CHAPTER III.

Ver. 2. Instead of ἐπὶ ἀρχιερέως, Elz. has ἐπὶ ἀρχιερεῖων, in opposition to decisive evidence. — Ver. 4. λέγοντος] is wanting in B D L Δ Ξ, min. Copt. Arm. Vulg. It. Or. Eus. A mechanical repetition from ver. 4. The verse bears no trace of its having been altered to agree with the LXX. — Ver. 10. τοίχωμεν] τοίχωμεν, which Griesb. has recommended, and Scholz, Lachm. Tisch. have adopted, is here and at vv. 12, 14 decisively attested. — Ver. 14. The arrangement τῷ τοίχωμεν καὶ ἡμεῖς is, with Lachm. and Tisch., to be adopted, following B C* L Ξ, min. Syr. Ar. Vulg. Rd. Ver. Brix. After γυναικῶς, Elz. has Φιλίππου, in opposition to decisive evidence. — Ver. 22. λέγοντωσ] is wanting in B D L Ξ, Copt. Vulg. codd. of It. Ambr. Condemned by Griesb. and Rinck, deleted by Lachm. Haer. xxx. 13) addition, which, echoing the expression in Acts xiii. 33, found its way into the narrative, especially in the case of Luke. — Ver. 23. Many various readings, which, however, are not so well attested as to warrant a departure from the Received text (Lachm. and Tisch. have LUKE III.

Many variations in the writing of the proper names.—Ver. 33. τοῦ Ἀράμου] Tisch. has τοῦ Ἀδριανοῦ τοῦ Ἀμενί, following B L X r Φ, Copt. Syr. So also Ewald. Rightly; the Receptra is a correction in accordance with Matt. i. 4; 1 Chron. ii. 9.

Vv. 1, 2. As, on the one hand, Matt. iii. 1 introduces the appearance of the Baptist without any definite note of time, only with ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἡμέρας ἐκείναις; so, on the other, Luke ("the first writer who frames the Gospel history into the great history of the world by giving precise dates," Ewald), in fulfilment of his intention, i. 3, gives for that highly important starting-point of the proclamation of the Gospel ("hic quasi scena N. T. panditur," Bengel) a date specified by a sixfold reference to the history of the period, so as to indicate the emperor at Rome and the governors of Palestine, as well as the high priest of the time; namely—(1) in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar. Augustus, who was succeeded by his step-son Tiberius, died on the 19th August 767, or the fourteenth year of the era of Dionysius. See Suetonius, Octav. 100. Accordingly, it might appear doubtful whether Luke reckons the year 767 or the year 768 as the first; similarly, as Tiberius became co-regent at the end of 764, or in January 765 (Tacit. Ann. i. 3; Sueton. Tib. 20 f.; Velleius Paterculus, ii. 121), whether Luke begins to reckon from the commencement of the co-regency (Ussher, Voss, Pagius, Clericus, Sepp, Lichtenstein, Tischendorf, and others), or of the sole-government. Since, however, no indication is added which would lead us away from the mode of reckoning the years of the emperors usual among the Romans, and followed even by Josephus,1 we must abide by the view that the fifteenth year in the passage before us is the year from the 19th August 781 to the same date 782. See also Anger, zur Chronologie d. Lehramtes Christi, I., Leipzig 1848; Ideler, Chronol. I. p. 418.

1 Also Antt. xviii. 6. 10, where σχῆν αὑσις τὴν ἀρχήν does not refer back to an earlier co-regency of Tiberius, so that αὑσις would be equivalent to μάνος; but this αὑσις indicates simply a contrast between him and Caius, who had been nominated his successor.

He held office from the end of 778, or beginning of 779, until 789, in which year he was recalled after an administration of ten years; Joseph. Antt. xviii. 4. 2.—(3) When Herod was tetrarch of Galilee. Herod Antipas (see on Matt. ii. 22, xiv. 1); this crafty, unprincipled man of the world became tetrarch after the death of his father Herod the Great in 750, and remained so until his deposition in 792.—(4) When Philip his brother was tetrarch of Ituraea and Trachonitis. This paternal prince (see Ewald, Gesch. Chr. p. 45 f.) became prince in 750, and his reign lasted till his death in 786 or 787, Joseph. Antt. xviii. 4. 6. His government extended also over Batanaea and Auranitis, Joseph. Antt. xvii. 11. 4, as that of Herod Antipas also took in Perea.

For information as to Ituraea, the north-eastern province of Palestine (Münter, de rebus Ituracor. 1824), and as to the neighbouring Trachonitis between the Anti Libanus and the Arabian mountain ranges, see Winer, Realkwört.—(5) When Lysanias was tetrarch of Abilene. See especially, Hug, Gutacht. I. p. 119 ff.; Ebrard, p. 180 ff.; Wieseler, p. 174 ff.; Schweizer in the Theol. Jahrb. 1847, p. 1 ff. (who treats the chronology of Luke very unfairly); Wieseler in Herzog's Enzykl. I. p. 64 ff.; Lichtenstein, p. 131 ff.; Bleek in loc. The Lysanias, son of Ptolemaeus, known from Josephus, Antt. xv. 4. 1; Dio Cass. 49. 32, as having been murdered by Antony at the instigation of Cleopatra in 718, cannot here be meant, unless Luke has perpetrated a gross chronological blunder; which latter case, indeed, Strauss, Gfrörer, B. Bauer, Hilgenfeld take for granted; while Valesius, on Eus. H. E. i. 10; Michaelis, Paulus, Schneckenburger in the Stud. u. Krit. 1833, p. 1064, would mend matters uncritically enough by omitting τετραρχόντος (which is never omitted in Luke, see Tischendorf); and the remaining expression: καὶ τὴν Δυσανιοὺ

1 In his Commentary. But in his Exeget. Handlb. he acquiesces in the text as it stands, and forces upon it, contrary to the letter, the meaning: when Philip the tetrarch of Ituraea and Trachonitis was also tetrarch over Abilene of Lysanias. Thus, indeed, the former old Lysanias would also here be meant.
some have attempted to construe, others to guess at the meaning. After the murder of that older Lysanias who is mentioned as ruler of (ῥαπτατίων) Chalcis, between Lebanon and Antilibanus (Joseph. Antt. xiv. 7. 4), Antony presented a great part of his possessions to Cleopatra (see Wieseler, p. 179), and she leased them to Herod. Soon afterwards Zenodorus received the lease of the οἶκος τοῦ Δυσανίου (Joseph. Antt. xv. 10. 1; Bell. Jud. i. 20. 4); but Augustus in 724 compelled him to give up a portion of his lands to Herod (Joseph. as above), who after the death of Zenodorus in 734 obtained the rest also, Antt. xv. 10. 3. After Herod's death a part of the οἶκος τοῦ Ζηνοδόρου passed over to Philip (Antt. xvii. 11. 4; Bell. Jud. ii. 6. 3). It is consequently not to be proved that no portion of the territory of that older Lysanias remained in his family. This is rather to be assumed (Casaubon, Krebs, Süsskind the elder, Kuinoel, Süsskind the younger in the Stud. u. Krit. 1836, p. 431 ff.; Winer, and others), if it is supposed that Abilene also belonged to the principality of that elder Lysanias. But this supposition is itself deficient in proof, since Josephus designates the territory of the elder Lysanias as Chalcis (see above), and expressly distinguishes the kingdom of a later Lysanias, which Caligula (Antt. xviii. 6. 10) and Claudius bestowed on Agrippa I. (Antt. xix. 5. 1, xx. 7. 1; Bell. ii. 11. 5, ii. 12. 8) from the region of Chalcis (Bell. ii. 12. 8). But since Abila is first mentioned as belonging to the tetrarchy of this later Lysanias (Antt. xix. 5. 1), and since the kingdom of the elder Lysanias is nowhere designated a tetrarchy, although probably the territory of that younger one is so named, it must be assumed that Josephus, when he mentions "Αβίλην τῆν Δυσανίου (Antt. xix. 5. 1), and speaks of a tetrarchy of Lysanias (Antt. xx. 7. 1; comp. Bell. ii. 11. 5, ii. 12. 18), still designates the region in question after that older Lysanias; but that before 790, when Caligula became emperor, a tetrarchy of a later

1 Of whom, therefore, we have to think even in respect of the Greek inscription which Pococke (Morgenl. II. § 177) found at Nebi Ābet (the ancient Abila), and in which Lysanias is mentioned as tetrarch. Comp. Böckh, Inscr. 4521, 4523.
Lysanias existed to which Abila\(^1\) belonged, doubtless as his residence, whereas it is quite another question whether this latter Lysanias was a descendant or a relation of that elder one (see Krebs, Obs. p. 112). Thus the statement of Luke, by comparison with Josephus, instead of being shown to be erroneous, is confirmed.\(^2\) — (6) When Annas was high priest, and Caiaphas. Comp. Acts iv. 6. The reigning high priest at that time was Joseph, named Caiaphas (see on Matt. xxvi. 3), who had been appointed by Valerius Gratus, the predecessor of Pontius Pilate, Joseph. Antt. xviii. 2, 2. His father-in-law Annas held the office of high priest some years before, until Valerius Gratus became procurator, when the office was taken away from him by the new governor, and conferred first on Ismael, then on Eleazar (a son of Annas), then on Simon, and after that on Caiaphas. See Josephus, l.c. This last continued in office from about 770 till 788 or 789. But Annas retained withal very weighty influence (John xviii. 12 ff.), so that not only did he, as did every one who had been ἀρχιερεύς, continue to be called by the name, but, moreover, he also partially discharged the functions of high priest. In this way we explain the certainly inaccurate expression of Luke (in which Lange, L. J. II. 1, p. 165, finds a touch of irony, an element surely quite foreign to the simply chronological context), informing the reader who may not be acquainted with the actual state of the case, that Annas was primarily and properly high priest, and next to him Caiaphas also. But according to Acts iv. 6, Luke himself must have had this view, so that it must be conceded as a result that this expression is erroneous,—an error which, as it sprang from the predominat-

\(^1\) It was situated in the region of the Lebanon, eighteen miles north from Damascus, and thirty-eight miles south from Heliopolis. Ptolem. v. 18; Anton. Itiner.; Ritter, Erdb. XV. p. 1060. To be distinguished from Abila in Decapolis, and other places of this name (Joseph. v. 1. 1; Bell. ii. 13. 2, iv. 7. 5).

\(^2\) It is, however, altogether precarious with Lichtenstein, following Hofmann, to gather from the passage before us a proof that Luke did not write till after the destruction of Jerusalem, because, namely, after that crumbling to pieces of the Herodian territories, no further interest would be felt in discovering to whom Abilene belonged at the time of Tiberius. But why not? Not even a chronological interest?
ing influence of Annas, was the more easily possible in proportion to the distance at which Luke stood from that time in which the high priests had changed so frequently; while Annas (whose son-in-law and five sons besides filled the office, Joseph. Antt. xx. 9. 1) was accustomed to keep his hand on the helm. To agree with the actual historical relation, Luke would have been obliged to write: ἐπὶ ἀρχιερέως Καίαφα καὶ ᾧ Ἄννα. Arbitrary shifts have been resorted to, such as: that at that period the two might have exchanged annually in the administration of the office (Beza, Chemnitz, Selden, Calovius, Hug, Friedlieb, Archäol. d. Leidensgesch. p. 73 ff.); that Annas was vicar (יו, Lightfoot, p. 744 f.) of the high priest (so Scaliger, Casaubon, Grotins, Lightfoot, Reland, Wolf, Kuinoel, and others, comp. de Wette), which, however, is shown to be erroneous by his name being placed first; that he is here represented as princeps Synedrii (טוע, Lightfoot, p. 746). So Selden, Saubert, Hammond, and recently Wieseler, Chronol. Synopse, p. 186 ff., and in Herzog's Encykli. I. p. 354. But as ἀρχιερέως nowhere of itself means president of the Sanhedrim, but in every case nothing else than chief priest, it can in this place especially be taken only in this signification, since καὶ Καίαφα stands alongside. If Luke had intended to say: "under the president Annas and the high priest Caiaphas," he could not have comprehended these distinct offices, as they were at that time actually distinguished (which Selden has abundantly proved), under the one term ἀρχιερέως. Even in xxii. 54, ἀρχιερ. is to be understood of Annas. — ἐγένετο ῥήμα Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Jer. i. 2; Isa. xxxviii. 4 f. From this, as from the following καὶ ἤλθεν κ.τ.λ., ver. 3, it is plainly manifest that Luke by his chronological statements at vv. 1, 2 intends to fix the date of nothing else than the calling and first appearance of John, not the year of the death of Jesus (Sanclemente and many of the Fathers, who, following Luke iv. 19, comp. Isa. lxi. 1 ff., erroneously ascribe to Jesus only one year of his official ministry), but also not of a second appearance of the Baptist and his imprisonment (Wieseler1), or of his beheading (Schegg). The mention of the imprisonment, vv. 19, 20, is rather to be regarded only as a digression, as the continuance of the history proves (ver. 21). The first appearance of John, however, was important enough to have its chronology fixed, since it was regarded as the ἀρχὴ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου (Mark i. 1). It was the epoch of the commencement of the work of Jesus Himself (comp. Acts i. 22, x. 37, xiii. 24), and hence Luke, having arrived at this threshold of the Gospel history, ver. 22, when Jesus is baptized by John, makes at this point a preliminary pause, and closes the first section of the first division of his book with the genealogical register, ver. 23 ff., in order to relate next the Messianic ministry of Jesus, ch. iv. ff.

Ver. 3. See on Matt. iii. 1 f.; Mark i. 4. — περίχωρον τοῦ Ἰορδά.] Matthew and Mark have ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ. There is no discrepancy; for the apparent discrepancy vanishes with ἔλθε in Luke, compared with the narrative of the baptism in Matthew and Mark.

Vv. 4—6. See on Matt. iii. 3. Luke continues the quotation of Isa. xl. 3 down to the end of ver. 5, following the LXX. freely. The appeal to this prophetic oracle was one of the commonplaces of the evangelic tradition in respect of the history of John, and betokens therefore, even in Luke, no special source; he only gives it—unless a Pauline purpose is to be attributed to his words (Holtzmann)—more fully than Matthew, Mark, and John (i. 23). — In ὡς γέγραπται the same thing is implied that Matthew expresses by οὕτως γάρ ἐστιν ὁ ἡθελός. — φάραγξ] Ravine, Thuc. ii. 67. 4; Dem. 793. 6; Polyb. vii. 15. 8; Judith ii. 8. This and the following particulars were types of the moral obstacles which were to be removed by the repentance demanded by John for the restoration of the people well prepared for the reception of the Messiah (i. 17). There is much arbitrary trifling on the part of the Fathers and others in interpreting \(^1\) the particulars of this passage. — The futures are not imperative in force, but declare what will happen in consequence of the command, ἐτοιμάσατε κ.τ.λ. Καὶ ὄψεται κ.τ.λ. ought to have guarded against the taking the expression imperatively. — On the use of the Cyrenaic (Herod. iv. 199) word βουνός, hill, in Greek, see Schweighäuser, Lex. Herod. It is an addition of the LXX. The salvation of God is the Messianic salvation which will appear in and with the advent of the Messiah before all eyes (ὄψεται πᾶσα σάρξ). As to πᾶσα σάρξ, all flesh, designating men according to their need of deliverance, and pointing to the universal destination of God’s salvation, see on Acts ii. 16.

\(^1\) Well says Grotius: "Nimirum est anxia eorum παρεξήγη, qui in dictis ἀλληγοριώμενοι singulas partes minutatim excutiunt... cum satis sit in re tota comparationem intelligi."

Vv. 7–9. See on Matt. iii. 7–10. — ὄχλοις] Kuinoel erroneously says: “Pharisaei et Sadducæi.” See rather on Matt. iii. 7,1 — ἐκτορῷ.] the present. The people are represented as still on their way. — ὀὖν] since otherwise you cannot escape the wrath to come. — καὶ μὴ ἀρξησθείς κ.τ.λ.] and begin not to think, do not allow yourselves to fancy! do not dispose yourselves to the thought! “Omnem excusationis etiam conatum praecidit,” Bengel. Bornemann explains as though the words were καὶ μὴ πᾶλιν (he likens it to the German expression, “das alte Lied anfangen”); and Fritzsche, ad Matth. p. 540, as if it meant καὶ μὴ δέ, ne quidem. Comp. also Bengel.

Vv. 10, 11. Special instructions on duty as far as ver. 14 peculiar to Luke, and taken from an unknown source. — ὀὖν] in pursuance of what was said vv. 7–9. — ποιήσωμεν] (see the critical remarks) is deliberative. On the question itself, comp. Acts ii. 37, xvi. 30. — μεταδότω] namely, a χιτών. — ὁ ἐχὼν βρώματα] not: “qui cibis abundat,” Kuinoel, following older commentators. The demand of the stern preacher of repentance is greater; it is that of self-denying love, as it is perfected from the mouth of Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount.

1 The generalization proves nothing on behalf of Luke’s having been ignorant of our Matthew (Weiss). From such individual instances an easy argument is drawn, but with great uncertainty, especially as Luke knew and made use of a multitude of evangelistic sources of which we know nothing.

Ver. 14. Στρατιώμενοι] those who were engaged in military service, an idea less extensive than στρατιώσαται. See the passages in Wetstein. Historically, it is not to be more precisely defined. See references in regard to Jewish military service in Grotius. According to Michaelis, there were Thracians, Germans, and Galatians in the service of Herod in his war against Aretas; but this war was later, and certainly Jewish soldiers are meant. According to Ewald: soldiers who were chiefly engaged in police inspection, e.g. in connection with the customs. — καὶ ἣµεῖς] we also. They expect an injunction similar (καὶ) to that which the publicans received. — διασείειν] to do violence to, is used by later writers of exactions by threats and other kinds of annoyance (to lay under contribution), as conscienter. Comp. 3 Macc. vii. 21; see Wetstein, and Schneider, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 9. 1. — συκοφαντεῖν, in its primitive meaning, although no longer occurring in this sense, is to be a fig-shower. According to the usual view (yet see in general, Ast, ad Plat. Rep. p. 362; Westermann, ad Plat. Sol. 24), it was applied to one who denounced for punishment those who transgressed the prohibition of the export of figs from Attica. According to the actual usage, it means to denounce falsely, to traduce, and, as in this place, to be guilty of chicanery. It is often thus used also in the Greek writers. See Rettig in the Stud. u. Krit. 1838, p. 775 ff.; Becker, Char. I. p. 289 ff. Ποιηρὼν, ποιηρὸν ὁ συκοφάντης ἀεὶ καὶ βάσκανον, Dem. 307. 23; Herbst, ad Xen. Symp. iv. 30, p. 79 f.

Ver. 15. Statement of the circumstances which elicited the following confession; although not found in Matthew and Mark, it has not been arbitrarily constructed by Luke (Weisse) in order to return again to the connection, ver. 9 (Hilgenfeld, Holtzmann), but was probably derived from the same source as ver. 10 ff., and at all events it is in keeping with the impression made by the appearance of John, and his preaching of baptism and repentance. Comp. John i. 25, where the more immediate occasion is narrated.—προσδοκώντων] while the people were in expectation. The people were eagerly listening—for what? This is shown in what follows, namely, for an explanation by John about himself. Comp. Acts xxvii. 33. —μὴ ποτὲ] whether not perchance. As to καὶ with πολλά, see Blomfield, ad Aesch. Pers. 249; Kühner, ad Xen. Acts viii. 25, 40, xiv. 21, xvi. 10; Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 268.—ὁ δὲ Ἡρώδης κ.τ.λ.] an historical digression in which several details are brought together in brief compass for the purpose of at once completing the delineation of John in its chief features. To that description also belonged the contrast between his work (εὐθηγελίζ. τ. λαὸν) and his destiny. The brief intimation of vv. 19, 20 was sufficient for this.—ἐλεγχόμενος κ.τ.λ.] See Matt. xiv. 3 f.—καὶ περὶ πάντων κ.τ.λ.] peculiar to Luke, but, as we gather from Mark vi. 20, essentially historical. The πουσρῶν, attracted with it, stands thus according to classical usage.

Vv. 21, 22. See on Matt. iii. 13–17; Mark i. 9–11. — ἐγένετο δὲ κ.τ.λ.] resumes the thread dropped at ver. 18 in order to add another epitomized narrative, namely, that of the baptism of Jesus. — ἐν τῷ βαπτισθῆναι κ.τ.λ.] Whilst 1 the assembled people (an hyperbolical expression) were being baptized, it came to pass when Jesus also (καὶ) was baptized and was praying, the heaven was opened, etc. The entire people was therefore present (in opposition to Kuinoel, Krabbe, and others). The characteristic detail, καὶ πρὸσευχ., is peculiar to Luke. — σωματικῷ εἰδεὶ ὦσεὶ περιστ.] so that He appeared as a bodily dove. See, moreover, on Matthew.

Ver. 23. Ἁὐτὸς] as Matt. iii. 4: He Himself, to whom this divine σμηνεῖον, ver. 22, pointed. — ἦν ὦσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα ἄρχόμενος] He was about thirty years of age (comp. ii. 42; Mark v. 42), when He made the beginning, 2 viz. of His Messianic office. This limitation of the meaning of ἄρχόμενος results from ver. 22, in which Jesus is publicly and solemnly announced by God as the Messiah. So Origen, Euthymius Zigabenus, Jansen, Er. Schmid, Spanheim, Calovius, Clericus, Wolf, Bengel, Griesbach (in Velthuizen, Comment. I. p. 358), Kuinoel, Anger (Tempor. rat. p. 19), de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Ewald, Hengstenberg, Bleek, and others. With the reception of his baptismal consecration, Jesus entered on the 1 Bleek is in error (following de Wette) when he translates: when . . . He was baptized. See ii. 27, viii. 40, ix. 36, xi. 37, xiv. 1, xix. 15, xxiv. 30; in general, Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 226 f. [E. T. 264].

2 So also Paulus, only that, after the example of Calvisius, he further attaches ὁ to ἄρχόμενος, in which case, however, it would be useless, and the subsequent genealogy would be without any connecting link. Wieseler, Chronol. Synops. p. 125, placing ἄρχόμενος before ὦσι (so Lachmann in the margin and Tischendorf), explains: “and he was—namely, Jesus when He began—about thirty years of age.” Therefore in the most essential point his view is in agreement with ours.
commencement of His destined ministry. Comp. Mark i. 1; Acts i. 21 f., x. 37. The interpretation given by others: "Incipiebat antem Jesus annorum esse fere triginta," Castalio (so Luther, Erasmus, Beza, Vatablus, and many more), could only be justified either by the original running: ἦρξατο εἶναι ὦσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα, or ἦν ὦσεὶ ἐτοὺς τριακοστοῦ ἄρχόμενος. It is true that Grotius endeavours to fortify himself in this interpretation by including in the clause the following ὅν, so that ἄρχομαί ὅν ἐτῶν τριάκοντα might mean: incepio jam esse tricenarius. But even if ἦν... ὅν be conjoined in Greek usage (see Bornemann, ad Xen. Cyr. ii. 3. 13, p. 207, Leipzig), how clumsy would be the expression ἦν ἄρχόμενος ὅν, incipiebat esse! and, according to the arrangement of the words, quite intolerable. Even ἐρχόμενος has been conjectured (Casaubon).— ὅν belongs to νῦς Ἰωσὴφ, and ὅς ἐνομίζετο, as he was considered (ὡς ἐδόκει τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις; ὡς γὰρ ἡ ἀλήθεια εἰχεν, οὐκ ἦν νῦς αὐτοῦ, Euthymius Zigabenus), is a parenthesis. Paulus, who connects ὅν with ἄρχομ., explains: according to custom (Jesus did not begin His ministry sooner). Comp. on Acts xvi. 13. It is true the connecting of the two participles ἄρχόμενος ὅν would not in itself be ungrammatical (see Pflugk, ad Hec. 358); but this way of looking at the matter is altogether wrong, because, in respect of the appearance of the Messiah, there could be no question of a custom at all, and the fixing of the age of the Levites (Num. iv. 3, 47), which, moreover, was not a custom, but a law, has nothing to do with the appearance of a prophet, and especially of the Messiah. Comp. further, on ὃς ἐνομίζ., Dem. 1022. 16: οἱ νομίζομεν οὖ ὑπεχε, μὴ ὅντες δὲ γένει ἐξ αὐτῶν, and the passages in Wetstein. Others (quoted by Wolf, and Wolf himself, Rosenmüller, Osiannder) refer ὅν to τοῦ Ἡλί: existens (cum putaretur filius Josephi) filius, i.e. nepos Eli. So also Schleyer in the Theol. Quartalschr. 1836, p. 540 ff. Even Wieseler (in the Stud. u. Krit. 1845, p. 361 ff.) has condescended in like manner (comp. Lightfoot, p. 750) to the desperate expedient of exegetically making it out to be a genealogical tree of Mary thus: “being a son, as it was thought, of Joseph (but, in fact, of Mary), of Eli,” etc. Wieseler supports his view by the fact that he reads, with Lachmann and Tischendorf, ὃς ἐνομίζεις after υἱὸς (B L Ν), and on weaker evidence reads before Ὂωσίφ the τοῦ which is now again deleted even by Tischendorf. But as, in respect of the received arrangement of ὃς ἐνομ., it is only the ὁν υἱὸς Ὂωσίφ, and nothing more (in opposition to Bengel), that is marked out as coming under the ὃς ἐνομίζετο, so also is it in the arrangement of Lachmann (only that the latter actually brings into stronger prominence the supposed filial relationship to Joseph); and if τοῦ is read before Ὂωσίφ, no change even in that case arises in the meaning. ¹ For it is not υἱὸς that would have to be supplied in every following clause, so that Jesus should be designated as the son of each of the persons named, even up to τοῦ Θεου inclusively (so Lightfoot, Bengel), but υἱὸς (after τοῦ), as the nature of the genealogical table in itself presents it,² making τοῦ Θεου also dogmatically indubitable; since, according to Luke's idea of the divine sonship of Jesus, it could not occur to him to represent this divine sonship as having been effected through Adam. No; if Luke had thought what Wieseler reads between the lines in ver. 23, that, namely, Eli was Mary's father, he would have known how to express it, and would have written something like this: ὁν, ὃς μὲν ἐνομίζετο, υἱὸς Ὂωσίφ, ὁντος (xxiii. 47, xxiv. 34) ἐδέ Μαρλας τοῦ ἁλί κ.τ.λ. But he desires to give the genealogy of Jesus on the side of His foster-father Joseph; therefore he writes simply as we read, and as the fact that he wished to express required. As to the originally Ebionitic point of view of the genealogies in Matthew and Luke, see on Matt. i. 17, Remark 3.

Remark.—All attempts to fix the year in which Jesus was born by means of the passage before us are balked by the ὁς ἐνομ. of ver. 23. Yet the era of Dionysius bases its date, although incorrectly (754 after the foundation of Rome), on Luke iii.

² Instances of a quite similar kind of stringing on the links of a genealogy one after the other by τοῦ are found in Herod. iv. 157, vii. 204, viii. 131, and others in Wetstein. The Vulgate is right in simply reading, "filius Joseph. qui fuit Heli, qui fuit Matthat," etc.
1, 23. Hase, L. J. § 26, follows it, setting aside, because of its mythical associations, the account of Matthew, that the first childhood of Jesus occurred as early as the time of the reign of Herod the Great. But these legendary ingredients do not justify our rejecting a date fixed by a simple reference to the history of the time, for it is rather to be regarded as the nucleus around which the legend gathered. As, however, Herod died in 750 (Anger, Ital. tempor. p. 5 f.; Wieseler, Chronol. Synopse, p. 50 ff.), the era of Dionysius is at any rate at least about four years in error. If, further, it be necessary, according to this, to place the birth of Jesus before the death of Herod, which occurred in the beginning of April, then, even on the assumption that He was born as early as 750 (according to Wieseler, in February of that year), it follows that at the time when the Baptist, who was His senior only by a few months, appeared—according to iii. 1, in the year from the 19th August 781 to 782—He would be about thirty-one years of age, which perfectly agrees with the ωσί of ver. 23, and the round number τριάντα; in which case it must be assumed as certain (comp. Mark i. 9) that He was baptized very soon after the appearance of John, at which precise point His Messianic ἀρχή commenced. If, however, as according to Matt. ii. 7, 16 is extremely probable, the birth of Jesus must be placed as early as perhaps a year before the date given above,¹ even the age that thus results of about thirty-two years is sufficiently covered by the indefinite statement of the passage before us; and the year 749 as the year of Christ's birth tallies well enough with the Baptist beginning to preach in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius.²

¹ Not "at least two years, probably even four or more years," Keim, D. geschichtl. Christus, p. 140.
² From the fact that, according to the evangelists, Jesus after His baptism began His public official ministry without the intervention of any private teaching, the opinion of the younger Bunsen (The Hidden Wisdom of Christ, etc., London 1865, II. p. 461 ff.)—that the Lord, at the beginning of His official career, was forty-six years of age—loses all foundation: It rests upon the misunderstanding of John ii. 20 f., viii. 57, which had already occurred in the case of Irenæus. See, on the other hand, Rösch in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1866, p. 4 ff. The assumption of the latter, that the year 2 before the era of Dionysius was the year of Christ's birth, rests in accordance with ancient tradition, to be sure, yet on the very insecure foundation of the appearance of the star in the history of the Magi, and on distrust of the chronology of Herod and his sons as set forth by Josephus, for which Rösch has not adduced sufficient reasons.
Ver. 27. Τοῦ Ζωροβάβελ, τοῦ Σαλαθίλ] The objection that in this place Luke, although giving the line of David through Nathan, still introduces the same two celebrated names, and at about the same period as does Matt. i. 12, is not arbitrarily to be got rid of. The identity of these persons has been denied (so, following older commentators, Paulus, Olshausen, Osiander, Wieseler, Bleek), or a levirate marriage has been suggested as getting quit of the difficulty (so, following older commentators, Ebrard, who says that Matthew mentions the legal, Luke the natural father of Salathiel), or it has been supposed (so Hofmann, Weissag. v. Erfüll. II. p. 37) that Salathiel adopted Zerubbabel. But the less reliance can be placed on such arbitrary devices in proportion as historical warranty as to details is wanting in both the divergent genealogies, although they both profess to give a genealogy of Joseph. The attempt to reconcile the two must be given up. It is otherwise in respect of the names Amos and Nahum, ver. 25, which cannot be identified with the well-known prophets, and in respect of the names Levi, Simeon, Juda, Joseph, vv. 29, 30, which cannot be identified with the sons of Jacob, as (in opposition to B. Bauer) is shown by the great difference of time.

Ver. 36. Τοῦ Καίνα] In Gen. x. 24, xi. 12; 1 Chron. i. 24. Shalach (_HOLD:) is named as the son of Arphaxad. But the genealogy follows the LXX. in Gen. (as above); and certainly the name of Kenan also originally stood in Genesis, although the author of 1 Chronicles may not have read it in his copy of Genesis. See Bertheau on 1 Chron. p. 6.

Remark.—The genealogy in Luke, who, moreover, in accordance with his Pauline universalism carries on the genealogical line up to Adam, is appropriately inserted at this point, just where the Messianic consecration of Jesus and the commencement therewith made of His ministry are related. Hence, also, the genealogy is given in an ascending line, as Luke did not intend, like Matthew, to begin his Gospel just at the birth of Jesus, but went much further back and started with the conception and birth of the Baptist; so in Luke the proper and, in so far as the historical connection was concerned, the right place for the genealogy could not have been, as in Matthew, at the beginning of the Gospel. Comp. Köstlin, p. 306.—In its contents the genealogy is extremely different from that in Matthew, since from Joseph to David, Luke has far more and almost throughout different links in the genealogy; since Matthew gives the line of Solomon, while Luke gives that of Nathan (2 Sam. v. 14; 1 Chron. iii. 5), although he introduces into it from the former Σαλαμίνι and Ζερεβί. Seeking in several ways to get rid of this last-mentioned difficulty (see on ver. 27), many have assumed that Matthew gives the genealogy of Joseph, while Luke gives that of Mary. To reconcile this with the text, τῶν Ἱλᾶ has been taken to mean: the son-in-law of Eli, as, following many older commentators (Luther, also Chemnitz, Calovius, Bengel), Paulus, Olshausen, Krabbe, Ebrard, Riggenbach, Bisping, and others will have it; but this, according to the analogy of the rest of the links in the chain, is quite impossible. The attempt has been made to connect with this the hypothesis of Epiphanius, Grotius, Michaelis, and others, that Mary was an heiress, whose husband must therefore have belonged to the same family, and must have had his name inscribed in their family register (Michaelis, Olshausen); but this hypothesis itself, while it is equally objectionable in being arbitrary, and in going too far in its application, leaves the question altogether unsolved whether the law of the heiress was still in force at that time (see on Matt. i. 17, Rem. 2), even apart from the fact that Mary’s Davidic descent is wholly without proof, and extremely doubtful. See on i. 36, ii. 4. Another evasion, with a view to the appropriation of the genealogy to Mary, as well as that of Wieseler, is already refuted1 at ver. 23. See also Bleek, Beitr. p. 101 f.—Hence the conclusion must be maintained, that Luke also gives the genealogy of Joseph. But if this be so, how are we to reconcile the genealogy with that given in Matthew? It has been supposed that Joseph was adopted (Augustine, de consens. evang. ii. 3; Wetstein, Schegg), or more usually, that he sprang from a levirate marriage (Julius Africanus in Eusebius, Hist. E. i. 7), so that Matthew adduces his natural father Jacob, while Luke adds his legal father Eli (Julius Africanus, Theophylact, Euthymius

1 That Eli was the father of Mary is also inferred by Delitzsch on Hebr. p. 290, who suggests that after the premature death of his father Jacob, Joseph was adopted, namely, by this Eli as his foster son, and brought up along with Mary; that thus, therefore, Eli was Joseph’s foster father, but Mary’s actual father. What groundless devices! And yet the passage itself is “as simple as possible until we want to force it to say what it does not say,” Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 1, p. 112.
Zigabenus, Augustine), or vice versâ (Ambrosius, Grotius, Wetstein, Schleiermacher). But what a complication this hypothesis, in itself quite arbitrary, involves! In this way Eli and Jacob must be taken to be mere half-brothers, because they have different fathers and forefathers! So in respect of Salathiel's mother, we must once more call in the help of a levirate marriage, and represent Neri and Jehonias as in like manner half-brothers! In addition to this, the obligation to the levirate marriage for the half-brother is not authenticated, and the importing of the natural father into the legal genealogy was illegal; finally, we may make the general remark, that neither Matthew nor Luke adds any observation at all in citing the name of Joseph's father, to call attention to any other than the ordinary physical paternal relationship. No; the reconciliation of the two genealogical registers, although they both refer to Joseph, is impossible; but it is very natural and intelligible that, as is usual in the case of great men, whose descent in its individual steps is obscure, no anxiety was felt to investigate his ancestry until long after the death of Jesus—until the living presence of his great manifestation and ministry no longer threw into the shade this matter of subordinate interest. The genealogical industry of the Jewish Christians had collected from tradition and from written documents several registers, which, appearing independently of one another, must have given very different results, as far back as David, in consequence of the obscurity of Joseph's genealogy. The first evangelist adopted a genealogy in accordance with the David-Solomon line; but Luke adopted a totally different one, following the David-Nathan line. But that Luke, as a matter of fact, rejected the genealogy of Matthew, is according to i. 3 to be regarded as a result of his later inquiries, as in general the great and irreconcilable divergence of his preliminary history from that of Matthew suggests the same conclusion. Only the motives of his decision are so completely unknown to us, that to concede to his genealogy the preference (v. Ammon, L. J. I. p. 179) remains unsafe, although the derivation of the Davidic descent of Jesus from the Nathan (therefore not the royal) line presupposes an investigation, in consequence of which the derivation of that descent through Solomon, which doubtless had first presented itself, was abandoned in the interest of rectification (according to Köstlin, indeed, in the Ebionitic interest, in opposition to the royal line stained with crime, and in opposition to worldly royalty in general).—As the genealogy in Matthew is arranged in accordance with a significant numerical relation (three times fourteen), a similar relation is also recognisable in the genealogy by Luke (eleven times seven), even although no express reference is made to it. See already Basil. M. III. p. 399 C.

1 This variation in the Davidic descent of the Messiah occurs also in the later Jewish theology. See Delitzsch in the Zeitschr. f. Luth. Theol. 1860, 3, p. 460 f.

Vv. 1–13. See on Matt. iv. 1–11. Comp. Mark i. 13. — According to the reading εἰς τῇ ἐρήμῳ (see the critical remarks), Luke says: and He was led by the (Holy) Spirit in the wilderness, whilst He was for forty days tempted of the devil. Thus the Spirit had Him in His guidance as His ruling principle (Rom. viii. 14). Luke relates besides, varying from Matthew, that Jesus (1) during forty days (comp. Mark i. 13) was tempted of the devil (how? is not specified), and that then, (2) moreover, the three special temptations related in detail occurred. This variation from Matthew remained also in the Recepta eis τὴν ἔρημον, in respect of which the translation would be: He was led of the Spirit into the wilderness in order to be tempted of the devil during the space of forty days (by reason of the present participle, see on ii. 45). — Ver. 3. τῶν λιθῶν τοῦτοι] more concrete than Matt. iv. 4. — Ver. 5. ἀναγαγόν] (see the critical remarks) he led Him upwards from the wilderness to a more loftily situated place. The “very high mountain” (Matthew) is a more exact definition due to the further developed tradition. Luke has drawn from another source. — ἐν στιγμῇ χρ.] in a point of time, in a moment, a magically instantaneous glimpse; a peculiar feature of the representation. On the expression, comp. Plut. Comp. vii. 16. Otherwise in Matt. iv. 6. — μὴ ποτὲ] ne unquam, not neces-

1 According to Hilgenfeld, Luke’s dependence on Matthew and Mark is said to be manifested with special clearness from his narrative of the temptation. But just in regard to this narrative he must have followed a distinct source, because otherwise his variation in the sequence of the temptations (see on Matt. iv. 5, Rem.), and the omission of the angels’ minis try, would be incomprehensible (which Hilgenfeld therefore declares to be a pure invention), as, moreover, the ἄγαμος καιρῷ (ver. 13) peculiar to Luke points to another source.

2 The various attempts to make this in στιγμῇ χρόνῳ intelligible may be seen in Nebe, d. Versuch, d. Herrn, Wetzlar 1857, p. 109 ff. The author himself, regarding the temptation as an actual external history, avails himself of the analogy of the fatum morganum, but says that before the eye of the Lord the magical picture immediately dissolved. But according to the connection in στιγμῇ χρόνῳ does not mean that the appearance lasted only a single moment, but that the whole of the kingdoms were brought within the view of Jesus, not as it were successively, but in one moment, notwithstanding their varied local situation upon the whole earth. Bengel says appropriately, “acuta tentatio.”
sarily to be written separately (Bornemann); see rather Ellendt, Lec. Soph. II. p. 107; Lipsius, Gramm. "Omnia tela consumsit," Bengel. — \(\acute{\alpha}x\rho iber\ \kappa\alpha\iota\rho\omicron\omicron\upsilon\) until a fitting season, when he would appear anew against Him to tempt Him. It is to be taken subjectively of the purpose and idea of the devil; he thought at some later time, at some more fortunate hour, to be able with better success to approach Him. Historically he did not undertake this again directly, but indirectly, as it repeatedly occurred by means of the Pharisees, etc. (John viii. 40 ff.), and at last by means of Judas, xxii. 31; but with what glorious result for the tempted! Comp. John xiv. 30. The difference of meaning which Tittmann, Synon. p. 37, has asserted (according to which \(\acute{\alpha}x\rho iber\ \kappa\alpha\iota\rho\omicron\omicron\upsilon\) is said to be equivalent to \(\varepsilon\omega\varsigma\ \tau\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\omicron\upsilon\upsilon\varsigma\)) is pure invention. See Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 308 f. Whether, moreover, the characteristic addition \(\acute{\alpha}x\rho iber\ \kappa\alpha\iota\rho\omicron\omicron\upsilon\) is a remnant of the primitive form of this narrative (Ewald) or is appended from later reflection, is an open question. But it is hardly an addition inserted by Luke himself (Bleek, Holtzmann, and others), since it is connected with the omission of the ministry of the angels. This omission is not to be attributed to a realistic effort on the part of Luke (Holtzmann, but see xxii. 43), but must have been a feature of the source used by him, and hence the \(\acute{\alpha}x\rho iber\ \kappa\alpha\iota\rho\omicron\omicron\upsilon\) must also have already formed part of it.

1 According to Wieseler, Synopse, p. 201, the persecutions on the part of the Jews are meant, which had begun, John v. 15–18 ff.; there would therefore be a longer interval between vv. 13, 14. But a comparison of ver. 14 with ver. 1 shows that this interval is introduced in the harmonistic interest; moreover, Hofmann's reference to the agony in Gethsemane (Schriftbew. II. I. p. 317) is introduced, since not this, but probably the whole opposition of the hierarchy (John viii. 44), and finally the crime of Judas (John xiii. 2, 27), appears as the work of the devil.

Ver. 15. Ἰvrolet] He Himself, the person as opposed to their report.

Ver. 16. As to the relation of the following incident to the similar one in Matt. xiii. 53 ff., Mark vi. 1 ff., see on Matthew. No argument can be drawn from ver. 23 against the view that the incidents are different, for therein a ministry at Capernaum would already be presupposed (Schleiermacher, Kern, de Wette, Weiss, Bleek, Holtzmann, and others), as a previous ministry in that same place in the course of a journey (not while residing there) is fully established by vv. 14, 15. According to Ewald (comp. also his Gesch. Chr. p. 345), who, moreover, rightly distinguishes the present from the subsequent appearance at Nazareth, there are incorporated together in Luke two distinct narratives about the discourses of Jesus in Nazareth. But with reference to the mention of Capernaum at ver. 23, see above; the connection, however, between vv. 22 and 23 is sufficiently effected by οὐχ οὗτος ἐστιν ὁ νῦν Ἰωσήφ. In ver. 31 ff. it is not the first appearance of Jesus at Capernaum in general that is related, but the first portion of His ministry after taking up His residence there (ver. 31), and a special fact which occurred during that ministry is brought into prominence (ver. 33 ff.). According to Köstlin, p. 205, Luke met with the narrative at a later place in the Gospel history, but placed it here earlier, and allowed the γενόμ. εἰς Καφαρν. inappropriately to remain because it might at a pinch be referred to ver. 15. Assuredly he did not proceed so frivolously and awkwardly, although Holtzmann also (comp. Weizsäcker, p. 398), following Schleiermacher, etc., accuses him of such an anticipation and self-contradiction, and, moreover, following Baur and Hilgenfeld, makes this anticipation find its motive withal in the supposed typical tendency of ver. 24. — ὅδ' ἢν τεθραμμ. an observation inserted to account for the circumstances mentioned in vv. 22, 23. — κατὰ τὸ εἰωθ. αὐτοῦ] refers to His visiting the synagogue on the Sabbath, not also to the ἀνέστη. It is true, a superintendent of the synagogue was accustomed to summon to the reading the person whom he regarded as being fitted for it; but in the case of Jesus, His offering Himself is as much in keeping with His peculiar pre-eminence, as is the immediate acquiescence in His application.

Ver. 17. Ἐπεδόθη] it was given up to Him—that is to say, by the officer of the synagogue, Lightfoot, p. 763. — Ἡσαΐου] the reading of the Parascha (section out of the law), which preceded that of the Haphthara (prophetic section), appears to have been already concluded, and perhaps there was actually in the course a Haphthara from Isaiah.1 But in accordance with His special character (as κύριος τοῦ σαββάτου, Matt. xii. 8), Jesus takes the section which He lights upon as soon as it is unrolled (ἀναπτ., comp. Herod. i. 48, 125), and this was a very characteristic Messianic passage, describing by very definite marks the Messiah's person and work. By ἀναρτύξας τὸ βιβλ. and ἐδρέ the lighting exactly on this passage is represented as fortuitous, but just on that account as being divinely ordered (according to Theophylact: not κατὰ συντυχίαν, but αὐτοῦ θελήσαντος).

Vv. 18, 19. Isa. lxii. 1, 2, following the LXX. freely. The historical meaning is: that He, the prophet, is inspired and ordained by God to announce to the deeply unfortunate people in their banishment their liberation from captivity, and the blessed future of the restored and glorified theocracy that shall follow thereupon. The Messianic fulfilment of this announcement, i.e. the realization of their theocratic idea, came to pass in Christ and His ministry.\(^1\) — ὅ ἔινεκεν in the original text ἢ: because, and to this corresponds ὅ ἔινεκεν: propter quod, because, as ὅ ἔινεκεν is very frequently thus used by the classical writers. The expression of the LXX., which Luke preserves, is therefore not erroneous (de Wette and others), nor do the words ὅ ἔινεκεν introduce the protasis of a sentence whose apodosis is left out (Hofmann, Weissag. u. Eif. II. p. 96). The form ἔινεκεν (2 Cor. vii. 12) is, moreover, classical; it occurs in Pindar, Isthm. viii. 69, frequently in Herodotus (see Schweig- haiser, Lex. sub. verb.), Dem. 45. 11. See generally, Krüger, II. § 68. 19. 1 f. — ἔχρισε] a concrete description, borrowed from the anointing of the prophets (1 Kings xix. 16) and priests (Ex. xxviii. 41, xxx. 30), of the consecration, which in this instance is to be conceived of as taking place by means of the spiritual investiture.\(^2\) — πτωχοῖς] the poor ὄνν. See on Matt. v. 3. They—in the original Hebrew the unhappy exiles—are more precisely designated by αἰχμαλώτ., as well as by the epithets, which are to be taken in their historical sense typically, τυφλοίς and τεθραυσμένους (crushed to pieces), whereby the misery of the πτωχοῖ is represented as a blinding and a bruising. According to the typical reference to the Messiah, these predicates refer to the misery of the spiritual bondage, the cessation of which the Messiah was to announce and (ἀποστειλαί) to accomplish. Moreover, the LXX. varies considerably from the original Hebrew (doubtless the result of a various reading which mixed with this passage the parallel in Isa. xlii. 7), and Luke again does not agree with the LXX., especially in ἀποστειλαί τεθραυσμ. ἐν ἀφέσει, which words are from Isa. lviii. 6, whence Luke (not Jesus, who indeed read from the roll of the book) or his informant relating from

The passage before us is strangely abused by the Valentinians, Clemens, Hom. xvii. 19, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, and many more, to limit the ministry of Jesus to the space of one year,¹ which even the connection of the original text, in which a day of vengeance against the enemies of God’s people follows, ought to have prevented. Even Wieseler, p. 272, makes an extraordinary chronological use of ἐναυτός and of συμπεριον, ver. 21, in support of his assumption of a parallel with John vi. 1 ff. in regard to time, according to which the sojourn of Jesus in Nazareth is said to have fallen on the Sabbath after Purim 782. The year is an allusion to the year of jubilee (Lev. xxv. 9), as an inferior prefigurative type of the Messianic redemption. The three infinitives are parallel and dependent on ἠπεσταλκέ με, whose purpose they specify.—ἐν ἀφέσει] a well-known constructio pregnans: so that they are now in the condition of deliverance (Polybius, i. 79. 12, xxii. 9. 17), comp. ii. 39.

Moreover, that nothing but the theme of the discourse delivered by Jesus is here given is manifest from the passage itself, as well as from ver. 22; but He has placed it remarkably close to the beginning of His discourse, and so led the hearer all at once in medium rem (comp. See what follows. Others understand it: Help thine own fellow-townsman (Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Calvin, Maldonatus, Grotius, Bengel, and others, also Paulus, de Wette, Schegg, Bisping). This is opposed to the meaning of the words, as σεαυτόν and ιατρές can only be one person. Moreover, the parabolic word concerning the physician is retained only in Luke, whom it might specially interest. — εἰς Καφαρναούμα] (the name is to be written thus in Luke also, with Lachmann and Tischendorf) indicates the direction of γενόμενα, which took place at Capernaum (Bernhardy, p. 220), comp. on xxviii. 6. But according to 1 Kings xvii. 1, xviii. 1, the rain returned in the third year: Jesus, as also James (see Huther in loc.), follows, according to Luke, the Jewish tradition (Jalkut Schimoni on 1 Kings xvi. in Surenhusius, kataλλα. p. 681), in which in general the number $3\frac{1}{2}$ (= $\frac{1}{2}$ of 7) in the measurement of time (especially a time of misfortune, according to Dan. xii. 7) had become time-honoured (Ligbtfoot, p. 756, 950; Otto, Spieiley. p. 142). It was arbitrary and unsatisfactory to reckon (before 1 Kings xvii. 1), in addition to the three years, the naturally rainless six months preceding the rainy season (Benson on Jas. v. 17; Wetstein, Wiesinger, and others; comp. also Lange, II. p. 547 f.), or to date the third year (Beza, Olshausen, Schegg) from the flight of Elias to Sarepta (1 Kings xvii. 9). — πᾶσαν τ. γην] not the whole region (Beza), but the whole earth; popularly hyperbolical. — On Sarepta, situated between Tyre and Sidon, and belonging to the territory of the latter, now the village of Surafend, see Robinson, Palestine, III. p. 690 ff. — Σεδώνος] the name of the town of Sidon, as that in whose territory Sarepta lay. — μέγας] in xv. 14 λιμός is feminine, as it passed over from the Doric into the κοινή (Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 188). Vv. 1–11. Matt. iv. 18–22 and Mark i. 16–20 are parallel passages. Nevertheless, the history of the calling in Luke, as compared with it in Matthew and Mark, is essentially different, for in these latter the point of the incident is \(the\ mere\ summons\ and\ promise\) (without the miracle, which, without altering the nature of the event, they could not have passed over; in opposition to Ebrard and others); in Luke it is the miracle of the draught of fishes Moreover, in Matthew and Mark no previous acquaintance on the part of Jesus with Peter is presupposed, although, probably, it is in Luke iv. 38 ff., whereby, at the same time, Luke falls into self-contradiction, since v. 8 does not allow it to be supposed that such miraculous experiences have previously occurred to him as, according to iv. 38 ff., Peter had already had in connection with Jesus. Luke follows a source of later and more plastic tradition (in opposition to Schleiermacher, Sieffert, Neander, v. Ammon, who ascribe to Luke the merit of being the earliest), which, fastening in pursuit of symbolic meaning upon the promise in ver. 10 (Matt. iv. 19; Mark i. 17), glorified the story of the call of the fishermen by joining to it a similar story of the draught of fishes, John xxi. (comp. Ewald, Gesch. Chr. p. 288); but in the historical sequence after iv. 38 ff. Luke has become confused. — καὶ αὐτὸς] not: he also, but: and he; he on his part, in respect of this pressing (ἐπικείσθαι) of the people upon him. Changes of number, to be similarly accounted for by the connection, are often found in the classical writers. See Bornemann, Schol. p. 35 f.; Kühner, ad Xen. So also Theophylact. This would have needed to be said. In the whole incident nothing more is implied than that the other craft still lying close to the shore, ver. 2, was too far away for the sound of the voice to reach, and hence they were restricted to making signs, which, moreover, for the fishermen of the other boat—who, according to ver. 4, were doubtless eagerly giving attention—was quite sufficient. He dimly recognises in Christ a something superhuman, the manifestation of a holy divine power, and in the consciousness of his own sinful nature he is terrified in the presence of this power which may, perchance, cause some misfortune to befall him; just as men feared the like on the appearances of God or of angels. Comp. 1 Kings xvii. 18. Euthymius Zigabenus and Grotius in loc. Elsner and Valckenaeer are mistaken in saying that Peter speaks thus in accordance with the notion that one ought not to stay on board a ship with any criminal (Cic. De Nat. Deor. iii. 37; Diog. Laert. i. 86; Horat. Od. iii. 2. 26 ff.). He does not indeed avow himself a criminal, but only as a sinful man in general, who as such cannot without risk continue in the presence of this θεῖος καὶ ὑπερφυῆς ἀνθρώπος (Euthymius

1 Augustine has interpreted this tearing of the nets allegorically of the heresies, and the Saxon Anonymus (p. 212 f.) of Judaism and the law; both interpretations being equally arbitrary. Vv. 17–26. See on Matt. ix. 1–8; Mark ii. 1–12. Between this and the foregoing history Matthew has a series of other transactions, the sequence of which he accurately indicates. Luke vaguely says: ἐν μιᾷ τῶν ἡμέρων, which, however, specifies approximately the time by means of the connection ("on one of those days," namely, on the journey entered upon at iv. 43 f.). Comp. viii. 22. — καὶ αὐτός] and Ἡ, as ver. 1, but here in opposition to the Pharisees, etc., who were surrounding Him. — ἐκ πάσης κόμης κ.τ.λ.] popularly hyperbolical. So according to the reading αὐτόν (see the critical remarks). According to the reading αὐτοῦ, this would have to be taken as a vague designation of the sufferers who were present, referring back to ver. 15; αὐτόν is the subject, αὐτοῦς would be the object. Others, as Olshausen and Ewald, have incorrectly referred κύριον to Ἰησοῦς, whose healing power was stirred up (vi. 19). Wherever Luke in his Gospel calls Christ the Lord, and that, as would here be the case, in narrative, he always writes ὁ κύριος with the article. See vii. 13 (31), x. 1, xi. 39, xii. 42, xiii. 15, xvii. 5, 6, xviii. 6, xix. 8, xxi. 31, 61. — In the following narrative the precedence of Mark is indeed to be recognised, but the tracing out of the features of dependence must not be carried too far (in opposition to Weiss in the Stud. u. The narrative is summary, but without precision, since the impression said to be produced by the miraculous incident (τὰ παρὰ δόξαν μυθώμενα, Polyb. ix. 16. 2. Comp. Wisd. xvi. 17, xix. 5; 2 Macc. ix. 24; Xen. Cyr. vii. 2, 16) applies indeed to the people present (Matt. ix. 8), but not to the Pharisees and scribes.

ye cannot, etc., brings out the inappropriateness of that reflection in a more concrete form than in Matthew and Mark.—Ver. 35. καὶ might be taken explicatively (and indeed) (Bornemann, Bleek). But it is more in keeping with the profound emotion of the discourse to take ἐλευθερούνται κ.τ.λ. by itself as a thought broken off, and καὶ in the sense of: and; But days shall come (and not tarry) . . . and when shall be taken away, etc.—ἐν ἐκείνῃ ταῦτῃ ἡμέρᾳ] a painful solemnity of expression, whereby the emphasis is laid upon ἐκεῖνῶν. Comp. on Mark ii. 20.—Ver. 36. ἐπιβλημα ἵματεν καὶνοῦ] i.e. a patch cut off from a new garment. By the use of ἵματιν the incongruity of the proceeding comes still more strongly into prominence than by πάκου, which is used in Matthew and Mark. An unintentional modification of the tradition—not an alteration proceeding from the Paulinism of the writer, and directed against the syncretism of the Jewish Christians, as Köstlin, p. 174, ingeniously maintains. Even Lange explains the expression by supposing that there floated already before the mind of the Pauline Luke a clearer vision of the Christian community as distinct from Judaism (L. J. III. p. 395).—καὶ τὸ καϊνὸν σχίσει καὶ κ.τ.λ.] comprises the twofold mischief which will ensue (future, see the critical remarks) if one does not obey that principle taken from experience; He will not only cut the new (garment) in twain (in taking off the piece), but, moreover, the (piece) of the new (garment) will not be in keeping with the old (garment). Comp. Kypke, Paulus, de Wette, Bleek, Schegg, even as early as Erasmus. On σχίσει, comp. John xix. 24; Isa. xxxvii. 1. But usually τὸ καϊνὸν is explained as the subject, and either σχίσει is taken intransitively (“scindet se a veteri,” Bengel), or τὸ παλαιὸν ἵματιν is regarded as its object: the new piece will rend asunder the old garment (comp. Kuinoel). Incorrectly; since this supplying of the object is not required by the context, but is obtruded for the sake of the harmony with Matt. ix. 16, Mark ii. 21, and τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦ καϊνοῦ (it is not τὸ καϊνὸ) clearly shows that even to τὸ καϊνὸν we are to understand only ἵματιν, not ἐπιβλημα; and, moreover, τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦ καϊνοῦ would be altogether superfluous and clumsy.—Ver. 39. Peculiar to Luke; but it is as little to be explained as resulting from later reflection on the difficulty of the mission to the Jews (Weizsäcker), as is the emphasis laid upon the incompatibility of the two, ver. 36. As Jesus in vv. 36–38 made it manifest how unsuitable and injurious it would be to bind up the essence and the life of the new theocracy with the forms and institutions of the old, so now at ver. 39 he once more, by means of a parabolic expression, makes it intelligible how natural it is that the disciples of John and of the Pharisees should not be able to consent to the giving up of the old forms and institutions which had become dear to them, and to the exchanging of them for the new life in accordance with its fundamental principles. He says that this should be as little expected as that any one when he has drunk old wine should long for new, since he finds that the old is better. So in substance Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Erasmus, Clarius, Zeger, Calovius, Wolf, Bengel, Paulinus, Olshauser, Lange, and others;¹ and rightly, since even in ver. 37 f. the contrast of the old and new wine typified the contrasted old and new theocratic life. Hence we are neither, with Wetstein, to suppose the meaning reversed: "Pharisaeorum austeritas comparatur vino novo, Christi lenitas vino veteri;" nor, with Grotius (comp. Estius and Clericus), to interpret: "Hominis non subito ad austeriorem vitam pertrahendos, sed per gradus quosdam assuefaciendos esse" (Jesus, in truth, had no wish to accustom them to an "austeriorem vitam!"); nor, with Schegg, to substitute the meaning: "that not till the old wine is expended (in reference to ver. 35) is the new drunk (which refers to fasts, etc., as a remedy for their being deprived of the presence of Christ)." But by the objection that the old wine is actually better (Ecclus. ix. 10, and see Wolf and Wetstein) the parable is unduly pressed (in opposition to de Wette and others), since in vv. 37–39 the point of comparison is not the quality of the wine in itself, but the relation of the old and the new. Outside the point of comparison, every parable is apt to be at fault. Moreover, χρηστός denotes the agreeable delicious taste. Comp. Plut. Mor. p. 240 D, 1073 A. The new has, as it were, no taste if the old has been found agreeable. But irony is as little to be found in ver. 39 as in ver. 37 f., and the gentle exculpatory character of the discourse, ver. 39 (which must in no wise be taken to mean full approval, in opposition to Hilgenfeld in the Theol. Jahrb. 1853, p. 215), is perfectly explained from the fact that, according to Matt. ix. 14, it is to be supposed that this conversation about fasting did not originally take place with the Pharisees, but with the disciples of John. See on Matthew. Comp. also Volkmar, Evang. Marcions, p. 219 ff. If in the two parables it were desired to abide by the general thought of unsuitableness (as it would be unsuitable to pour new wine into old skins, and after old wine immediately to drink new; so also it would be unsuitable if my disciples desired to bind themselves to the old institutions), the figure of ver. 39 would be very much out of harmony with the appropriate figure in ver. 38, and the unsuitable matter would at ver. 39 be represented in direct contradiction to fact (in opposition to de Wette); apart from this, moreover, that θέλει (not πιέει) applies the saying subjectively. According to Kuinoel and Bleek, Jesus spoke the words in ver. 39 at another time. But it is in keeping with the connection, and is certainly taken from the Logia.

Ver. 1. δευτεροπρῶτον] is wanting in B L ἡ and seven min. Syr. Arv. Perss. Copt. Aeth. codd. of It. Condemned by Schulz, bracketed by Lachm. and Tisch. Synops. See the exegetical remarks. — Ver. 2. αὐτὸν] bracketed by Lachm., is, with Tisch., to be struck out, as it is wanting in B C* L X ἡ, min. Of ταῦτα ἐν, the ἐν alone is to be deleted, with Tisch., on decisive evidence, but not, with Lachm., the ταῦτα also. — Ver. 3. ἐπετρέπει] Lachm. has ἐπέ, in accordance, indeed, with B C D L X Δ ἡ, min.; but taken from the parallels, from which, moreover, the omission of ἐπετρέπει (Lachm.) is to be explained, as well as in ver. 4 the reading τῶν (Lachm., following L R X ἡ, min.). — Ver. 4. The omission of ὅς (B D, Cant. Marcion) is to be regarded as a transcriber’s error (occasioned by the subsequent ἔτεκε). If nothing had originally been found there, only τῶν, not ὅς would have been added. — ἔλαβεν καὶ] Lachm. has ἔλαβων, following B C* L X 33, Syr. Copt. Theophyl. The Recepta is to be maintained. The words were left out,—an omission occasioned the more easily by the similar ἐφανερώθη καὶ which follows, as the parallels have not ἔλαβε καὶ. The omission occurs, moreover, in D K ἡ, min. vss. Ir. Then ἔλαβων was introduced as a restoration in better syntactical form. — καὶ τῶν] B L 1, 112, Syr. Arr. Pers. Arm. Goth. Vulg. It. Theophyl. Ir. Ambr. have merely τῶν. In view of these important authorities καὶ must be traced to Mark ii. 26 (where the evidence against it is weaker), and should be deleted. — Ver. 6. δὲ καὶ] Lachm. has δὲ, in accordance with B L X ἡ, min. vss. See on Mark iii. 2. — After δὲ Elz. has αὐτὸν on weighty evidence, indeed, but it is an addition. tive by reading κατηγορήσων, the infinitive being explained in the later reading by the use of the substantive. — Ver. 8. ἀνθρώπῳ B L S, min. Cyr. have ἀνδρὶ. Approved by Griesb., adopted by Tisch. Rightly; τῷ ἀνδρὶ was omitted by reason of the following τῷ (so still D, Cant.), and then τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ was inserted, in accordance with ver. 6 and Mark iii. 3, instead of τῷ ἀνδρὶ. — ὁ δὲ} Lachm. and Tisch. have καὶ, following B D L X S, 1, 33, Vulg. Not to be decided; ὁυ, it is true, is not frequently employed in the Gospel of Luke for continuing the narrative, and the reading wavers mostly between ὁυ and ὁ; yet it is established in iii. 7, xix. 12, xxii. 36. — ἐπηρωθήσω] Tisch. has ἐπηρωτάω, following B L S, 157, Copt. Vulg. Brix. For. Rd. The Recepta has resulted from a reminiscence of xx. 3; Mark xi. 29. The present is extremely appropriate to the vivacity of the whole action. — τι or τῷ] Lachm. and Tisch. have το, following B D L S 157, Copt. Vulg. It. Cyr. Aug. In view of these important authorities, and because το fits in with the reading ἐπηρώταω, which, according to the evidence, is to be approved (see above), το is to be preferred. — ἀπολίσω also retained by Lachm. and Tisch., following B D L X S, vss. even Vulg. Scholz, Lachm. Tisch. have ἐπηρώτας, which is wanting in important but still not preponderating authorities, and is deleted by Griesb., but defended by Schulz, in accordance with ix. 15. xii. 43. It is to be adopted. The possibility of dispensing with it and the ancient gloss ἐς ἔτεινα occasioned the dropping out of the word. — After αὐτῷ Elz. has ἐγκάθισε, in opposition to decisive evidence. It is from Matt. xii. 13. Moreover, ὁς ἴ ἄλλη (condemned by Griesb., bracketed by Lachm., deleted by Tisch.), which is wanting in B L S, min. Copt. Vulg. Sax. Verc. For. Corb. The compound form was overlooked.—Instead of ἀπὸ Elz. has ὑπὸ, in opposition to decisive evidence. An alteration arising from misunderstanding, because ἀπὸ τν. ἀκαθ. was believed to be dependent upon the participle (comp. Acts v. 16), which error, moreover, gave rise to the καὶ before ἰδέας. The preponderance of evidence is in favour of τάντας, and it is to be maintained in opposition to Griesb. The omission was occasioned by the apparently inappropriate relation to ὦ ταύρες ἄντον. —Ver. 28. ὑμῶν] Griesb. Scholz, Lachm. Tisch. have ὑμᾶς. There are weighty authorities on both sides, although the evidence is stronger for ὑμᾶς; but ὑμῶν is the more unusual, and is attested even so early as by Justin (?) and Origen; ὑμᾶς is from Matt. v. 44.—Before προ- σέβλ. Condemned by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. In view of B D L S, min. vss. the ἀνθρωπος and θησαυρὸς τῆς κοριδίας αὐτῶν of the Recepiia (both condemned by Griesb., and bracketed by Lachm.) are to be regarded as supplementary additions, as also in the next clause τοῦ and τῆς (deleted by Lachm. and Tisch.). — Ver. 48. τεθυμελ. γὰρ ἐπὶ τὴν σίτραξι; Tisch. has διὰ τὸ καλὰς ὀικοδομησθαί [οἰκοδομησθαί in Tisch. 8] αὐτήν, following B L ᾧ ὁ, 33, 157, Syr. The Recepiia is a gloss from Matt. vii. 25. — Ver. 49. ἔπεσεν, which Griesb. has recommended and Tisch. has adopted, is so strongly attested by B D L Ὺ ᾧ ὁ, that ἔπεσε is to be referred to Matthew.

Vv. 1–5. See on Matt. xii. 1–8; Mark ii. 23–28, whom Luke, with some omission, however, follows (see especially ver. 5). According to the analogy of δευτερογάμος, δευτεροβόλος, δευτεροτόκος, etc., it might be: a Sabbath which for the second time is the first. Comp. δευτεροδεκάτη, the second tenth, in Jerome, ad Ez. 45. According to the analogy of δευτερέσχατος, penultimus, Heliodorus in Soran. Chirurg. vet. p. 94, it might—since from ἐσχάτος the reckoning must be backwards, while from πρῶτος it must be forwards, in order to get a δευτερός—be the second first, i.e. the second of two firsts. All accurate grammatical information is wanting. As, however, if any definite Sabbaths at all had borne the name of σάββατον δευτερόπρωτον (and this must be assumed, as Luke took for granted that the expression was a familiar one), this name would doubtless occur elsewhere (in the Old Testament, in the LXX., in Philo, Josephus, in the Talmud, etc.); but this is not the case, as the whole Greek literature has not even one instance of the peculiar word in itself to show; 1 as among the Synoptics it was precisely Luke that could least of all impugn to his reader a knowledge of the name; and as, finally, very ancient and important authorities have not got δευτεροπρώτω at all in the passage before us (see the critical remarks), just as even so early an authority as Syr⁹. remarks in the margin: “non est in omni exemplari,”—I regard δευτεροπρώτω as not being genuine, although, moreover, the suspicion suggests itself that it was omitted “ignoratione rei” (Bengel, Appar. Crit.), and because the parallel places have nothing similar to it. In consideration of ἐν ἑτέρῳ σαββατ., ver. 6, probably the note πρώτω was written at the side, but a comparison with iv. 31 occasioned the corrective note δευτέρῳ to be added, which found its way into the text, partly without (so still Ar⁹. and Ar⁸.), partly with πρῶτῳ (thus δευτέρῳ πρῶτῳ, so still R Γ, min.), so that in the next place, seeing that the two words in juxtaposition were meaningless, the one word δευτεροπρώτῳ was coined. Wilke also and Hofmann, according to Lichtenstein; and Lichtenstein himself, as well as Bleek and Holtzmann (comp. Schulz on Griesbach), reject the word; Hilgenfeld regards it as not being altogether certain.¹ Of the several attempts at explanation, I note historically only the following: (1) Chrysostom, Hom. 40 in Matth.: ὅταν διπλὴ ἡ ἀργία γὰρ καὶ τὸν σαββάτων τοῦ κυρίου καὶ ἑτέρας ἐορτής διαδεχομένης, so that thus is understood a feast-day immediately following the Sabbath. Comp. Epiphanius, Haer. 30, 31. So also Beza, Paulus, and Olshausen. (2) Theophylact understands a Sabbath, the day before which (παρασκευή) had been a feast-day.² (3) Isidore of Pelusium, Ep. iii. 110 (comp. Euthymius Zigabenus, Calvin, Surenhusius, Wolf), thinks that the πρώτη τῶν ἀζύμων is meant, and was called δευτεροπρώτη: ἔπειδὴ δεύτερον μὲν ἤν τοῦ πάσχα, πρῶτον

² Comp. Luther’s obscure gloss: “the second day after the high Sabbath.” Schegg explains the expression even as a Christian designation, namely, of the Saturday after Good Friday. In opposition to Serno (Tag des letzte. Passahmahls, 1859, p. 48 ff.), who, according to his mistaken supposition of the doubling of the first and last feast-days, brings out the sixteenth Nisan, see Wieseler in Reuter's Repert. 1860, p. 133.

(9) Wieseler, l.c. p. 231 ff.,\(^1\) thinks that it was the second-first Sabbath of the year in a cycle of seven years, i.e. the first Sabbath of the second year in a week of years. Already L. Capellus, Rhenferd, and Lampe (ad Joh. II. p. 5) understood it to be the first month in the year (Nisan), but explained the name from the fact that the year had two first Sabbaths, namely, in Tisri, when the civil year began, and in Nisan, when the ecclesiastical year began. (10) Ebrard, p. 414 f., following Krafft (Chron. und Harm. d. vier Evang. p. 18 f.), regards it as the weekly Sabbath that occurs between the first and last Easter days (feast-Sabbaths). For yet other interpretations (Grotius and Valckenaer: that the Sabbath before Easter was called the first great one πρωτόπρωτον, the Sabbath before Pentecost the second great one δευτέροπρωτον, the Sabbath before the feast of Tabernacles τριτόπρωτον\(^2\)), see in Calovius, Bibl. \(^2\) V. Gumpach also (ib. d. altjüd. Kalend., Brüssel 1848) understands a Sabbath of the second rank. Very peculiarly Weizäcker, p. 59, says: "that Luke iv. 16, 31 recounts two Sabbath narratives, and now vi. 1, 6 recounts other two," and that the Sabbath in the passage before us is therefore the first of this second series of narratives, consequently the second-first. But what reader would have been able to discover this reference, especially as between iv. 31 and vi. 1 so many other narratives intervened? Weizäcker, moreover, pertinently observes, in opposition to every hypothesis of an explanation in accordance with the calculation of the divine services, that our Gospel stands much too remote from things of this kind.

