in addition to the feeble testimony adduced to sustain the unwarrantable position assumed, Mr. N. has advanced one argument, and the rest he has to say relative to the subject is made up mostly of assertions and assumptions. The argument alluded to is found in the preceding extracts and is as follows:
that the essential nature of the effect is in the cause, we have proof as broad as the universe, that the Godhead is a duality; for every link of the chain of productive life, in its whole visible extent from the lowest region of the vegetable kingdom to the highest of the animal, is a duality. The distinction between male and female is as universal as vitality, and all visible evidence goes to prove that it is the indispensable condition of reproduction, i.e. of vital creation. If we find two elements in all the streams of life, why should we not infer that the same two elements are in the Fountain."

The above appears to be the sum of Mr. N.'s reasoning touching this point; and although it is somewhat plausible, it is nevertheless unsound. To reason from the seen to the unseen in this matter is quite sophistical. Though the visible creation bespeaks an invisible Author, yet from the works of nature we cannot ascertain, to any considerable extent, the true character of Deity, or the mode of the Divine Existence. It is one thing to institute comparisons and draw analogies, and quite another thing to prove that they are founded in the reality of things. If the essential nature of the cause is in the effect, then we might prove that God is a material Being; and on the same principle we might prove that the "essential nature" of the artisan is in every piece of handiwork which he produces—which would be utterly absurd.

From the views and reasoning of Mr. N., we should infer that through his inverted optics and distorted vision he sees all things double, and that nothing to him has any beauty or comeliness except a duality.
having the distinction of male and female. Who can refrain from expressing his utter abhorrence of such grovelling sentiments, and such debasing views of the Divine Nature? While Mr. N. has been dealing largely in sublime mysteries, so evanescent that they have evaporated into airy nothings, a few disciples have gathered around him, apparently struck with amazement; and while gazing almost with adoring wonder, have verily believed that Mr. N. was soaring to the loftiest heights, diving to the lowest depths, and ranging the remotest regions of spiritual philosophy, when in fact he was fast bound to the car of carnality himself, and was dragging his hoodwinked and deluded followers through the filth of sensuality down to the lowest depths of degradation and the darkest shades of black despair.

Views of Noyes concerning Angels.

Mr. N. not only assumes the position that sexual distinction exists in the Godhead, but also that it exists among angels! The following language of Mr. N. contains this sentiment:—

"I confess I see nothing very horrible in the idea of there being sexual distinction in the angelic race. If the distinction of spirits, the twofold life, which I have described in what I have said of God, exists in the angelic nature, (as I believe it exists in every living thing, from God to the lowest vegetable,) I see no very alarming reason why that distinction should not be expressed in the bodily form of angels as well as men."

In support of the theory of sexual distinction.
exists in angelic natures, Mr. N. relies mainly, if not wholly, upon a few passages found in the 6th chapter of Genesis, and the Epistle of Jude. And a remark which he makes in reference to these passages brings his ideas in relation to the nature of angels distinctly to view. He says his view of the meaning of these passages "involves no intrinsic absurdity. It only makes a breach in the theories of those who assume without proof that angels have not a corporeal and sexual nature."

Here Mr. N. takes a stand, and we think he "assumes without proof" that angels have a "corporeal and sexual nature." This sentiment is apparently very gross, and a little investigation will show that it is utterly absurd and anti-scriptural.

The proof on which Mr. N. relies to sustain his theory in the Old Testament, is found in Genesis, 6: 1, 2. "And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose."

Mr. N. contends that the sons of God here spoken of were angels; and asserts that most of the ancient Christian Fathers, and many of the modern Jewish Rabbins favor this exposition. But such authorities will never sustain a theory so obviously absurd and anti-scriptural. The declaration of the Savior made in reply to the curious and inquisitive Sadducees, is fatal to the position of Mr. N. Christ declares that, "In the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven." Matt. 22: 30.

Mr. N. believes and asserts that "marriage does not exist in heaven," which is equivalent to admitting that it has no place among the angelic hosts; and in the passage just quoted it seems to be assigned as the principal reason why in the "resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage,"—that they are as angels. This shows conclusively that the Creator never designed angels for a marriage state; and from their very natures they are evidently incapacitated for such a state.

Now, the sons of God mentioned in Genesis, 6: 2, took wives, or entered into the matrimonial relation; consequently they could not have been angels. The most rational and consistent interpretation of the passage under consideration is, that the "sons of God" were the descendants of Seth, who were so called because of their eminent piety; and that the "daughters of men" with whom they intermarried, were the progeny of wicked Cain.

But Mr. N. tries to press St. Jude into his service, and obtain from him some support for his theory. We give his quotation with a few comments which he has attached:

"The angels which kept not their first estate, but cities about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.' The account, and the only one which we have in the Old Testament, to which we can suppose Jude to have referred, of angels leaving their own habitation and going after other flesh, is found in the sixth chapter of Genesis, where it is said, that 'when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all that they chose.'"—Berean, p. 100.

The quotation from Jude, which Mr. N. has given, taken independently of the connection in which it stands, gives a false and perverted view of the apostle's teaching. According to Mr. N.'s construction, Sodom, Gomorrah, and the cities about them, gave themselves over to fornication in like manner unto the angels which left their own habitation. This exposition carries its own refutation with it, for it has already been seen that the sons of God spoken of in the sixth chapter of Genesis to which Mr. N. supposes Jude referred, were not angels.

They "took them wives," and however unwise this may have been under the circumstances, and whatever ruinous consequences may have resulted to them personally therefrom, we have no intimation that they violated any natural or statute law. If there was nothing unlawful in their course, they were not guilty of fornication, and could not have been referred to by Jude as having gone after strange flesh. This view of the subject completely overturns the whole theory of Mr. N., for the inhabitants of Sodom, Gomorrah, and the cities about them, were guilty of fornication in like manner to a class already mentioned, which could not have been the sons of God as Mr. N. would have it, for they were not guilty of that sin, as has been seen.

Mr. N.'s interpretation is far-fetched, as appears by consulting the context of the passage which he has quoted. Jude opens his Epistle with a general exhortation to all true believers, "earnestly to contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." He also warns them against the dangers to which they were exposed, arising from false teachers who were among them, disseminating their pernicious heresies. "For," says he, "there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation; ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into licentiousness."—Ver. 4.

Thus Jude prominently sets forth the sin of those false teachers who had insinuated themselves into the Church by specious pretences, and who were striving to overthrow the faith of true believers, and turn them away from the simplicity of the Gospel; and he intimates that they were doomed to condign punishment. And for the purpose of illustrating the subject, and making it more impressive, Jude immediately introduced several striking examples where signal judgments had been inflicted for heinous offences. The first example mentioned, is that of the unbelieving Israelites, who, notwithstanding they had been miraculously delivered from Egyptian bondage, were afterward destroyed in the wilderness, because they believed not the word, neither obeyed the commands of God. The second example cited, is that of the apostate angels who are "reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." The third example adduced is that of the wicked inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, who, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, in like manner unto the false teachers mentioned in verse 4, are set forth for an example of what God will do to such transgressors.

He then calls these false teachers "filthy dreamers," and conveys the idea that they and their followers were as unbelieving and disobedient as the Israelites in the wilderness, as rebellious against the authority of God as the fallen angels, and as impure and unholy as the Sodomites; and that consequently they must expect similar punishment.

But the sentiments of St. Peter perfectly harmonize with those of St. Jude when speaking of the same or a similar class of persons, and come in to corroborate the view which we have taken of the subject, and confirm our exposition of Jude's language. St. Peter says:—"There shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies."

These false teachers appear to have advanced and inculcated sentiments quite similar to those taught by Noyes, at least in some respects. A kind of Antinomianism was probably the foundation of their many heresies. One commentator says:—"They pampered and indulged the lusts of the flesh; and, if the Nicolaitans are meant, it is very applicable to them, for they taught the community of wives, &c."

It is said that many should follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth should be evil spoken of. If persons professing Christianity, follow abominable practices, the way of truth—the Christian religion, is blasphemed. Should they call themselves by any other name than that of Christ, his religion would not suffer.

Now, Peter presents the rebellious angels, the wicked antideluvians, and the corrupt inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, as ensamples to those who should afterward live ungodly; thus showing that those wicked and false teachers who corrupt the pure doctrines of Christianity shall not escape condign punishment.

But to return—the Scriptures afford not a particle of testimony to prove that angels have a corporeal nature. But the Bible is not wholly silent relative to this subject. Though the testimony in relation to the nature of angels is not very abundant, yet it is sufficiently clear and conclusive to prove that they are spiritual or incorporeal beings; capable, however, of assuming different forms and appearing in a bodily
Who maketh his angels spirits." Heb. 1:7. — Again, speaking of the angels, it is said:—"Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs to salvation?" Heb. 1:14. — Here angels are termed spirits; and the Savior has taught us—and in the very nature of things it is impossible that it should be otherwise—that spirits are incorporeal substances. Addressing his disciples on the eve of his ascension, when they were "terrified and affrighted" at his appearing suddenly among them, and supposing that they had seen a spirit, he said to them, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Luke 24:39. This shows to a demonstration that spirits are not corporeal, but are distinct in their natures from material beings. Angels being spirits and spirits being incorporeal, it follows that they are not material beings. The theory, then, of Mr. Noyes is clearly anti-scriptural.

But the position assumed by Mr. N., viz., that angels have a corporeal and sexual nature, and came down to earth and entered into the marriage relation, is as unphilosophical and repugnant to reason, as it is anti-scriptural. In the scale of being, there is a "just gradation," and one part rises in "due degree" above another, from the lowest point of created existence, up through all the ascending series to the throne of God. Each class of beings in this connected and wonderful chain, has a distinct and peculiar nature, occupies its assigned position, and acts in its proper sphere. All the varied species of sensitive creatures have their constitutional peculiarities, and the bounds of their appropriate spheres are drawn by the infinitely wise Architect of the universe, and are defined with exact precision. And although, as links of the great chain of being, and parts of the "stupendous whole," they approach near to each other, yet there are distinct lines of demarcation drawn between them which they can never pass. But the theory of Mr. Noyes makes angels, those higher and holier intelligences, step from their exalted station, leave their "divine abode," pass the limits of their appropriate sphere, and come within the precincts of humanity! Or his view represents men and angels as being identical in all the essential elements of their natures; thus would he recklessly break down the barrier between the two, and impiously attempt to commingle natures which Infinite Wisdom ordained should ever be distinct.

The conclusions and views of Mr. N. relative to this subject approach nearer the wildest vagaries of a dis-tempered brain, than the deliberate and rational deductions of a reflecting mind. His theory appears to be a mere creature of the imagination, having neither Scripture, reason nor philosophy to sustain it.
CHAPTER XXXIII.

Abolition of Death.

Mr. Noyes has assumed a somewhat novel position relative to the subject of death. He boldly asserts, in opposition to the uniform and unequivocal testimony of Scripture, and the universal experience of all past ages, that there is no necessity of dying!

No person who receives the Bible as an infallible rule of faith can be in doubt relative to this subject. The following plain and positive declarations of Scripture are the unmistakable land-marks of every true believer’s faith in reference to this point:—

“Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return—we must needs die—there is no man that hath power over the Spirit to retain the Spirit: neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge in that war—it is appointed unto men once to die—wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.”

The universal prevalence of death in every age, and among all nations, has been a living commentary upon these divine declarations—a standing memorial of the melancholy truth, that man is mortal. And we might as soon expect to arrest the planets in their course, reverse the wheels of nature, break the immutable decree of Jehovah, or demolish the pillars of the eternal throne, as to escape the jaws of death. To this general rule there have, however, already been two exceptions, viz., in the case of Enoch and Elijah, who for wise ends were translated that they should not see death; but we have no intimation that another instance of like character will ever occur, except in the case of those who shall be found living upon the earth when Christ shall "so come in like manner" as he was seen to ascend on high, and who, instead of passing through the ordinary form of dying, will experience an instantaneous change equivalent to death. In view of the repeated declarations of Scripture, no person can discard a doctrine so clearly taught as the certainty of death, without utterly rejecting the Bible as a perfect standard of faith, and closing his eyes to the light which has shone in all ages as clear and strong as the sun at noon-day. The efforts of Mr. Noyes to make it appear that death may be abolished in our present state, clearly exhibit a strong disposition, not only to "put far away the evil day," but to banish all thoughts of death forever from the mind. The course pursued by Mr. N. and his followers would naturally render death repulsive, and array it with so many terrors as to make it an unwelcome subject, which could not be contemplated with any great degree of composure. The mind also must be rendered grossly dark by sin and error before the vain and delusive hope of escaping death can be indulged.

But let us look at the position of Mr. Noyes, relative to the subject under consideration, as defined by himself. In the Perfectionist, Sept. 7, 1844, he dis-with his life. His true body—that which is within his flesh and blood—is already risen from the dead by the power of Christ's resurrection, and parting with flesh and blood will be to him no death. He will pass into the inner mansions, not naked but clothed with his immortal body.

"2. The death of flesh and blood to the believer is not inevitable. It is not a 'debt' which he owes to the devil, or to sin, or to the laws of nature. His debts to all these tyrants are paid. Christ has bought him out of their hands; and the question whether he shall die in the ordinary sense will be determined, not by some inexorable necessity, but by the choice of Christ, and of course by the choice of himself as a member of Christ. 'No man taketh my life from me, (said Christ,) but I lay it down of myself.'—(John 10: 18.) The power which he had in respect to his own life, he has in respect to the lives of those who believe on him. As members of him, they may lay down their lives as he did; but no man or devil takes their lives from them. Accordingly Paul, balancing between the desire of life and death, said, 'I wot not which I shall choose'—(Phil. 1: 22.) This language implies that life and death were at his option. The fact that the saints who lived till the Second Coming (to say nothing of Enoch and Elijah) passed within the vale without dying, proves that the death of flesh and blood is not inevitable—that Christ has power to discharge believers from its bond.

"3. It is certain from the predictions of scripture that the time is coming when death will be abolished both as to form and substance in this world. It is not to be expected that individuals will enter into this last victory of Christ much in advance of the whole body of believers.—God is evidently preparing for a general insurrection against the 'king of terrors,' and we may reasonably anticipate the crisis and victory as near.
‘They that are alive and remain’ till the promised consummation, will not die in any sense, but will pass from the mortal to the immortal state by a change similar to that which is described in I. Cor. 15: 51, &c.

“My profession, then, since 1834, has been briefly this: ‘If I pass through the form of dying, yet in fact I shall never die. But I am not a debtor to the devil even in regard to the form of dying. No man taketh my life from me. I wot not whether I shall choose life or death. But this I know, that if I live till the kingdom of God comes, which I believe is near, I shall never die in fact or in form. This is the profession, for which I have been charged by certain ‘devout and honorable women’ with ‘stumping my Maker.’”

“The first results of the act of faith which I have described, were delightful. I passed one night in unspeakable happiness. I felt that I had burst through the shroud of death into the ‘heavenly places.’” — Perfectionist, Vol. iv. No. 13.

The sentiments expressed in the foregoing paragraphs are in perfect keeping with the tenor of the following extracts from a letter written by Mr. Noyes about the same time, viz., May, 1834. Both the preceding paragraphs and the following extracts refer to what took place at that particular time:

“I determined to cease from out-going effort, and fall back upon the leadings of the Lord. Soon I was led to a distinct view of this truth, that while I have
... On Sunday I became assured that within three days I should eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God. * * * Yesterday in the forenoon the travelling pangs of the final resurrection came upon me. I read the last chapter of Isaiah, and found a peace I never knew before. I wrote in my journal, 'Death is swallowed up in victory.'—(Isa. 25: 8.) In the evening I felt assured the coming of the Lord drew nigh. I even expected to see Jesus face to face. Yet I knew not how or when he would come. Imagination was very busy, but the Lord helped me to curb its flight. I gathered in all my thoughts and desires upon this one wish—Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. He came; not in bodily or visible shape, but in a manner more satisfactorily demonstrative of the reality of his presence. He entered the secret chamber of my soul, and we sat down together to the marriage supper. I will not attempt to describe to you the glories of that feast. * * * I scarcely closed my eyes during the night. This morning I am sick of love, and feel that this mortal must indeed put on immortality, or it would be consumed in the love of God. Now indeed I am married, and will henceforth wait only on my husband. I know he will give me all the desire of my heart. I have no heart to pray—my harp is tuned for an everlasting song of praise. I have eaten of the tree of life. God is the temple of my spirit. I think, brother, we have been but in embryo hitherto. * * * The cherubim and flaming sword are withdrawn at the gate of Paradise. Adam may return, and eating of the tree of life, become immortal. * * * Faith is the key of the door of the third heaven, as well as the door of the outer court. You may enter as soon as you believe from the heart."—Spiritual Magazine, Vol. ii. No. 9.
It is evident from several points of resemblance in the extracts from the Perfectionist and Magazine, that Mr. Noyes refers in both accounts to the same peculiar exercises of mind at a given time in May, 1834. Mr. N. says in the Perfectionist—"The first results of the act of faith which I have described, were delightful. I passed one night in unspeakable happiness." In the Magazine he says—"I scarcely closed my eyes during the night." The connection in which these respective expressions occur, clearly shows that they refer to the same time. Now what was the great object which Mr. N. had in view at this particular time? Certainly the resurrection. Mr. N. says he had previously "only come up to the ground on which Paul stood." But he concludes to step beyond the great Apostle! He discovered it to be his "privilege to attain now the resurrection of the dead." He wished to see the "debt of nature" paid. And he says—"What I sought I obtained." He also says that he felt "that this mortal must indeed put on immortality, or it would be consumed in the love of God." Now we have no intimation that the "mortal" was thus "consumed," and of course we are left to infer that, in the estimation of Mr. N., it put on "immortality"! He also says that he sat down with Christ at the "marriage supper" —and that he ate of the "tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." Now this is as plain as language can well be, and defines the position of Mr. N. relative to the resurrection as applied to himself, with considerable precision. Occupying this position relative to the resurrection, we might readily anticipate his position respecting death. But he does not seem disposed to 'bide the consequences naturally deducible from the premises. Although he had stepped beyond St. Paul, and attained the "resurrection of the dead," lest, by positively asserting, in so many words, that he should never die, and thereby too fully commit himself, he steps back upon the apostle's ground and says—"I wot not whether I shall choose life or death." If the power of life and death was at his own option, and death an enemy which it is desirable to conquer, we can hardly see how he could be in doubt relative to the point.

But the reader will readily perceive the utter perversion, and consequent misapplication, of the apostle's language, as used by Mr. Noyes. St. Paul expressed a desire to "depart and be with Christ," which he considered "far better" than to remain in this vale of tears, subject to the common sorrows of life. If the power of life and death had been lodged with him, he could have readily decided the question. And his language—"I wot not which I shall choose"—did not imply that he possessed any such power. But knowing that he must die, and being ignorant of the time when, he did not wish to assume the prerogative of judging in relation to it, but in the spirit of humble submission he was disposed to refer the decision of that important question to the infinitely wise Ruler of the universe.

We have given, in the extracts already made, the views of Mr. Noyes relative to the subject of death, at
But let us look at his own published language touching this point. Some three months after it was decided by the unanimous voice that the kingdom of God had come, speaking in reference to the case of Miss Mary A. Knight—a young lady in a confirmed consumption who was under his care, an account of whose case is given at length elsewhere, and whom he was trying to heal in a miraculous manner—Mr. Noyes holds the following language:—

"As to my leaving her at this juncture, the simple truth is, that I had engaged to attend two conventions in the state of New York, had published that engagement in the Magazine, and had set the day for my departure, before I was called to Mary Knight. She and her father were anxious about my going away, from the beginning, and frequently asked if I should go, in case she remained sick. I always answered them that I should go at the day appointed, if I was alive, whatever might be her state; and all that I should do must be done before that day."

Let the reader mark his language:—"I always answered them that I should go at the day appointed, if I was alive." Mr. Noyes had declared that he knew he should never die if he lived till the kingdom of God came—he had announced the coming of that kingdom—but several months subsequent to that period he uses language highly expressive of doubt relative to his own case! Language implying not only that he might die, but that he might die very soon, even before the time appointed for his departure should arrive, which was but a few days after! What beautiful consistency!

Thus, in an unguarded moment, Mr. N. unwittingly betrays himself, and clearly exhibits his own insincerity—showing conclusively that he had but little or no confidence in his own statements. And we are irresistibly carried to the conclusion that Mr. N., in assuming for the time being his position relative to the subject of death, must have been actuated by some sinister motives, and had in view the accomplishment of some nefarious ends. He could not have acted without having some object in view.

He would fain deceive the people by his contemptible juggling, and many of his followers are mightily pleased with the delusion. They prefer to be hoodwinked and humbugged, rather than be made acquainted with sober facts and substantial realities. And he would be considered an enemy, who should attempt to break the spell, and let in the searching light of truth upon the whole matter.

But in the extracts already given Mr. N. not only speaks in reference to himself, but the whole "body of believers," i. e., all genuine Perfectionists. He had long been anticipating a period in which death would be abolished, both in form and substance, in this world. He viewed the "crisis and victory" as being not far distant, and fancied that God was "preparing for a general insurrection against the king of terrors"; and asserts that those who should be "alive and remain till the promised consummation, would not die in any sense," but would "pass from the mortal to the immortal state by a change similar to that which is described in I. Cor. 16: 52, &c."

The "promised consummation" spoken of is undoubtedly the coming of that kingdom to which we have alluded, which event, as we have seen, has already taken place according to the notions of Perfectionists. Consequently Mr. Noyes and all his true followers, or the whole body of believers, have passed from the "mortal to the immortal state," and have experienced that change spoken of by St. Paul, which was to take place "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump."—I. Cor. 15: 52. This view of the subject is confirmed by a statement made, in a somewhat private manner, by one of the master-spirits of the Putney community, which was—that they had attained the resurrection of the body! Thus with Perfectionists eternity has begun, and they are now walking the earth in their immortal bodies!!

But let us look at the influence which the doctrine of Mr. N. respecting death has had upon the "body of believers" at Putney. A prominent member of that "body" holds the following language, published in the Spiritual Magazine of Nov. 1, 1847:—

"The pall of the fear of death which overspreads all the world, is removed from our abode. We are all feels its chill. Age does not rest on its oars and wait for it, but wends back as fast as possible to immortal youth. "To be prepared for death, never enters our heads; and a visitor from some sphere where it is not known, might go in and out with us ever so long, and not have his curiosity excited about this point in human destiny."

From the above it appears that the subject of death is one that receives no attention among Perfectionists, especially those at Putney. All thoughts of it are banished from the mind. "'To be prepared for death, never enters their heads.'"

And when a person embraces their views, the Noyesites,

"First of all eradicate,
As much as possible, from out his mind,
All thought of death."

The influence of Noyesism is here seen in its true light. What can be more ruinous or sad in its results? The sentiment of Solomon—"It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting"—is utterly discarded by Perfectionists! This is being wise above what is written!

Suitable reflections, at proper times, upon the close of life, exert a salutary and reforming influence upon the heart and life. And he who never indulges in such reflections, cannot be prepared for a death-bed scene. It is almost incredible that people should be so strangely deluded as to suppose they can escape death. When health and prosperity attend them they may..."
long be reversed. Death, like the unerring archer, has marked each for his victim; and "like a staunch murderer, steady to his purpose," will sooner or later accomplish his work. A few short years will tell the sad tale. "Passing away" is written upon the very brow of every human being; and each in turn must be lodged in the "narrow house," and slumber beneath the silent clods of the valley. And he who makes no preparation for the coming change—whose sensibilities are locked in profound slumber, it is to be feared will at last lie down upon a thorny pillow. Is it not wise to timely prepare for our approaching end?
CHAPTER XXXIV.

Noyesite Theory of Disease.

Perfectionists assume that sin—not the sin of our first parents, but of each individual person—is the immediate cause of disease and death; and that if disease makes its appearance and death ensues after a person is freed from sin—as all Perfectionists profess to be—it is owing to a “Spiritual Momentum” which was acquired before the person experienced a deliverance from sin. Let us hear them touching this matter, and look at an illustration which they have given of this subject:—

“In consequence of the belief of Perfectionists that sin is the cause of sickness and death, questions like the following have many times been put to them: “How is it that you who profess to live without sin, yet suffer the consequences of sin? Can an effect exist without a cause? Does not the fact, then, that you still suffer pain and sickness, (if these are consequences of sin,) prove you to be still a sinner?” &c. I have sometimes thought that an answer to such questions might be found in the following illustration:—

“We see a locomotive with its train, travelling at a rapid rate; and when we inquire into the cause of its motion, we find it is the power of steam operating through the agency of machinery. Yet, though the steam may be shut off, as is the case when the cars are about to stop, we perceive that the motion of the cars does not cease immediately, but is continued through the agency of another force called momentum, which is a secondary cause of motion, and which, though it may for a limited time continue motion already produced, has no power to produce it, and therefore cannot long overcome the resistance of the atmosphere, friction, &c. Hence all motion whose primary cause is cut off and which consequently has nothing to sustain it but secondary causes, must gradually cease, because such causes are not equal to the resistance with which they meet.

"Passing from the natural to the spiritual world, we find powers in existence similar to, if not the same as, the natural laws of this world, such as attraction, cohesion, repulsion, light, heat, &c. And judging from analogy, we should naturally infer that there was such a thing as spiritual momentum, as well as motion... Taking this view of the subject, then, we see that men in their fallen state are travelling with a fearful rapidity in the way to death; and the only motive power that has been and is driving them in that way, is sin. But when sin is cut off, as is the case of those who are born of God, the only possible subjective reason for the continuance of the effects of sin, must be found in spiritual momentum—in secondary causes, which have no power to beget disease, and which are not able long to overcome the resistance of the atmosphere of heaven which surrounds every renewed heart, and is constantly opposing all tendency toward sickness and death. So that letting things go along naturally, if a man has been delivered from the propelling power of the devil, his tendency toward death is continually decreasing, and would as certainly cease eventually, as a train of cars would cease their motion after the propelling power of steam was withdrawn.

"But there is another thing to be considered: if a train of cars were fast approaching a precipice,
...were shutting off of the steam might not save them. Their headway might be such, with the shortness of the distance to be travelled, as to secure their destruction. The wheels must therefore be reversed, and the brakes applied. By such efforts many lives have been saved that would otherwise have been lost.

"Perfectionists should keep it before their minds, then, that if according to their faith sin has been destroyed in them, the motive power which has been driving them away from life, has ceased to act; and if holiness has been begotten in them, the wheels have been reversed and are now turning in their right direction. The cessation of the deadly tendency and influence of a wicked spirit, the commencement of healthy action within us, the natural effects of salutary causes, and the promises of the Gospel, all combine to strengthen and enlarge our hope in regard to the extension and final victory of the Spirit of Life." — Perfectionist, Vol. iv. No. 13.