In substance it certainly bears the stamp of genius, and is sufficiently liberal-minded to admit of its being original, even although it is not genuine. I regard it as an interpolated fragment of a true tradition.

Vv. 12—49. Luke inserts at this point the choice of the Twelve, and then a shorter and less original (see also Weiss in the Jahrber. f. d. Th. 1864, p. 52 ff.) edition of the Sermon on the Mount.

1 That Matthew and Luke gave two distinct discourses, delivered in immediate succession (which Augustine supposed), that were related to one another as had not yet occurred before the Sermon on the Mount; nevertheless it is implied in Matthew, not, indeed, sooner than at x. 1, but after the call of Matthew himself. Luke in substance follows Mark in what concerns the choice of the apostles. But he here assigns to the Sermon on the Mount—which Mark has not got at all—a position different from that in Matthew, following a tradition which attached itself to the locality of the choice of the apostles (τὸ ὄρος) as readily as to the description and the contents of the sermon. See, moreover, Commentary on Matthew. According to Baur, indeed, Luke purposely took from the discourse its place of distinction, and sought in the Pauline interest to weaken it as much as possible.

esoteric (given to the disciples exclusively) and exoteric (in the ears of the people), is neither to be established exegetically, nor is it reconcilable with the creative power of discourse manifested by Jesus at other times, in accordance with which He was certainly capable, at least, of extracting from the original discourse what would be suitable for the people (in opposition to Lange, L. J. II. 2, p. 566 ff.). And how much does the discourse in Matthew contain which there was no reason for Jesus keeping back from the people in Luke's supposed exoteric discourse! At least Jude 1 might be appealed to, where both Jude and James are natural brothers of the Lord. In opposition to supplying \(\delta\varepsilon\varepsilon\varepsilon\varepsilon\phi\varepsilon\), however, we have to point out in general, that to justify the supplying of the word a special reference must have preceded (as Alciph. Ep. ii. 2), otherwise we must abide by the usual \(\nu\ios\), as at ver. 15; further, that Matt. x. 2 mentions the pairs of brothers among the apostles most precisely as such, but not among them James and Lebbæus (who is to be regarded as identical with our Judas; see on Matt. x. 2\(^1\)). Hence (so also Ewald), here and at Acts i. 13, we must read Judas son of James, of which James nothing further is known.\(^2\) —

Acts vii. 52. — Observe, moreover, that Luke here enumerates the four first-named apostles in pairs, as does Matthew; whereas in Acts i. 13 he places first the three most confidential ones, as does Mark. We see from this simply that in Acts i. 13 he followed a source containing the latter order, by which he held impartially and without any mechanical reconciliation with the order of the passage before us. The conclusion is much too hasty, which argues that Mark was not before him

\(^1\) Ewald takes a different view, that even during the lifetime of Jesus \(\'laxuliov\ 'laxuliov\) had taken the place of the Thaddeus (Lebbæus), who had probably been cut off by death. See his Gesch. Chr. p. 323. In this way, indeed, the narrative of Luke in the passage before us, where the choice of the Twelve is related, would be incorrect. That hypothesis would only be capable of reconciliation with Acts i. 13. According to Schleiermacher also, \(L. J.\) p. 369, the persons of the apostolic band were not always the same, and the different catalogues belong to different periods. But when the evangelists wrote, the Twelve were too well known in Christendom, nay, too world-historical, to have allowed the enumeration of different individual members.

Lange, who calls the discourse in Matthew the Summit-sermon, and that in Luke the Terrace-sermon. The divergence from Matt. v. 1 must be admitted, and remains still, even if a plateau is supposed on which jutted out a crest previously ascended by Jesus (Ebrard; comp. Grotius, Bengel, and others; a vacillating arbitrariness in Olshausen). Matthew’s narrative is original; Luke has a later tradition. As the crowd of hearers, according to this later tradition, came from greater distances, and were thus represented as more numerous, a plain was needed to accommodate them. According to Baur, Evang. p. 457, this divergence from Matthew is due also to the tendency of Luke to degrade the Sermon on the Mount, which would surely be a very petty sort of levelling. — καὶ ὄχλος κ.τ.λ.] seuil. ἐστη. As in Matthew, so here also the discourse is delivered first of all for the circle of the disciples, but in presence of the people, and, moreover, for the people (vii. 1). The lifting up of His eyes on the disciples is the solemn opening movement, to which in Matthew corresponds the opening of His mouth. — μακάριοι κ.τ.λ.] Luke has only four beatitudes, and omits (just as Matthew does in the case of πενθούντες) all indication, not merely that κλαίοντες, but also that πτωχοὶ and πενθούντες should be taken ethically, so that according to Luke Jesus has in view the poor and suffering earthly position of His disciples and followers, and promises to them compensation for it in the Messiah’s kingdom. The fourfold woe, then, in ver. 24 ff. has to do with those who are rich and prosperous on earth (analogous to the teaching in the narrative of the rich man and Lazarus); comp. i. 53. Certainly Luke has the later form of the tradition, which of necessity took its rise in consequence of the affliction of the persecuted Christians as contrasted with the rich, satisfied, laughing, belauded νιώτες τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου; comp. the analogous passages in the Epistle of James, ii. 5, v. 1 ff., iv. 9. This also is especially true of the denunciations of woe, which were still unknown to the first evangelist. Comp. Weiss in the Jahrh. f. d. Theol. 1864, p. 58 f. (in opposition to Holtzmann). That they were omitted in Matthew from motives of forbearance (Schenkel) is an arbitrary assumption, quite opposed to the spirit of the apostolic church; just as much as the notion that the poverty, etc., pronounced blessed in Matthew, should be interpreted spiritually. The late date of Luke’s composition, and the greater originality in general which is to be attributed to the discourse in Matthew, taken as it is from the Logia,¹ which formed the basis in an especial manner of this latter Gospel, make the reverse view less probable, that (so also Ewald, p. 211; comp. Wittichen in the Jahrh. f. d. Theol. 1862, p. 323) the general expressions, as Luke has them, became more specific at a later date, as may be seen in Matthew, by reason of possible and partly of actually occurring misunderstanding. Moreover, the difference in itself is not to be got rid of (Tholuck says that the outer misery awakens the inner; Olshausen, that τ. πνεύματι must in Luke be supplied!); probably, however, it is to be conceded that Jesus assumes as existing the ethical condition of the promise in the case of His afflicted people (according to Luke’s representation) as in His believing and future members of the kingdom; hence the variation is no contradiction. The Ebionitic spirit is foreign to the Pauline Luke (in opposition to Strauss, I. p. 603 f.; Schwegler, and others). — ὑμετέρα] “Applicatio solatii individualis; congruit attollens, nam radii oculorum indigitant,” Bengel. — χορτασθ. and γελάσ.] corresponding representations of the Messianic blessedness.

It is self-evident that while this general principle is completely applicable to the love of one's enemy in itself and in general, it is applicable to the special precepts mentioned in vv. 29, 30 only in accordance with the idea (of self-denial), whose concrete representation they contain: hence ver. 31 is not in this place inappropriate (in opposition to de Wette). — καὶ καθὼς κ.τ.λ.] a simple carrying forward of the discourse to the general principle: and, in general, as ye, etc. — ἦνα] Contents of the θέλετε under the notion of purpose—you will, that they should, etc. Comp. The divine recompense is meant (ver. 35), which is represented as a return of beneficence under the idea of thanks ("ob benevolum dantis affectum," Grotius); Matthew, μισθός. — οἱ ἁμαρτωλοί] Matthew, οἱ τελώναι and οἱ ἐθνικοί. But Luke is speaking not from the national, but from the ethical point of view: the sinners (not to be interpreted: the heathen, the definite mention of whom the Pauline Luke would not have avoided). As my faithful followers, ye are to stand on a higher platform of morality than do such unconverted ones. — τὰ ἵσα] (to be accented thus, see on Mark xiv. 56) the return equivalent to the loan. Tischendorf has in ver. 34 the forms of δανίζειν (Anth. XI. 390).
Ver. 35. Παρ' ] but, verumtamen, as at ver. 24. — μηδὲν ἀπελπισμός] The usual view, “nihil inde sperantes” (Vulgate; so also Euthymius Zigabenus, Erasmus, Luther, Beza, Calvin, Castalio, Salmasius, Casaubon, Grotius, Wolf, Bengel, Krebs, Valckenær, Rosenmüller, Kuinoel, de Wette, Ewald, Bleek, and others), is in keeping with the context, ver. 34, but is ungrammatical, and therefore decidedly to be given up. The meaning of εὐπελπίζειν is desperare; it belongs to later Greek, and frequently occurs in Diodorus and Polybius, which latter, moreover (xxxi. 8. 11), has ἀπελπισμός, desperatio. Comp. Wetstein. An erroneous use of the word, however, is the less to be attributed to Luke, that it was also familiar to him from the LXX. (Isa. xxix. 19) and the Apocrypha (2 Macc. ix. 18; Judith ix. 11). Hence the true meaning is “nihil desperantes” (codd. of It.; so also Homberg, Elsner, Wetstein, Bretschneider, Schegg). It qualifies ἁγαθοποιεῖτε κ. δινεῖτε, and μηδὲν is the accusative of the object: inasmuch as ye consider nothing (nothing which ye give up by the ἁγαθοποιεῖν and δινεῖν) as lost (comp. ἀπελπίζειν τὸ ζην, Diod. xvii. 106), bring no offering hopelessly (namely, with respect to the recompense, which ye have not to expect from men), — and how will this hope be fulfilled! Your reward will be great, etc. Thus in μηδὲν ἀπελπισμότες is involved the παρ' ἐλπίδα ἐπ' ἐλπίδι πιστεύειν (Rom. iv. 18) in reference to a higher reward, where the temporal recompense is not to be hoped for, the “qui nil potest sperare, desperet nihil” (Seneca, Med. 163), in reference to the everlasting recompense. — καὶ ἐσοφθε νῦν ὑψ.] namely, in the Messiah’s kingdom. See xx. 36, and on Matt. v. 9, 45. In general, the designation of believers as sons of God in the temporal life is Pauline (in John: τέκνα Θεοῦ), but not often found in the synoptic Gospels. See Kaeufer in the Sächs. Stud. 1843, p. 197 ff, — ὅτι αὐτὸς κ.τ.λ. ] Since He, on His part, etc. The reason here given rests on the ethical presupposition that the divine Sonship in the Messiah’s kingdom is destined for those whose dealings with their fellow-men are similar to the dealings of the Father.

Vv. 36–38. From this exemplar of the divine benignity in general Jesus now passes over (without óuv, see the critical remarks) to the special duty of becoming compassionate (γίνεσθε after God’s example (ἐστι), and connects therewith (ver. 37 f.) other duties of love with the corresponding Messianic promises. On ver. 37 f. comp. Matt. vii. 1 f. — ἀπολύετε] set free, xxii. 68, xxiii. 16. The opposite of what is previously forbidden. — μέτρων καλόν κ.τ.λ.] a more explicit explanation of δοθήσεται, and a figurative description of the fulness of the Messianic blessedness, ὃν γὰρ φειδομένως ἀντιμετρεῖ ὁ κύριος, ἄλλα πλούσιως, Theophylact. — καλόν] a good, i.e. not scanty or insufficient, but a full measure ; among the Rabbins, בּוּחַ בְּהַר, see Schoettgen, I. p. 273. Observe the climax of the predictions, in respect of all of which, moreover, it is a measure of dry things that is conceived of even in the case of ὑπερεκχε, in connection wherewith Bengel incongruously conceives of fluidity. Instead of ὑπερεκχυνο, Greek writers (Diodorus, Aelian, etc.) have only the form ὑπερεκχέω. Instead of σαλεύω, of close packing by means of shaking, Greek writers use σαλάσσω. See Lobeck, Pathol. p. 87; Jacobs, ad Anthol. VII. p. 95, XI. p. 70. — δώσουσιν] τίνες ; οἱ εὐεργετηθέντες πάντως τοῦ Θεοῦ γὰρ ἀποδίδοντος ὕπερ αὐτῶν αὐτοὶ δοκοῦσιν ἀποδιδόναι, Euthymius Zigabenus. But the context offers no definite subject at all. Hence in general: the persons who give (Kühner, II. p. 35 f.). It is not doubtful who they are: the servants who execute the judgment, i.e. the angels, Matt. xxiv. 31. — κόλπος] the gathered fold of the wide upper garment bound together by the girdle, Jer. xxxii. 18 ; Isa. lxv. 6 ; Ruth iii. 15 ; Wetstein and Kypke in loc. — τῷ γὰρ αὐτῷ μέτρῳ] The identity of the measure; e.g. if your measure is giving, beneficence, the same measure shall be applied in your recompense. The δοθήσε. ὕμι does not exclude the larger quantity of the contents at the judgment (see what precedes). Theophylact appropriately says: ἐστι γὰρ διδόναι τῷ αὐτῷ μέτρῳ, ὃν μὴν τοσοῦτον.

Ver. 39 has no connection with what precedes; but, as Luke himself indicates by εἴπε κ.τ.λ., begins a new, independent portion of the discourse. — The meaning of the parable: He to whom on his part the knowledge of the divine truth is wanting cannot lead others who have it not to the Messianic salvation; they will both fall into the Gehenna of moral error and confusion on the way. Comp. Matt. xv. 14, where is the original place of the saying.

Ver. 40. The rationale of the preceding statement: Both shall fall into a ditch,—therefore not merely the teacher, but the disciple also. Otherwise the disciple must surpass his teacher—a result which, even in the most fortunate circumstances, is not usually attained. This is thus expressed: A disciple is not above his teacher, but every one that is fully prepared shall be as his teacher, i.e. when he has received the complete preparation in the school of his teacher he will be equal to his teacher. He will not surpass him. But the disciple must surpass his teacher (in knowledge, wisdom, disposition, etc.) if he were not to fall into perdition along with him. The view: he will be trained as his teacher (Kuinoel, de Wette, Bleek, and others), i.e. he will be like him in knowledge, disposition, etc., satisfies neither the idea of the specially chosen word κατηρτ., nor its emphatic position, nor the correlation of ἔτερ and ὦς. As to κατηρτισμ., see on 1 Cor. i. 10. The saying in Matt. x. 24 f. has a different significance and reference, and cannot be used to limit the meaning here (in opposition to Linder's misinterpretation in the Stud. v. Krit. 1862, p. 562).

Vv. 41, 42. Luke is not, with confused reminiscence, turning back to Matt. vii. 3 f. (in opposition to de Wette), but the train of thought is: "but in order not to be blind leaders of the blind ye must, before ye would judge (ver. 41) and improve (ver. 42) the moral condition of others, first seriously set about your own knowledge of yourself (ver. 41) and improvement of yourself (ver. 42)." Luke puts the two passages together, but he does it logically.

Vv. 43, 44. Comp. Matt. vii. 16–18, xii. 33 f. For 1 a man's own moral disposition is related to his agency upon others, just as is the nature of the trees to their fruits (there is no good tree which produces corrupt fruit, etc.), for (ver. 44)

Ver. 45. The application. Comp. Matt. xii. 35. — προφέρει κ.τ.λ. refers here also to spoken words. See ἐκ γὰρ κ.τ.λ.

Ver. 46. The verification, however, of the spoken word which actually goes forth out of the good treasure of the heart lies not in an abstract confessing of Me, but in joining therewith the doing of that which I say.

See Robinson, Palestine, III. p. 428. — διὰ τὸ καλὸς οἰκοδομεῖσθαι αὐτὴν] (see the critical remarks) because it (in respect of its foundation) was well built (namely, with foundation laid upon the rock). — ἀκούσας . . . ποιήσας] shall have heard . . . shall have done, namely, in view of the irruption of the last times, full of tribulation, before the Parousia. — καὶ ἐγένετο κ.τ.λ.] in close connection with ἐπέσε, and both with εἰθέως: and the ruin of that house was great; a figure of the ἀπώλεια in contrast with the everlasting ζωή, ver. 48, at the Messianic judgment.
CHAPTER VII.

Ver. 1. ἔστι δὲ] Lachm. and Tisch. have ἔπευγο, following A B C* X 254, 299. This evidence is decisive, especially as D (comp. codd. of It.) is not opposed, for it has καὶ ἔγενετο δὲς. K has ἔπευγο δὲ, whence is explained the rise of the Recepta. — Ver. 4. παρέχει] So also Lachm. and Tisch. The Recepta is παρέχει, in opposition to decisive evidence. — Ver. 10. ἀπεδεικνύτα] is not found, indeed, in B L N, min. Copt. codd. of It. (deleted by Lachm. and Tisch.); but it is to be maintained, as the evidence in its favour is preponderating; the omission is very easily to be explained from the possibility of dispensing with the word, but there was no reason to suggest its addition. — Ver. 11. Instead of ἐν τῷ ἴδε, which Griesb. has approved, and Lachm. has in the margin, the edd. have ἐν τῷ ἴδε. The evidence for the two readings is about equally balanced. We must come to a conclusion according to the usage of Luke, who expresses "on the following day" by τῷ ἴδε, always without ἐν (Acts xxi. 17, xxv. 18; moreover, in Luke ix. 37, where ἐν is to be deleted); we must therefore read in this place ἐν τῷ ἴδε. Comp. viii. 1. Otherwise Schulz. — ἵσανοι] is wanting in B D F L N, min. and most of the vss. Bracketed by Lachm. It is to be retained (even against Rinck, Lucubr. Crit. p. 321), the more so on account of the frequency of the simple ὁ μαθητῆς ἡσυχάζω, and the facility, therefore, wherewith ΙΚΑΝΟΙ might be passed over by occasion of the following letters ΚΑΙΟ. — Ver. 12. After ἵσανοι: Elz. Scholz. Tisch. have ἤν, which is condemned by Griesb., deleted by Lachm.; it is wanting in authorities so important that it appears as supplementary, as also does the ἤν, which Lachm. Tisch. read before γῆρα, although this latter has still stronger attestation. — Ver. 16. ἔγενεται] A B C L Ξ N, min. have ἔγερθην, in favour of which, moreover, D bears witness by ἔγερθην. On this evidence it is, with Lachm. and Tisch., to be preferred. — Ver. 21. Instead of αὐτῷ δὲ, Tisch. has ἐκείνη on evidence too feeble, and without sufficient internal reason. — Elz. Scholz have τὸ βλέπειν. This τὸ might, in consequence of the preceding ἔχομισατο, have just as easily dropt out as slipped.
in. But on the ground of the decidedly preponderating counter evidence, it is by Lachm. and Tisch. rightly deleted. — Ver. 22. δτῷ] is wanting, it is true, in important authorities (although they are not preponderating), and is deleted by Lachm.; but the omission is explained from Matt. xi. 5. — Vv. 24-26. Instead of εἰς τῆς ἱλαρ.δας, A B D L Ξ n (yet in ver. 26 not A also) have εἰς τῆς ἱλαρ.δας; so Lachm. It is from Matt. xi. 7-9. — Ver. 27. εἰ ᾧ] is wanting in B D L Ξ n, min. Copt. Arm. Vulg. codd. of L. Marcion, and is left out by Lachm. and Tisch. An addition from Matth. — Ver. 28. προφήτης] is deleted, indeed, by Lachm. (in accordance with B K L M X Ξ n, min. vss. and Fathers), but was omitted in accordance with Matt. xi. 11, from which place, on the other hand, was added τοῦ βαπτιστηθοῦ (rightly deleted by Tisch.). — Ver. 31. Before τίν Elz. has εἰτε δὲ ὅ κύριος, in opposition to decisive evidence. An exegetical addition, in respect of which the preceding passage was taken as historical narration. — Ver. 32. Instead of καὶ λέγουσαν, Tisch. has, on too feeble evidence, λέγοντες. — Ver. 34. The arrangement φιλ.τὸ τελ.νι. is decisively attested. The reverse order (Elz.) is from Matth. — Ver. 35. πάντας] Lachm. and Tisch. Synopsis [not Tisch. 8] have this immediately after ἀπό, but in opposition to preponderating evidence. It was omitted in accordance with Matt. xi. 19 (so still in D F L M X, min. Arm. Syr.), and then restored to the position suggested by the most ordinary use. — Ver. 36. The readings τῶν δικ.νι. and κατεκλ.δή (Lachm. Tisch.) are, on important evidence, to be adopted; ἀνακλ. was more familiar to the transcribers; Luke alone has κατακλ. — Ver. 37. ἦτις ἦν] is found in different positions. B L Ξ n, vss. Lachm. Tisch. rightly have it after γων. In D it is wanting, and from this omission, which is to be explained from the possibility of dispensing with the words, arose their restoration before ἀμαρτ., to which they appeared to belong. — Instead of ἀνάκειται is to be read, with Lachm. and Tisch., κατάκειται. Comp. on ver. 36. — Ver. 42. δὲ, both here and at ver. 43, has authorities so important against it that it appears to have been inserted as a connective particle; it is deleted by Tisch. — εἰτε is wanting in B D L Ξ n, min. Syr. Arr. Perss. Copt. Aeth. Vulg. It. Aug. Suspected by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. But why should it have been added? The entire superfluousness of it was the evident cause of its omission. — Ver. 44. After θριζῇ Elz. has τῆς κεφαλ.ῆς, in opposition to decisive evidence. An addition from ver. 38.

As an explanation of this miraculous healing from a distance, Schenkel can here suggest only the "extraordinary spiritual excitement" of the sick person.

The recitative ὅτι occurs nowhere (not even in iv. 10) twice in the same discourse; moreover, it is quite arbitrary to assume that in the second half, which is by no means specifically different from the first, we have the words of others (Paulus, Kuinoel, Bleek). — They saw in this miracle a σημεῖον of a great prophet, and in His appearance they saw the beginning of the Messianic deliverance (comp. i. 68, 78). — ὁ λόγος ὁμοτος] This saying, namely, that a great prophet with his claim made good by a raising from the dead, etc. — ἐν ὁλῷ τ. Comp. v. 15.

Remark.—The natural explanation of this miracle as of the awakening of a person only apparently dead (Paulus, Ammon; comp. Schleiermacher, L. J. p. 233) so directly conflicts with the Gospel narrative, and, moreover, places Jesus in so injurious a light of dissimulation and pretence, that it is decisively to be rejected, even apart from the fact that in itself it would be improbable, nay monstrous, to suppose that as often as dead people required His help, He should have chanced every time upon people only apparently dead (to which class in the end even He Himself also must have belonged after His crucifixion!). Further, the allegorical explanation (Weisse), as well as also the identification of this miracle with the narrative of the daughter of Jairus (Gfrörer, Heil. Sage, I. p. 194), and finally, the mythical solution (Strauss), depend upon subjective assumptions, which are not sufficient to set aside the objective historical testimony, all the more that this testimony is conjoined, in respect of the nature of the miracle, with that of Matthew (Jairus' daughter) and that of John (Lazarus); and to suspect the three narratives of raisings from the dead taken together because of the gradual climax of their attendant circumstances (Woolston, Strauss: death-bed, coffin, grave) is inadmissible, because Luke has not the history of the raising on the death-bed until later (viii. 50 ff.), and therefore was not consciously aware of that progression to a climax. The raisings of the dead, attested beyond all doubt by all the four evangelists, referred to by Jesus Himself among the proofs of His divine vocation (Matt. xi. 5; Luke vii. 22), kept in lively remembrance in the most ancient church (Justin, Ap. i. 48, 22; Origen, c. Cels. ii. 48), and hence not to be left on one side as problematical (Schleiermacher, Weizsäcker), are analogous σημεία of the specific Messianic work of the future ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν.

Vv. 18–35. See on Matt. xi. 2–19. Matthew has for reasons of his own given this history a different and less accurate position, but he has related it more fully, not omitting just at the beginning, as Luke does, the mention of the Baptist's imprisonment. Luke follows another source. — περὶ πάντων τούτων] such as the healing of the servant and the raising of the young man.¹ — Ver. 21. Luke also, the physician, here and elsewhere (comp. vi. 17 f., v. 40 f.) distinguishes between the naturally sick people and demoniacs. Besides, the whole narrative passage, vv. 20, 21, is an addi-

Ver. 25. τρυφή] not to be referred to clothing, but to be taken generally, luxury. — Ver. 27. Mal. iii. 1 is here, as in Matt. and in Mark i. 2, quoted in a similarly peculiar form, which differs from the LXX. The citation in this form had already become sanctioned by usage. — Ver. 28. προφήτης] The reflectiveness of a later period is manifest in the insertion of this word. Matthew is original. — Vv. 29, 30 do not contain an historical notice introduced by Luke by way of comment (Paulus, Bornemann, Schleiermacher, Lachmann, Köstlin, Hilgenfeld, Bleek, following older commentators), for his manner elsewhere is opposed to this view, and the spuriousness of εἶπε δὲ ὁ κύριος, ver. 31 (in Elz.), is decisive; but the words are spoken by Jesus, who alleges the differing result which the advent of this greatest of the prophets had produced among the people and among the hierarchs. In respect of this, it is to be conceded that the words in their relation to the power, freshness, and rhetorical vividness of what has gone before bear a more historical stamp, and hence might reasonably be regarded as a later interpolation of tradition (Weisse, II. p. 109, makes them an echo of Matt. xxi. 31 f.; comp. de Wette, Holtzmann, and Weiss; Ewald derives them from the Logia, where, however, their original place was, according to him, after ver. 27. — ἐδικαίωσαν τ. This counsel of God's will (βουλή, comp. on Eph. i. 11) they annulled (ἡθέτ.), they abolished, since they frustrated its realization through their disobedience. Beza says pertinently: "Abrogavunt, nempe quod ad ipsius rei exitum attinet, quo ovasit ipsis exitii instrumentum id, quod eos ad resipiscatiant et salutem vocabat." — εἰς ἑαυτοὺς] with respect to themselves, a closer limitation of the reference of ἡθέτησαν.1 Bornemann (comp. T. 697, and elsewhere). — Ver. 31. τοὐς ἀνθρ. τ. γεν. τ.] is related not remotely to ver. 29 (Holtzmann), but Jesus means to have the general designation applied (see also ver. 34) to the hierarchs, ver. 30, not to πᾶς ὁ λαός. Comp. Matt. xii. 39, xvi. 4. — εἰσίν ὁμ. εἰσίν has the emphasis. — Ver. 33. As to the form ἐσθοῦν, as we must write with Tischendorf [Tisch. 8 has ἐσθίων], comp. on Mark i. 6. The limitations ἄρτον and οἶνον, which are not found in Matthew, betray themselves to be additions of a later tradition, the former being an echo of Matt. iii. 4; Mark i. 6. — Ver. 35. See on Matt. xi. 19, and observe the appropriate reference of the expression ἐδικαίωθη κ.τ.λ. to ἐδικαίωσαν τ. Θεόν, ver. 29. Even Theophylact, who is mistaken in his interpretation of Matt. l.c., expresses in this place the substantially correct view that the divine wisdom which revealed itself in Jesus and the Baptist received its practical justification in the conduct of their followers. Bornemann considers these words as a continuation of the antagonistic saying ἵδοὺ . . . ἀμαρτωλῶν, and, indeed, as bitterly ironical: "Et (dicitis): probari, spectari solet sapientia, quae Johannis et Christi propria est, in filiis ejus omnibus, i.e. in fructibus ejus omnibus." It is against this view that, apart from the taking of the aorist in the sense of habitual action (see on Matt. l.c.), τέκνα τῆς σοφίας can denote only persons; that, according to the parallelism with ver. 33, the antagonistic judgment does not go further than ἀμαρτωλῶν; and that Jesus would scarcely break off his discourse with the quotation of an antagonistic sarcasm instead of delivering with His own judgment a final decision in reference to the contradictory phenomena in question. — πάντων] added at the end for emphasis, not by mistake (Holtzmann, Weiss), serves to confirm what is consolatory in the experience declared by ἐδικαίωθη κ.τ.λ.

Ver. 36. This narrative of the anointing is distinct from that given in Matt. xxvi. 6 ff.; Mark xiv. 3 ff.; John xii. 1 ff.

See on Matt. xxvi. 6. The supposition that there was only one incident of the kind, can be indulged only at Luke's expense. He must either himself have put aside the actual circumstances, and have added new circumstances (Hug, Gutacht. II. p. 98), which is in itself quite improbable, or he must have followed a tradition which had transferred the later incident into an earlier period; comp. Ewald, Bleek, Holtzmann, Schenkel, Weizäcker; Schleiermacher also, according to whom Luke must have adopted a distorted narrative; and Hilgenfeld, according to whom he must have remodelled the older narrative on a Pauline basis. But the accounts of Mark and Matthew presuppose a tradition so constant as to time and place, that the supposed erroneous (John xii. 1 ff.) dislocation of the tradition, conjoined with free remodelling, as well as its preference on the part of Luke, can commend itself only less than the hypothesis that he is relating an anointing which actually occurred earlier, and, on the other hand, has passed over the similar subsequent incident; hence it is the less to be conceived that Simon could have been the husband of Martha (Hengstenberg). Notwithstanding the fact that the rest of the evangelists relate an anointing, Baur has taken our narrative as an allegorical poem (see his Evang. p. 501), which, according to him, has its parallel in the section concerning the woman taken in adultery. Strauss sought to confuse together the two narratives of anointing and the account of the woman taken in adultery. According to Eichthal, II. p. 252, the narrative is an interpolation, and that the most pernicious of all from a moral point of view!

Vv. 37, 38. "Ἡτὶς ἦν ἐν τ. πόλει ἀμαρτ.] According to this arrangement (see the critical remarks): who in the city was a sinner: she was in the city a person practising prostitution.¹ See on ἀμαρτωλός in this sense, Wetstein in loc.; Dorvill, ad Char. p. 220. ¹ Grotius says pertinently: "Quid mirum, tales ad Christum confugisse, cum et ad Johannis baptismum venerint? Matt. xxi. 32." Schleiermacher ought not to have explained it away as the "sinful woman in the general sense." She had been a πέρη (Matt. xxi. 31).
the influence of Jesus (it is unknown how; perhaps only by hearing His preaching and by observation of His entire ministry) had attained to repentance and faith, and thereby to moral renewal. Now the most fervent love and reverence of gratitude to her deliverer urge her to show Him outward tokens of these sentiments. She does not speak, but her tears, etc., are more eloquent than speech, and they are understood by Jesus. The imperfect ἤν does not stand for the pluperfect (Kuinoel and others), but Luke narrates from the standpoint of the public opinion, according to which the woman still was (ver. 39) what she, and that probably not long before, had been. The view, handed down from ancient times in the Latin Church (see Sepp, L. J. II. p. 281 ff.; Schegg in loc.), and still defended by Lange, to whom therefore the πῶλης is Magdala, which identifies the woman with Mary Magdalene (for whose festival the narrative before us is the lesson), and further identifies the latter with the sister of Lazarus, is, though adopted even by Hengstenberg, just as groundless (according to viii. 2, moreover, morally inadmissible) as the supposition that the πῶλης in the passage before us is Jerusalem (Paulus in his Comment. u. Exeg. Handb.; in his Leben Jesu: Bethany). Nain may be meant, ver. 11 (Kuinoel). It is safer to leave it indefinite as the city in which dwelt the Pharisee in question.

conceit, the essence, the moral character of the proceeding, remains entirely unknown; he sees in the fact that Jesus acquiesces in this homage of the sinful woman the proof that He does not know her, and therefore is no prophet, because He allows Himself unawares to be defiled by her who is unclean.—οὐτος] placed first with an emphasis of depreciation.—ποταπή] of what character, i. 29. —ἡτίς ἄπτ. αὑτοῦ] she who touches, comes in contact with Him. —οὖτι] that she, namely. —Ver. 40. Jesus saw into the thoughts of the Pharisee. The ἐχω κ. τ. λ. is a "comis praefatio," Bengel. Observe that the Pharisee himself, in respect of such a scene, does not venture to throw any suspicion of immorality on Jesus.

Vv. 41–43. By the one debtor the woman is typified, by the other Simon, both with a view to what is to be said at ver. 47. The supposition that both of them had been healed by Jesus of a disease (Paulus, Kuinoel), does not, so far as Simon is concerned, find any sure ground (in opposition to Holtzmann) in the ὁ λεπρός of the later narrative of the anointing (in Matthew and Mark). The creditor is Christ, of whose debtors the one owes Him a ten times heavier debt (referring to the woman in her agony of repentance) than the other (the Pharisee regarded as the righteous man he fancied himself to be). The difference in the degree of guilt is measured by the difference in the subjective consciousness of guilt; by this also is measured the much or little of the forgiveness, which again has for its result the much or little of the grateful love shown to Christ, ver. 41 ff. —μὴ ἐχύντων] "Ergo non solvitur debitum subsequente amore et grato animo," Bengel. — On the interpolated εἰπέ, which makes the question more pointed, comp. (anointing of the head). — σοῦ εἰς τ. οἶκ. I came into thy house. The σοῦ being placed first sharpens the rebuke. — That, moreover, even the foot-washing before meals was not absolutely a rule (it was observed especially in the case of guests coming off a journey, Gen. xviii. 4; Judg. xix. 21; 1 Sam. xxv. 41; 2 Thess. v. 10) is plain from John xiii., and hence the neglect on the part of the heartless Pharisee is the more easily explained. — ἐβρέξει μου τ. πόδα. moistened my feet. Comp. on John xi. 32; Matt. viii. 3. — Observe the contrasts of the less and the greater: — (1) ὑδῷρ and τοῖς δάκρυσιν; (2) φίλημα, which is plainly understood as a kiss upon the mouth, and οὐ διέλ. καταφ. μ. τοὺς πόδας; (3) ἐλαίῳ τῇν κεφαλ. and μύρῳ ἡλ. μ. τοὺς πόδας (μύρον is an aromatic anointing oil, and more precious than ἐλαίον, see Xen. Conv. ii. 3). — ἀφ' ἦς εἰςηλθον] loosely hyperbolical in affectionate consideration,—suggested by the mention of the kiss which was appropriate at the entering.

Ver. 47. ὦ χάριν, by Beza, Grotius, Griesbach, Lachmann, Tischendorf, de Wette, Ewald, Bleek, and others, is separated from λέγω σοι by a comma, and connected with ἀφέωνται. But the latter has its limitation by ὅτι κ.τ.λ. It is to be interpreted: on account of which I say unto thee; on behalf of this her manifestation of love (as a recognition and high estimation thereof) I declare to thee. — ἀφέωνται κ.τ.λ. her sins are forgiven, the many (that she has committed, vv. 37, 39), since she has loved much. This ὅτι ἡγάπησε πολύ expresses not the cause, and therefore not the antecedent of forgiveness. That the words do express the antecedent of forgiveness is the opinion of the Catholics, who maintain thereby their doctrine of contritio charitate formata and of the merit of works; and lately, too, of de Wette, who recognises love for Christ and faith in Him as one; of Olshausen, who after his own fashion endeavours to overcome the difficulty of the thought by regarding love as a receptive activity; of Paulus, who drags in what is not found in the text; of Baumgarten-Crusius, and of Bleek. Although dogmatic theology is not decisive against this opinion (see the pertinent observations of Melanchthon in the Ἀπολ. iii. 31 ff. p. 87 f.), yet perhaps the context is, because this view directly contradicts the παραβολή, vv. 41, 42, that lies at its foundation, as well as the ὁ δὲ ὀλέγον ἀφίεται κ.τ.λ. which immediately follows, if the love does not appear as the consequent of the forgiveness; the antecedent, i.e. the subjective cause of the forgiveness, is not the love, but the faith of the penitent, as is plain from ver. 50. Contextually it is right, therefore, to understand οὕτω of the ground of recognition or acknowledgment: Her sins are forgiven, etc., which is certain, since she has manifested love in an exalted degree. Bengel says pertinently: “Remissio peccatorum, Simoni non cogitata, probatur a fructu, ver. 42, qui est evidens et in oculos incurrit, quum illa sit occulta;” and Calovius: “probat Christus a posteriori.” Comp. Beza, Calvin, Wetstein, Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 603 f.; Hilgenfeld also, Evang. p. 175. The objection against this view, taken by Olshausen and Bleek, that the aorist ἡγάπησε is inappropriate, is quite a mistake, and is nullified by passages such as John iii. 16. The ἀφέωνται expresses that the woman is in the condition of forgiveness (in statu gratiae), and that the criterion thereof is the much love manifested by her. It is thereafter in ver. 48 that Jesus makes, even to herself, the express declaration. — ὁ δὲ ὀλέγον ἀφίεται, ὀλέγ. ἀγαπᾷ] a general decision in precise opposition to the first half of the verse, with intentional application to the moral condition of the Pharisee, which is of such a kind that only a little forgiveness falls to his share, the consequence being that he also manifests but little love (vv. 44–46). There was too much want of self-knowledge and of repentance in the self-righteous Simon for him to be a subject of much forgiveness.

Ver. 48. The Pharisee is dismissed, and now Jesus satisfies the woman’s need, and gives her the formal and direct assurance of her pardoned condition. Subjectively she was already in this condition through her faith (ver. 50), and her love was the result thereof (ver. 47); but the objective assurance, the declared absolution on the part of the forgiver, now completed the moral deliverance (ver. 50) which her faith had wrought.
Ver. 49. 'Ἡράκλεω] The beginning, the rising up of this thought, is noteworthy in Luke's estimation. — τίς οὖτός εστιν κ.τ.λ.] a question of displeasure. — καί: even.

Ver. 50. Jesus enters not into explanation in answer to these thoughts, but closes the whole scene by dismissing the woman with a parting word, intended to confirm her faith by pointing out the ground of her spiritual deliverance. — ἡ πίστις σος.] "fides, non amor; fides ad nos spectat, amore convincuntur alii," Bengel. — εἰς εἰρήνη] as viii. 48. See on Mark v. 34.

REMARK.—From the correct interpretation of this section it is manifest of itself that this passage, peculiar to Luke, contains nothing without an adequate motive (ver. 37) or obscure (ver. 47); but, on the contrary, the self-consistency of the whole incident, the attractive simplicity and truth with which it is set forth, and the profound clearness and pregnancy of meaning characteristic of the sayings of Jesus, all bear the stamp of originality; and this is especially true also of the description of the woman who is thus silently eloquent by means of her behaviour. This is in opposition to de Wette (comp. also Weiss, II. p. 142 ff.). A distorted narrative (Schleiermacher), a narrative from "a somewhat confused tradition" (Holtzmann), or a narrative gathering together ill-fitting elements (Weizsäcker), is not marked by such internal truth, sensibility, and tenderness.

1 That what is here meant is "the ethically culpable and therefore metaphorical possession of an erring soul that was completely under the power of the spirit of the world." This explaining away of the literal possession (in which, moreover, Fathers such as Gregory and Bede have already preceded him) is not to be defended by comparison of Matt. xii. 43 ff., Luke xx. 24 ff., where certainly the seven demons only serve the purpose of the parable. Besides, it is pure invention to find in the seven demons the representation of the spirit of the world in its whole power. At least, according to this the demon in Matt. xii. 45 would only have needed to take with him six other demons.

(Theophylact, Castalio, Béza, Elsner, Zeger, Bengel, Kuinoel, de Wette, Ewald, Schegg, and others) has against it the fact that without some qualifying phrase πορευόμενοι would not be a picturesque (de Wette), but an unmeaning addition, into which the interpreters were the first to introduce anything characteristic, as Beza, Elsner, Wolf, Valckenaer: digressi ab audito verbo, and Majus, Wetstein, Kuinoel, and others: sensim ac paulatim (following the supposed meaning of ἀκρα, 2 Sam. iii. 1, and elsewhere). By the future γνωσθῆσαται that which is to come is simply asserted as coming to pass; but by the subjunctive (ἐξόντα) it is in such a way asserted that it leads one to expect it out of the present, and that without ἄν, because it is not conceived of as dependent on a conditioning circumstance (Klotz, "Ad Devar. p. 158 f.): There is nothing hidden which shall not be known and is not bound to come to publicity. Comp. on the latter clause, Plato, Gorgias, p. 480 C: εἰς τὸ φανερὸν ἄγειν τὸ ἀδίκημα; Thucyd. i. 6. 3, 23. 5.—Ver. 18. τῶς] χρῆ γὰρ σπουδαίως κ. ἐπιμελῶς . . . ἀκροάσθαι, Euthymius Zigabenus.—δς γὰρ ἄν ἔχη κ.τ.λ.] a ground of encouragement. The meaning of the proverbial sayings in this connection is as in Mark iv. 25, not as in Matt. xiii. 12.—ο δὲκεὶ ἔχειν] even what he fancies he possesses: it is not the liability to loss, but the self-delusion about possession, the fanciful presumption of possession, that is expressed; the μὴ ἔχειν, in fact, occurs when the knowledge has not actually been made a man's own; a man believes he has it, and the slight insight which he regards as its possession is again lost. It is not reproach against the apostles (Baur, Hilgenfeld), but warning that is conveyed in the form of a general principle. In xix. 26 the expression with δοκεῖ would have been inappropriate. But even here the mere ὁ ἐχεῖ, as in Mark iv. 25, would have been not only allowable, but even more significant. The δοκεῖ κ.τ.λ. already shows the influence of later reflection.

Vv. 19–21. See on Matt. xii. 46–50; Mark iii. 31–35. Luke has the section in accordance with Mark, but in a shortened form, without anything to indicate chronological sequence or connection of subject, and he gives it a different position. — Ver. 20. λεγόντων by its being said. See Winer, p. 519 [E. T. 736]; Bernhardy, p. 481; Bornemann, Schol. p. 53. — Ver. 21. οὗτος] my mother and my brethren are those who, etc.

Vv. 22–25. See on Matt. viii. 18, 23-27; Mark iv. 35–41. In Luke there is no precise note of time, but the voyage is the same; abridged from Mark. — Ver. 23 f. ἀφύπνοον] which means to wake up (therefore equivalent to ἀφύπνιζεσθαι), and also (as in this case) to fall asleep (consequently equivalent to καθυπνοῦν).1) belongs to the late and corrupt Greek. Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 224. — κατέβη] from the high ground down to the lake. Comp. Polyb. xxx. 14. 6: λαίλατος τινος ἐκπεπτοκύιας εἰς αὐτούς. — συνεπληροῦντο] What happened to the ship is said of the sailors. Examples in Kypke, I. p. 248. Observe the imperfects in relation to the preceding aorist. — διήγειραν] they awoke him (Matt. i. 24); but subsequently ἐγερθείς: having arisen (Matt. ii. 14). — Ver. 25. ἐφοβήθη] the disciples, as Mark iv. 41. — The first καί is: even.

Vv. 26–39. See on Matt. viii. 28–34; Mark v. 1–20. Luke follows Mark freely. — κατεπληκο] they arrived. See Wetstein. — Ver. 27. ἐκ τῆς πόλεως] does not belong to ὑπήνυθεν, but to ἀνήρ τις, alongside of which it stands. To connect the clause with ὑπήνυθεν would not be contradictory

1 Therefore it is not to be said, with Baur, Evang. p. 467 f., that Luke purposely omitted the words in Matthew: καὶ ἠκτίνας τ. χειρα ἀυτοῦ ἣν τ. μαθητές κ.τ.λ., in an interest adverse to the Twelve. It is not the Twelve alone that are meant in Matthew.

2 It corresponds exactly to the German "entschlafen," except that this word is not used in the sense of becoming free from sleep, which καθυπνοῦν might have according to the connection.
to ἐν οἰκία... μνήμασιν, but would require the presupposition, not presented in the text, that the demoniac had just rushed out of the city. — Ver. 28. μη με βασαν.] as at Mark v. 7. — Ver. 29. παρίγγελλεν] not in the sense of the pluperfect, but like ἐλεγεν, Mark v. 8. — Nothing is to be put in a parenthesis. — πολλοίς γὰρ χρόνοις κ.τ.λ.] To account for the command of Jesus the description of his frightful condition is given: for during a long time it had fared with him as follows. Comp. Rom. xvi. 25; Acts viii. 11; John ii. 20; Herodian, i. 6. 24: οὐ πολλῷ χρόνῳ; Plut. Thes. vi.: χρόνοις πολλοῖς ὑστερον. See generally, Bernhardy, p. 81; Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. xl. In opposition to usage, Erasmus and Grotius render the words: often. So also Valckenaer. — συνηρπάκειν] may mean: it had hurried him along with it (Acts vi. 12, xix. 29, xxvii. 15, and very frequently in the classical writers), but also: it had (absolutely and entirely, συν) seized him (Ar. Lys. 437; 4 Macc. v. 3). It is usually taken in the latter sense. But the former is the more certain of the two according to the usage of Luke, corresponds better with its use elsewhere, and likewise agrees perfectly with the connection. For ἐδεσμεῖτο κ.τ.λ. then relates what was accustomed to be done with the sufferer in order to prevent this tearing and dragging by the demon; observe the imperfect, he was (acustom<ed to be) chained, etc. — Ver. 31. ἀυτοῖς] as Mark v. 10, from the standpoint of the consciousness of the several demons possessing the man. — ἄβυσσον] abyss, i.e. Hades (Rom. x. 7). The context teaches that in particular Gehenna is meant (comp. Apoc. ix. 1 f., xi. 7, xx. 3). The demons know and dread their place of punishment. Mark is different and more original; in opposition to Baur, Markusevang. p. 42. — Ver. 33. ἀπεπνίγη] of choking by drowning, Dem. 833, pen.; Raphel, Polyb. p. 199; Wakefield, Silv. Crit. II. p. 75. Even Hug (Gutacht. II. p. 17 f.) attempts to justify the destruction of the swine in a way which can only remind us of the maxim, "qui exccusat, accusat." — Ver. 35. ἔξωλθον] the people from the city and from the farms. — παρὰ τ. πόδας] as a scholar with his teacher. The whole of this description, indeed, and the subsequent prohibition, ver. 39, is intended, according to Baur, Evang. p. 430 f., to set forth the demoniac as a representative of the converted heathen world. — Ver. 36. καὶ οἱ ἰδόντες] the disciples and others who had seen it together. The καὶ places these in contrast even with the people who came thither and found the cure accomplished, and to whom the eye-witnesses also of the proceeding narrated it. — Ver. 38. ἐδείκτο] See on this Ionic form, which, however, was also frequent among Attic writers, Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 220; Schaefer, ad Grey. Cor. p. 431; Krüger, ad Xen. Anab. vii. 4. 8. The reading ἐδεικτο (B L) is a correction, and ἐδείκτο (A P, Lachmann) is a transcriber's mistake for this correction. Ver. 39. πόλιν] Gadara, ver. 27. Mark, certainly with greater accuracy, has ἐν θυ Λεκάπόλει.

Vv. 40-56. See on Matt. ix. 1, 18-26; Mark v. 21-43. In Matthew the sequence is different. The narrative of Luke, indeed, is not dependent on that of Mark, but has it in view, without, however, on the whole attaining to its clearness and vividness. — ἀπεδέχατο] is usually understood of a joyous reception (ὡς εὐεργέτην καὶ σωτήρα, Euthymius Zigabenus); but quite arbitrarily. Comp. Acts xv. 4. The narrative says simply: that on His return the crowd received Him (comp. ix. 11), because all had been in expectation of His coming back; so that thus immediately His ministry was again put in requisition. — Ver. 41. καὶ αὐτὸς] and Ἱχ, after mention of the name comes the personal position. Comp. xix. 2. — ἀπέθνησεν] died (imperfect), i.e. was dying, not: “obierat, absent mortuanque ignorante patre” (Fritzsche, ad Matt. p. 348). That the death had not yet taken place is indicated, Bernhardy, p. 373; Wyttenbach, ad Plat. Phaed. p. 142 ff. — συνέπνευσαν] a vivid picture: they stifled Him; in point of fact the same as συνέθλιβον, Mark v. 24. — Ver. 43. προσαναλώσασα] when she even in addition (over and above her suffering) had expended, Dem. 460. 2, 1025. 20; Plat. Prot. p. 311 D. — ἰατροί] on physicians. As to ὅλον τ. βίον, comp. Mark xii. 44. — Ver. 45. ὁ Πέτρος μὲν ἡμετερός περὶ ἀπλής ἐπαφῆς λέγειν τὸν Χριστὸν… αὐτὸς δὲ οὖ περὶ τοιαύτης ἔλεγεν, ἀλλὰ περὶ τής γενομένης ἐκ πίστεως, Euthymius Zigabenus. — Ver. 49. τις παρὰ τοῦ ἱρ.] i.e. one of his dependants. Comp. on Mark iii. 21. — τέθνηκεν placed first for emphasis: she is dead. On the distinction from ἀπεθνησκεν, ver. 42, comp. Plat. Phaed. p. 64 A: ἀποθνήσκειν τε καὶ τεθνάναι. — Ver. 51. εἰσελθεῖν] into the chamber of death. — Ver. 52 relates to the bewailing crowd assembled in the house (not in the death-chamber), with whom occurred this conversation, ver. 52 f., while Jesus and those named at ver. 51 were passing into the chamber where the dead body lay. Among those who laughed, the three disciples are as little intended to be reckoned in Luke as in Mark, whom he follows. — ἐκόπτοντο αὐτὴν] a well-known custom, to express one's grief by beating on one's breast. As to the construction of κόπτεσθαι (also τύπτεσθαι) and plangere with an accusative of the object (xxiii. 27) on whose account one beats oneself, see Heyne, Obs. ad Tibull. i. 7, 28, p. 71. — Ver. 55. ἐπέστρεψε κ.τ.λ.] purposely narrates the reanimation of one that was actually dead, whose spirit had departed. In Acts xx. 10 also this idea is found. — παρήγγ. αὐτοῖς κ.τ.λ.] following Mark v. 43.

1 They would not, moreover, have to be understood as associated with those who were put out, if ἰσχαλ. ἵνα πάντ. were genuine (but see the critical remarks). Kästlin is right in adducing this against Baur, who detected in this passage a Pauline side-glance to the original apostles.

2 How opposed, therefore, is this to the view of an apparent death! There cannot remain even a shadow of uncertainty as to how the matter is to be regarded (Weizsäcker). Jesus Himself will not leave the crowd in any doubt, but declares (ver. 52) in His pregnant style what must immediately of itself be evident.
CHAPTER IX.

VER. 1. After δώδεκα Elz. Scholz, Lachm. have μαθητας αυτου, which is not found in A B D K M S V R Δ, min. vss. Fathers. An addition, instead of which other authorities of importance have ἀποστόλους. Luke always writes οἱ δώδεκα absolutely. So also do Mark and John, but not Matthew. — Ver. 2. τοις ἄσθενεντας] A D L Ξ n, min. have τ. ἄσθενης. Approved by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. But since in B, Syr. cur Dial. the words are altogether wanting, and, moreover, in the variants occur τοις νοσῶντας, πάντας τοις ἄσθενεντας, and omnes infirmitates (Brix.), the simple ἰασομαι (as Tisch. also now has) is to be regarded as original. — Ver. 3. ἤβατος in Elz., instead of ἤβατον in Lachm. and Tisch., has evidence of importance both for and against it. In accordance with A B [B has ἤβατον] Δ, it is to be maintained, since the singular might be introduced from Matt. x. 10 (see on the passage), and mechanically also from Mark vi. 8, just as easily as it could be retained by reason of the singulars alongside of it. — Ver. 5. διεζωναι] in Elz., instead of διεζωνται (the latter is approved by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. and Tisch.), has against it authorities so important, that it must be referred to the parallels. — Ver. 7. τος τ. ζων] This τοι (bracketed by Lachm.) is wanting in B C* D L X Ξ n, 1, 124, Copt. Sahid. codd. of It. Omitted, in accordance with the parallels. — Ver. 7. τος τ. ζων] is wanting in B C* D L Ξ, min. vss. Condemned by Griesb., bracketed by Lachm., deleted by Tisch. An addition for the purpose of more precise specification. — Ver. 10. τόσον ἐρημ. τόλ. καλ. Βηθο. Many variants; the reading which is best attested is τόλιν καλουμένην Βηθο., which Tisch., following B L X, 33, Copt. Sahid. Erp., has adopted. Rightly; εἰς τόλιν κατ. Κλ. would of necessity arouse objection, as what follows did not take place in a city, but in a desert (comp. ver. 12, and also Mark vi. 31). — Ver. 11. δεξαμ. Lachm. and Tisch. have ἀποδεξάμ., in accordance with B D L X [also Ξ] n, min. Rightly; the Recepta is a neglect of the compound form, which form in the New Testament occurs only in Luke. — Ver. 12. Instead of πορευθησετε, Elz. Scholz have ἀπελθησετε, in opposition to decisive evidence; it is from the parallels. — Ver. 14. Before αἰών, B C D L R = s, 33, 157, Sahid. Cant. Or. have ὠσί, which Tisch. Synops has adopted [ὠσί is wanting in Tisch. 8]. Rightly; it was omitted, because even Mark has no indefinite qualifying word. — Ver. 22. ἐγερθη.] Lachm. has ἀναστήναι. The authorities are greatly divided, but ἐγερθη. is from Matthew (τ. τίτη ἠμέρα ἐγερθη.). — Ver. 23. Instead of ἐρχομαί, ἀρνησάθω Elz. Scholz have ἐρχόμεθα, ἀρνησάθω, in opposition to preponderating mss. and Or. From the parallels. — καὶ ἡμέραν] condemned by Griesb., deleted by Scholz, Lachm. It has preponderating evidence in its favour; the omission is due to the words being omitted in the parallels. — Ver. 27. ὅσοι] B L X Σ, 1, Cyr. have αὐτοὶ. Commended by Griesb., approved by Rinck, adopted by Tisch. Rightly; ὅσοι is from the parallels. — The readings ἔστω καὶ γεῦσονται (Elz.: ἔστω καὶ γεῦσονται) have (the latter strongly) preponderating evidence in their favour. — Ver. 35. ἀγαπητοί] B L X Σ, vss. have ἐκλειπεμένοι. Commended by Griesb. and Schulz, adopted by Tisch. The Recepta is from the parallels. — Ver. 37. ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῷ τιτῆρος ἐν, in accordance with B L S Σ, 1, 69, is to be deleted. See on vii. 11. — Ver. 38. ἡξίβολ.] Lachm. has ἡξίβολον, in accordance with B C D L Σ, min. A neglect of the compound form, which form occurs elsewhere in the New Testament only in Matt. xxvii. 46, and even there is disregarded by several authorities. — Instead of ἐπιβλέψαι (to be accented thus) Elz. Lachm. have ἐπιβλέψαι. Authorities of importance on both sides. The latter is an interpretation. The infinitive ἐπιβλέψαι was taken for an imperative middle. — Ver. 43. ἐστὶν] Griesb. Lachm. Tisch. have ἐστίν; decisively attested. — Ver. 48. Instead of ἐστί, which is approved by Griesb., and, moreover, adopted by Lachm. and Tisch., Elz. Scholz have ἐσταί. But ἐστί is attested by B C L X Σ, min. vss. (also Vulg. It.) Or. (three) ; the future was introduced in reference to the future kingdom of heaven. — Ver. 50. Instead of ἡμῶν Elz. has ἡμῶν both times, in opposition to preponderating evidence. See on Mark ix. 40. — Ver. 54. ὡς κ. ἦλθε ἡ ἐπ.] is wanting in B L Σ, 71, 157, vss. (Vulg. also and codd. of It.) Jer. (?) . Suspected by Griesb. (following Mill), deleted by Tisch. But how easily the indirect rebuke of Elias, contained in what follows, would make these words objectionable! — Ver. 55. καὶ ἐστιν . . . ὡμέν] is wanting in A B C E, etc., also Σ, min. Copt. Aeth. Sax. Germ. 1, Gat. Fathers. Condemned by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. The words have such a weight of evidence against them that they would have to be rejected, if it could be explained how they got into the text. How easily, on the other hand, might an intentional omission, out of consideration for Elias, occur! Moreover, the simple, short, and pregnant word of rebuke is so unlike a transcriber's addition, and so worthy of Jesus Himself, as, on the other hand, it is hardly to be conceived that Luke would have limited himself on an occasion of so unprecedented a kind only to the bare ἐξητῇσεν ἀντοῖς. But the additional clause which follows in Elz. is decidedly spurious: ἰ γὰρ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώ-που οὐκ ἔδει ψυχὰς ἀνθρώπων ἀπολέσαι, ἀλλὰ σώσαι. — Ver. 57. ἐγένετο δὲ] Lachm. Tisch. have καὶ, in accordance with B C L X Ξς, min. Syr. Perss. Copt. Aeth. Arm. Rightly; a new section was here begun (a lection also), and attention was called to this by adding ἐγένετο to καὶ (so D, 346, Cant. Ver. Colb.), or by writing ἐγένετο δὲ, in accordance with ver. 51. — χύρις] is wanting in B D L Ξς, min. Copt. Arm. Vulg. codd. of It. Condemned by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. But since it stood at the end of the sentence, and since the parallel passage, Matt. viii. 19, had no corresponding word at the end, χύρις would the more easily drop out. — Ver. 62. εἰς τὴν βασιλ.] B L Ξς, 1, 33, Vulg. It. Clem. Or. have τῇ βασιλ.ια. So Lachm. and Tisch. The Recepta is explanatory.

Vv. 1—6. See on Matt. x. 1, 7, 9—11, 14; Mark vi. 7—13. Luke follows Mark, and to that circumstance, not to any depreciation of the Twelve by contrast with the Seventy (Baur), is due the shorter form of the succeeding discourse. — καὶ νόσους θεραπ.] depends on δύναμιν κ. ἔξωσ. (power and authority, iv. 36). The reference to ἐσωκεν (Bengel, Bornemann) is more remote, since the νόσους θεραπεύειν is actually a δύναμις κ. ἔξωσία. — Ver. 3. μῆτε ἢνα δύο χιτ. ἔχειν] nor even to have two under-garments (one in use and one to spare). A mingling of two constructions, as though μὴδὲν αἱ ἐνεῖν had been previously said. See Ellendt, ad Arrian. Al. I. p. 167; Winer, p. 283 [E. T. 397]. For the explanation of the infinitive with εἰσκε there is no need of supplying δεῖν (Lobeck, ad Phryn. pp. 753 f., 772); but this idea is implied in the infinitive itself. See Kühner, ad Xen. Anab. v. 7. 34. It would be possible to take the infinitive for the imperative (Kuinoel and many of the earlier critics, comp. also Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 233 [E. T. 271 f.], who understands λέγω) only if the connection brought out a precise injunction partaking of the nature of an express command (see generally, Winer, p. 282 [E. T. 397]; Bernhardy, p. 358; Pflugk, ad Eur. Heracl. 314), which, however, in this case, since the imperative precedes, and, moreover, immediately follows, is not applicable. — Ver. 5. καὶ τ. κοιν. Even the dust also; see Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 134. — ἐπ’ αὐτ.] against them, more definite than Mark: αὐτοῖς. Theophylact: εἰς ἔλεγχον αὐτῶν καὶ κατάκρισιν.
CHAP. IX. 7–17.

Vv. 7–9. See on Matt. xiv. 1 f.; Mark vi. 14–16. — To the ἰδὼν of Mark vi. 14, which Luke in this place evidently has before him, he adds a definite object, although taken very generally, by means of τὰ γινόμενα πάντα: everything which was done, whereby is meant, which was done by Jesus (ver. 9). — δειπνόρει] he was in great perplexity, and could not in the least arrive at certainty as to what he should think of the person of Jesus. This was the uncertainty of an evil conscience. Only Luke has the word in the New Testament. It very often occurs in the classical writers. On the accentuation ὑπὸ τίνων, see Lipsius, Gramm. Unters. p. 49. — Ver. 8. εἰσὶν] "Nam Elias non erat mortuus," Bengel. — Ver. 9. What Matthew and Mark make Herod utter definitely, according to Luke he leaves uncertain; the account of Luke is hardly more original (de Wette, Bleek), but, on the contrary, follows a more faded tradition, for the character of the secondary writer is to be discerned in the entire narrative (in opposition to Weizsäcker). The twofold ἐγώ has the emphasis of the terrified heart. — ἔζητει ἰδεῖν αὐτῶν] he longed to see Him. Comp. xxiii. 8. He hoped, by means of a personal conference (viii. 20) with this marvellous man, to get quit of his distressing uncertainty. That Herod seemed disposed to greet Him as the risen John, and that accordingly Christ had the prospect of a glowing reception at court, Lange reads into the simple words just as arbitrarily as Eichthal reads into them a partiality for Herod on the part of Luke.

Vv. 10–17. See on Matt. xiv. 13–21; Mark vi. 30–44; John vi. 1 f. According to the reading εἰς πόλιν καλονύμενην Βηθσαίαν (see the critical remarks), εἰς is to be understood of the direction whither (versus), and ver. 11 ff. is to be conceived as said of what happened on the way to Bethsaida. The Bethsaida meant at Mark vi. 45, on the western shore of the lake (\(\text{Βηθσ. της Γαλάκ.}\), John xii. 21; Matt. xi. 21), is not the one intended, but Bethsaida-Julias, on the eastern shore in lower Gaulonitis (see on Mark viii. 22), as Michaelis, Fischer, Paulus, Robinson, Ebrard, Lange, Ewald, Schegg, and others suppose, on the ground of Mark vi. 45, where from the place of the miraculous feeding the passage is made across to the western Bethsaida. For the denial of this assumption, and for the maintenance of the view that Luke, in variation from the parallel passages, transposed the miraculous feeding to the western shore (Winer, de Wette, Hilgenfeld, Holtzmann, Eichthal, and with some hesitation Bleek), there is no foundation at all in Luke's text. For although Jesus had returned from Gadara to the western side of the lake (viii. 37, 40), yet between this point of time and the miraculous feeding come the sending forth of the Twelve, and the period that elapsed until their return (ix. 1–10). Where they, on their return, met with Jesus, Luke does not say, and for this meeting the locality may be assumed to have been the eastern side of the lake where Bethsaida-Julias was situated. But if it is supposed, as is certainly more natural, that they met with Him again at the place whence they had been sent forth by Him on the western border of the lake, it is no contradiction of this that Jesus, according to Luke, wished to retire with His disciples by the country road to that Bethsaida which was situated at the north-eastern point of the lake (Bethsaida-Julias); and it is just this seeking for solitude which can alone be urged in favour of the more remote Bethsaida on the further side. The whole difference therefore comes to this, that, according to Luke, they went to the place of the miraculous feeding by land, but according to Mark (and Matthew), by ship. — Ver. 11. ἀποδεξ.] He did not send them back, although He desired to be alone, but received them. — ἐπισκυπτομόν] Provisions, a word which occurs only in this place in the New Testament, but is often found in the classical writers. Comp. Judith ii. 18, iv. 5. — Ver. 13. \(\piλειον \) \(\nu\)] These words do not fit into the construction. See Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 410; Krüger, ad Dion. p. 287; Schoemann, ad Is. p. 444. — \(\epsilon \muοτι \kappa.\tau.\lambda.\) unless, perchance, etc.; this is neither to be regarded as a direct question (Kypke, Rosenmüller), nor is the thought: "even therewith we cannot feed them," to be previously supplied (Beza, Grotius, de Wette, and others). On the contrary, the two parts of the sentence are closely connected: We have not more than ... unless, perchance, we shall have bought. The tone of the address is not one of irony (Camerarius, Homberg, Kuinoel), as is often expressed by εἰ μὴ (Kühner, II. p. 561; Maetzner, ad Lycery. in Leocr. p. 317), but of embarrassment at the manifest impossibility of carrying the order into effect (ἡμεῖς ... εἰς πάντα τῶν λαῶν). On εἰ with a subjunctive, which is to be recognised even in the Attic writers, although rarely, but is of frequent use in the later Greek, see Winer, p. 263 [E. T. 368]; Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 1. 12; Poppo, ad Cyrop. iii. 3. 50; Klotz, ad Devir. p. 500 ff.; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. I. p. 491. Winer is mistaken in regarding the mood in this case as a deliberative subjunctive not dependent on εἰ, as Battmann, p. 191 [E. T. 221], also takes it. See above for the connection; and on the difference of meaning between the subjunctive with and without ἄν (condition absolutely, without dependence upon circumstances that may or may not happen), see Hermann, De part. ἄν, ii. 7, p. 95; Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 301. — ἡμεῖς] with emphasis; for previously they had advised to leave the people themselves to procure food.—Ver. 14. Observe the numerical relation, five loaves, five thousand, ranks of companies by fifty. To form such companies is, in Luke, said to have been commanded even by Jesus Himself. The tradition is gradually rounded into shape as we advance from Matthew (and John) to Luke.—Ver. 16. εὐλογ. αὐτούς] an intimation of the benediction uttered in prayer, which was effectual in causing the increase. Matthew and Mark have it otherwise.—Ver. 17. κλασμάτων] is, in accordance with the opinion of Valckenaer, Lachmann, and Tischendorf, to be regarded as governed by κόφινοι δώδεκα. If, in accordance with the usual view, it had been construed with τὸ περισσ. αὐτ., it would have been τῶν κλασμ. (comp. Matt. xiv. 20; Soph. El. 1280: τὰ μὲν περισσεύσατα τῶν λόγων ἄνες; Plat. Legg. ix. p. 855 A) or τὰ περισσεύσατα αὐτοῖς κλάσματα (John vi. 12). Luke reproduces the κλασμάτῶν δώδεκα κοφίων of Mark. Since, moreover, κλασμάτων contains a reference to κατέκλασε, ver. 16, it is manifest that the fanciful view of Lange, L. J. II. p. 309 f., is untenable: that Jesus, indeed, miraculously fed the thousands; but that the superfluity arose from the fact that the people, disposed by the love of Jesus to brotherly feeling, had immediately laid open their own stores. Thus the miraculous character of the transaction is combined with the natural explanation of Paulus and Ammon. With what a unanimous untruthfulness must in this case all the four reporters of the history have been silent about the people's private stores. Just as persistent are they in their silence about the symbolic nature of the feeding behind which the marvellous How of the incident is put out of sight (Weizsäcker). Schenkel mingles together most discordant elements for explaining away the miracle, not rejecting even provisions brought with them, and in part procured in haste. But what is the meaning of Mark viii. 18–20? And are all six narratives equally a misunderstanding?

Vv. 18–20. See on Matt. xvi. 13–16; Mark viii. 27–29. As to the second miraculous feeding Luke is silent; a silence which Schleiermacher and many others, even Weizsäcker, make use of in opposition to the reality of the second miracle (see in general on Matt. xv. 33). But this silence is related to the enigmatical hiatus which Luke has left between vv. 17 and 18, entirely passing over everything that occurs in Mark vi. 45–viii. 27, and in the parallel passage of Matthew. No explanation is given of this omission, and it seems to have been occasioned by some casualty unknown to us. Possibly the only reason was that in this place he had before him another written source besides Mark, which did not comprise the fragments in question, and from which, moreover, he borrowed the peculiar situation with which ver. 18 begins. Special purposes for the omission (Hilgenfeld, Weiss, p. 699 f.) are arbitrarily assumed, as if in his idea the portion omitted were, on the one hand, not of sufficient importance, on the other, too detailed (as the history of the Canaanitish woman), and the like. Weizsäcker, p. 66 f., proceeds more critically, but still unsatisfactorily, when he relegates the events to ix. 51 ff,

Neither the discourse of Jesus about the rock (Matt. xvi. 17–19), nor His reproof of Peter as Satan (Matt. xvi. 22 f.; Mark viii. 32 f.), is found in the Pauline Luke, who did not find the former in Mark (see on Mark viii. 29). If he had omitted the saying concerning the rock because of a tendency (Baur and others), he could not in the same interest have passed over the rebuke of Peter as Satan.—Ver. 22. ὅτι] argumentative. Tell no one, etc., since it is the appointment of God (xxiv. 26) that the Messiah, after many sufferings, etc., should attain to His Messianic attestation by the resurrection (Rom. i. 4). Luke leaves it to the reader to conclude from πάντας that there were still others close by to whom, beside the disciples, that which follows was addressed. Comp. on Mark viii. 34. Ver. 18 does not exclude the approach of others which may have occurred meanwhile. The whole feature of the drowsiness of the disciples belongs to a later form of the tradition, which, even as early as Mark, is no longer so primitive as in Matthew. Reflection sought to make the saying about the building of tabernacles intelligible; but the tendency-critics were the first to suggest that there was a design of throwing the primitive apostles, especially Peter, into the shade (Baur, Evang. p. 435, Markus-evang. p. 68; Hilgenfeld, Evang. p. 179, 181; see, on the other hand, Köstlin, p. 200). — Ver. 34 f. ἐπεσκίασεν αὐτούς] αὐτούς, as at ver. 33, refers to Moses and Elias, who are separating from Jesus, not to the disciples (see on Matt. xvii. 5). These (continuing their departure) pass away into the cloud; the voice resounds and the entire appearance is past, Jesus is alone. — ἐκλεισεμ. See the critical remarks; comp. xxiii. 35. — Of the conversation on the subject of Elias, Luke has nothing. It was remote from his Gentile-Christian interest. But all the less are we to impute an anti-Jewish purpose (such as that he would not have John regarded as Elias) to Luke, whose style, moreover, elsewhere tends to abbreviation (in opposition to Baur in the Theol. Jahrb. 1853, p. 80). — Ver. 36. ἐσόγησαν] Of the command of Jesus, with a view to this result, the abbreviating Luke has nothing.

They were therefore to build no hopes thereupon, but only thence to recognise the mobile vulgus! Bornemann, de Wette, Schegg refer τ. λόγ. τούτ. to ὁ γὰρ νῦς κ.τ.λ., so that γὰρ would be explanatory (to wit). So already Erasmus. But the above reference of the plural τοὺς λ. τούτ. most readily suggests itself according to the context; since, on the one hand, πάντων δὲ θεομαζόντων preceded (comp. subsequently the singular τὸ ῥῆμα, ver. 45); and, on the other, the argumentative use of γὰρ seems the most simple and natural. — εἰς χεῖρ. ἀνθρώπ.] into the hands of men, He, who has just been marvelled at as the manifestation of the majesty of God. — Ver. 45. ἵνα purely a particle of purpose, expressing the object of the divine decree. — αἰσθῆται that they should not become aware of it. The idea of the divine decree is that their spiritual perception through the internal αἰσθητήρια (Heb. v. 14), their intellectual αἰσθησίς (Phil. i. 9), was not to attain to the meaning of the saying. The verb occurs only here in the New Testament. — καὶ ἐφοβοῦντο κ.τ.λ. See on Mark ix. 32. — The whole description of this failure to understand is only a superficial expansion of Mark ix. 32, and not an intentional depreciation of the Twelve in the Pauline interest (Baur, Hilgenfeld).

Another mode of regarding the rising of thoughts in the mind is expressed at xxiv. 38. — \( \tau \iota \varsigma \; \delta \nu \kappa . \tau . \lambda . \) who probably (possibly, see Kühner, II. p. 478) would be greater, i.e. more to be preferred among them.\(^1\) Comp. on 1 Cor. xiii. 13. This question of rank, which Mark introduces with greater historical detail, is not referred in Mark and Luke specially to the Messiah's kingdom, as is the case in Matthew. See on Mark ix. 33. The occasion of the question is not stated in Mark and Luke (otherwise in Matt. xviii. 1), and is by Theophylact quite arbitrarily sought in the cure of the demoniac, which the disciples had not been able to accomplish, and in view of the failure were throwing the blame upon one another. — \( \tau \alpha \rho \eta \; \epsilon a u \tau \gamma \theta \varsigma \) close to Himself. In such a position opposite to the disciples, as clearly to make common cause with Jesus Himself (see ver. 48). — Ver. 48. The meaning and train of thought in Luke are substantially the same as in Mark ix. 36 f., as also in Matt. xviii. 2 ff.; the same principles are enunciated in the same sense. The child placed there is the living type of the humble disciple as he, in opposition to that arrogant disposition in ver. 46, ought to be. And this child standing there as such a moral type, i.e. every disciple of Christ like to him in unassuming humility, is so highly esteemed before God, that whosoever lovingly receives him, etc. For (\( \gamma \alpha \rho \), introducing a confirmatory explanation) he who is less (than the others) among you all (to wit, subjectively, according to his own estimation of himself) is great (objectively, in accordance with his real worth). Therefore the saying of Jesus in Luke ought not to have been explained as wanting in point (de Wette) or without connection (Strauss), nor should it have been maintained that the placing of the child before the disciples was originally without reference to \(^1\) Not: greater than they, as Weiss in the Jahrb. f. D. Theol. p. 96, supposes. That their question, according to Luke, was not so devoid of understanding is shown, moreover, by \( \mu \kappa \rho \tau \iota \tau \iota \varsigma \; \iota \; \tau \alpha \iota \nu \; \psi \iota \iota \), ver. 48. But any reference to an attack on the ministerial efficiency of the Apostle Paul (Köstlin, p. 201) is quite arbitrarily read into ver. 50. — ἐπὶ τ. ὀνόμ. σου] on the ground of Thy name, giving out Him as the authority which the demons had to obey. Rev. vi. 8, xiv. 13.

Ver. 51 ff. Luke now enters upon his narrative of the journey of Jesus to Jerusalem at the close of His earthly career, and transfers to this journey all that follows as far as xviii. 30.¹ Not until xviii. 15 does he again go parallel with Matthew and Mark. The journey is not direct, for in that case only three days' would have been needed for it, but it is to be conceived of as a slow circuit whose final goal, however, is Jerusalem and the final development there. The direct journey towards Jerusalem does not begin till the departure from Jericho, xviii. 35. Jesus, with His face towards Jerusalem, wishes to pass through Samaria (vv. 52, 53); but being rejected, He turns again towards Galilee, and does not appear again on the borders of Samaria till xvii. 11,² whence it is plain that Luke did not transfer the history of Martha and Mary (x. 38) to Bethany, in which respect, according to John, he was assuredly in error. This being conceded, and in consideration of Luke in general having so much that is peculiar to himself,—since he, following his sources and investigations (i. 3), so frequently varies from Matthew and Mark in the sequence of events and the combination of discourses,—the judgment of de Wette appears wrong: that the whole section, namely, is an unchronological and unhistorical collection, probably occasioned by the circumstance that Luke had met with much evangelical material which he did not know how to insert elsewhere, and therefore threw together in this place (comp. also Reuss, § 206; Hofmann, Schriftb. II. 2, p. 355). In that case the very opposite of Luke's assurance (i. 3) would be true, and Bruno Bauer's sneer on the subject of the journey would not be without reason. He must actually have found the chronological arrangement of what is recorded in this large section as belonging to the end of the sojourn in Galilee, and this must have determined his special treatment, in respect of which he inter- sperses at xiii. 22 and xvii. 11 hints for enabling the reader to make out his whereabouts in the history (comp. Ewald). But Kuinoel (following Marsh and Eichhorn) quite arbitrarily deduces the section ix. 51–xviii. 14 from a gnomology bearing upon the last journey of Christ, on the margin of which also much belonging to an earlier time was written. The assumption of Schleiermacher, moreover, is incapable of proof (comp. Olshausen and Neander, Ebrard also, and Bleek): that there are here blended together the narratives of two journeys to Jerusalem—to the feast of the Dedication and to the Passover. So also Hofmann, Weissag. u. Erfüll. II. p. 113. Decidedly opposed to this, however, is the fact that the intercalation of other historical elements (x. 25–xviii. 31) must again be assumed. Finally, the assertion of Wieseler (Chronol. Synopse, p. 319 ff.), that ix. 51–xiii. 21 is parallel with John vii. 10–x. 42 (then xiii. 22–xvii. 10 with John xi. 1–54; and lastly, xvii. 11–xix. 28 with John xi. 55–xii. 11), so that thus Luke in ix. 51 is introducing, not the last journey to Jerusalem, but the last but two, is negatived on purely exegetical grounds by τῆς ἀναλήψεως (see subsequently). The older harmonistic schemes also placed the journey in question parallel with John vii. 10, but got themselves, awkwardly enough, out of the difficulty of τῆς ἀναλήψεως by means of the evasion: "non enim Lucas dicit, dies illos jam *impletos esse, sed factum hoc esse, dum completerentur;" Calovius. In various ways attempts have been made to solve the question, whence Luke derived his narrative (see especially Ewald, Jahrb. II. p. 222, and Evang. p. 282 ff.; Weizsäcker, p. 209 ff.). Yet, apart from his general sources, in regard to which, however, it is not needful, in view of the Logia, to presuppose a later treatment and transposition (Ewald), it can scarcely be inferred as to the general result that in this peculiar portion of his Gospel down to xviii. 14 a special evangelical document, a special source containing a journey, must have been in Luke's possession, and that this was rich in fragments of discourse, partly, indeed, in such as occur also in the Logia, although differently arranged, and in part differently put together, but pre-eminently rich in parabolic and narrative discourses, such as were in accordance with the Pauline views; for the entire omission of these discourses by Matthew and Mark sufficiently proves that (in opposition to Holtzmann) they did not as yet appear in the Logia, but formed an anthology of the Lord's original sayings that grew up out of a later development. Weizsäcker, p. 141 ff., has ingeniously endeavoured to indicate the relations of the several portions to the doctrinal necessities of the apostolic age, in regard to which, however, much remains problematical, and in much he takes for granted tendencies whose existence cannot be proved. It is totally unfounded to attribute to Luke any modification of his accounts brought about by *motives of partisanship*1 (Baur, Köstlin, and others), in respect of which Köstlin, p. 236, supposes that he vaguely and contradictorily worked up an older narrative about the journey through Samaria and Peraea, because after he had once brought Jesus to Samaria he would not wish to mention expressly His leaving this region again immediately. (But see on ver. 56.)

when the period of His receiving up (assumptio, Vulg.) was very near. Euthymius Zigabenus aptly says: ἡμέρας τῆς ἀναληψεως αὐτοῦ λέγει τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἀφορισθέντα μέχρι τῆς ἀναληψεως αὐτοῦ τῆς ἀπὸ γῆς εἰς οὐρανον. In the New Testament ἀνάληψις occurs only in this place. But it appears in the same sense of the taking up into heaven, and that likewise of the Messiah, in the Test. XII. Patr. p. 585: καὶ μεγαλυνθήσεται ἐν τῇ οἰκουμένῃ ἐως ἀναληψεως αὐτοῦ; and in the Fathers (see Suicer, Thes. I. p. 282); although in the New Testament the verb ἀναλαμβάνεσθαι is the customary word to express this heavenly reception, Mark xvi. 19; Acts i. 2, 11, 22; 1 Tim. iii. 16. Comp. 1 Macc. ii. 58; Ecclus. xlviii. 9; 2 Kings ii. 11; Ecclus. xlix. 14; Tobit iii. 6. The objections of Wieseler are unfounded: that the plural τὰς ἡμέρας, as well as the absence of any more precise limitation for ἀνάληψις (εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν), is opposed to this view. The plural is as much in place here¹ as at ii. 6, 22; Acts ix. 23; and ἀνάληψις, without more precise limitation, in no way needed such a limitation, because by means of αὐτοῦ it leaves it absolutely without doubt that the current idea of Christ's assumption is meant, as, moreover, ἀνελθέντως, Acts i. 2, and 1 Tim. iii. 16, although without any local definition, presented no ambiguity to the Christian consciousness. Comp. the ecclesiastical usus loquendi of assumptio without qualification. Wieseler himself explains: "when the days drew to an end in which He found a reception (in Galilee, to wit), He journeyed towards Jerusalem in order to work there." An erroneous device, the necessary result of harmonistic endeavours. Nobody could guess at the supplementary "in Galilee," and what a singularly unsuitable representation, since, indeed, Jesus up to this time almost always, and even so late as at ver. 43, found appreciation and admiration in Galilee! —

¹ If Luke had written τὴν ἡμέραν τ. ἀναλ., he would thereby have declared that what followed happened on the very day of the assumption. Comp. Acts ii. 1. John iv. 4; nor yet because they were unwilling to lodge “so large a Jewish procession” as the train of disciples (Lange, of which, however, nothing appears),—but because they regarded an alleged Messiah journeying towards Jerusalem as not being the actual Messiah. We must think of the messengers themselves announcing Jesus as the Messiah, although, besides, according to John iv., the knowledge of His Messianic call might have already penetrated from Galilee to the Samaritan villages; but the Samaritans did not expect of the Messiah (see the expositors on John iv. 25) the observance of festivals in Jerusalem, but the restoration and glorification of the worship upon Gerizim. κ.τ.λ.] As in respect of ὑμεῖς the emphatic contrast with Elias is not to be disregarded ("retunditur provocatio ad Eliam," Bengel), so it is objectionable to explain, with Bornemann: "Nonne perpenditis, qualem vos . . . animum pro-datis? Certe non humaniorum, quam modo vobis Samaritani praestiterunt." The Samaritans had not, indeed, refused to receive Jesus from lack of humanity; see on ver. 53. Rightly the expositors have explained οἶου πνεύματος of a spirit which is differently disposed from that displayed by Elias. In that respect the form of the saying has been taken by some affirmatively (so Erasmus, Beza, Castalio, Calvin, Grotius, and others; latest of all, Ewald), some interrogatively (so Luther, Zeger, and most of the later critics); but the matter of it has been so understood that Jesus is made to say to the disciples either (a) that they knew not that they were allowing themselves to be guided by a wholly different spirit from that of Elias (see as early as Augustine, C. Adimant. 17, Calvin, Grotius: "Putatis vos agi Spiritum tali, quali olim Elias . . . ; sed erratis.
Habetis quidem ξύλον, sed οὐ κατ’ ἑπτήμωσιν, et qui proinde humani est affectus, non divinæ motionis"), so in substance Ch. F. Fritzsche also in his Nov. Opus. p. 264; or (b) that they knew not that they as His disciples were to follow the guidance of a wholly different spirit from that of Elias,—the evangelical spirit of meekness, not the legal spirit of severity (so Theophylact, Erasmus, Zeger, Jansen, Bengel, and most of the later commentators). The view under (a) bears on the face of it the motives on which it depends, viz. to avoid making Jesus rebuke the spirit of Elias. The view under (b) is simply in accordance with the words, and is to be preferred in the interrogative form, as being more appropriate to the earnestness of the questioner; yet πνεύματος is not to be explained, as most of the later commentators explain it, of the human spirit ("affectus animi," Grotius), but (rightly, even so early as Euthynius Zigabenus) of the Holy Spirit. To this objective πνεῦμα the categorical ἐστε points (which does not mean: ye ought to be). As to εἰναὶ τινος, whereby is expressed the relation of dependence, see on Mark ix. 41, and Winer, p. 176 [E. T. 243 f.]. — Ver. 56. ἔτεραν] into a village which was not Samaria. Theophylact: ὅτι οὐκ ἔδεξαντο αὐτῶν, οἶδε εἰσῆλθεν εἰς Σαμάρειαν. Thus the journey at its very commencement diverged from the direct course that had been decided on (in opposition to Wieseler, p. 326). To suppose the further progress of the journey through Samaria (in this place consequently Schenkel misplaces the incident in John iv.) is altogether without authority in the text.

Vv. 57–60. See on Matt. viii. 19–22, who has placed the incidents earlier. These little narratives circulated probably in general without definite historical arrangement. Arbitrarily enough, Lange finds the three unnamed ones that follow, vv. 57, 59, 61, in Judas Iscariot, Thomas, and Matthew. According to Luke, they were assuredly none of the twelve (vi. 13 ff.). — πορευομένων αὐτῶν] to wit, εἰς ἔτεραν κώμην, ver. 56. — ἐν τῇ ὀδῷ] is to be taken with what follows (Lachmann). If, as is usually the case, it were connected with πορ. αὐτ., it would simply be useless. — ἀπελθόντι] Case of attraction, Kühner, II. p. 344. — Ver. 60. διώγγελλε κ.τ.λ.] announce everywhere (διά, comp. 1 Τοῦτο γὰρ ἄγαθον ἵστρι καὶ ἀνεξίκριτον, Euthynius Zigabenus. But not as though Jesus indirectly denied to Elias the Holy Spirit (comp. already on i. 17), but in His disciples the Holy Spirit is in His operations different from what He was in the old prophets, seeing that He was in them the instrument of the divine chastisement.

Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 24). But the answer of Jesus, ver. 62, gives for ἀποτάξις the idea of attachment, not of renunciation. — τοῖς εἰς κ.τ.λ., according to the above explanation of ἀποτάξις, must be masculine, not neuter. (Vulgate in Lachmann, Augustine, Maldonatus, Paulus.) — εἰς] not instead of ἐν (thus de Wette, however), but a case of attraction, such as we very frequently meet with in the classical writers. The two ideas, ἀπέρχεσθαι εἰς τὸν οἶκον μου and ἀποτάξις, τοῖς ἐν τῷ οἶκῳ μου, are so blended together that the former is forced into the latter, and has driven out ἐν for εἰς. See in general, Kühner, II. p. 318 f., ad Xen. Anab. i. 1. 5. Comp. Buttmann, *Neut. Gr. p. 286 [E. T. 332].— Ver. 62. The meaning of the proverbial saying, in which, moreover, “cum proverbio significatur, cui rei aptetur proverbium” (Grotius) is, No one who has offered to labour in my service, and, withal, still attaches his interest to his earlier relations (βλέπων πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸν κόσμον, Theophylact), is well fitted (adapted, available) for the kingdom of the Messiah (to labour for it). Supposed to be a more exact fixing of the number in accordance with the relation (12 times 6). — Ver. 2. Instead of the first δωδε, Lachm. It is from Matt. x. 16. — Ver. 5. εισφοξονει] Here and at ver. 10 εισβολης must be read, on preponderating evidence. Approved by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. and Tisch. If it were not original, but an alteration, εισφοξονει at ver. 8 would not have been acquiesced in. — Ver. 6 f. Lachm. and Tisch. have rightly deleted μιν after ειςω, the article before ϋδες, and εως; ver. 7. — Ver. 8. δωδε] Lachm. Tisch. have δωδε according to evidence not preponderating; and how easily the δωδε, that might be dispensed with, would drop away, since already the connecting particle was found in και! — Ver. 11. Hence the reading of Griesbach is to be maintained in its integrity. — After γαρκεν, Elz. matical alteration. — Ver. 20. After χαίρε, δι Ελζ. has μᾶλλον, in toning down the expression. — Instead of "γράφῃ Tisch. has sense. — Ver. 22 is introduced in Elz. Scholz, Lachm. [Tisch. 8] retained, in opposition to Griesb. and Tisch. [Tisch. 8 has the words]; they are wanting in B D L M Ξ Ν, min. vss. (even ance with Matthew, partly because, on account of ver. 23, they seemed inappropriate in this place. If they had been adopted out of ver. 23, κατ' ἰδίων also, which in ver. 23 is omitted only by D, vss., would have been taken up with them, and the words would be wanting in ver. 23 in one set of the authorities. —

Ver. 27. Lachm. and Tisch. have, indeed, ἔστο ὁ λόγος τ. καρδίας σ., but

The Recepta is the easier reading. — Ver. 41. τουρβάλης] Lachm. [Tisch. 8 also] has τορβάλης, in accordance with B C D L Ξ 1, 33, Bas. Evagr. An interpretation in accordance with the frequently occurring τόρμος. — The reading ὀλ. ἰγνόν δὲ ἔστω χρεία η ἄνος (B C L Ξ, 1, 33, Copt. Aeth. Arm. Arr. Fathers) and similar readings have originated from the explanation which takes the passage as meaning one dish.

Ver. 1. The appointment and mission of the Seventy are transferred by Luke to this last journey of Christ, and are narrated as if they were supposed by the author to have some reference to ix. 52 (ἀπέστειλεν . . . αὐτοῦ). Hence: καὶ στέρωσιν, which does not refer to the Twelve (Bleek and others), but to the intimation, which is nearer to it, both in place and meaning, in ix. 52; and μετὰ ταῦτα, which points back to ix. 57–62, although de Wette regards the reference as obscure and inappropriate. With arbitrary erroneousness Olshausen says that in this communication there is adopted a fragment from an earlier period, and that μετὰ ταῦτα is not chronological (after this, see v. 27, xviii. 4), but besides (following Schleiermacher, p. 169). — ἀναδεικνύει [renuntiavit], He announced them as nominated, Acts i. 24; 2 Macc. ix. 25, x. 11, xiv. 26; 3 Esdr. i. 37, ii. 3; occurs often in the classical writers; comp. ἀνάδεικνυς, i. 80. — ἔβδομηκοντα In accordance with the apostolic number of twelve, so far as this had reference to the tribes of the people, it is probable that Jesus had in view the ancient Hebrew analogue of the seventy (originally seventy-two) elders of the people (see Ewald, Alterth. p. 284 f.; Saalschütz, Mos. R. p. 39). It is unlikely that there is any reference to the Gentile nations numbering seventy, according to Gen. x. (Eisenmenger, Entdeckt. Judenthum, II. p. 3, 1736 f.; Gieseler, Versuch, p. 128), since there is no mention at all of any destination for the Gentiles (a subject on which Luke, least of all, would have been silent; in opposition to Olshausen, de Wette, Bleek, Gieseler, and others, especially Baur and his school, Köstlin also); nay, according to ix. 53–56, and according to the particulars of the journey, Samaria should not at all be regarded (in opposition to Wieseler, p. 326 ff., Baur, and others) as the theatre of their ministry. Moreover, no reference is to be assumed (as with Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Valla, and others) to the seventy palm-trees of Ex. xv. 27. — οὕ[see Winer, p. 419 [E. T. 592]. Lange, II. p. 1057 ff., is wrong in explaining: into the places which He had Himself previously designed to visit; that Jesus, namely, sent the Seventy through Samaria; that He Himself did not make this circuit, but that, nevertheless, He was not willing to give up the Samaritan people (as representatives of the seventy Gentile nations), and therefore determined to convey the gospel to them by means of the Seventy. Against this invention of a "generous revenge," πρὸ προσώπου αὐτοῦ and the imperfect ἃμελέλευ are decisive. In general it is a mistake to assume that the mission of the Seventy went beyond the bounds of Judaism—on which assumption Baur and his school base the supposed Pauline tendency of the narrative. The region of the Samaritans is scarcely trodden before it is again forsaken, ix. 56, prior to the appointment of the Seventy. Weiss in the Stud. u. Krit. 1861, p. 711, is right in saying: "Of any appointment of the seventy disciples for Samaria, or for the heathen world at all, there is not a single word said." Comp. Holtzmann, p. 393.

Remark.—The narrative of the Seventy has been relegated into the unhistorical domain by Strauss, de Wette, Gfrörer (Jahr. d. Heils, II. p. 371), Theile (z. Biogr. J. p. 51 f.), von Ammon (L. J. II. p. 355 ff.), Baur (Evang. p. 498 ff.), Schwegler, Bruno Bauer, Köstlin, Zeller, Ritschl, and others. But (1) as they accept the position that this was only a temporary and special appointment for the present journey, and not a permanent function, ver. 1, the silence of the rest of the evangelists, who indeed have not in general the detailed thread of this journey, as well as the silence of the subsequent history about their doings, is very easy to understand. — (2) That Jesus in general had around Him a larger circle of constant disciples, besides the Twelve, from whom He could appoint seventy for a special commission, is in itself, and from the evidence of such passages as Acts i. 15, 21, 1 Cor. xv. 6, as well as John vi. 60, not to be doubted.—(3) The tradition would hardly have restrained itself within these narrow limits, but would have gone further than simply to allow the Seventy to be appointed and sent forth, and then to return and vanish; and would especially have passed over into the apostolic history.—(4) That Jesus gave them a commission similar to that which He gave the Twelve, arose from the similar character of their temporary relation, in respect whereof, moreover, it is to be conceded that the tradition involuntarily mingles elements out of the two commissions.1

(5) If the narrative had been, as has been supposed (see especially Baur, Evang. p. 435 ff., 498 ff.), an invention of the author, intended typically to keep the apostolic call of Paul in incessant contrast with that of the Twelve, it would have been just as necessary as it was easy to the inventor to relate what they did, or at least to inweave into the commission characteristic references to the ministry of Paul, yet these are entirely wanting (comp. rather xxiv. 47 f.; Acts i. 8); moreover, the Acts of the Apostles would not have been perfectly silent about the Seventy. In like manner as Baur, Köstlin also, p. 267 f., judges, deriving the narrative, as an account typically prefiguring the mission to the heathen,² from the supposed Gospel of Peter, without, however, acquiescing in the opposition to the Twelve asserted by Baur. Ewald (Evang. p. 285, Gesch. Chr. p. 349), with whom in substance Holtzmann, p. 392 f., agrees, refers the narrative to a later period, in which the gradual disappearance of the Twelve gave to the Lord’s remaining companions so much more importance, that what was at first true only of the Twelve was involuntarily transferred to a wider circle; comp. also Weizsäcker, p. 161 f., 409 f. But against this also the reasons specified under 1–4 hold good. Ewald, in his Gesch. d. Apost. Zeitalt. p. 158, supposes that they belonged to the hundred and twenty persons mentioned in Acts i. 15.—The purpose of the mission was not in any way to further the personal faith of those who were sent (Hase, p. 200; Krabbe, p. 306), but, as is evident from the commission itself (see especially ver. 9), to prepare, by miraculous cures and by preaching, for the imminent advent of the Messiah. This entire journey of Jesus was intended to afford the people an opportunity for a final decision before the Lord’s departure from what had up to this time been His field of action, and to be in every quarter that Messianic entry which culminated in the final entry into Jerusalem. This function of forerunners, which, according to ver. 1, was held in that respect by the Seventy, is at variance neither with ver. 7, which assumes no relatively long sojourn, but only forbids the change of quarters, nor with the return at ver. 17, which was necessary for pointing out the route of the journey. — The source from which Luke derived the section is none other than that of the entire narrative of the journey (see on ix. 51). That he gave to a fragment of the Logia “an expansion of the original title, from a mere calculation of what was probable,” is too hastily concluded by Holtzmann, p. 146.

¹ According to Baur, elements of the commission given to the Twelve are transferred tendentially by the evangelist to the discourse to the Seventy, in order to give the preference to the latter, as being the true and genuine disciples. Comp. also Baur, Das Christenthum der drei ersten Jahrh. p. 76 f.; Hilgenfeld, Evang. p. 183 ff. See, in general, against such supposed tendencies of Luke in regard to the primitive apostles, Holtzmann, p. 394 f.; Weiss, p. 709 ff. Weizsäcker, p. 163, rightly emphasizes the fact that it is just these sayings which, in an eminent measure, must have been the common property of tradition.

Ver. 2. Comp. Matt. ix. 37 f. First of all, Christ makes them apprehend the greatness of their task, and (ver. 3) their risk, and then gives them (ver. 4 ff.) rules of conduct.¹ — ὄλιγοι notwithstanding your numbers, ye are still far from sufficient ² πρὸς τὸ πλὴθος τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν (Euthymius Zigabenus)! — ἐκβάλλειν] In this is contained the importance, the urgency of the mission: should drive forth (comp. on Mark i. 12; 1 Macc. xii. 27).

Ver. 3. See on Matt. x. 16, where προβάτα appears. A different form of the tradition, not to be explained as though Jesus called the Twelve προβατα as being τέλειοτέρος (Euthymius Zigabenus). Comp. John xxi. 15—17.

Ver. 4. Comp. ix. 3; Matt. x. 9. — βαλλάντιον] a purse;

¹ But the prohibition against going to the heathens and the Samaritans, Matt. x. 5, He does not give to the Seventy, and that for the simple reason that they had precisely to make the journey only as it was definitely marked out to them in ver. 1 (through Galilee). For this that prohibition would not have been at all appropriate.

² According to Weiss, Jesus, in respect of ἐλιγμον, must have thought originally of Himself, while Luke thought of the Twelve. The former view contradicts the words of the passage, the latter the context. But that the discourse was originally addressed to the Twelve does not follow from xii. 35, for the passage there alluded to is to be sought in ix. 3 (although with certain coincidences from x. 4).

Jesus impresses on them the properare ad rem! in accordance with the object of the mission, vv. 1, 9, and in a concrete form, which should not be pressed to a literal meaning. The messengers were to partake without hesitation of the provisions of the people, for, etc. This statement of the reason, however, should have prevented Baur from explaining it of the unhesitating partaking of heathen meats (according to 1 Cor. ix. 7 i., x. 27), even apart from the fact that no mention is made of heathen nouses at all. This is also in opposition to Köstlin, p. 234; Hilgenfeld, Evang. p. 183, and Weizsäcker, p. 163.

Vv. 13–15. See on Matt. xi. 21–24. Luke has not here any mistaken reminiscence (de Wette), but the disaster of these Galilaean cities lay sufficiently close to the heart of Jesus to force from Him the denunciation of woe \textit{more than once}, and here, indeed, in very appropriate connection, since this woe brings into the light and confirms what has just been said at ver. 12 by the example of the cities which had rejected Jesus Himself. — \(\kappa\alpha\theta\omicron\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\) (see the critical remarks): the inhabitants, namely. Ver. 16. Comp. Matt. x. 40 ; John xiii. 20, xii. 48. A confirmation in principle of the fact that He placed on equal grounds the cities that reject \textit{them} with those that reject \textit{Himself}.
In the second part the saying rises to a climax (ἀδετ. τ. ἀποστ. με). A deepening of the emotion; a solemn conclusion.

Vv. 17–20. The fact that the account of the return of the Seventy follows immediately cannot prove that in the history of this journey (from ix. 51 onward) Luke is not holding the chronological thread (Olshausen). In accordance with the purpose of the mission (ver. 1), some must have returned very soon, others later, so that Jesus might anticipate the return of one portion of them before the return of those who had gone farther, and Luke might equally exclude the summary narration of the return without passing over anything of importance that intervened. — καὶ τὰ δαιμόνια κ.τ.λ.] over which He had not given to them, as He had to the Twelve (ix. 1), an express authority: “Plura in effectu experti sunt, quam Jesus expresserat,” Bengel. This is necessarily implied in καὶ; but it is not to be inferred, as Köstlin assumes, that Luke regarded the casting out of demons as the highest χάρισμα.

— ἐν τῷ ὄνομα. σ.] by means of Thy name, by the fact of our utterance of it. Comp. on ix. 49; Matt. vii. 22. Otherwise in Mark xvi. 17. — Ver. 18. This I saw happen in this wise when I sent you forth (ἐθεώρον, imperf.)! This your victorious agency against Satan (whose servants the demons are) was not hidden from me. I beheld at that time (in the spirit, in idea) Satan fallen like a lightning flash from heaven, i.e. I then

1 Without any ground in the context, ἐθεώρον has been dated farther back in various ways. Lange, L. J. II. 2, p. 1070 f. (comp. also Philippi, Glaubenslehre, III. p. 308), refers it to the temptation in the desert, and conceives that with the rebuke of Christ, Get thee hence from me! Satan was “cast forth from the heavenly circle of Christ and His people.” Gregory Nazianzen and other Fathers, Euthymius Zigabenus, Maldonatus, and others, refer it to the time of Christ’s incarnation, by which Satan was cast down, a result which Christ here describes as a “dux belli suas narrans victorias” (Maldonatus). Other Fathers, including Origen and Theophylact, Erasmus and others, refer it to the fall of the devil by sin, whereby he lost his place in heaven. Thus also Hofmann, Schriftenw. I. p. 443, who indeed would have “the fall from heaven” to signify only the loss of the fellowship of the supramundane life of God (p. 458). According to this, the imperfect must have its reference to a fact of which Christ was a witness when He was still the λίγος άναρχος. But against the explanation of Satan’s fall by sin, it is decisive that with this overthrow of Satan his power on earth was not broken, but it then first began. The explanation is therefore quite opposed to the connection in which our passage stands, perceived the swift overthrow of Satan from his lofty power, in so lively a manner that it presented itself to me in my inward perception, as if he were like a flash of lightning (so swift, so momentary!) hurled out of heaven (πεσοντα, not the present). The whole reply of Jesus (comp. vv. 19, 20) is rich in imagination, full of vivid imagery, confirming the triumphant assertion of the disciples in equally joyous excitement.\(^1\) Comp. Rev. xii. 9; and on the fact itself, John xii. 31, where no more than here is intended any allusion to the downfall of the hierarchical party (Schenkel). He does not mean to speak of a vision (von Ammon, L. J. II. p. 359), since such a thing nowhere occurs in His experience, inasmuch as in consideration of His direct perception He had no need of such intermediate helps; but He means an intu- tion of His knowledge, and speaks of it under a vivid, lifelike form, which the imagination is able to grasp. The relative tense ἐθεώρουν might also be referred to the time of the disciples’ ministry (de Wette, Bleek, Schegg; comp. Bengel, tentatively, “quum egistis”); yet this is the less appropriate to the assertion of the instantaneous πεσοντα, and to the comparison with the lightning’s flash, that the ministry of the Seventy since Jesus is not at all desirous of warning against arrogance (the view of many Fathers), but must certainly be speaking of the destruction of the devil’s power, or the overthrow of the devilish strength. Hence also Hilgenfeld is quite mistaken, Evang. p. 184, in making it refer to Rev. xii. 9, saying that Jesus saw how the devil “even now is working with special energy upon the earth,” that with the near approach of the passion of Jesus (not for the first time shortly before the last day) came therefore the point of time when the devil, who had been driven out of the field, should develop his power anew. Moreover, Hahn, Theol. d. Ν. Τ. I. p. 342, rightly referring ἐθεώρουν to the time of sending out the Seventy, finds the meaning to be: I beheld Satan descend from heaven with the rapidity of lightning to hinder your work; but fear ye not, behold I give you power, etc. In accordance with the context, πισνυτα must mean the knocking down of the devil, not his descent from heaven; but the connection which Hahn makes with ver. 19 is neither intimated (in any wise by ἄλλα ἐδεικνυμεν, x. τ. λ.), nor does it suit the correct reading Σινωκα.

\(^1\) Against this view Hofmann objects that it is foreign to the connection (wherefore?), and that it gives to the mission an importance that does not belong to it. But was it then something of little importance to send forth seventy new combatants against Satan’s power? Could not the commander of this new warrior band behold, in the spirit, when He sent them forth, the devil’s overthrow?
lasted for a time. — The representation ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ πεσόντα\(^1\) does not in any way presuppose Satan's abode in heaven (as to Paul's representation of the abode of the demons in the atmosphere, see on Eph. ii. 2), but corresponds to the thought of highly exalted power, as above, ver. 15, and Isa. xiv. 12; the representation, however, of its swiftness and suddenness by comparison with a flash of lightning was by reason of the τοῦ οὐρανοῦ as natural and appropriate as is the comparison of the lightning in Matt. xxiv. 27. — Ver. 19. According to the reading διέδωκα (see the critical remarks), Jesus gives them not a mere supplementary explanation (objection by de Wette), but He explains to them what a much greater power still they had received from Him and possessed (perfect) than that which they had experienced in the subjection of the demons. This investiture with power occurred before the sending of them forth, although it is not expressly mentioned in the commission, ver. 2 ff.; but it was left to become clear to their consciousness through experience, and they had already partially begun to be conscious of it in the subjection of the demons to their power. — τοῦ πατείν ἐπάνω ὄφεων κ. σκορπίς] a figurative description (in accordance with Ps. xci. 13, and see the Rabbinical passages in Wetstein) of the dangerous Satanic powers, which the Seventy were to tread under their feet, as warriors do their conquered foes (Rom. xvi. 20). — καὶ] and generally. — The emphasis of the discourse as it advances lies on πᾶσαν and οὐδὲν. — τοῦ ἐχθροῦ] of the enemy, of whom our Lord is speaking, and that is none other than Satan. \(^1\) ix τοῦ οὐρανοῦ is not to be taken with ἀπερατέν, as Schleiermacher would have it, who, moreover, takes pains in his Vorles. üb. d. L. J. p. 333 ff., with subtlety at variance with true exegesis, to exclude the doctrine of the devil from the teaching of Jesus. He says that Jesus speaks of the devil according to a current representation,—just as people speak of ghosts, without believing in their reality, and as we say that the sun rises, though everybody knows that the sun does not in reality rise.

Nevertheless your rejoicing should have for its object a higher good than that authority over spirits. Theophylact well says: παίδευων δὲ αἰτοῦσι μὴ ὑψηλοφρονεῖν, φησὶ πλὴν ἐν τούτῳ κ.τ.λ. In accordance with his presuppositions, Baur, Evang. p. 439, thinks that the evangelist had Rev. xxi. 14 in view, and that he in a partisan spirit referred¹ to the Seventy the absolute significance in respect of the kingdom of God which the apocalyptic writer attributes to the Twelve. — μὴ χαίρετε κ.τ.λ.] rejoice not . . . but rejoice. The predestination thereby set forth is that which occurred before the beginning of time in Christ (Eph. i. 4). See on Phil. iv. 3.

Vv. 21, 22. See on Matt. xi. 25—27.² Luke places this thanksgiving prayer in immediate chronological connection in the same hour with the return of the Seventy. Theophylact says: ὥσπερ πατὴρ ἀγαθὸς παῖδας ἰδὼν κατορθώσαντας

¹ Which, however, by a glance at Rev. iii. 5, xvii. 8, is shown to be erroneous. Moreover, according to Weizsäcker, vv. 18–20 are said to be of the "latest origin."

² Keim, Geschichte Christi, p. 51, sees here the climax reached of the consciousness of the divine Sonship, and that hence there now appears, instead of the "your Father," as hitherto, the designation "my Father." But on the one hand "your Father" is still said at the same time and later (xii. 30, 32; Matt. x. 20, xviii. 14, xxiii. 9), and on the other Jesus, not to mention ii. 49, says "my Father" even as early as in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. vii. 21). Baur, indeed (Neutest. Theol. p. 86), knows no other way of getting rid of the offence which this expression of Matt. vii. 21 gives him than by attributing the words to a later period of the ministry of Jesus. It is easy in this way to set aside what will not fit into our notions.

Comp. Observe that ἐν τίνι νόμῳ is placed first for the sake of emphasis, and that the doubled expression of the question indicates the urgency of the questioner. Lechler in the Stud. u. Krit. 1854, p. 802, is wrong in explaining the passage as if it were πῶς σὺ ἀναγ. — Ver. 27. The lawyer quotes Deut. vi. 5 along with Lev. xix. 18. The Jews had to repeat daily morning and evening the former passage, together with Deut. xi. 13 ff. (Berac. f. 3. 3; comp. on Mark xii. 29); it appeared also on the phylacteries (see on Matt. xxiii. 5), but not Lev. xix. 18; hence the opinion of Kuinoel: “Jesum digito monstrasse thecam illam, qua se ornaverat legis peritus,” must be rejected. The reason why the lawyer answered entirely in the meaning of Jesus, and especially adds the passage from Leviticus, is found in the fact that his attention was directed not to what had immediately preceded, but to the problem τίς ἔστι μου πλησίον; and that he used the question τί ποιήσας κ.τ.λ., ver. 25, only as an introduction thereto. To this question, familiar as he was with the principles of Jesus, he must have expected an answer in which the duty of the love of one’s neighbour was not wanting, and thereto he would then attach the special question meant to tempt him, viz. τίς ἔστι μου πλησίον; But since the dialogue takes such a turn that he himself becomes the respondent, he gives the answer which he had expected from Jesus; and now for his own self-justification—to show, to wit, that notwithstanding that correct answer, he did not ask his question without reason, but still needs more detailed instruction, he adds the problem under cover of which the temptation was to be brought in. The questioner, unexpectedly made to play the part of the respondent, thus keeps his object in view with presence of mind and craftiness, and it can neither be asserted that by his reply, in keeping with the meaning of Jesus, he at once gave himself up as a captive (de Wette), nor that this reply was not suggested till the question of Jesus was interposed (Bleek).

Remark.—Instead of giving to the theoretical question of the scribe, ver. 29, a direct and theoretical decision as to whom he was to regard as his neighbour, Jesus, by the feigned (according to Grotius and others, the circumstance actually occurred) history of the compassionate Samaritan, with all the force of the contrast that puts to shame the cold Jewish arrogance, gives a practical lesson on the question: how one actually becomes the neighbour of another, namely, by the exercise of helpful love, independently of the nationality and religion of the persons concerned. And the questioner, in being dismissed with the direction, καὶ οὗ τῶν ὁμοίων, has therein indirectly the answer to his question, τίς ἐστι μου σιγάων; namely: Every one, without distinction of people and faith, to whom the circumstances analogous to the instance of the Samaritan direct thee to exercise helpful love in order thereby to become his neighbour, thou hast to regard as thy neighbour. This turn on the part of Jesus, like every feature of the improvised narrative, bears the stamp of originality in the pregnancy of its meaning, in the insight which suggested it, and in the quiet and yet perfectly frank way in which the questioner, by a direct personal appeal, was put to the blush.1

Ver. 38. 'Εν τῷ πορεύεσθαι] to be understood of the continuation of the journey to Jerusalem. See ix. 51, 57, x. 1. But Jesus cannot yet be in Bethany (see xiii. 22, xvii. 11), where Martha and Mary dwelt (John xi. 1, xii. 1 f.), and hence it is to be supposed that Luke, because he was unacquainted with the more detailed circumstances of the persons concerned, transposed this incident, which must have occurred in Bethany, and that on an earlier festal journey, not merely to the last journey, but also to some other village, and that a village of Galilee. The tradition, or the written source, which he followed had preserved the fact and the names of the persons, but not the time and place of the incident. If we regard Luke as unacquainted with those particulars, the absence of all mention of Lazarus is the less surprising, seeing that the substance of the history concerns the sisters only (in opposition to Strauss, I. p. 751).—καὶ αὐτός] καὶ is the usual and after ἔγενετο, and αὐτός brings Jesus Himself into prominence above the company of travellers (αὐτοῦς).

1 The Fathers, as Origen, Ambrose, Augustine, Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, have been able to impart mystical meanings to the individual points of the history. Thus the ἄνθρωπος γις signifies Adam; Jerusalem, paradise; Jericho, the world; the thieves, the demons; the priest, the law; the Levite, the prophets; the Samaritan, Christ; the beast, Christ’s body; the inn, the church; the landlord, the bishop; the Denarii, the Old and New Testaments; the return, the Parousia. See especially Origen, Hom. 34 in Luc., and Theophylact, sub loc. Luther also similarly allegorises in his sermons. Calvin wisely says: “Scripturæ major habenda est reverentia, quam ut germanum ejus sensum hac licentia transfigurare liceat.”
His part, without the disciples, went into the village and abode at the house of Martha. — The notion that Martha was the wife (Bleek, Hengstenberg) or widow (Paulus) of Simon the leper, is based upon mistaken harmonistics. See on vii. 36 ff. and Matt. xxvi. 6 f. Whether she was a widow at all (Grotius) does not appear. She was the housekeeper and manager of the household, and probably the elder sister.

Vv. 39, 40. Τῇ δὲ] This word usually refers to what follows, but here in a vividly realizing manner it points to what has gone before, as sometimes also occurs in the classical writers. See Bernhardy, p. 278; Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 2. 3, iii. 3. 12. — ἡ καὶ] καὶ is not: even (Bornemann), which would have no reference to explain it in the context; but: moreover, bringing into prominence the fact that Mary, besides whatever else she did in her mind after the coming of Jesus, moreover seated herself at His feet, etc. See Klotz, ad Devar. p. 636. — The form παρακαθέσείσα] (see the critical remarks), from παρακαθέσομαι, to sit down near to, belongs to later Greek. Joseph. Antt. vi. 11. 9. — Mary sits there as a learner (Acts xxii. 3), not as a companion at table (at the right of Jesus, where His outstretched feet were), as Paulus and Kuinoel will have it (women sat at table; see Wetstein in loc.). For the text as yet says nothing of the meal, but only of the hospitable reception in general (ver. 38), and, moreover, ver. 40 alludes generally to the attendance on and entertainment of the honoured and beloved Guest, wherein Martha was exhausting her hospitality. There is no trace of any reclining at table; the context in κ. ἠκούε τ. λόγ. αὐτ. points only to the idea of the female disciple. — περισσᾶσθαι, in the sense of the being withdrawn from attention and solicitude by reason of occupations, belongs to later Greek. See Lobceck, ad Phryn. p. 415. Comp. Plut. Mor. p. 517 C: περισπασμὸς κ. μεθολκή τῆς πολυπραγμοσύνης. The expression περὶ τιν, about something, connected with verbs of being busied, of taking trouble, and the like, is also very frequent in Greek writers. — κατέλυσε] relinquuit; she had therefore gone away from what she was doing, and had placed herself at the feet of Jesus. — ἢνα] therefore speak to her in order that. Comp. on Matt. iv. 3.
As to συναντιλαμβάνεσθαι τινι, to give a hand with anybody, i.e. to help anybody, comp. on Rom. viii. 26.

Vv. 41, 42. Περὶ πολλά] Thou art anxious, and weariest thyself (art in the confusion of business) about many things, see ver. 40. On τυρβάζεσθαι περὶ τι, comp. Aristoph. Ran. 1007. — ἕνος δὲ ἔστι χρεῖα] A contrast with πολλά: but of one thing there is need; one thing is necessary, that is to say, as an object of care and trouble. By these words Jesus, in accordance with the context, can mean nothing else than that from which Martha had withdrawn, while Mary was bestowing pains upon it—the undivided devotion to His word for the sake of salvation, although in tenderness He abstains from mentioning it by name, but leaves the reference of the expression, in itself only general, to be first discovered from the words which follow. In respect of the neuter ἕνος nothing is to be supplemented any more than there is in respect of πολλά. Following Gregory, Bede, Theophylact, Zeger, Michaelis, and others (comp. Erasmus in the Annotations), Paulus understands: one dish, "we need not many kinds," and τὴν ἀγαθὴν μερίδα is then taken as meaning the really good portion, which figuratively represents the participation in communion with Jesus. The former, especially after the impressive Μάρθα, Μάρθα, would have been just as trivial and out of harmony with the serious manner of Jesus as the latter would have been discourteous to the well-intentioned hostess. Nachtigall also mistakes (in Henke's Magaz. VI. p. 355), and Stolz agrees with him in interpreting: one person is enough (in the kitchen), in opposition to which the contrast of πολλά is decisive, seeing that according to it ἕνος must be neuter.—τὴν ἀγαθὴν μερίδα] the good part. That, namely, about which care and pains are taken, consists, according to the various kinds of these objects, of several parts. Mary has selected for herself among these, for her care and pains, the good part; and this is, in accordance with the subject, nothing else than precisely that ἐν which is necessary—that portion of the objects of solicitude and labour which is the good one, the good portion, which only one can be. More vaguely Grotius, Elsner, Kypke, Kuinoel, and others put it: the good occupation; and de Wette, generalizing this: the good destination of life. Comp. also Euthymius Zigabenus: δύο μερίδες πολιτείας ἐπαινεται, ἡ μὲν πρακτική, ἡ δὲ θεωρητική. — τὴν ἁγαθὴν] neither means optimam (Kuinoel and others), nor does it imply that the care of Martha, in which assuredly love also was expressed, was mala (Fritzsche, Conject. I. p. 19); but it designates the portion as the good one κατ’ ἐξοχήν. — ἡτις οὐκ ἀφαιρ. ἀπ’ αὐτ.] refers certainly, first of all, to Martha's appeal, ver. 40. Hence it means: which shall not be taken away from her; she shall keep it, Mark iv. 25, whereby, however, Jesus at the same time, in thoughtful reference to further issues, points, in His characteristically significant manner, to the everlasting possession of this μερίς. By ἡτις, which is not equivalent to ἡ, what follows is described as belonging to the essence of the ἁγαθὴ μερίς: quippe quae. "Transit amor multitudinis et remanet caritas unitatis," Augustine. — Those who have found in Mary's devotion the representation of the Pauline πίστις, and in the nature of Martha that of zeal for the law, so that the evangelist is made to describe the party relations of his own day (Baur, Zeller, Schwegler, Hilgenfeld), have, by a coup quite as unjustifiable as it was clumsy, transferred this relic of the home life of Jesus into the foreign region of allegory, where it would only inaptly idealize the party relations of the later period.

CHAPTER XI.

Vv. 2-4. Elz. and Scholz have after πάτερ: ἡμῶν ὑ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, and after Βασιλ. σου: γεννηθέτω τὸ βέλημα σου, ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. After πειραμάτων Elz. has ἀλλὰ μόνοι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ σωτηρίου. Lachm. also (not Tisch.) reads all this; but he has ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς (without τῆς) in brackets. The important authorities both for and against these additions lead us to regard them as supplements taken from the usual form of the Lord’s Prayer in Matt. vi. 6, 9 ff. According to Gregory of Nyssa (comp. Maxim.), instead of ἐλθέτω . . . σου Luke must have written ἐλθέτω τὸ ἄγιον σεβάματά σου ἵνα ἡμᾶς καὶ καθαριστήσω ἡμᾶς. An ancient gloss.1 — Ver. 4. The form ἀφίέμεν is, on decisive evidence, to be adopted, with Lachm. and Tisch. — Vv. 9, 10. The authorities for ἀναγινώσκειν and ἀνακριβέσθαι are about equally balanced. Tisch. has rightly adopted the latter. The Recepta is from Matt. vii. 7 f. — Ver. 11. Instead of εἰς ὡμῶν Elz. has simply ὡμῶν, in opposition to decisive evidence. On similar evidence, moreover, ἤ is subsequently adopted instead of εἰ (Elz.), and at ver. 13 δόματα ἁγαθά (reversed in Elz.). — Ver. 12. Instead of ἤ καί ἵνα Tisch. has merely ἤ καί, following B L N, min. But ἵνα was the more easily omitted, since it does not occur in the foregoing verse. On the other hand, αἰτήσαι is so decisively attested that it is, with Tisch., to be adopted instead of the Recepta αἰτήσῃ. — Ver. 15. τῷ before ἐργασίᾳ is wanting in Elz. Scholz, but is decisively attested; the omission is explained from Matt. xii. 24. — Ver. 19. κρίναι ὡμῶν αὐτῷ] B D, Lachm. Tisch. have αὐτοί ὡμῶν κρίναι. A C K L M U, min. Vulg. It.

1 Thus or similarly Marcion read the first petition, and Hilgenfeld, Kritik. Unters. p. 470, and Volkmart, p. 196, regard the petition in this place about the Holy Ghost as original (because specifically Pauline), and the canonical text as an alteration in accordance with Matthew; see also Hilgenfeld in the Theol. Jahrb. 1853, p. 222 f., and in his Evangel. p. 187 f.; Zeller, Apostelgesch. p. 14. But ver. 13 easily occasioned the alteration, welcome as it was to the one-sided Paulinism, seeing that by its means the Holy Spirit was represented as the chief of what was to be asked for from God. have αὐτοὶ κριταὶ ὑμῶν. So also has Ν, which, however, places ἐσονται before ὑμ. [Tisch. 8 has adopted the reading of Ν]. Accordingly, the evidence is decisive against the Recepta. The omission of αὐτοὶ (it is wanting still in 113) occasioned its being very variously placed when it was reintroduced. The place assigned to it by Lachm. is the rather to be preferred, as B D, the authorities in its favour, have in Matt. xii. 27: αὐτοὶ κριταὶ ὑμῶν ἐσονταί; hence the reading of Δ C, etc., is probably due to a conformity with Matthew.—Ver. 22. The article before ἴσχυράτης is wanting in B D L Ρ Ν, and is, with Lachm. and Tisch., to be deleted. It was introduced in accordance with ὁ ἴσχυρατης, ver. 21. —Ver. 25. It is from Matt. xii. 39, whence, however, the Recepta ἐπίζητα was also derived, instead of which ζητεῖ, with Tisch., is to be read. Moreover, in accordance with Lachm. and Tisch., γενά is again to be inserted before πνηρᾶ. —Ver. 32. Νευτι] Α Β Ρ Ε G L M U X Ρ Δ Ν, min. Syr. Vulg. It. have Νευτιαί. After the first ὅθεναμ, Griesb. and the later editors have rightly added σού. The omission is explained from Matt. vi. 22; its insertion, however, is decisively attested. —οὐ] after ὅταν is wanting in preponderating authorities. Suspected by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. It is an addition from Matt. vi. 23.—Ver. 42. After ταυτά Griesb. has inserted οἱ, which Lachm. brackets, while Tisch, has deleted it; it is too weakly attested, and is from Matt. xxiii. 23.—ἀφίναι] Lachm. and Tisch. have παρείναι, in accordance with B* L Ν min. The Recepta is from Matthew. A has a fusion of the two: παραφιναι; D, Ver. have not got the word at all.—Ver. 44. After ὑμᾶς Elz. (and Lachm. in brackets) has γραμματεῖς τ. Φαρισαίω, ὑποκριταί. So also Scholz, but in opposition to evidence so important, that it can only be regarded as an addition from Matt. xxiii. 27. —οἱ before περίς is, on preponderating evidence, to be deleted. It arose from the preceding syllable. Suspected by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. [retained by Tisch. 8]. —Ver. 48. μαρτυρεῖται] Tisch. has μάρτυρες ἐστε, in accordance with B L Ν, Or. Condemned by Griesb., bracketed by Lachm., deleted by Tisch. The words, both read and arranged differently by different authorities, are a supplement, in accordance with Matthew.—Ver. 51. The article before αἰώνας in both cases is, with Lachm. and Tisch., in accordance with important evidence, to be struck out as an addition.—Ver. 53. λέγοντες δὲ αὐτοῦ παῦτα πρὸς αὐτοῦ] B C L ἅ, 33, Copt. have καθαρέν ἐξελιθρόντος αὐτοῦ. This is, with Tisch., to be adopted. The authorities in favour of the Recepta have variations and additions, which indicate that they have originated as glosses.—Ver. 54. Many variations in the form of glosses. Lachm. follows the Recepta, only omitting καὶ before ξη. Tisch. has simply εἰνάδοι, θερμώσαι τι ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, founding it mainly on B L ἅ. All the rest consists of additions for the sake of more explicit statement.

Vv. 1–4. See on Matt. vi. 9 ff. In Luke it is only apparent that the Lord's Prayer is placed too late, to the extent of his having passed it over in the Sermon on the Mount, and from another source related a later occasion for it (which, according to Baur, indeed, he only created from his own reflection). Hence its position in Luke is not to be described as historically more correct (Calvin, Schleiermacher, Olshausen, Neander, Ewald, Bleek, Weizsäcker, Schenkel, and others), but both the positions are to be regarded as correct. Comp. on Matt. vi. 9. So far as concerns the prayer itself, we have the full flow of its primitive fulness and excellence in Matthew. The peculiar and shorter form in Luke (see the critical remarks) is one of the proofs that the apostolic church did not use the Lord's Prayer as a formula.—The matter of fact referred to in καθὼς καί Ἡωάννης κ.τ.λ. is altogether unknown. Probably, however, John's disciples had a definitely formulated prayer given them by their teacher. —The τις τῶν μαθητῶν is to be regarded as belonging to the 1 Schenkel, p. 391, transposes the circumstance of the giving of the prayer to the disciples even to the period after the arrival in Judaea, since, indeed, the scene at Bethany, x. 38 f., was already related. But Luke did not think of Bethany at all as the locality of this scene.

2 Without, however, by means of harmonistic violence, doing away with the historical difference of the two situations, as does Ebrard, p. 356 f. In Luke, time, place, and occasion are different from what they are in Matthew, comp. Luke vi. 17 ff.
wider circle of disciples. After so long and confidential an intercourse of prayer with the Lord Himself, one of the Twelve would hardly have now made the request, or had need to do so. Probably it was a later disciple, perhaps formerly one of John’s disciples, who, at the time of the Sermon on the Mount, was not yet in the company of Jesus. The sight, possibly also the hearing of the Lord praying, had now deeply stirred in him the need which he expresses, and in answer he receives the same prayer in substance which was given at an earlier stage to the first disciples. — αὐτοῖς, ver. 2: to the disciples who were present, one of whom had made the request, ver. 1. εἰπονσιον crastinum, see on Matt. vi. 11. — τὸ καθ’ ἡμέραν] needed day by day, daily. See Bernhardy, p. 329. — καὶ γὰρ αὐτοί] The special consideration placed before God for the exercise of His forgiveness, founded in the divine order of grace (Matt. vi. 14; Mark xi. 25), is here more directly and more strongly expressed than in Matthew. — ἀφίομεν] (see the critical remarks) from the form ἀφίω, Eccles. ii. 18; Mark i. 34, xi. 16. The article before ὡφειλοντι is too weakly attested, and is a grammatical addition.

Vv. 5–8. After He had taught them to pray, He gives them the certainty that the prayer will be heard. The construction is interrogative down to παραθήσω αὐτῶ, ver. 6; at κακείνος, ver. 7, the interrogative construction is abandoned,

1 The attempt of Hitzig (in the Theol. Jahrb. p. 1854, 131) to explain the enigmatical word, to wit, by ἵσις, according to which it is made to mean, the nourishment equivalent to the hunger, is without any real etymological analogy, and probably was only a passing fancy. Weizsäcker, p. 497, is mistaken in finding as a parallel the word ὀριζομαι in respect of the idea ponem necessarium. This, indeed, does not come from ὀνοia, but from ἵσῳς, and this latter from ἵςτο. Moreover, the ὠοι of the Gospel to the Hebrews cannot betray that the first understanding of the word had become lost at an early date, but, considering the high antiquity of this Gospel, it can only appear as a preservation of the first mode of understanding it, especially as the Logia was written in Hebrew. In order to express the idea: necessary (thus ἀναγκαῖος, ἱστῶσις), there assuredly was no need of any free and, for that purpose, faulty word-making.
and the sentence proceeds as if it were a conditional one (ἐάν), in accordance with which also the apodosis beginning at ver. 8 (ἀλήω ὑμῶν κ.τ.λ.) is turned. Comp. on Matt. vii. 9. This anacoluthon is occasioned by the long dialogue in the oratio directa: φιλε κ.τ.λ., after which it is not observed that the first εἰπη (ver. 5) had no εάν to govern it, but was independent.\(^1\) — τις εξ ὑμῶν εξει κ.τ.λ.] The sentence has become unmanageable; but its drift, as originally conceived, though not carried out, was probably: Which of you shall be so circumstanced as to have a friend, and to go to him, etc., and would not receive from him the answer, etc.? Nevertheless I say unto you, etc. — καὶ εἰπη αὐτῷ] The sentence passes over into the deliberative form. The converse case is found in Antiph. Or. i. 4: πρὸς τίνας οὖν ἔλθη τις βοηθοὺς, ἢ ποί τὴν καταφυγήν ποιήσεται. . .; See thereon, Maetzner, p. 130. — Ver. 7. τὰ παιδία μου] the father does not wish to disturb his little children in their sleep. — εἰς τ. κοίτην] they are into bed. See on Mark ii. 1. — Ver. 8. διὰ γε κ.τ.λ.] at least on account of his impudence. On the structure of the sentence, comp. xviii. 4 f. On the position of γε before the idea to which it gives emphasis, see Nägelsbach, Anm. z. Ilias, ed. 3, p. 118.

Vv. 9, 10. Comp. Matt. vii. 7 f. Practical application of the above, extending to ver. 13, in propositions which Christ may have repeatedly made use of in His exhortations to prayer. — κἀγὼ ὑμῶν λέγω] Comp. Luke xvi. 9. Also I say unto you. Observe (1) that κἀγὼ places what Jesus is here saying in an incidental parallel with the δῶσει αὐτῷ δόσων χρήζει which immediately precedes: that according to the measure of this granting of prayer, to that extent goes also His precept to the disciples, etc.; (2) that next to κἀγὼ the emphasis rests on ὑμῶν (in ver. 8 the emphasis rested upon λέγω), inasmuch as Jesus declares what He also, on His part, gives to the disciples to take to heart. Consequently κἀγὼ corresponds to the subject.

1 Hence the less difficult reading of Lachmann, ἵνα, ver. 5, following A D, etc., is a correct indication of the construction, namely, that not with εἰπη, ver. 5 (Bleek, Ewald), but, first of all, with κἀκινητες, ver. 7, does the sentence proceed as if what went before were conditionally stated. If, with Lachmann and Tischendorf, a point is placed before λέγω ὑμῖν, ver. 8, a complete break in the sentence needlessly arises.
of δώσει, and ἵμαι to the αὐτῶ of ver. 8. The teaching itself, so far as Jesus deduces it from that παραβολή, depends on the argument a minori ad majus: If a friend in your usual relations of intercourse grants to his friend even a troublesome petition, although not from friendship, yet at least for the sake of getting quit of the petitioner's importunity; how much more should you trust in God that He will give you what you pray for! The tendency of the παραβολή points therefore not, as it is usually understood, to perseverance in prayer, for of this, indeed, Jesus says nothing in His application, vv. 9, 10, but to the certainty of prayer being heard.

Vv. 11–13. Comp. on Matt. vii. 9–11. Still on the hearing of prayer, but now in respect of the object petitioned for, which is introduced by the particle δὲ expressing transition from one subject to another.—The construction here also is an instance of anacoluthon (comp. on ver. 5), so that the sentence is continued by μὴ λίθου κ.τ.λ., as if instead of the question a conditional protasis (as at ver. 12) had preceded.—τὸν πατέρα] Whom of you will his son ask as his father for a loaf?—ὁ εἷς οὐρανοῦ δώσει] Attraction, instead of ὃ ἐν οὐρανῷ εἷς οὐρανοῦ δώσει. See on ix. 61, and Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 323 [E. T. 377].—πνεῦμα ἄγιου] this highest and best gift; a more definite, but a later form of the tradition than that which is found in Matthew. Comp. the critical remarks on ver. 2.

Vv. 14–22. See on Matt. xii. 22–29; Mark iii. 22 ff. Luke agrees with Matthew rather than with Mark.—ἡν ἐκβάλλων] he was busied therein,—καὶ αὐτὸ] and he himself, the demon, by way of distinguishing him from the possessed person.—κωφὸν] See on Mark ix. 17.—Ver. 16. A variation from Matthew in the connection of this (in Luke premature) demand for a sign (see on Matt. xii. 38), and in its purport (ἐἷς οὐρανοῦ).—Ver. 17. καὶ ὁ ὄικος ἐπὶ ὁ ὄικον πίπτει] a graphic description of the desolation just indicated by ἐρημοῦται: and house falleth upon house. This is to be taken quite literally of the overthrow of towns, in which a building tumbling into ruins strikes on the one adjoining it, and falls upon it. Thus rightly Vulgate, Luther, Erasmus, and others, Bleek also. Comp. Thucyd. ii. 84. 2: ναύς τε νηπί προσέπιπτε. This meaning, inasmuch as it is still more strongly descriptive, is to be preferred to the view of Buttmann, which in itself is equally correct (Neut. Gr. p. 291 [E. T. 338]): "House after house. Many other commentators take οἶκος as meaning family, and explain either (Bornemann), "and one family falls away after another" (on ἐπὶ, comp. Phil. ii. 27), or (so the greater number, Euthymius Zigabenus, Beza, Grotius, Valckenaeer, Kuinoel, Paulus, de Wette) they supply διαμερισθείς after οἶκον, and take ἐπὶ οἶκον as equivalent to ἐφ' ἐαυτῶν: "et familia a se ipsa dissidens salva esse nequit" (Kuinoel). It may be argued against the latter view, that if the meaning expressed by ἐφ' ἐαυτῶν had been intended, the very parallelism of the passage would have required ἐφ' ἐαυτῶν to be inserted, and that οἶκος ἐπὶ οἶκον could not in any wise express this reflexive meaning, but could only signify: one house against the other. The whole explanation is the work of the Harmonists. It may be argued against Bornemann, that after ἐρημοῦταί the thought which his interpretation brings out is much too weak, and consequently is not sufficiently in accordance with the context. We are to picture to ourselves a kingdom which is devastated by civil war.—Ver. 18. καὶ ὁ Σαταν. Satan also, corresponding with the instance just referred to.—ὅτε λέγετε κ.τ.λ.] the reason of the question.—Ver. 20. ἐν δακτύλῳ Θεοῦ] Matthew: ἐν πνεύματι Θεοῦ. Luke's mode of expressing the divine agency (Ex. viii. 19; Ps. viii. 3; Philo, Vit. Mos. p. 619 C; Suicer, Thes. I. p. 820) appeals more to the senses, especially that of sight. It is a more concrete form of the later tradition.—Ver. 21. ὁ ἰσχυρός] as τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ, Matt. xii. 29. —καθωπλισμένος] not the subject (Luther), but: armed.—τὴν ἐαυτοῦ αὐλὴν] not: his palace (see on Matt. xxvi. 3), but: his own premises, at whose entrance he keeps watch.—ἐν εἰρήνῃ ἐστὶ κ.τ.λ.] This is the usual result of that watching. But the case is otherwise if a stronger than he, etc. See what follows. Thus in me has a stronger than Satan come upon him, and vanquished him!—τὰ σκύλα αὐτοῦ] the spoils taken from him.

ζεβοῦλ κ.τ.λ., ver. 15, He pronounces upon the relation to Him of those men spoken of in ver. 15 (see on Matt. xii. 30), and then adds—

Vv. 24–26, a figurative discourse, in which He sets forth their incorrigibility. See on Matt. xii. 43–45. Luke, indeed, gives the saying concerning the sin against the Holy Ghost (Mark iii. 28 f.; Matt. xii. 31 f.), but not until xii. 10; and therefore it is wrong to say that He omitted it in the interest of the Pauline doctrine of the forgiveness of sins (Baur).

Vv. 27, 28. A woman (assuredly a mother), following without restraint her true understanding and impulse, publicly and earnestly pays to Jesus her tribute of admiration. Luke alone has this feminine type of character also (comp. x. 38 ff.), which bears the stamp of originality, on the one hand, in the genuine παντελε of the woman ("bene sentit, sed muliebriter loquitur," Bengel); on the other, in the reply of Jesus forthwith turning to the highest practical interest. This answer contains so absolutely the highest truth that lay at the heart of Jesus in His ministry, that Strauss, I. p. 719 (comp. Weizsäcker, p. 169), concludes, very erroneously, from the resemblance of the passage to viii. 21, that there were two different frames or moulds of the tradition in which this saying of Christ was set. The incident is not parallel even with Mark iii. 31 ff. (Holtzmann), even although in its idea it is similar. — ἐπάρασα] ἵψωσασα· σφόδρα γὰρ ἀποδεξημένη τούς λόγους αὐτοῦ, μεγαλοφόνως ἐμακάρισε τὴν γεννήσασαν αὐτὸν ὡς τοιούτοι μητέρα γενέσθαι ἄξιωθείσαν, Euthymius Zigabenus. — ἐκ τοῦ ὀξρου] out of the crowd she lifted up her voice. — μακαρία κ.τ.λ.] See analogous beatitudes from the Rabbins and classical writers in Wetstein, Schoettgen, and Elsner, Obs. p. 226. — Ver. 28. μενοῦνγε] may serve as corrective (imo vero) as well as confirmatory (utique). See generally, Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 400; Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 3. 9, ii. 7. 5. In this passage it is the former, comp. Rom. ix. 20, x. 18; Jesus does not deny His mother's blessedness, but He defines the predicate μακάριος, not as the woman had done, as a special external relation, but as a general moral relation, which might be established in the case of every one, and under which even Mary was brought, so that thus the benediction upon the mother, merely considered as mother, is corrected. The position of μενοῦν and μενοῦνγε at the beginning of the sentence belongs to the later Greek usage. See examples in Wetstein, Sturz, Dial. Al. p. 203; Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 342.

Vv. 29-32. See on Matt. xii. 39-42. Jesus now, down to ver. 36, turns His attention to the dismissal of those ἔτεροι who had craved from Him a σημεῖον ἐξ οὐρανοῦ (ver. 16). — ὅρξατο] He first began this portion of His address when the crowds were still assembling thither, i.e. were assembling in still greater numbers (ἐπαθροιζ.), comp. Plut. Anton. 44. But it is arbitrary to regard this introductory notice of the assembling of the people as deduced by Luke himself from the condemnation of the entire generation (Weizsäcker). — Ver. 30. Comp. Matt. xvi. 4. Jonah was for the Ninevites a sign (divinely sent) by means of his personal destiny, ὅτι ὑπερφυῶς ἐκ τῆς κοιλιᾶς τοῦ κύτους ἔρρύσθη τριήμερος. Jesus became for that generation a sign (divinely sent, and that as Messiah) likewise by His personal destiny, ὅτι ὑπερφυῶς ἐκ τῆς κοιλιᾶς τῆς γῆς ἀνέστη τριήμερος, Euthymius Zigabenus. In opposition to those who interpret the sign of Jonah only of Christ's word (as even Schenkel and Weizsäcker, p. 431), see on Matt. xii. 40, Remark. The sign of Jonah belongs entirely to the future (δοθήσεται... ἔσται). — Ver. 31 f. does not stand in a wrong order (de Wette), although the order in Matthew is probably the original, while that in Luke is arranged chronologically and by way of climax. — μετὰ τῶν ἀνδρῶν κ.τ.λ.] she will appear with the men, etc., brings into greater prominence the woman's condemning example. — ἀνδρεῖς Νυνεῦται] without an article: Men of Nineveh.