Whatever plausibility may be attached to this theory in its practical application, it appears to have been of no essential benefit, even to its strongest advocates. The Perfectionist Community at Putney was established in 1838—in 1847, Mr. Noyes said in regard to that Community, "We have had, a reasonable share of diseases, both chronic and acute." Again, in 1834, Mr. N. became a Perfectionist; in 1845 he says of himself—when speaking of a disease of the throat and lungs which he had contracted—I "had abundant external reason to expect a speedy death."

Now if the members of the Putney Community, during the nine years following its establishment, "had a reasonable share of diseases”; and if Mr. N. eleven years after he became a Perfectionist, “had abundant external reason to expect a speedy death,” it appears that the train of disease was moving on among them with its accustomed speed, if not indeed with accelerated velocity!

If this be the fact one of two things must necessarily follow—either they must have been under tremendous headway, and acquired a fearful “spiritual momentum” before they shut off the steam, or they have never yet shut it off, reversed the wheels, and applied the brakes. The latter appears to be the more probable. They can have the privilege, however, of hanging upon which horn of the dilemma they please.

But the Noyesites, not content with sweeping away moral and statute laws, assert their independence of natural laws! A correspondent of the Spiritual Magazine, under date of Nov. 7, 1847, says:—

“According to the degenerate age in which we live, it is expected that if we transcend or violate any of the laws of nature, we must smart for it. Suppose we hoist a counter project to this, and say that the laws of nature have been and will again be subject to spiritual power; so that the child of faith may by a full surrender step upon the platform of perfect deliverance in this life from sin, disease and death.”

In what foolish and fruitless speculations will men
In 1844, Geo. Cragin sent a paper to Dr. Sylvester Graham containing an absurd and silly article on "The Love of Life." The article was marked for Dr. G.'s perusal. He returned the paper with the following pithy and truthful note upon the margin, in his own hand-writing:

"The babblings of a fool—not a natural fool, but a self-made, self-deluded fool, whose heart is set on perverting the truth, and wresting the scriptures to his own and others' destruction!"

To indulge in endless speculations appears to be the height of ambition with some of the Noyesites—speculations grossly absurd, and of no sort of practical application or importance whatever.

But let us hear the Noyesites a little farther in relation to diseases and death—their cause and cure. Says a correspondent of the Spiritual Magazine—"The devil has the power of death, and of course of disease in its every stage."

Again, says Mr. Noyes:

"Among the most formidable enemies to be overcome in order to the establishment of Christ's kingdom in this world, diseases and death hold a conspicuous place. How many of our King's liege subjects have been made prisoners, or have been wounded, and disabled for efficient service, by the assaults of these tyrannical invaders. . . . And though many of the King's subjects may still fall in battle before the termination of the war; yet they can feel that they are fighting in a glorious cause; that even though they fall in this cause they cannot be destroyed; and that complete victory is certain at last. . . . Let us not consider ourselves as under obligation to receive kindly, or to entertain honorably, Death's ambassadors or envoys, who come to us in the forms and under the names of various diseases. Let us not consent to enter into any amicable negotiation with them, nor count them worthy to lodge in our houses, or to be waited on and nourished by us; but treat them as their real character deserves, as a set of base, insidious, murderous intruders; and let us arouse such a general sentiment of just indignation against them, that they shall be thrust forth from every company of the faithful, and from all decent society, and be expelled out of our coasts.”

Again, the "body of believers" in Putney "joined their households under one common roof" in the spring of 1847; and in the following July Mr. Noyes said:

"Soon after we came together in family unity, Mrs. Cragin was attacked by disease of an obstinate and threatening character. This brought me into a necessity of examining our position in relation to sickness, death, medicines, &c. I settled my own principles more thoroughly than ever before, and gave a course of lectures, in which I declared my independence of the medical systems of this world, and claimed for Christ the office of physician to our Community. There was but one heart and one voice among us about the matter."

Now it is a well known fact, that, after the above declaration was made by Mr. Noyes, and sanctioned by the united voice of the members of his Community, a physician was employed in that same Community, and that too while Mr. N. was with them—showing con-facts stand out against Mr. N.'s theory, and upset his absurd assumptions. It evidently appears that he has

"Great striving made to be ridiculous.
The mighty reasoner, he who deeply searched
The origin of things, and talked of good
And evil much, of causes and effects.
Of mind and matter, contradicting all That went before him, and himself the while,
The laughing-stock of angels; diving far Below his depth, to fetch reluctant proof,
That he himself was mad and wicked too."
CHAPTER XXXV.

Distinguishing and Leading Doctrines of Noyesism.

In June 1839, Rev. Charles T. Torrey of Salem, Mass., addressed a letter to Mr. Noyes in which he made several inquiries relative to Perfectionism. Mr. N., in his reply to that letter, says:—

"In order that I may give a definite answer to your inquiries relative to matters of fact, I must first define Perfectionism. You are aware that a considerable sect has recently appeared among Calvinists, with President Mahan at its head, who believe that perfect holiness is attainable in this life, and yet are not called Perfectionists. You are also aware, as your letter intimates, that similar classes of believers exist among the Methodists, and Friends, who likewise decline the name of Perfectionists. So that it is evident that Perfectionism, in the prevailing sense of the word, is not distinguished from other religious systems merely by the doctrine of perfect holiness. What then are the adjuncts of this doctrine peculiar to Perfectionists, which actually distinguish them from all other sects? I answer—

1. "Their belief that perfect holiness, when attained, is forever secure. This point is not insisted upon by any of the classes before mentioned. . . .

2. "Their belief that perfect holiness is not a mere privilege, but an attainment absolutely necessary to
lem. . . . Perfectionists insist upon this doctrine, as the foundation of the two preceding.

"Other distinctive tenets of Perfectionists might be named, and perhaps would be regarded by many as more important than those to which I have adverted; for example, their 'Antinomianism,' their belief of a present resurrection, their peculiar views of the fashion of this world in respect to marriage, &c., but I regard all these as secondary consequences of the doctrines I have mentioned, not essential in a radical definition of Perfectionism. . . . Then, you will understand that by Perfectionists, I mean that class of religionists who hold the three points of faith above noticed."

We shall merely glance at the doctrines above mentioned—as the limits of this work will admit of nothing more—and then proceed to briefly notice a variety of other points embraced in Noyesism.

The position assumed by Mr. Noyes in relation to the second coming of Christ, viz., that it took place at the destruction of Jerusalem, appears to be regarded by him as an all-important point—a leading and very essential doctrine. That there was a coming of Christ in the events connected with the destruction of Jerusalem, might be readily granted without strengthening the position of Mr. N. or proving prejudicial to the opposite view of the subject; but that the Second Coming of Christ took place at that time, we deny point blank. At the ascension of Christ the angels said to those who witnessed that event—

Until Mr. N. can point us to the book, chapter, and verse, where it is said in unequivocal language that this prediction has been literally fulfilled, he must not complain if we refuse our assent to his doctrine of the second coming. Mr. N. assumes without a particle of proof, that Christ's coming at the destruction of Jerusalem took place in the spiritual world! But was not the ascension of Christ a visible event? and did not the disciples behold him with the natural eye when he ascended? Then if he is to "so come in like manner" as he was seen to ascend, will it not be a visible transaction? Most certainly. Mr. N. asserts that Christ came in the spiritual world; but how does he know this? He has not learned it from the Scriptures, for they teach no such doctrine. Where, then, did he find it? Why, forsooth, he assumes that he is inspired, and was taught it by the Spirit! And lo, his followers believe it! In all ages individuals have been found afflicted with a similar disease. A few years ago, when the Millerites were moving heaven and earth and compassing sea and land to make proselytes to their faith, some of the wisest—in their own eyes—among them, roundly asserted that the Spirit had revealed to them the precise time when Christ would make his appearing. With all such, reasoning was out of the question—entirely at an end. You might as well undertake to reason with a mad man, as with such persons. But they proved all their predictions false, and their revelations by the board. They might have been by a, but certainly they were not by the Spirit, in this matter. And so it is with Mr. Noyes. He and his followers assume that they are inspired and are receiving special revelations. They also profess that they are living under a new dispensation, as far in advance of the Gospel as that was of the Jewish dispensation. The followers of Noyes believe that he wrote the Berean by inspiration, and in their estimation it is as much more valuable than the New Testament, as that is than the Old! The word of John H. Noyes with his disciples is better authority than the sayings of Christ and his Apostles recorded in the New Testament. They receive the doctrine that Christ came in the spiritual world from his mouth as undoubted truth, without a particle of scriptural proof to sustain it, and even in opposition to the plain language of Scripture! The doctrine that Christ came in the spiritual world appears to be the mere creature of Mr. N.'s perverted imagination in its erratic wanderings. That his mind is subject to excursive ramblings is very evident from his own language.

In the Spiritual Magazine of March 15, 1846, speaking in reference to his future course, Mr. N. says:—

"Without pledging ourselves to any precise course, (for we cannot foresee very definitely the travels of our own minds) . . . we expect to extend our excursions freely hereafter beyond the province of Perfectionism into other and all regions of spiritual science."

"Beyond the province of Perfectionism"! Where is the man going! No wonder that he is already lost in the mazes of error! And we might as well undertake to follow the thunder-bolts of heaven in their travels through the trackless ether, as the fitful excursions of such a mind in its undefined and indefinable course!

But to return:—Nearly allied to Noyes's doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ, stands the idea that "perfect holiness is not a mere privilege, but an attainment absolutely necessary to salvation." If by this is meant that moral purity is a pre-requisite or passport to a full possession of the heavenly inheritance, we do not object; but if it means that no person in a state of justification, prior to perfect purification, can have a well-grounded hope of future happiness, we enter our solemn protest against the doctrine.

Next, as a distinguishing tenet of Noyesism, stands the doctrine of the security of the saints. Mr. N. asserts that "perfect holiness, when attained, is forever secure."

In support of this position he relies very much upon the following passage:—"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."—1 John 3:9.

Mr. N. rejoices over this passage as though he had found great spoil. He ensconces himself behind this— as he supposes—impenetrable shield, or invulnerable rampart, and is ready to defy the world in arms to meet him. The rigid interpretation which he gives,
If Mr. N. adopts the principle of exegesis that the term cannot implies an impossibility, we think he will find that in many cases it will prove quite too much, and will not always work well in its application. If he will turn to the 24th chapter of Joshua, he will find that the term cannot is there used without implying a moral impossibility. Joshua, after rehearsing to the heads of Israel the dealings of God with them, and cautioning them against the sin of idolatry, exhorts them to serve God; and the people replied emphatically that they would serve him. Then "Joshua said unto the people, ye cannot serve the Lord: for he is a holy God; he is a jealous God; he will not forgive your transgressions nor your sins."—Josh. 24: 19. "And the people said unto Joshua, Nay; but we will serve the Lord."—Verse 21. "So Joshua made a covenant with the people that day, and set them a statute and an ordinance in Shechem."—Verse 25. "And Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and the days of the elders that outlived Joshua."—Verse 31.

The sum of the whole is—The people of Israel asserted that they would serve the Lord—Joshua says, Ye cannot serve him—the people repeat, We will serve him—Joshua makes a covenant with them—and Israel then serves him. No person will contend that the term cannot in this case implied a moral impossibility, for matter-of-fact shows to the contrary.

Now if the term cannot, did not, in the case under consideration, imply an impossibility, it may not in other cases. That it does not when read by St. John, is quite probably, if not morally certain; for were it otherwise, all the warnings, admonitions, and cautions, as well as the exhortations to steadfastness and perseverance, addressed in the Scriptures to Christians, would be perfectly nugatory!

We have thus briefly noticed the points which Mr. N. has set forth as the distinguishing doctrines of Perfectionism; and we shall now proceed to notice several others embraced in the same system.

Let us hear Mr. Noyes in relation to the Primitive Church. He says:

"The Apostles, prophets, and believers, who were gathered into Christ during the period preceding the destruction of Jerusalem, are certainly still in existence. This no one doubts. They are risen from the dead, and glorified with Christ. This no one will deny, who believes that Christ came the second time according to his promise. But have they any concern with this world? Are they not laid away in some secret mansion of the universe, so distant that they have nothing to do with us or we with them? These are questions to which conscience as well as curiosity demands an answer. The fact that the primitive church has passed through death into the invisible state, does not prove that it has no concern with this world. . . . The first thing to be done in order that we may have fellowship with the primitive church, is to believe that it is a real, living church, and is at work over us and around us."—Berean, pp. 497, 499.

In the Spiritual Magazine of May 15, 1847, we find the following language:—

"The Magazine is the exponent and organ of a religious body whose direct ambition is to give the renewing power of God full scope in their characters, and to multiply their points of sympathy and attraction with the primitive church, until a perfect junction is formed."

In the Magazine of June 15, 1846, we read as follows touching this matter:

"Again, when we consider the object which is before us, of joining ourselves to the primitive Church, we shall not think it strange that we are tried with fiery trials. We believe that God has gathered a glorified throng, and that the church is one; and our aim and calling are, to approach toward it and enter into sympathy with it—to join it here in this world, and to invite it into this world. And the only way for us to join that church, is, to be strained up to the pitch of love and faith which exists in it. To use a vulgar expression, if we are to be welded on to the primitive church, both ends of the irons must be white hot. Cold iron cannot be welded. If God is ever to raise a touching point between believers here and his church above, he must find a way to bring up our faith and love to the white heat of heaven."

This is Perfectionist dialect, and it contains the Noyesite Shibboleth. Comment is uncalled for.