Vv. 33-36. Comp. viii. 16; Mark iv. 21; and see on Matt. v. 15, vi. 22 f. — No awkward (Baur), unconnected (Bleek, Ritschl) interpolation, but the introduction of the passage in this place depends on the connection of thought: "Here is more than Solomon, more than Jonah (vv. 31, 32). But this knowledge (the exceeding knowledge of Christ, Phil. iii. 8), once kindled at my word, ought not to be suppressed and made inoperative, but, like a light placed upon a candlestick, it ought to be allowed to operate unrestrainedly upon others also;¹ for the attainment of which result (ver. 34 ff.) it is indeed necessary to preserve clear and undimmed one's own inner light, i.e. the power of perception that receives the divine truth." Certainly the train of thought in Matthew is easier and clearer, but Luke found them in the source whence he obtained them in the connection in which he gives them.—eis kρυπτήν] not instead of the neuter, for which the feminine never stands in the New Testament (not even in Matt. xxi. 42), nor is it according to the analogy of eis μακράν, eis μιαν, and the like (see Bernhardy, p. 221) adverbial (see Borne mann), since no instance of such a use of kρυπτήν can be produced, but the accent must be placed on the penult, eis kρύπτην: into a concealed passage, into a vault (cellar). Thus η kρύπτη in Athen. iv. p. 205 A. Comp. the Latin crypta, Sueton. Calig. 58; Vitruv. vi. 8; Prudent. Hippol. 154: "Mersa latebrosis crypta patet foveis." The certainty of the usus loquendi and the appropriateness of the meaning confirm this explanation, although it occurs in none of the versions, and among the mss. only in τ. Yet Euthymius Zigabenus seems to give it in τὴν ἀπόκρυφον οἰκίαν: in recent times, Valckenaver, Matthaei (ed. min. i. p. 395), Kuinoel, Bretschneider, Bleek, Holtzmann, Winer, p. 213 [E. Ver. 36. Ὅδη] taking up again the thought of ver. 34: καὶ ὅλου τὸ σῶμά σου φωτείνων ἐστιν. — In the protasis the emphasis lies on ὅλου, which therefore is more precisely explained by μὴ ἔχου τὶ μέρ. σκοτ.; but in the apodosis φωτείνων has the emphasis, and the kind and degree of this light are illustrated (comp. ver. 34) by ὡς ὅταν κ.τ.λ.: “If therefore thy body is absolutely and entirely bright, without having any part dark, then bright shall it be absolutely and entirely, as when the light with its beam enlightens thee.” For then is the eye rightly constituted, fulfilling its purpose (see on Matt. vi. 22); but the eye stands to the body in the relation of the light, ver. 34. It is complete enlightenment, therefore, not merely partial, of which this normal condition of light (ὡς ὅταν κ.τ.λ.) is affirmed. Ἅπο του κατὰ τὸ σῶμα παραδείγματος περὶ τὴς ψυχῆς δίδωσι νοεῖν . . . ‘Εάν αὐτή ὁλη φωτεινὴ εἰη, μὴ ἔχουσα μηδὲν μέρος ἐσκοτισμένον πάθει, μήτε τὸ λογιστικόν, μήτε τὸ θυμικόν, μήτε τὸ ἐπιθυμικόν, ἔσται φωτεινὴ ὅλη οὕτως, ὡς ὅταν ὁ λύχνος τῇ ἀστραπῇ αὐτοῦ φωτίζῃ σε, Euthymius Zigabenus. The observation of the above diversity of emphasis in the protasis and apodosis, which is clearly indicated by the varied position of ὅλων with respect to φωτεινῶν, removes the appearance of tautology in the two members, renders needless the awkward change of the punctuation advocated by Vogel (de conjecturæ usu in crisi N. T. p. 37 f.) and Rünck: εἰ οὖν τὸ σῶμα σου ὅλων, φωτεινῶν μὴ ἔχον τι μέρος, σκοτεινῶν, ἔσται φωτεινῶν ὅλων κ.τ.λ., and sets aside the conjectures that have been broached, such as those of Michaelis (Eindl. I. p. 739): ἔσται φωτ. τὸ ὅλων (body and soul), or ὅλων; of Bornemann: that the first ὅλων is a gloss; of Eichthal: that instead of “thy body” must be meant “thine eye” (comp. already Maldonatus). — ὁ λύχνος] the lamp of the room, ver. 33.

Ver. 37. Ἐν δὲ τῷ λαλήσας] that is to say, what had preceded at ver. 29 ff. — ἄριστησῃ] refers no more than ἄριστον at Matt. xxii. 4 to the principal meal, but to the breakfast (in opposition to Kuinoel, de Wette, and others). See xiv. 12. — Ἡδειν μὲν τὴν τῶν Φαρισαίων σκαίοτητα ὁ κύριος, ἀλλ’ ὁμοιομενεστὶται αὐτοῖς δὲ αὐτό τοῦτο, ὅτι ποιηροὶ ἦσαν καὶ διορθώσεως ἔχρηζον, Theophylact. — In the following discourse itself, Luke, under the guidance of the source he is using, gives a much more limited selection from the Logia, abbreviating and generalizing much of the contents.
Vv. 38, 39. Ἕβαπτ. πρὸ τ. ἀρίστ.] See on Mark vii. 2. Luke does not say that the Pharisee expressed his surprise; Jesus recognises his thoughts immediately. Comp. Augustine. Schleiermacher, p. 180 f., directly contradicts the narrative when he places these sayings of Jesus after the meal, saying that they were first spoken outside the house. See, on the other hand, Strauss, I. p. 654, who, however, likewise takes objection to their supposed awkwardness (comp. Gfrörer, Heil. Sage, I. p. 243, de Wette, Ritschl, Holtzmann, Eichthal). This judgment applies an inappropriate standard to the special relation in which Jesus stood to the Pharisees, seeing that when confronting them He felt a higher destiny than the maintenance of the respect due to a host moving Him (comp. vii. 39 ff.); and hence the perception of the fitness of things which guided the tradition to connecting these sayings with a meal was not in itself erroneous, although, if we follow Matt. xxiii., we must conclude that this connection was first made at a later date. Apart from this, however, the connection is quite capable of being explained, not, perhaps, from the mention of cups and platters, but from the circumstance that Jesus several times when occasion offered, and possibly about that period when He was a guest in the houses of Pharisees, gave vent to His righteous moral indignation in His anti-Pharisaic sayings. Comp. xiv. 1 ff. — νῦν] a silent contrast with a better τὰλα: as it now stands with you, as far as things have gone with you, etc. Comp. Grotilus, who brings into comparison: ἢ γενεὰ αὐτῇ. — τὸ δὲ ἔσωθεν ὑμῶν] ὑμῶν does not belong to ἀρτ. κ. ποιηρ. (Kypke, Kuinoel, Paulus, Bleek, and others, following Beza’s suggestion), so that what is inside, the contents of the cup and platter, τὰ ἐνοῦτα, ver. 41, would be meant, which would agree with Matt. xxiii. 25, but is opposed to the order of the words here. On the contrary, the outside of the cup, etc., is contrasted with the inward nature of the persons. Ye cleanse the former, but the latter is full of robbery and corruption (comp. on Rom. i. 29). The concrete expression ἀρπαγῇ, as the object of 1 Jesus had just come out of the crowd, nay, He had just expelled a demon, ver. 14. Hence they expected that He would first cleanse Himself by a bath before the morning meal (comp. on Mark vii. 4).

endeavour, corresponds to the disposition of πλεονεξία, which in Mark vii. 22, Rom. i. 29, is associated with πονηρία. — Matt. xxiii. 25 has the saying in a more original form. The conception in Luke, although not in itself inappropriate (Weiss), shows traces of the influence of reflective interpretation, as is also evident from a comparison of ver. 40 with Matt. xxiii. 26.

Ver. 40. Jesus now shows how irrational (ἀφρονεῖς) this is from the religious point of view. — οὐχ ὁ πονηρᾶς κ.τ.λ.] did not He (God) who made that which is without (i.e. everything external in general, res externas) also make that which is within (res internas)? How absurd, therefore, for you to cleanse what belongs to the rebus externis, the outside of the cup, but allow that which belongs to the rebus internis, your inner life and effort, to be full of robbery, etc.; that ye do not devote to the one and to the other (therefore to both) the cleansing care that is due to God's work! Consequently τὸ ἔξωθεν is the category to which belongs τὸ ἔξωθεν τ. ποτ. κ. τ. πίν., ver. 39, and τὸ ἔσωθεν the category to which belongs τὸ ἔσωθεν ὑμῶν, ver. 39. In opposition to the context, others limit the words to the relation of body and spirit (Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, and many others, Bornemann also), which is not permitted by τὸ ἔξωθεν τοῦ πονηρίου, ver. 39. Others limit them to the materiale patinae et poculi and the cibum et potum, which τὸ ἔσωθεν ὑμῶν, ver. 39, does not allow (in opposition to Starck, Notae select. p. 91, and Wolf, Paulus also and Bleek). Kuinoel (following Elsner and Kypke) makes the sentence affirmative: "Non qui exterius purgavit, pocula patinasque, (eadem opera) etiam interius purgavit, cibos," but this view, besides being open to the objection drawn from τὸ ἔσωθεν ὑμῶν, ver. 39, is opposed to the usus loquendi of the words ἐποίησε and πονηρᾶς.

Ver. 41. A prescription how they are to effect the true purification. Πλήπ is verumtamen (see on vi. 24): Still, in order to set aside this foolish incongruity, give that which is therein (the contents of your cups and platters) as alms, and behold everything is pure unto you . . . this loving activity will then make your entire ceremonial purifications superfluous for you. All that you now believe you are compelled to subordinate to your customs of washings (the context gives this as the reference of the τάντα) will stand to you (to your consciousness) in the relation of purity. On the idea, comp. Hos. vi. 6 (Matt. ix. 13, xii. 7). τὰ ἐνόντα has the emphasis: yet what is in them, etc. Moreover, it is of itself obvious, according to the meaning of Jesus, that He sets this value not on the external work of love in itself, but on the disposition evinced thereby. Comp. xvi. 9. The more unnecessary was the view which regarded the passage as ironical (Erasmus, Lightfoot, and others, including Kuinoel, Schleiermacher, Neander, Bornemann), and according to which Jesus repeats the peculiar maxim of the Pharisees for attaining righteousness by works: “Attamen date modo stipem pauperibus, tunc ex vestra opinione parum solliciti esse potestis de victu injusto comparato, tunc vobis omnia pura sunt,” Kuinoel. Irony would come in only if in the text were expressed, not date, but datis. Moreover, the Pharisees would not have said τὰ ἐνόντα, but ἐκ τῶν ἐνόντων. Besides, notwithstanding the Old Testament praise of this virtue (Prov. xvi. 6; Dan. iv. 24; Eccles. iii. 30, xxix. 12; Tob. iv. 10, xii. 9, and elsewhere), and notwithstanding the Rabbinical “Eleemosyna aequipollet omnibus virtutibus” (Bava bathra, f. 9. 1), charitableness (apart from ostentations almsgiving, Matt. vi. 2) was so far from being the strong side of the Pharisees (Matt. xxiii. 13, 14; Mark vii. 11) that Jesus had sufficient reason to inculcate on them that virtue instead of their worthless washings.—τὰ ἐνόντα] that which is therein. It might also mean, not: quod superest, i.e. τὸ λοιπὸν (Vulgate), but perhaps: that which is at hand, that which ye have (Theophylact: τὰ ὑπάρχοντα ὑμῶν; Euthymius Zigabenus: τὰ ἐναποκείμενα; Luther: Of that which is there), or which is possible (Grotius, Morus), to justify which δοῦναι would have to be understood; but the connection requires the reference to the cups and platters. Vv. 42, 43. See on Matt. xxiii. 23, 6 f. But woe unto you, ye have quite different maxims!—παρέρχεσθε] ye leave out of consideration, as at xv. 29, and frequently in Greek writers, Judith xi. 10.—ἀγαπᾶτε] ye place a high value thereupon. Comp. John xii. 43.
CHAP. XI. 44-48. 145

Ver. 44. See on Matt. xxiii. 27. Yet here the comparison is different. — τὰ ἄδηλα] the undiscernible, which are not noticeable as graves in consequence of whitewash (Matt. i.e.) or otherwise. — καὶ] simplicity of style; the periodic structure would have linked on the clause by means of a relative, but this loose construction adds the point more independently and more emphatically. — περιπατοῦντες] without an article (see the critical remarks): while they walk: — οὐκ οἴδασι] know it not, that they are walking on graves.

Ver. 45. This νομικός was no Sadducee (Paulus, yet see his Exeget. Handb.), because he otherwise would not have applied these reproaches to himself as well as to the Pharisees, and Jesus would not have continued to discourse so entirely in an anti-Pharisaic tone, but he likewise was a Pharisee, as in general were most of the νομικοί. That he only partially professed the principles of the Pharisees is assumed by de Wette on account of καὶ ἡμᾶς, in which, however, is implied “not merely the common Pharisees (the laity), but even us, the learned, thou art aspersing.” The scribe calls what was a righteous οὐειδίζειν (Matt. xi. 20; Mark xvi. 14) by the name of ὑβρίζειν (xviii. 32; Acts xiv. 5; Matt. xxii. 6). Although this episode is not mentioned in Matthew, there is no sufficient ground to doubt its historical character. Comp. on xii. 41. Consequently, all that follows down to ver. 52 is addressed to the νομικοί, as they are once again addressed at the close by name, ver. 52. But it is not to be proved that Luke in his representation had in view the legalists of the apostolic time (Weizsäcker), although the words recorded must needs touch them, just as they were also concerned in the denunciations of Matt. xxi.

Ver. 46. See on Matt. xxiii. 4.
Vv. 47, 48. See on Matt. xxiii. 29-31. The sting of the discourse is in Matthew keener and sharper. — ὅτι οἰκοδομεῖτε ... οἱ δὲ πατέρες κ.τ.λ.] because ye build ... but your fathers slew them. By this building, which renews the remembrance of the murder of the prophets, ye actually give testimony and consent to the deeds of your fathers, ver. 48. Otherwise ye would leave to ruin and forgetfulness those LUKE II.
graves which recall these deeds of shame! It is true the graves were built for the purpose of honouring the prophets, but the conduct of the builders was such that their way of regarding the prophets, as proved by this hostile behaviour, was reasonably and truly declared by Jesus to be a practical contradiction of that purpose. He declares how, in accordance with this behaviour, the matter objectively and actually stood. Consequently, there is neither any deeper meaning to be supposed as needing to be introduced, as Lange, L. J. II. 2, p. 840, has unhappily enough attempted; nor is ἀπα to be taken as interrogative (Schleiermacher). The second clause of the contrast, οἱ δὲ πατέρες κ.τ.λ., is introduced without any preparation (without a previous μέν; otherwise at ver. 48), but just with so much the greater force, and hence no μέν is to be supplied (Kninoel; see, on the other hand, Klotz, ad Devar. p. 356 f.; Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 423). — In view of the reading ὑμεῖς δὲ οἴκοδομεῖτε, ver. 48 (without αὐτῶν τὰ μνημεῖα, see the critical remarks), we must translate: but ye build! ye carry on buildings. That this building had reference to the tombs of the prophets is self-evident. The brief expression is more passionate, pregnant, incisive.

Vv. 49–51. See on Matt. xxiii. 34–39. — διὰ τοῦτο] on account of this your agreement with your fathers as murderers of the prophets, which affinity the wisdom of God had in view when it gave its judgment. Under the guidance of the doctors of the law, the people among whom the gospel teachers were sent (εἰς αὐτοὺς) rejected these latter, etc. See ver. 52. — ἡ σοφία τ. Θεοῦ] Doubtless a quotation, as is proved by εἰπέω and αὐτοῦς, but not from the Old Testament, since no such passage occurs in it (Olshausen mentions 2 Chron. xxiv. 19 interrogatively, but what a difference!), and quotations from the Old Testament are never introduced by ἡ σοφία τ. Θεοῦ. To suppose a lost Jewish writing, however, which

1 The passage is very inaccurately treated by Köstlin, p. 163, according to whom Luke has here heaped misunderstanding on misunderstanding. He is said to have referred the entire utterance to the Old Testament prophets, and on that account to have placed before it ἡ σοφία τ. Θεοῦ ἐπεί, in order to give to it the character of an ancient prophecy, which, however, had no existence at all, etc.
either may have had this title (Ewald, Bleek, Baumgarten-Crusius, Weizsäcker) or may have introduced the ἡμείς ἡμαῖς as speaking (Paulus), is contrary to the analogy of all the rest of the quotations made by Jesus, as well as to the evangelical tradition itself, which, according to Matt. xxiii. 34, attributed these words to Jesus. Accordingly, it is to be supposed (Neander, L. J. p. 655; Gess, Person Chr. p. 29; comp. also Ritschl, Evang. Marcions, p. 89) that Jesus is here quoting one of His own earlier utterances (observe the past tense ἔτεκεν), so that He represents the wisdom of God (Wisd. vii. 27; Matt. xi. 19; Luke vii. 35) as having spoken through Him. Allied to this is the idea of the λόγος. According to this, however, the original form of the passage is not to be found in Luke (Olshausen, Bleek); for while Matthew gives this remarkable utterance in a directly present form, Luke's method of recording it transfers to the mouth of Jesus what rather was a later mode of citing it, and gives it in the shape of a result of reflective theology akin to the doctrine of the Logos.

1 Strauss also, in Hilgenfeld's Zeitschrift, 1863, p. 87 ff., who is thinking entirely of a Christian document.

2 The utterance in Matthew, ἵνα ἀποστίλλω κ.τ.λ., was historically indicated in the Church by: ἢ σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ ἔτεκεν ἀποστίλλω κ.τ.λ. And Luke here makes Jesus Himself speak in this later mode of indicating it. It is a ἔτεκεν πρήτηρον in form. According to Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 101 (comp. also Schegg), Jesus announces God's counsel in the form of a word of God. Comp. Grotius and van Hengel, Annot. p. 16 f. To this view ἦς ἀποστίλλω (instead of ἦς ὑπάρχω) would certainly not be opposed, since those whom the speech concerned might be opposed as third persons to the wisdom of God which was speaking. But instead of ἔτεκεν might be expected λίγω; for now through Jesus the divine wisdom would declare its counsel (Heb. iii. 10, to which Hofmann refers, is different, because there ἔτεκεν in connection with προσώπωσιν actually relates to the past). Moreover, if by ἢ σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ were not meant the personal wisdom of God that appeared in Christ, and emitted the utterance, it would not be conceivable why it should not simply have been said: διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὁ Θεὸς λίγω. Nowhere else in the New Testament is a declaration of God called a declaration of the divine wisdom. Besides, according to Matt. xxiii. 34, Jesus is the subject of ἀποστίλλω; and this is also the case in the passage before us, if ἢ σοφία τ. Θεοῦ is understood of the person of Christ as being the personal self-revelation of the divine wisdom. Christ sends to His Church the prophets and apostles (x. 3), Eph. iv. 11. Riggenbach's explanation (Stud. u. Krit. 1855, p. 599 f.) is similar to that of Hofmann,—though more correct in taking the σοφία τ. Θεοῦ in the Logos-sense, but interpreting the past tense ἔτεκεν by an "at all times" arbitrarily supplied.
to drive out of the land. — ἵνα ἐκδιώκῃ τ. κτ.λ.] an appointment in the divine decree. The expression corresponds to the Hebrew יְהַ֣בַּנְה 2 Sam. iv. 11; Ezek. iii. 18, 20, which sets forth the vengeance for blood. — The series of prophets in the more general sense begins with Abel as the first holy man.

Ver. 52. See on Matt. xxiii. 14. The genitive of the thing with τ. κλείδα denotes that which is opened by the key (Matt. xvi. 19; Rev. i. 18, ix. 1, xx. 1), since here we are not to supply τῆς βασιλείας with κλείδα, and take τ. γνώσεως as a genitive of apposition (Düsterdieck in the Stud. u. Krit. 1865, p. 750). Comp. Isa. xxii. 22. — The γνώσις, the knowledge κατ' ἐξοχήν, i.e. the knowledge of the divine saving truth, as this was given in the manifestation and the preaching of Christ, is compared to a closed house, to get into which the key is needed. The νομικοὶ have taken away this key, i.e. they have by means of their teaching, opposed as it is to the saving truth (because only directed to traditional knowledge and fulfilling of the law), made the people incapable of recognising this truth. — ὑπατε] tulistis (Vulgate); the reading ἀπεκρύβατε found in D is a correct gloss. If they had recognised and taught, as Paul did subsequently, the law as παιδαγωγὸς εἰς Χριστόν (Gal. iii. 24), they would have used the key for the true knowledge for themselves and others, but not taken it away, and made it inaccessible for use. They have taken it away; so entirely in opposition to their theocratic position of being the κλειδοῦχοι have they acted. — On the figurative idea of the key of knowledge, comp. viii. 10: ὑμῖν δέδωκα γνῶναι τὰ μυστήρια τῆς βασιλείας τ. Θεοῦ. The aorists are altogether to be taken in the sense of the completed treatment; they indicate what the νομικοὶ have accomplished.

1 Ahrens, Amt d. Schlüssel, p. 9 ff., takes ὑπατε as: ye bear (more strictly: ye have taken to you) the key of knowledge, to wit: as those who ought to be its ἐκκλησία. Thus, however, the reason of the ὑπατε would not yet appear in ἐπὶ ὑπατε κ.τ.λ., nor until the following αὐτοὶ εἰκ. κ.τ.λ.; and hence the latter would have required to be linked on by ἀλλά, or at least by δι; or else instead of ὑπατε the participle would have required to be used. Many of the older commentators, as Erasmus, Elsner, Wolf, Maldonatus, took ὑπατε as: ye have arrogated to yourselves, which, however, it does not mean.

So also Mark vi. 19; Gen. xlix. 23; Test. XII. Patr. p. 682; in the good sense: Jamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 6. — ἀποστοματίζειν¹] means first of all: to recite away from the mouth, i.e. by heart (Plat. Euthyd. p. 276 C, 277 A; Wetstein in loc.); then transitively: to get out of one by questioning (Pollux, ii. 102; Suidas: ἀποστοματίζειν φασὶ τὸν διδάσκαλον, ὅταν κελεύει τὸν παῖδα λέγειν ἄττα ἀπὸ στόματος). See Ruhnken, Tim. p. 43 f. So here; it is the ἀπαντεῖν αὐτοσ-χείδους κ. ἀνεπισκέπτους ἀποκρίσεις ἐρωτημάτων δόλερον, Euthymius Zigabenus. — Ver. 54. According to the corrected reading (see the critical remarks): while they lay in wait for Him, in order to catch up (to get by hunting) something out of His mouth. See instances of θηρεύσαι in this metaphorical sense, in Wetstein.

Rightly; it was attracted to what follows (so also most of the editions), which appeared to need a verb, and therefore was put in the singular. According to almost equally strong attestation we must read τῆν δυνάτηρα and τὴν μυτῆρα instead of δυνατῆρι and μυτηρὶ (Lachm. and Tisch. omitting the unequally attested article). The Recepta resulted from involuntary conformity to what precedes. — Ver. 54. τὴν πεφέλι.] The article is wanting in A B L X Δ ₯, min. Lachm. Tisch. But how easily was τῆς, which in itself is superfluous, passed over between τὸν ΤΕ and Νεφέλ. ! — Ver. 58. παραδῷ] Lachm. and Tisch. have παραδόσει. Rightly; the transcribers carried on the construction, as in Matt. v. 25. So also subsequently, instead of βάλλει (Elz.) or βάλη (Griesb. Scholz) is to be read, with Lachm. and Tisch., βαλέτ.
crowd, without number, had gathered together (ἐπισύναξθ.), and now at various intervals He holds the following discourse, primarily indeed addressing His disciples (πρὸς τοὺς μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ, ver. 22), yet turning at times expressly to the people (vv. 15 ff., 54 ff.), and in general in such a manner (ver. 41) that the multitude also was intended to hear the whole, and in its more general reference to apply it to themselves. With the exception of the interlude, vv. 13–21, the discourse is original only in this way, that very diverse, certainly in themselves original, fragments of the Logia are put together; but when the result is compared with the analogous procedure of Matthew in the Sermon on the Mount, Matthew is found to be the more original of the two. Among the longer discourses in Luke none is so much of a mosaic as the present. Although the historical situation of ver. 1 is not invented, yet by the designed and plainly exaggerated bringing together of a great multitude of people it is confused. It would be too disproportionate an apparatus merely to illustrate the contents of ver. 2 f. (Weizsäcker). — τῶν μυριάδων] The article denotes the innumerable assembled mass of the people (very hyperbolically, comp. Acts xxii. 20). — ὅστε καταπατ. ἀλληλα. οὕτως ἐφίμενοι ἐκαστός πλησιάζειν αὐτῷ, Theophylact. — ἥρξατο] He began, pictorial style. — πρῶτον] before all, is to be taken with προσέχετε, comp. ix. 61, x. 5; Gersdorf, p. 107. It does not belong to what precedes (Luther, Bengel, Knapp, Schulz, Scholz, Paulus, Lachmann, Tischendorf), in connection with which it would be absolutely superfluous, although A C D Ν, etc., do take it thus. Ewald well says, "As a first duty.” — τῆς ζύμης] see on Matt. xvi. 6; Mark viii. 15. Here also is not meant the vice of hypocrisy (the usual interpretation), because in that case the next clause would have ἡ ὑπόκρισις (with the article); but it glances back to the subject of the previous conversation at the table, and means: the pernicious doctrines and principles. Of these He says: their nature is hypocrisy; therein lies what constitutes the reason of the warning (ἡτίς, quippe quae).

1 Therefore not to be interpreted of the Judaizers of the apostolic times (Weizsäcker, p. 364); just as little is xvi. 14.
Vv. 2–10. See on Matt. x. 26–33. The connection is indicated by means of the continuative δὲ: "Ye must the more, however, be on your guard against this hypocritical ζυμη, since your teaching is destined to the greatest publicity for the future." Comp. Mark iv. 22. Publicity which lies open to the world's judgment, and hypocritical character which must shun disclosure, are irreconcilable. If you would not dread the former, the latter must remain far from you. According to Weiss, Luke has given to the whole saying only the meaning, that everything concealed by hypocrisy nevertheless one day comes to light, and therefore, even every word, however secretly it is spoken, shall come one day to publicity. But this supposition, without any ground for it, attributes to Luke a complete misapprehension of the meaning. — Ver. 3. ἰπθαν] quare, wherefore. See Hermann, ad Viger. p. 710; Schaefer, Appar. Dem. I. p. 846. — ὅσα ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ κ.τ.λ.] Everything which (in dread of persecutions) ye shall have spoken in the darkness, i.e. shall have taught in secret, shall (in the triumph of my cause) be heard in the clear daylight, i.e. shall be known in full publicity by your preaching and the preaching of others. The expression ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ used of the apostolic agency is not inappropriate (de Wette), since it characterizes it not in general, but only under certain circumstances (ver. 4). But certainly the original form of the saying is found in Matt. x. 27, while in Luke it was altered to suit the apostolic experiences after these had often enough proved the necessity of teaching in secret what at a later period came to be publicly proclaimed before the whole world,¹ when the gospel, as in Luke's time, was triumphantly spread abroad. — ἐν τῷ φωτί] in the clear day; Hom. Od. xxi. 429; Xen. Cyr. iv. 2. 26; Wisd. xviii. 4. — Ver. 4. If Jesus reminded His disciples by ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ and πρὸς τῷ οὖς ...
\(\text{\textit{en τ. ταμείων},} \text{ ver. 3,} \text{ of the impending pressure of persecutions, He now exhorts them to fearlessness in presence of their persecutors. — \textit{τοῖς φίλοις μου} for as such they were the object of persecution. — \textit{μετὰ ταῦτα} \textit{μετὰ τὸ ἀποκτεῖναι.} \text{ The plural depends on the idea of being put to death, comprising all the modes of taking away life.} \text{ See Kühner, II. p. 423. — Ver. 5 f. Observe the marked emphasis on the \textit{φοβήθητε.} — Vv. 8—10. Not an admonition for the disciples to remain faithful, for ver. 10 would not be appropriate to that, inasmuch as there was no occasion to be anxious at all about their speaking against the Son of man, and it would have been even inappropriate to bid them beware of the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost;¹ but Jesus adds to the previous encouragements a new one (\textit{λέγω δὲ ἵμιν,} comp. ver. 4), saying to them how momentous for the eternal destiny of men is the apostolic work conducted by the Holy Spirit, how even the decision of the judgment on men would be given in accordance with the result of the work of the apostles among them. Hence, ver. 10 has been wrongly regarded as not pertinent to this (Kuinoel, de Wette); while, on the other hand, Schleiermacher considers the arrangement of Matt. xii. as less appropriate, in that he introduces a contrast of the \textit{present time} (in which the Son is resisted) with the \textit{future} (when the more rapid and mighty agency of the Spirit is blasphemed). In itself the saying is appropriate in both places, nay, it may have been uttered more than once; but in Matthew and Mark we have its closest historical connection and position.}

¹ Hofmann, \textit{Schrifbew.} II. 2, p. 342, insists on regarding the blasphemy against the Spirit in this place as not distinct from the denial of Jesus. He says that this denial, in the case of those, namely, who had not only had the earthly human manifestation of Jesus before them, but had received the Holy Spirit, is blasphemy against the Spirit. But it is very arbitrary to assume, in contradiction to Matt. xii. 31, Mark iii. 29, that the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit presupposes that the Spirit has already been received. The blasphemers of the Spirit are malevolently conscious and hardened opposers of Christ. They may certainly have already had the Spirit and have apostatized and become such opposers (Heb. x. 29); but if such people were to be understood in this passage, some clearer indication should have been given. Still, how far from the Lord must even the mere thought have been, that the disciples, His friends, ver. 4, could ever change into such malignant blasphemers!
As to the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, see on Matt. xii. 31 f.

Vv. 13-21. Peculiar to Luke; from his source containing the account of the journey. — Ver. 13 f. τις] certainly no attendant of Jesus (Lightfoot, Kuinoel, and others), as Luke himself points out by ἐκ τοῦ ὀχλοῦ; besides, such a one would have known Jesus better than is betrayed by this uncongenial request. It was a Jew on whom the endowments and authority of Jesus produced such an impression that he thought he might be able to make use of Him in the matter of his inheritance. Whether he was a younger brother who grudged to the first-born his double share of the inheritance (Ewald), must be left in doubt. — ἐκ τ. ὀχλ.] belongs to εἰπε, as is shown by the order. The mode of address, ἀνθρωπε, has a tone of disapproval, Rom. ii. 1, ix. 20; Plat. Protag. p. 350 D; Soph. Aj. 778, 1132. Observe that Jesus instantly rejects the application that concerns a purely worldly matter; on the other hand, He elsewhere gives a decision on the question of divorce.¹

Ver. 15. Jesus recognised πλεονεξία as that which had stirred up the quarrel between the brothers, and uses the occasion to utter a warning against it. — πρὸς αὐτοῦς] i.e. πρὸς τὸν ὀχλοῦ, ver. 13. — ὅτι οὐκ ἐν τῷ περισσεύειν κ.τ.λ.] for not by the fact of a man's possessing abundance does his life (the support of his life) consist in his possessions. This—the fact that one's life consists in one's possessions—is not dependent on the abundance of the possession, but—this, the contrast unexpressed, but resulting from ver. 30—on the will of God, who calls away the selfish collector of treasures from the midst of his abundance. The simple thought then is: It is not superfluity that avails to support a man's life by what he possesses. "Vivitur parvo bene." To this literal meaning, moreover, the following parable corresponds, since it does not authorize us to understand ζωή in its pregnant reference: true life, σωτηρία, or the like (Kuinoel, Bornemann, Olshausen, Ewald, and the older commentators); on the other hand, Kaeuffer, De ζωής aion. not. p. 12 f.1 Observe, moreover, that οὐκ has been placed at the beginning, before ἐν τῷ περισσ., because of the contrast which is implied, and that τινί, according to the usual construction, that of the Vulgate, goes most readily with περισσεῦω (xxi. 4; Tob. iv. 16; Dion. Hal. iii. 11), and is not governed by what follows. An additional reason for this construction lies in the fact that thus the following αὐτῶ is not superfluous. Finally, it is to be noted that εἶναι ἐκ is the frequent proficisci εκ, prodire εκ. De Wette is wrong in saying: "for though any one has superfluity, his life is not a part of his possessions, i.e. he retains it not because he has these possessions." In this manner εἶναι ἐκ would mean, to which belong; but it is decisive against this view entirely that οὐκ ἐν τῷ περισσεῦω must be taken together, while in respect thereof, according to the former view, no contrast can be conceived; for the life is in no case a part of our possessions (in the above sense).

Olshausen says that there are two propositions blended together: "Life consists not in superfluity" (the true life), and "nothing spiritual can proceed from earthly possessions." Ewald says: "If man has not from his external wealth in general what can be rightly called his life, he has it not, or rather he has it still less by the fact that this, his external wealth, increases by his appeasing his covetousness."

The thought of a robber and murderer (Paulus, Bornemann) is not to be allowed on account of ver. 21.— τίνι ἐσταί] not to thee will it belong, but to others! — Ver. 21. So, having incurred the loss of his happiness by the unexpected appearance of death, is he who collects treasure for himself (for his own possession and enjoyment), and is not rich in reference to God; i.e. is not rich in such wise that his wealth passes over to God (Rom. x. 12), by his possession, namely, of treasures in heaven, which God saves up in order to impart them to the man when Messiah’s kingdom shall be set up. See on Matt. v. 12, vi. 20. Comp. 1 Tim. vi. 19, and on Col. i. 5. The πλοῦτεῖν εἰς θεόν (unless, however, εἰς is to be taken for ἐν, as Luther, Beza, Calovius, and others would have it) is substantially the same as ἔχειν θησαυροὺς ἐν οὐρανῷ (comp. ver. 33), and it is realized through δικαιοσύνη, and in the case of the rich man, especially through loving activity.
(Matt. xix. 21; Luke xvi. 9), such as Christ desires, Matt. vi. 2–4. It is not temporal possession of wealth which is applied in usum et honorem Dei (Majus, Elsner, Kypke, comp. Möller, Neue Ansichten, p. 201 ff.), but the higher ideal possession of wealth, the being rich in Messianic possessions laid up with God, and one day to be received from Him, which is wanting to the egoistic θησαυρίζων εαυτῷ. Against the former view, entertained by Majus and the rest, it is decisive that the negation of the being rich in relation to God (not of the becoming rich) is regarded as bound up with the selfish heaping up of treasure. This withal in opposition to Bormann: “qui quod dives est prosperoque in augendis divitiis successu utitur, sibi tribuit, non Deo.”

Vv. 22–31. See on Matt. vi. 25–33. Jesus now turns from the people (ver. 16) again to His disciples. — διὰ τούτο] because this is the state of things with the θησαυρίζων εαυτῷ κ. μὴ εἰς θεὸν πλουτῶν.— Ver. 24. τοῦς κόρακας] not in reference to the young ravens forsaken by the old ones (Job xxxviii. 41; Ps. cxlvi. 9); but a common and very numerous species of bird is mentioned (the pulli corvorum must otherwise have been expressly named: in opposition to Grotius and others). — Ver. 28. According to the Recepta (but see the critical remarks), ἐν τῷ ἄγρῳ would have to be connected with ὄντα; on the other hand, following the reading of the amended texts: but if in the field God in such wise clothes the grass, which to-day is here and to-morrow is cast into an oven, etc. Instead of ἀμφιέννοι, we must read, with Lachmann, ἀμφιϊεῖ, or, with Tischendorf, ἀμφιέζει. Both forms belong to later Greek (Themist., Plut., LXX.). — Ver. 29. καὶ ὑμεῖς] as the ravens and the lilies. — μὴ μετεωρίζεσθε] The Vulgate rightly translates: “nolite in sublime tolli;” and Luther: “be not high-minded.” Exalt not yourselves; lift not yourselves up to lofty claims, which is to be taken as referring not to mere eating and drinking, but generally. The usus loquendi of μετεωρίζεσθαι, εσφερρί, physically and (Aristoph. Av. 1447; Polyb. iii. 70. 1, iv. 59. 4, vii. 4. 6; Diodor. xi. 32. 41) psychically is well known. See also the passages from Philo in Loesner, p. 116. But others (Castalio, Beza, Grotius, Maldonatus, Hammond, Wolf, Bengel, Krebs, Valckenaer, Rosenmüller, Kuinoel, Paulus, Bleek, and many more) have:

\(\text{nee inter spem metumque fluctuatis}\). Comp. Ewald: “waver not, lose not your balance.” The view of Euthymius Zigabenus also is that Christ refers to \(\text{τόν περιστασμόν τόν ἀπὸ τῶν ὀλαφάνων ἐπὶ τὰ γῆνα}\). Certainly, as \(\text{μετέωρος}\) may mean: fluctuans (see Schweighäuser, Lex. Pol. p. 387; Josephus, Antt. iv. 3. 1, Bell. iv. 2. 5), \(\text{μετεωρίζειν}\) may signify: to make wavering (Dem. 169. 23; Polyb. v. 70. 10; Schol. ad Soph. Oed. R. 924; Eurip. Or. 1537); but there appears no reason in the connection for departing from the above, which is the usual meaning in which the word is currently employed, even in the LXX. and in the apocryphal writers (2 Macc. vii. 34, v. 17; 3 Macc. vi. 5). This \(\text{μετεωρός}\) has for its opposite the \(\text{συναπάγεσθαι τοῖς ταπεινοῖς}\), Rom. xii. 16.

Ver. 32. Peculiar to Luke. An encouragement to fearlessness in the endeavour after the Messiah’s kingdom, by means of the promise of the divinely-assured final result. — \(\text{μὴ φοβοῦ}\) in consideration of their external powerlessness and weakness (\(\text{τὸ μικρὸν πολύμον}\)). But Christians generally, as such, are not the little\(^1\) flock (which is not to be changed into a poor oppressed band, as de Wette, following Grotius, does), but the little community of the disciples (ver. 22), as whose head He was their shepherd (comp. John x. 12; Matt. xxvi. 31). — \(\text{εὐδοκησεν}\) it has pleased your Father. See on Rom. xv. 26; Col. i. 19. — \(\text{δοῦναι ἵμιν τ. β.}\) see xx. 29 f.

Vv. 33, 34. Comp. Matt. vi. 19–21. This end is so important that, in order to strive thereafter with your whole interest (ver. 34), ye must renounce your earthly possessions, etc. This selling and giving up of the proceeds as alms (\(\text{ἐλεημοσύνα}\), as xi. 41) is not required of all Christians (ver. 22), as de Wette will have it, but of the disciples, who, in the discharge of their office, needed perfect release from what is temporal. All the less do the words furnish a basis for the consilium eangelicum and the vow of poverty (Bisping). — \(\text{εὐαυτοῖς}\) while ye give to others. — \(\text{βαλλάντια}\) (x. 4) \(\text{μὴ}\)

Vv. 35, 36. Only echoes of the following references to the Parousia occur at Matt. xxiv. 42 ff. All the less is the originality to be attributed only to Luke (Olshausen) or to Matthew (Kuinoel). In Luke the exhortations to preparedness for the Parousia are readily accounted for by the previous promise of the Messiah's kingdom (ver. 32) and the requirement associated therewith (ver. 33). — ἐστωσαυ...καιόμενοι] The meaning stripped of figure is: Be in readiness, upright and faithful to your calling be prepared to receive the coming Messiah. The nimble movement that was necessary to the servant made requisite the girding up of the outer garment round the loins (1 Pet. i. 13, and see Wetstein), and slaves must naturally have had burning lamps for the reception of the master when he returned home at night. The ὑμῶν emphatically placed first, as ὑμεῖς at ver. 36, corresponds to the special duty of disciples; that your loins should be girded, ... and that ye like men, etc. — ἄνθρωποι] i.e. according to the context: slaves, as it is frequently used in the classical writers, Mark xiv. 12. — ἐκ τῶν γάμων] not: from his marriage, but from the marriage, at which he (as a guest) has been present. For his marriage is after the Parousia (see on Matt. xxii. 2, xxv. 1). The detail of the figure is not to be pressed into interpretation further than to imply the blessed condition (τὴν ἄνω εὐφροσύνην κ. ἀγαλλίασιν, Euthymius Zigabenus) from which the Messiah returns. — ἐλθὼντος...ἀνοιξ. ἀντρφ] a well-known construction, Winer, p. 186 [E. Ver. 37. A symbolic representation of the most blessed recompense, which the servants of Christ, who are faithful to their calling, shall receive from Him at His Parousia. It is not the idea of the great and general Messianic banquets (Matt. viii. 11) that underlies this, but it is the thought of a...

special marriage-feast for those servants (the disciples). That the washing of the disciples' feet by Jesus, John xiii., gave occasion (de Wette) to the mode of representation, according to which the Lord Himself serves ("promissio de ministrando honorificentissima et maxima omnium," Bengel), is the less probable the greater the difference is seen to be between the idea expressed by the foot-washing and that which is here set forth. The thought of the Saturnalia (Grotius, comp. Paulus and Olshausen) brings in something wholly foreign, as also the calling of the slaves to partake in certain sacred feasts according to the law, Deut. xii. 17 f., xvi. 11 f., is something very different from the idea of this feast (in opposition to Kuinoel, de Wette, and others), in respect of which, moreover, it has been assumed (see Heumann, Kuinoel, de Wette) that the Lord brought with Him meats from the wedding feast,—an assumption which is as needless as it is incapable of proof. —περιξώσεται κ.τ.λ.] a vivid representation of the individual details among which even the drawing near to those waiting (παρελθόν) is not wanting.—The parable, xvii. 7–10, has an entirely different lesson in view; hence there is no contradiction between the two.

Ver. 38. The earlier or later time of the Advent will make no difference in this blessed recompense. Jesus does not mention the first of the four night-watches (see on Matt. xiv. 25), because in this the marriage-feast took place; nor the fourth, because so late a return would have been unusual, and in this place contrary to the decorum of the events that were represented.

Vv. 39, 40. See on Matt. xxiv. 43 f. The less, however, should ye be wanting in watchfulness, since the Messiah will appear unexpectedly like a thief in the night. A sudden change of figures, but appropriate for sharpening the warning in question, and not at all startling to people accustomed to the sudden turns of Oriental imagery. Whether, moreover, the passage has received its true historical place here or in the discourse on the end of the world, Matt. xxiv., cannot be decided.

Ver. 41. Certainly original (in opposition to de Wette, LUKE II.
Holtzmann, Weizsäcker, Weiss), the more certainly, the finer are the threads with which what follows down to ver. 48 is linked on to such a question. The succeeding passage at least offered no occasion for either the tradition or Luke inventing the question. If it had been suggested to Luke by Mark xiii. 37, the answer of Jesus would also have been in closer agreement with the meaning of the passage in Mark. — πρός] in reference to, for us, comp. xx. 19; Rom. x. 21. — τὴν παραβ. ταύτ.] to wit, of the slaves who wait for their lord, ver. 36 ff. See ver. 42 ff. The reference to the master of the house and the thief, ver. 39, belonged also thereto as a concrete warning example. — ἂς] Peter asks whether the parable is intended for the disciples, or also (or at the same time also) has a general reference.

Vv. 42–44. In the pregnant style characteristic of Jesus as it most of all appears in John, He makes no direct reply to that question, but proceeds with His parable of the servants, and among these He now for the first time begins to speak of that one (the apostles generally cannot be described in vv. 42–46) whom He, before His departure, would set over the rest of the household as οἶκονόμος (the post destined for Peter!). He depicts his great recompense in the event of his being faithful, and his heavy punishment in the event of his being unfaithful (down to ver. 48); and He consequently made Peter, whose question betrayed an inconsiderate exaltation above the crowd, understand His reply to mean: Instead of meddling with that question, thou hast thine own consequent position to keep in view with fear and trembling! Then, however, ver. 47 f., he links on the general law of retribution under which every one comes, and which every one has to lay to heart. As to the reference of τίς ἄρα, and the relation of the question to ver. 43, see on Matt. xxiv. 45 f.

Vv. 45, 46. But if that slave, whom the lord will place over his servants as οἶκονόμος (ver. 42), instead of being faithful, shall have thought, etc.—Moreover, see on Matt. xxv. 48–51. — μετὰ τῶν ἁπλιστ.] with the faithless (ver. 42), whose final destiny is the punishment of Gehenna (ver. 5).

Vv. 47, 48. This passage, which is peculiar to Luke, gives explanatory information of a general kind, yet related to Matt. xxv. 14 ff., to account for the severity of the punishment, ver. 46. This will ensue, in accordance with the general rule of retribution coming into operation at the return of the Lord: that that slave, etc. Ἐκεῖνος, though placed first for emphasis, does not refer to the single concrete person indicated at ver. 45, but is a general term indicating the class to which the οἶκονόμος also belongs; and δεί carries on the meaning with an explanatory force (Hermann, ad Viger. p. 845; Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 1. 1). — εαυτοῦ of his own Lord, makes the responsibility to be felt the more strongly. — έτοιμάσας εαυτόν is not to be supplied (Luther, Kuinoel, and many others), but: and has not made ready, has made no preparation. Comp. ix. 52. It belongs also to τοῦ θέλ. αὐτοῦ. — δαρήσεται πολλάς πληγᾶς δῆλονότι (see Schaefer, ad Bos. Ell. p. 387; Valkenaer, Schol. p. 214; Winer, p. 520 [E. Such a one cannot be left without punishment, not because he has not obeyed the Lord's will (for that has remained unknown to him), but because he has done that which deserves punishment; even for such a one there is that which deserves punishment, because, in general, he had the immediate moral consciousness of his relation to his Lord as a subjective standard (comp. Rom. ii. 12 ff.), even although he did not possess the objective law of the Lord's will positively made known to him, on which account also a lighter punishment ensues. Theophylact and Euthymius Zigabenus are wrong in thinking here of such as could have learnt to know the Lord's will, but from laziness and frivolity have not learnt to know it. An arbitrary limitation; and can such an ignorance diminish the responsibility? Rom. i. 28 ff. We can the less regard the responsibility as diminished when we remember that by ὁ δὲ μὴ γνοὺς is described the case of a slave of Christ, who has remained ignorant of his Lord's will. — παντὶ δὲ κ.τ.λ.] but of every one, in order, moreover, still to add this general law as explanatory information on the subject of that so severe punishment, ver. 46, etc. — ἐδόθη πολὺ] in official duties, as to the οἰκονόμος. — πολὺ ζητήσεται] in official efficiency. The collocation of πολὺ, πολὺ, and then πολὺ, περισσότερον, has a special emphasis. — The second member ὁ παρέθευτο (the categoric plural, as at ver. 20: in reality κύριος is the subject) κ.τ.λ. is a parallel similar in meaning to the first, but with the climax: περισσότερον, which is not to be taken as: “plus quam aliis, quibus non tam multa concredita sunt” (Kuinoel, Bleek, following Beza, Grotius, and others, which would be insipid, and a mere matter of course), but: in the case of him to whom much has been entrusted (with whom a large sum has been deposited), still more than this entrusted πολὺ will be required of him. In this statement is implied the presupposition that the capital sum must have been increased by interest of exchange or by profit of commerce. Comp. Matt. xxv. 15 ff. The deposit was not to lie idle. On παρατίθεσθαι, comp. Herod. vi. 86; Xen. R. Ath. ii. 16; Polybius, iii. 17, 10, xxxiii. 12. 3; Tob. i. 14; 1 Macc. ix. 35. The construction in both members is a well-known form of attraction, Kühner, II. p. 512; Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 247 [E. T. 288].

Ver. 49 f. The sequence of thought is found in this, that the whole of that earnest sense of responsibility, which characterizes the faithfulness just demanded, must be only infinitely intensified by the heavy trials of the near future, which the Lord brings vividly before His view. — πῦρ] Fire, is a figurative designation, not of the Holy Spirit, as most of the Fathers and others, including Bengel, will have it, nor of the word of God with its purifying power (Bleek); but, as is manifest from ver. 51 ff., of the vehement spiritual excitement, forcing its way through all earthly relations, and loosing their closest ties, which Christ was destined to kindle. The lighting up of this fire, which by means of His teaching and work He had already prepared, was to be effected by His death (see ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν, ver. 52), which became the subject of offence, as, on the other hand, of His divine courage of faith and life (comp.
ii. 35). The expression itself βαλέω επὶ τ. γῆν proceeded from the consciousness of His heavenly origin. Comp. Matt. x. 34. — καὶ τι θέλω κ.τ.λ.] It is the usual and the correct view, held also by Kuinoel, Olshausen, de Wette, Bleek, which interprets: and how earnestly I wish, if (that) it were already kindled! ἐπιστευόμενη γὰρ τὴν ἀνάφωμα τοῦτον τοῦ πυρός, Theophylact. Regarding the τι, see on Matt. vii. 14. Moreover, the usus loquendi of εἰ with θέλω (instead of the more confident ὡς, as with θαυμάζω, etc.; see on Mark xv. 44) is not to be disputed. See Ecclus. xxiii. 14: θελήσεις εἰ μὴ ἐγεννηθῆς; Herod. ix. 14, also vi. 52: βουλομένην δὲ εἰ κως ἀμφότεροι γενοῖτο βασιλεῖς. Accordingly, there is no sufficient reason for the view of Grotius, which disjoins the utterance into question and answer: And what do I wish? If it should be already kindled! This is less simple, and fails to bring out the correspondence between the expression in question and the parallel exclamation in ver. 50. The particle εἰ is used not merely with the optative (see Pflugk, ad Eur. Hev. 836), but also with the indicative in the imperfect and aorist in the sense of utinam, dummodo; in the latter case the non-accomplishment is known to the person who utters the wish. Comp. xix. 42; Josh. vii. 7; Grotius in loc.; Klotz, ad Devar. p. 516; in the Greek prose writers it is usual to find εἰθε or εἰ γὰρ in such a sense. Bornemann takes τι for εὑρ, and εἰ as ἐπεί: “et eur ignem volo in terram conjicere, cum jam accensus sit? remota quaestione: non opus est accendam.” But without considering the extremely insipid thought which is thus expressed, ver. 52 in this way requires that the kindling of the fire should be regarded as still future. This, moreover, is in opposition to Ewald: and what will I (can I be surprised), if it be already kindled? — Jesus entertains the wish that the fire were already kindled, because between the present time and this kindling lay His approaching grievous passion, which must still first be undergone; see ver. 50.

Ver. 50. δὲ] places in face of the εἰ ἡδη ἀνήφθη! just wished for, what is still to happen first: But I have a baptism to be baptized with. This baptism is His deep passion awaiting Him, into which He is to be plunged (comp. on Mark x. 38); and He has this baptism as the destiny ordained for Him, and consequently appropriated to Him. — καὶ πῶς συνέχομαι κ.τ.λ.] and how am I distressed (comp. viii. 37; Dem. 1484. 23, 1472. 18) till the time that it shall be accomplished! A true and vivid expression of human shrinking at the presentment of the agonies that were imminent, similar to what we find in Gethsemane and at John xii. 27. It was a misapprehension of the human feeling of Jesus and of the whole tenor of the context, to make out of συνέχομαι an urgency of longing (ὡσανεὶ ἀγωνιῶ διὰ τὴν βραδυτήτα, Euthymius Zigabenus, comp. Theophylact). So also de Wette and Bleek, who wrongly appeal to Phil. i. 23. See on the passage, also on 2 Cor. v. 14. Jesus does not long for and hasten to death, but He submits Himself to and obeys the counsel of God (comp. John xii. 27; Phil. ii. 8; Rom. v. 19, and elsewhere), when His hour is come (John xiii. 1 and elsewhere). Ewald takes the question as making in sense a negative assertion: I must not make myself anxious (comp. on πῶς, ver. 56), I must in all patience allow this worst suffering to befall me. This agrees with Ewald’s view of τί θ’λω κ.τ.λ., ver. 49; but, according to our view, it does not correspond with the parallelism. And Jesus actually experienced anguish of heart (comp. 2 Cor. ii. 4, συνοχη καρδίας) at the thought of His passion, without detracting from His patience and submissiveness.

See on Matt. x. 34 f., where the representation is partly simplified, partly, on the model of Mic. vii. 6, enriched.—ἀλλ’ ἡ] but only, originated from ἄλλο and ἡ, without, however, its being required to write ἄλλ’ ἡ. Comp. xxii. 69. — In ver. 53 are three hostile couples; the description therefore is different from that at ver. 52, not a more detailed statement of the circumstances mentioned in ver. 52 (Bleek).

Vv. 54–56. See on Matt. xvi. 2 f. The reason of those hostile separations, spoken of in ver. 52 f., lay, on the part of the people in whose bosom they were sure to arise, in the mistaking of the Messianic period as such. Hence the rebuke that now follows is addressed to the people; it is otherwise in the historical connection that appears in Matthew. Still the significant saying, in different forms, may have been uttered on two different occasions. — τὴν νεφέλην] the cloud, which shows itself. — ἀπὸ δυσμ. therefore from the region of the sea. Comp. 1 Kings viii. 44, and see Robinson, Pal. Not unsuitable as an address to the people (de Wette), but it has in view among the people, especially through pharisaical influence (xii. 1), the untrue nature (the ὑπόκρισις) which, as such, made them blind to the signs of the times! — τὸν δὲ καἰρὸν τούτον] but this season, the phenomena of which so unmistakeably present to you the nearness of the Messiah's kingdom (and Jesus Himself as the Messiah), how is it possible that ye should leave it so unexamined?

Vv. 57-59. See on Matt. v. 25 f. Pott (de natura . . . orat. mont. p. 13), Kuinoel, de Wette refuse to acknowledge any connection (comp. Euthymius Zigabenus: ἐφ' ἐπερον μετέβη λόγον), and assume a mistaken reminiscence, suggested by the affinity of δοκιμάζειν and κρίνειν. But Luke did not weave together the discourses of Jesus in so thoughtless a manner. The train of thought, even although the connection is less clear and appropriate, is as follows: As, however, it turns to your reproach that ye do not rightly estimate the present time, so not less also is it your reproach that ye do not of your own selves judge what is duty. Jesus refers to the duty of repentance which is still seasonable, and by means of the rhetorical figure metaschematismus—since He pictures repentance as an agreement with an adversary who has a pecuniary claim to make, but by this adversary He means (not the devil, Euthymius Zigabenus, nor the poor, Michaelis; but) God, to whom man is a debtor—He represents this duty of repentance as still seasonable, in order not to incur the divine punishment, like the accused person who still seasonably comes to terms with his creditor. — καὶ ἂφ’ ἐαυτῶν] even of yourselves, even of your own independent judgment. Comp. Bengel: "sine signis et citra considerationem hujus temporis." These words indicate the progressive advance of the discourse. Comp. on xxi. 30. — Ver. 58. γάρ] explanatory. — ὥσ] is the simple sicuti: As thou, namely, art in the act of going away with thine adversary to an archon (in correspondence with this condition of time and circumstance), give diligence on the way, etc.; while you are still on the way, before it is too late, make the attempt, that may avert the danger. ὑπάγεις has the emphasis (comp. subsequently ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ); so close is the time of decision! Both the ἄρχου and the κριτῆς must be considered as local magistrates (κριτῆς not as an assessor of the Sanhedrim, with which κατασύρῃ is not in accord, for this certainly cannot be taken as a dragging to Jerusalem). Comp. κρίσει, Matt. v. 21, and the remark thereafter. By one of the archons, i.e. of the chief city officials, who, namely, is a competent person in matters of debt, the accused is recognised as liable to pay, and in default of payment the κριτῆς, who happens to be subordinate to the ἄρχου, orders compulsion to be used. For the rest, this handing over from one official to another belongs to the details of civic procedure, without being intended for special interpretation. — δός ἐργασίαν] da operam, a Latin idiom, probably taken from the common speech, Hermogenes, de Invent. iii. 5. 7; Salmasius and Tittmann (Synon. p. 102), following Theophylact, erroneously interpret: give interest. This is not the meaning of ἐργασία, and the Israelites were forbidden to take interest from one another (Michaelis, Mos. R. § 154 f.; Saalschütz, M. R. pp. 184, 278, 857). — ἀπειλεῖ άλόη σαίν ἀπ’ αὐτοῦ] in order to be delivered from him, Xen. Anab. vii. 1. 4; Plat. Legg. ix. p. 868 D; Josephus, Antt. x. 6. 2, and elsewhere. The genitive might also stand alone, Thuc. iii. 63; Dem. 11. 16, 237. 14, and elsewhere, and the passages in Kypke and Loesner. Settlement is to be conceived of as obtained by payment or by arrangement. Comp. Dem. 34. 22. — ὁ πράκτωρ] exactor, collector, bailiff. In Athens the collector of the court fees and fines was so called (Böckh, Staatshaush. I. pp. 167, 403; Hermann, Staatsalterth. § 151. 3). The πράκτωρ also is part of the imagery, without contemplating thereby any special interpretation (otherwise, the angels would have to be understood, Matt. xiii. 41 f.). — τὸ ἐσχήλειαν τῆς κοιλιάς] (Mark xii. 42): to wit, of the debt sued for. But this terminus in the punitive condition depicted (in the Gehenna) is never attained. Comp. on Matt. xviii. 34.
CHAPTER XIII.

Vv. 3 and 5. The evidence in the two verses is so divided between μετανόητε (Elz.) and μετανοήσητε (Lach.), as also between ὅσαυτως and ὅμοιος (Lachm. has in both places ὅμοιος, which Elz. reads only in ver. 5), that it affords us no means of decision. Tisch. reads in ver. 3, μετανόητε ... ὅμοιος, but in ver. 5, μετανοήσητε ... ὅσαυτως. It is certain that the one passage was changed in accordance with the other,—most probably ver. 5 in accordance with ver. 3, and that consequently both passages are not, as by Lachm., to be read alike, because in that case no reason would have been suggested for the variation. — Ver. 4. Instead of ὅτι Lachm. and Tisch. have, on preponderating evidence, ἀυτοί. The Recepta is a frequent alteration. — Ver. 6. The arrangement περιτευμ. εἰ τ. ἀμώτ. αὐτ. (Lachm. Tisch.) is preponderatingly attested, and still more strongly is ἐπτών καρπ. (Elz. has καρπ. ἦς). — Ver. 7. After ἐτη Tisch. has ἂφ ὅ, following B D L T^5 ἅ, al. Rightly; it was passed over because it could be dispensed with. — Ver. 8. Elz. has ζωπριαν. But decisive authorities have κυπτριαν. The feminine form was more common from its use in the LXX. — Ver. 11. ἦσ] is wanting after γυνή in B L T^5 ἅ, min. vss. Lachm. Tisch. Rightly; ταύταις occurred readily to the transcribers; comp. on ver. 4. — Ver. 15. Instead of ὑποκρίτα (Elz.), ὑποκρίται is rightly approved by Griesb., and adopted by Lachm. and Tisch., in accordance with considerably preponderating evidence. The singular was introduced in accordance with the foregoing αὐτῷ. In the previous clause instead of ὅν read ὁ, with Lachm. and Tisch., in accordance with B D L ἅ, min. Syr. Copt. Sahid. Vulg. It. This ὁ easily dropped out after the last syllable of ἄσικριτη (thus still in one cod. of It.), and the connection that was thus broken was wrongly restored in some authorities by ὅν, in others by καί (16, Aeth.). — On the other hand, in ver. 18, instead of ὁ we are to adopt ὅν with Tisch., following B L ἅ, min. Vulg. It. al., the reference of which was not understood. — Ver. 19. μέγα is wanting in B D L T5 S, 251, vss. Ambr. Suspected by Griesb., bracketed by Lachm. [omitted by Tisch. 8]. Omitted in accordance with Matt. xiii. 32. — Ver. 24. \(\piυλν\) Griesb. Lachm. Tisch. have \(\deltaπατ\). The Recepta is from Matt. vii. 13. — Ver. 25. We are here to read \(κύριο\) only once, with Tisch., following B L S, 157, Copt. Sahid. Vulg. It. Sax. The repetition is from Matt. xxv. 11. — Ver. 31. \(νυμέρα\] Tisch. has \(ωρα\), which is so weightily attested by A B* D L R X S, min., and is so frequent in Luke, that \(νυμέρα\) appears as having come in by means of the subsequent numeration of days. — Ver. 32. \(επιπέλα\] Lachm. and Tisch. have \(\alphaποτελέ\), in accordance with B L S, 33, 124, to which also D is associated by \(\alphaποτελε\).—it was displaced by the more familiar word \(επιπέλα\). — Ver. 35. After \(νυμέ\) Elz. has \(ερημο\), in opposition to preponderating evidence. An exegetical addition in this place and at Matt. xxiii. 38. — \(εω\) this \(εω\) is wanting in B D K L R, min., in accordance with Matt. xxiii. 39. — \(\alphaπο\] Lachm. and Tisch. have \(\alphaπο\), in accordance with A D V Δ Λ, min. The weight of these authorities is all the more considerable in this place that B L M R X S have not \(\alphaπο\ \deltaτ\) at all, which omission occurred in accordance with Matthew.

Vv. 1–9. Peculiar to Luke,1 from the source of his account of the journey. At the same moment (when Jesus had spoken the foregoing discourse) there were some there with the news (\(\piαρη\) \(\tauιν\) \(\alphaπαγγέ\)\(\lambda\)\(\nu\)\(τ\)\(e\)\(s\), Diod. Sic. xvii. 8) of the Galileans (\(\tauι\) \(\Gammaα\)λλ. indicates by the article that their fate was known) whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices. This expression is a tragically vivid representation of the thought: "whom Pilate caused to be put to death while

1 The narrative, vv. 1–5 (also vv. 6–9), was not found, according to Epiphanius and Tertullian, in the text of Marcion. This omission is certainly not to be regarded as intentional, or proceeding from dogmatic motives, but yet it is not to be explained by the supposition that the fragment did not originally appear in Luke (Baur, Markusevang. p. 195 f.). It bears in itself so clearly the stamp of primitive originality that Ewald, p. 292, is able to ascribe it to the oldest evangelical source, Köstlin, p. 231, to a Jewish local source. In opposition to Volkmar's attempt (p. 102 f.) to prove the omission in Marcion as having been dogmatically occasioned (comp. also Zeller, Apostelg. p. 21), see H.igenfeld in the Theol. Jahrb. 1853, p. 224 f. Yet even Köstlin, p. 304, seeks dogmatically to account for the omission by Marcion, on assumptions, indeed, in accordance with which Marcion would have been obliged to strike out no one can tell how much more.
engaged in their sacrifices." See similar passages in Wetstein. That the communication was made with evil intention to represent the murdered people as special sinners (Lange), is a hasty inference from the answer of Jesus. — μετὰ τῶν θυσιῶν αὐτ. not instead of μετὰ τῶν αἵματος τῶν θυσ. αὐτ., which abbreviation, although in itself allowable, would here be arbitrarily assumed; but we may regard the people as actually engaged in the slaughter or cutting up, or in otherwise working with their sacrifice at the altar (in the outer court) (Saalschütz, M. R. p. 318), in which they were struck down or stabbed, so that their blood streamed forth on their offering. — The incident itself, which the vh who had arrived mention as a novelty, is not otherwise known to us. Josephus, Antt. xviii. 5, is speaking of the Samaritans, and what he says belongs to a later date (in opposition to Beza). To think of followers of Judas the Gaulonite (Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Grotius, and others) is arbitrary; but the conjecture that they were enthusiastic devotees of Jesus (Lange) is preposterous, because it does not agree with the subsequent explanation of the Lord. Probably they had made themselves suspected or guilty of (secret) sedition, to which the Galileans were extremely prone (Joseph. Antt. xvii. 9. 3; Wetstein on the passage; see especially Rettig in the Stud. und Kritik. 1838, p. 980 f.). It is possible also that in the tumult that arose on account of the aqueduct built by Pilate (Joseph. Antt. xviii. 3. 2) they also had been drawn in (Ewald, Gesch. Chr. p. 40), with which building, moreover, might be connected the falling of the tower, ver. 4.

Vv. 2, 3. Jesus makes use of this news by way of warning, and to stir them up to repentance. He points to the slaughter of those people as an example of the divine punishment, which teaches not that the persons concerned are the most deserving of punishment, but that punishment, if carried into effect against individuals, must fall upon all (to wit, the whole class, so that in the application the Messianic punishment of eternal ιπώλεια is intended¹) if they should not have repented. — παρά] more than; see Bernhardy, p. 259; Buttmann, Neut.

Vv. 4, 5. Likewise historically unknown. — ὁ πύργος] the well-known tower. What sort of a one it was is altogether uncertain; perhaps a tower of the town-walls (Joseph. Bell. v. 4. 2), so that the spring of Siloah is here meant (Joseph. l.c. says of the walls of the ancient city, πρὸς νότου ὑπὲρ τὴν Σιλωάμ ἐπιστρέφου πηγήν). Vv. 6—9. Vv. 18–20. Comp. on Matt. xiii. 31–33; Mark iv. 31 f. — ἔλεγη οὖν] does not introduce the parables which follow in an indefinite and random manner (Strauss, I. p. 626; comp. de Wette and Holtzmann), which is erroneously inferred from ver. 17 regarded as a closing remark, and denies to Luke even the commonest skill in the management of his materials; but after the conclusion of the preceding incident (ver. 17) Jesus, in consequence (οὖν, see the critical remarks) of the joy manifested by the people, sees Himself justified in conceiving the fairest hopes on behalf of the Messianic kingdom, and these He gives utterance to in these parables. This is how we find it in Luke; and his mode of connecting them with the context is so consistent with the facts, that from this quarter there is no opposition to our assuming as original in this place what, if not an exact repetition of the two parables already spoken at Matt. xiii. and Mark iv., was at least an express reference to them. Even in the source of his narrative of the journey from which Luke draws from ix. 51 onwards, they might have been connected with the foregoing section, vv. 10–17.—Ver. 19. εἰς κήπον ἑαυτοῦ] into a garden belonging to himself, where it was protected, where he could observe and foster it, etc.—Ver. 20. πάλιν] once more; for the question of ver. 18 is repeated.

Ver. 23. This questioner was certainly a confessor of Jesus, ver. 24 ff. There is nothing besides this that we can define more precisely, except that the question itself might be called forth by the stringency of the claims of Jesus. — As to εἰ,¹ see on Matt. xii. 10.

¹That in direct questions εἰ should be used as the recitative εἰ, which would have to be explained by a transition of the oratio obliqua into the oratio directa, even after the learned investigation of Lipsius, Paulin. Rechtfertigunglehre, 1853, p. 30 ff., I must doubt, since we should find this use of εἰ much more
Ver. 24. Πρὸς αὐτοὺς] refers to those who were present, of whom the questioner was one. Jesus, giving after His manner a practical application to the theoretical question, answers not directly, but by means of the admonition: Strive to enter in (to the Messiah’s kingdom, to which that question referred, conceived of as a house) by the narrow door, since many in vain shall attempt to enter. Therein is implied: “Instead of concerning yourselves with the question whether they who attain to salvation are only few, reflect rather that many shall not attain it, and set out therefore on the right road to attaining it.” — διὰ τῆς στενῆς θύρας] (see the critical remarks) reminds us of a house which has, besides the usual door, also a distinct small one, and only by means of this is admission possible: so the attainment of salvation is possible only by means of the μετάνοια. The figurative representation, which Jesus has already made use of in the Sermon on the Mount, Matt. vii. 13, is here repeated and modified; the simple διὰ τῆς στεν. θύρα, without any more definite explanation (comp., on the other hand, Matt. l.c.), bears the stamp of a reference to something already previously propounded (in opposition to de Wette, Weiss, and others, who are in doubt as to the originality of the saying in this place). — ξητήσουσιν] weaker than ἀγωνιζόμεθα. — εἰσελθεῖν] in general; διὰ τῆς στενῆς θύρας is not repeated. — κ. οὐκ ἰσχύσουσιν] because they omit ἀγωνιζόμεθα εἰσελθεῖν διὰ τῆς στενῆς θύρας, i.e. they have not repented.

frequently elsewhere, and since in the isolated places where it occurs it is just the meaning of the doubtful question (whether indeed?) which is very appropriate (Matt. xii. 10, xix. 3; Luke xiii. 23, xxii. 49; Acts i. 6, vii. 1, xix. 2, xxii, 37, xxii. 25). On the classical beginnings of this usage, nothing likewise is to be decided other than on the New Testament usage, to wit, with Ast, Lex. Plat. 1. p. 601: “Dubitanter interrogat, ita ut interrogatio videatur directa esse.”

1 Down to ver. 29 we have a series of reminiscences of very varied discourses linked together in Luke’s source of the journey, which are found in several portions of Matthew taken from the Logia.
υποδεχόμενον (at the repast, ver. 29) τοὺς φίλους αὐτοῦ (rather his family; see subsequently on τῶθεν), ἔτα ἐγειρόμενον κ. ἀποκλείοντα τὴν θύραν τοῦ ἀίκου αὐτοῦ, κ. μὴ συγχωροῦντα τοῖς ἀλλοις εἰσέλθειν, Euthymius Zigabenus. The construction is such that the apodosis begins with τότε, ver. 26 (Bengel, Bornemann), and continues down to ἀδικίας, ver. 27, in accordance with which the punctuation should be adjusted. The apodosis does not begin as early as καὶ ἀποκριθεῖς, ver. 25 (the usual mode of punctuation), so that with ver. 26 a new sentence would begin; for the former καὶ, which would not be a sign of the apodosis (de Wette), but would mean also, would be superfluous and confusing, whereas τότε presents itself, according to a usage known to every one (v. 35, xxi. 20, and elsewhere), of itself, and according to the meaning, as the division of the sentence. It is according to the meaning, for thus the apodosis brings out the principal point, namely, the urging of the relation of external connection and (observe only the continuation of the apodosis through ver. 27) its fruitlessness. Lachmann (following Beza) connects ἄφ' οὗ . . . ἀνοίξου ήμίν (after which he places a full stop) with καὶ οὐκ ἵσχύσονσιν, ver. 24. Schegg follows him. But opposed to this is the second person ἀρξησθε, which is not in accordance with ἵσχύσουσιν, but carries forward the address that began with ἄγωνιζεσθε. Ewald conceives the apodosis as beginning as early as καὶ ἀρξησθε, ver. 25, but in such a manner that this apodosis is transformed into a second protasis. The harshness of this supposition is increased still more by the fact that if we read ἀρξησθε, ver. 26, the force of the protasis must come up anew with the repetition of the sound.1 — καὶ ἀρξησθε] can only arbitrarily be limited to κροιένω, as though it ran ἀρξ. ἐξω ἐστῶτες κροιένω (Fritzsche, ad Matth. p. 541). It refers to both the infinitives. The people have begun the persistent standing there and knocking, in respect of which they say: Lord, open to us; then the master of the house answers that he knows them not (Matt. xxv. 12), etc.; next, they begin to

It was not original, so that the canonical reading cannot be said to have been introduced in accordance with Matt. i.e., or in opposition to Marcion's views (Hilgenfeld, Baur). — ἐκβαλλομ. ἔξω] agrees with the figure, although the persons concerned are not admitted at all; for they are members of the family, and as such, i.e. as originally belonging to the theocratic community of the patriarchs and prophets, they are by their rejection practically ἐκβαλλόμενοι ἔξω. The present tense is justifiable, since the ὁρῶν κ.τ.λ. at the time of the ἐσταὶ ἡ κλαυθμός will be already past. Hence: if ye shall have seen yourselves as such, become (not are) the cast out. After they shall have seen this measure carried out, they shall be in hell, where there shall be weeping, etc.

Ver. 31 ff. as far as ver. 33 peculiar to Luke from the source of his narrative of the journey. — According to xvii. 11, the incident occurred in Galilee, with which ix. 51 ff. (see on the passage) is not inconsistent. — That the Pharisees did not merely give out on pretence their statement in reference to Antipas (Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Maldonatus, and others, including Olshausen and Ebrard), but actually had instructions from him, because he himself wished to be rid of the dreaded miracle-worker (ix. 7, 9) out of his dominions, is plain from τῇ ἀλώπεκῃ ταύτῃ, ver. 32, whereby is declared His penetration of the subtle cunning1 of Herod (not of the Pharisees); in the contrary case, Jesus would have had no ground for characterizing him just as He did, and that too in the consciousness of His higher prophetic and regal dignity. But that Herod used even the enemies of Jesus for this purpose was not unwisely calculated, because he could rely upon them, since they also, on their part, must be glad to see Him removed out of their district, and because the cunning of the Pharisees for the execution of such like purposes was at all events better known to him than were the frequent exposures which they had experienced at the hands of Jesus. Ver. 32. Ἑδοῦ, ἐκβάλλω ... τελειώμαι] Behold, I cast out demons, and I accomplish cures to-day and to-morrow, and on the third day I come to an end; to wit, not in general with my work, with my course (Acts xx. 24), or the like, but, according to the context, with these castings out and cures. A definitely appropriate answer, frank and free, in opposition to timid cunning. To-day and to-morrow I allow myself not to be disturbed in my work here in the land of Herod, but prosecute it without hindrance till the day after to-morrow, when I come to a conclusion with it. Jesus, however, mentions precisely His miraculous working, not His teaching, because He knew that the former, but not the latter, had excited the apprehension of Herod. — τελειώμαι] (the present of the certain future, not the Attic future) might be the middle (Jamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 158); but in all the passages of the New

1 As a type of cunning and knavery, the epithet ἕξ is so generally frequent, and this figure is here so appropriate, that it appears quite groundless for Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 1, p. 315, to suppose that by the fox is meant the destroyer of the vineyard (comp. Cant. ii. 15). References to the Song of Songs are not in general to be discerned anywhere in the New Testament, comp. on John iii. 29.
Testament, and, as a rule, among the Greek writers, τελειο-σθαι is passive. So also here; comp. Vulg. It.: consumm. τελειον means ad finem perducere, the passive τελειοδοθαι ad finem pervenire. Hence: I come to a conclusion, I have done; with what? the context shows, see above. Against the explanation of the end of life, so that the meaning would amount to morior (Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Beza, Calvin, Grotius, Bengel, Kypke, and many others; comp. also Neander, Baumgarten-Crusius, Schegg, Bisping, Linder in the Stud. u. Krit. 1862, p. 564), are decisive even the statements of the days which, in their definiteness,^ could not be taken (as even Kuinoel, Ewald, and others will have them) proverbially (σήμερον κ. αύρ.: per breve tempus, and τῆς τρίτης: paulo post; comp. Hos. vi. 2), as also πορεύεσθαι, ver. 33. Just as little reason is there for seeing prefigured in the three days, the three years of the official ministry of Jesus (Weizsäcker, p. 312).

Ver. 33. Nevertheless (although I am not, through your advice, disconcerted in that three days' ministry) the necessity still lies before me, to-day and to-morrow and the next day, to obey your πορεύου ἐντεῦθεν, since it is not allowable that a prophet, etc. Jesus means to say, "Nevertheless it cannot at all be otherwise than that I should conjoin with this work, which is still to be done to-day and to-morrow and the next day, the departure from Galilee, since I shall not perish in Galilee, as Herod threatens, but in order to perish must proceed to Jerusalem, which after all has the monopoly, that a prophet must not be slain out of it." In the answer, which as looking approaching death in the face at once boldly contemns the threatening of the timid prince, are accordingly involved the three positions—(1) I have undertaken to labour three days more in Galilee, and in that undertaking I will not be disconcerted; (2) nevertheless, I must in these three days contrive my departure from Galilee;^ and wherefore this? in

1 E.g. the expression is different in Dem. De Cor. § 195: μία ἡμέρα καὶ δύο καὶ τρίτη. See Dissen on the passage, p. 362.
2 The inference is not here to be drawn (so Wieseler, Synopse, p. 321) that Jesus was still distant three days' journey from the end of His expedition order to escape the death with which Herod threatens me? No; (3) I must do this because I must not in Galilee—not outside of Jerusalem, but just in that place of the murder of prophets—die; and therefore must make for Jerusalem.\(^1\)—πορεύεσθαι depart, ver. 31. It is not in contradiction with ver. 22, for while travelling Jesus was accustomed to cast out demons, and to perform cures. If He wished to do the latter, He could at the same time do the former. Most of the commentators (even Grotius, Kuinoel, Olshausen) are grammatically and contextually wrong (see ver. 31) in the explanation: travel about undisturbed in my occupations. When others, following Syr., limit πορεύεσθαι merely to τῇ ἐχομένη, interpreting it either as to depart (Theophylact, Casaubon) or to die (Euthymius Zigabenus, Elsner), they supply (comp. also Neander) after αὐριον a thought such as ἐργάζεσθαι or ἐνεργῆσαι à eἰπον. This is indeed to make the impossible possible!—οὖκ ἐνδεχεται it cannot be done, it is not possible (2 Macc. xi. 18, and see Stallbaum, ad Plat. Rep. vi. p. 501 C), with ironically excited emotion makes the frequent and usual hyperbolically to appear as necessary (for all the prophets were not actually slain in Jerusalem, as is shown even in the instance of the Baptist) for the purpose of showing how empty the threatening of Herod appears to Jesus, since He must rather go to Jerusalem to die. The opinion (Grotius, Drusius, Knatchbull, Lightfoot, Wolf, and others) that He

\(^1\) Schleiermacher is wrong in assuming (Schr. d. Luk. p. 195) that Jesus means to say that He must still abide two days in the place, and then for two days more journey quietly, etc. In ver. 33 they are indeed the same days as in ver. 32. De Wette considers the saying as unimportant,—that it is probably incorrectly reported; and Holtzmann finds the section so obscure that on that account Matthew omitted it. According to Baur, Jesus marks out the περίπολος, the progress on His journey never to be interrupted as His proper task, which would be in harmony with the Pauline character of the Gospel. With this conflicts the statement giving the reason ἵνα ὕπνοι ἴδοιται κ.τ.λ. Bleek conjectures that εἷμι x. αὕρα καί was introduced from ver. 32 by a transcriber's error at an early period.
refers to the right belonging exclusively to the Sanhedrim of judging prophets and condemning them to death (Sanhedr. f. 2. 1, f. 89. 1, and elsewhere) is mistaken, since the matter here in question is of the actual ἀπολέσθαι, and since Jesus could not place Himself on a level with those who were condemned as false prophets. Comp. Winer in Zimmerman's Monatsschr. II. 3, p. 206.

Vv. 34, 35. See on Matt. xxiii. 37 ff. The original place of this exclamation is in Matthew (in opposition to Olshausen, Wieseler, Holtzmann, and others), although the connection in which Luke gives it from his source of the journey is not to be called inappropriate (in opposition to Schleiermacher, de Wette, Bleek). The painful reminder and announcement appears on the part of Jesus natural enough after ver. 33, and in the face of the theocratic hypocrites, ver. 35 is a striking dismissal. — τὴν έαυτῆς νησίδαν] her own nest, namely, with the chickens therein, her own brood. But Schenkel, in opposition to all the evangelical notices, conjectures that during His supposed single sojourn in Judea (where He now is) He was oftener in Jerusalem. According to Keim (D. geschichtl. Chr. p. 34), Luke must at least have understood all the Jews as the children of Jerusalem, which, however, according to the context (vv. 33, 35), is not correct. of threatening. It refers to the Parousia (see already Theophylact), and the train of thought is: “The divine protection departs from your city (ἁφεται ὑμῖν ὁ θεός ὑμ., see on Matt. xxiii. 38), and in this abandonment I shall not appear to you as a helper, —ye shall not see me until I come to the establishment of my kingdom, and shall receive your (then no further to be withheld) homage as the Messiah.” The meaning is somewhat different from what it is in Matthew. Observe, namely—(1) that Luke has not the ἀπάρτι of Matthew (and, moreover, could not have it, since he has the saying before the festal entry); (2) that, therefore, in Luke the time of the οὐ μὴ με ἵδητε must be the duration of the previously declared abandonment; (3) that instead of λέγω γάρ (Matt.) Luke places λέγω δὲ, which δὲ is not to be taken as explanatory, in the sense of γάρ (because it is not followed by ἀπάρτι as in Matthew), but as in continuation, autem, as an advance towards a new point in the announcement: “Ye shall be abandoned, but how long? abandoned even till my Parousia.” Comp. the expression ξητήσετε με κ. οὖν εὑρήσετε in John vii. 34: the restoration of Israel, so that by ἕως κ.τ.λ. would be meant the conversion of the people (Hofmann, Schriftb. Vv. 12—14. Doubtless the collocation of the company at table suggested these words, which likewise are meant not probably as an actual table arrangement, but parabolically, as a foil to the customary teaching, that instead of arranging the manifestations of human friendliness with a view to receiving a return, we should make such manifestations just to those who cannot repay them again; then shall we receive requital in the kingdom of the Messiah. At the root of this lies the idea that the temporal requital striven after excludes the Messianic compensation, the idea of the ἀπέχειν τὸν μισθὸν (Matt. vi. 2, v. 16). There is no allusion in this place to the

The Jewish doctrine of a double resurrection is confirmed not only by Paul (1 Cor. xv. 22 f.; 1 Thess. iv. 16; comp. Acts xxiv. 15), but also in this place by Christ (comp. also Matt. xxiv. 31). Comp. xx. 34–36. Otherwise τῶν δικαίων would be a superfluous and unmeaning addition.¹ Moreover, it could not be taken by the pharisaic hearers in any other sense than in the particularistic one, but not in such a manner as that Jesus, because He had the δικαιοῦσ direct in view, only mentioned the resurrection of these, without thereby excluding that of the remaining people as contemporary (in opposition to Kaeufer, De ζωῆς αἰων. not. p. 52). The doctrine of the millennial kingdom between the first and second resurrection adopted in the Apocalypse (Bertholdt, Christol. § 38) is not, however, confirmed, nor are the Rabbinical traditions, partly varying very much among themselves on the several stages of the resurrection (Eisenmenger, Entdeckt. Judenth. II. p. 901 ff.); further, the assumption is not confirmed, according to which the Israelites in themselves were understood as the δικαιοῦσ who should first arise (Bertholdt, § 35; Eisenmenger, II. p. 902), or at least the righteous among the Israelites (Eisenmenger, l.c.). Jesus means the righteous in the moral sense, as the context shows (see vv. 13 f., 16 ff.), without limitation of race. The specific definition of the idea of those first to be awakened as οἱ τοῦ Χριστοῦ (1 Cor. xv. 23; comp. 1 Thess. iv. 16) lay of necessity in the development of the Christian consciousness of the δικαιοσύνη only to be attained in Christ.

Ver. 15. To the idea of the ἀνάστασις τῶν δικαίων is very naturally linked in the case of this fellow-guest the thought of the future eating (φάγεται, future) with the patriarchs of the nation (Matt. viii. 11; Luke xiii. 28 f.; Bertholdt, Christol. § 39) in the (millennial) Messianic kingdom about to be set up. This transporting prospect, in which his mistaken security is manifested, compels his exclamation.

Vv. 16, 17. Jesus answers with a parable which comes from the source of the account of the journey (not identical, but similar is Matt. xxii. 1 ff., see in loc.), in which He keeps to the idea of a banquet, and thereby depicts the Messianic blessedness, but without reserve cuts off the prospect of that guest in reference to it and its like by teaching figuratively that they, the representatives of the theocracy, would deprive themselves of the Messianic salvation (ver. 24), because for the sake of their earthly objects of ambition they despised the repeated invitation to the Messianic kingdom (vv. 17–20). On the other hand, the poor and the unfortunate of the people (ver. 21), and even the heathen (ver. 23), are called, and being obedient to the call are adopted into the kingdom. "Progreditur vocatio ad remotiores, vi semper majore pensans moram," Bengel. — μέγαν (see the critical remarks): the masculine form δείπνος is rare (Aesop. Fragm. 129) and late. See Bast, Ep. Cr. The excuses are therefore not in themselves absurd, which, according to Lange, L. J. Here the narrative is supposed to be silent, leaving it to be understood that the servant went away again, and after fulfilment of the commission returned. But with what reason is this supposed in the narrative, otherwise so circumstantial? No; the servant, when repulsed by those who had been invited, did of his own accord what the master here directs him, so that he can say at once to this behest: it is done, etc. This point in the interpretation is, moreover, strikingly appropriate to Jesus, who, by the preaching of the gospel to the poor and miserable among the people, had already before His return to God fulfilled this divine counsel, in regard to which He did not need further instruction.—Ver. 23. This commission to the servant is fulfilled by Him through the apostles, comp. Euthymius Zigabenus, moreover, says aptly: διὰ τοῦτον οὖν τὸν λόγον ἥ δικα ἑπαραβολὴ συνετέθη. Comp. ver. 15, to the substance of which this conclusion reverts. Those who are excluded are thus those Jews who have despised the call of Christ, but who, as the representatives and chiefs of God’s people, were first of all by the gospel invited and laid under obligation to follow the invitation to the kingdom (κεκλημένοι and παρατούμενοι, ver. 17 ff.) ; not the Jews in general, as Baur supposes, in accordance with his assumption of a Gentile-Christian tendency.

Vv. 25, 26. After the meal was over, Jesus goes forward on His journey towards Jerusalem, and draws with Him much people, as they thronged everywhere in Galilee upon the marvellous teacher (xii. i, ix. 11, and elsewhere). But the nearer He is to His own painful self-surrender, the more decidedly and ideally His claims emerge. To the dependent and undecided people going with Him He addresses Himself with the claim of the perfect, most self-denying surrender required of His disciples. Comp. Matt. x. 37, where the same claim, although less ideal in form, is made, and is addressed exclusively to the apostles. Matt. x. 39), are assumed as being in opposition to fellowship with Christ (comp. xii. 53), so that, according to Matt. vi. 24, comp. Luke xvi. 3, in respect of the love of the one Lord the hatred of others must find place. — έτι δὲ καὶ] besides, also, moreover; the extreme case of all is yet added. “Saepe qui inferiorem sancti odii ¹More precise interpretations of the figures are not justified. Especially the second ought not to have been expounded, as it has often been, of the struggle against the devil (Augustine: "simplicitatem Christiani dimicaturi cum duplicitate diaboli"), to which, indeed, the peacemaking of ver. 32 would be wholly inappropriate.

Vv. 34, 35. Comp. on Matt. v. 13; Mark ix. 50. Jesus uttered the saying about salt more than once, and with differences in the details. Here He commits to His hearers by ὦ ἔχων ὅτα ἀκούειν, ἀκούέτω, the charge of themselves giving the interpretation according to what has gone before. But this interpretation depends on the fact that τὸ ἀλας must represent the preceding μον εἶναι μαθητής. Comp. ver. 27. Hence: It is therefore (εἶνε, see the critical remarks) something glorious—to wit, in respect of this all-renouncing decision which is appropriate to it—to be my disciple, and as such to effect the maintenance of the power of spiritual life among men, as salt is the means of maintaining the freshness of life in the region of nature. But if ever my disciple (through turning back to selfish interests) loses this his peculiarity, his spiritual salting power, by what means can he again attain it? Such a μαθητής is then absolutely useless, and he is excluded (at the judgment) from the Messiah's kingdom. — εἶνε δὲ καὶ] (see the critical remarks): if, however, even the salt, etc., which is no longer to be expected from this substance according to its nature. — οὐτε εἰς γῆν κ.τ.λ.] it is fitted neither for land nor for manure (to improve neither the former nor the latter). In respect of the salt that has become insipid, no other use would be conceivable than to be employed as manure, but neither immediately nor mediately is it of use for that; it is perfectly useless! Vv. 1, 2. Introduction to a new, important, and for the most part parabolic set of discourses (down to xvii. 10), which were uttered after the incidents previously narrated on the continuance of the journey (xiv. 25), and are set forth by Luke in accordance with his source of the story of the journey. After that exacting discourse, to wit, xiv. 25–35, many of the publicans and sinners at once attached themselves to Jesus (which psychologically was intelligible enough); and He was so far from rejecting them, that He even fraternized with them at table. This arouses the murmuring of the Pharisees, and thereupon He takes the opportunity of directing the discourse as far as xv. 32 to these (ver. 3), and then of addressing xvi. 1–13 to His followers; whereupon He again being specially induced (xvi. 14) discourses anew against the Pharisees (xvi. 15–31), and finally closes the scene with instructions to His disciples. — ἢγνοντες ἐγγυτ.] They were actually engaged in, busied with, drawing near to Him. The usual view: solebant accedere, is arbitrary, because in that way the connection with what precedes is needlessly abandoned. — πάντες] a hyperbole of simple narrative. It is quite general, and only with κ. συνεσθειν αὐτοῖς does any special meaning come in.

Vv. 4–7. Comp. on Matt. xviii. 12–14. But in Luke there is still the primitive freshness in the pictorial representation, nevertheless the reference and the application are different. — ἐπὶ] after, with the purpose of fetching it. See Bernhardy, p. 252. — Ver. 5. ἐπὶ τ. φῶνος ἑαυτοῦ] on his own shoulders; ἑαυτοῦ strengthens the description of the joyous solicitude which relieves the beloved creature from further running alone.— φίλονς] kinsmen, as at vii. 6.— Ver. 9. ἔσται] The future refers to every circumstance of the kind that occurs. — ἦ ἐπὶ κ.τ.λ.] As to ἦ without a preceding comparative, see on Matt. xviii. 8, and Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 309 [E. T. 360]. By the ninety and nine righteous Jesus means the legally righteous, whom He characterizes by οὐτίνς (quippe qui) οὐ χρείαν ἔχ. μετὰν. from the legal standpoint, not from that of the inner character. They need not repentance, so far as they have not swerved from the standard prescribed by the law, while in a purely moral relation their condition may be altogether different, and as a rule was altogether different (as in the case of the Pharisees). Hence, moreover, is explained the greater joy over a single sinner that repents. The eldest son in the parable of the prodigal son is distinctively and aptly described as such a righteous man, so that, in accordance with the context, an actually virtuous man (as usually) cannot be conceived of, for in that case the greater joy would have to be regarded as only an anthropopathie detail ("quia insperata aut prope desperata magis nos afficiunt," Grotius).

Vv. 8–10. The same teaching by means of a similar parable, which, however, is not found also in Matthew, yet without express repetition of the comparative joy.— συγκα-λείται] convocat sibi, describing the action more precisely than συγκαλεῖ, ver. 6. The joy of God is rendered perceptible, as He, surrounded by the angels, allows it to be recognised in the presence of them. Comp. xii. 8.

Ver. 11. Jesus Himself has very definitely declared the doctrinal contents of the two foregoing parables, vv. 7, 10. In order now by more special detail and by all the liveliness of contrast to make palpable this doctrine, and especially the growth and course of sin, the growth and course of repentance, the joy of God thereupon, and the demeanour of the legally righteous towards this joy. He adds a third parable, as distinguished and complete in its psychological delicacy and its picturesque truth in depicting human circumstances and affections as in its clear and profound insight into the divine disposition,—the pearl among the doctrinal utterances of Jesus, which are preserved to us by Luke alone, and among all parables the most beautiful and most comprehensive. The parable has nothing to do with Matt. xxi. 28–30 (in opposition to Holtzmann, p. 155), nor is it a new form of the parable of the lost sheep (Eichthal). By the youngest son Jesus denotes generally the sinner who repents, by the eldest son generally the legally righteous; not specially by the former the publicans, and by the latter the Pharisees (so also Wittichen, Idee Gottes als d. Vaters, p. 35 ff.); the application, however, of the characteristic features in question to both of these could not be mistaken any more than the application of the doctrine declared in ver. 7. The interpretation of the two sons—of the eldest by the Jews, of the youngest by the Gentiles, in accordance with the relation of both to Christianity (already Augustine, Quaest. Ev. ii. 33; Bede, and others; recently carried out in great detail, especially by Zeller in the Theol. Jahrb. 1843, p. 81 f.; Baur, ibid. 1845, p. 522 f.; Baur, d. kanon. Evang. p. 510 f.; comp. Schwiegler, Nachapost. Zeitalter, II. p. 47 f.; Ritschl, Evang. Marcions, p. 282 f.; Volkmar, Evang. Marcions, p. 66 f., 248; Hilgenfeld, Evang. p. 198; Schenkel, p. 195)—confuses the applicability of the parable with its occasion and purpose, and was in the highest degree welcome to the view which attributed to the gospel a tendential reference to later concrete conditions; but, in accordance with the occasion of the whole discourse as stated at vv. 1, 2, and in accordance with the doctrine of the same declared at vv. 7, 10, it is wholly mistaken, comp. Köstlin, p. 225 ff. It did not at all enter into the purpose of the compilation to refer to such a secondary interpretation (in opposition to Weizsäcker). Moreover, the more this parable is a triumph of the purely ethical aspect of the teaching of Jesus, and the more important it is on the side of practical Christianity, so much the more have we to guard against attaching undue significance to special points which constitute the drapery of the parable, and to details which are merely artistic (Fathers, and especially Catholic expositors down to the time of Schegg and Bisping, partially also Olshausen). Thus, for example, Augustine understood by the squandered means, the image of God; by the λυμός, the indigentia verbi veritatis; by the citizen of the far country, the devil; by the swine, the demons; by the husks, the doctrinas saeculares, etc. So, in substance, Ambrose, Jerome, and others. Diverging in certain particulars, Theophylact and Euthymius Zigabenus.

Vv. 12, 13. "O νεώτερος] νεώτερον δὲ ὁνομάζει τὸν ἀμαρτωλὸν ὡς νηπιώτερον καὶ εὐεξάπαττον, Euthymius Zigabenus. — τὸ ἐπιβάλλον μέρος] the portion falling to my share, that which belongs to me, Herod. iv. 115; Dem. 312. 2, 317. 1; Diod. Sic. xiv. 17; Polyb. xviii. 24. 1, vi. 34. 1, and elsewhere. See also Wetstein and Kypke, I. p. 289. According to the Hebrew law of inheritance, there fell to the younger son only half as much as the first-born received (Deut. xxi. 17; Michaelis, Mos. R. § 79; Saalschütz, p. 820 f.). The son asks that this his future portion of inheritance be given to him in advance. The father grants "non quod oportebat, sed quod licebat facere," Maldonatus. An agreement, according to an approximate estimate, must be presupposed. But the granting of his request is a necessary part of the parable, on account of human freedom. "Discedentes a se non prohibet, redeuntes amplexitur," Maldonatus. — δειλεὶν αὐτοῖς] to both the sons, in such wise, however, as to reserve to himself until his death the right of usufruct over the portion of the eldest, and the latter remained in his service, vv. 29–31. — τὸν βιόν] Mark xii. 44; Luke viii. 43: that whereon the family lived, i.e. nothing else than their means. Hesiod. Op. 230. 575; Herod. i. 31, viii. 51, and frequently. Paulus (comp. Michaelis) makes, without reason, a distinction between this and οὐσία, which, according to him, is the whole means, saying that the father, however, divided merely his stock of provisions, not his capital. See, on the other hand, ver. 31.
— Ver. 13. μετ’ οὐ πολλ. ἐμέρ. ] The greediness for unlimited pleasure urged him to haste. — ἀπαντά | what, namely, he had received as his portion of the inheritance, partly in natura, partly in money in settlement of what could not be taken with him. — ἀσωτως | recklessly, Dem. 1025. 19; Josephus, Antt. xii. 4. 8. Comp. on Eph. v. 18. The sinful nature is developed from an independence which, under the influence of sinful longing, shakes itself loose from God (comp. Ps. lxxiii. 27) by the satisfaction of immoral pleasure.

The divine ordinance of external misery, however, in connection with the consequences of sin, reawakens consideration and self-knowledge and the craving after God! — ἵσχυρά | (see the critical remarks) comp. on iv. 25. — κατὰ τὴν χώραν | katá of extension, throughout, as viii. 39. See Stallbaum, ad Protag. p. 320 A, B; Kühner, ad Xen. Themist. θρ. xxiii. p. 293 D); a choice expression for the impetuous craving of the hungry man. — ἀπὸ | from, i.e. by means of a portion, as with verbs of eating, Winer, p. 179 [E. T. 248]. — κεράτιον | Cornicle, the sweetish fruit of the locust-tree (ceratonia siliqua of Linnaeus), used as food for swine, and by the poor as a means of nourishment, Galen. VI. p. 355. See Bochart, Hieroz. I. p. 708; Rosenmüller, Morgenl. V. p. 198 f.; Robinson, Pal. III. p. 272. — κ. οὐδεὶς ἐδόθην αὐτῶ | not food (Wolf, Rosenmüller, Paulus), but, according to the context, κεράτια. When the swine driven home were fed therewith, which was the occupation of others, he was hungry even for that brutish provender, and no one gave it to him. No man troubled himself concerning the hungry one, to satisfy him even in this manner. That he should eat with the swine is appropriately not regarded as a possibility. Moreover, it is not presupposed that he received still worse food than κεφάτια (Kuinoel, de Wette), but only that he received his maintenance on account of the famine in excessively small quantity, by reason whereof his hunger was so great that he, etc. — Ver. 17. εἰς ἑαυτὸν δὲ ἀλθῶν] εἰς ἑαυτὸν preceding, in contrast to the external misery, but having come to himself (i.e. having recovered his senses). See examples in Kypke. Comp. ἐν ἑαυτῷ γίνεσθαι, Xen. Anab. i. 5. 17; Acts xii. 11. It is the moral self-understanding, which had become strange and remote to him, in respect of his condition and his need. — περισσ. and λιμῷ are correlative; ἀρτὸν is not contrasted with κεφάτιον (Olshausen), but περισσ. ἀρτ. is the contrast to the little bread, which did not appease his hunger. περισσεύονται (see the critical remarks) is passive. They are provided with more than enough, receive superfluxity of bread, Matt. xiii. 12, xxv. 29. Comp. περισσεύειν τινά, 1 Thess. iii. 12; Athen. ii. p. 42 B.

Vv. 18, 19. With this coming to himself and longing is associated the corresponding determination, namely, to turn back to God, to confess to Him his guilt and unworthiness, and to petition for grace. In this petition, however, the humility which belongs to the consciousness of guilt sets aside the thought of complete restoration. — εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν] against heaven. Comp. Matt. xviii. 15, 21, and elsewhere; εἰς τὸ θείον, Plat. Phaedr. p. 243 C. Heaven does not denote God, but is, as the abode of the Godhead and of the pure spirits, personified, so that this holy heavenly world appears as injured and offended by sin. — ἐνώτιον σοῦ] comp. 1 Sam. vii. 6, x. 1; Ps. li. 4; Tob. iii. 3; Judith v. 17; Susann. 23. The meaning is: I have so sinned that I have transgressed before Thee, i.e. in relation to Thee. The moral relation of the deed to the offended subject is thus rendered palpable, as though this subject had suffered in respect of the deed; the moral reference is set forth as visible. Grotius, moreover, well says: “Non in aetatem, non in malos consultatores culpam reject, sed nudam parat sine excusatione confessionem.” — Ver. 19. οὐκέτι] not: not yet (Paulus), but: no longer. — ποιησόν με κ.τ.λ.] i.e. place me in the position of being as one of thy day-labourers. making him a day-labourer; with ὡς its purport is: although he is a son, yet to place him no otherwise than if he were one of the day-labourers.

Vv. 20–24. God's compassion in the carrying out of the repentant resolve; after it is carried out, the joyous receiving of him again to perfect sonship. — καὶ ἀναστάς κ.τ.λ.] the resolution is no sooner taken than its execution begins. — πρὸς τ. πατέρα ἑαυτοῦ] to his own father; no other became the refuge of the unhappy son. There is an affecting touch in ἑαυτοῦ. — κατεφίλησεν] he kissed him again and again; see on Matt. xxvi. 48. — Ver. 21. The ποιησὼν με ὡς ἕνα τ. μισθ. σοῦ of ver. 19 is repressed by the demeanour of his father's love; the deeply moved son cannot bring these words to his lips in the presence of such paternal affection. A psychologically delicate and significant representation. — Ver. 22. "Filio respondet re ipsa," Bengel. — στολὴν τὴν πρῶτην] a robe, the first that we have in the house—to wit, according to its rank and worth, i.e. τὴν τιμιωτάτην, Euthymius Zigabenus. The idea—the one that had previously been worn by him (Theophylact, Calovius), which would be the righteousness lost in Adam—is opposed to ver. 13 in the service of dogmatic interpretation. Moreover, αὐτοῦ would have been added in that connection. With regard to the article after the anarthrous substantive, see Winer, p. 126 f. [E. T. 174 f.]. The στολὴ is the long and wide overcoat of the people of distinction, Mark xii. 38, xvi. 5; Rev. vi. 11. The δακτύλιος, i.e. signet ring (Herod. ii. 38), and the ὑποδήματα (slaves went bare-footed), are signs of the free man, which he who had returned was to be as a son of the house. — Ver. 23. τῶν μόσχων τῶν σιτ.] the well-known one which stands in the stall. — θύσατε] slaughter, as at ver. 30, not: sacrifice (Elser). — φαγόντες εὐφρανθ.] not: lacti epulemur (Kuinocel), but: opulantes lactemur. Beware of forced interpretations like the following: according to Olshausen (comp. Jerome, Euthymius Zigabenus, and others), the στολὴ πρῶτη denotes the divine righteousness (Rev. iii. 18, vii. 13, xix. 8); the ring, the seal of the Spirit; the sandals, the capacity to walk in God's ways (Eph. vi. 15): according to Jerome, Ambrose, Augustine, Euthymius Zigabenus, Theophylact, and others, the fatted calf is Christ! Comp. also Lange, L. J. II. 1, p. 381.—Ver. 24. νεκρὸς ἢν κ. ἀνέξ. κ.τ.λ.] is meant by the father in a moral sense: νέκρωσιν μὲν καὶ ἀπό-λειαν φησὶ τὴν ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ἀναξίωσιν δὲ καὶ εὐρεσιν tὴν ἀπὸ τῆς μετανοιας, Euthymius Zigabenus. A well-known mode of speaking of death and life (Matt. iv. 16, viii. 22; 1 Tim. v. 6; Eph. v. 14; Rom. vi. 13; passages from the Rabbins, Schoettgen, Hor. p. 877 f.; from the classical writers, Bornemann, Schol. p. 97). In favour of this view it is manifest of itself that the father says absolutely νεκρὸς ἢν, which he cannot mean in the literal sense of the words; further, that after the approach related in ver. 20 f. his soul could be full only of the moral change of his son's condition; finally, that he utters the same words, ver. 32, to the eldest son, who, being acquainted with the previous condition of his brother (ver. 30), could understand them only morally. The utterance of the servant, ὅτι ὑμαῖνοντα αὐτὸν ἄπέλαβεν, ver.
27, is not opposed to this; for he speaks thus of the returned son of the house, only generally of his condition as it first presents itself to him, beyond which the slave has not to go. He has the right feeling of discretion, that respectfully, in accordance with his position, it does not become him to repeat the judgment of the father, but rather to abide by that external circumstance (that he has received him back sound).
Even this feature belongs to the lifelike delicate points of this history. On all accounts the view is to be dismissed of Paulus, de Wette, and Bleek: νεκρὸς, dead as far as I am concerned (by his remoteness and his dissolute life, and εὐπλολῶσ: lost, in the sense of disappeared). — εὐφραίνεσθαι] to be glad. The feast is naturally understood according to ver. 23.

Vv. 25-32. The legally righteous one. Instead of sharing the divine joy over the converted sinner, he is envious, regards himself—in respect of his legality, according to which he has been on his guard against momentary transgression—as neglected, and judges unlovingly about his brother, and discontentedly about God. A striking commentary on
ver. 7; and how fitted to put to the blush the murmuring Pharisees and scribes, ver. 2!—συμφων. κ. χορὸν] not:

Yet, as with Lachmann and Tischendorf, the more strongly attested δὲ is to be read.—παρεκάλει] he exhorted him to come in, —he spoke him fair; see on 1 Cor. iv. 13.—Ver. 29. καὶ ἐμοὶ] The ἐμοὶ placed first has the emphasis of wounded selfish feeling. Contrast ver. 30.—ἔριφον] a young kid, of far less value than the fatted calf! Still more significant is the reading ἔριφον in B, Sahid. (a young kidling), which Ewald approves, and the delicacy of which the transcribers might easily have passed over. Comp. Matt. xxv. 33; Tob. ii. 11.—Ver. 30. ὦ νίος σου ὦτος] this son of thine, in the highest degree contemptuous. He was not going to call him his brother. On the other hand, the father, ver. 32: ὁ ἀδελφὸς σου ὦτος. How bitter, moreover, is: "who has devoured for thee thy living," and μετὰ πορνών, as contrasted with μετὰ τῶν φιλῶν μου!—Ver. 31. τέκνον] full of love.—σὺ πάντοτε κ.τ.λ.] represents to the heart of the jealous brother the two great prerogatives that he had above his brother (hence the emphatic σὺ). Thy constant association with me (while, on the other hand, thy brother was separated far and long from me), and the circumstance that my whole possessions belong to thee (as to the future heir of all, ver. 12), ought to raise thee far above such envious dispositions and judgments!—Ver. 32. εὐφρανθήναι] stands first with the emphasis of contrast, in opposition to such ill-humour. —εἶδει] not to be supplemented by σέ, but generally it was fitting or necessary,—a justification of the prearranged joy of the house, which, under the circumstances, was a moral necessity.—εξησευ] (see the critical remarks) was dead, and has become alive, Matt. ix. 18; John v. 25; Rom. xiv. 9.

Remark.—(1) The exclusive title to the κηρονομία, which, according to ver. 31, is adjudged to those who are legally upright, has its justification in principle; οἱ σοιταί νόμον ἐκαίνωθενταί, Rom. ii. 13.—(2) For the adoption of sinners into this prerogative, which belongs in principle to the legally righteous, the parable indicates the method of self-knowledge, of repentance, and of confidence in the grace of God (faith). But the interposition of this grace through the death of reconciliation, and consequently the more specific definition of that confidence, Jesus leaves unnoticed, leaving these particulars to the further development of faith and doctrine after the atoning death had taken place; just as, moreover, He in general, according to the synoptic Gospels, limits Himself only to single hints of the doctrine of reconciliation as seed-corn for the future (Matt. xx. 28, xxvi. 28; otherwise in John).—(3) As the reality does not correspond to the idea of legal righteousness, He points to the example of the son who has continued in outward conformity to the law, but therewith is proud of his virtue, unbrottherly and unfilial, and consequently holds up to the Pharisees a mirror for self-contemplation, the picture in which must tell them how very much they also needed repentance (in order to see the title in principle to legal righteousness realized in themselves), instead of censuring the fellowship of Jesus with publicans and sinners (vv. 7, 1, 2).

Several versions also read one of these two. Hence the Recepta has decisive evidence against it. Since to understand the everlasting habitations as the word for death, and consequently to change it into the plural so readily suggested itself, I regard the singular as original, though not ἐκλίση (Schulz, Scholz, Lachm. Tisch.), but ἐκλίση, since the important authorities which read ἐκλίσης (so Matthaei) are also in favour of this present form; just as, moreover, the aorist in itself, according to the sense (cum defecerit), presented itself most readily to the uncritical transcribers.—Ver. 18. LUKE II.
After Jesus has given, as far as xv. 32, the needful explanation to the Pharisees and scribes in reference to their murmuring at His associating Himself with the publicans and sinners, He now turns also (δὲ καὶ) to His disciples with the parabolic discussion of the doctrine how they were to use earthly possessions in order to come into the Messiah's kingdom. For according to ver. 9 nothing else is the teaching of the following parable, which consequently is, even in its vocabulary (Köstlin, p. 274), similar to the parable at xii. 16 ff. Every other doctrine that has been found therein has first been put there. The ἄνθρωπος πλούσιος is Mammon, comp. ver. 13; the οἰκονόμος represents the μαθηταί. Just as (1) the steward was denounced for squandering the property of his lord, so also the μαθηταί, maintaining in Christ an entirely different interest and a different purpose of life from that of collecting earthly wealth (Matt. vi. 19 f.; Luke xii. 33, xviii. 22), must needs appear to the enemies, the rather that these were themselves covetous (ver. 14), as wasteful managers of the riches of Mammon (Matt. vi. 24), and as such must be decried by them, ver. 1. As, further, (2) the steward came into the position of having his dismissal from his service announced to him by the rich man, so also it would come upon the μαθηταί that Mammon would withdraw from them the stewardship of his goods, i.e. that they would come into poverty, ver. 2 f. As, however, (3) the steward was prudent enough before his dismissal, while he still had the disposal of his lord's wealth, to make use of the latter for his subsequent provision by making for himself friends therewith who would receive him into their houses, which prudence the rich man praised in spite of the dishonesty of the measure; so also should the μαθηταί by liberal expenditure of the goods of Mammon, which were still at their disposal, provide for themselves friends, so as subsequently to attain in their impoverishment provision for eternity, the reception into the Messiah's kingdom. The more detailed explanation will be found on the special passages. The text in itself does not indicate any definite connection with what has preceded, but is only linked on externally, without any mention of an internal progress in the discussion: but He said also—as the foregoing to the Pharisees, so that which now follows to His disciples. But Jesus very naturally comes direct to the treatment of this theme, because just at that time there were very many publicans among His μαθηταί (xv. 1) on whom, after their decision in His favour, devolved as their first duty the application of the goods of Mammon in the way mentioned (xii. 33). It is just as natural that, at the same time, the contrast with the Pharisees, just before so humiliatingly rebuked, those covetous ones (ver. 14) to whom the ποιεῖν ἐαυτοῖς φίλους ἐκ τ. μαμ. τῆς ἀδικίας was so extremely foreign (xi. 41, xx. 47), helped to urge to this theme. Other attempts to make out the connection are arbitrary, as, for instance, that of Schleiermacher (besides that it depends on an erroneous interpretation of the parable itself), that Jesus is passing over to a vindication of the publicans, so far as they showed themselves gentle and beneficent towards their people; or that of Olshausen, that He wishes to represent the compassion that in ch. xv. He has exhibited in God, now also in ch. xvi. as the duty of men. But there is no reason for denying the existence of any connection, as de Wette does.—πρὸς τ. μαθητ. αὐτῶν] not merely the Twelve, but the disciples in the more extended sense, in contrast with the opposition which was likewise present. Comp. Matt. viii. 21; Luke vi. 13, vii. 11, xix. 37, and elsewhere. The parable had the first reference to the publicans that happened to be among them (xv. 1), but it concerned also, so far as there were generally still wealthy people among them, the disciples in general. See above.—ἀνθρωπὸς τῆς ἕν πλούσιως] not to be defined more particularly than these words themselves and vv. 5–7 indicate. To think of the

1 Not as Wieseler will have it, beside the Pharisees, to His disciples also.
Romans (Schleiermacher), or the Roman Emperor (Grossmann\(^1\)), in the interpretation, is quite foreign to the subject. Moreover, it is not, as is usually explained, God\(^2\) that is to be understood; with which notion ver. 8 would conflict, as well as the circumstance that actually the dismissal from the service of the rich man brings with it the same shelter to which, in the application, ver. 9 corresponds,\(^3\) the reception into the \(^1\) He finds in the ἐπιτάγματα a Roman provincial governor, who, towards the end of his oppressive government, has adopted indulgent measures, in order to earn for himself the favour of the inhabitants of the province. He says that thence Jesus, ver. 9, draws the doctrine that as such a one in worldly things behaved himself wisely for an earthly end, so in divine things prudence should be manifested, in order to attain eternal life. Schleiermacher thinks that the rich man represents the Romans, the steward the publicans, the debtors the Jewish people, and that Christ intends to say, that if the publicans in their calling show themselves gentle and beneficent, the Romans, the enemies of the people, will themselves praise them in their hearts; and thus also have ye every cause to concede to them, even in anticipation of the time when this relation ceases (according to the reading ἱκλίτα, ver. 9), the citizenship in the βασιλεία τ. Θ.

\(^2\) Observe that this interpretation proceeds on an a priori basis, and is therefore improbable; because in both the other passages, where in Luke ἀνθρωπίς τινος πλουσίος is the subject of a parable (xii. 16, xvi. 19), the rich man represents a very unholy personality, in which is typified the service of Mammon and of luxury.

\(^3\) The usual interpretation (substantially followed also by Wieseler, Bleek, Köster) is in its leading features that of Theophylact and Euthymius Zigabenus: that the possessor of earthly wealth is not the actual proprietor, that being God, but only the steward. If he has not used the wealth according to God's will, he is accused, but dismissed by death. Hence he should be prudent enough, while there is still time, to apply the wealth entrusted to him charitably according to God's will, in order to get into heaven. Comp. Ewald, p. 299: "Every rich man, since he must again surrender all earthly riches at least at death, is yet only placed over them as a steward by God, as by a lord who is far removed, but who one day will claim a reckoning; and he is certainly wise and prudent not to allow the riches to lie useless, but rather, by his effectual application of them, to make to himself friends for the right time; but one ought only to gain for himself friends with his riches for the purpose that in the moment when he must, at least as constrained by death, give them up, he should be received by them into the everlasting tabernacles of heaven." Baur, Evang. p. 450 ff., proceeding from the fundamentally Ebionitic view, says that the rich man is God in His absolute dominion over all; that in the steward is represented the αἰῶν εἰσόδων, whose doings, however, are determined by the adequate relation of the means to the end; that this prudence is a quality which even the children of light need, since they must know how to set the αἰῶν εἰσόδων in the right relation to the αἰῶν μείκτων, and hence to be willing to renounce all that pertains to the former in order to attain the latter; that ver. 9 means that he is not at all to trouble himself with Mammon, but entirely to rid himself of wealth, and hence to everlasting habitations. But neither is it the devil, as ἀρχων τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, as Olshausen ¹ would have it, that is meant, since in the connection of the parable the relation to the κόσμος ² in general, and its representatives, is not spoken of, but specially the relation to temporal wealth. ³ Hence its representative, i.e. Mammon, is to be understood; but we must not, with de Wette, give the matter up in despair, and say that the rich man has no significance, or (Ebrard) that he serves only as filling up (comp. also Lahmeyer); he has the significance of a definite person feigned, who, however, as such, was well known to the hearers (Matt. vi. 24), and also at ver. 13 is expressly use it for an object of beneficence, because the αὐτοῦ δότης and the αὐτὸν μιλλῶν reciprocally exclude one another. To this Ebionitic view of wealth, as of a benefit in itself unlawful and foreign to the kingdom of God, Hilgenfeld also recurs.

¹ His view is that the publicans may be conceived of as being, by their external relations, in the service of the ἀρχων τοῦ κόσμου. According to ver. 13, God was to be regarded as the other true Lord who stood opposed (as the representative of the δικαιόμοις τις τῶν αἰωνίων σκπᾶς, ver. 9) to this εἰκοσιςνικῆς. It was just the prudent διακρατιζόμενα τὰ ὑπάρχουσα τῶν αὐθάντων πλούσιον, who in a right manner serves this true Lord; he despises the one in order wholly to belong to the other; he labours with the possessions of the one for the purpose of the other. But in opposition to his true advantage, therefore not prudently, does he act who, like the Pharisees, seeks to place the service of the one on an equality with that of the other. See, in opposition to Olshausen, Schneckenburger, l.c.

² Midway between Olshausen's interpretation and mine (of Mammon, see subsequently), Schegg makes the rich man mean the personified κόσμος. But the idea of κόσμος is here too wide, the point in the subject is definitely the being rich; hence also at ver. 14, φιλάργυρος. Schenkel also has adopted the interpretation of the rich man as of Mammon. Comp. Lange, L. J. II. 1, p. 391, III. p. 463.

named. The concluding words of ver. 13 are the key of the parable; hence, also, it is not to be maintained, with Köster, that a rich man is only conceived of with reference to the steward. — οἰκονόμον] a house steward, ταμίης, who had to take the supervision of the domestics, the stewardship of the household, the rental of the property, etc. Comp. xii. 42, and see Heppe, p. 9 ff.; Ahrens, Amt d. Schlüssel, p. 12 ff. Such were usually slaves; but it is implied in vv. 3, 4 that the case of a free man is contemplated in this passage. To conceive of the οἰκονόμος as a farmer of portion of the property, is neither permitted by the word nor by the context (in opposition to Hölbe). In the interpretation of the parable the οἰκονόμος neither represents men in general, nor specially the wealthy (thus most interpreters, following the Fathers), nor yet the Israelitish people and their leaders (Meuss), nor sinners (Maldonatus and others), not even Judas Iscariot (Bertholdt), also neither the Pharisees (Vitringa, Zyro, Baumgarten-Crusius 1), nor the publicans (Schleiermacher, Hölbe), but the μαθηταὶ, as is plain from ver. 9, where the conduct analogous to the behaviour of the οἰκονόμος is enjoined upon them. The μαθηταὶ, especially those who were publicans before they passed over to

1 According to Zyro, the meaning of the parable is: Ye Pharisees are stewards of a heavenly treasure—the law; but ye are unfaithful stewards, indulgent towards yourselves, strict towards others; nevertheless, even ye are already accused, as was he in the parable; and even your power and your dignity will soon disappear. Therefore, as ye are like to him in your ἄλληλον, ye be also like to him in your φίλιον, strict towards yourselves, benevolent towards others, and that at once. According to Baumgarten-Crusius, Christ desires—disapproving of the disposition and conduct of the Pharisees in respect of the works of love—to direct the disciples to appropriate to themselves something thereof in a better manner. That, namely, which the Pharisees did as sinners in order to cover their sins, and in so-called good works, the disciples were to do, not as sinners, but in order to smooth by sympathetic beneficence the inequality of the relations of life. Bornemann also explains the οἰκονόμος of the Pharisees. See on ver. 9. Weiszäcker similarly distinguishes, as in the parable of the prodigal son (see on xv. 11), the primitive meaning (according to which the steward was a heathen functionary who oppressed the Jews, but afterwards took their part) from the meaning attached to it by the compiler, according to which the steward was a type of the unbelieving rich Jews, who might receive a reversion of the kingdom of heaven if they took up the cause of their fellow-believers who had become Christians. This is a sort of double meaning, which neither in itself nor in its twofold contents has any foundation in the text.
Christ, were concerned with temporal wealth, and were therefore stewards, not of God, but of Mammon. — δεδομήθη αὐτῷ] he was denounced to him (on the dative, comp. Herod. v. 35, viii. 22; Plat. Polit. viii. p. 566 B; Soph. Phil. 578; Eur. Hec. 863, and thereon, Pflugk; elsewhere also with εἰς or πρὸς with accusative). Although the word, which occurs only in this place in the New Testament, is not always used of groundless, false accusations, though this is mostly the case (see Schweighäuser, Lex. Herod. I. p. 154), yet it is still no vox media, but expresses, even where a corresponding matter of fact lies at the foundation (as Num. xxii. 22; Dan. iii. 8, vi. 25; 2 Macc. iii. 11; 4 Macc. iv. 1, and in the passages in Kypke, I. p. 296), hostile denunciation, accusation, Niedner, p. 32 ff. Comp. the passages from Xenophon in Sturz, I. p. 673. See also Dem. 155. 7, where the διαβάλλοντες and the κόλακες are contrasted. So also here; Luther aptly says: "he was ill spoken of." Vulg.: "diffamatus est." There was some foundation in fact (hence, moreover, the steward does not defend himself), but the manner in which he was denounced manifested a hostile purpose. Thus, moreover, in the relation portrayed in that of the μαθηταί to temporal riches, as the unfaithful stewards of which they manifested themselves to the covetous Pharisees by their entrance into the Christian conversion, there lay at the foundation the fact that they had no further interest in Mammon, and were no longer φιλάργυροι. Compare the instance of Zacchaeus. Köster says wrongly that the hitherto faithful steward had only been slandered, and had only allowed himself to be betrayed into a knavish trick for the first time by the necessity arising from the dismissal. No; this knavish trick was only the path of unfaithfulness on which he had hitherto walked, and on which he took a new start to get out of his difficulty. Against the supposition of the faithfulness of the steward, see on ver. 3. — ὁς διασκορπίζων] as squandering (xv. 13), i.e. so he was represented. ¹ Comp. Xen. Hell.

Patr. p. 715: τί ταῦτα ἀκούω; Acts xiv. 15. The frequency of this usus loquendi, and the appropriateness of the sense just at the opening of the reckoning, gives to the interpretation the preference over this: wherefore do I hear, etc., Kuinoel, de Wette, Meuss, and others (comp. Luther, and so early as the Gothic version). — ἀπόδος κ.τ.λ.] give the (due) reckoning of thy stewardship. The master desires to see the state of affairs made plain. Ver. 3. This reflexion of the steward issued from the consciousness that he cannot deny his guilt, for he sees his dismissal as the near and certain result (ἀφαίρεται, present) of the rendering of the account demanded of him. If he were to be represented as innocent, the parable must needs have placed in his mouth a justification, or at least have assigned to him the corresponding epithet. This is also in opposi-

On the distinction in sense, see Maetzner, ad Lyceury, p. 165. These reflections are not inserted with a view to the interpretation, but only for the depicting of the crisis.

Ver. 4. The word ἐγραφῶν, coming in without any connecting particle, depicts in a lively manner what was passing in his mind, and is true to nature. The aorist is used not as being the same as the perfect, although de Wette will have it so, but expresses the moment of occurrence: I have come to the knowledge. Bengel well says: “Subito consilium cepit.” — ὁταν μετασταθῶ] when (quando) I shall have been dismissed. He thus expresses himself to indicate the critical point of time, imminent to him by reason of the near experience that he is expecting, after the occurrence of which the δέχεσθαι κ.τ.λ. is to take place. Comp. ver. 9.— δέξωνται] the debtors

¹ According to Francke, Jesus desires to represent the risks of being rich in the passionate rich man, who arranges the dismissal without any inquiry. He is the indebted chief person. The steward is falsely accused: he is driven from the house as not ἀδίκια; but the rich man, first of all, drives him by his cruelty to the ἀδίκια, which, moreover, was only a momentary one, as the (inequitable) γράμματα were only once used; while, on the other hand, they were only used for the purpose of putting matters on an equitable footing again. In the latter reference Dav. Schulz precedes with the assumption, that the steward wished before his dismissal to do some good. He assumes with equal contradiction of the text, that the setting down of the items of account was done with the knowledge of the master. Comp. also Schneckenburger, p. 57.

² Hence—for the steward, before he decides on the expedient, ver. 4, sees digging and begging before him—it is not to be supposed, with Brauns, that he paid the amounts written down, ver. 6 f., from his own funds. Contrary to the text, contrary to ver. 3 f., and contrary to τίς ἀδίκια, ver. 8, which refers to that writing down. This, moreover, is in opposition to Hölbe, who, in a similar misinterpretation of vv. 6, 7, brings out as the meaning of the parable, that “the publicans, decried by the Pharisees as robbers, etc., are frequently not so. In spite of their being repudiated, they are equitable people, and frequently combine with great experience of life and prudence a heart so noble that they acquire friends as soon as this is only known.”

— From ένα ἐκαστὸν it is seen that subsequently the two debtors are mentioned by way of example. — τοῦ κυρίου ἑαυτοῦ] By the debtors of his own master he knew how to help himself. — πόσον ὑφείλεις κ.τ.λ.} Going to work promptly and surely, he questions their own acknowledgment of obligation, which must agree with the contents of the bond. — Ver. 6. βάτους] ὁ δὲ βάτος (νῖ) δίναται χωρὴσαι ξέστας ἐβδομήκοντα δῦνο, Josephus, Antt. viii. 2. 9. Therefore equal to an Attic μετρητής. — δέξαι take away. The steward, who has the documents in his keeping, gives up the bill (τὰ γράμματα, that which is written, in the plural used even of one document, see on Gal. vi. 11), that the debtor may alter the number. Usually, that he may write a new bond with the smaller amount. But this is not contained in the words; moreover, for that purpose not the surrender of the document, but its destruction, would have been necessary. — καθίσας] pictorial. ταχέως belongs not to this graphic detail, καθίσας (Luther and others, including Ewald), but to γράψον; the latter corresponds to the haste to which the carrying out of an injustice urges. — Ver. 7. ἐτέρα to another. Comp. xix. 20. — κόρους] ὁ δὲ κόρος (τῶ) δίναται μεδίμνους ἀπτικοῦς δέκα, Josephus, Antt. xv. 9. 2. — The diversity of the deduction, vv. 6, 7, is merely the change of the concrete picturing without any special purpose in view. Comp. already Euthymius Zigabenus.

Ver. 8. Ο θύριος] not Jesus (Erasmus, Luther, Pred.; Weizsäcker also, p. 213 f.), but, as is proved by ver. 9, the master of the steward, to whom the measure taken by the latter had become known. — τὸν οἰκονόμον. τῆς ἄδικ.] ἄδικ. is a genitive of quality (see on ii. 14), the unrighteous steward; of such a quality he had shown himself in his service, as well by the waste in general as specially by his proceeding with the debtors. The dogmatic idea (Schulz) is out of place in the context. Schleiermacher and Bornemann (comp. also Paulus) construe τῆς ᾧδικίας with ἑπτήνουσεν: iniquitatis causa. Grammatically correct (Dion. Hal. Rhet. xiv.; Joseph. Antt. xii. 4. 5; Bernhardy, p. 152; Kühner, II. p. 192; Bornemann, Schol. p. 98), but here it is in contradiction with the parallel expression: ἐκ τοῦ μαμωνᾶ τῆς ᾧδικίας, ver. 9. Comp. also ὁ κριτὴς τῆς ᾧδικίας, xviii. 6. And it is not the ᾧδικία, but the prudence, that is the subject of the praise, as is shown from the analogy of ver. 9. τῆς ᾧδικίας is intended to make it clear that the master praised the steward even in spite of his dishonest behaviour, because he had dealt prudently. In the dishonest man he praised “his procedure, so well advised and to the purpose, with the property that still remained under his control” (Schulz, p. 103), even although from a moral point of view this prudence was only the wisdom of the serpent (Matt. x. 16), so that he was not the πιστὸς ὁικονόμος ὁ φρόνιμος (xii. 42), but only φρόνιμος, who had hit on the practical savoir faire. — ὅτι οἱ νῦν κ.τ.λ.] Immediately after the words φρόνιμος ἐποίησεν, Jesus adds a general maxim, in justification of the predicate used (φρόνιμος). Consequently: “Et merito quidem illius prudentiam laudavit, nam quod prudentiam quidem attinet, filii hujus saeculi, etc.” Maldonatus. Francke erroneously says (compare the

1 The expression τῆς ᾧδικίας contains the judgment of Jesus on the conduct of the σικουμος, vv. 5-7, which, nevertheless, the master praised with reference to the prudence employed. Hence τῆς ᾧδικίας is decidedly opposed to the assumption that the steward was honest, and it is only a device springing from necessity to which Hölbe clings, that the faithful steward is called σικου. τῆς ᾧδικίας only in the sense of his columnnators.

2 We may imagine the master calling out to the steward from his own worldly standpoint something like this: Truly thou hast accomplished a prudent stroke! Thy practical wisdom is worthy of all honour! Comp. Terent. Heaut. iii. 2. 26. But to conclude that the steward remained in his service, is altogether opposed to the teaching of the parable (in opposition to Baumgarten-Crusius, Hölbe).

3 Not a piece of irony upon the Pharisees (Zyro), as Branns also assumes, understanding by the children of this world the publicans, who were contemned as children of the world; and by the children of light, the Pharisees, as the educated children of light. So also Hölbe. Exorted by an erroneous interpretation of the whole parable. Textually the children of the world could only be those to whom the steward belonged by virtue of his unrighteous dealing (τῆς ᾧδικίας).
"perhaps," etc., of de Wette) that ὃτι οἱ νεοὶ κ.τ.λ. refers to the ἐπιμεθεὶς ὁ κύριος. This the context forbids by the correlation of φρονίμως and φρονιμώτερον. The sons (see on Matt. viii. 12) of this generation (ἵνα ἀπελαύνῃ, see on Matt. xii. 32) are those who belong in their moral nature and endeavour to the period of the world prior to the Messianic times, not men who are aspiring after the βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τὴν δικαιοσύνην αὐτοῦ (Matt. vi. 33). Comp. xx. 34. See examples of the Rabbinical ἀνάλληλοι in Schoettgen, Hor. p. 298, and Wetstein. The sons of light are those who, withdrawn from temporal interests, have devoted themselves wholly to the divine ἀλήθεια revealed by Christ, and are enlightened and governed by it, John xii. 36; 1 Thess. v. 5; Eph. v. 8. The former are more prudent than the latter, not absolutely, but eἰς τὴν γενεάν τὴν ἐαυτῶν, in reference to their own generation, i.e. in relation to their own kindred, if they have to do with those who, like themselves, are children of this world, as that steward was so prudent in reference to the debtors. The whole body of the children of the world—a category of like-minded men—is described as a generation, a clan of connections;
and how appropriately, since they appear precisely as νεοὶ!
Observe, moreover, the marked prominence of τὴν ἐαυτῶν, which includes the contrasted saying that that higher degree of prudence is not exercised, if they have to deal with others who are not of their own kind. With unerring sagacity they know, as is shown by that steward in his dealing with the debtors, how, in their relations to companions of their own stamp, to turn the advantage of the latter to their own proper advantage. On the other hand, in relation to the children of light, they are not in a condition for such prudent measures, because these are not available for the immoral adjustment of the selfish ends of those men, as was the case with those debtors who by their own dishonesty were serviceable to the dishonest sagacity of the steward by the falsification of their bonds.1 Kuinoel and Paulus, following older commentators, explain: in relation to their con-

1 ὅτι is therefore to be taken in the quite usual sense of: in reference to, but not to be twisted into: after the manner, or after the measure (Lahneyer), and temporaries. But how unmeaning would be this addition, and how neglected would be the emphatic \( \tau \nu \ \varepsilon \alpha u \tau \delta \omega \nu \) ! Grotius, in opposition to the words themselves, explains: "in rebus suis;" Wieseler: for the duration of their life, for the brief time of their earthly existence; Hölbe: in their own manner, according to their own fashion. Comp. Schultz, Lange, and others: after their kind; de Wette, Eylau: in their sphere of life.—Moreover, \( e \iota \varsigma \ \tau \nu \ \gamma e \nu e \alpha \nu \ \kappa .\tau .\lambda . \) is not to be referred to both classes of men (Kuinoel, Olshausen, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Brauns, and others), but merely to the \( \upsilon \iota \omega \upsilon \ \tau .\kappa .\o\mu .\ \tau . \) (comp. Dettinger, as above, p. 60 f.), as the words themselves require it as well as the sense; for the prudence of the children of light in general, not merely in their relation to those like them, is surpassed by that prudence which the children of the world know how to apply \( e \iota \varsigma \ \tau \nu \ \gamma e \nu e \alpha \nu \ \tau \nu \ \varepsilon \alpha u \tau \delta \omega \nu . \) On such wisdom the latter concentrate and use their effort, whereas the children of light can pursue only holy purposes with moral means, and consequently (as sons of wisdom) must necessarily fall behind in the worldly prudence, in which morality is of no account. As, however, He also from them (\( \kappa \alpha \gamma \omega \ \iota \mu \iota \nu \) ) requires prudence, Jesus says, Ver. 9, giving the application of the whole parable for His disciples who were present — \( \kappa \alpha \gamma \omega \ \iota \mu \iota \nu \ \lambda \epsilon \gamma \omega \), not: \( \kappa \alpha \gamma \omega \ \lambda \epsilon \gamma \omega \ \iota \mu \iota \nu \); comp. on xi. 9. \( \kappa \alpha \gamma \omega \) corresponds to the preceding \( \delta \kappa \rho \iota \rho \sigma \), and \( \iota \mu \iota \nu \) to \( \tau \omicron \ \omicron \iota \kappa \omicron \nu \nu . \ \tau \iota \varsigma \ \u \delta \iota \kappa \). As the master praised that steward on account of his prudence, so also must I command to you an analogous prudent course of conduct, ¹ but in how much higher a sense! — \( \pi \omicron \iota \varsigma \iota \tau \iota \varepsilon \ \varepsilon \alpha u \tau \delta \iota \varsigma \ \phi \iota \lambda \omega \varsigma \ \kappa .\tau .\lambda . \) provide for yourselves friends, etc. It is evident whom Jesus means by these friends from the final sentence, \( \iota \nu \alpha \ \delta \epsilon \xi \omicron \omega \nu \tau \alpha \iota \ \iota \mu \iota \varsigma \ \kappa .\tau .\lambda . \) Those who receive you, to wit, are the angels (Matt. xxiv. 31; Mark xiii. 27); and these are made friends of by the beneficent application of riches (comp. xv. 10; to be explained from the mode of expression: \( \tau \lambda \iota \iota \iota \ \iota \varepsilon \ \varepsilon \lambda \lambda \lambda \kappa \kappa \kappa \), and the like (see Saupp, ad Xen. Mem. iv. 2. 37).

Matt. xviii. 10, xxv. 31, xxiv. 31). Thus they correspond to the \( \chiρεωφειλεταις \) of the parable, but indirectly. Ambrose, at so early a period, has this true interpretation, and very recently Ewald. The reference to God (Wolf, Kuinoel, Niedner, and others) or to Christ (Olshausen), either alone or with the addition of the angels (see also Bleek), is not appropriate, since the reception into the Messiah's kingdom is the duty of the ministering spirits, accompanied by whom the Lord appears in His glory (ix. 26). According to the usual interpretation, those to whom deeds of love have been done, the poor, etc., are meant (so also Wieseler, Meuss, Lahmeyer), whose gratitude is earned as the steward has earned the gratitude of the debtors. But in this case \( \text{'να δέξωνται ἴμας } \) must be subjected to a strained interpretation. See below. The \( \epsilonαυτοίς, \) to yourselves, standing emphatically even before \( \tauοῦνσι. \) in B L R N* Tisch., corresponds to the idea that the (higher) analogy of an application for their own use, as in the case of that steward, is to be admitted.— \( \epsilonκ \tauοῦ \muαμ. \tauῆς \ \alphaδικ.] \) \( \epsilonκ \) denotes that the result proceeds from making use of Mammon, Matthiae, p. 1333; Bernhardy, p. 230; Ellendt, Lex Soph. I. p. 550 f. But Mammon, the idea of which is, moreover, in no way to be extended to the totality of the earthly life (Eylau), is not to be taken in this place as at ver. 13, personally (comp. on Matt. vi. 24), but as neuter, as at ver. 11, wealth.— \( \tauῆς \ \alphaδικίας \) Genitivus qualitatis, as at ver. 8: of the unrighteous Mammon. As at ver. 8 this predicate is attached to the steward, because he had acted unrighteously towards his lord, so here it is attached to wealth, because it, as in the case of that steward, serves, according to usual experience (comp. xviii. 24 f.), as an instrument of unrighteous dealing. The moral characteristic of the use of it is represented as adhering to itself. Other explanations, instead of being suggested by the context, are read into the passage isolated from the context, to wit, that of Jerome, Augustine,1 Calvin, Olearius, Maldonatus, Lightfoot, Bertholdt, Rosenmüller, Möller, Bornemann, and

1 Still Augustine admits (Comment. in Ps. xlviii.) even the communistic interpretation: "quia ea ipsa iniquitas est, quod tu habes, alter non habet, tu abundas et alter eget." This is foreign to the context.
others: opes injuste partae (comp. Euthymius Zigabenus: ὡς εξ ἀδικίας θεσαυρισθέντα, τῆς ἐκ τοῦ μὴ διαμερίζονται τὰ περιττὰ τοῦτον τοῖς πένησιν); that of Drusius, Michaelis, Schreiter, Kuinoel, Wieseler, and others (comp. Dettinger and H. Bauer): opes fallacies, or wealth which allures (Löffler, Köster); that of Paulus (Esg. Handb.): that Mammon is designated as unrighteous towards the disciples, to whom he has communicated little; that of Schulz and Olshausen: opes impias (Olshausen: "the bond by which every individual is linked to the αἰὼν οὗτος and its princes"); that of Heppe: that wealth is so designated as being no true actual possession (ver. 11); and others. Moreover, a hidden irony (Eylau) against an Ebionitic error of the disciples, as if they had imputed to what is earthly in itself the character of ἀδικία, is remote from the words, since the predicate is taken from the conduct of the steward. There are analogous expressions of the Targumists, in which the characteristic peculiarity of Mammon is given by means of a superadded substantive (as רַדְשָׁת מָמוֹן רַשָׁר: מָמוֹן, מָמוֹן רַשָׁר) ; see in Lightfoot, p. 344. The value of the predicate τῆς ἀδικ., so far as the structure of the discourse is concerned, seems to be, that this application of wealth for selfish advantage is entirely conformable to the improba indoles thereof, according to which it allows itself to be used, instead of only for the purpose of serving the interest of its possessor (Mammon), for the selfish advantage of those who have it to administer. The epithet is contemptuous. Ye cannot, considering its nature, better make use of so worthless a thing! Bornemann, Schol. p. 98 ff., and in the Stud. u. Krit. 1843, p. 116 ff., finds the whole precept ποιησάτε κ.τ.λ. to be in contradiction with the moral teaching of Christ, and conjectures: οὐ ποιησάτε κ.τ.λ., "non facietis (nolite facere) vobis amicos ex opibus injuste collectis, etc., without any trace in the evidence for the text. And the doubt of Bornemann is

1 Bornemann assumes as the meaning of the parable: "Pharisaeos Christus ait de alienis bonis liberales esse, idque sui commodi causa, atque eorum praefectos (ἀρχηγοὺς πλοίων, ver. 1) non modo hanc in subditis perversitatem et vitiositatem non vituperare et punire, sed etiam landare prudentiam eorum et calliditatem. At suos id nunquam imitaturos esse Christus certo confidit," etc. This interpretation is erroneous, if only for the reason, that the steward is solved by the consideration that (1) Jesus does not bid the disciples provide themselves with Mammon in a similar way to the steward (the steward did not provide himself with wealth at all, rather he bestowed it on the debtors, but for his own advantage), but to apply the riches which they, as having hitherto been οἰκονόμοι of Mammon, still had at their disposal, in a similar way to that steward, to make themselves friends; (2) that Jesus requires of His disciples to forsake all (v. 27, xviii. 22 ff., comp. xii. 33) is the less in conflict with the passage before us, that at that time there were around Him so many publicans and sinners who had previously entered into His service (out of the service of Mammon), and for these the words of Jesus contained the command to forsake all just in the special form appropriate to the relations in which they stood. In respect of μαθητάς, ver. 1, we are not to conceive exclusively only of the Twelve, and of such as already had forsaken all; (3) our text does not conflict with the context (ver. 13), as it rather claims in substance the giving up of the service of Mammon, and its claim corresponds to the μὴ θησαυρίζετε ὑμῖν κ.τ.λ., besides allowing the idea of laying up treasure in heaven (see ἵνα ὅταν ἐκλ. κ.τ.λ.) to appear in a concrete form. — ὅταν ἐκλείπῃ] (see the critical remarks) when it fails, i.e. when it ceases. Comp. xxii. 32; Heb. i. 12; Xen. Hell. i. 5. 2: ἔχουν δὲ ἥκειν τάλαντα πεντακόσια; εἶν δὲ ταῦτα ἐκλείπῃ κ.τ.λ.; 1 Sam. ix. 7; 1 Macc. iii. 29, 45; Ecclus. xiv. 19, xlii. 24; and frequently in the LXX. and in the Apocrypha. This ὅταν ἐκλ. indeed corresponds to the point of the parable: ὅταν μετασταθῶ, ver. 4, but signifies in the application intended to be made—the catastrophe of the Parousia, at the appearance of which, in the σχῆμα τοῦ κοσμοῦ τούτου which precedes it, the temporal riches come to an end and cease to exist (vi. 24; Jas. v. 1 ff.; Luke xvii. 26 ff.), whereas then the treasures laid up in heaven (Matt. vi. 20; Luke xii. 33, xviii. 22) occupy their place (comp. also 1 Tim. vi. 19), and liberal with the property of his own master. Consequently the Pharisees would be represented as liberal, not de bonis alienis, but with the property of their own chiefs. In general, however, it is decisive against Bornemann that no parable is intended to teach the opposite of itself.

the complete \(\Delta \nu \alpha \tau \gamma\) of riches (Matt. xiii. 22) is revealed. This reference to the Parousia is required in the context by the \(\alpha i\omega \nu i\ou s \sigma \kappa \nu \rho \alpha\), whereby the setting up of the kingdom (here also conceived of as near) is referred to. The Recepta \(\epsilon k\lambda \iota \pi \gamma \tau \eta\) \(^1\) would mean: when ye shall have died (Plat. Legg. vi. p. 759 E, ix. p. 836 E; Xen. Cyr. viii. 7. 26; Isa. xi. 10, LXX.; Gen. xxv. 8, xlix. 33; Tob. xiv. 11; Test. XII. Patr. p. 529). But after death that which is first to be expected is not the kingdom of Messiah, or the life in heaven to which reference is usually made (even by Bleek), but the paradise in Sheol (ver. 22), to which, however, the predicate \(\alpha i\omega \nu i\ou s\) is not appropriate (in opposition to Engelhardt). Moreover, Jesus could not refer His disciples to the condition after their death, since, according to the synoptic Gospels (and see also on John xiv. 3), He had placed the Parousia and the setting up of the kingdom in the lifetime even of that generation \(^2\) (Luke xxi. 32, ix. 27). Hence the Recepta is to be rejected even on these internal grounds, and to be traced to the idea of the later eschatology. The everlasting tabernacles correspond to the \(e i s\ \tau \eta \ou s\ \varpi \kappa \nu \mus\ \alpha i\nu\tau \ou \nu\) in the parable, ver. 4, and typically denote, probably in reference to the moveable tabernacles in the wilderness (comp. Hos. xii. 10; Zech. xiv. 16; Ps. cxviii. 15), the kingdom of Messiah in respect of its everlasting duration. Thus God promises in 4 Esdr. ii. 11: "Et dabo eis tabernacula aeterna, quae praeparaveram illis," where, in accordance with the context, doubtless the kingdom of Messiah is meant. — \(\delta \xi \\omega \nu \tau \ai\) not impersonal (Köster and others), but in respect of \(\phi \iota \lo u s\), and according to the analogy of ver. 4, the friends provided are to be understood, consequently the angels (see above); comp. Ambrose. If \(\phi \iota \lo u s\) be explained

\(^1\) Luther translates: "when ye faint," but explains this of dying, when ye "must leave all behind you." Comp. Ewald (reading \(i\kappa \lambda \iota \iota \pi \tau \tau \tau\)): when ye \(c a n\) no longer help yourselves, i.e. when ye die. Contextually Meuss refers (\(i\kappa \lambda \iota \iota \pi \tau \tau \tau\)) it to the last judgment; but with what far-fetched and artificial interpretation: "quando enmigratis, scil. e mammone iniquitatis, qui adhuc refugio vobis fuit!"