As being closely connected with the foregoing remarks relative to the Primitive Church, we proceed to give the views of Perfectionists in relation to the Kingdom of Heaven. Mr. N. Bumes that the commissions given by Christ and the Apostles did not extend beyond the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 70—that all the commissions since that time handed down in the various Christian churches are not valid—and that the kingdom of heaven exhibited in this world, and the divine authority derived from Christ and his Apostles, must stop at the destruction of Jerusalem "till we can find a church that can prove by unequivocal credentials that it is in conjunction with the primitive government."

Mr. N. takes it for granted that the Perfectionists have the "unequivocal credentials"! And from the foregoing premises he draws the following conclusions:

1. "The kingdom of heaven is not to be confounded with popular Christianity, Popish or Protestant.
2. "On the other hand, it is not to be conceived of as something hereafter to be instituted. Its organization is a fixed fact, and it is eighteen hundred years old. . . .
3. "We are not to think of our own sect as the kingdom of heaven. It can never be more than a provincial department of that kingdom. The seat of the government and of its chief functions, is and forever will be in the spiritual world.
4. "The way to 'seek the kingdom of God,' is to seek conjunction with Christ and the Apostles and the primitive church.
5. "When we pray 'Thy kingdom come'—we properly mean to ask that the spiritual organization commenced by Christ at his first coming and matured at his second, may be extended into this world.
6. "Until that organization shall be demonstrably extended into this world, we have no external vehicle of the authority of the kingdom, except the Bible.

The ways and means of entering into conjunction with the kingdom, of obtaining authority from it, and thus of establishing a branch of it in this world, deserve to be considered at some length hereafter.—Perfectionist, Vol. v. No. 19.

In the Spiritual Magazine of July 15, 1847, we have the extended notice, at least in part, of the kingdom of heaven, promised at the conclusion of the foregoing extract. At an assembly of believers "under the common roof," on the evening of June 1, 1847, Mr. Noyes put the following question and made the accompanying remarks:—

"HAS THE KINGDOM OF GOD COME?"

"We believe that the kingdom now coming is the same that was established at the Second Coming of Christ. Then God commenced a kingdom in human nature, independent of the law of the world. The church was then emancipated from the institutions of men, and commenced a course of existence under the sole management of God. That kingdom, having been withdrawn to heaven, has been strengthening and enlarging itself ever since. We look for its establishment here—for its complete extension into this world; and this extension of an existing government, is what we think and speak of as the kingdom of heaven which is now at hand. We at the same time have expected that its manifestation on earth, after a successful operation of 1800 years in the invisible world, would be by a different process in some respects from that by which it was originally formed.... The kingdom of heaven will be established here by a process like that which brings the spring on the earth. The primitive church, like the sun, will come near to us. The destruction of evil, and all the transactions of the last judgment, will be effected by a spiritual infusion from them of the light and energy of God. The resurrection also will come by a similar communication of life. We discard entirely those gross, mechanical impressions concerning these transactions which are common in the world. We are persuaded that all the powers of the world to come are to be let in, not in a formal, theatrical way, but silently, like a thief in the night, they are to be established in the world. . . . How shall we determine the time of its advent? What shall be the manner of our transition from the testimony, 'The kingdom of God is at hand,' to the testimony, 'The kingdom of God has come?'

"The difference between our situation and that of the primitive church previous to the Second Coming, is like this: Suppose it is universally understood that on the 20th day of March, at noon, spring begins. The natural declaration, before that time, would be, 'Spring is at hand'; but immediately on the arrival of the appointed hour, it would be said with one consent, 'Spring is come.' This illustrates the circumstances of the primitive church. The personal coming of the Lord Jesus was to be the definite signal, was to mark the precise period for them, of the institution of the kingdom of heaven. . . . On the other hand, if the spring comes as it usually does, it is not subject to any such arbitrary, definite rules, by which we can fix the exact date of its ascendancy. Its advent is not limited and determined by a certain day of the month and hour of the day, but by the progress of the sun's power on the earth. To determine the presence of spring in this case, is a more difficult problem than was offered in the other; but still, within a moderate latitude of time, and with a certain accumulation of data, it is easily done.
signal ones in which the ground is covered with snow. Thus with the common alternations of sun and clouds, which characterize the early part of the season, it is impossible to refer the advent of spring to any precise point of time. Yet we are certain that some time within the limits of April, that event will have taken place—spring will have come.

"Now if our theory of the manner in which the kingdom of heaven is to be established is true, then we are certainly somewhere in the transition towards it; and the question will sometime urge itself upon us, Has spring come? We shall sometime have to change our testimony from the future to the present form, and to say decisively, The kingdom of God has come. Sooner or later, we shall have to stand forth and face the principalities and powers of the world with this declaration.

"I will put the question, Is not now the time for us to commence the testimony that the kingdom of God has come? to proclaim boldly that God, in his character of Deliverer, Lawgiver and Judge, has come in this town and in this Association? . . . No more should we expect the full power of the judgment and of the resurrection, until we have made a decisive response in the boldness of faith, to that divine influence which is with us, and which only waits confession to expand into the full majesty of its nature. . . . Christ can do no more for an individual or a corporation, after his voice has wakened them, until it is recognized by them, and confession made according to the fact.

"The process of advancement in this dispensation, as we have said, is like the progress of the sun in spring. The work of spiritual development has been going on, steadily and silently, until we are finally brought to the question, Is not the kingdom of God in us; including all the elements of the judgment and the resurrection? Have not these closing acts of the great drama commenced? I believe we are now called upon to take our stand on this great truth as a corporation: and our confession of it to ourselves and the world, will be the beginning of a new development of its power in us. I am as well prepared as ever I shall be, to make this great corporate confession of Christ. . . . I think there is abundant evidence in the past, especially in the last year, that the judgment has begun. He that searcheth the hearts and trieth the reins of the children of men, has been among us, cutting between the righteous and the wicked, between good and evil in our own characters. In the most important sense, we have been conscious of living in the day of judgment. So of the resurrection. We have seen enough to prove that there is a power among us that can conquer death. . . .”

From an editorial note appended to the foregoing extracts, we take the following:—

“The discussion that followed these remarks corresponded in interest to the suggestions presented. The nature and effect of the proposed act, in all its bearings, were fully examined and illustrated. . . . All the believers present expressed themselves deliberately and freely on the subject under consideration. . . . Respecting the present existence and operation of the fire of judgment and the power of the resurrection among us, there was but one belief and one voice. It was seen that a new and further confession of truth was necessary; that it was the next thing before us, in the course of progress to which we have been called. It was unanimously adopted, therefore, as the confession and testimony of the believers assembled, that THE KINGDOM OF GOD HAS COME."

The reader will perceive from the foregoing extracts, that Mr. N. assumes much and proves nothing; but his followers, who believe in his infallibility, receive, as undoubted truth, every word he utters. He speculates upon sublime subjects, but his object evidently was to bring his followers up to the point, and prepare them for the doctrines of the Battle Axe Letter in all their practical bearings; for the announcement that the kingdom of God had come was the signal for the carrying out of those doctrines through the Perfectionist ranks, which is now being done, as far as circumstances admit!

Soon after the proclamation went forth that the kingdom of God had come, Mr. Noyes made the greatest pretensions to miraculous power. His followers acknowledged this power, and under these circumstances he put forth the following manifesto:—

"The kingdom of God is an absolute monarchy. . . So far as there is a true church on earth, it is a frontier department of this kingdom; and it will possess the great characteristics of heaven's government, viz., central executive power, and subordination. It will manifest in all its operations perfect unity of design, and true harmonious effort. To secure this, it includes a gradation of authority;—officers, not self-elected, not popularly elected, but appointed by God; whose credentials, if truly received of him, need no secondary influence to secure their respect. In fact, the credential of authority through all God's kingdom, from the Supreme himself, down, is not a matter of parchment, or a voice from heaven merely, but the possession of actual ability. Carlyle's doctrine is true, that 'might's in this just universe, do, in the long run, mean rights.' God's appointment to office confers on the individual ability corresponding to his commission; and it is as certain that his ability will make his office recognized by those with whom he has to do, as it is that in a mixture of fluids the heaviest will sink to the bottom. . . . In that organic body, [Christ's church] as we said before, superiority of every degree is a gift of power from God, which vindicates itself by an irresistible ascendancy over that which is inferior. . . . In this construction of the church, the autocratic principle of the kingdom of God is seen throughout. . . . Every Christian finds himself under a despotism extending far beyond any earthly rule."

From the sentiments expressed in the paragraphs just quoted, and from the fact that they were published immediately after the case of Mrs. Hall was noised abroad, we think it may be fairly inferred that Mr. Noyes wished to have it distinctly understood that the "central executive power" of the "frontier department" of the kingdom of heaven was lodged in him! Having as he evidently supposed established this point, he then proceeds to read his followers a lecture on subordination. This he deemed very essential. Relative to this point he starts with the questions:—

"What is the effect of this tremendous, irresponsible government upon individual liberty? Can freedom exist under it?"

In answering these inquiries Mr. N. designates two classes of subjects—the one wholly submissive, the other partially so. In reference to those who are wholly submissive he speaks thus:

"We believe that only those who have passed the quarantine of judgment and become naturalized citizens of the kingdom of heaven, know what is the glorious sensation of unshackled freedom of will."

That is, in plain English—Those who have passed the ordeal to which Mr. Noyes subjects his disciples, and have become perfectly submissive to his will, and on whom he has set the broad seal of his approbation, are liberated from all law except the will of Noyes himself! They may then do just as they please, provided that it is always their pleasure to do just as he wishes them to do! And Mr. N. would have them distinctly understand that in doing his will they are doing the will of God; for he sets himself up as Jehovah's vice-gerent—as His accredited ambassador—His representative upon the earth! "Under the monarchy of God," he asserts that "all forms of popular representation are dispensed with," and in the "organization of intermediate agencies," there is a "disregard of democratic forms and privileges."

The upshot of the matter is—John H. Noyes has an "ability corresponding to his commission"! And this ability is manifest in the mighty works he has wrought!

But in reference to the second class of subjects—those who have not become wholly submissive—he says:

"It is inevitable, in the first stages of intercourse with God, while evil influences still exist in the character, that his will should come into constant collision with those influences, and the wills growing out of them. The inner and better part of our nature is then free and happy; and it is only the selfish, egotistical part which loves darkness, and loves to do as it pleases at all cost, that experiences the effect of collision with a superior spirit. The effect is suffering; a bitter sense of bondage; coercion of the soul. No prison can realize the idea of helpless constraint that the soul experiences when conscious of a hostile contact with the will of God. . . Every spirit opposed to him, is destined not to slavery, but to destruction. . . He will have no drudges about him, no unwilling subjects."

As Mr. Noyes virtually claims to stand at the head of all principalities and powers upon earth, he thus gives his followers who are not entirely submissive to his will, to understand, that, if they would escape "suffering," and be freed from a "bitter sense of bondage," and not come in collision with his "superior spirit," they must yield implicit obedience to his will, and submit to his absolute control.

From the language of Mr. Noyes which we have just noticed, we should naturally infer that he was a finished aristocrat. Circumstances justify the inference, and facts confirm its correctness. We learn from a person formerly connected with the Association at Putney, that the followers of Mr. Noyes appeared to regard him with a kind of awe when in his presence.

There were evidently two classes among them—the higher and the lower. The line of distinction probably ran those who were wholly submissive to Noyes, and those who were but partially so. Those who rendered implicit obedience to the "acknowledged Head," and were his particular favorites, had special honors conferred upon them, and were admitted to peculiar privileges; while others had a humbler place assigned them, and must there remain till by proper discipline they were prepared for a more honorable station; and must patiently wait until the "acknowledged Head" was pleased to say, "Come up higher."

For the special benefit of the lower class, or menials, the higher order found it necessary occasionally to give some instructions. Some among them appear to have been ambitious of higher honors, and to reconcile them to their humble lot, soon after Mr. Noyes had given the necessary instructions relative to "central executive power" and "subordination," they had the following significant "hint":—

"In the household of faith, he is chief who serveth most; and he that humbleth himself is exalted. The spirit that disdains not the lowest office, that is diligent and does with its might what the hand finds to do, has a path of honor before it. . . . A disposition that is not fastidious and dainty, but will condescend to anything, is of high price. . . . Here [in the Putney Community] honor and service are balanced. Every one is rewarded according to his works. . . . It is here, of course, no privilege to be idle and luxurious—to be let off from difficult exertion, or even menial offices. Happy is he who loves to minister. . . . If ambition will take the form of a servant, and humble itself, it will be gratified perfectly. . . . Labor to enter into rest."
"The true gentleman and the true lady, are they who are most ready to serve—who take the lowest place, and are most arduous in their labors of love."

Thus the "path of honor" was marked out before them, and they were taught that the road to preferment lay through a scene of humble services and incessant labors. A very wholesome doctrine for the aristocratic part of the Putney Community, but a "hard saying" for the humbler class!
CHAPTER XXXVI.

Mr. Noyes has undertaken to solve the mystery respecting the origin of evil. He assumes that Satan is a self-existent and eternal being, and is the uncreated source of evil, as God is the uncreated source of good. The absurdity of this idea is so apparent that it needs no argument to confute it. How there can be more than one self-existent and eternal being in the universe, is left for Mr. N. to show.

In relation to human depravity he has advanced some peculiar notions. He assumes that there is an original difference in the characters of men, for which he accounts as follows:—

"As the source of all evil in this world is an uncreated evil being, it is evident that the ultimate principle of corruption in mankind is spiritual. Men are wicked because they are enveloped in the spirit of 'the wicked one,' and so are 'led captive at his will.' This is true of all, in their primary, unregenerate state.