\(^2\) Hence also the reading which gives the singular \(i\kappa \lambda \iota \iota \pi \tau \tau\) (Wieseler \(i\kappa \lambda \iota \iota \pi \tau \tau\)) is not to be understood, with Wieseler: if he leaves you in the burch (in death); which, apart from there being no \(\delta \mu \alpha\) expressed, would be very harsh.
as denoting men, the poor and the like, since the text hints nothing of a future elevation of these to the dignity of stewards (in opposition to Meuss), δὲξονταὶ must be understood of the thankful and welcoming reception; but in this interpretation it would be strangely presupposed that the φιλοὶ would be already in the everlasting habitations when the benefactors come thither, or there must somehow be understood a mediate δὲξεσθαί (Grotius: "efficient ut recipiamini"), wherein there would be especial reference to the meritoriousness of alms (xi. 41, see especially Maldonatus and Hilgenfeld, the latter of whom recalls the prayer of the poor in the Pastor of Hermas); but for an interpretation of that kind there is, according to ver. 4, absolutely no justification, and as little for an explanation according to the idea contained in Matt. xxv. 40 (Beza, Calvin, and others, including Wieseler); comp. Luther (Pred.): "Men shall not do it, but they shall be witnesses of our faith which is proved to them, for the sake of which God receives us into the everlasting habitations." Luther, however, further adds appropriately that in this there is taught no merit of works.

Remark.—The circumstance that Jesus sets before His disciples the prudence of a dishonest proceeding as an example, would not have been the occasion of such unseemly misrepresentations and such unrighteous judgments (most contemptibly in Eichthal) if the principle: οὐ δύνασθε βεβ δοκεῖν καὶ μακωμᾶ, ver. 13, had been kept in view, and it had been considered accordingly that even the μακηταί, in fact, by beneficent application of their property, must have acted unfaithfully towards Mammon in order to be faithful towards their contrasted Master, towards God.1 In this unfaithfulness their prudence

1 Hence also the expedient which many have adopted of maintaining that attention is not directed to the morality of the steward’s conduct, but only to the prudence in itself worthy of imitation (see Luther, Calvin, Grotius, Michaelis, Löffler, Bleck, and many others) must be regarded as mistaken, as on general grounds it is unworthy of Christ. The unfaithfulness which is represented is manifested towards Mammon, and this was intended to appear to the disciples not merely as prudence, but also as duty. Hence also there was no need for attempting to prevent the misunderstanding, that for a good end an evil means was commended (which Köster finds in vv. 10–13). Ebrard (on Olshausen, was to consist, because that was the way to attain for themselves the Messianic provision. If further objection has been taken on the ground that in the expedient of the steward no special prudence is contained, it is to be considered that the doctrinal precept intended at ver. 9 claimed to set forth just such or a similar manifestation of prudence as the parable contains. On the other hand, the device of a more complicated and refined subtlety would not have corresponded with that simple doctrine which was to be rendered palpable, to make to themselves friends of the unrighteous Mammon, etc.

Vv. 10–12. These verses give more detailed information regarding the precept in ver. 9. "Without the specified application of the possessions of Mammon, to wit, ye cannot receive the Messianic riches." This is shown, on the ground of a general principle of experience (ver. 10) from a twofold specific peculiarity of both kinds of wealth, by the argument a minori ad majus.—The faithful in the least is also faithful in much; and the unrighteous in the least is also unrighteous in much 1—a locus communis which is to be left in its entire proverbial generality. It is fitted for very varied application to individual cases. For what special conclusion it is here intended to serve as a major proposition is contained in ver. 11 f.—πιστός ἐν ἔλαχις is conceived as one united idea. Comp. on Gal. iii. 26; Eph. iv. 1.—Ver. 11. In the unrighteous Mammon (here also neuter, and altogether as in ver. 9) those are faithful who, according to the precept in ver. 9, so apply it that they make for themselves friends therewith. This faithfulness is meant not from the standpoint of the mammon-mind, but of the divine mind (ver. 13).—ἐγένεσθε] have become, before the Messianic decision,—an expression of the moral development.—τὸ ἀληθινὸν] placed first as a more emphatic contrast to ἐν τῷ ἀδίκῳ μαμ. (comp. ix. 20, xxiii.

p. 678 f.) says: that the dishonest steward is not so much a symbol as an instance of a man who, in the sphere of unrighteousness and sin, practises the virtue of prudence; that from him the Christian was to learn the practice of prudence, but in the sphere of righteousness. But thus the contrast in which the point would lie is first of all put into the passage.

1 Views in harmony with vv. 10 and 12 occur in Clem. Cor. ii. 8; but to conclude therefrom that there is a relationship with the gospel of the Egyptians (Köstlin, p. 223) is very arbitrary.
31): that which is true, which is not merely a wealth that is regarded as such, but ("Jesus loquitur e sensu coelesti," Bengel) the ideally real and genuine riches (comp. on John i. 9), i.e. the salvation of the kingdom of Messiah. Observe the demonstrative force of the article. De Wette, Bleek, and many others, following older writers, wrongly understand the spiritual wealth, the Spirit; compare Olshausen: "heavenly powers of the Spirit." It must be that which previously was symbolized by the reception into the everlasting habitations; hence also it cannot be "the revealed truths, the Gospel" (Ewald), or "the spiritual riches of the kingdom of heaven" (Wieseler), the "gifts of grace" (Lahmeyer), and the like. The objection against our view, that πιστεύσει is not in harmony with it (Wieseler), is not fatal, comp. xix. 17. The contrast indeed is not verbally complete (ἀδίκον . . . δικαίον), but substantially just, since anything that is unrighteous cannot be τὸ ἀληθινὸν, but the two are essentially in contrast.—Ver. 12. ἐν τῷ ἀλλοτρῷ] another specific attribute of the temporal riches, in what is alien, i.e. in that which belongs to another. For ye are not the possessor, but Mammon (in the parable the rich man whose wealth the οἰκονόμος did not possess, but only managed). Altogether arbitrary is the spiritualizing explanation of de Wette, that it is "what does not immediately belong to the sphere of light and Spirit" (comp. Lahmeyer), as well as that of Hölbe, "in the truth which belongs to God." The contrary: τὸ ὑμέτερον, that which is yours, by which again is characterized not spiritual wealth, but the *salvation of the Messianic kingdom,—*to wit, as that which shall be the property of man, for that is indeed the hereditary possession, the κληρονομία (Acts xx. 32; Rom. viii. 17; Gal. iii. 18; Eph. i. 14; Matt. xxv. 34, and elsewhere), the treasure laid up by him in heaven (Matt. vi. 19–21), his πολιτεύμα in heaven (Phil. iii. 20), not a mere possession by stewardship of that which belongs to another as its owner, as is the case in respect of earthly wealth. It is an arbitrary interpolation in H. Bauer, op. cit. p. 540 f., who understands ἐλάχιστον and ἀλλότριον as the ἀδίκος μαμ. of the legal condition, to which is to be attributed no absolute significance.
Ver. 13. A principle which does not cohere with what follows (Holtzmann), but proves as indubitable the denial which is implied in the previous question: “ye shall in the supposed case not receive the Messianic salvation.” Ye are, to wit, in this case servants of Mannaon, and cannot as such be God’s servants, because to serve two masters is morally impossible. Moreover, see on Matt. vi. 24.

Vv. 14, 15. The mocking sneer (ἐκμυκτηρίζειν, xxiii. 35; 2 Sam. xix. 21; Ps. ii. 4, xxxiv. 19; 3 Esdr. i. 53) of the Pharisees, who indeed so well knew their pretended sanctity to be compatible with their striving after temporal possessions, Jesus, in ver. 15, discloses at its source, which was the self-conceit of their righteousness. ὑμεῖς ἐστε κ.τ.λ., ye are the people who make yourselves righteous (i.e. declare yourselves as righteous) before men. Contrast: the divine δικαιοσύνη as it especially became the substance of the Pauline Gospel.¹ The Pharisee in the temple, xviii. 11 f., gives a repulsive illustration of the δικαιοῦν ἑαυτὸν, and he even ventures it in the presence of God.—ὅτι τὸ ἐν ἀνθρώπων ὑπ. κ.τ.λ.] since, indeed, that which is lofty (standing in high estimation) among men is an abomination before God. Comp. Ps. cxxxviii. 6. Thence it is plainly evident that God knows your (evil) hearts, otherwise that which is lofty among men would also be highly esteemed with Him, and not appear as an abomination. This generally expressed judgment of God has as its concrete background the seemingly holy condition of the Pharisees, and hence is not indeed to be arbitrarily limited (multa, quae, etc., Kuinoel); but, moreover, neither is it to be pressed to an absolute and equal application to all, although in relative variation of degrees it is valid without exception. Schleiermacher and Paulus find a concealed reference to Herod Antipas; but this without the slightest hint in the connection could not possibly present itself to the hearers; the less that even ver. 18 cannot be referred to the relation of Herod to Herodias.

(see already Tertullian, c. Marc. iv. 34), since this latter was not forsaken by Philip, but had separated herself arbitrarily from him.

Vv. 16, 17. The sequence of thought is: after Jesus had declared His judgment on His adversaries, according to which, moreover, they belong to the category of the βδέλυγμα ἐνώπιον τ. Θεοῦ, He now tells them on the ground of what standard this judgment has reference to them, namely, on the ground of the Mosaic law (comp. John v. 45), of which not the smallest element should lose its validity by the fact that since John the kingdom of the Messiah was announced, and every man endeavoured forcibly to come into it. The stress lies on ver. 17, and ver. 16 is preparatory, but finds its motive in the fact that the announcement of the kingdom, and the general endeavour after the kingdom which had begun from the time of John, might easily throw upon Jesus the suspicion of putting back the old principle, that of the law, into the shade. But no; no single κεφαλή of the law fails, and that is the standard according to which ye are an abomination in the sight of God.

The want of connection is only external, not in the sequence of thought, and hence is not, as with Schulz, Strauss, and de Wette (comp. also Bleek), to be referred to mistaken recollections from Matthew. Already the source of Luke’s account of the journey had here operated in vv. 16–18, which in Matthew has its historical position. Luke follows his source of information, but it is not without plan that he has supplemented from the Logia (Holtzmann), nor has he pieced the passages together like mosaic (Weizsäcker). — ο νόμος κ. οἱ προφηταὶ ἐως Ἰωάνν. We are not to supply (following Matt. xi. 13) προεφήτευσαν (Euthymius Zigabenus, and many others), but from what follows (see Kühner, II. p. 605), ἐκηρύσσοντο.

1 Grotius and others assume as the connection: "Ne mineianni, si majora dilationis opera nunc quam olim exigantur; id enim postulat temporum ratio. ... Mosis et prophetarum libri ... functi sunt velut puerorum magisterio; ... a Johanne incipit aetas melior," etc. Against this is ver. 17, and, in general (comp. Calovius), the manner in which Jesus honours the law (comp. ver. 31).

2 Others supplement ἵσσα (de Wette, comp. Ewald), which likewise is allowable, and instead of this Theophylact, correctly explaining, places ἰχθύς τῶν καιρῶν. In the place of the Old Testament preaching has now appeared since
As the law and the prophets were announced down to the time of John, so from that time onwards (even through John himself) the joyful tidings of the kingdom of the Messiah appeared, and with what result! See on Matt. xi. 12.—πεσειν] to fall into decay, with reference to its obligation, the opposite of remaining in force. Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 8; Rom. ix. 6; Ruth iii. 18; Judith vi. 9, and elsewhere; Herod. vii. 18; Plat. Eut. p. 14 D. Moreover, see on Matt. v. 18.—The νόμος, ver. 17, is not to be taken in any other sense than in ver. 16 (in opposition to Volkmar, p. 208, who understands the moral law contained in the legal code); but assuredly the continuance here declared, the remaining in force of the νόμος, is referred to its ideal contents. The reading of Marciôn: τόν λόγων μου, instead of τού νόμου, is not the original text, as though Luke had transposed Matt. v. 18 into its opposite, but an inappropriate dogmatic alteration (in opposition to Baur, Hilgenfeld). Comp. Ritschl in the Theol. Jahrb. 1851, p. 351 f.; Köstlin, p. 303 f.; Zeller, Apost. p. 15 f.; Franck in the Stud. u. Krit. 1855, p. 311 f.; Volkmar, p. 207 f., whose conjecture, τόν λόγων τού Θεου, is, moreover, quite superfluous. Against the supposed antinomianism of Luke, see generally Holtzmann, p. 397; Lechler, Apost. Zeit. p. 157 f.

Ver. 18. See on Matt. v. 32, xix. 9. Of what Christ has just said of the continual obligation of the law he now gives John the New Testament preaching. But thereby the annulling of the law is not declared (in opposition to Baur, according to whom Luke must have transformed the words of Matt. xi. 13 to this meaning), but, as ver. 17 shows, the obligation of the law is established in a higher sense. This is also in opposition to Schenkel, p. 385, who, mistaking the connection, considers ver. 17 as an assertion of the Pharisees, and ver. 18 as its confutation, but that already Luke himself has ceased to perceive the relation between the two verses. Nay, Schenkel even strikes at Matt. v. 18 f. Keim rightly says that Jesus nowhere in the synoptic Gospels has declared the abolition of the law. See his Geschichtl. Chr. p. 57 f.

\(^1\) A popular expression of the general urgency. Hence πας is neither to be pressed, nor, with Bengel, to be supplemented by βεβαιωθηναι. Moreover, βεβαιωθηναι is not to be taken of that "quod fieri debeat" (so Elwert, Quaest. et observatt. ad philol. sacr. 1860, p. 20).
an isolated example, as Luke found it here already in his original source. For the choice of this place (not the original one) a special inducement must have been conceived of, which Luke does not mention; perhaps only, in general, the remembrance of the varieties of doctrine prevailing at that time on the question of divorce (see on Matt. xix. 3); perhaps, also, the thought that among those Pharisees were such as had done that which the verse mentions (comp. Euthymius Zigabenus).

—The saying, however, in the mind of Jesus, serves as a voucher for the obligation of the law without exception, on the ground of Gen. ii. 24. See on Matt. xix. 4 ff.; Mark xvi. 6 ff. Olshausen explains this of spiritual fornication,\(^1\) that what God had joined together (i.e. the law according to its everlasting significance, ver. 17), the Pharisees had arbitrarily loosed (in that they loved money and wealth more than God), and that which God had loosed (i.e. the Old Testament theocracy in its temporary aspect, ver. 16), they wished to maintain as obligatory, and had thus practised a twofold spiritual adultery. How arbitrary, without the slightest hint in the text! The supposed meaning of the second member would be altogether without correspondence to the expressions, and the Pharisees might have used the first member directly for their justification, in order to confirm their prohibition of any accession to the Gospel. As to the obviousness of the exception which adultery makes in reference to the prohibition of divorce, see on Matt. v. 32.

Ver. 19. After Jesus in vv. 15–18 has rebuked the Pharisees, He now justifies in opposition to them the doctrines, vv. 9–13, on account of which they had derided Him,—showing them in the following fictitious doctrinal narrative (which is not, as with Hengstenberg, to be transferred to the repast of Bethany) to what riches lead if they are not applied in the manner prescribed in ver. 9, to the \(\pi\omega\iota\epsilon\iota\nu\ \varepsilon\alpha\nu\tau\iota\delta\ \phi\iota\lambda\omega\nuς.\)-\(^2\)

\(^1\) Comp. also H. Bauer, op. cit. p. 544, who thinks the meaning is that Israel is not to separate himself from the Mosaic law, and not to urge it upon the heathens.

\(^2\) The opinion, that by the rich man is meant Herod Antipas (Schleiermacher, Paulus), is a pure invention.
Comp. Theophylact. Dē Wette (comp. Holtzmann) wrongly denies all connection with what goes before, and finds set forth only the thought: Blessed are the poor; woe to the rich (vi. 20, 24), so that there is wanting any moral view of the future retribution, and hence the suspicion arises that in the first portion, vv. 19–26, “the well-known prejudice” of Luke, or of his informant, against riches and in favour of poverty, is arbitrarily introduced. Comp. Schwegler, l. p. 59; also Köstlin, p. 271, and Hilgenfeld, according to whom the parable no longer appears in its primitive form, and must have received from Luke an appendix hostile to the Jews. The moral standard of the retribution is at ver. 27 ff., so emphatically made prominent\(^1\) that it is unreasonable to separate it from the first part of the narrative, and (Strauss, I. p. 632; comp. Schwegler, Baur, Zeller) to speak of the Essene-like contempt of riches (Josephus, Bell. ii. 8. 3). — δὲ transitional, but to put the matter now, so as to act upon your will, etc. See above. — καὶ ἐνεδιδύσκ.] a simple connective link, where the periodic style would have turned the phrase by means of a relative, as is done subsequently in ver. 20. — πορφύρ. κ. \(^1\) See also H. Bauer in Zeller’s Theol. Jahrb. 1845, 3, p. 525, who, however, understands by the rich man the Jewish popular rulers, and by Lazarus the poor Jewish Christians (Ebionites), to the assistance of whom, in their bodily needs, the Gentile Christians (the xivos) had come (Acts xi. 29 f., xxiv. 17, and elsewhere). Such forced interpretations readily occur if the parable is to be explained according to assumed tendencies of the author. Zeller in the Theol. Jahrb. 1843, p. 83 f., explains riches and poverty in the parable before us in a spiritual sense of Judaism and heathenism; according to Schwegler, however, the similitude is, at least from ver. 27 onward, carried on in the anti-Judaic sense. Baur is of the same opinion, and lays stress upon the manner in which the conclusion exhibits the relation of the Jews (who did not believe in the risen Christ) to Christianity; comp. also Hilgenfeld, Evang. p. 201 f. Weizsäcker also finds in it the influence of Ebionitic ideas. Comp. on ver. 1, xv. 11. But in his opinion (see p. 215) the parable concerning Lazarus received a wider development, according to which it now typifies the unbelieving Judaism, which does not allow itself to be converted by Moses and the prophets, and does not believe, moreover, in the risen Christ; the rich Judaism as opposed to the poor Jewish Christianity (comp. p. 502). Thus, moreover, the whole parable, as given by Luke, is turned into a ἀστικὸν πρότερον on the ground of the abstractions of church history.
the Hebrews was frequently used for delicate and luxurious materials. — Jesus does not give any name for the rich man, which is not to be taken, as by many of the Fathers, as a suggestion of reproof (Euthymius Zigabenus refers to Ps. xv. 4), and in general, the absence of the name is to be regarded as unintentional; for the poor man, however, even a significant name readily presented itself to the sympathy of Jesus. Tradition calls the rich man Νυνεψίς, which, according to a Scholiast, appeared also in certain MSS.; as, moreover, the Sahidic version has the addition: cujus crat nomen Nineue.

Vv. 20, 21. In view of the significance of the name, we can the less conclude, with Calvin and others, following Tertullian, that this is an actual history, since even at so early a period Theophylact describes the occurrence of the circumstances as ἀνοητός.¹ Λάζαρος, i.e. ἀπό, abbreviated for ἀπός, Deus auxilium, as frequently also among the Rabbins. See Lightfoot on John xi. 1. Not: ἀπό σπρος, auxilio destitutus (Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, and others). But that any kind of confusion with the Lazarus from Bethany had arisen (de Wette) is a quite arbitrary conjecture. Just as groundless, moreover, is it either to doubt of the historical reality of the Lazarus of the fourth Gospel and his resurrection, because of the Lazarus of the parable being fictitious; or, on the other hand, to support this historical character by the assumption that Jesus in the parable referred to the actual Lazarus (Hengstenberg). The two men called Lazarus have nothing to do with one another. The name which the Lazarus of Bethany actually bore is here a symbolically chosen name, and how appropriate it is! — ἐβέβλητο] not: was laid down (Paulus, Baumgarten-Crusius), but pluperfect, had been thrown down. The poor sick man had been cast down there in order to procure for him what fell from the rich man's table. Even in Matt. viii. 6, ix. 2, the idea is not merely that of lying, but of being cast down. — πρός τὸν πυλώνα] there at the gate (see on Matt. xxvi. 71), which led from the προαύλιον into the house. The form εἰλκωμένος (Lachmann, Tischendorf), afflicted with ulcers (from ἐλκῶω), is convincingly attested, and that in opposition to the usage elsewhere (Eur. Alc. 878: ἔλκωσεν; Plut. Phoc. 2: τὰ ἐλκωμένα); but it was probably formed by Luke, according to the analogy of the augment of ἐλκῶ and ἐλκύω (Lobeck, Paral. p. 35 f.). — Ver. 21. ἐπιθυμῶν desiring, craving after it. Whether he received of what fell or not is left undecided by the expression in itself, and de Wette (comp. Bleek) leaves the matter as it is, there being, as he thinks, nothing at all said about what was done or not done, but only about a lot and a condition. But the following ἄλλα καὶ κ.τ.λ. shows that the craving was not satisfied, which, moreover, presents itself a priori according to the purpose of the description as the most natural thing. The addition borrowed from xv. 16: καὶ οὐδεὶς ἐδίδου αὐτῷ, in min. and vss., after πλουσίου, is hence (comp. xv. 16) a gloss correct in sense. — ἄλλα καὶ οἱ κύνες κ.τ.λ.] but, instead of being satisfied, even still (καὶ, see Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 134) the dogs came, etc. An aggravation of the misery, and that too not merely as depicting the negative evil of neglect (ἄλλα καὶ ἔρημος τῶν θεραπευσόντων, Theophylact; comp. Euthymius Zigabenus), but also positively: the unclean beasts and their licking (ἐπέλειχον) aggravating the pain of the helpless creature! According to others (Jerome, Erasmus, Calvin, Wetstein, Michaelis, and others, including Kuinoel, Paulus, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Ewald, Bleek), even the dogs appeared to have compassion upon him. So also Klinckhardt, super parab. de hom. divite et Lazaro, Lips. 1831. But the idea of contrast which ἄλλα must introduce would not thus be made prominent, nor the accumulation which καὶ indicates, nor would the whole strength of the contrast between vv. 21, 22 remain. According to Bornemann, the meaning is: οὐ μόνον ἐξορτάσθη . . . ἄλλα καὶ κ.τ.λ., "egestati ejus micae de divitis mensa allatae, vulneribus succurrebant canes." This is opposed to the purpose of the doctrinal narrative, to which purpose corresponds rather the unmitigated greatness of the suffering (ver. 25; moreover, the rich man's suffering in Hades is not mitigated).

Vv. 22, 23. Ἀπενεχθήναι αὐτῶν] not his soul merely ("non possunt ingredi Paradisum nisi justi, quorum animae eo feruntur per angelos," Targum on Cantic. iv. 12), but the dead person who is not buried (as the rich man was, ver. 23), but instead thereof is carried away by the angels ("antequam egredentur socii ex hac area, mortui sunt R. Jose et R. Chiskia et R. Jesa; et viderunt, quod angeli sancti eos deportarent in illud velum expansum," Idra Rabba, 1137 f.), and that too into Abraham's bosom, where he lives once more and is blessed (ver. 24 f.). Ewald also, and Schegg, hold the correct view. The usual device, that the burial of the poor man was left without mention, as being worthy of no consideration, is an evasion, the more arbitrary in proportion as the narrative is a fictitious one, the doctrine of which indeed concerns only the condition of the souls in Hades, while its concrete poetic representation concerns the whole man; hence Hofmann, Schriftenw. I. p. 359, mistaking very inconsiderately the poetic character of the description, calls our explanation folly. — eis τόν κόλπον. Comp. Wetstein. See also 4 Macc. xiii. 16, where Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob receive the dead into their bosom. The κόλπος. 'Aβραμ. is therefore not of the same import as Paradise, xxiii. 43, but Abraham is in Paradise (comp. on John viii. 56), and has there received Lazarus to his bosom. The representa-

1 Not of the heavenly blessedness, in respect of which the κόλπος 'Aβραμ. has been made into "sinus gratiae divinae, in quem Abraham pater credentium receptus est" (Calovius). In this way dogmatic theology is at no loss to come to terms with exegesis, maintaining that the sinus Abrahamae is not to be understood subjectively, "quasi ab Abrahamo et in ipsius sinus receptus Lazarus sit" (and this is nevertheless the only correct view), but objectively, as that bosom which "Abrahamum cen objectum fovet in complexu suo." Even Lechler in the Stud. u. Krit. 1854, p. 820 f., doubts that an abode of Abraham in Hades may be meant; but without sufficient reason. His reason, at least,—that the angels elsewhere bring about the intercourse between earth and heaven, not between earth and Sheol,—is not to the purpose. For the angels have also, in the passage before us, the service of mediation between heaven and earth; they are sent from heaven to the earth to bear Lazarus into Abraham's bosom in the paradise of Sheol. The reveries of the later Jews about the angels in the lower paradise, see in Eisenmenger, II. p. 300 ff.
tion of a repast (Groitus, Bengel, Michaelis, Kuinoel, and others) does not belong to this place, but refers to the Messianic kingdom (Matt. viii. 11). — καὶ ἐπάφη] so that therefore it was not with him as it was with Lazarus, who was carried by the angels, etc. It is usually supposed by way of addition to this: splendidly, in accordance with his position, and the like. This is purely arbitrary. — Ver. 23. Hades corresponds to the Hebrew Sheol, which in the LXX. is translated by ἀδής, and hence denotes the whole subterranean place of abode of departed souls until the resurrection, divided into Paradise (xxiii. 43) for the pious, and Gehenna for the godless. Ruth R. i. 1: “Illi descendunt in Paradisum, hi vero descendant in Gehennam.” That ἀδής in itself does not mean the place of punishment alone—hell, although the context may bring with it the reference thereto, is very clearly evident in the New Testament from Acts ii. 27, 31.1 This is in opposition to West in the Stud. u. Krit. 1858, p. 265. From the Old Testament, compare especially Gen. xxxvii. 35. The reward and punishment in Hades is a preliminary one until the full retribution after resurrection and judgment. The upper Paradise, which is in heaven, is not to be confounded with that lower one. See on 2 Cor. xii. 3 f. — ἐν τῷ ἀδής] which region of Hades is meant, is shown by the context. Moreover, let it be observed that the poetry of the narrative transfers even the rich man as to his whole person to Hades, see ver. 24, whither he, however, comes down from the grave.2 — ἐπάφας τ. ὀφθ. ὀρφ. ’Αβρ}} for “Paradisus et Gehenna ita posita sunt, ut ex uno in alterum prospicient,” Midr. on Eccles. vii. 14. 2 In view of the poetic character of these representations, it is very precarious (see Delitzsch, Bibli. Psychol. p. 429 ff.) to seek to gather from them anything on the constitution of a psychical body in the intermediate state (to give instruction on which subject is not at all the purpose of the narrative). Scripture (even 2 Cor. v. 1 ff.) leaves us without any disclosure on this point; hence all the less are we to give heed to declarations of clairvoyants, and to theosophic and other kind of speculations.
until now lifted up his eyes in order to look around him, beyond his nearest neighbourhood. — ἐν τοῖς κόλποις] the plural, as is often the case also in the classical writers since Homer.

Ver. 24. Καὶ αὐτὸς] and he, on his part, as opposed to the patriarch and to Lazarus. — The poetical discourse as it advances now gives us a conversation from the two parts of Hades (for Rabbinical analogies, see in Lightfoot, p. 864 f.), in which, however, the prayer for the service of Lazarus is not on the part of the rich man continued presumption¹ (Lange, J. J. II. 1, p. 394: "that Lazarus was to be sent on an errand for him"), but finds its motive simply in the fact that it is precisely Lazarus whom he sees reposing on Abraham's bosom. The text does not go further, but leaves to be felt with sufficient profundity what is the humiliating reversal of the relation (that the despised beggar was now to be the reviver of the rich man). — τὸ ἀκροὺ τ. δακτ.] even only such a smallest cooling, what a favour it would be to him in his glowing heat! Lange grotesquely conjectures that he asks only for such a delicate touching, because he had seen Lazarus in the impurity of his sores. In his condition he certainly had done with such reflections. — ὅδατος] Genitivus materiae. See Bernhardy, p. 168; Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 148 [E. T. 170].

Ver. 25. Τέκνον] an address of sympathizing patriarchal love. — The emphasis of the refusal lies on ἀπέλαβες, which is hence placed first: that thou hast received thy good things; there is nothing more in arrear for thee as thy due acquittance (see on xviii. 30), hence to thy lot cannot fall the refreshing craved. Compare the ἄπεχειν τῆν παράκλησιν, vi. 26. If the rich man had not used his treasures for splendour and pleasure, but charitably for others (ver. 9), he would, when that splendour and pleasure had passed away from him, have still retained as arrears in his favour the happiness which he had dispensed with. — τὰ ἁγαθά σου] i.e. the sum of thy happiness. — ὁμοίωσ] i.e. ἀπέλαβεν ἐν τῇ ζωῇ αὐτοῦ. — τὰ κακά] i.e. the sum of the evil, corresponding by way of contrast to the τὰ ἁγαθά σου. added. — νῦν δὲ κ.τ.λ.] but now, the reversed condition! He has the happiness left in arrear for him; thou, the sufferings left in arrear for thee! That Lazarus is not to be conceived of as simply a poor man and unfortunate, but as a pious man, who, without special deserving, is a suffering victim, is plain by virtue of the contrast from the unconverted state of the rich man, which brought him into Gehenna, ver. 28 ff. He was one of those to whom applied the μακάριοι οἱ πτωχοί κ.τ.λ., vi. 21. Only this is not to be concluded from the silence of Lazarus before the rich man’s door and in the bosom of Abraham (Lange: “a princely proud, silent beggar—a humble blessed child of God without self-exaltation in the bosom of glory”), for the chief person, and therefore the speaker, is the rich man. — παρακάλεται] see on Matt. v. 4; 2 Thess. ii. 16. The notion that the earthly happiness of the rich man had been the recompense for his τινὰ ἀρετὴν, and the misery of Lazarus the punishment for his τινὰ κακίαν (Euthymius Zigabenus, Theophylact; comp. Rabbins in Wetstein), is an incongruous reflection.

Ver. 26. Ἑπὶ πᾶσι τούτοις] Moreover, in addition to all. Comp. iii. 20. See on Eph. vi. 16, and Wetstein. There follows now after the argumentum ab aequo, ver. 25, still the argumentum ab impossibili for the non-compliance with the request. — χάσμα] a yawning chasm, left, frequently found in the classical writers; comp. χάσμα μέγα in the LXX. 2 Sam. xviii. 17. The idea of such a separation between the two portions of Hades does not occur among the Rabbins, among whom sometimes a separating wall is mentioned, sometimes it is said that the intervening space is only a hand, nay, only a thread in breadth. See Lightfoot, p. 857; Eisenmenger, Entdeckt. Judenth. II. p. 314 f. The chasm belongs to the poetical representation; the thought is the unalterable separation. The reference to Hesiod, Theog. 740, where in Tartarus itself is a χάσμα (comp. Eur. Phocn. 1599), is inappropriate. — ἐστήρυκται] is established, so that it is never again closed. — δῶσιν] purpose of the μεταξύ down to ἐστήρ. — διαβήναι] pass over. — μηδὲ κ.τ.λ.] omitting the article before ἐκείθεν: and therewith they may not cross over thence to us. The subject is self-evident. The Recepta of οἱ ἐκείθεν would have to be explained either, with Buttmann, by supplying θέλοντες διαβήναι, or as a case of attraction instead of οἱ ἐκεῖ ἐκείθεν, Kühner, II. p. 319. Comp. Plat. Cratyl. p. 403 D; Thuc. viii. 107. 2.

Vv. 27–31. What riches lead to when they are not applied according to ver. 9, is shown vv. 19–26. In order, however, to escape from this perdition while there is still time, repentance is necessary, and for this the law and the prophets are the appointed means (comp. vv. 16, 17); and, indeed, these are so perfectly sufficient that even the return of a dead person to life would not be more effectual. — Ver. 28. ὁποῖος] Purpose of the sending; ἔχω... ἀδελφ. is a parenthetic clause; his style is pathetic. — διαμαρτύρω] that he may testify to them, to wit, of the situation in which I am placed, because I have not repented. Euthymius Zigabenus, Luther, and others), but: they will be moved, will be won over, namely, to repent. — A reference to the resurrection of Jesus (Olshausen), or to the manifestation of Elias (Baumgarten-Crusius), is altogether remote, although the word of Abraham has certainly approved itself historically even in reference to the risen Christ. The illustration, moreover, by the example of Lazarus of Bethany, who brought intelligence from Hades, and whom the Jews would have killed, John xii. 10, is not to the point (Chrysostom, Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus).

Approved by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. and Tisch.; ἀμαρτῆσα is a mechanical repetition from ver. 3. — The second τῆς ἡμέρας has such important evidence against it, that Rinck, Lachm. Tisch. have rightly deleted it. An exegetical addition to balance the previous clause. — After ἐπιστρέψῃ Elz. adds ἐπὶ σε. In any case wrong; since A B D L X A 8, min. Instead of εἰς ἡμέρας there is stronger evidence in favour of ἐπὶ ἡμέρας (so Tisch.); the former is an emendation. — Ver. 7. ἀνάπτεσι] Between this form and ἀνάπτεσα (Matth. Lachm. The μέσον written on the margin occasioned the readings διὰ μέσον (B L θ, 28, Lachm. [Tisch. 8]), which usus loquendi is foreign to the New Testament, and ἵνα μέσον (i. 13. 69, al.). — Ver. 23. Tisch. has the arrangement ἵδον ἐκζή, ἵδον δόθη, following B L, Copt., and in any case it occurred more naturally to the transcribers, partly on its own account, partly following ver. 21 and Matt. xxiv. 23, to place δόθη first. — Ver. 24. After ἵστατι Elz. has ναὶ; bracketed by Lachm., deleted by Tisch. A very easily occurring addition (comp. ver. 26), which has preponderating evidence against it. Comp. on Matt. xxiv. 27. — in τῇ ημίρειας αὐτῶν] is, indeed, deleted by Lachm., but is wanting only in B D, 220, codd. of It., and is to be maintained. If it had been added, in τῇ παρουσίᾳ αὐτῶν would have been written, according to Matt. xxiv. 27, and this would have had not merely a few (248, codd. of It. Ambr.), but preponderating authorities. The omission may easily have arisen by means of the homoeoteleuton ἀνθρωποτ... αὐτῶν. — Ver. 27. ἔγεγορμένον] Lachm. Tisch., on preponderating evidence, have ἐγειρμένον. Rightly; the former is a kind of gloss, following Matt. xxiv. 38. — Ver. 30. Here also, as at vi. 23, τὰ αὐτά is to be read, in accordance with B D K Χ π Κα min. — Ver. 34 f. The articles before εἷς and before μία in Elz. Tisch. (the second also in Scholz, Lachm. [Tisch. 3]) have such strong evidence against them, that they appear to have been added, according to the analogy of ὁ ἄτερος and ἢ ἴτερο. — After ver. 35 Elz. Scholz have (ver. 36): ἄνεο ἴσονται ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ ὁ εἷς παραληθήσεται, κ. ὃ ἴτερος ἄφεθη. Against such decisive evidence, that we cannot suppose an omission occasioned by the homoeoteleuton (Scholz), but an interpolation from Matt. xxiv. 24. — συναχθούσονται οἱ ἀστοὶ] Tisch. has καὶ οἱ ἀστοὶ ἰσίσωσαχθούσονται, on very important evidence. The Recepta is from Matt. xxiv. 28.

Vv. 1–4. The Pharisees (xvi. 14) are despatched and dismissed (xvi. 15–31), and Jesus now again turns Himself, as at xvi. 1, to His disciples, and that with an instruction and admonition in reference to σκάνδαλα, a subject which He approached the more naturally that it was precisely the conduct of the Pharisees which had occasioned the entire set of discourses (xv. 2), and especially had introduced the last portion (xvi. 14), that was of a very offensive nature to the disciples of Jesus, and might become injurious to their moral judgment and behaviour. Comp. already Theophylact. The course of the previous discourse therefore still goes on, and it is unfair to Luke to deny to the formula εἴπετε δὲ κ.τ.λ. the attestation of the point of time, and to maintain that there is no connection with the entire section, vv. 1–10 (de Wette, Holtzmann; comp. Michaelis, Paulus, Kuinoel). — The contents of vv. 1–4 are of such a kind that these sayings, especially in a dissimilar form, might be used several times on various occasions (comp. Matt. xviii. 7, 6, 15, 21 f.). In the form in which Luke gives them, he found them in his original source of the journey.

1 — ἀνένεκτόν ἐστι] equivalent to οὐκ ἐνδέχεται, xiii. 33, not preserved elsewhere than in Gregor. Cor. and Artem. Oneir. ii. 70. The expression ἐνδεκτόν ἐστι occurs in Apollonius, de Constr. p. 181, 10, de Adv. p. 544, 1. — τοῦ μὴ ἐλθεῖν] the genitive dependent on the neuter adjective used as a substantive (Kühner, II. p. 122): the impossible (impossibility) of their not coming occurs. Winer views it otherwise, p. 293 [E. T. 412]. — λυσιτελεί αὐτῷ, εἴ] it is profitable for him, if. In what follows observe the perfects, cast around, and he is thrown, by which the matter is declared as completed, and in its completion is made present. — ἦ] as xv. 7. — ἐνα] than to deceive, i.e. than if he remained alive to deceive. The being drowned is here conceived of as before the completion of the deceiving. Matthew has it otherwise, xviii. 6. — τῶν μικρῶν τούτων] pointing to those present, not, however, children (Bengel and others), but disciples, who were still feeble, and therefore easily led astray, — little ones among the disciples, beginners and simple ones.

1 According to Holtzmann (comp. Weisse), Luke attempts the return to Mark ix. 42 (Matt. xviii. 6), but finds the assertions of Mark ix. 43–47 "too glaring and paradoxical." But these assertions were already from the Logia too widely known and current for this; and how wanting in motive would be that return, which still would not be carried out! Comp. Weiss in the Jahrb. f. D. Theol. 1864, p. 101.
According to xv. 1, 2, it is to be supposed that some of them at least were converted publicans and sinners. To explain the expression from Matt. xviii. 6 or x. 42 is not allowable, since there it has in its connection a reason for its insertion, which does not occur here.—Ver. 3. "Considering that offences against the weak are thus inevitable and punishable, I warn you: Be on guard for yourselves, take care of yourselves lest offences occur in your own circle." In what way especially such offences are to be avoided, the following exhortation then declares, to wit, by indefatigable forgiving love, by that disposition therefore which was, in fact, so greatly wanting to the Pharisees, that they could murmur, as at xv. 2. — ἀμαρτη] shall have committed a fault, namely, against thee, which the context proves by ἀφεῖναι and ver. 4. — ἐπιτίμησεν. άντι] censure him, ἐπίπλησον ἀδελφικός τε καὶ διορθωτικός, Euthymius Zigabenus. Comp. 2 Tim. iv. 2. — ἐπιστρέψα] a graphic touch, shall have turned round, i.e. shall have come back to thee (πρὸς σε belongs to this). He has previously turned away from him, and departed. — The representation by means of ἐπτάκες κ.π.λ. (comp. Ps. cxix. 164) finds its justification in its purpose, to wit, to lay stress upon forgiveness as incapable of being wearied out; hence we are not to think of the possible want of principle of such an offender, nor to regard the expression either as a misunderstanding (Michaelis) or as a transformation from Matt. xviii. 21 f. (de Wette, Weiss). Whether ver. 4 stood in the Logia after Matt. xviii. 15 is an open question, at least it does not form the necessary presupposition of Matt. xviii. 21.

Vv. 5, 6. At the conclusion of the whole of the great set of discourses, now at length appear separately the Twelve (οἱ ἀπὸ ἀποστόλων, not to be identified with the μαθηταῖς in general, ver. 1, xvi. 1) with a special request. They feel that the moral strength of their faith in Jesus, i.e. just the loving power of their faith, is not great enough for that great task which is just set them at ver. 4, and ask openly, and with entire confidence in His divine spiritual power, Give us more faith, i.e. stronger energetic faith! It is addition in the sense of intensifying the quality. To suppose a want of connection (Paulus, Schleiermacher, de Wette, Holtzmann), would be justifiable only if it were necessary for πίστις to mean belief in miracles (comp. Matt. xvii. 20); but this the answer in nowise requires. The answer, ver. 6, says: "This your prayer shows that faith (which Jesus, indeed, conceives of in the ideal sense, as it ought to be) is still wholly wanting to you! If you had it even only in very small measure, instead of finding obedience to that rule too difficult, ye would undertake and see accomplished that even which appears impossible (which requires the highest moral power and strength)." According to the reading εἰςετε (see the critical remarks) the idea changes. In the protasis the relation is simply stated, but the apodosis is conditioned by the idea that that which is stated is not, however, actually present. Comp. on 2 Cor. xi. 4; Kühner, ad Xen. Anab. vii. 6. 15. — ὑπηκουσε] not again imperfect, but aorist: ye would say, . . . and it would have obeyed you (immediately even upon your saying). Comp. Xen. Anab. v. 8. 13. On the mulberry tree, see Pliny, N. H. xiii. 14; Dioscor. i. 182.

Vv. 7–10. To such efficiency will faith bring you, but guard yourselves withal from any claim of your own meritoriousness! Thus, instead of an immediate fulfilment of their prayer, ver. 5, as conceived by them, Jesus, by the suggestion, quite as humbling as it was encouraging, that is contained in ver. 6, and by the warning that is contained in ver. 7 ff., opens up to His disciples the way on which He has to lead them in psychological development to the desired increase of faith. Here also Maldonatus, Kuinoel, de Wette, Neander, Bleek, Holtzmann deny the connection. — ὅς κ.τ.λ. ἐστι is to be supplied before. — εὐθέως] is connected by Erasmus, Beza, Calvin, de Wette, Bleek, and others with ἐπεί. But that it belongs to what follows (Luther, Bengel, Lachmann, Tischens-

1 Otherwise Buttmann in the Stud. u. Krit. 1858, p. 483: "Ye ask for an increase of your faith? Have ye then not enough? Verily, and if ye only had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye would be able, if ye wished (i.e. if ye had confidence in your own faith,—the courage of faith,—or made the right use of your faith), to say to this fig tree," etc. But the "if ye would" is interpolated; the ἓρεθε with ἐπεί simply signifies: in a case that may happen if the case of such a miraculous transplantation were supposed.

We are not to supply εστέ after ἰμεῖς. — ἀχρείοι] unprofitable slaves. Comp. Xen. Mem. i. 2. 54: ὁ τι ἀχρείον ἃ καὶ ἄνωφελές. On the contemptuous meaning, see Lobeck, ad Aj. 745. The point of view of this predicate is, according to the context (see what follows), this, that the profit does not begin until the servant goes beyond his obligation. If he do less than his obligation, he is hurtful; if he come up to his duty, it is true he has caused no damage, but still neither has he achieved any positive χρεία, and must hence acknowledge himself a δοῦλος ἀχρείος, who as being such has no claims to make on his Lord for praise and reward. Judged by this ethical standard, the χρεία lies beyond the point of duty, for the coming up to this point simply averts the damage which, arising from the defect of performance, would otherwise accrue. The impossibility, however, even of coming up to this point not only excludes all opera supercrogativa, but, moreover, cutting off all merit of works, forms the ethical foundation of justification by faith. The meaning "worthless" (J. Müller, v. d. Sünde, l. p. 74) is not the signification of the word (any more than in LXX. 2 Sam. vi. 22, ἵππη), but it follows

1 Otherwise Matt. xxv. 30. The different reference in the two passages is explained from the relative nature of the conception. Bengel aptly says: "Miser est, quem Dominus servum inutilem appellant Matt. xxv. 30; beatus, qui se ipse. . . . Etiam angeli possunt se servos inutiles appellare Dei."
at once from this. Moreover, the passage before us does not stand in contradiction to xii. 37, since the absence of merit on the part of man, by which Jesus here desires to humble him, does not exclude the divine reward of grace, by which in xii. 37 He encourages him. It is incorrect to say that Jesus promised to His disciples no other reward than that which is found in the fulfilment of duty itself (Schenkel).

Vv. 11–19. The great discussion from xv. 1 onwards is now concluded. Now, before proceeding with his narration, Luke first gives into the reader’s hands again the thread of the account of the journey (comp. ix. 51, xiii. 22). According to de Wette, indeed, this is a confused reminiscence of the journey, and according to Schleiermacher an original introductory formula left standing by the compiler.—καί αὐτός] As to καί, see on v. 12. αὐτός: he on his part, independently of other travellers to the festival who were wont to travel direct through Samaria, Joseph. Antt. xx. 6. 1. — διὰ μέσου Σαμαρ. κ. Γαλιλ.] According to the usage of μέσον (with or without an article, see Sturz, Lex. Xen. ΙΙΙ. p. 120) with a genitive, this may mean either through the midst of Samaria and Galilee (iv. 30; Jer. xxxvii. 4; Amos v. 17; Bornemann, ad Xen. Anab. i. 2. 23), or through the strip of country forming the common boundary of Samaria and Galilee, i.e. between the two countries on the borders. So Xen. Anab. i. 4. 4: διὰ μέσου (in the midst through between the two walls) δὲ ρέι τούτων ποταμός; Plat. Leg. vii. p. 805 E. Comp. ἄνα μέσου, Ezek. xxii. 26; Judg. xv. 4; 1 Kings v. 12. The former (Vulg. and many others, including de Wette) is opposed to the context, since Samaria is named first, but the πορεύεσθαι εἰς Ἰερούσαλήμ led first through Galilee.¹ No; according to Luke, Jesus Himself journeyed in the midst, between ("in confinio," Bengel), through the two countries, so that He kept on the boundary, having before Him on the south Samaria, on the north Galilee. See also Wetstein, Schleiermacher, Bleek, Hofmann, Weissag. u. Erfüll. II. p. 113; Lange, L. J. II. 2, p. 1065. His direction is to be regarded as from west to east, as in xviii. 35 He comes into the neighbourhood of Jericho. Now as Jericho is situated not far from the Jordan, but Luke says nothing of any passing over to Peraea (nevertheless Wetstein assumes this crossing over, which is said to have occurred at Scythopolis, so also Lichtenstein, p. 318), it is thus, according to Luke, to be assumed that Jesus journeyed across on the boundary of Samaria and Galilee eastward as far as the Jordan, and then passing downwards on the Jordan reached Jericho. A disagreement with Matthew and Mark, who make Him journey through Peraea. See on Matt. xix. 1.—That Σαμαρείας is named first, has its natural reason in the previous statement of the direction εἰς Ἰερούσ., in accordance with which, in mentioning the borders, Luke has first of all in view the forward movement corresponding to this direction. The narrative contained in ver. 12 ff. Luke has not "constructed out of tradition" (Holtzmann), but has borrowed it from his source of the journey.—δέκα] οἱ ἐννέα μὲν Ἰουδαῖοι ἦσαν, ὡ δὲ εἰς Σαμαρείτης ἡ κοινωνία δὲ τῆς νόσου τότε συνήθροισεν αὐτούς ἀκούσαντας, ὅτι διέρχεται ὁ Χριστός, Euthymius Zigabenus.—τόρρωθεν] μὴ τολμῶτες ἐγγίσατι (Theophylact)—to wit, as being unclean, to whom closer intercourse with others was forbidden (Lev. xiii. 46; Num. v. 2 f.). See on Mark i. 43, and the relative Rabbinical regulations in Lightfoot, Schoettgen, and Wetstein.—Ver. 13. αὐτοί] they on their part took the initiative.—Ver. 14. ἴδων] when He had looked upon them, had His attention first directed to them by their cry for help.—πορευόμενως κ.τ.λ.] for on the road their leprosy was to disappear; see what follows, where indeed Paulus, in spite of the ἐν τῷ ὑπάγεων (which is made to mean: when they agreed to go!), interprets ἐκαθαρίσθω, they were declared to be not infectious!—τοῖς ἱερεύσι] the Samaritan to be inspected and declared clean must go to a Samaritan priest.—Ver. 15.

This is made use of (Strauss, II. p. 53 f.) for the view that the entire narrative is woven together from traditions of the healings of leprosy and from parables which recorded Samaritan examples. This audacious scepticism is emulated by Eichthal, II. p. 285 f.—Ver. 17. οἱ δέκα] all the ten; οἱ ἐννέα, the remaining nine. See Kühner, II. p. 135 f.—Ver. 18. οὗ εὑρέθη. κ.τ.λ.] have they not been found as returning, etc. Comp. on Matt. i. 18. — τὸ θερ] who through me has accomplished their cure. Comp. ver. 15. Proper gratitude to God does not detract from him who is the medium of the benefit. Comp. ver. 16. — ὁ ἀλλογενὴς] heightens the guilt of the nine. The word does not occur in classical Greek; often in the LXX. and the Apocrypha, especially of Gentiles. The Greeks use ἀλλόφυλος, ἀλλοεθνής. The Samaritans were of foreign descent, on account of their Cuthaic blood. Comp. on Matt. x. 5; 2 Kings xvii. 24.—Ver. 19. Jesus dismisses the thankful one, giving him, however, to understand what was the cause of his deliverance—a germ for the further development of his inner life! Thy faith (in my divine power, ver. 15) hath delivered thee. This faith had not yet the specific Messianic substance; as yet, Jesus to him was only a divine, miraculously powerful teacher. See ver. 13.

Vv. 20, 21. What follows, and indeed as far as xviii. 30, still belongs to these border villages, ver. 12. It is not till xviii. 31 that the further journey is intimated, on which, at xviii. 35, follows the approach to Jericho. —To consider the question of the Pharisees as a mocking one (Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Calvin, Paulus, Kuinoel, and others), ¹ If the Samaritan had first been to the priest (Calvin, Schleiermacher), Jesus could not have put the question which He asks at ver. 17 f., since the nine Jews had a much farther journey to the priests. The return of the Samaritan is to be conceived of as very soon after the departure, so that the whole scene took place while still in the village.

is unfounded. According to the analogy of other Pharisaic questions, and according to the indirect manner of the answer of Jesus, an intention to tempt Him is rather to be supposed. They wished to perplex Him, since he represented Himself by words and (as just at this moment) by deeds as the Messiah, by the problem, When is the kingdom of Messiah coming? — \( \text{meta } \text{paratrepsews} \) \( \text{meta} \) of accompanying circumstances (Bernhardy, p. 255): under observation, i.e. the coming of the Messiah's kingdom is not so conditioned that this coming could be observed as a visible development, or that it could be said, in consequence of such observation, that here or there is the kingdom. See what follows. The coming is \( \text{apatatrepynov} \)— it develops itself unnoticed. This statement, however, does not deny that the kingdom is a thing of the future (Ewald: “as something which should first come in the future, as a wonderful occurrence, and for which men must first be on the watch”), but only that in its approach it will meet the eye. In the signification of watching and waiting for, \( \text{paratrepnysis} \) would convey the idea of malice (insidiosa observatio, Polybius, xvi. 22. 8); but in the further descriptive \( \text{oud} \) (not even) \( \text{erosin k.t.l.} \), is implied only the denial of the visibility of the event which, developing itself (“gradatim et successive,” Bengel), might be able to be observed (comp. \( \text{paratrepnysis twn astrov} \), Diod. Sic. i. 28). But if the advent of the kingdom happens in such a manner that it cannot be subjected to human observation, it is thereby at the same time asserted that neither can any limited point of time when it shall come (\( \pi\text{ote} \), ver. 20) be specified. The idea: with pomp (Beza, Grotius, Wetstein, comp. Kuinoel and others), conveys more than the text, which, moreover, does not indicate any reference to heathenish astrology or augury (Lange). — \( \text{oud} \) \( \text{erosin} \) Grotius aptly says: “non erit quod dicatur.” On the more definite future after the more general present, see Dissen, ad Dem. de Cor. p. 368 f. — \( \text{idov } \text{gar} \) a lively and emphatic repetition of the \( \text{idov} \) at the beginning of the argument urged against them. This, as well as the repetition of the subject, \( \text{h } \text{basil. t. Theov} \), has in it something solemn. — \( \text{etos v} \text{umov} \) the contrary of \( \text{ektos}, \text{exw} \): \( \text{intra vos, in your circle, in the midst of you.} \) Comp. Xen.

In the midst of them the Messianic kingdom was, so far as He, the Messiah, was and worked (comp. xi. 20; Matt. xii. 28) among them (μέσος οἱμῶν, John i. 26). For where He was and worked, He, the legitimate King and Bearer of the kingdom, ordained thereto of the Father (xxii. 29), there was the Messianic kingdom (which was to be formally and completely established at the Parousia) in its temporal development, like the seed, the grain of mustard seed, the leaven, etc. Rightly, therefore, does Jesus argue (γὰρ) from the ἐντὸς οἱμῶν ἐστὶν that it comes unnoticed, and not in an appearance to be observed, wherein He certainly evades the point of the Pharisaic question which referred to the currently expected appearing of the kingdom (comp. ix. 27, xxi. 28) in so far as the ἐρχεσθαι, which He means refers to the development in time; an evasion, however, which was fully calculated to make them feel the impudent prying spirit of the question they had started, and to bring near to the questioners the highest practical necessity in respect of the coming of the kingdom (the perception of the Messiah who was already in the midst of them). If others¹ have explained ἐντὸς οἱμῶν by in animis vestris (Chrysostom, Theophylact, Erasmus, Luther, Calvin, Vatablus, and others, including Ch. F.ritzscbe in Rosenmüller, Repert. Ver. 22. The Pharisees have got their answer. But Jesus does not allow the point of their question to be lost thereby, but turns now to His disciples (probably after the departure of the Pharisees, as they do not appear again in what follows, and as the discourses themselves bear an unreserved character, wholly different from ver. 20 f.), in order to give to them instructions in reference to the question raised by the Pharisees, and that not on the temporal development of the kingdom of the Messiah wherewith He had despatched them, but on the actual solemn appearing of the Messiah in the Parousia. "Calamities will arouse in them the longing after it, and false Messiahs will appear, whom they are not to follow; for, like the lightning, so immediately and universally will He reveal Himself in His glorious manifestation," vv. 22–24. 1 It is not on account of the example of the two in bed together that the night is named (Hofmann, Schriftbew. ii. 2, p. 626), but conversely the idea of the night-time suggested that illustration.
Remark.—With regard to the discourses which are set forth here, vv. 22–37, but in Matt. xxiv. at another time and in another connection, viz. in that of the great discourse on the end of the world (comp. Luke xxii.), some have attributed (Schleiermacher, p. 215 ff., 265 ff., Neander, Olshausen, Bleek), others have denied (de Wette), originality to Luke. The latter view depends upon the assertion of a want of connection, and partial inappropriateness of the expressions in Luke, which assumption, however, is not justified by the exposition. But the former cannot be allowed at the expense of Matthew (see especially Schleiermacher, who supposes in Matthew a mingling of the originally separate discourses, Luke xvii. 22 ff. and xxi. 5 ff.), since even in Matthew everything stands in strictly linked connection; but Luke xxi., in the same way as Matthew, places the Parousia in connection with the destruction of Jerusalem, xxi. 25 ff. (comp. Strauss, II. p. 338). Without doing injustice to the one or the other evangelist, originality is to be conceded to both, so that Luke xvii. 22 ff. has preserved, in accordance with his original source, a discourse spoken by Jesus, which, not preserved by Matthew, and belonging to an earlier period than Matt. xxiv. and Luke xxi., has the characteristic feature that it remains entirely apart from connection with the destruction of Jerusalem. That the substance of its contents was repeated by Jesus Himself in the great discourse of Matt. xxiv., is, in respect of the similarity of the material, intelligible enough, and this holds good especially of the characteristic words—lightning, deluge, eagles. But it cannot be decided how much in the execution and form is carried over from the one discourse into the other by the mingling processes of reminiscence and tradition, the rather that in general we can ascribe to the discourses in the synoptic Gospels on the end of the world originality only within certain limits, i.e. originality modified by the reflection and expectation of the church (see on Matt. xxiv., Remarks).

Ver. 1. What Jesus has hitherto said of His Parousia was of such weighty and everlastingly decisive concern for His disciples, that it was calculated to stimulate them to unremitting prayer, that they might become partakers of the ἐκδικησίως which the Parousia was to bring to them (ver. 7). Hence (without the omission of any intervening dialogue, Schleiermacher, Olshausen) now follows the parable of the widow and the unjust judge, peculiar to Luke, and its application (vv. 1–8). This parable is no addition inserted without a motive (Köstlin, Holtzmann), nor is it taken from the Logia; but it comes from the source of the account of the journey. Weizsäcker alleges that it must have been a later growth, annexed by Luke to his source of the narrative of the journey; that the judge is the heathen magistracy; the widow, the church bereaved after the departure of Christ; her adversary, the hostile Judaism. Vv. 2, 3. \( \Gamma\alpha\nu\ θ\epsilon\omicron\ \ldots \ \kappa. \ \alpha\nu\theta\rho\omicron\omicron\tau. \ \kappa.\tau.\lambda.\] Similar characterizations from profane writers may be seen in Wetstein. Bengel well says: "Horum respectuum alterutrum certe plerosque mortalium movere solet et injustitiam (ver. 6) judicium cohibere." — \( \epsilon\nu\tau\rho\epsilon\tau\omicron\omicron\mu. \] standing in awe of, Matt. xxi. 37; Luke xx. 13; 2 Thess. iii. 15; Heb. xii. 9. In the Greek writers more frequently used with a genitive. The disposition implied by \( \epsilon\nu\tau\rho\epsilon\tau\omicron\omicron\mu. \) is respect and regard. — \( \eta\rho\chi\epsilon\tau\omicron\omicron\] Grotius aptly says: ventitabant. See Kühner, II. p. 76 f. — \( \epsilon\kappa\delta\kappa\iota\kappa\sigma\omicron\nu \) \( \mu\epsilon \) \( \alpha\pi\tau\) \( \kappa.\tau.\lambda.\] revenge me (and deliver me by this my judicial restitution) of, etc. Comp. Judg. xi. 36: \( \pi\nu\iota\eta\omicron\sigma\iota \) \( \kappa\omicron\rho\omicron\nu\ \epsilon\kappa\delta\kappa\iota\kappa\sigma\omicron\nu \) \( \ldots \) \( \alpha\pi\tau\) \( \tau\omicron\nu \) \( \upsilon\omicron\omicron\omicron \) \( \alpha\mu\mu\omicron\omicron. \)

Vv. 4, 5. \( \Sigma\nu\tau\iota \) \( \chi\rho\omicron\nu\omicron \) for a time, Hom. II. ii. 299; Plat. Protag. p. 344 B, Phaed. p. 84 C; Nägelsbach, Anm. z. Ilias, ed. 3, p. 284. — \( \delta\iota\gamma\gamma\epsilon \) as at xi. 8. — \( \iota\nu\alpha \) \( \mu\eta \) \( \kappa.\tau.\lambda.\] is explained: that she may not continually (\( \epsilon\iota\sigma \) \( \tau\epsilon\lambda\omicron\sigma \) equal to \( \delta\iota \) \( \tau\epsilon\lambda\omicron\sigma \), see Kypke and Wetstein; comp. \( \tau\upsilon \) \( \tau\nu\) \( \kappa.\tau.\gamma\lambda.\) come and plague me. See also Luther's gloss. But that \( \upsilon\omega\nu\tau\iota\alpha\zeta \omega \) (to strike any one's eyes black and blue, see Wetstein) is to be taken in the general sense of harass, annoy, there is no proof, since it is an error to adduce not merely 1 Cor. ix. 27, but also Aristoph. Pax 541, where the \( \pi\delta\lambda\epsilon\omicron\upsilon \) \( \upsilon\omega\nu\tau\iota\alpha\sigma\rho\omicron\epsilon\mu\omicron\omicron\) are represented as smitten and wounded persons, and hence the word is to be taken in the literal sense, to beat black and blue. But the assumption of a Latinism, after the manner of \( \omega\tau\nu\kappa\omicron\delta\omicron\) (Beza, Grotius), is arbitrary, and does not at all correspond with the special idea of the Greek word. Accordingly there is nothing left us but to interpret: that she may not at last come and beat my face black and blue. The judge mockingly puts the case of the woman at length becoming desperate, and actually laying hands on him and beating his face black and blue. The Vulgate rightly has it: sugillet me. Comp. also Bleek and Schegg. On εἰς τέλος, at the end, finally, comp. Herod. iii. 40, ix. 37; Xen. Oec. xvii. 10; Soph. Phil. 407, and thereupon Hermann; Gen. xlvi. 4, and elsewhere. τέλος, without any preposition, might also have been used.

Vv. 6, 7. Hear what the unrighteous judge (ὁ κρίτης τῆς ἄδικιας, see on xvi. 8) says! But God, will He not, etc. In this contrast lies the conclusion that the ἐκδίκησις, on which that worthless judge decided in respect of the perseveringly praying widow who was so troublesome to him, is the more certainly to be expected from God in respect of the elect, who are so dear to Him, and who so constantly cry to Him for the final decision. On οὐ μὴ in a question, see Winer, pp. 449, 454 [E. T. 634, 642]. — According to the reading κ. μακρόθυμῳ ἐπ' αὐτοῖς (see the critical remarks), the most simple explanation is: but God, will He not fulfil the avenging of His elect, and does He tarry¹ for their sakes? and is it His concern, in reference to them, to delay His interposition, or postpone His aid? See Ecclus. xxxii. 18. Comp. Maldonatus, Grotius, Bornemann in the Stud. d. Sächs. Geistl. 1842, p. 69 f., Bleek. In respect of the delay which nevertheless, according to human judgment, does occur, Grotius rightly observes: “illum ipsum tempus, quamvis longum interdum ferentibus videatur, re vera exiguum est imo momentaneum, unde τὸ παρανυκτικά τῆς θλίψεως dixit Paulus, 2 Cor. iv. 17.” According to Bengel and Ewald, καὶ μακρόθυμῳ ἐπ' αὐτ. is connected hebraistically with τῶν βοῶντων: and over them He is forbearing; whereby the delay of the ἐκδίκησις would be derived from the patience with which God still allows to His elect further time for more perfect sanctification (2 Pet. iii. 9). According to the construction, this would be harder, and in its meaning less in correspondence with the subsequent ἐν τάχει. The Recepi would have to be understood: will He not . . . fulfil, even although He delays in reference to them?1—that is to say, with that ἐκδίκησις of them; καίτοι μακροθυμῶν καὶ φαινόμενος ἁνηκουστείν τῶν δεομένων αὐτοῦ νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας, Theophylact, not, with Hassler (in the Tüb. Zeitschrift, 1832): since He is still patient towards them, i.e. does not lose patience as that judge did. For, apart from the incorrect view of the use of the καὶ, the thought itself is unsuited to the doctrinal narrative, since it was actually through the judge’s loss of patience (rather: his becoming annoyed) that the ἐκδίκησις of the woman was brought about. Moreover, de Wette is wrong in remarking against the reading μακροθυμεῖ, and its meaning, that if the thought that God delays were removed, the parable would have no meaning at all, since μακροθ. corresponds to the οὐκ ἡθελ. ἐπὶ χρόνον, ver. 4. Therein is lost sight of the fact that the example of the unrighteous judge teaches e contrario (see already Augustine, Serm. 36) the procedure of God. — The ἐκδίκησις τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν consists in the deliverance from their enemies who are punished at the Parousia, and in their own exaltation to the salvation of the Messiah’s kingdom for which they are chosen. Comp. xxii. 22. The idea of this ἐκδίκησις enters so essentially into the texture of the New Testament eschatology, that in various forms it runs through the entire New Testament, and hence it is not easily to be seen why it should be regarded as standing apart from the views of our evangelist, and should remind us of the fiery zeal of the apocalyptic writer (Köstlin, Hilgenfeld). Comp. preceding passages in Luke (i. 51 ff., 71 ff).

Ver. 8. An answer to the two parts of the preceding question: (1) ποιήσει . . . αὐτῶν, and (2) ἐν τάχει. — This ἐν τάχει is the opposite of delay (μακροθυμεῖ, ver. 7): quickly, without delay (Acts xii. 7, xxii. 18, xxv. 4; Rom. xvi. 20; 1 Tim. iii. 14; Rev. i. 1, ii. 5, xxii. 6; Wisd. xviii. 14; Pind. Nem. v. 35; Xen. Cyr. vi. 1. 12), declaring the speedy advent2

1 Lange is wrong in saying: although even over them He rules high-mindedly (and therefore inscrutably).
2 It is in vain to weary oneself and twist about in the attempt to explain away this simple meaning of the words, as, for example, Ebrard does on iev.
of the Parousia (ix. 27), at which shall follow the ἐκδίκησις. — πλὴν ὁ νῦς κ.τ.λ.] It is to be accentuated ἀρα (so also Lachmann and Tischendorf); comp. on Gal. ii. 17. In connection with the glad promise, to wit, which Jesus has just given in reference to the elect, there comes painfully into His consciousness the thought what a want of faith in Him He would nevertheless meet with at His Parousia. This He expresses in the sorrowful question: Nevertheless will the Son of man when He is come find faith on the earth? Theophylact well says: ἐν σχήματι ἔρωτισεως τὸ σπάνιον τῶν τότε εὑρεθησομένων πιστῶν ὑποσημαλύνων. The subject: ὁ νῦς τ. ἀνθρ. and ἐλθὼν is, with a sorrowful emphasis, placed before the interrogative ἀρα, on account of the contrast with what follows. See Klotz, ad Devar. p. 183. The πίστις is the faith in Jesus the Messiah, which many of His confessors not persevering unto the end will have given up, so that they do not belong to the elect (Matt. xxiv. 5, 10 ff., 24), and He will meet them as unbelievers. Hence there is no reason for concluding from the passage before us (de Wette), that the putting of the parable into its present shape probably belongs to a time when the hope of the Parousia had begun somewhat to waver (2 Pet. iii. 3 f.). — ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς] is correlative with the coming down from heaven, which is meant by ἐλθὼν.

Ver. 9. It is the more arbitrary to assume that the following doctrinal narrative was originally delivered in another connection (Paulus, Olshhausen, de Wette; comp. Kuinoel), that it rather affords a confirmation of the probability (see on xvii. 22) that the Pharisees, after our Lord’s rejoinder to them, xvii. 20 f., were no longer present. The historical connection with what precedes is not more closely to be indicated than

I. 1, p. 104. There is only this to be said, that the final deliverance, how long soever it may appear to be delayed as to its beginning, shall still be so internally and potentially hastened that it shall be made an unexpectedly hasty ending to the condition of tribulation that precedes it. See, on the other hand, Düsterdieck.