"But there is a subdivision in the depravity of human nature. Adam, who was originally the workmanship of God, and a vessel of spiritual good, became by his fall a subject of the Devil, and a vessel of spiritual evil. The streams from the two eternal fountains" (i.e. God and Satan) "flowed together in him. His spiritual nature was primarily good," (only negatively good, we presume he means,) "as proceeding from God; but secondarily evil, as pervaded by the Devil. With this compound character, he had the power of propagating his own likeness; and in giving direction to that power the antagonistic elements of uncreated good and evil were both concerned. In fact, this was the point of their most radical conflict. As the offspring of Adam's body was two-fold, distinguished into male and female, part following the nature of the primary, and part the nature of the secondary parent; so the offspring of his spiritual nature was two-fold, distinguished like that nature, into good and evil, part following the character of the primary and part the character of the secondary spiritual element. In other words, Adam had two sorts of spiritual children—one of them like himself, primarily of God and secondarily of the Devil, of whom Adam was a specimen; the other, primarily of the Devil and secondarily of God, of whom Cain was a specimen. See 1 John 3:12. Thus mankind are divided spiritually into two classes of different original characters, proceeding respectively from uncreated good and evil. . . . The depravity of mankind, then, is of two sorts. The seed of the woman are depraved, as Adam was after the fall,—not in their original individual spirits which are of God, but by their spiritual combination with and subjection to the Devil. In other words, they are possessed of the Devil, and as to their voluntary or objective characters are totally depraved. Yet they are not subjectively devils. The divinity of their origin is evinced by the fact that they hear and receive the word of God when it comes to them.—On the other hand, the seed of the serpent are depraved as Cain was,—not only by combination with and subjection to the Devil, but by original spiritual identity with him. They are not only possessed of the Devil, but are radially devils themselves."—Berean, pp. 104, 105.
NOYESISM UNVEILED.

The foregoing speculations have no scriptural basis whatever. They are the mere creature of Mr. N.'s imagination. The Scriptures speak a strong and uniform language relative to man's depravity. They place all upon a common level; and the testimony is abundant in relation to this subject—it stands out prominently upon almost every page of sacred writ.

The views of Perfectionists respecting the holiness of Adam are expressed in short as follows:

"The Bible nowhere ascribes eminent holiness, or even any holiness, 'in the gospel sense of that term, to Adam. . . . That Adam was created in a state of perfect innocence, we cannot doubt. . . . But with respect to his holiness, (if it is proper to apply this word at all to Adam in his original state,) it must have been rather negative than positive; i. e. though he knew no evil, though he was free from all evil propensity, and from all guilt, yet he did not possess what we call tried virtue; he had not met and resisted temptation."—Perfectionist, Vol. v. No. 12.

Let us glance at this position. What is holiness in its essence but supreme love to God? This love He requires of all his intelligent creatures; and this requirement is based upon the natural relation they sustain to Him. Now if all moral beings are placed under a law requiring supreme love to their Creator, would it not be the height of absurdity to suppose that Adam, coming pure from the hand of his Maker, would be incapable of fulfilling the requirements of the law under which he was placed? If he fulfilled that law until he fell—which no one doubts—then he must have possessed the love required, and consequently been eminently holy, even in a gospel sense—for the gospel requires no more than perfect love, accompanied with its appropriate fruits.

But it is intimated that in order to possess holiness, temptation must be "met and resisted." If this be true, the Savior had no holiness until He "met and resisted" the temptations of Satan!—The angels that fell had no holiness before their fall; from what a height, then, they must have fallen!—And Adam had little or nothing to lose; he had no eminence from which to fall; he only descended from a common level a few steps downward!

But it is sometimes said that Adam could not have originally possessed true holiness, because it is argued, "Habits of holiness cannot be created without our knowledge, or consent; for holiness in its nature implies the choice and consent of a moral agent, without which it cannot be holiness."

The fallacy of this reasoning lies in confounding habits of holiness with principles of holiness. Habit is the result of acts, and acts of choice. A principle always lies back of choice, by which it is governed. There must be a right nature or holy principle before there can be a right choice. The principle in Adam from which right choice proceeded, prior to the fall.
self-evident, for we cannot suppose that God would create him less than holy. Moreover, the scriptures actually "ascribe eminent holiness" to Adam, inasmuch as they assert that he was created in the image of God, which comprised "true holiness."

The Perfectionist view of this subject, although it does not charge evil upon Adam, yet it deprives him of all positive good. Having neither holiness nor sin, or in other words, possessing no moral character, and becoming immortal in this state, it would be difficult to fix his final destiny. Having no holiness, he could not enter heaven—and having no sin, he could not be justly doomed to eternal death.

Mr. N. thus defines his theory of the judgment:

"As God divided mankind into two great families—the Jews and the Gentiles—so he has appointed a separate judgment for each. The harvest of the Jews came first, because they were ripened first. God separated them from the rest of the nations, and for two thousand years poured upon them the sunshine and the rain of religious discipline. When Christ came he said the fields were white. By the preaching of Christ and his apostles, the process, necessary to make way for the judgment, was complete. At the destruction of Jerusalem, the Jews as a nation were judged. Then the kingdom of heaven passed from the Jews to the Gentiles. Matt. 21: 43. God commenced a process of preparation for a second judgment. The Gentiles came under the sunshine and rain, which had before been sent upon the Jews. For nearly two thousand years the Gentile crop has been maturing, and we may reasonably look for the Gentile harvest as near."
Mr. N. asserts that the second coming of Christ—which he assumes took place at the destruction of Jerusalem—was "the day of judgment for the primitive church and the Jewish nation." He also assumes that the judgment of mankind "is divided into two acts, occupying two periods of time, separated from each other by an interval of more than a thousand years." One of these acts he calls the first judgment, and the other the final judgment.

Now the simple assertion that "God hath appointed a day"—i.e. a particular time, a definite period—"in which he will judge the world"—not a part of it—"in righteousness"—Acts 17:31—is fatal to this theory, and overthrows the whole superstructure.

But Mr. N. assumes that the final judgment has commenced, and is being executed by Perfectionists, but more particularly, if not exclusively, by himself! On the evening of June 1, 1847, he said:

"We are finally brought to the question, Is not the kingdom of God in us; including all the elements of the judgment? I think there is abundant evidence in the past, especially in the last year, that the judgment has begun... In the most important sense, we have been conscious of living in the day of judgment!"

But let us look at the nature and characteristics of the judgment as set forth by Mr. N. He says:

"The judgment of the world will be a gradual spirit-spiritual infusion from them [the primitive church] of the light and energy of God."

Mr. N. also asserts that he discards entirely the impressions which are common in the world, respecting the judgment! But let us endeavor to ascertain as definitely as possible the character of the judgment, and the office-work of the judge, as presented by the Noyes-ites. Mr. N. says:—

"The ultimate causes of all good and evil, are the spirit of love and the spirit of selfishness—God and the devil. Human life is placed under the power of these spirits, and in all stages of its experience is either subject wholly to one or to the other of them, or is in the conflict between them."—Berean, p. 256.

Thus, by the principles of love and selfishness, Mr. N. represents God and Satan. Perfectionists think they are living under a new dispensation—that this is the end of the world—and they talk about the judgment of selfishness! They think their Community is an unselfish association. But in order to enter it, the social ties must be cut asunder. Say they:—

"Those attachments and relations, whether domestic or social, originating and existing only in the constitution of human life, are obstacles to be surmounted. . . . However cutting and anti-selfish it may be, our property, ourselves, and every thing that pertains to us and ours, are to be sacrificed."

A member of the Putney Community remarked to a citizen of the village, that her body was going to the judgment! i.e. into the hands of John H. Noyes, to be disposed of by him! And in this way she was going to make sacrifice of self.
Mr. N. said to a citizen of Putney several years since, that he should yet sit upon the throne and judge the world! And undoubtedly he now thinks he is doing it. But it is presumed that the general sentiment is that it is a very small matter to be judged by John H. Noyes!

From all the light thrown upon the subject, we come to the conclusion, that, in the estimation of Perfectionists, the process of the judgment consists in separating between the selfish and the unselfish! The Noyesites profess to have an unselfish association, and all without is selfish. It appears to be the province of Mr. N. to distinguish between the two characters; and those who make a sacrifice of self, find favor in his sight, and are welcomed within the "charmed circle"; and those who do not make a sacrifice of self are rejected! Thus he is judging the world!!

In concluding this subject, we would remark that Mr. Noyes professes to be the white horse mentioned in the following passage:—"And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war."—Rev. 19: 11.

In the Spiritual Magazine of Nov. 1, 1847, we find the following language:—

"Christ is now going forth on the white horse, to judge and make war in righteousness; and the armies of heaven are following him on white horses."
Mr. Noyes occupies a position antagonistical to the doctrine of the resurrection of the body. He says he has long argued "against the notion of a resurrection of that body which dies"—and "that there is to be no resurrection of the body which sees corruption."—Berean, p. 355.

Speaking of a spiritual resurrection, Mr. N. makes the following remark:—

"'If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new.' [He has passed from a carnal state into the resurrection—from this world into the heavenly world; his state and relations are as fully changed, as the idea of a translation from earth to heaven demands."

The Christian Sabbath is discarded by the Noyesites. Nevertheless, on that day at Putney they usually met—merely as a matter of convenience, however—at their Chapel in the morning, and held a sort of service. There were several speakers, who usually, we believe, served in rotation, and each, from time to time, held forth upon a topic of his own selection, and—

"The truth of God
Turned to a lie, deceiving and deceived:—
Each, with the accursed sorcery of sin,
To his own wish and vile propensity Transforming still the meaning of the text."

In this manner Noyes and his little company of followers generally occupied the time usually allotted to the morning service in religious assemblies. In the afternoon they had no such gathering, but spent the time, after the manner of a holiday, in rambling over the fields, or riding about town—to the annoyance of the sober citizens—in their pleasure carriages;—the nobility occupying the best vehicles, and the lower class, those of a secondary order—for aristocracy was quite prominent among them. In the evening, after a great supper, they spent the time in conversing upon what they called religious subjects—what consummate hypocrisy!—fiddling, dancing, card-playing, &c., in short, any gaming or amusements which the spirit that was among them inclined them to follow.

After desecrating the holy Sabbath in this most revolting manner, it is more than probable that the leader

—"Then retired to drink the filthy cup
Of secret wickedness, and fabricate
All lying wonders, by the untaught received For revelations new."

—"These in their wisdom (?) left
The light revealed, and turned to fancies wild;
And visionary dreams,
More bodiless and hideously misshapen
Playing at will, framed in the madman's brain."

The position of the Perfectionists in relation to the use of alcoholic drinks, is found in the following extract observed effect of alcohol upon the stomachs of intemperate, ungodly men. Such men are necessarily diseased. Unbelief; or sin, is itself an unnatural, diseased state of the whole man, which gives a more or less poisonous effect to every thing that he eats or drinks, so that the most scrupulous dieter falls a victim to his food at last. The primary cause, however, we repeat, is not in his food; but in the unsanctified, devilish nature of his life, which converts to evil, things which are good. . . . Persons who are unnaturally diseased by sin, and who habitually eat and drink damnation to themselves, are not to decide the character of meats and drinks for persons in a wholly different state. It is as unreasonable for Temperance men to pronounce alcohol an invariable poison because of its effect on drunkards, as it would be for us to call water poison because it produces terrible convulsions in a person with the hydrophobia. The cause of the evil is as independent of the offending substance, in one case as the other."

We present the foregoing extract as a curious specimen of Perfectionist logic. The reader will readily perceive that the Noyesites have hit upon an expedient by which they evidently hope to appropriate the "good creature" exclusively to their own special benefit and behoof!

The position of Perfectionists in relation to amusements is as anti-scriptural and absurd as many other things among them. Say they:

"*There is a time to laugh, a time to rejoice and leap for joy—*and in such demonstrations only can we truly worship God. . . . Let us not have amusements without religion, nor a religion that is hostile to amusements. But let us marry religion to amusements."
According to their own declarations, their practices have been in accordance with these principles. The Editor of the Spiritual Magazine of May 15, 1847, writes thus:

"The body of believers in holiness in this village have this spring joined their households under one common roof. This change, as they expected, has proved in every respect useful and agreeable. Our evenings are generally occupied with conversation, reading, and amusement."

The nature of the amusements which they have attempted to "marry" to religion, will be discovered in the following extract:

"A wanderer from the West, a representative of a certain school of spiritualists, presented himself with us one evening while we were interested in the subject of 'Christ, our wisdom.' . . . He came with a design of mediation between us and those with whom he is connected, or for some purpose we know not what, professing to be directed by the Spirit. We passed the evening as if he were not present, in conversation about the Bible, our hearts burning within us, and joy in our countenances. Then there was music and dancing, and the exhilaration of good fellowship."

Thus they can profess to be interested in the subject of "Christ, our wisdom"—converse "about the Bible"—and then trip to the sound of the viol, on "light fantastic toe"—and that too all in the same evening! Thus they marry religion to amusements! and are ready to say, "in such demonstrations only can we worship God."
But they place a high estimate upon fellowship. Let us glance at their views touching this matter. In the Spiritual Magazine of Dec. 15, 1846, they say:—

"There are three degrees of fellowship that believers may have with God, and with each other. The first may be called Jewish fellowship; the second corresponds to the transition state of the primitive church; and the third to the fullness of the New Covenant. The first is simply friendship, mutual affection; the second is a closer union, but not secure; the third is an organic union which is indissoluble. Perfectionists have known considerable of the second degree of fellowship. They have had love, without the security. . . . Their union has not been an eternal marriage, where divorce is impossible. . . . But the third kind of union is coming to view; union which has the security—which is entered into like marriage, with irrevocable bonds. Two shall say to each other—It is a gone case with us; we are one for eternity. . . . A nucleus of this union has been formed, and there are some who have received of the Lord, a hope for each other which is steadfast, and a love which casts out fear. Love cannot be perfect while one fear remains that it will not always last. In the relations of this world, marriage comes the nearest to this union, in its community of interests, and in the abandonment to each other which the parties make, for better or for worse, and in the contract being for life. But a life union for this world is transitory, compared with a union for eternity; and the kind of companionship which exists in most marriages is very different from being 'fitly framed together.' . . . It is an organic union, which comes by growth and assimilation of substance, or it is like a building fitly framed together."
The reader will readily perceive that a taint tarnishes everything they touch, and sentiment and subject which they handle through a channel—which clearly indicates the ments and predominant feelings among...
CHAPTER XXXVII.

Concluding Observations.

The doctrines taught by Mr. Noyes and his coadjutors, together with their practical consequences, have been so far exhibited as to give, we trust, a tolerably correct idea of the nature and tendency of this new
ism. Undoubtedly the heart of the reader has sickened, while perusing the foregoing pages, at the recital of scenes which have transpired among the Noyesites at Putney and elsewhere, and in view of the deep corruption of this new class of people. But let no one for a moment suppose that the gross impieties and strong delusions which we have been contemplating are the offspring of the Christian religion—far, far from this.
Christianity is utterly opposed to all such principles and practices. For the leader of this sect to teach that the Apostles and primitive Christians approved of such infamous conduct, and practiced such gross immoral-ties, as he and his followers are guilty of, is a most blasphemous assumption—an utter outrage upon virtuous principles—the deepest reproach that can be cast upon the religion of the Bible, and the highest indignity that can be offered to the Divine Author of our common Christianity.

There are evidently those in the present age, as well as in primitive times, to whom the searching language of the inspired Apostles will for their characters appear to be quite similar. We quote a few paragraphs from the apostolic writings, which appear to be peculiarly applicable in the present instance:

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron. They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate. Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart; who, being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. And have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication and lasciviousness, which they have committed. But became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: even him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. These be they who separate themselves; sensual, having not the Spirit. Scoffers, walking after their own lusts. But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government: presumptuous are they, self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. These, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroy-reward of unrighteousness as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day time. Spots are they and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings; having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls. . . . For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption."

One writer very justly comments upon the prophetic part of the foregoing quotations, as follows:—

"It is wonderful to observe with what precision these prophecies have been fulfilled by the clouds of impostors who have appeared—'speaking great swelling words of vanity,' and fallen—since the inspired sentences were uttered. And it may be regarded as one of the evidences of the truth of inspiration, that had the long array of apostates and deceivers actually stood before the sacred penmen at the time of their writing, their characters all naked before them, the likenesses, from the first Christian apostate to the sensual Mormons"—and Perfectionists—"could not have been drawn with greater fidelity."

This strange delusion undoubtedly originated in the same fanatical spirit which has transformed many a Christian community into a moral waste—a spiritual desolation. The Noyesites proceeded step by step from one degree to another, till at last the measure of their iniquity became full and running over. One writer says:—

"These Perfectionists believe that they have the inward Christ—can do no wrong—that to the pure all things are pure—that Christ is responsible for all they do—and other such blasphemous absurdities. . . . In most cases, from the primitive heresy of Gnosticism, down to the Fifth Monarchy sect of the Puritan age, and even to the days of Joanna Southcote in England, and the Cochranites, the lascivious Mormons, and the sensual Perfectionists of the present day in the United States, the tendency, it cannot be denied, has been to permit almost every license of impurity. . . . In our own country, the most surprising instance of imposture and delusion, perhaps, that has occurred, was that of the Cochranites, whose enormities in licentiousness made so much stir in Maine and New Hampshire a few years since. . . . So atrocious was Cochran’s conduct, that he seduced great numbers of females, married and unmarried, under the pretext of raising up a holy race of men. The peace of many families was broken up, and the villain kept an establishment like a seraglio. His career, however, was happily short.”

The foregoing paragraph was penned soon after Noyesism had made its appearance; and at that early date it had given decided indications of its nature and tendency, but it has since so fully developed itself, and advanced so far, that it now occupies the front rank in that legion of impostures and delusions under which the world has long groaned. The writer from which we have made some extracts further says:—

“An examination of the history of heresies and impostures in all ages, will disclose the painful fact, that whether arising from enthusiasm, or phrenzy, or from deliberate imposture, a common character seems to have run through and pervaded nearly all,—and the tendency has, beyond doubt, most usually been to licentiousness and criminal intercourse between the sexes. This fact has not escaped the notice of the enemies of Christianity, who have availed themselves of it in their attacks, for the purpose of increasing the weight of odium with which they would cover it. Mr. Hume, however, has the candor to assign the true cause for the effect, viz. the strength of human passions, and the facilities of criminal indulgence, between the sexes, afforded by the frequent and intimate associations produced by congenial fanaticism."

This little volume has been prepared for the purpose of warning the public, by the presentation of simple facts, against cherishing a fanatical spirit. The writer has diligently sought for truth, and it is believed has succeeded in collecting a chain of facts, of a painful and somewhat extraordinary character—facts which it is very important should be known, that others, looking at their origin, and tracing their progress, may be deterred from entering upon a course in religious matters, which may lead to the same dangerous extremes and melancholy results, and ultimately end in the same or similar delusions, dark and deep, and equally fatal as those disclosed in this volume.

It cannot but be perceived that it is extremely hazardous for a person to set up a standard of faith and practice of his own, irrespective of the simple requisitions of the Scriptures, taken in their most obvious sense, and in their own native simplicity and beauty. It has been well remarked by Robert Philip, that "the men who would say to others, 'Stand aside, for I am holier than thou,' are Pharisees, who have little or no dependence on grace. In like manner, all who plume themselves on being special favorites of Heaven, and despise others as non-elect, pay, of all men, the least respect to the grace they pretend to have received."

Unquestionably one of the leading features, as well as one of the greatest errors of the age in which we live, and especially in our own country, is a strong tendency to ultrasims—ultrasims not only in religion and politics, but in almost every department of moral and philanthropic enterprise. We are running into extremes upon almost every thing we undertake. While there are some who are always on the back ground, extremely tardy in all their moves, and very reluctantly render even the most inefficient aid for the promotion of any moral or benevolent enterprise, there are, at the same time, others, who, instead of adopting those conservative principles and judicious measures which would secure the most lasting and beneficial results, become over-heated zealots, and by injudicious efforts actually injure any cause, however good, in which they may be engaged—their every movement tends to retard the onward march of truth, and put far away the day of final triumph. In relation to the ultrasims of the age, one distinguished orator has shrewdly remarked, that "often, when a good cause has been begun, if the Devil finds there is no other way to ruin it, he will turn charioteer himself!"

The facts detailed in the present volume should stand as a solemn warning against "this ultra, self-righteous and fanatical spirit—this seeking out of human and better, than the running after every new thing, and the following of so many blind guides, would it be for Christian professors to obey the injunction of God himself:—'Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.'"

Moreover, we learn from this subject that delusions are not confined to the low, the ignorant, and the vulgar; but may be found among the intelligent—ladies, educated and accomplished, and gentlemen of talent, information and wealth. How important, then, in view of our weakness and dependence, the caution, "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."
The rule of action under all circumstances is very exlicit: "Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."

We conclude this little volume in the language of another, the truthfulness of which must be apparent to all; and its application in the present instance is peculiarly appropriate and forcible:

"What is denominated fanaticism is often sheer, downright hypocrisy, both in the deceiver and in those who pretend to be deluded. By far the greater portion of those who profess to be deluded, only assume the character of believers in these impostures, for the purpose of thus freeing themselves from the restraint of those rules and decorums and obligations of society, which they cannot otherwise contravene without calling down on their own heads disgrace and punishment. It be seen that the imposture begins by railing against all the domestic duties, and relations of the social state: filial and parental ties, the marriage vow, the sanctity of chastity, most especially, form the subjects of their attacks; and the basis of every false religion is almost uniformly laid in the ruins of feminine purity, matrimonial faith, and domestic obligations.

"That those who have become impatient of these ties and duties, or who wish to free themselves from the necessity of conforming to the restraints of the social state, and travel out into the boundless ocean of licentious indulgence, should shelter themselves under the convenient mask of fanaticism, from the imputation of criminal excesses, and affect to become conscientiously lewd, or wicked from principle, is surely not a subject of wonder, however it may be of regret. Hence we almost always see the development and exposure of these impostures exhibiting to the eyes of the world a scene of lewdness and licentious intercourse equally degrading to the character of that sex, among whom we almost always find the first disciples of every new-fangled religious imposition, and to the character of rational and moral beings. From all I have seen and read of these victims, or accomplices of successful imposture, I am unalterably convinced, that what is called fanaticism, is oftener the cool, calculating offspring of a corrupt and sensual heart, than of a deluded, overheated brain. Nine times in ten, I believe it is only the veil behind which corrupt men and women seek a shelter from the ignominy of a licentious life, and cloak the indulgence of indiscriminate lewdness.

"In conclusion, it may be remarked that ERROR can only be overcome by TRUTH, and that they who have the 'TRUTH OF GOD' distinctly set forth in the book of Revelation, have an infallible criterion by which to test the true character of any religious opinion or practice.
And in the Gospel dispensation introduced by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the inspired volumes of the Old and New Testaments constitute the true and only infallible rule of faith and conduct; nor can any radical or fundamental error long escape detection when subjected to this plain and unerring standard."
APPENDIX.

Case of Miss Lucinda J. Lamb—Various Items.

The case of Miss Lucinda J. Lamb, a respectable young lady residing in Putney Village, is worthy of notice. The circumstances connected with this case transpired in the spring and summer of 1847, about the time of the going forth of the famous proclamation that the kingdom of God had come to the town of Putney and the Perfectionist Community located there!!

Miss Lamb, at the time alluded to, was about fifteen years of age. She was brought within the reach of influences which surrounded the "charmed circle," by circumstances which it is unnecessary now to give in detail. Suffice it to say, that she and her parents were deceived; and not suspecting that there was any dark design at the bottom, were unaware of the danger to which she was exposed. Meanwhile, the Noyesites resorted to various expedients and stratagems for the purpose of drawing her into the vortex of ruin; but happily their nefarious schemes were frustrated just in time to rescue her from the clutches of those rapacious monsters, the leading Perfectionists:—for, like voracious vultures, they were doubtless looking upon Miss Lamb as lawful prey, and they were evidently not a little disappointed that she escaped.

Mr. Noyes not only exerted his own influence, but his female helpers closed around Miss Lamb, bent on her ruin; and each, in turn, like "a serpent with an angel's voice," strove to indoctrinate and lead her along in the path to infamy and death:—and so intent were they upon their prey, that Miss Lamb was watched with a vigilant eye; and when she stepped out to call upon her parents or friends, some of the female members of the Community would accompany her, lest some counteracting influences might be exerted upon her, and the spell thus be broken. And this course was in perfect keeping with Perfectionist policy; for when they get hold they generally hang on, till the victim is fast bound and the ruin rendered complete.

It may be proper here to remark, that the circumstances which we are narrating transpired before the disclosures were made which exhibited the abominable lewdness of Noyes and his faithful followers; and when even some of the sober citizens of Putney were slow to believe that they would plunge into such gross iniquity. The parents of Miss Lamb were not over much suspicious, and were induced to let their daughter board in the dwelling where the Noyesites resided, in consequence of fair promises, and the deep interest which some of the members of the Community, with whom she had formerly been acquainted and even quite intimate, professed to feel for her. But the worst deception was practiced upon her and her parents, and the dark and infernal designs of the Noyesites were kept concealed from view. But the parents of the young lady ere long began to fear that all was not right, and at length became dissatisfied, and made some efforts to get her away; but to their surprise they found that an influence had been obtained over her which well-nigh proved fatal. And although Mr.
Noyes was peremptorily forbidden by Mr. Lamb to have any more conversation with his daughter, yet, regardless of this, he persisted in the same course he had been pursuing; and to show the deep interest which Mr. N. felt in this case, and the active part he performed, we give the following extracts from a letter which he wrote to Mr. Lamb while things were progressing:—

"PUTNEY, June 4, 1847.

"Mr. Lamb—Sir:— . . . I find it my duty at the present juncture to apprise you distinctly of the position which I hold, and of the course which I shall take in relation to Lucinda.

"You are the father of her body, God is the father of her spirit. You have the legal right and the physical power to dispose of her body—to send her where you will. God has the absolute right and the irresistbible power to direct the movements of her spirit and fix her heart on the kingdom and followers of his Son.—
Christ himself has distinctly forewarned us that collisions between his claims and the claims of earthly relations must occur in the going forth of his kingdom.—
"Think not,' he says, 'I am come to send peace on earth, I am not come to send peace on earth, but a sword.’ . . . It is at least supposable that these words are being fulfilled in your family — that your daughter has accepted the call of Christ and you have rejected it, and of course that a collision between Christ’s claim and yours is approaching. You will naturally reject such a supposition, and yet it may be true.

“I believe that it is true, and believing thus, I am bound, in the first place, to do my best to make you aware of what you are doing. I count it an act, not of enmity, but of love toward you, to say to you, ‘Beware of the attempt to take your daughter out of God’s hands. Let the potsherds of the earth strive with the potsherds of the earth, but wo to him who striveth with his Maker.’ . . . I think the present project of sending Lucinda away from her religious friends is as unnatural and as cruel to her soul, as it would be to take a newborn infant away from its mother. I do not believe that you will succeed in alienating her from her present faith or from us. Nor do I believe that she will make the improvement in worldly studies which you have in view. . . . I advise you to let her remain where she is.