1 So many, as the Lord sees, shall be seduced into unbelief (as to the ἱερως αἰὼν παντικός, comp. on Gal. i. 4), that in grief thereat He puts the question generally, whether He shall find faith. Herein lies a sorrowful hyperbole of expression.
is pointed out by the characterization of the τινες as τῶν πεποιθήκης. These men, according to ver. 9, must in some way or another have made manifest their disposition, and thereby have given occasion to Jesus to deliver the following discourse as far as ver. 14. Who are the people? Assuredly not Pharisees, since it is actually a Pharisee that Jesus presents as a warning example. Possibly they were conceited followers of Jesus (Schleiermacher; de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius), but more probably: Jews of a Pharisaic dispositions, since Luke does not here, as at ver. 1, designate the disciples expressly, and it was just for Jews of this kind that not only the example of the Pharisee, but also that of the publican, was the most humiliating.—πρὸς] He spoke to them. To take it as at ver. 1 (Kuinoel, de Wette, and many others) is unsuitable, since there are persons in this place, and the context suggests no occasion for departing from the usual ad quosdam (Vulgate). —τινας τῶν πεποιθότας] designates the persons in the abstract indefinitely, but in the quality in question specifically. See on Gal. i. 7, and Bornemann, Schol. p. 113; speak in thought, and the like. Naturally he would not allow such a prayer to be heard. The publican is otherwise,

The context gives as the meaning neither: the forecourt of the Gentiles (the publican was a Jew), nor: far from the sanctuary, but: far away from the Pharisee, of whom hitherto our Lord has been speaking. Bengel rightly says: “de nemine alio homine cogitatur.” — Ver. 14. κατέβη κ.τ.λ.] a lively picture of the result, in which the emphasis rests on παρ’ ἐκεῖνον, as is shown by the following ὅτι πᾶς κ.τ.λ. — δεδικ.] in the Pauline sense: justified, i.e. accepted by God as righteous. The Epistle to the Romans is the most complete commentary on the whole of this doctrinal history, without, however, it being necessary to take the publican as the representative of heathenism (Schenkel). — The reading παρ’ ἐκείνου (see the critical remarks) is in the sense of the comparison (xiii. 2, 4; Bernhardy, p. 258 f.): prae illo, in respect of which the context decides whether what is declared is applicable to the other one in question, only in a lesser degree (as xiii. 2, 4), or not at all (as here; comp. Xen. Mem. i. 4. 14), whether, therefore, the expressed preference is relative or absolute.¹ Comp. Luther’s gloss: “The former went home, not justified, but condemned.” It is similar at Matt. xxi. 31; John iii. 19; 1 Tim. i. 4. The reading: ἦ γὰρ ἐκείνος, would have to be explained interrogatively, and that not in the sense of the familiar interrogative form: ἦ γὰρ, is it not true? (Klotz, ad Devar. p. 594), but, with Bornemann (and Glöckler): “or did the former one go justified to his house?” But how unsuitable in the connection (it is otherwise at xx. 4), since λέγω ἤματι leads one to expect, and actually supplies, only a categorical statement! And this use of γὰρ after the interrogative ἦ is rationally conceivable, it is true, but no instance of it can be produced. The Recepta ἦ ἐκείνος, although critically objectionable, is founded on the correct feeling that ἦ in this place could only be the usual comparative, but γὰρ alongside of it would be meaningless. — ὅτι πᾶς κ.τ.λ.] as-xiv. 11.

Vv. 15–17. See on Matt. xix. 13–15; Mark x. 13–16. The peculiar source of which Luke has hitherto availed himself, which supplied the material from ix. 51, now ends, or Luke leaves it, and becomes substantially synoptic again, following Mark especially, although, while he does so, he still has special passages of his own (see especially xix. 1–10). The place and time of what follows as far as ver. 31 are, according to Luke, still the same as of what has preceded (from xvii. 11). — καὶ τὰ βρέφη] their children also, so that not merely the people themselves came to Him. than \( \pi a i \delta i a \) in Matthew and Mark, the latter of whom Luke follows, although omitting his conclusion, ver. 16, to which abbreviating treatment no special purpose (in opposition to Hofmann, II. 2, p. 194) is to be imputed. — \( \ddot{\alpha} \pi \tau \eta \tau \alpha i \) the present tense, brings the situation before us. — Ver. 16. \( \pi \rho o s- \kappa \alpha l. \ a i \tau \alpha i \) He directed His call to the infants themselves (probably: come to me, little ones!), and then spoke to those who carried them, etc.

Luke alone has this more precise designation of the man from tradition, and herein diverges from Matt. xix. 20. — In the answer of Jesus, ver. 19, Luke simply follows Mark, abbreviating also at ver. 20. The Marcionite reading: \( \dot{o} \gamma \alpha r \ \dot{\omega} \gamma a \theta o s \ e i s \ \dot{e} \acute{\sigma} \tau \iota \nu, \ \dot{o} \ \theta e \omega s \ \dot{o} \ \pi a i \prime r, \) is nothing but an old gloss (in opposition to Volkmar, Hilgenfeld), not more Marcionite than the reading of the text, and this latter is no anti-Marcionite alteration. Both forms of the expression are already found in Justin, and our Gospel of Luke is to be regarded (Zeller, Apostelg. p. 32 f.) as his source for the form which agrees with the passage before us (c. Tryph. 101). Comp. on Mark x. 17. — Ver. 22. \( \dot{e} \tau i \ \dot{e} v \ s o i \ \lambda e i \pi e i \) does not presuppose the truth, but only the case of what is affirmed by the \( \ddot{\alpha} \rho \chi o n. \) It does not, moreover, assert the necessity of selling one's goods and distributing them to the poor, in order to be perfect in general, but only for the person in question, in accordance with his special circumstances, for the sake of special trial. See on Matt. xix. 21. Hence there is not to be found, with de Wette, in the words an application of the saying of Jesus that gives any pretext for mistaken representations.

Vv. 28–30. See on Matt. xix. 27–29; Mark x. 28–30, the latter of whom Luke follows with abridgment. — \( \ddot{d} \chi \ o v \ \mu \iota \ \kappa .\tau .\lambda . \) ] Comp. Mark xiii. 2. Vv. 31–34. See on Matt. xx. 17–19; Mark x. 32–34. Luke, it is true, abridges Mark’s narrative, yet he also expands it by the reference to the fulfilment of Scripture, ver. 31, and by the observation in ver. 34. — παραλαβὼν κ.τ.λ.] A continuation of the journey, on which at ver. 35 ff. the narrative then again lingers at Jericho. — τῷ ὑπί τ. ἀνθρ. On the dative of reference with γράφειν, comp. 3 Macc. vi. 41. The reading περὶ τοῦ ὑπ. τ. ἀνθρ. (D, Vulg. al.) is an inaccurate gloss on the correct construction. Others (Castalio and many more, including Kuinoel, Bornemann, Schegg, comp. Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 154 [E. T. 178], who refers it to both τελεσθ. and γεγραμμ.) connect it with τελεσθ., and explain either: upon the Son of man, as Matt. xiii. 14 (so the majority), or of Him (Bornemann, following Beza). But even apart from the fact that the position of the words rather suggests the connection given above, the unlimited πάντα τὰ γεγρ. is opposed to the latter, since the prophets have written much, which was neither to be fulfilled upon nor of the Messiah. Besides, the following ver. 32 f. is opposed to Bornemann, seeing it is not there said what the Messiah should do, but what He should suffer. — Ver. 34. Vv. 35–43. See on Matt. xx. 29–34; Mark x. 46–52. Luke, reproducing Mark’s narrative in an abridged form, adds nevertheless independently the important conclusion (ver. 43), and follows a variation of the tradition in transposing the circumstance so as to make it precede the entry. But the purpose of annexing the history of Zaccheus was in no wise needed to occasion this departure from Mark (in opposition to Bleek and Holtzmann). — Ver. 36. τί εἰη τοῦτο] without ἄν (see the critical remarks), asks, quite specifically, what this

The authorities, however, are very much divided between συκομορέαν (so now Tischendorf also, following B L D Ν) and συκομορέαν (Lachmann); Galen also has μορέα, de comp. med. 5 (in Wetstein on xvii. 6). As, nevertheless, the reading συκομοραίαν also adds to the support of συκομόρ., although it is plainly a transcriber’s error, the Recepta is to be maintained. Vv. 5–7. Whether Jesus had any personal knowledge of Zacchaeus, is a matter which could be decided only by circumstances unknown to us; and hence to bring in the higher knowledge of Jesus (Olshausen), as seeing him nevertheless directly in his inner nature, is in the case before us a course without sufficient justification, although Strauss, I. p. 575 f., builds thereon the view that the history is a variation of the theme of the intercourse with the publicans. According to Paulus, some one named the man to him. — σήμερον] emphatically, comp. ver. 9. This day is the day so important to thee, when I must abide in thy house (stay the night, John i. 39). δεῖ is spoken from the consciousness of the divine appointment (ver. 10), "as if He could not dispense with Zacchaeus, whom, nevertheless, everybody else avoided as a great sinner" (Luther, Predigt.). — Ver. 7. The murmurers (διηγογγυ, see on xv. 2) are Jews, who accompanied Jesus to the house of Zacchaeus, situated (ver. 1) before the city on the way towards Jerusalem, and here at the entrance, probably in the forecourt where the publican came to meet Jesus, saw how joyously he receives Him. Comp. on ver. 11. — παρὰ ἀµ. ἀνδρ[.] belongs to καταλύσαι.

Ver. 8. The supposition "Jesu cohorationes et monitiones tantam vim habuisse in Zacchaei animum," etc. (Kuinoel, comp. Grotius), and that the murmuring and the vow did not occur till the morning of the departure (Schleiermacher, Olshausen), has no foundation in the text, in accordance with which it was rather the immediate personal impression of Jesus that seized and took possession of the wealthy chief publican in that manner. His vow includes the consciousness of his unworthiness of the great happiness that has befallen him through the entertainment of the Messiah, and his determination, for the sake of this happiness, to make abundant compensation for his former guilt. According to Paulus, the publican wished to confute the charge παρὰ ἀµ. ἀνδρ[.] and said εἰ τινὸς τι ἔσυκοφ. κ.τ.λ. in the conviction of his innocence. This is opposed to the context, opposed to the preceding τὰ ἡµίσιον. κ.τ.λ., and opposed to ver. 10; moreover, his whole style of asserting his innocence would be an unbecoming piece of parade. — σταθεὶς] he stood forth before Jesus,—a joyful confidence. Comp. on xviii. 11. — ἡµίσιον] The form ἡµίσεα (Lachmann), which Attic writers approve, is a correction either from ἡµίσιον or from ἡµίσεα.1 As to the substantival neuter, see Kühner, § 479 b; Bornemann, ad Xen. 1 Tischendorf, namely, has adopted τὰ ἡµίσεια, in accordance with B L Q A Θ. Certainly in the classical writers ἡµίσια (scil. μίσι ο or μισις) is the substantival feminine of ἡµίσιον, Thuc. vi. 62. 4; Plat. Leg. 12, p. 956 D, Ep. vii. p. 347 C; Dem. 430. 8; Lucian, Herm. 48; while τὰ ἡµίσεια occurs also at least in Antonin. Lib. ii. p. 16; hence it is all the more probable that Luke wrote it, but it was then changed into ἡµίσια, and finally into ἡµίσιον.
anything from any one by fraud. The verb (iii. 14) is construed like ἀποστερεῖν τινός τι (Plut. Dem. iv.; Soph. Phil. 1267), ἀπολαύειν τινός τι (Xen.  Ηιερ. vii. 9, Mem. i. 6. 2; Plat. Crit. p. 54 A; Arist. Νῦβ. 1231); among the Greeks with παρά, Lys. p. 177, 32. The εἶ is not to make the matter uncertain, as though he were conscious to himself of no such extortion, but εἶ ... τι is the milder expression of self-confession instead of ὅ,τι. See Dissen, ad Dem. de cor. p. 195. — τετραπλοῦν] he professes himself ready for a measure of compensation, such as was ordained for theft, Ex. xxi. 37; 1 Sam. xii. 3. Comp. Keil, Arch. § 154. 3. Vv. 9, 10. Πρὸς αὐτόν] to him, πρὸς, as vv. 5, 8; not: in reference to him (Grotius, Rosenmüller, Kuinoel, de Wette, and others), so that Jesus spoke to the disciples or to the people (Paulus). He speaks to Zacchaeus, but not in the second person (τῷ οἴκῳ σου), because what He said was to serve at the same time as a correction for those murmurers (ver. 7, comp. on ver. 11), and consequently was to have a more general destination. Hence it is also at least unnecessary, with Ewald, to assume an audible soliloquy of Jesus, and to read πρὸς αὐτόν (to himself) (comp. πρὸς ἑαυτόν, xviii. 11). — καθότι καὶ αὐτός κ.τ.λ.] in accordance with the fact that (i. 7; Acts ii. 21; in the New Testament used only by Luke) he also (as other Jews, although he is despised as a sinner) is a son of Abraham, —as which he belongs to the saving solicitude of the Messiah. Comp. xiii. 16. It is not the worthiness (Grotius, Kuinoel, Bleek, and others), but the theocratic claim that is meant. Cyprian, Tertullian, Chrysostom, Maldonatus, and others, including Schenkel, who regard Zacchaeus as a Gentile, are compelled to take νῶς Ἀβρα. in an ethical sense ("quamvis genere non sit, tamen fide est," Maldonatus). But that he was a Gentile is in itself (see also on ver. 2), and according to ver. 8, not to be supposed, and is not implied in ver. 7.— Ver. 10. γὰρ] justifies what is said at ver. 9: with full right do I say that this day is salvation come to this house (the family of this house), etc., for the Messiah has come to seek and to save that which is lost, i.e. those who have incurred eternal ruin. The collective neuter used of persons, as in John xvii. 2; on the thought, see 1 Tim. i. 15. — ἡλθε] emphatically placed first; for Jesus declares the purpose of His appearance.— ζητήσας] might be suggested by the idea of a shepherd (xv. 4); still the text contains no closer reference of that kind. Hence it is rather a general expression of the seeking of the love that is solicitous for souls. Comp. 2 Cor. xii. 14. Moreover, comp. on Matt. xviii. 11.

Ver. 11. As to the relation of the following parable to Matt. xxv. 14—30, see on Matthew; the form in Luke is not the original one; see also Weiss in the Jahrb. f. D. Th. 1864, p. 128 ff. — ἀκούοντον δὲ αὐτῶν ταῦτα] But because they heard this (ver. 8 ff.), whereby their Messianic anticipations could only be strengthened; see what follows. Not the disciples (Grotius and others), but only those murmurers, ver. 7, could be the subject—the single plural-subject which preceded. The scene is this—the people in attendance have accompanied Jesus as far as the entrance into the house (as far as into the forecourt), when they also observe how Zacchaeus joyously welcomes Jesus, and they murmur; whereon Zacchaeus speaks the words, ver. 8, and Jesus the rejoinder, vv. 9 and 10. — Both utterances therefore are spoken while they are still at the entrance, so that the murmuring crowd also listens to what is said. The connection is neither disclosed first of all from the contents of the parable (Weizsäcker), nor is it obscure (de Wette, Holtzmann), but it is darkened by the interpreters (see also Schleiermacher). — προσθεῖς] adding to, still continuing—a Hebraism, as at Gen. xxxviii. 5, Job xxix. 1, and elsewhere; Winer, p. 416 [E. T. 588]. In pure Greek the expression would run προσθεῖς παρὰβ. εἶπεν.— εἶπε παρὰβ.] Comp. xviii. 9. — ἐγγύς] 150 stadia, Joseph. Bell. iv. 8. 3.

1 In affinity with the contents of this parable is the word which Christ, according to Clem. Homil. ii. 51, iii. 50, xviii. 20, and Apelles in Epiphan. Haer. 44. 2, is said to have spoken: γίνοντι ὑμῖν παρατίθειν. The wide publication of this saying in Christian antiquity (Clem. Alex., Origen, etc.) makes it probable (in opposition to Lechler, Apost. Zeit. p. 458) that it actually was a word of Christ's.

Vv. 12, 13. Here is represented a man of noble descent, a nobleman, who journeys into the far country to the governor, who possesses the supremacy, in order to receive, as a vassal, from him regal power over those who have been his fellow-citizens up to that time. This representation is borrowed from the circumstances of governors in Palestine at that time, the kings of which, the Herods, received from Rome their βασιλεία; especially the instance of Archelaus, in respect of the fruitless protest raised against him by the Jews (Joseph. Antt. xvii. 11. 1), is sufficiently similar, reasonably to derive the parabolic narrative, so far as that part of it is concerned, from the remembrance of that transaction.¹—εἰς χώραν μακράν] a contrast with the παραχρῆμα, ver. 11, for Jesus must first go into heaven to the Father, but not consequently removing the Parousia beyond the duration of the lifetime of the generation (Baur, Zeller), since the reckoning at the return has to do with the same servants. — εαυτῷ] he wished to receive the kingly dignity for himself, although till then there had been another king.— Ver. 13. εαυτοῖς] ten slaves of his own, of whom therefore he might rightly expect the care of his interest. ² An essential variation from Matt. xxv. £3, 7s. 8d. to £3, 12s. 4d.]. The small sum astonishes us (even if we should understand thereby Hebrew minae; one ἰπ = 100 shekels, 1 Kings x. 17; 2 Chron. ix. 16). Compare, on the other hand, the talents, Matt. xxv. But in Matt. l.c. the lord transfers to his servants his whole property; here, he has only devoted a definite sum of money to the purpose of putting ten servants to the proof therewith, and the smallness of this amount corresponds to what is so carefully emphasized in our parable, viz. the relation of faithfulness in the least to its great recompense, ver. 17, which relation is less regarded in the parable in Matthew; hence in his Gospel (xxv. 21, 23) it is only said ἐπὶ ὅλγα (not as in Luke xix. 17, ἐν ἔλαχιστῳ); and the recompense of the individuals is stated indefinitely and in similar terms. The device that the lord took most of his money with him on the journey (Kuinoel) explains nothing; but the assumption of a mistake in the translation (Michaelis), whereby out of minae is made portions (ἵνα), is sheer invention.—πραγματ. follow commercial pursuits, Plut. Sull. vii. 17, Cat. min. 54; Lucian, Philops. 36. —ἐν δὲ ἐρχομαι] during which (to wit, during this your πραγματεύσομαι] I come, i.e. in the midst of which I return. Vv. 16, 17. Modeste lucrum acceptum fert herili pecuniae, non industriae suae," Grotius, comparing 1 Cor. xv. 10. On ἀνθρ. αὐστηρὸς εἰ, comp. ver. 22, hence no longer dependent on δτι, thou takest up what thou hast not laid down. This is to be left in the generality of its proverbial form as an expression of the unsparingness of the property of others, which, however, is here conceived of not as dishonest, but in stringent vindication of legitimate claims. The servant pretends that he was afraid for the possible case of the loss of the mina; that the rigorous lord would indemnify himself for it from his property. De Wette and Bleek are wrong in reading: thou claimest back what thou hast not entrusted,—opposed to which is the literal meaning of αἴρεις and its correlation with ἔθηκας. Moreover, ver. 23 is not in harmony therewith. Comp. rather the injunction in Josephus, c. Ap. 2: ὀ μὴ κατέθηκέ τις, οὐκ ἀναιρήσεται, and the law of Solon in Diog. Laert. i. 2. 9: ἄ μὴ ἔσου, μὴ ἄνέλυ. The austere character (αὐστηρὸς) consists in the regardlessness of the inhumanity, in respect of which is experienced the "summum jus, summa injuria." The epithet σκληρός in Matthew denotes the same thing, but under a different figurative representation (in opposition to Tittmann, Synon. p. 139).

Vv. 23, 24. The question comes in abruptly with καὶ, laying bare the contradiction between the clauses. See Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 147.—ἐπὶ τράπεζαν (without an article, see the critical remarks), on a banker's table. The sign of interrogation is to be placed, with Lachmann and Tischendorf, after τράπεζαν. καὶ ἐγὼ (Lachmann, Tischendorf: καὶ γῶ) κ.τ.λ. is then the result which, in the event hinted at by διὰ τὶ κ.τ.λ. (ἂν, see Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 187 [E. T. 216]), would have followed.—Ver. 24. τ. παρεστ.] i.e. the satellites, i. 19.
— τὰς δέκα μνᾶς] the ten minae mentioned at ver. 16, therefore not those which he had from the beginning, but those which he has acquired for himself with the mina that was entrusted to him.

Ver. 25 interrupts the discourse, since at ver. 26 the king (not Jesus) continues, as is proved by ver. 27; hence, with Lachmann and Ewald, ver. 25 is to be put in parentheses, but not, with Bleek, to be set aside as an interpolation. — Ver. 26 justifies (even without γάρ, see the critical remarks) the direction contained in ver. 24 by a general principle; but the parenthesis of ver. 25 contains the reason wherefore the king added this justification.

Comp. Xen. Anab. iv. 1. 23; Herod. viii. 127; Soph. O. R. 730; Diod. Sic. xii. 76; 2 Macc. v. 12.

The doctrine of the parable, according to Luke's form of it, concerns, on the one hand, the Jewish people that would not receive Jesus as the Messiah (comp. John i. 11); and, on the other, the disciples who were to make application of the official charge entrusted to them (the μνᾶ which each had equally received) zealously as far as possible in the interest of the Messiah until His Parousia. The Messiah thus appears in a twofold relation: to His perverse people and to His servants. The latter are to be called to account at the Parousia, and according to the measure of the actual discharge of official duty committed equally to all, will be exalted to a proportionally high degree of participation in the Messianic dominion (comp. Rom. v. 17, viii. 17; 1 Cor. iv. 8; 2 Tim. ii. 12).
This happiness, however, will be so far from falling to the lot of the indolent servant, who in any case is inexcusable,\(^1\) that he was rather to be deprived of the official position of service which he had received, and consequently was to receive no kind of share in the future glory of the kingdom, to which, nevertheless, he also had been appointed. But the former, the antagonistic Jews, are to be dealt with by the returning Messiah with the heaviest punishments.

Ver. 28. The narrative is wanting in precision, since, according to ver. 5 f., this ἐπορεύετο did not take place till the next morning. — ἐμπροσθεν] He went before (“praecedebat,” Vulg.), i.e. according to the context (ver. 29), at the head of His disciples. Comp. Mark x. 32. Erasmus, Kypke, Kuinoel, Ewald, and others have: He went forwards, He pursued His journey. This would be the simple ἐπορεύετο (xiii. 33 and elsewhere) or ἐπορ. εἰς τὸ ἐμπροσθεν.

Vv. 29–38. See on Matt. xxi. 1–9; Mark xi. 1–10. Luke follows Mark, yet not without something peculiar to himself towards the end. With Fritzsche, ad Marc. p. 794 f., Lachmann, and Tischendorf, we must certainly place the accent thus on the word ἔλαιον, olive-grove, olivetum; not as though, if it were ἔλαιον, the article would in itself be necessary (after ἔλαιον ὁρος would have to be repeated), but because Luke, when he designates the mountain as the “Mount of Olives,” constantly has the article (ver. 37, xxii. 39); but besides, in Acts i. 12, where he likewise adds καλοῦμι, he undoubtedly uses the form ἔλαιον as a name. Hence, at Luke xxii. 37 also, ἔλαιον is to be written. Comp. Joseph. Antiq. vii. 9. 2: διὰ τοῦ ἔλαιον ὁρος. On the nominative, in respect of a verb of naming, see Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 517; Fritzsche, l.c.; Bernhardy, p. 66. — Ver. 31. τι] because, an answer to διὰ τι. — Ver. 33. οἱ κύριοι] the actual possessor and those belonging to him. — Ver. 35. ἑαυτῶν] they use their own upper garments for a riding cushion in their reverence and love frequent in the LXX., to dash on the ground (Hos. xiv. 1; Nah. iii. 10; Ps. cxxxvii. 9). The children of the city are its inhabitants, Matt. xxiii. 37; Luke xiii. 34; Gal. iv. 25. The city is figuratively regarded as a mother, hence τὰ τέκνα are not to be understood (Kuinoel) of the actual children (infantes). — τὸν καὶρ. τ. ἐπισκ. σου] the time of the solicitude concerning thee, when God interested Himself for thee by means of the offer of the Messianic salvation through me. Comp. 1 Pet. ii. 12; Prov. xxix. 13; Job xxix. 4; Wisd. ii. 10, iii. 7; Ecclus. xviii. 19; 3 Macc. v. 42, and thereon Grimm. ἐπισκ. οὐκ οὐκ in itself is a vox media, and in the LXX. and Apocrypha (Wisd. xiv. 11, xix. 15) is frequently also used when God concerns Himself with any one in punishment. The word does not occur in the classical writers.

\(^1\) Ver. 23 serves to mark this inexcusableness in the concrete illustration. The text does not give any further verbal interpretation of the banker's counter. Lange, L. J. II. 1, p. 414, finds that by the τράπεζα is depicted the church or the congregation to which the office might have been given back.

Vv. 45, 46. See on Matt. xxi. 12 f.; Mark xi. 15–17. Luke proceeds by brief extracts, and, moreover, gives the saying in Isa. lvi. 7 not as Mark gives it, but in the abbreviated form of Matthew. — ἥρξατο] He began therewith His Messianic ministry in the temple. Schleiermacher erroneously regards vv. 45, 46 as the concluding formula of the narrative of the journey.

Ambr., and is condemned by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. The superfluous word was omitted on account of the parallels; there was no reason for its addition. — Ver. 14. ἰωντοῦσα] Tisch. has ὀλλούσα, following BDL ἴ, min. vss. The Recepta is from ver. 5 and Mark xii. 7; comp. Matt. xxi. 38. From the parallels also comes δεῖς, which, in accordance with very important evidence, is deleted by Rinck, Lachm. and Tisch. Luke nowhere has the word. — Ver. 19. With Lachm. and Tisch., on preponderant evidence, read: οἱ γραμμ. καὶ οἱ ἀρχεῖοι. — Ver. 20. εἰς τό] BCDL ἴ have ὡστε, which, with Bornemann, Lachm. and Tisch., is to be adopted; the εἰς τό, foreign to Luke, is an interpretation. — Ver. 23. τι με πειράκτης] condemned by Griesb. and Rinck, deleted by Tisch., following B LR ἴ, min. Lachm. has retained the Recepta, nevertheless he places before ὡσαῦτως another ὡσαῦτως in brackets, and throws out the καί which Elz. has after ἵστα, with Griesb. and Scholz. I agree with Tisch. in regarding as original the text of B D L S, 157: καί ὁ δευτέρος καί ὁ τρίτος ἠλαβὲν αὐτὴν ὡσαῦτως δὲ καί οἱ ἵστα ὃν κατὶλ. τέκνα κ. αὐτῆς. Comp. Bornem. in the Stud. u. Krit. 1843, p. 136; also Rinck, Lucubr. p. 333. To this text the gloss ἠλαβὲν αὐτὴν was added to ὁ δευτ.; this occasioned the dropping out of these words in their true place, and there appeared: καί ὁ δευτέρος ἠλαβὲν αὐτὴν κ. ὁ τρίτος κ.τ.λ. Thus still Copt. The deleting of ἠλαβὲν αὐτὴν in this spurious place, without restoring them again to the genuine one, occasioned the text of D: καί ὁ δευτέρος κ. ὁ τρίτος (without ἠλ. αὐτ.). The Recepta has grown up out of circumstantial glosses. Even the double ὡσαῦτως (Α E H V Γ Δ, min. Goth. Syr., taken by Matth. into the text) is a gloss; it was thought to be necessary to complete the simple ἠλαβὲν αὐτὴν. The καί, which Elz. has after ἵστα, is indeed defended by Rinck, but decisively condemned by the authorities. A connective addition made from misunderstanding. — Ver. 32 is, as by Tisch., to be read: ύστερον καί ἡ γυνὴ ἀκέφαλης (Lachm.: ὕστ. ἀκέφ. κ. ἡ γ.). The Recepta is from Matth. — Ver. 33. The order of the words: ἡ γυνὴ ὁδύ τῇ ἀναστ. (B L), is, with Tisch., to be preferred; it was altered in accuracy with the parallels. — Ver. 34. ἵγαμίσκοντα] objectionable, since A K M P U Γ Δ, min. have ἵγαμίζονται, while B L S, min. Or. Epiph. Nyss. have ἱγαμίζονται. Read the latter, with Lachm. and Tisch. The Recepta and ἵγαμίζονται are glosses to give greater precision. Equally, however, at ver. 35 also is not to be read ἱγαμίζονται, with Matth. Lachm. Tisch., in accordance with D L Q R Δ S, but ἱγαμίζονται, in accordance with B. — Ver. 40. δὲ] B L N, min. Copt. Tisch. have γάρ. Rightly; γάρ was not understood.

Vv. 1–8. See on Matt. xxi. 23–27; Mark xi. 27–33. Luke follows Mark with some abbreviation, and with some material peculiar to himself, as also in the further portions of this chapter.—ἐν μιᾷ τῶν ἡμερῶν] (without ἐκείνον, see the critical remarks) is, as v. 17, viii. 22, an approximate statement of the date; the days in question are meant, to wit, of the stay in Jerusalem. Schleiermacher is arbitrary in seeing here the beginning of a special document.—ἐπέστησαν] came upon. The idea of suddenness and unexpectedness is not of itself contained in the word, and needed to be expressed (as xxi. 34; Isocr. viii. 41; Philo Flacc. p. 981 C, al. in Loesner), or at least suggested by the context (comp. on ii. 9). — Ver. 2. η introduces a more definite idea of the point of the question. — Ver. 3. καὶ εἰπατέ μοι] καὶ is the simple and : I will ask you, and tell me (what I shall ask you). Then follows the question itself. — διεκληγς] they reckoned, they considered. Only here in the New Testament, frequently in the classical writers. — Ver. 6. πᾶς ὁ λαὸς καταλιθῆ ἡμᾶς] a later form of the tradition. The word is not elsewhere retained. The corresponding German word (vielleicht) expresses not mere conjecture, but, although in a still doubting form, his expectation (“spem rationi congruentem,” Bengel). See Locella, ad Xen. Vv. 20–26. See on Matt. xxii. 15–22; Mark xii. 13–17. — παρατηρήσαν] having watched, so that they had thus further lain in wait for Him after that hour, ver. 19, in order to be able to entrap Him. — ἐγκαθέτουσι] people instigated, secretly commissioned, Plat. Axiosch. p. 368 E; Dem. 1483. 1; Polyb. xiii. 5. 1; Joseph. Antt. vi. 5. 2. — έιναυτούς δικαιούς εἶναι] who feigned that they themselves were strict observers of the law, who, therefore, by the pressure of their own consciences (not instigated by other people), came with the following question. These therefore are such "qui tum, quum maxime fallunt, id agunt, ut vivi boni videantur," Cicero, Off. i. 13. — ἐπιλάβη] The subject is the members of the Sanhedrim. — αὐτοῦ λόγου] in order to take hold of Him on a word. αὐτοῦ does not depend on λόγου (Kypke, Kuinoel, Bleek), but on ἐπιλάβ., and λόγου is the secondary object. See Job xxx. 18. Xen. Anab. iv. 7. 12: ἐπιλαμβάνεται αὐτοῦ τῆς ἴτους. The Vulgate rightly has: "eum in sermone." — ὁστε (see the critical remarks), as iv. 29; Matt. xxiv. 24. — τῆς ἀρχῆς κ. τῆς ἐξουσ. τ. ἤγγ.] to the supremacy and (and especially) the power of the procurator. To combine the two ("the supremacy and power of the magistrate," Beza, de Wette, Bleek) is not indeed forbidden by the repetition of the article, but it is opposed by it, because this repetition would have no motive. — Ver. 21. λαμβάν. πρόσωπ.] art not a partisan. See on Gal. ii. 6. — Ver. 22. φόρον] capitation and land-tribute, to be distinguished from τέλος, the indirect tribute (the tax on merchandise), see Kypke, II. p. 183 f., and already Thomas Magister, p. 900, ed. Bern. Comp. Rom. xiii. 7. Luke uses the Greek instead of the Roman word ἐκνοῦν, found in Matthew and Mark. — Ver. 26. Observe the careful depicting of the triumph of Jesus. Comp. ver. 39 f.

Vv. 27–40. See on Matt. xxii. 23–33; Mark xii. 18–27. — οἱ ἀντιλέγοντες does not belong by an abnormal apposition to τῶν Σαδδουκαίων (thus usually, including Winer, p. 471 [E. T. 668]), but to τίνες. According to the rectified text (see the critical remarks): And the second and the third took her; in like manner, moreover, also (as those three who had taken her and died childless) the seven (collectively, comp. xvii. 17) left behind no children, and died. Logically ἀπέθανον ought to precede, but the emphasis of οὐ κατέλ. τέκνα has occasioned the ύπτερου πρότερου. See Kühner, II. p. 629; Bornemann, Schol. p. 125. — Ver. 34 f. οἱ νιόλ τοῦ αἰώνος τοῦτοῦ] Comp. on xvi. 8. Yet here what is meant is not according to the ethical, but the physical idea: the men of the pre-Messianic periods of the world. — οἱ δὲ καταξιωθ. κ.τ.λ.] but they who (at the Parousia) shall be counted worthy (comp. 2 Thess. i. 5) to become partakers of the future age (the Messianic period), and of the resurrection from the dead. Herein is to be observed—(1) that here is likewise a πρότερου ύπτερου (comp. on ver. 31), for the resurrection discloses the participation in the αἰών ἐκεῖνος; but the context (see also τῆς ἀναστάσι. νιόλ ὄντες, ver. 36) shows that Jesus has in view only those who are to be raised, apart from those who are still living here at the Parousia, comp. Rom. viii. 11; (2) according to the connection (καταξιωθ., and see ver. 36), the resurrection here meant is defined as the first, the ἀνάστασις τῶν δικαίων (see on xiv. 14). — The genitives τοῦ αἰών. ἐκ. and τῆς ἀναστ. are governed by τυγχ. The immortality of those who have risen again, even if it does not exclude the difference of sex absolutely (comp. Delitzsch, Bibl. Psych. p. 459 ²), still excludes marriage among them, since propagation presupposes a mortal race; ἐνταύθα μὲν γὰρ ἐπεὶ θάνατος, διὰ τοῦτο γάμος, Theophylact. — ἵσαγγ. . . . ὄντες] gives the reason of the οὐδὲ ἀποθανεῖν ἦτο δύνανται; their immortality depends upon their changed nature, which will be—(1) equality with the angels; and (2) sonship of God. The former in respect of their higher and no longer fleshly corporeality (in opposition to Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 316 f.; Delitzsch, and others; comp. on Matt. xxii. 30); the latter plainly not in the moral, but in the metaphysical sense; they, as risen again, have entered into the participation of divine life and divine glory (comp. on Matt. v. 9, 45), in respect of which the freedom from death is essential. See on νίκεῖ Θεόν, so far as it is used in Matthew and Luke (in Mark this designation does not occur) of the faithful only in respect of their condition after the Parousia, the apt remarks of Kaeuffer in the Sächs. Stud. 1843, p. 202 ff. But the expression cannot be borrowed from the Old Testament designation of the angels as sons of God (so Wittichen, Ideen Gottes als d. Vaters, p. 43), since the risen ones shall only be angel-like, not angels. — Ver. 37. Observe the special selected word ἐμῆνσεν, which denotes the announcement of something concealed (John xi. 57; Acts xxiii. 30; 1 Cor. x. 28; Thuc. iv. 89; Herod. i. 23; Soph. O. R. 102; Plut. Tim. p. 27 B). — καὶ Μ.] i.e. even Moses, to whom ye are nevertheless appealing for a proof of the contrary, ver. 28. — ὃς λέγει κύριον κ.τ.λ.] "narrando sc. quod Deus dixerat," Grotius. — Ver. 38. πάντες γὰρ αὐτῷ ζώσιν] for all (whose God He is) are living to Him. The emphasis lies on πάντες: no one is dead to Him. αὐτῷ is the dative of reference: in respect of Him, that is, in relation to Him who is their God, they are—even although dead in relation to men—living.¹ This state of living actually has place in the intermediate state of Paradise,² where they, although dead in reference to living men, continue to live to God, and therewith is established the future resurrection as the necessary completion of this state of living. The argumentation in Luke is accordingly, by the addition of ver. 38, not different from that in Matthew and Mark, and it takes no inappropriate turn (de Wette), whereby the thought must have suffered (Weizsäcker), but is the same grand application of the divine utterance as in Matthew and Mark (see on Matthew), only enriched by that short explanatory clause ἀλλὰ ζώντων, which was introduced into the tradition,² certainly at a later date, but without affecting the substance, except in the way of indicating the point of the argument. The αὐτῷ, however, cannot without arbitrariness be taken, according to Acts xvii. 28, as though it were ἐν αὐτῷ (Ewald: "all men, so far as they have a true life, have it only in God"). — Ver. 40. γὰρ] (see the critical remarks) gives an explanation as to ver. 39. The tables had been turned; a few praised Him, for any further

² The ζῶσι subsists not merely in the view of God, who considers them in reference to their future resurrection as living, as J. Müller, v. d. Sündé, II. p. 397, makes out.

hostile putting of questions, such as might be expected instead of praise, was no more to be thought of. So completely He stood as victor there again (comp. on ver. 26). With the narrative of the greatest commandment, Mark xii. 28–34, of which Luke is said to have retained only the beginning and the end (vv. 39, 40), the evangelist has here nothing at all to do (in opposition to Holtzmann). There is nothing of a reminiscence of Mark xii. 28 (Weiss) in ver. 39; there appears no sort of reason to attribute such poverty to Luke.

Vv. 41–44. See on Matt. xxii. 41–46; Mark xii. 35–37. eiπε δὲ προς αὐτ. to the scribes, ver. 39 f., and indeed (otherwise Matthew and Mark) immediately after what is before related. Without reason, Grotius says: de illis, as ver. 19.

Vv. 45–47. See on Matt. xxiii. 1, 6, 7, 14; Mark xii. 38–40; which latter Luke closely follows after he has proceeded with considerable abbreviation in vv. 41–44.

Hence Lachm. has ἀντιστιθῆναι ὑπὸ ἀντιστιθῶν, and Tisch. has ἀντιστιθῶν ἢ ἀντιστιθῆναι. These variations are to be explained from the fact that ἀντιστιθῆναι, with ἢ or ὑπὸ, on account of the similar beginning of the following verb, was passed over. So according to D, Syr. Pers., Vulg. ms. codd. of It. Cypr. Aug. Rinck. When the passage was restored, the verbs were placed in different order; and instead of ἢ after the previous ὑπό, ὑπὸ was inserted. I regard the Recepta as being right, as the preceding clause contains a qualifying word (αἰφινόθε), but what follows in ver. 35 needed a similar qualification (ὡς παγίς). Through mistaking this, and attracting ὃς παγίς as a correlative of αἰφινόθε, to the preceding clause, γάρ has been put out of its right place. Instead of ἐπελευσται, however, read with Lachm. and Tisch., in accordance with B D Ν, ἐπεισελευσται. The doubly compounded form disappeared through error on the part of the transcribers, as frequently happened. — Ver. 36. καταξεῖ,] Tisch. has καταξκεῖσε, following B L Χ Ν, min. Copt. Aeth. Ar. p. Rightly; the Recepta is a very old gloss in accordance with xx. 35, comp. 2 Thess. i. 5. — τάντα is deleted by Matth. and Tisch. [Tisch. — αναρχορ. not Tisch. 8]. But most of the principal mss. [including Ν] (not Ν) and vss. have it. Nevertheless, it remains doubtful whether it is to be read before (B D L Χ, [Ν] Elz. Lachm. [Tisch. 8]) or after τάντα (A C* M). If τάντα τάντα τά is original, the omission of the superfluous τάντα is the more easily explained. — After ver. 38 four cursives have the section concerning the woman taken in adultery, John vii. 53—viii. 11.

After πλουσίους might also be supplied δύναται (Bornemann), in which case, however, the meaning comes out less appropriately, for they were not rich people only who were casting in (comp. more remote subject (Fortsch, Obs. in Lys. p. 74; Winer, p. 142 [E.T. 195]). Jesus points to the persons in question. — eis τὰ δῶρα to the gifts (that were in the treasury), not: quaes donarent (Beza), to which the article is opposed.

Vv. 5–38. See on Matt. xxiv. 25; Mark xiii. In Luke a very free reproduction from the Logia and Mark. That this discourse was spoken on the Mount of Olives (Matt. Mark), there is in him no trace. Rather, according to him, it still belongs to the transactions in the temple, which began xx. 1 (comp. ver. 37); hence, moreover, the ἀναθήματα are found only in Luke.

Vv. 5, 6. Καὶ τινῶν λέγ. κ.τ.λ.] These expressions gave the occasion for Jesus to utter the following discourse, and that, as is plain from the discourse itself, to His disciples (the apostles also included), to whom, moreover, the τινες belonged. — ἀναθήματι Lachmann and Tischendorf, following A D X Ἐ, have the Hellenistic form ἀναθέματι (see Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 249, 445; Puralip. p. 391 ff., 417, 424). On the many votive offerings of the temple, partly also such as the two Herods had given, and even Ptolemy Euergetes, see Joseph. Bell. vi. 5. 2; Antt. xv. 11. 3, xvii. 6. 3; c. Apion. I. 1064; Ottii Spicileg. p. 176 f., and generally, Ewald, Allerth. p. 81 ff. The most splendid was the golden vine, presented by Herod the Great. See Grotius. Casaubon, following Beza, connects τότε with \[\text{ε'γερθό.} \text{ In that case the insertion of } \text{ἐλεγεν ἀυτοῖς} \text{ would be absolutely without motive. The motive is found precisely in } \text{τότε, which, however, notifies simply only a resting-point of the discourse, not "a much later point of time," to which what follows would belong (Holtzmann, following Köstlin), which variation as to time Luke might have put into the mouth of Jesus as easily as at ver. 12.} \]

Ver. 11. 'Ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ belongs not only to σημεῖα (B, Lachmann: ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ σημ.), but also to φόβητρα, because in the connection the latter needs some qualifying clause. μεγάλα belongs to both. Moreover, comp. with reference to this detail which Luke has here, 4 Esdr. v. 4. On φόβητρα (terrific appearances), comp. Plat. Ax. p. 367 A; Lucian, Philop. 9; Isa. xix. 17. As to κατὰ τῶν, see on Matt. xxiv. 7.

Vv. 12, 13. Πρὸ δὲ τοῦτον π.] otherwise in Matthew and Mark. But Luke follows a later modification of the tradition moulded after the result.\(^1\) In opposition to the words of the passage (for πρὸ means nothing else than before, previously), but with a harmonistic end in view, Ebrard, Diss. adv. erron. non-nullor. opinion. etc. p. 34, says: "persecutiones non post eeteras demum calamitates, sed inter primas esse perferendas."—Ver. 13. εἰς μαρτύριον] but it shall turn (comp. Phil. i. 19) to you for a witness, i.e. not: εἰς ἐλεγχον τῶν μὴ πιστευσάντων (Enthymius Zigabenus), but it will have for you the result that ye bear witness for me. The context requires this by means of ἐνεκεν τοῦ ὅνῳ. μου, ver. 12, and see ver. 14 f. The matter itself is regarded as something great and honourable (εἰς μαρτυρίου δόξαν, Theophylact). Comp. Acts v. 41. For the testimony itself, see for example Acts iv. 11 f. The reference to martyrdom (Baur, Hilgenfeld, Holtzmann) is opposed to the context and brings in a later usus loquendi.

Vv. 14, 15. Comp. xii. 11 f.; Matt. x. 19 f.; Mark xiii. 11 f. — εγώ] stands with great emphasis at the beginning,

\(^1\) In respect of this Baur, Evang. p. 477 (comp. his Markusevang. p. 99 f.), thinks that Luke desires to claim what has been previously said by Jesus "altogether specially for His Apostle Paul." Comp. also Köstlin, p. 158, and Holtzmann. But then it would have been an easy thing for him to name more specially Pauline sufferings. Compare rather Matt. x. 17 f.

Vv. 18, 19. Comp. 1 Sam. xiv. 45; 2 Sam. xiv. 11; 1 Kings i. 52; Acts xxvii. 34. But the meaning cannot be, "ye shall remain unharmed in life and limb," against which interpretation the preceding καὶ θανατ. ἐξ ὕμων, ver. 16, is decisive, since θανατ. cannot be taken, as by Volkmar, of mere danger of death; rather ἀπόληται is to be taken in a Messianic sense. Comp. the following κτήσεσθε τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν. Hence: no hair of your head shall be subject to the everlasting ἀπώλεια, i.e. you shall not come by the slightest harm as to the Messianic salvation; but rather, ver. 19: through your endurance (Matt. x. 22, xxiv. 13; Mark xiii. 13), in these persecutions, ye shall gain your souls, whereby is denoted the acquisition of the Messianic salvation; the latter is regarded as the life, and the opposite as death. Comp. the following κτήσεσθε τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν, Mark viii. 36. The form of the expression θρίξ ἐκ τ. κεφ. κ.τ.λ. has therefore a proverbial character (Matt. x. 30), and is not to be taken in such a manner as that God would restore again every hair at the resurrection (Zeller in the Theol. Jahrh. 1851, p. 336; comp. his Apostelg. p. 18 f.). The omission of the verse in Marcion shows that at an early period there was already found therein a contradiction to ver. 16, as Görörer, Baur, Hilgenfeld, and others still find there. This apparent impropriety makes it the more improbable that ver. 18 should be a later addition (Wilke, Baur, Hilgenfeld), perhaps from Acts xvii. 34.

Vv. 20–22. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 15–18; Mark xiii. 14–16. What was to happen πρὸ τοῦτων πάντων, ver. 12, is now concluded. From this point the discourse continues where it broke off at ver. 12. — κυκλοῦμ.] representing the object as already conceived in the situation and therein perceived (Bernhardy, p. 477; Kühner, II. p. 357), being surrounded on all sides.¹ — Ver. 21. οἷ ἐν τῷ Ἰουδ.] refers to the Christians; this follows from ver. 20. — αὐτής] has reference to Jerusalem, as subsequently εἰς αὐτὴν. Without this day of vengeance, an essential portion of the prophetic predictions, in which the desolation of the city and the country is in so many different ways announced as a judgment, must remain unfulfilled. The prophecy of Daniel is, moreover, meant along with the others, but not exclusively. Comp. already Euthymius Zigabenus.

The latter is then introduced in the second member (τῷ λαῷ τοῦτῳ) by καὶ (and especially); but μεγάλη belongs to both. ¹ Wieseler, in the profound discussion in the Gott. Vierteljahrschr. 2 Jahrg. 2 Heft, p. 210, finds in the words κυκλ. ὡν ἔστιν ἀστρατ. κ.τ.λ. an explanation of the βδίλνμα τῆς ἱρμών, Matt. xxiv. 15, which Luke gave for his Gentile-Christian readers. He thereby maintains his interpretation of the βδίλνμα of the Roman standards, and of the τίτας ἤγως, Matt. l.c., of the environs of Jerusalem. Certainly our passage corresponds to the βδίλνμα τῆς ἱρμών, in Matthew and Mark. But Luke did not want to explain the expression of Daniel, but instead of it he stated something of a more general character, and that from his later standpoint, at which the time of the abomination of desolation on the temple area must needs appear to him a term too late for flight. We have here an alteration of the original ex eventu.

² But the expressions are too general for a reference directly to the flight of the Christians to Pella (Volkmar, Evang. Marcion’s, p. 69).

Comp. Rev. xi. 2. Such times of the Gentiles are ended in the case in question by the Parousia (vv. 25 fl., 27), which is to occur during the lifetime of the hearers (ver. 28); hence those καυπολ are in no way to be regarded as of longer duration,¹ which Dorner, de orat. Ch. eschatolog. p. 73, ought not to have concluded from the plural, since it makes no difference with respect to duration whether a period of time is regarded as unity, or according to the plurality of its constituent parts. See, for example, 2 Tim. iii. 1 comp. with iv. 3; 1 Tim. iv. 1; Ecclus. xxxix. 31; 1 Macc. iv. 59; 2 Macc. xii. 30. In opposition to Schwegler, who likewise finds betrayed in the passage a knowledge of a long duration, and therein the late composition of the Gospel; see Franck in the Stud. u. Krit. 1855.

Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 2, p. 643, erroneously dates the beginning of the καυροὶ ἐθνῶν not from the taking of Jerusalem, supposing, on the contrary, the meaning to be: till the time, in which the world belongs to the nations, shall be at an end, and the people of God shall receive the dominion. In answer to this, it may be said, on the one hand, that the thought of the dominion of the world (according to Dan. vii. 14, 27) is a pure interpolation; on the other, that the καυροὶ ἐθνῶν would be the καυροὶ, which were familiar to all from the prophecies, and which had already begun to run their course, so that at the time of Jesus and long before they were regarded as in process of fulfilment. This is the reason for our having οἱ καυροὶ with the article (comp. xix. 44). Comp. on καυροὶ without the article, Tob. xiv. 5; Acts iii. 20, 21. By a perverse appeal to history, it has been explained as having reference to the fall of heathenism under Constantine (Clericus), and to the conversion of the heathen-world (see in Wolf; also Dorner, l.c. p. 68). Comp. Lange, who suggests withal the thought of the Mohammedans.

Vv. 25, 26. There now follows what should come to pass at the end of the said times of the Gentiles before the Parousia. Since Luke, writing in the time in which such καυροὶ ἐθνῶν are still passing, has adopted these also into the prophecy from the tradition expanded ex eventu, the Parousia in his statement could not be immediately linked on to the destruction of Jerusalem, as was the case in Mark xiii. 24, and still more definitely by means of ἐδέως in Matt. xxiv. 29. In the midst between these two catastrophes actually already came those καυροὶ. — συνοχὴ ἐθνῶν κ.τ.λ.] Distress (2 Cor. ii. 4) of nations in perplexity at the roaring of the seas and waves. Luke alone has this fearful feature. The genitive ἡχοῦς (see the critical remarks) indicates that to which the ἀπορία refers. Comp. Vv. 37, 38. The discourse, begun at xx. 1, with its varied scenes, is now closed. There is even now a general historical communication upon those last days of Jesus in Jerusalem, from which it is plain that according to Luke He still continued to teach in the temple. There is a difference from Matthew (comp. Mark xiii. 1), according to whom He is no longer in the temple when He delivers His eschatological discourse, and does not again set foot in it after xxiii. 39.—ἐλαυών] Thus to be accented in this place also. See on xix. 29.—ἐξερχόμενος] participle present, because ἡελίξετο (with εἰς, comp. Thus rightly Luther (comp. Vulgate), Erasmus, Beza, Bengel, and many others, including Lange, Ewald, Bleek, and as early as Tertullian and Theophylact. Others, including de Wette, have: there sought Him eagerly, following LXX. Ps. lxxviii. 34; Ecclus. iv. 12, vi. 36 (not Job viii. 5). But the context, according to ver. 37, justifies only the above explanation, which, moreover, corresponds to the general classical usage of ὅρθρεύω (for which, according to Moeris, ὁρθρίζω is the Hellenistic form). According to Ewald, Luke wrote ver. 44 from the “Book of the higher history” only in the margin, but
ver. 43 was excluded by the comparison with Matthew and Mark. — Ver. 47. \( \delta \varepsilon \) has so important evidence against it (deleted by Lachm. and Tisch.) that it seems to be a connective addition. — Instead of \( \alpha i\nu\nu\varepsilon \) Elz. has \( \alpha i\nu\omega \), in opposition to decisive evidence. It is an expansion by way of a gloss, which in \( D \), vss. is not the same, and which the omission of \( \delta\rho\omega\nu\tau\varepsilon \), ver. 63, drew after it. The glossing process began with the writing on the margin at the first \( \alpha i\nu\nu \): \( \alpha i\nu\nu \) \( t\delta \) \( \pi\rho\sigma\omega\tau\omega \), as 1, 209, vss. still read instead of \( \alpha i\nu\nu \); then \( \varepsilon\nu\tau\tau\tau\nu \) was added in some authorities before, in others after, because \( \delta\rho\omega\nu\tau\varepsilon \) was attracted to what preceded. — Ver. 66. See Lightfoot, p. 879. — Ver. 5. συνεβεβηκό] The several moments in the incident, as these are accurately traced by Luke, are: (1) Judas opens the correspondence, ver. 4; (2) they are pleased thereat; (3) they engage (Herod. ix. 53; Xen. Antt. xiii. 4. 7; 4 Macc. iv. 16) to give him money; and the last step is, (4) Judas makes his acknowledgment, promises (ἐξωμολ., spondidit; elsewhere only the simple form is used in this sense, as Plat. Vv. 7–13. See on Matt. xxvi. 17–19; Mark xiv. 12–16. Luke names the disciples, and makes Jesus take the initiative. The latter is a quite immaterial difference; the former is a more precise statement of the later tradition, in respect of which a special tendency is assumed (Baur supposes that the two are intended to represent the Judaism of the older apostles). — ἦλθε] there came, there appeared the day. This longing rested on the fact (see ver. 16) that this Passover meal was actually His last, and as such was to be of special importance and sacredness. Thus He could only earnestly wish that His passion should not begin before the Passover; hence: πρὸ τοῦ με παρεῖν. — τοῦτο] pointing to: this, which is already there. — Ver. 16. οὐκέτι κ.τ.λ.] namely, after the present meal. — εἰς αὐτοῦ] of the Passover. — ἔως ὅτου κ.τ.λ.] till that it (the Passover) shall be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. The rationalistic interpretation: "sed aliquando vos in coelo mecum gaudii propriis ac summis perfruemini" (Kuinoel), is purely arbitrary. Jesus means actually a Passover (specifically such a one, not merely the Messianic feasts in general, Matt. viii. 11 ; Luke xxii. 30, xiv. 15) in the Messiah’s kingdom, which should hold the same relation to the temporal Passover as that which is perfect (absolute) holds to the incomplete. This corresponds to the idea of the new world (of the ἀποκατάστασις, παλινγενεσία), and of the perfected theocracy in the αἰών μέλλων. Comp. on Matt. xxvi. 29. The impersonal view (Paulus, Baumgarten-Crusius), according to which the meaning is said to be:

1 Paschke is in error when he says, in the Theol. Quartalschr. 1851, p. 410 ff., that ἵνα means here: he came near; and that at Matt. xxvi. 17, Mark xiv. 12, τῇ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν ἦλθαν means: on the day before the Passover. Moreover, Ewald (Gesch. Chr. p. 459 f.) decides that, in so far as the words of Luke are concerned (not also of Matthew and Mark), the day before the Passover might be meant. But by ἵνα ἐπὶ κ.τ.λ., as well as by the further course of the narrative, the day is definitely enough indicated as the same as in Matthew and Mark.
till the establishment of the kingdom shall be brought about, is an evasion opposed to the context. Completely without foundation, moreover, Schenkel says that the adoption of the Gentiles into the divine covenant is the fulfilment of the Old Testament Passover. — Ver. 17 f. According to Luke, Jesus, after He had spoken quite at the beginning of the meal the words, vv. 15, 16, receives a cup handed to Him (δεξάμενος, not the same as λαβὼν, ver. 19), and after giving thanks hands it to the disciples that they might share it (the wine in it) among themselves (observe the emphatic εαυτοῖς), for He assures them that He should certainly not drink, etc. He therefore, according to Luke, declines to drink of the Passover wine, wherefore also in ver. 18 the absolute οὐ μὴ, but in ver. 16 the relative οὐκέτι οὐ μὴ, is used.

Remark.—Although this refusal to drink the wine, which is not to be explained away, is in itself psychologically conceivable in so deeply moved and painful a state of mind, yet it is improbable in consideration of the characteristic element of the Passover. In respect of this, the drinking of the Passover wine was certainly so essential, and, in the consciousness of the person celebrating the rite, so necessary, that the not drinking, and especially on the part of the Host Himself, would have appeared absolutely as contrary to the law, irreligious, scandalous, an interruption which, on the part of Jesus, can hardly be credible. Since then Mark and Matthew, moreover, have nothing at all about a refusal of the wine, but rather do not bring in the assurance, οὐ μὴ πίω ν.τ.λ., until the conclusion of the meal, Mark xiv. 25, Matt. xxvi. 29; and since Matthew uses the emphatic ἄφες ἄφη, wherein is intimated that Jesus had just drunk with them once more,—the narrative of Luke, vv. 17, 18, is to be regarded as not original, and it is to be assumed that Jesus indeed spoke, vv. 15, 16, at the beginning of the meal (in opposition to Kuinoel and Paulus), but that what is found in Matt. xxvi. 29 has been removed back by the tradition on account of the analogy of ver. 16, and placed after ver. 16, beside which ver. 17 easily appeared as a link, without the necessity of attributing to Luke the construction of a piece of mosaic from a twofold source (as Holtzmann wishes to do), especially as ver. 17 is not yet the cup of the Lord's Supper. According to Baur, Evang. p. 482 f., Luke must have been led by 1 Cor. x., where, moreover, the ποτήριον τῆς εὐαγγελίας is emphatically placed first, to distinguish two acts in the Lord's Supper (comp. also Ritschl, Evang. Marcion's, p. 108), one with the leading idea of xωμονία, and the other with that of ἀνάμωσις. He must have here represented the first by the help of Matt. xxvi. 29. He must thus probably still have expressly brought in the supposed leading idea of xωμονία, as Paul also has done in respect of the bread. In general, the use made by Luke of the Pauline Epistles, which here even Hilgenfeld (comp. Holtzmann, p. 237) considers as unmistakable, is quite incapable of proof.

Vv. 19, 20. See on Matt. xxvi. 26-28; Mark xiv. 22 f.; 1 Cor. xi. 23 ff. Luke agrees with Paul, not, however, repeating, in the case of the cup, the expression τοῦτο ποιεῖτε κ.π.λ., which is not found at all in Matthew and Mark.—τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν διδόμενον] which for your advantage (to procure your reconciliation and justification, and your Messianic salva-

[E. T. 192]. It is a mistake to say that this purpose of the Lord's Supper must be appropriate only to the partaking of the real body and blood of Christ (see Kahnis, *Lehre v.
Abendm.* p. 87). Rather in respect of such a partaking that statement of purpose appears too disproportional and weak,²

¹ To lay a contrasted emphasis on ἵμαν (not in remembrance of the deliverance from Egypt; so Lindner, Abendm. p. 91 f., and Hofmann, Schriftbew. ii. 2, p. 218) is mistaken, because not suggested in the context. See Rückert, Abendm. p. 200 f.

² Kahnis says: "Only when body and blood are essentially present and essentially living can the remembrance of the death which they have passed through and swallowed up in victory and life be made prominent as a separate point, without giving rise to a feeble and bungling tautology." But the point since it would already certify far more than the remembrance; in opposition to which the idea of the anámyneos of that which the symbols represent, is in keeping with the symbolic character of the celebration (Plat. Phaed. p. 74 Α: τὴν ἀνάμνησιν εἶναι μὲν ἀφ’ ὀμολογοῦν). Comp. Justin, Ap. I. 66, where it is said of the cup: εἷς ἀνάμνησιν τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ. — Ver. 20, ὅσαυτως] to wit, λαβὼν εὐχαριστήσας ἑδωκεν αὐτοῖς. — τὸ ποτήριον] the cup before them. — μετὰ τὸ δειπνοῦν] "facto transitu ad majora et ultima," Bengel. It was, to wit, the fourth cup which made the conclusion of the whole meal. See on Matt. xxvi. 27. — τόῦτο τὸ ποτήριον κ.τ.λ.] this cup is the new covenant by means of my blood, i.e. it is the new covenant by the fact that it contains my blood, which is shed for your salvation. Comp. on 1 Cor. xi. 25. In the wine which is poured into the cup Jesus sees His (atoning, Rom. iii. 25, v. 3) blood, which is on the point of being shed; and because through this shedding of His blood the new covenant is to be established, he explains the cup, by virtue of its contents, as the new covenant—a symbolism natural to the deeply-moved, solemn state of mind, to which no greater wrong can be done than is perpetrated by the controversies about the est, which Luke has not at all! Paul, in 1 Cor. xi. 25, inserts ἐστίν after διαθήκη, and consequently also, in so far as the passage before us is concerned, forbids the affixing ἐν τῷ αἵματί μου to ἡ καὶν διαθήκη, as many of the older (not Luther 1) and of the more recent writers (not Kahnis, Osiander, on which stress is laid in this assertion, "which they have passed through and swallowed up in victory and life," does not in reality appear at all there, but is added in thought and read into the passage. Rightly does Keim bring forward in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1859, p. 94, that the significance of the last supper as a remembrance cannot be maintained together with the orthodox interpretation of the words of institution. He aptly shows that the symbolical understanding of the words of institution, "this is," etc., is the correct one, and comes to the conclusion that the essential actual body was spiritually represented by the word to faith, but was not bodily given in corporeal presence to every recipient. Comp. on Matt. xxvi. 26, and on 1 Cor. xi. 24. How even Kahnis subsequently gave up the orthodox doctrine of the Lord’s Supper, see in his Dogmat. I. p. 616 ff. Abendm.* I. p. 113), who, besides, lays an emphasis upon μου not belonging to it, at least according to the expression of Luke, when he interprets the passage: "the new covenant made in my blood, not in the sacrificial blood of the Old Testament." — ἡ καινή διαθήκη] opposed to the old Mosaic covenant, whose condition was the fulfilling of the law (in the new: faith). See on 1 Cor. xi. 25. — τὸ . . . ἐκχυνόμενον] belongs, although in the nominative, to τὸ αἵματί μου, as an epexegetical clause. The abnormal use of the case is occasioned by the fact that, according to ver. 19, the idea prevails: that the cup (in respect of its contents) is the blood of the new covenant which is shed. Consequently τὸ . . . ἐκχυνόμενον is applied to τὸ αἵματί μου because τὸ αἵμα μου has floated before the mind of the speaker as the logical predicate, even although it did not become the grammatical predicate. Thus the nominatival expression more emphatically brings into prominence what is declared of the blood (τὸ . . . ἐκχυν.) than would be the case if it were joined on in the dative. Comp. Jas. iii. 8 (where μεστή λοῦ is joined to the logical subject γλῶσσα, which, however, is not the grammatical subject); Rev. iii. 12, viii. 9; Mark xii. 40; John i. 14; Kühner, § 677; Winer, pp. 471, 473 [E. T. 668–670 f.]. According to Baur's view, τὸ . . . ἐκχυνόμ. comes back to a very awkward transposition of the words from Matt. xxvi. 28. Comp. also Rückert, p. 208, and Bleek and Holtzmann. Erroneously Euthymius Zigabenus, Calovius, Jansen, Michaelis, and others, including Bornemann, read: "poculum, quod in vestram salutem effunditür." What is this supposed to mean? Calovius answers: "Dicitur effusum pro nobis propter sanguinem, quem Christus mediante poculo praebebat." A forcible dislocation which, moreover, occurs in other old dogmatical writers, Chemnitz, Gerhard, and others. See Kühnis, Abendm. p. 103. This reference to the cup appeared to give a support to the explanation of the actual blood.

Remark.—In the words of institution all four narrators vary from one another, although not essentially, which serves to prove that a mode of formulating them had not yet taken any fixed shape. Luke agrees the most closely with Paul, which is explained by his relation to him. The Pauline narrative, however, attains great weight, indeed, through his ἵνα γὰρ παρέλαβον ἀπὸ τοῦ κυρίου, 1 Cor. xi. 23 (see on the passage), and the ministry of the apostle makes it conceivable how his formula might fix itself liturgically; this, however, does not prevent our recovering the most primitive form of the words of Jesus in the simple narrative of Mark, which gradually underwent expansions. Wilke, Urevang. p. 142, is wrong in regarding ver. 20 in Luke as a later addition. The first distribution of the cup, ver. 17, does not indeed yet belong entirely to the Lord’s Supper, and as yet has no symbolism. According to Ewald (see his Jahrbl. II. p. 194 f.), the agreement between Luke and Paul is explained by the fact that both have in this particular used one source (the oldest Gospel, probably composed by Philip the evangelist). But in general there is no proof of Paul’s having made use of a written Gospel; neither in particular is the passage in 1 Cor. xi. 23, ἵνα γὰρ παρέλαβον ἀπὸ τοῦ κυρίου, in any way favourable to that supposition.

Vv. 21–23. Luke has this reference to the traitor (which, according to Luke, diverges from all the rest, without any more precise statement) in a wrong position, where it probably has been placed by way of transition to the following dispute about precedence. According to Matt. xxvi. 21 ff., Mark xiv. 18 ff., it is to be placed at the beginning of the meal, and that in such a manner that the departure of Judas ¹ ensued before the institution of the Lord’s Supper; comp. on Matt. xxvi. 25, and see the remark after John xiii. 38. — πλην] notwithstanding, although my blood is shed for you. Not a limitation of the ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν (Hofmann), but, without such a reflection, a contrast to that love which is on the point of offering its own life. In spite of this πλην, which carries on the Lord’s discourse, to place the departure of the traitor, even according to Luke, before the Lord’s Supper, is only possible to the greatest harmonistic arbitrariness, in respect of which, indeed, the statement that Luke does not relate according to the order of time (Ebrard, p. 522; Lichtenstein, p. 401) is the most convenient and ready resource. — ἡ κείρ

κ.τ.λ.] The hand of my betrayer, etc. It was still on the table (ἐπὶ τῆς ἀραπτήξης), after the eating of the bread, for the sake of partaking of the cup (ver. 20), and Jesus mentions the hand as the correlative of the idea παραδίδοναι. There is contained therein a tragic feature. — Ver. 22. ὅτι ὁ νῦς μὲν (see the critical remarks) κ.τ.λ. discloses the objective ground of this mournful experience, ver. 21—to wit, the divine appointment of the death of the Messiah, which none the less (πλὴν οὖν κ.τ.λ.) leaves the person concerned under the imputation (of the subjectively free action). — Ver. 23. συζητεῖν, to confer, disputare, and πρὸς ἑαυτούς, among themselves, as Mark i. 27. — τοῦτο] i.e. the παραδίδοναι. Vv. 24—30. Earlier fragments of discourses (Matt. xx. 25 f., xix. 28; comp. Mark x. 42 ff.), for whose appropriateness in this place the occasion narrated by Luke, ἐγένετο δὲ καὶ φιλονεκία ἐν αὐτ., is neither psychologically probable, nor is it, from an historical point of view, adequately accounted for. Many have considered ver. 24 ff. as giving occasion to the footwashing (Paulus, Kuinoel, Sieffert, Lange, and others, including Strauss), which, however, would have any probability only if Luke placed the contest about precedence at the beginning of the meal. Nay, the already past footwashing, which, according to John, is to be assumed, only makes the situation of this contest about precedence in Luke still more improbable. That, moreover, only the association of ideas between the questions of ver. 23 and ver. 24 caused Luke to insert here this contest about precedence (Strauss, I. p. 723 f.; Holtzmann) is the more unfounded that Luke has already at ix. 46 related one dispute about precedence. Rather, he must have followed a definite tradition, which certainly may have taken its rise from the idea embodied in the story of the footwashing, and may have attracted here into a wrong position what is historically earlier. — δὲ καὶ] but also, in addition to that συζητεῖν. — δοκεῖ] is esteemed, Gal. ii. 6. To this condescending renunciation my example engages you. For although I stand to you in the relation of the ἀνακείμενος to the διακόνως, yet I bear myself in the midst of you no otherwise than as if I were your servant. The reference to the footwashing, which has been here assumed (even by de Wette and Bleek), could not be expected by Luke to be discovered by any reader. It is, moreover, superfluous; for the present repast might of itself give sufficient occasion for the designation of the relation by means of ἄνακεῖμ. and διάκον., and Jesus was in the highest sense of self-surrender actually the διάκονος of His disciples, as this found its indelible expression just at this time in the distribution of the last supper. Comp. These were the many injuries, persecutions, snares, perils of life, etc. (comp. Heb. ii. 18, iv. 15), for the bitter experience of which neither πειρασμός nor διαμένειν are expressions too strong (in opposition to de Wette); the former in respect of its relative idea being not too strong, nor the latter, if we consider the contrast of the Messianic anticipations of the time. — Ver. 29. κἀγώ] and I, on my part, as a recompense for it. — διατίθεμαι] I ordain for you (herewith) dominion, as my Father (in His counsel known to me) has ordained for me dominion — both in the kingdom of the Messiah. βασιλ. belongs to both verbs, not merely as a parenthesis, so that ἵνα κ.τ.λ. contains the object of διατίθεμαι ὑμ. (Ewald, Bleek, and others), since ver. 30 contains the idea of the συμβασιλεύειν. — διατίθημι is not said of testamentary appointment (Er. Schmid, Alberti, Krebs; see Plat. Leg. ii. p. 922 B, E, 923 C; Dem. 1067. 1; Joseph. Antt. xiii. 16. 1; Arist. Pol. ii. 9), since the same meaning could not be retained in the second member, but in general dispono, I ordain for you (2 Chron. vii. 18; Gen. xv. 18; 1 Macc. i. 11; Xen. Cyr. v. 2. 9, and elsewhere). On the idea, comp. 2 Tim. ii. 12. —

Comp. xiii. 29; Matt. viii. 11. — According to the reading καθίσεοθε (see the critical remarks), the construction of the ἑαν does not run on, but the saying is promissory: and ye shall sit, etc., whereby this highest point comes forward more emphatically than if the future were made dependent on ἑαν (as is done by Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 202 [E. T. 234]). — ἐπὶ θρόνων] δώδεκα is not added, as in Matt. xix. 28, on account of Judas. Christ is the divine Lord-superior of the βασιλεία till the consummation of all things (1 Cor. xv. 28), and gives to His disciples a share therein.