“Your friend,

John H. Noyes.”

Notwithstanding Mr. N.’s advice and implied threats, Mr. Lamb removed his daughter to an adjoining State, and has ever since kept her away from Perfectionist influence. But to show the pertinacity with which they adhered to their purposes, we would remark, that before the letter was written from which the foregoing extracts were taken, Mr. Lamb removed his daughter to Fayetteville, a distance of ten miles, and committed her to the care of his son and some friends—hoping by this course to keep her away from the subtle influences exerted by Noyee and his confederates. But on the next morning after her removal, at an early hour, John R. Miller and George W. Noyes, both staunch Perfectionists and pliant tools of the Putney Pontiff, made their appearance at Fayetteville—though before they left Putney they stated that they were going to other places—and desired an interview with Miss Lamb. Those to whose care she had been committed, at first refused admittance; but young Mr. Noyes—who is a brother of the Putney magician, a Perfectionist dyed in the wool, and a no less personage than the Editor of the Spiritual Magazine—was intent upon an interview, and urged it upon the ground that he intended marriage with her; and falsely asserted, as we learn, that he already had engagements with her. He affirmed that his motives were pure; and as he was a young man who had previously sustained a fair character, aside from his many heretical notions, though now acting a feigned part behind the curtain, the friends of Miss Lamb at length consented, though quite reluctantly, to an interview. During that interview, young Mr. Noyes told Miss Lamb that he believed it was the Lord's will that he should marry her! and that in this he had the approbation of his elder brother. Now this must have been either a piece of sheer deception on the part of the young man, and designed as an inducement for Miss Lamb to return to Putney; or he afterward had an opposite revelation; or the "acknowledged head" otherwise ordered; for in a few weeks after young Mr. Noyes averred that he believed it was the Lord’s will that he should marry Miss Lamb, he was married to another lady! Before this took place he mentioned three young ladies—one of whom was Miss Lamb—and said he had no choice between them, and was willing to marry any one if it was God’s will; but that will was of course to be ascertained through his brother, John H. Noyes! Thus he made frequent references and great professions of submission to the will of God, when his sole object in entering into the marriage relation was that he might have “a dish of his own procuring” to add to the great supper which was fast being prepared. Notwithstanding his professions, his motives were probably about as pure as those of the butcher who leads the lamb to the slaughter!

When Mr. Lamb took his daughter away to remove her to Fayetteville, the Perfectionists exhorted her to steadfastness. Says one, “Stick to it, Lucinda”! Yes, echoes another, “Stick to it, do n’t give it up”! When at Fayetteville, several letters were written to her for the purpose of encouraging and strengthening her; and those letters were mailed at Brattleboro’, ten miles from Putney, and at a greater distance than Putney from Fayetteville; and all this when there was a post-office at their door in Putney. Were they afraid that the friends of Miss Lamb would learn that they were holding correspondence with her? Undoubtedly.

In a letter written during this time to Miss Lamb, John R. Miller holds the following very beautiful larrand we expect to have the privilege next Saturday evening....
We have very happy times at our house, more so than ever, all that is wanting is your presence to make it completely so. Though you are absent you have been the subject of conversation several evenings.... Mr. Noyes said he wished to express his entire approbation of your conduct, and that he was very much pleased with you."

In another letter written about the same time, Mr.
Miller continues the strain thus:——

"Our friendship for you and our connexion with you is nearer and dearer than any thing this world knows any thing about, and we shall prove to you in every possible way our love for you."

Mr. Miller also undertook to portray in glowing colors the beauty of making a sacrifice of self. He says:——

"It would seem that this world might be a 'paradise' were it not for the selfishness of man. How happy this world might be, if our hearts were filled with love—that love which seeketh not her own, but tries to make others happy."

To make a sacrifice of self, is to give up "every thing" to John H. Noyes. Thus Mr. Miller began to preach up the peculiar doctrine in characteristic style!
But he says again for the encouragement of Miss Lamb:——

"God is carrying on his work here gloriously and no power on earth can stop it. Let those oppose it and tell stories about us who choose, they are only making work for repentance. The Devil has been busy, but his time is short."

Arrant hypocrisy! Talking about the work of God going on gloriously among them, when the cup of their iniquity was being filled to overflowing!
Mr. Miller unwittingly spoke an important truth. He thinks the Devil was busy and his time short. That he was very busy among the Noyesites about this time, is abundantly evident; and the event proved his time quite short in Putney, under the administration of Noyes and his coadjutors!

Mr. Miller, speaking of two young ladies who had recently joined the Community, says they were "getting along nicely"! One of those ladies wrote a letter to Miss Lamb, accompanied by the following note: "Put this letter of mine where it will not be found—in the fire"!

Great professions of love and friendship were made toward Miss Lamb, and presents were given her to the value of about fifteen dollars, ten of which was in money; the object of these presents no one can doubt.

After remaining a short time at Fayetteville, Miss Lamb returned to Putney, and her parents, as a last resort, resolved to send her out of the State. They accordingly went for the purpose of getting her away from the Noyesite Community; but Mr. Noyes was highly incensed, and refused to let her go. He talked very insulting to Mrs. Lamb, the mother of the young lady—told her she was not her daughter, that she had no business with her, and that she should not have her. He "shook his fist in her face," after the manner of an demanded her daughter, which she had a perfect right to do; and was resolved that she should leave, and leave them. This in the eye of Noyes was an unpardonable offence! Mr. Lamb soon coming in, took his daughter away, and on the evening of the same day, accompanied by her mother, she left the State, and was taken about seventy-five miles into an adjoining State to reside, that she might be kept away from the Noyesites. Late in the evening on which Miss Lamb left, several persons were seen about the dwelling, supposed to be Noyesites watching for an opportunity to see her—not knowing that she had already left. For several days the stages coming into town were closely watched, evidently to see if she did not return—for they had instructed her to get away from her mother and return as soon as she could. Inquiries were also often made by the Noyesites for her place of residence, hoping to ascertain where it was, that they might still exert an influence over her by some communication with her. But in this they did not succeed. While she remained among them, the parents of Miss Lamb were satisfied that she was under mesmeric influences.

Mr. Lamb brought an action against John H. Noyes, John R. Miller, and Geo. W. Noyes, for enticing his daughter away and subjecting him to much trouble and expense, and the case is now pending in court. But the worst feature of the affair is that they evidently intended her utter ruin, and had well-nigh accomplished their object, but she was rescued just in time to save her.
In the case of Miss Lamb we can clearly see the course pursued by the Noyesites for the purpose of drawing young and virtuous females into the vortex of ruin. They do not at first, by bold and daring efforts, attempt this, but by secret and subtle influences lead the victim along, step by step, till the nefarious scheme is accomplished—and so impious are they, that they do it all under the name of religion!!

In the summer of 1847 special efforts were made to draw young females in Putney into the Perfectionist Community, the object of which no one at this late day can doubt. By reason of exercise it seems that they have become quite expert in “flourishing their spiritual weapons”; and if a person once comes under their influence, so familiar are they with the process by which to subdue and ruin the victim, that they think they can “calculate results with precision”! In the instance which we have noticed, they were disappointed of their prey; but they have too often been successful, for—

"Constant practice, day and night,
In cunning, guile, and all hypocrisy, ——Gave them experience vast
In sin's dark tactics, such as boyish men, Unarmed by strength divine, could ill withstand."
APPENDIX.

Various Items.

Noyesism is treasonable in its designs. Of this there is not a shadow of doubt. Mr. Noyes, in the Witness of Sept. 25, 1839, gives his views of civil governments, in short, as follows:

"Perfectionists believe that civil governments are ordained of God for good and important purposes in the present state of mankind; and while they exist, should be respected and submitted to as such; but they regard them as made 'not for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient,' as fences are not made for men but for cattle, or as straight-jackets are not made for men of sound minds, but for the insane. In respect to co-operating with them, their maxim generally is, 'Let the dead bury their dead.' They also believe that all human governments, though they are ordained of God, have charters of limited duration. They see in the Bible that the same God who ordained them, has predicted their destruction; and they stand ready to cooperate with him, whenever he shall manifest that the time has come for the establishment of that kingdom which he has said shall finally 'dash them in pieces.'"

That the Noyesites profess to believe that the kingdom alluded to in the foregoing extract has come and is established on earth, there can be no doubt. This they unanimously declared on the evening of June 1, 1847; and of course they now occupy a position antagonistic to all human governments! In the winter of 1847-8, Mr. N. drew up a long article, which was considered by him and his followers "too treasonable to human institutions to admit of its being published with safety" at that time. That article embodies the faith of the Noyesites in regard to this subject; and its principles they will carry out so far as circumstances will admit. Moreover, a correspondent of the Spiritual Magazine, writing under date of Nov. 14, 1847, says:

"Those who have the kingdom of God within them, may now assert their independence of the unrighteous governments of the world."

The Noyesites claim to have the "kingdom of God within them;" hence they not only now declare their independence of all human governments—which they do not hesitate to term "unrighteous"—but they are deadly opposed to them, and are laboring in every possible way for their overthrow! And they are so strangely infatuated that they believe they shall "carry the day" and ultimately succeed in all their movements. Silas Morgan, of Leverett, Ms., who styles himself "an Perfectionist of 1834 stamp, received of God, through John H. Noyes," (!) in a letter written to John R. Miller of Putney, under date of Nov. 7, 1847, says:—

"Tell brother J. H. N. the day of redemption draweth nigh, and will come in spite of all hell or hells in this world!"

There is some affinity or resemblance between Noyesism and Fourierism, especially in reference to organization. Touching this matter, Mr. N. in 1840 said:—

"I regard an external organization as bearing the same relation to a spiritual church, as the body bears to the soul. A body without a soul is a loathsome carcass. A soul without a body may live, but one half of its legitimate functions are cut off."

In 1846, Mr. N. said:—
"We have been Associationists theoretically for more than ten years, and practically in a small experimental way, for six years. So far as the external mechanism of society proposed by Fourier, is concerned, we have expressed no general opinion against it, but on the contrary are free to avow that in many points his philosophy well agrees with our principles. We will take this occasion to say a word about our experience, prospects and intentions in regard to Association. The history of the band of believers in this place [Putney] is briefly this: About six years ago we began the experiment of external union of interests. We have been deeply interested in problems which our new social arrangements have presented us, and have solved many of them in a practical way, with much satisfaction. With patience, and yet with enthusiasm, we look forward to the time when we shall be able to embody the union we have formed in appropriate externals—when we shall have but one home as we have but one heart."

In the Spring of 1847 they found the home they desired, for the "body of believers" in Putney "joined their households under one common roof." But the state of things there was destined to be of short duration. A rupture soon took place—"They burst the bands of their nature and leaked corruption at every stave"! And the Noyesite kingdom, not being able to stand in Putney, was transported to Oneida Reserve, in Central New York! One writer, speaking in reference to the Associative principles of Perfectionists and Fourierists, says:

"It may not be out of place to notice the affinity of Perfectionism and Fourierism. We regard the former as practical Fourierism—as the condition in which it must inevitably terminate. The theory of Fourierism is association—associated and equal labor, profits, property, pleasure, relaxation and consumption. It is based upon the assumption that all are equally industrious, equally honest, and equally capable—else the labor of one would support the idleness of another. This condition of things would require in the members of the association absolute perfection. Then, under the system of domestic relations now existing—that is, separate families—it would happen that the families would be unequal. One family would have a large number of children growing up, and to be educated and maintained; another might have none. It is not to be supposed that the latter would willingly see their earnings appropriated to the support of others, with whom they had no interest or connexion; and this would involve the necessity of common and promiscuous association, where all would have equal rights and equal privileges. This is Perfectionism. That it is to be the final condition of Fourierism, in its perfect state, is not denied by its advocates, but they insist that society is not yet so advanced as to justify this step. In other words, Perfectionism, and that only, is required to carry out fully the theory of Fourierism.”

That this country is not a congenial soil for Associative principles, whether they take the form of Fourierism or Perfectionism, is very evident. Not long since the following notice appeared in the public journals in relation to Fourierism:—

“The Fourier Association which was established on Lick Creek, in Illinois, and which for a time was supposed to be doing well, is now dissolved, and a partition of the property is being made. Thus has terminated
APPENDIX.

But scarcely have the expiring groans of Fourierism died away before we see Perfectionism busily engaged in opening its own grave!

But the Mormons are another class of the "same sort"! There is not only an affinity between Perfectionism and Fourierism on the one hand, but there is also an agreement in many respects between Perfectionism and Mormonism on the other hand. The Editor of the Gospel Banner, a little Mormon paper published at Voree, Wisconsin Territory, speaking of the Perfectionists, in his paper of Dec. 30, 1847, says they are "a people who have got a long way ahead of the other sects, and with whom we wish a better acquaintance"!

If by "other sects" the astute Editor of the Banner means evangelical denominations, he has missed a figure in his calculations! Christian denominations are not travelling in the same way, but in an opposite direction from the Noyesites. They are perfect antipodes—as far apart as opposite points of the compass! This Noyes acknowledges and asserts himself. He claims to have been the first who inculcated his peculiar views in this country or elsewhere. He also says—"I declare that I know not an individual out of the Bible, whose name is or ever has been before the public, who can in any right sense be called an endorser of my views."

Mr. N. acknowledges that no person out of the Bible is or has been an endorser of his views, and we are quite sure that no one in the Bible can be found endorsing those views; hence he is entitled to the exclusiveness of publishing them, and it is esteemed an one will contest the claim. We doubt not there will be one united voice as by acclamation, saying—LET HIM ALONE IN HIS GLORY!!

But the Mormons desire a better acquaintance with the Perfectionists. Now, whoever wishes to "scrape acquaintance," or be on terms of intimacy with the Nøyesites can have the privilege! Undoubtedly the Mormons and Perfectionists might be seated quite cosily together, seeing they are all of a piece. The editor of a public journal a few years since thus briefly and happily referred to Mormonism:—

"Of this modern effusion of a few distempered brains, we suppose most of our readers have either heard or read something. As for ourselves we had thought that its manifest absurdities were sufficient of themselves to expose its odious character, and to very soon annihilate its existence. Our attention has been just now attracted toward this offspring of intellectual delusion and wild fanaticism, by a communication from a worthy correspondent, detailing some of the movements of one of the leaders of this strange sect, who had succeeded in seducing a young lady from her paternal abode, and wholly alienating her affections from father, mother, brother and sister; these facts are sufficiently appalling, and worthy of reprobation by all honest and intelligent minds."

Thus it appears they are both pursuing the same course, but whether the Nøyesites are "a long way ahead" of the Mormons is a question about which we feel little or no concern.

In the estimation of Perfectionists Mr Noyes holds out the same rank that Joe Smith did among the Mormons. We take the following precious morceau from a catechetical Mormon creed, published just before the death of Joe Smith:—

"Who is Joseph Smith?
He is Jesus Christ's brother.
From whence is his authority?
From Heaven.
What kind of success will he meet with?
Universal; over the whole world.
Suppose the people try to hinder him?
They cannot do it; but will perish.
Why?
Because God has sent him."

The death of Joe Smith soon after the publication of the foregoing language, is a forcible comment upon Mormon folly.

Now, one of the followers of John H. Noyes testified at his examination before the Grand Jury of Windham County in the Spring of 1848, that Perfectionists believe he is God's beloved Son!! Thus the Mormons believe Joe Smith was Christ's brother!! And Perfectionists, believe John H. Noyes to be the Son of God!

Mr. N. sets himself up as being infallible! "Most fallen by such pretence." He "Tried to stand Alone unpropped — to be obliged to none;

And in the madness of his pride he bade
His God farewell, and turned away to be A God himself! ———
O desperate frenzy! madness of the will,
And drunkenness of the heart! ————
———His prophet,
APPENDIX.

He swore were from the Lord:
But with his life he wrote as plain, Revenge,
Pride, tyranny, and lust of wealth and power
Inordinate, and lewdness unashamed.
And that he was anointed, fools believed,
But knew that day, he was the devil's priest,
Anointed by the hands of Sin and Death,
And set peculiarly apart to ill.

Noyesism stands in our midst "dedicated to the goddess of infamy. Her worship is open and undisguised as the worship of Diana at Ephesus. Bold men in broad sunshine, without shame on their faces, are known as patrons and worshippers of this idol. Snares and temptations are laid for the innocent, and when a victim is secured, she is offered at once in sacrifice. A regular system is observed, and concert of action secured, that the cry of distress may not be heard."

Notwithstanding Mr. N.'s professions of holiness and infallibility, there

"Were rents
That in his garments opened in spite of him,
Through which the well-acustomed eye could see
The rottenness of his heart."

For he

"Greedily drank
The cup of spiritual pollution up.
___________________ His feelings were his guide,
He ate, and drank, and slept, and took all joys,
Forbid and unforbid, as impulse urged,
Or appetite, nor asked his reason why."

He might have been seen standing——

And whispering in their ears, with his foul lips:
___________________ And like a moral pestilence,
APPENDIX.

Before his breath, the healthy shoots and blooms
Of social joy and happiness decayed.
Fools only in his company were seen,
And those forsaken of God, and to themselves Given up."

His followers —
"For wisdom, grossly swallowed all be said Unsifted."

And —

"Thought that they alone served God,
And served him most, when most they disobeyed.
So on they walked, and stumbled in the light
Of noon, because they would not open their eyes.
Effect how sad of sloth! that made them risk
Their piloting to the eternal shore,
To one who could mistake the lurid flash
Of hell for heaven's true star."

But after the day of final decision, the following forcible language of the poet from which we have just quoted, will doubtless be peculiarly applicable:—

"His votaries, who left the earth, Secure of bliss, around him, undeceived,
Stood, undeceivable till then; and knew,
Too late, him fallible, themselves accursed,
And all their passports and certificates,
A lie!"

A person, who for some time was a zealous Perfectionist and well acquainted with Noyes, afterward said —
"John H. Noyes will come down as sure as there is a God!"

Dr. Josiah A. Gridley, of Southampton, Mass., in Sept. 1845, thus addressed Mr Noyes:—
"I know full well that the gallows is going up, made by your order; and I know just as well that Mordecai will never hang on it. But poor Hatman may in an extremity of which he little dreams. I know that you are smitten with blindness; and have already wearied yourself to find the door which the angel of God has shut against you. And the judgment of Sodom will overtake you unless you forsake its devilish atmosphere and ascend again the mountain of the Lord’s house above the fog of the bottomless pit.

"I am thus plain that if you must perish in such corruption you shall not have it to say with your dying breath that I did not warn you in faithfulness. A head or hand cannot touch you without defilement! Shame on such professions! They are not of heaven but of men"!

Dr. Gridley, in Feb. 1846, also addressed the following language to George Cragin, an intimate and accomplice of Noyes:

"John H. Noyes has raised the hatchet and severed the head of every one that would not bow to him. You have become a mere tool to execute his will. It is time his tyranny was resisted. His Christian test is, 'How much do you honor and revere John H. Noyes?' . . . His motto has ever been, 'If any man rides with me, he must ride behind!' . . . The tenor of his spirit runs thus, 'I will have you know that the Spirit of God shall not lead his own subjects, unless he leads them in subjection to me'!"

A correspondent of Noyes writes thus:

"When I was at Putney your sisters told me that it was common for you and them to go to the office and set type on the Sabbath; and that you not unfrequently met the people as you went back and forth, as they went to and from church."
APPENDIX.

"Give ME the leading influence," has long been the language of your ambitious heart!

"Had you carried out your acknowledged intentions as declared by the brethren at the time, when you started for the 'Five Points,' you had never denied insanity; as that only could have covered your sin!"

The foregoing extracts speak for themselves. Comment is unnecessary.

The writer has recently received several communications from different correspondents in the State of New York; a few extracts from which will now be given. An individual residing in the neighborhood of Oneida Reserve, writing under date of May 1, 1849, says: —

"Our Battle-Axe, anti-marriage people are rather twistical about exactness in relating circumstances. One advocating the abolition of marriage — for the substitution, unbridled license — visited me last fall. I asked him his sentiments upon this subject. He explained that he too was for free and mixed intercourse. — 'But,' said he, 'don't you let this out; if you tell of it, I shall deny it and so leave you in the lie.'

"Now, sir, what do you need to substantiate the fact, that, as a people, the Noyes Perfectionists are licentious and satirical? The Battle Axe Letter, written by their Pontiff, distinctly avows — though he used to veil the fact — that a time must come in the earth when promiscuous should supersede connubial sexual intercourse. He told Dr. Josiah A. Gridley, of Southampton, Mass., in 1838, that he expected to see the time when God would suffer men to be turned loose upon their neighbors' wives in order to break down the present institution of marriage. In his 'Corporation,' at Putney he constantly opposed the formation of all those attachments between young people which should always precede marriage, commanding the parties to love himself more than they did each other. All who broke over that mandate were compelled to endure all that implacable malice which his fiendish temper found means to pour out upon them. . . . I cannot possibly, from the preceding evidence, preclude myself from believing that the 'Community' is a horde of remorseless profligates. Many of their professed friends have admitted as much to me in private conversation. One female member was implored by a friend to deny the imputation that she had been thus guilty, and decidedly refused. Noyes admitted to John B. Foote that for two years preceding 1847, he and his 'Corporation' had reduced the 'cross-fellowship' principle to practice, such appearing to them to be the express will of the Lord!! Mrs. M. E. Cragin insisted upon the theory as correct, to my brother's wife! And, sir, I see no just reason, upon these very accounts, for shunning my conclusions as to their shameless profligacy. It is not necessary to demonstrate that they are practically lewd at this present time. They believe in the practice, and they will carry it out when they deem it expedient. That is enough."

Another correspondent residing in the immediate vicinity of Oneida Reserve, under date of May 7, 1849, writes as follows:—

"They [the Noyesites] appear to believe in promiscuous intercourse of the sexes, and advocate that doctrine. . . . They have printed some books which are considered as obscene and licentious. . . . There has been but little addition to their numbers from this section. I have a son, son-in-law, and daughter there. They joined them about four or five months since. My son, after he had been there about four or five weeks.
tion with my daughter, and my son-in-law with Mrs. M.
E. Cragin, and that they were all guilty of lewdness and other obscenity; and said he would stay there no longer, and was a good deal excited. He is a young man about 26 years of age and was single. He said he would go back, get his clothes and leave them forever; and went as he said for that purpose, and I have not seen him since. The next I heard from him was that he had married a Miss D. . . . My son also said that they believed in promiscuous intercourse of the sexes and practiced accordingly. I think he was over persuaded to stay there. At the time my son was at home he said he would testify to what he said, and I intended to prosecute them, but nothing has been done.
Their doctrine does not meet with much favor here.
There have been some threats made against them, but what will be done I do not know."

The course pursued with the young man mentioned in the foregoing extract is in perfect keeping with Perfectionist policy, and probably has some correspondence with a case which occurred in Putney just before the Community was broken up. A person broke away and stated some facts about the management in the Community; and Noyes immediately "took him by the horns," and he was compelled to "knock under."

Mr. Noyes, before he was arrested at Putney in the fall of 1847, was making inroads into families there, very much after the manner of the case of the injured and afflicted man which we have just given. With these facts before them we can hardly see how the people in the vicinity of Oneida Reserve can avoid coming to the conclusion — to which we understand some have already arrived — that the Noyesites there are a "lib time herd"!

We are informed by a person residing in New York, that "a man by the name of Abram C. Smith at Kingston, N. Y., a few years ago took Mrs. M. E. Cragin to be his wife and lived with her" as such! This same Mrs. Cragin was one of the most forward females in the Putney Community!

Let us here concentrate a few facts in relation to Noyes's conduct at Putney. In the case of Mrs. Harriet A. Hall, on whom Noyes pretended to work a great miracle, there is not a shadow of doubt as to his guilt! Mrs. Hall acknowledged this herself! In the cases of Mrs. Leonard and Mrs. Campbell, set up in the indictment against Noyes, there is no doubt—for he absconded and forfeited his bonds, which no innocent person would have done — and the evidence was clear in these cases. Moreover, there were two young ladies, belonging to the same family, drawn in and ruined by Noyes.* An action was brought against him for damages by the father of those young ladies, and several hundred dollars were paid to settle the matter — this never would have been the case, if he had been innocent of the charges alleged against him. A sister of the young ladies alluded to, was so deeply afflicted in view of the disgrace which the conduct of Noyes had brought upon the family, that it produced, as she said she believed upon her dying bed, the disease that terminated her life; and her attending physician gave it as his opinion that her disease was so produced!

The cases which we have cited have come to light. If the truth was known, probably many more might be added to the list; but to exhibit the heinousness of his crimes we need but to "Take one example, one of female wo.

Loved by a father and a mother's love,
In rural peace she lived, so fair, so light
Of heart, so good, and young, that reason, scarce
The eye could credit, but would doubt, as she Did stoop to pull the lily or the rose
From morning's dew, if it reality
Of flesh and blood, or holy vision, saw,
In imagery of perfect womanhood.
But short her bloom, her happiness was short.
One saw her loveliness, and with desire Unhallowed, burning, to her ear addressed Dishonest words. ———
With turbid phrase, well wove in flattery's loom,
He on her womanish nature won, and age
Suspicionless, and ruined, ———
For he a chosen villain was at heart,
And capable of deeds that durst not seek Repentance."

The crimes of Mr. N. are State prison offences, but he fled; and although his bonds were forfeited, yet the demands of the law have not been answered; and he can now be viewed in no other light than a fugitive from justice.

But Mr. Noyes, not content with spreading his licentious doctrines with all their revolting consequences, upon earth, would carry them within the precincts of the holy city! A correspondent whose veracity is undoubted, says:

"John H. Noyes once said to me that he believed heaven to be a place of greater sensuality than was generally believed" !!!

The ruinous consequences of such heaven-daring and utterly outrageous doctrines can hardly be conceived! The hearts of the young, especially, are grossly corrupted by contact with such revolting sentiments. And Mr. Noyes is laboring to palm them off under the name of religion!! What impious blasphemy!

We close this volume in the forcible language of a modern writer:

"Vice, unknown, and therefore unappreciated, deals its deadly blows under the deceptive influence of 'a strong delusion.' An enemy fighting under appropriate banners is not so dangerous as the pirate that roams the high seas for blood and plunder, under false colors. The rattle-snake that gives warning of its approach is not so much to be dreaded as the deadly reptile that steals upon you unobserved, and fasten its fangs of death when least suspected. . . . .

"New revelations have been oozing up from beneath. A religion of unrestricted liberty—a licentiousness without law—must now be enjoyed, that the passions and appetites, propensities and lusts, of this degenerate age may be developed in the many practical bumps of society. A wild and furious passion for blood-thirsting is fostered; and it is mournful to contemplate the