Vv. 31–34. The conversation with Peter concerning his denial is found in John also at the supper, while Matthew and Mark, on the other hand, place it on the way to Gethsemane. But how possible it is that the momentous word, which had already been spoken at the supper, was returned to again on the journey by night! so that in this way both narratives are correct in regard to the point of time. The words addressed to Peter in ver. 31 f. are peculiar to Luke, and are so characteristic in substance and in form, that they seem to be original, and not the offspring of tradition. The words εἴπες δε' ὁ κύριος (which, nevertheless, are not found in B L T, Copt. Sahid., and are hence suspicious, and deleted by Tischendorf), if they are genuine, separate what follows from what precedes as a special opening of a discourse the occasion of which Luke does not state, and probably, moreover, could not, and hence the question at issue cannot be decided. — Σιμων, Σιμων ου] urgently warning, as x. 41; Acts ix. 4. — ἔχετήσατο ὑμᾶς] he has demanded you (thee and thy fellow-disciples) for himself, longed for you into his power, sibi tendendos postulavit; namely, from God, as he once did in the case of Job (Job i.). A similar allusion to the history of Job may be found in the Test. XII. Patr. p. 729: ἐὰν τὰ πνεύματα τοῦ Βελιάρ εἰς πᾶσαν πονηρίαν θλιψεως ἐξαιτήσωσαι ὑμᾶς. Comp. Const. Apost. vi. 5. 4. The compound ἔχετ. refers to the contemplated surrender out of God's power and protection. Comp. Herod. i. 74: οὐ γὰρ ... ἔξεδίδον τοὺς Σκύδας ἐξαιτέωνι Κναξάρει; Plat. Mence. p. 245 B; Polyb. iv. 66. 9, xxx. 8. 6. Moreover, the meaning is not to be reduced to a mere "imminent vobis tentationes" (Kuinoel), but the actual will of the devil (ὁ γὰρ διάβολος τολύς ἐπέκειτο ζητεῖν ὑμᾶς ἐκβαλεῖν τὴς ἐμῆς στοργῆς καὶ προδότας ἀποδείξαι, Theophylact), which is known to Jesus, is by Him declared, and only the form of the expression by means of ἐξητῆσατο is, in allusion to the history of Job, figurative, so that the meaning is: The devil wishes to have you in his power, as he once upon a time asked to have Job in his power. — τούσι γινώσκαι] so far as the ancient Greek writers are concerned, the verb γινώσκω¹ is not to be found; but according to Photius, p. 512, 22, Hesychius, Suidas, and the Greek Fathers (see Suicer, Thes. II. p. 961 f.; van Hengel, Annot. p. 31 f.), the meaning is without doubt: in order to sift you (κοσκινεῖν); σίνον γὰρ παρὰ τισι καλεῖται τό παρ’ ἡμῖν κόσκινον, ἐν δὲ τὸ σίτος τῇ κακεῖσε μεταφερόμενος ταράσσεται, Euthymius Zigabenus. The point of comparison is the ταράσσεν which puts to the test. As the wheat in the sieve is shaken backwards and forwards, and thus the refuse separates itself from the grains, and falls out; so Satan wishes to trouble you and toss you about (by vexations, terrors, dangers, afflictions), in order to bring your faithfulness to me to decay. — Ver. 32. ἐγὼ δὲ] spoken in the consciousness of the greater power which Ἡ by His prayer has in opposition to the demand of Satan. Jesus here means a more special intercession than in John xvii. 15. — ἵνα μὴ ἐκλείπη κ.τ.λ.] that thy faith in me cease not, that thou mayest not be unfaithful, and fall away from me. likewise knows. "Deficit in Petro ἡ ἐνέργεια τῆς πίστεως ad tempus," Grotius. Therefore he goes on: and thou at a future time (καὶ σὺ, opposed to the ἐγώ δὲ), when thou shalt be converted (without figure: resipueris, μετανοήσας, Theophylact), strengthen thy brethren (thy fellow-disciples); be their support, which maintains and strengthens them, when they become wavering in their faith. Even here we have the dignity and duty of the primate, which was not to cease through the momentary fall. For the idea of στηρίζειν, see especially Acts xiv. 22. On the form στήρισον, see Winer, p. 82 [E. T. 110]. According to Bede, Maldonatus, Grotius, Bengel, van Hengel, Annot. p. 1 ff., Ewald, and others, ἐπιστρ. is a Hebraism (עֵזָר): rursus, vicissim, so that the meaning would be: what I have done to thee, do thou in turn to thy brethren. This is contrary to the usus loquendi of the New Testament (even Acts vii. 42, xv. 36). But it is inconsistent with the context when Wetstein takes ἐπιστρ. actively: "convertens fratres tuos," since Jesus has the fall of Peter (ver. 34) in His view. — Ver. 33 f. Comp. on Matt. xxvi. 32—35; Mark xiv. 20—31. Vv. 35—38. Peculiar to Luke, from tradition or from some other unknown source. But the utterance itself is in respect of its contents so remarkably significant, that we are bound to hold by its originality, and not to say that it was introduced into this place for the sake of explaining the subsequent stroke with the sword (Schleiermacher, Strauss, de Wette), or the reason why Judas is afterwards represented as appearing with armed men (Holtzmann). — καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῶν] A pause must be supposed as occurring before what follows, the connection of the thought being: not without reason have I uttered words so momentous (vv. 31—34), for now your position, when I am no more with you, will be entirely different from what it was formerly; there comes for you the time of

The representation of the thought now refers to the time when ye can no more be unconcerned about your maintenance, but must yourselves care for it in the world which for you is inhospitable. — καὶ ὁ μὴ ἔχων] to wit, βαλλάντιον καὶ πῆραν. The contrast allows nothing else. Hence μάχαιραν is erroneously suggested as implied (Beza, Jansen, Paulus, Baumgarten-Crusius, Lange, Ewald, Bleek, and others), and equally erroneously is the general reference suggested: he who is without means (Kuinoel, Olshausen, Schegg). Jesus means to say, how far more necessary still than purse and scrip, nay, even more necessary than the upper garment, should now be to them a sword, for defence and protection against hostile attacks. But observe in this connection (1) that he wishes for the purchase of the sword, not by those merely who have no purse and knapsack, but, on the contrary, whilst he requires it of these, yea, requires it with the sacrifice of the cloak, otherwise so needful, yet he regards it as a self-evident duty on the part of those who have the means for the purchase. The form of his utterance is a parallelism, in which the second member supplements and throws a new light upon the first. (2) Nevertheless Jesus does not desire that His disciples should actually carry and use the sword (Matt. xxvi. 52), but He speaks in such a manner as figuratively to represent in what a hostile relation they should henceforth find the world arrayed against them, and what resistance and struggle on their part would now be necessary in their apostolic missionary journeys. That the discourse is in reference to these is clearly proved by βαλλάντ. and πῆραν, in opposition to Olshausen, who perversely allegorizes the whole passage, so that βαλλάντ. and πῆρ. are taken to signify the means for the spiritual life, and μάχ. the sword of the Spirit, Eph. vi. 17 (comp. also Erasmus). — Ver. 37. A confirmation of the ἄλλα νῦν κ.τ.λ. For since, moreover, that (“etiamnum hoc extremum post tot alia,” Bengel) must still be fulfilled on me which is written in Isa. liii. 12; so ye, as my disciples, cannot expect for yourselves anything better than what I have announced to you, ver. 36. The cogency of the proof follows from the presupposition that the disciple is not above his master (Matt. x. 24 f.; John xv. 20). On the δεὶ of the divine counsel, comp. Matt. xxvi. 54 (Acts ii. 23), and observe how inconsistent therewith it is to regard the passion of Jesus as a fortuitous occurrence (Hofmann). — καὶ μετὰ ἀν. ἐλογ.] καὶ, and, adopted together with the rest as a constituent part of the passage quoted. The completion (the Messianic fulfilment, xviii. 31) of the prophecy began with the arrest (ver. 52), and comprehended the whole subsequent treatment until the death. — καὶ γὰρ τὰ περὶ ἐμοῦ τέλ. ἔχει] for, moreover, that which concerneth me has to come to an end; i.e., for, moreover, with my destiny, as with the destiny of him of whom Isaiah speaks, there is an end. Observe that Jesus did not previously say τὸ εἰς ἔμε ἐγερμαμένον κ.τ.λ. or the like, but τὸ γεγρ. δεὶ τέλεσθ. ἐν ἐμοί, so that He does not explain the passage immediately of Himself (Olshausen), but asserts that it must be fulfilled in Him, in respect of which it is plain from καὶ γὰρ κ.τ.λ. that He conceived of another as the subject of the first historical meaning of the passage (whom? is another question, comp. Acts viii. 34), of whom He was the antitype, so that in Him is found the antitypal historical fulfilment of that which is predicted in reference to the servant of God. On τὰ περὶ ἐμοῦ, see Kühner, Π. p. 119; on τέλος ἔχει, Mark iii. 26; Plat. Pol. iii. p. 392 C; Dem. 932. 4, and the examples from Xenophon in Sturz, IV. p. 275. Most commentators (Euthymius Zigabenus, Luther, Beza, Calvin, Bengel, and many others, including Kuinoel, Olshausen, de Wette, Bleek) read: for, moreover, that which is written of me, like other prophecies, is about to be accomplished, as though γεγραμμένα formed part of the sentence, as at xxiv. 44, or flowed from the context, as at xxiv. 27. Comp. Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 380. But what a nugatory argument! and what is the meaning of the καὶ (which certainly most of them leave wholly unnoticed), since, indeed, it is just the Messianic prophecies which constitute the main substance of prophecy, and do not come in merely

by the way? — Ver. 38. The disciples, not understanding the utterance about the sword, imagined that Christ required them to have swords actually\(^1\) ready for defence from impending violence. Peter had one of the two swords (ver. 50). They may have been worn on the last journey, or even on account of the risk of these days they may have been first procured with a view to circumstances that might occur. Butcher's knives (from the cutting up of the lamb, as supposed by Euthymius Zigabenus, following Chrysostom) they could not be, according to ver. 36, although the word, so early as the time of Homer (Döderlein, Glossar. I. p. 201 f.), but never in the New Testament, has this signification. — Ίκαγόν èπεί] a gentle turning aside of further discussion, with a touch of sorrowful irony: it is enough! More than your two swords ye need not! Comp. Castalio on the passage. The disciples, carrying out this idea, must have at once concluded that Jesus had still probably meant something else than an actual purchase of swords, ver. 36.\(^2\) The significance of the answer so conceived gives to this view the preference over the explanation of others (Theophylact, Calovius, Jansen, Wolf, Bisping, Kuinoel): enough of this matter! Compare the Rabbinical ייר in Schoettgen, p. 314 ff. Olshausen and de Wette combine the two, saying that Jesus spoke in a twofold sense; comp. Bleek. Without sufficient reason, since the setting aside of the subject is found also in our view.—Boniface VIII. proves from the passage before us the double sword of the papal sovereignty, the spiritual and temporal jurisdiction! Vv. 39–46. See on Matt. xxvi. 36–46; Mark xiv. 32–42. The originality is on the side of Matthew and Mark. Luke by condensing disturbs the clearness of the single narrative, and mixes up with it legendary elements. — Ver. 40. έπεί

ix. 17, xvi. 9, xxvi. 16), and interpreted as signifying an “influx of spiritual powers.” But of the strengthening itself is not to be made a bodily invigoration, as at Acts ix. 19 (Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 391; Schegg), but it is to be left as an enhancement of spiritual powers,¹ as, according to the just narrated prayerful disposition, the context suggests. His submission to the Father’s will, just expressed in the prayer, was the subjective condition of this strengthening, and on this submission being manifested the strengthening was objectively effected by the angel. Thus the narrative of Luke; but the circumstance that neither Matthew (John does not give the narrative of the agony at all) nor Mark relates this singular and remarkable angelic strengthening, although the latter would have had the testimony of Peter on his side, authorizes all the more the view of a legendary origination of the narrative (Gabler in Theolog. Journ. I. pp. 109 ff., 217 ff.; Schleiermacher, Strauss, Hase, Theile, Holtzmann, comp. Bleek, Schenkel, and others), the nearer the decisive resolve of Jesus (whether regarded in itself, or as compared with the history of the temptation and such expressions as John i. 52) approached to such an increase of strength, which decisive resolve, however, in the tradition took the shape of an external fact perceived by the senses. Dettinger, l.c.; Ebrard, p. 528; Olshausen, Schegg; Lange also, L. J. II. 3, p. 1430, and others, adduce insufficient grounds in favour of the historical view. The older dogmatic devices to explain the manner in which this strengthening came about, wherein orthodoxy comforted itself with the doctrine of the κένωσις, may be seen in Calovius.—Ver. 44. Further particulars. According to Luke, the decisive resolve of Jesus: τὸ σὸν γενέσθαι, was crowned with the strengthening angelic appearance; and thus decided and equipped for resistance, He now endured (comp. Heb. v. 7 f., and thereupon Lünemann and Delitzsch) the agony (ἀγωνία, Dem. 236. 19; Polyb. viii. 21. 2; 2 Macc. iii. 14, xv. 19), which was now beginning, fervently praying (as before the appearance), which agony increased even to the bloody sweat. Luke has conceived the strengthening influence as increasing as the agony increased. The sweat of Jesus (in the height of the agony) was like to drops of blood falling down. This is referred by Theophylact, Euthymius Zigabenus, Grotius, Calixtus, Hammond, Michaelis, Vakekenaer, and most of the later commentators, including Paulus, Kuinoel, Olshausen, Bleek, merely to the size and consistence of the drops of sweat. So also Dettinger, l.c., and Hug, Gutacht. II. p. 145. Comp. Lange, II. 3, p. 1433. Thus in a naturalistic direction the point of comparison found in αἵματος is robbed of its characteristic importance, and Luke would have concluded his description, rising to a climax, with nothing but this: and Jesus fell into the most violent sweat! No! αἵματος only receives its due in being referred to the nature of the sweat, and this nature is viewed as foreshadowing the coming bloodshedding. Hence also the strongly descriptive word θρόμβου is chosen; for θρόμβος is not simply a drop (σταγών, στάλαγμα), but a clot of coagulated fluid (milk and the like), and is often used especially of coagulated blood (Aesch. Eum. 184; Choephr. 533, 545; Plat. Crit. p. 120 Α: θρόμβον ἐνέβαλλον αἵματος; Dioscor. 13: θρόμβων αἵματος). See Jacobs, ad Anthol. VII. p. 379; Blomfield, Gloss. Choephr. 526. Consequently that sweat of Jesus was indeed no mass of blood (opposed to which is ὅσει), but a profusion of bloody sweat, which was mingled with portions of blood, and as it flowed down appeared as clots of blood trickling down to the ground.¹ So in substance most of the Fathers, Erasmus, Calvin, Calovius, Wolf, Bengel, and others, including Strauss, Ebrard, Schegg. As to the historical character of the matter, it would come under the same judgment as that of the angelic strengthening, were it independent of the analogies of sweat of blood elsewhere occurring (Aristotle, H. A. iii. 19; Bartholinus, de Cruce, pp. 184 ff., 193 ff.; Gruner, de J. C. morte vera, pp. 33 ff., 109 f.; Loenartz, de sudore sanguin., Bonn 1850). — Ver. 45. ἀπὸ τῆς λύπης] by reason of the sorrow in which they were. An attempt to explain the strange sleep which had overmastered the whole band of disciples. Is it, however, sufficient? Hardly in this case, where in the chilly night of spring (John xviii. 18) Jesus was so near, and was in a situation exciting the deepest interest and the most intense participation in the sympathy of His disciples. In itself there is justice in the observation that continuous deep grief relaxes into sleep. See examples in Priscianus, ad Apulej. Metam. p. 660 f., and Wetstein. Calvin suggests Satanic temptation as the cause first of this sleep, and then of the blow with the sword.

To this it stands opposed that herein is found no disapproval of the blow with the sword, but only the prohibition to go any further; and, moreover, this not at all negatively expressed, as it would have most obviously occurred by means of some such expression as μὴ πορρωτέρω or the like. Others take the words as an address to those who were taking Him prisoner, and thus τοῦτοι either as neuter and temporal: "missum facite me usque ad id tempus, quo vulnus illius hominis sanavero" (Bornemann, so also Hammond, Kypke, de Wette, Lange, II. 3, p. 1461, III. p. 512), or τοῦτοι as neuter, indeed, but local: let me go thither where the wounded man is (Paulus), or τοῦτοι as masculine: let me go to this man in order to heal him (Stolz, Baumgarten-Crusius). Against these views the objection is that the context in the word αὐτοκρίνεσθαι shows nothing else than a reply to the disciples, as Jesus does not turn to His enemies till ver. 52.—καὶ ἀψάμ. κ.τ.λ.] On account of ἀφεῖλεν, ver. 50, this is to be referred to the place and the remains of the ear that had been cut off; and ἴσασατο αὐτὸν to the healing of the wound (not: replacing of the ear). With desperate arbitrariness Paulus says that He touched the wound in order to examine it, and told the man what he must do to heal it! Luke alone records the healing; and it can the less be cleared of the suspicion of being a legendary accretion (comp. Strauss, II. p. 461; Baumgarten-Crusius, Holtzmann, and others), like vv. 43, 44, that even John, who narrates the blow with the sword so circumstantially, says nothing about it.—Ver. 52. πρὸς τοὺς παραγενομ. κ.τ.λ.] These chief priests, etc., were therefore, according to Luke, associated with that ὁχλος, ver. 47. Inappropriate in itself, and in opposition to the rest of the evangelists. An error on the part of tradition, probably through confusion with John xviii. 20 f. Comp. on Matt. xxvi. 47, 55. Ebrard,
p. 532, is in error when he says that Luke is speaking of those who had just then newly approached. So also Lange. Opposed to this is the aorist participle. — Ver. 53. ἀλλ' αὕτη κ.τ.λ.] informs us of the reason that they had not laid hands on Him sooner in spite of His daily association with them: But this (the present hour) is your (that which is ordained for you for the execution of your work, according to divine decree) hour, and (this, this power in which ye now are acting) the power of darkness, i.e. the power which is given to darkness (in the ethical sense, the power opposed to the divine ἀλήθεια, opposed to φῶς). Observe the great emphasis on the ἐνων by being placed so near the beginning of the clause. The expression τοῦ σκότους, not τῆς ἀμαρτίας (so Kuinoel and Olshausen explain it), not τοῦ διαβόλου (so Euthymius Zigabenus, Calvin, Grotius, Bengel, Baumgarten-Crusius, and others), is chosen in reference to the actual night, which it was at this time; but it is not the actual darkness of night that is meant ("only the darkness gives you courage and power to lay hold of me," de Wette, comp. Neander, Bleek, and older commentators), for this quite commonplace thought would declare nothing on the destiny of that hour and power.

Vv. 54-62. See on Matt. xxvi. 57 f., 69-75; Mark xiv. 53 f., 66-72. Jesus is led into the house of the high priest, in the court of which (vv. 61, 63), according to Luke, who follows a diverging tradition, He is kept and subjected to mockery till daybreak (ver. 66), when the Sanhedrim comes together. According to Matthew and Mark, the Sanhedrim assemble immediately after the arrival of Jesus, and examine Him. The two narratives cannot be reconciled, but the preference is to be given to Luke in so far as he agrees with John. See below on τοῦ ἀρχιερ. Moreover, Luke is not self-contradictory (in opposition to Strauss), as the chief priests and elders mentioned at ver. 52 are to be regarded only as individuals, and probably as deputed by the Sanhedrin. — τοῦ ἀρχιερ.] As Luke did not regard Caiaphas (the general opinion), but Annas, as the officiating high priest (see on iii. 2 and Acts iv. 6), the latter is to be understood in this place. Comp. Bleek, Beitr. p. 39 ff., and Holtzmann. Luke, indeed, thus falls into a new variation from Matthew, but partially comes into harmony with John so far, that is, as the latter likewise represents Jesus as brought at first to Annas, and so far also as in Luke and in John the denials occur in the court of Annas. But of a trial before Annas (John xviii. 19 ff.) Luke has nothing, yet it finds its historical place naturally enough immediately after εἰς τὸν οἶκον τοῦ ἀρχιερ., when the prisoner, as may be supposed, was announced. Wieseler also, Synopsis, p. 405, comes to the result that Luke xxii. 54–65 belongs to what occurred in the house of Annas, but comes to it in another way. Comp. on iii. 2. — Ver. 55. περιαψάντων] (see the critical remarks) after they had kindled around (Phalaris, Ep. v. p. 28), i.e. had set it in full blaze. The insertion of ἀντών was not needful, Kühner, ad Xen. Anab. i. 2. 17. — Ver. 56. ἀτενίσασα] after she had looked keenly upon him, iv. 20, and very often in the Acts of the Apostles. See Jacobs, ad Anthol. VI. p. 259. — Ver. 58. ἔτερος] A variation from Matthew and Mark. For Luke does not think of a maid; rather he distinguishes the interrogator here as masculine, by ἔτερος and ἄνθρωπε, from the female questioner of ver. 56 f.; hence Ebrard (comp. Wetstein) is wrong in contenting himself with the indefinite sense, “somebody else.” — Ver. 59. ἄλλος τις] several, according to Matthew and Mark. As to the variations of the four Gospels in the account of the denials, see in general on Matt. xxvi. 75, Remark. — Ver. 61. According to Luke, therefore, Jesus is still also in the court, and, down to ver. 66, is kept there in custody (ver. 63). Certainly it is psychologically extremely improbable that Peter should have perpetrated the denials in the presence of Jesus, which, moreover, is contrary to the other Gospels. But a reconciliation of them with Luke is impossible; and, moreover, the assumption that Jesus looked upon Peter as He was led from Annas to Caiaphas and passed close by the disciple in the court (John xviii. 24, so Olshausen, Schweizer, Ebrard), is inadmissible, as, according to John, it is already the second denial that occurs about the same time as this leading away of Jesus, but according to Luke, ver. 59, there is an interval of about an hour between the second and third, denial. — ἐνέβλεψεν What a holy power is in this silent glance, according to the narrative of Luke!

Vv. 63–65. See on Matt. xxvi. 67 f.; Mark xiv. 65. Luke follows an entirely different tradition—different in respect of the time, the place, and the persons who were engaged in the mockery. The same characteristic ill-treatment (smiting—demand for prophecy), the original connection of which is in Matthew and Mark (in opposition to Schleiermacher), had arranged itself variously in tradition. Against the supposition of many times repeated mockery must be reckoned the identity and peculiarity of its essential element (in opposition to Ebrard and others). — δέπαι and παιεῖ are distinguished as to scourge (Jacobs, Del. Epigr. vi. 63) and to smite in general.

Vv. 66, 67. According to Luke, the Sanhedrim now first comes together after daybreak, and Jesus is led in for trial. Where it assembled Luke does not say, and there is nothing therefore opposed to our finding in this place the leading away from the court of Annas (see on ver. 54) into the house of Caiaphas (John xvi. 24). The trial itself, as to its matter, is plainly the same which Matthew—although immediately after the bringing in of Jesus—makes to be held in the house of Caiaphas. See Matt. xxvi. 59 ff. Luke relates the matter and proceedings in a merely summary and imperfect manner. — τὸ πρεσβυτέριον κ.τ.λ. the elders of the people, (the) chief priests, and scribes. These are the three constituent elements of the Sanhedrim. Comp. ix. 22, xx. 1. On πρεσβυτέριον, denoting the elders as a corporation, comp. Acts xxii. 5. By the non-repetition of the article the three parts are bound into a unity, in respect of which the difference of the gender and number is no difficulty (comp. Plato, Pol. vi. p. 501 D: τοῦ ὄντος τε καὶ ἀληθείας ἐραστύς; Soph. Oed. C. 850: πατρίδα τε τὴν σήν καὶ φίλων), especially in respect of the collective nature of πρεσβυτέριον. See in general, Krüger, § 58. 2. 1; Winer, p. 115 f. [E. T. 157 f.]. — ἀνήγαγον] The subject is the assembled members of the Sanhedrim who had caused Him to be brought up. ἀνὰ indicates a locality situated higher, as contrasted with the court of Annas, in which locality the Sanhedrim were met. — eis tò συνεδρ. ἐαυτῶν into their own concessions, into their own council gathering, in order now themselves to proceed further with Him. Comp. the use of συνεδριαν of the Amphictyonic council, also of the Roman and the Carthaginian Senate (Polyb. xl. 6, 6, i. 11. 1, 31. 8). — Ver. 67. εἰ σὺ κ.τ.λ. may mean: If thou art the Messiah, tell us (Vulgate, Luther, and most commentators), or: Tell us whether thou art the Messiah (Castalio, Bornemann, Ewald, and others), or: Is it the case that thou art the Messiah? Tell us (Erasmus). The first is the simplest, and corresponds to the purpose of framing the question so as to elicit an affirmative answer.

Vv. 68, 69. Matthew and Mark have not the evasive answer, ver. 68; and the explanation of Jesus: ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν κ.τ.λ., does not come in there till after the distinct affirmation. Their narrative has the advantage of internal probability. Luke has worked up the material more catechetically. — εἰῶν δὲ καὶ ἔρωτ.] but in case I also (should not limit myself merely to the confession that I am He, but also) should ask, should put before you questions which are connected therewith, ye would certainly not answer (see the critical remarks). — ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν δὲ "Ab hoc puncto, quum dimittere non vultis. Hoc ipsum erat iter ad gloriam," Bengel. On the position of δέ, see Klotz, ad Devar. p. 378 f. Moreover, see on Matt. xxvi. 64; yet Luke has avoided the certainly original ὁψεσθε, and thus made the utterance less abrupt.

Vv. 70, 71. Ὁ νῦς τ. Θεοῦ This designation of the Messiah is suggested by ἐκ δεξιῶν ... Θεοῦ, in recollection of Ps. cx.; for "colligebant ex praedicato ver. 69," Bengel. Ver. 2. After ἢνος we find ἤμων in the more important authorities. So Lachm. and Tisch. Lachm. and Tisch. have τὸ βασιλεῖ ο ἰστην, although Lachm. brackets ὡντος. — Ver. 39. εἰς σὺ εἰς] Tisch. has ὡντος, according to B C* L N, vss.; the Recep*ta is from ver. 37, whence also the ἵστην, which precedes these words, and which is wanting in B L, has intruded. — Ver. 42. πῦρι] is wanting in B C* D L M* N, min. Or.; so Tisch.). — Ver. 46. παραθυράσωμαι] παραθύρασμα (commended by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. and Tisch.) is decisively attested. The Recep*ta is from LXX. Ps. xxxi. 5. — Ver. 48. τεωρόντες] Lachm. and Tisch. have τεωρήσατες, which is founded on B C D L R X N, min. Colb. — A has omitted τεωρ. τ. γ. The aorist is logically necessary. — After τῦτο. Elz. Scholz have ἵστην, in opposition to A B C* D L N, in spite of which authorities Lachm. has nevertheless retained it. A superfluous addition, instead of which U X R have αὐτῶν. — Ver. 49. αὐτῷ] Lachm. and Tisch. have αὐτῷ, which is sufficiently attested by A B L P, 33, 64, for αὐτῷ to be traced to the inaccuracy of the transcribers. But B C D L N, 69, Copt. codd. of It. have merely τοῦ προσδιέχεται. So Lachm. Tisch. From Matthew and Mark was written on the margin sometimes only καὶ, sometimes καὶ αὐτῶν, both of which readings are combined in the Recep*ta. There are many other variations, which together make the Recep*ta so much the more suspicious. — Ver. 53. Lachm. Tisch. have deleted the first αὐτό, in accordance, indeed, with B C D L N, min. Vulg. passed over. — ἵδης. αὐτό] Lachm. and Tisch. have ἵδης. αὐτῶν, in accordance with B C D Ν, Vulg. It. Copt. Rightly; αὐτό is a repetition from what precedes. — Ver. 54. παρασκευή] Lachm. Tisch. have παρασκευής, in accordance with B C* L Ν, min. Vulg. codd. of It. Copt. Sahid. Since even the evidence of D is not in favour of the Recepta (it has πρὸ σάββατον), the authorities in favour of the genitive are all the stronger, especially as παρασκευή was easily regarded by the transcribers as a name. Hence the genitive is to be preferred. — The καὶ before σάββατος is, with Lachm. and Tisch., in accordance with B C* L Ν, min. vss., to be retained. It slipt out in consequence of the omission of the entire clause καὶ σάββατος ἰπτερ. (so still D, Colb.), and then was restored without the superfluous καὶ. — Ver. 55. Elz. Scholz have οἱ καὶ γυναῖκες. Certainly erroneous, since the decisive authorities have sometimes left out καὶ altogether (so Tisch.), sometimes have instead of it αἱ (so Lachm.). The latter is right. From οἱ αἱ arose the οἱ καὶ so frequent in Luke. But the article is necessary, in accordance with ver. 49.

Vv. 1–3. Comp. on Matt. xxvii. 2, 11; Mark xv. 1, 2. Luke relates the special charge, ver. 2, very precisely.¹ The preliminary investigation of the case before the Sanhedrim, xxii. 66 ff., had yielded the result, that Jesus asserted that He was the Messiah. This they now apply in presence of the political power to the political (anti-Roman) side. — ἁρξαντο] Beginning of the accusation scene. — διαστρέφ.] perverting, misleading. Comp. ¹ Marcion, as quoted by Epiph., has enriched the accusation with two points more, namely, after τὸ ἑθν. ἡμῶν: καὶ καταλύσατα τὸν νῦν κ. τοὺς προφήτας, and after βασιλε. ἤναι: καὶ ἀποστρέφοντα τὰς γυναῖκας κ. τὰ τίνα.

² Thus, according to the Recepta, λίγοντα. Still the reading καὶ λίγοντα (B I, T Ν, vss.) is, with Tischendorf, to be preferred, in which the two points καλῶντα κ. τ. λ. and λίγοντα κ. τ. λ. are put forward independently. How easily the καὶ might drop out after διδασκαλία!

Vv. 6, 7. Pilate was glad to seize the opportunity, when he heard the name of Galilee (ἀκούσας Γαλιλαίας), instead of defending the guiltless, to draw himself out of the business at first, at least by a preliminary reference to the judgment of Herod, which might cause him possibly to be transported to Galilee, and so he might be relieved of the transaction. Herod Antipas was tetrarch of Galilee and Peraea. Comp. iii. 1. — ἀνέπεμψεν] he sent Him up,— as the word, moreover, is used among the Greeks of the sending of delinquents to a higher judicature. Vv. 8, 9. A toga candida (Polyb. x. 4. 8, x. 5. 1), which Beza, Kuinoel, Lange, and others suppose, is less in accordance with the situation, in which Jesus was to be caricatured, not as a candidate, but as a king. As such He was to appear again before Pilate splendidly clothed (but whether actually in purple or not is not expressed in the word). Comp. Xen. Cyrop. ii. 4. 5. Bengel, moreover, aptly remarks: "Herodes videtur contentim voluisse significare, se nil metuere ab hoc rege." — Ver. 12. ὅντες] along with ὑπάρχειν, for the sake of making the situation more strongly prominent. See Dissen, ad Dem. de Cor. p. 258 f. — _πρὸς εἰαυτοῦ] not ἀλλήλους this time, simply "ut varietur oratio," Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. v. 20. The cause of the previous enmity is unknown; possibly, however, it had originated from disputes about jurisdiction, since that consideration of Herod's jurisdiction (of the fori originis), even although Herod prudently made no further use of it, but sent back the accused, brought about the reconciliation. According to Justin, c. _Tr. 103, Pilate sent Jesus to Herod to please him (χαρίζομενος).

Remark.—The narrative of the sending to Herod (comp. Acts iv. 27) has the stamp of originality, and might as an interlude, having no bearing on the further course of the history, easily disappear from the connection of the tradition, so that its preservation is only due to Luke's investigation; and even John, in his narrative of the trial before Pilate, leaves it entirely out of consideration. He leaps over it after the words: ἐγώ οὐδὲμίαν αἰτίαν ἐφίσκω ἐν αὐτῷ, xviii. 38 (not after ver. 40, Tholuck, Olshausen), and hence makes Pilate immediately connect the words of ver. 39, which in the narrative of Luke correspond to the words of ver. 16. But not as though John had not known the intervening incident (de Wette; a conclusion in itself wholly improbable, and going much too far; such, for example, as might be applied equally to the Lord's Supper, to the agony in the garden, etc.); but, on the contrary, in accordance with the freedom of his peculiar composition, since all the evangelists did their work eclectically. Lightly Strauss, II. p. 500, satisfied himself with the conjecture that the "anecdote" arose from the endeavour to place Jesus before all possible judgment-seats in Jerusalem. Baur, however (Evang. p. 489), derives the narrative from the endeavour to have the innocence of Jesus attested as conspicuously as possible in the anti-Judaic interest, to lay the guilt on Judaism, and to relieve Pilate as much as possible from the burden (so also Schenkel, p. 405); comp. Eichthal's frivolous judgment, ii. p. 308.

Vv. 26–32. Luke proceeds in a very abbreviating fashion, yet with intercalations of original matter, down to ver. 49. The observation ἐρχομ. ἀπ' ἄγρον belongs (as Ebrard at an earlier period also supposed, but now, on Olshausen, ed. 4, p. 52, questions), as does ver. 56, to the synoptical traces of the working day. See on Mark xv. 21. — The following saying of Jesus to the women is preserved only by Luke, extremely appropriate to the love and fervour at the threshold of death, and certainly from an original tradition. — Ver. 27. κ. γυναικῶν] of women also, not ministering female friends, but other women; and, indeed, according to ver. 28, from the city, as the female sex is accustomed in general to be very sympathizing and tender at executions; εκόπτ., as viii. 52. — Ver. 28 f. The address is: that they were not to weep over Luke II.
Him (for He was on His way to meet a glorious future); nevertheless over themselves they ought to weep, etc., for (see ver. 29) over them was impending a terrible future (the destruction of Jerusalem). The contrast of emphasis lies upon ἐπ᾿ ἐμὲ and ἐφ᾿ έαυτάς; by the position of the one at the end and of the other at the beginning, and the consequent juxtaposition as closely as possible of the two expressions, the emphasis is strengthened.—μακάρια] The maternal heart, in truth, feels, besides its own suffering, still more keenly the sufferings of beloved children, Eur. The mountains and hills were to—such is the wish of those who are in despair—not perchance hide them from the calamitous catastrophe and place them in security (comp. Isa. ii. 19, 21), but, as the words themselves (comp. with Hos. x. 8; Rev. vi. 16) indicate, the destructive landslip which covers them was to take them away by sudden death from the intolerable evil.—ἀρξώναι] an outbreaking of the greatest anguish. The subject is the people in general (the Jews), not the steriles (Bengel). — Ver. 31. Reason on which this announcement of evil was based, ver. 29 f. “If they thus treat the guiltless and the righteous, what shall happen to the godless (to themselves) ?” On the figure of the green (Ps. i. 5) and the dry tree, comp. Ezek. xxi. 3; Sanhedr. f. 93. 1. This last saying of Jesus, vv. 28–31, is one great memorial more, at once of His self-denial and of His sinless consciousness, as well as of His certain insight into the counsel of the divine retribution, which now allows itself no longer to be averted, but to be even once more announced with the pain of rejected love, and not to be withheld.—Ver. 32. κακούργοι] defining more closely the έτεροι δύο. Comp. ver. 33. See Bornemann, Schol. p. 147 f.; Winer, p. 469 [E. T. 665]; Krüger, Anab. i. 4. 2.

Vv. 33, 34. Κρανίον] A Greek translation of Γολγοθα, a skull, so named from its form. See on Matt. xxvii. 33, and Ewald, Gesch. Chr. p. 485, who discovers in the name Golgotha the hill named Gareb in Jer. xxxi. 39. — Ver. 34.
In ἀφεῖς αὐτοῖς Jesus refers to His enemies, who indeed were the sinning subjects, not to the Roman soldiers (Michaelis, Paulus, Kuinoel, Ewald, Wittichen, following older commentators, and as early as in Euthymius Zigabenus), who discharged the office of executioners only involuntarily and morally uninterested therein; so that in their case there could be no allusion either to imputation or to forgiveness. The mockery of the soldiers (Paulus, Kuinoel, Bleek also) is in respect of the crucifixion purely an invention. But in respect of the crucifixion (τι ποιοῦσι) is the prayer uttered in which from the innermost heart of Jesus breathes the deepest love which regards the crime in the mildest light, not indeed removing, but extenuating the guilt, as a result of the want of knowledge of the nature of the deed (for they were slaying the Messiah of the people, whom they, however, had not recognised as such), and consequently the deed was capable of forgiveness. Even this prayer is a relic of the Crucified One, which Luke alone has preserved for us from a written or oral source. In Acts iii. 17, vii. 60, its echo is heard. Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 8, and the same prayer of the dying James in Eusebius, ii. 23. — διαμεριζόμενοι] at the division. — κλήρους (see the critical remarks): lots. Comp. on Mark xv. 24.

Vv. 35–38. According to the corrected text (see the critical remarks), it is not in Luke the people that mock (comp., on the other hand, Matt. xxvii. 39 f.; Mark xv. 29 f.), for they rather stand there as spectators, but the members of the Sanhedrim. δὲ καὶ refers merely to the ἐκμυκτηρίζειν of the ἀρχοντες. To the standing by and looking on of the people (not further sympathizing) is added, however, also mockery on the part of the members of the Sanhedrim. On ἐξεμικτ. comp. Ps. xxii. 8, and see on xvi. 14. — οὗτος] this fellow! with scornful contempt. — ὃ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐκλεκτός] ix. 35. — Ver. 36 is not a misunderstanding of Matt. xxvii. 48 (de Wette), but something special which the other evangelists have not got. A mocking offer, not an actual giving to drink; for here the offer was not made by means of a sponge, so that naturally Jesus could not accept the drink. The proceeding was a grim joke! — Ver. 38. ἐπτ' αὐτῷ] over Him on the cross. The supplementary statement of the title on the cross (see on Matt. xxvii. 37) explains the fact that the soldiers scoffed at Him as the King of the Jews.

Vv. 39-43. Ἐκ] A difference from Mark xv. 32 and from Matt. xxvii. 44; see on the passages. — oὐχὶ (see the critical remarks) σὺ εἰ σῶ ἐνῷ is a jeering question, Art thou not the Messiah? — Ver. 40. oὐδὲ φοβῆσῃ σὺ] not: Dost not even thou fear (de Wette, Bleek, following the Vulg., Grotius, Lange, and others, that would be οὐδὲ σὺ φ;) but: Hast thou no fear1 at all on thy part before God, since thou art in the same condemnation (as this Jesus whom thou revilest)? This similarity of position in suffering the judicial condemnation of the cross is the reason wherefore he ought at least to be afraid before God, and not continue to practise blasphemous outrage. — Ver. 41. oὐδὲν ἀτοποῦρ] nothing unlawful; see in general, Lüt nemann on 2 Thess. iii. 2. The very general expression marks the innocence so much the more strongly. — Ver. 42. Think on me (to raise me from the dead, and to receive me into the Messiah's kingdom) when Thou shalt have come in Thy kingly glory (as Matt. xvi. 28). The promises of Jesus in regard to His Parousia must have been known to the robber,—which might easily enough be the case in Jerusalem,—and does not actually presuppose the instructions of Jesus; yet he may also have heard Him himself, and now have remembered what he had heard. The extraordinary element of the agonizing situation in the view of death had now as its result the extraordinary effect of firm faith in those promises; hence there is no sufficient reason on account of this faith, in which he even excelled the apostles, to relegate the entire history into the region of unhistorical legend2 (Strauss, II. p. 519; Zeller in his Jahrb. 1843, I. p. 78; Schenkel, Eichthal), in which has been found in the different demeanour of the two robbers even the representation of the different behaviour of the Jews and Gentiles towards the preaching of the crucified Christ (Schwegler, II. p. 50 f.). Others (Vulgate, Luther, and many others, including Kuinoel and Ewald) have taken \( \epsilon \nu \) in a pregnant sense as equal to \( \epsilon \iota \varsigma \), which is erroneous, since Jesus Himself establishes His kingdom; but to conceive of the supramundane kingdom (Euthymius Zigabenus, Grotius, Bornemann) brings with it the supposition, which in Luke is out of place, that the robber has heard the saying of Jesus at John xviii. 36. — Ver. 43. \( \sigma \mu \epsilon \rho \epsilon \rho \omicron \nu \] does not belong to \( \lambda \epsilon \gamma \omega \ \sigma \omicron \iota \) (a view already quoted in Theophylact, and rightly estimated by the phrase \( \epsilon \kappa \beta \eta \iota \xi \zeta \omicron \nu \tau \iota \ \rho \eta \mu \alpha \), in respect of which it would be idle and unmeaning (this also in opposition to Weitzel in the Stud. n. Krit. 1836, p. 957), but to what follows. The Lord knew that His own death and the robber's would take place to-day. In the case of the robber it was accelerated by means of breaking the legs.— On the classical word \( \pi \alpha \rho \acute{\alpha} \delta \epsilon \iota \sigma \omicron \varsigma \) (Park), see Poppo, ad Xen. Cyr. i. 3. 14. The LXX. Gen. ii. 8 f. give this name to the dwelling-place of the first pair; the blessedness of this place, however, very naturally occasioned the naming, in the later Jewish theology, of the portion of Hades in which the souls of the righteous after death dwell till the resurrection, paradise. Comp. also the Book of Enoch xxii. 9 f. Not to be confounded with the heavenly paradise, 2 Cor. xii. 4; Rev. ii. 7. See on xvi. 23; Lightfoot and Wetstein on the passage. In the answer of Jesus there was probably not implied a divergence from the kind and manner in which the petitioner conceived to himself the fulfilment of his petition (Schleiermacher), but it presented simply and without veil, as well as in the most directly comforting form, the certainty of his petition being granted, since if his soul came into paradise, participation in the resurrection of the just and in the kingdom of the Messiah could not fail him. Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 1, p. 488, rationalizes the idea of paradise. Where the blessed communion of man with God is realized, there, he says, is paradise. This abstraction is surely erroneous, for this reason, that according to it the risen souls must be in paradise, which is nowhere taught—they are in Messiah's kingdom. By μετ' ἐμοῦ Jesus expresses definitely His descensus ad inferos (König, Lehre von d. Hölleinf. p. 45 ff.; Güder, Lehre v. d. Erscheinen. Jesu Chr. unter d. Todten, p. 33 ff.), in respect of which the fact that here circumstances required the mention of paradise only, and not of Gehenna, does not exclude what is contained in 1 Pet. iii. 18 f., as though we had here "a passage contradicting the analogy of doctrine" (de Wette). See, on the other hand, also West in the Stud. u. Krit. 1858, p. 252 ff.

Vv. 44–46. See on Matt. xxvii. 45, 50 f.; Mark xv. 33, 37 f. According to Luke, the connection of events was as follows: It was already about the sixth hour, when there is darkness over the whole earth till the ninth hour (yet the sun is still visible)—then the sun also vanishes in darkness—the veil is rent—Jesus utters His last cry, and dies. — καί] as xix. 43; Mark xv. 25. — τὸ πνεῦμά μου] my spirit, comprehending the whole spiritual nature, contrasted with the dying body; Acts vii. 59. Comp. in general, Hahn, Theol. d. N. T. I. p. 410.—Ver. 46. εἰς χείρας σου κ.τ.λ.] from Ps. xxxi. 6, which words Jesus makes His own, committing His spirit wholly to the disposal of God; and this perfect surrender to God, whose control extends even to Hades (xvi. 22; Wisd. iii. 1; Acts ii. 27), is not out of keeping with ver. 43.—This prayer is to be placed after the τετέλεσται of John xix. 30, and corresponds to the παρέδωκεν τὸ πνεῦμα of John. Probably, however, the idea παρέδωκεν τὸ πνεῦμα was only by the more accurately explaining tradition moulded into the definite words, as Luke has them.

Vv. 47–49. See on Matt. xxvii. 54–56; Mark. xv. 39–41. τὸ γενόμενον] that which had happened, namely, how Jesus had uttered the last loud cry, and had expired. Comp. Mark xv. 39, whom Luke follows. To refer it still further back (even to include also what is narrated in ver. 44 f.) is forbidden by the ἐσχίσθη κ.τ.λ., to which ἔσων cannot also refer. The plural expression, however, τὰ γενόμενα, ver. 48, has a wider reference, since, in accordance with συμπαραγ. ἐπὶ τ. θεωρίαν ταύτ., it must include the entire process of the crucifixion down to ver. 46. — ἔδοξασε τ. θεόν] i.e. practically, by His confession, which redounded to the honour of God. Comp. John ix. 24. According to Luke, the people did not, indeed, join in the mockery (ver. 35), though they probably chimed in with the accusation and the demand for His death (vv. 4, 5, 13, 18, 21, 23), and hence they prove themselves the mobile vulgus. The special circumstances had made them change their tune.—Ver. 49. πάντες οἱ γνωστοὶ αὐτῷ] those, to wit, who were present in Jerusalem. Not an inaccuracy of expression, in which only prevailed the idea of the beginning of the day, but according to the Jewish mode of expression, which still, moreover, gave to the legal beginning of the day, at the closing in of night, the name of ἑβδομάδα, on account of the lighting of the lamps, which the natural evening made necessary. See the passages from the Rabbinical writers in Lightfoot, p. 892 f. Comp. Ev. Nicod. 12. That this mode of designation specially applied to the beginning of the Sabbath, on account of the Sabbath lights (see Lightfoot, Zeger, Clarius, Wetstein, Kuinoel, Bleek, and others), cannot be proved. Ebrard on Olshausen, p. 53 f., gives explanations which are only evasions, but which are of the less importance, as in this place Luke, with his inconsequent notice, stands alone.
CHAPTER XXIV.

Ver. 1. The reading βαθέως (Lachm. Tisch.), instead of the ἱερετικὸς βαθικός, is so decisively attested by A B C D N, etc., that the adjective form βαθέως must appear as the alteration of ignorant transcribers. — καὶ της ὅῦν αὐτῶς is wanting in B C* L N 33, Cop. Aeth. Vulg. It. (not Brix.) Dionys. Alex. Ens. Aug. Suspected by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. A supplementary addition, in accordance with ver. 10, for which occasion seemed the rather to be given that Luke neither mentions Salome (Mark xvi. 1) in this place nor at ver. 10. D has further expanded the addition. — Ver. 3. Instead of καὶ σιτι- ειδοὺαι is to be read, with Lachm. and Tisch., on preponderating evidence, σιειδοὐαν ὅς. The former is from Mark. — Ver. 4. ἵππησαν ὅστρ. Lachm. Tisch. have ἱππητὶ ἀκτραπτοῦσα, in accordance with B D N, Syr. Vulg. It. Ens. But the accustomed singular expression easily forced itself in. — Ver. 5. τὸ πρόωσον] τὰ προᾶστα is attested by a preponderance of authorities. So Tisch. It is the more to be preferred in proportion as the singular suggested itself the more readily to the transcribers. — Ver. 10. Εἰζ. Lachm. Tisch. have ἤσων ὅς; Griesb.: ἤ ὅς, on too feeble evidence. The words are wanting altogether in A D r and a few vss. The connection has not been apprehended, and for the restoration thereof, sometimes ἤσων ὅς has been omitted (in order to connect it closely with what has proceeded), sometimes αἱ has been intercalated afterwards (before ἔλεγον), sometimes both have been done. This αἱ is, with Lachm. Tisch., on decisive evidence, to be deleted. — After the second ἀπαίσια is to be inserted ἡ, with Lachm. and Tisch., on preponderating evidence. — Ver. 12 is wanting in D, Syr. Cant. Ver. Verc. Rd. Rejected by Schulz and Rinck. Bracketed by Lachm. and [deleted by] Tisch. [8]. But even if the great attestation is not in itself sufficient to justify a decision in favour of its genuineness (comp. on vv. 36, 39, 51 f.), still an interpolator from John xx. 5 ff. would have mentioned not only Peter, but also the ἀλλος μαθητῆς (comp. ver. 24); and the words ἰδόνα, παρακώπατε, and ἦπερ ὅς ἱατ. (John, loc. cit.) might, indeed, have been suggested to Luke from a source emanating from a Johannine tradition; on the other hand, it is just the incompleteness of the notice, as well as the want of agreement in the contents with ver. 24, that would furnish a very obvious occasion for objection and for deletion. Κείμενα is suspicious, as it is wanting in B ס, min. Coptic. Sahid. Syr.ס. Eus.; in other authorities it is placed after μόνα. — Ver. 18. Elz. Lachm. have εν 'Ισρού. But decisive authorities are in favour of 'Iσρού. simply (Griesb. Matth. Scholz, Tisch.); εν is an exegetical insertion. But, moreover, the preceding x. λέγω. αυτῶς εἰπ. υμῶν, although it is wanting only in D and codd. of It. (deleted by Tisch.), is extremely open to the suspicion of being added from John xx. 19. See also Lachm. in the Stud. u. Krit. 1830, p. 843. A reason for its omission, if it had been original, would be hard to perceive.—Ver. 38. Instead of ευ ταῖς καρδ. B D, codd. of It. αλ. Tisch. is to help out the construction, in connection with the omission of ὅς, ver. 48 (which Tisch., following B C* L S, has deleted). — Ver. 51 f. The omission of καὶ ἀνέφερεν εἰς τ. ὄφραν, and at the same time of προσκυνήσαντες αὐτῶν in the same set of authorities (D, Cant. Ver. Ver. Corb. R. In a few authorities αἰνοῦτες καὶ is wanting (which Griesb., in accordance with B C* L S, Ar. p., regards as suspicious); in others καὶ εὐλογοῦτες (which Tisch., in accordance with D, codd. of It. Copt. Aug., has kept out). The Recepta is to be maintained, since αἰνεῖ τ. Θεόν is especially frequent in Luke, but neither αἰνοῦτες nor εὐλογοῦτες offered occasion for an addition by way of gloss. But τ. εὕλ. might easily drop out in consequence of the homooeoteleuton in αἰνοῦτες and εὐλογοῦτες.

Vv. 1–12. ¹ Schleiermacher makes out of this, persons commissioned by Joseph of Arimathea. By means of such, Joseph had had the body of Jesus brought away from the grave, in which it had been provisionally laid. See L. J. p. 471. At an earlier period Schleiermacher made another shift, but not a better. See Strauss in Hilgenfeld’s Zeitschr. 1863, p. 386 ff.
the tidings is related also of their female companions, and then by kai ἐφάνησαν κ.τ.λ. the narration is further continued. There were, however (these women who returned and announced, etc.), Mary Magdalene and Joanna and Mary the mother of James; moreover (καὶ), the rest of the women with them told this to the apostles, and their words appeared to them as a jable, and they believed them not. As to Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James, see on Matt. xxvii. 55 f.; as to Joanna, on Luke viii. 3. — ἐφάνησαν] the plural of the verb with the neuter plural (see, in general, Winer, p. 456 [E. The disciples did not believe the women, but Peter, hasty and impetuous as he was, desired to inform himself by his own sight about this enigmatical state of affairs. To take ἐδραμεν as a pluperfect (Paulus) is on account of βλέψει impossible; a perverted system of harmonizing, in which even Calvin led the way. Of the ἄλλος μαθητῆς of John xx. 3, Luke says nothing, but, according to ver. 24, does not exclude him. The account is vague in the connection of its several parts,¹ as even ver. 34 presupposes something that is not related. — παρακλῆς] stooping down into the grave, John xx. 5, 11. — μόνα] so that thus the corpse was gone.² — πρὸς εἰαυτὸν] not: with Himself (as Mark xiv. 4;

² That the grave was empty is so decidedly and clearly in the whole of the New Testament (in opposition to Weizsäcker, p. 572) the correlative of the resurrection of Jesus (see also Rom. vi. 4; Col. ii. 12), that it is not at all to the purpose when Keim (Geschichtl. Chr. p. 134) adds to the expression of his belief in an appearance of Jesus in glorified corporeality, "it makes no matter whether the grave was empty or not." Keim, moreover, contends with force against the visionary view of the resurrection. See against this kind of view, Luke xviii. 11), so that it would belong to θαυμάζων (Luther, Castalio, Grotius, Wolf, Schegg, and others, following the Vulgate), in which case, however, it would be superfluous, and its position before θαυμάζων would have no motive; but it belongs to ἀπῆλθε: to his home, i.e. πρὸς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ διαγωγὴν, Euthymius Zigabenus. Comp. John xx. 10. Examples in Kypke, I. p. 337.—θαυμάζων τὸ γεγονός] συνήκε γὰρ, ὅτι οὐ μετετέθη; ἦ γὰρ ἄν μετὰ τῶν ὀδονίων μετετέθη, Euthymius Zigabenus.¹ Comp. John xx. 7 f.

Vv. 13, 14. The journey to Emmaus, peculiar to Luke. Mark xvi. 12 is a meagre intimation of the same history from another source.— ἥσαν πορ. were on the way. — εἰς αὐτῶν] in general: of the followers of Jesus, ἐκ τῶν ὀλων μαθητῶν, Euthymius Zigabenus. They did not belong to the twelve (see ver. 33); whether they were of the seventy (Jerome, Euthymius Zigabenus, and others) cannot be determined. In other respects they are perfectly unknown. Luke, ver. 18, names only the one (Κλεόπτας is the same as Κλεόπατρος, distinct from the Hebrew name Κλωπᾶς, John xix. 25, or Alphaeus), and that, indeed, accidentally, because he introduces him actually speaking. In this way it is left in doubt whether he knew the name of the other or not (Ambrose calls him Αμμαον). From the fact of his not being named, there is neither to be concluded a greater (Bornemann) nor a less (Kuinoel) degree of knowledge regarding him; and who he may have been is not at all to be conjectured, although ¹ Even this simple observation of Euthymius Zigabenus is sufficient to show that every other cause by which the corpse may have disappeared from the grave, apart from His resurrection, is inconceivable. Schenkel, indeed (in his Zeitschr. 1865, 5), when he defines the resurrection as "the real mysterious self-revelation of the personality of Christ emerging living and imperishable from death," uses for this purpose no grave, since he makes the personality of Christ emerge only from death, not from the grave. But the certainty that Christ came forth from the grave is at the foundation of every mention of the resurrection throughout the whole New Testament, in which reference, especially also the moral idea of σωτάτισσαι and σωτηρίδαι Χριστῶν (Rom. vi. 4; Col. ii. 12, iii. 1; Eph. ii. 6) is of importance.

Nathanael (so Epiphanius), Bartholomew, Peter, or another Simon (Origen, Cyril), nay, in spite of i. 2, Luke himself (in Theophylact, so also Lange, I. p. 252), and even, conjecturally (Holtzmann), the younger James, as having made the journey with his father Alphaeus (but in 1 Cor. xv. 7 the Lord's brother is meant)—have been guessed. — 'Εμμαούς in Josephus, Bell. vii. 6. 6. 'Αμμαούς, a village, also according to Josephus 60 stadia (7½ geographical miles) in a north-western direction from Jerusalem—not to be confounded, as has often been done since Eusebius and Jerome (Robinson, Pal. III. p. 281 f.), with the town of Emmaus, 1 Macc. iii. 40, ix. 50, in the plain of Judaea, which since the third century after Christ has been named Nicopolis, and is 176 stadia from Jerusalem.¹ See, in general, Ritter's Palestine, XVI. pp. 512, 545; Arnold in Herzog's Enycl. III. p. 778 f.; Thrupp in The Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology, 1860, p. 262 ff.; Zschokke, D. neutest. Examples of κρατεῖσθαι of organs of the body: impediri, quominus vim et actionem sibi propriam cesserant, see in Kypke. The expression itself, which indicates a peculiar external influence, not to speak of its telic connection, as well as the correlative δινολιχῇσαν κ.τ.λ. in ver. 31, should have prevented their failure to recognise Him from being attributed to an unfamiliar dress of Jesus, and to an alteration of His countenance by the tortures of crucifixion; or, on the other hand, to the disciples' own dejection (Paulus, Kuinoel, Lange, and others). The text represents only a wonderful divine effect. The matter is otherwise represented in Mark xvi. 12, where Jesus appears ἐν ἐτέρῳ μορφῇ.

Vv. 17, 18. What are these discourses that ye in turn throw out to one another as ye walk, and are of gloomy countenance? Instead of καὶ ὁντες σκυθρωποι, the address passes over into the finite verb, bringing out this characteristic more emphatically, Matthiae, § 632; Kühner, § 675. 4. After καὶ we are not to supply τί (Beza). The relative clause οὖς ἀντιβάλλ. πρ. ἄλλ. corresponds to the idea of συκητεῖν (disputare). — σὺ μόνος παροικεῖς κ.τ.λ.] Dost thou alone dwell as a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not learned, etc.? In respect of this question of surprise, it is to be considered—(1) that the destiny of Jesus is so entirely the only thought in the soul of the two disciples, and appears to them now so absolutely as the only possible subject of their conversation and their sadness, that from their standpoint they instantly conclude from the question of the unknown one that he cannot at all know what has come to pass, since otherwise he would not begin by asking of what they speak and why they look sad; (2) that μόνος belongs to παροικεῖς and καὶ οὖκ έγνως; so that thus παροικεῖς Ἰερ. καὶ οὖκ έγνως (there is no comma to be placed before καὶ), taken together, constitute the ground of their question, whether it is he alone in whose experience this is the case. Hence it is wrong to take καὶ in the place of a relative. Comp. John vii. 4. — παροικεῖν Ἰερου. may either mean: dwell as a stranger in Jerusalem (thus often in the LXX.; usually with ἐν, but also with the accusative, Gen. xvii. 8; Ex. vi. 4), or: dwell near, at Jerusalem (Grotius, Rosenmüller, and, with hesitation, Bleek; comp. Xen. De reldit. i. 5; Isocr. Panegyr. 162; Thuc. iii. 93; Lucian, D. M. ii. 1); thus Ἰερουρ. would be in the dative. The former view is the usual and the correct one (comp. Heb. xi. 9; Acts vii. 6, xiii. 17; 1 Pet. i. 17, ii. 11), since the disciples might recognise the unknown, perchance, as a foreign pilgrim to the feast (even from his dialect), but not as a dweller in the vicinity of Jerusalem. Ungrammatically (not to be supported by passages such as Gen. xxiv. 37; Num. xx. 15; Ps. xv. 1, cxx. 6, where the LXX. have translated ἔγνω and ἔγνω by terms more specific than the original), Theophylact, also Zeger and others, have taken παρουσίαν as simply to dwell; and Castali, Vat完毕us, Clarius, and Kuinoel have taken it in the figurative sense of ἔγνω εἶναι and hospitēn esse: "de ipsis, qui quid agatur ignorant, art thou then alone so strange to Jerusalem?"

Beza, Kypke. ἀγείν, of time: to spend; as e.g. Δέκατον ἐτὸς ἀγείν, to be in the tenth year, and the like, does not belong merely to the later Greek.1 Compare the passages in Kypke. τρίτην ταύτην ἡμέραν is equivalent to ταύτην τρίτην οὖσαν ἡμέραν, or ταύτην, ἢ τρίτη ἐστὶν ἡμέρα. See Kühner, ad Xen. Anab. iv. 7. 5. Comp. iii. 5. 9. Hence: But indeed, besides all this, He passes this present day as the third since, etc. In this case, it is true, σήμερον is superfluous, but it corresponds to the painful excitement of the words. Comp. Mark xiv. 29. ἀγεί has been ungrammatically taken as impersonal: agitur (Grotius, Bengel, Rosenmüller, Kuinoel, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Ewald, Buttmann, Bleek, and others); while others grasp at arbitrary modes of supplying the subject, as ὁ χρόνος (Camerarius), Ὁ θεὸς (Heinsius), ὁ ἥλιος (Er. Schmid, Heumann). Bornemann regards Ἰσραὴλ as the subject: "Is dies, quem Israel hodie celebrat tertius est, ex quo," etc. But the context leads us neither to Israel nor to the mention of the celebration of the festival.

Wherefore, on the one hand, those sufferings needed first to precede; and, on the other, He must be again alive. The definite εἰσελθὲ. εἰς τ. δόξα. is not to be evaporated into the general “attain His destination” (Schleiermacher). As to supplying the verb in another tense, see Bornemann on xxiv. 27, ad Xen. Apol. § 26; and, generally, Krüger, § 62. 4. 1; also Nägelsbach, Anm. z. II:as, ed. 3, p. 76.

Ver. 27. Καὶ ἀπὸ ταύτων τ. προφ.] ἀρξάμενος is to be conceived of successively: He began from Moses, and when He had finished with him, from all the prophets, taking them one by one in succession, consequently making of each one of them a new commencement of His διερμήνευσις. Thus the reproach of a careless (Winer), inexact (Buttmann, Bleek), or defective (de Wette) mode of expression (Acts iii. 24) becomes, to say the least, unnecessary. What special passages Jesus referred to, Luke unfortunately does not tell us. Theophylact adduces many, and specially Jacob Capellus, from Gen. iii. 15 down to 2 Chron. Comp. also Erasmus, Paraphr. — διερμήνευεν] He interpreted (Acts ix. 36; 1 Cor. xii. 30; 2 Macc. i. 36; Polyb. iii. 22. 3), to wit, by explanation according to their destination referred to Him, i.e. having their fulfilment in Him. — τὰ περὶ αὐτοῦ] seil. γεγραμμένα, implied in γραφαῖς; otherwise, xxii. 37.

Vv. 28, 29. Ἐσχηματίζετο πορρωτέρω πορεύεσθαι ὃς ἀπλῶς συνοδούπορος, Euthynius Zigabenus. He desired to prompt the invitation, which was a matter of decorum, but knew that it would follow. Comp. Mark vi. 48. The imperfect προσεποεῖτο (He feigned, gave Himself the air) and then the aorist παρεβίασαντο: a lively representation.—πορεύεσθαι] not: that He is constrained or wishes to go farther, but we must conceive that for appearance' sake He actually began to move forward.—Ver. 29. On παρεβιάζοντο, they constrained, to wit, by means of urgent entreaty, comp. Acts xvi. 15; Gen. xix. 3; also ἀναγκάζον, xiv. 23; Matt. xiv. 22. They felt their holiest interests engaged to this stranger (ver. 32). That these two disciples dwelt in Emmaus is possible, but follows just as little from μείνον μεθ’ ἡμῶν (comp. τοῦ μείναι σὺν αὐτῶι) as from εἰσῆλθε. For to the latter expression is not to be supplied εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν αὐτῶν, but from ver. 28: εἰς τὴν κόμην; that invitation, however, does not of necessity mean: stay in our lodging, but may just as well signify: stay in our company, pass the night with us in the house of our host. Comp. John i. 39 f.

Ver. 30. Jesus proceeds not as a guest, but as the master of the house, according to His accustomed manner in the circle of His disciples; thus, it is true, that does not appear by which they recognise Him, but probably it is the external situation, corresponding to the opening of their eyes that now follows, which enhances the certainty and the impression of the recognition. Comp. ver. 35.—ἐὐλόγησε] "Tres, qui simul comedunt, tenentur ad gratias indicendum," Berac. f. 45, 1. It is the master of the house giving thanks before the meal. It is quite arbitrary for most of the church Fathers (Augustine, Chrysostom, Theophylact, and many others) and Catholics (so also Sepp, not Schegg, but Bisping) to decide that Jesus celebrated the Lord's Supper, from which even the ἐν τῷ κατακλήθ. ought to have guarded them, since this in fact points to the time before the proper beginning of the meal (as they reclined). Comp. on iii. 21.

1 The Catholics make use of vv. 30 and 35 as a defence of their Eucharistia sub una specie. See the Confut. Confess. Aug. ii. 1. Even Melanchthon does not refuse to explain the passage before us of the Lord’s Supper, disapproving, nevertheless, of the conclusion drawn from it: unam partem tantum datam esse; “quia partis appellatione reliquum significatur communi consuetudine sermonis,” Apol. x. 7, p. 234.
Ver. 31. Αὐτῶν δὲ διηνοίχησαν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ] is the opposite of οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτῶν ἐκρατοῦντο, ver. 16. As the latter, so also the former, according to Luke, is to be referred to extraordinary divine causation. This is opposed to the view (Paulus, Kuinoel, and others) that the disciples, only by means of the accustomed breaking of bread and giving of thanks by Jesus, wherein they had more attentively considered Him and had seen His pierced hands, arrived at the recognition of Him until then had been unknown to them. Comp. on ver. 30. — αὐτῶν] with lively emphasis placed first. What Jesus did is previously described. — ἀνοίγειν] (more strongly διανοίγειν) τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς, which is often used of the healing of blind people (Matt. ix. 30, xx. 33; John ix. 10, 14, 17, x. 21, xi. 37), describes in a picturesque manner the endowing with a capacity, bodily or spiritual, of recognising what before was unknown, Gen. iii. 5, 7, xxii. 19; 2 Kings vi. 17, 20; comp. Acts xxvi. 8. — ἀφαντὸς ἐγένετο ἀπ' αὐτῶν] He passed away from them invisibly. Comp. on γίνεσθαι ἀπό τινος, to withdraw from any one, Xen. Mem. i. 2. 25; Bar. iii. 21. Luke intends manifestly to narrate a sudden invisible withdrawal effected through divine agency; hence those do wrong to his intention and to the expression who, like Kuinoel, make out of it only a subito ab iis discersit, so that this departure would not have been observed till it occurred (Schleiermacher, L. J. p. 474). Beza well says that Luke has not said αὐτοῖς, but ἀπ' αὐτῶν; “ne quis existimet praesentem quidem Christum cum ipsis mansisse, sed corpore, quod cerni non posset.” The Ubiquists supported the doctrine of the invisible presence of Christ’s body by the passage before us. Comp. Calovius. — On the word ἀφαντὸς—which is very frequent in the poets, but only rarely used in prose, and that of a late period, and, moreover, is not found in the LXX. and the Apocrypha—instead of the classical prose word ἀφανής, see Wesseling, ad Diod. iv. 65.

Vv. 32, 33. Οὐκ ἦν καρδία ἡμῶν καιομένη ἤν ἐν ἡμῖν;] Was not our heart on fire within us? The extraordinarily lively emotions are, as in all languages, represented under the image of burning, of heat, of being inflamed, and the like, Wetstein and Kypke in loc.; Musgrave, ad Soph. Aj. 473. Hence the meaning: Was not our heart in an extraordinarily fervent commotion? Comp. Ps. xxxix. 4; Jer. xx. 9. Quite naturally the two disciples abstain from explaining more fully the excitement of feeling that they had experienced, because such an excitement, comprehending several affections, rises into consciousness, as divided into its special elements, the less in proportion as its experiences are deep, urgent, and marvellous. The connection of the question with what precedes is: "Vere Christus est, nam non alia potuit esse causa, cur in via eo loquente tantopere animus nostrer inflammaretur," Maldonatus.

— ὡς ἐνυμοίγεν κ.τ.λ.] without καὶ (see the critical remarks) adds the special to the general asynodetally, in which form that which is urgent and impressive of the recollection expresses itself.— Ver. 33. αὐτῇ τῇ ὅρᾳ] Certainly after such an experience the meal of which they had intended to partake was immediately given up. They had now no more irresistible necessity than that of communicating with their fellow-disciples in Jerusalem, and "jam non timent iter nocturnum, quod antea dissuaserant ignoto comiti, ver. 29," Bengel.

Vv. 34, 35. Δέγοντας] belongs to τοὺς ἐνδεκα καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς, who in a body met them as they arrived with the cry: ἡγέρθη ὁ κύριος κ.τ.λ. On the discrepancy with Mark xvi. 13, see on the passage.— ἡγέρθη and ὁφθη are placed first with triumphant emphasis, as contrasted with what is narrated at vv. 11, 12. The appearance to Peter, which Luke has not related further (but see 1 Cor. xv. 5), took place in the interval, after what is contained in ver. 12. "Apparitiones utrimque factae, quibus se invicem confirmabant illi, quibus obtigerant," Bengel.— Σίμωνι] at that time the name which was still the general favourite in the circle of the disciples. According to Lange’s fancy, the apostle after his fall laid aside his name of Peter, as a priest his consecrated robe, and an officer his sword. Jesus Himself named him, indeed, before and after his fall, almost exclusively Simon (Matt. xvii. 25; Mark xiv. 37; Luke xxii. 31; John xxi. 15). In Luke xxii. 34, Πέτρε has a special significance. — Moreover, ver. 34 ought to have forbidden the assumption that Luke distinguishes the two disciples who went to Emmaus above the apostles (Hilgenfeld). — Ver. 35. καὶ αὐτοῖς and they on their part, as contrasted with those who were assembled. — εἰς τῇ κλάσει] not: in the breaking, but at the time of the breaking. See on ver. 31.

Vv. 36, 37. Ἄνωθεν ἔστη ἐν μέσῳ αὐτῶν] He Himself stood in the midst of them. These words point to the fact that Luke, who already at ver. 31 has related also a sudden disappearance and vanishing of Jesus, conceived of a marvellous, instantaneous appearance of the Risen One in the circle of His disciples, and this is confirmed by the narrative in John xx. 19 of the appearance of Jesus within closed doors. The subsequently (ver. 37) related impression upon those who were assembled is, moreover, easily explained from this fact, although they had just before spoken as specified at ver. 34. —ἐν μέσῳ] "id significantius quam in medium," Bengel. — εἰρήνη ὑμῖν] Peace to you! The usual Jewish greeting ναβῃ ὑμῖν, x. 5. — Ver. 37. πνεῦμα] a departed spirit, which, having come from Hades, appeared as an umbra in an apparent body; the same that Matthew, xiv. 26, calls φάντασμα.

Ver. 38. Wherefore arise thoughts in your heart? i.e., wherefore have ye not immediately and without any consideration (see on Phil. ii. 14) recognised me as the person I am?

Ver. 39. In the first half of the verse Jesus desires to remove from His disciples their consternation, and that by means of their being required to convince themselves that it is He Himself (no other); in the second half He desires to oppose the notion of a πνεῦμα, and that in such a way that they should be persuaded that it is He bodily. The two parts of ver. 39 correspond, that is to say, to the two parts of ver. 38. — τὰς χεῖρας μου κ. τ. τόδας μ. This, pointed to as a proof that it is He Himself, must afford this proof by the traces of the crucifixion, namely, by the wounds of the nails in the hands and feet (as to the nailing of the feet, see on Matt. xxvii. 35). ing to Paulus and de Wette, Jesus pointed to His hands and feet as the uncovered parts, in order to oppose the notion of a spirit. In this way αὐτῶς ἐγώ would have to be understood of the reality, not of the identity of His appearance. But the hands and the feet were seen even without special pointing to them; the latter presupposes a characteristic to be recognised by closer inspection. Even this characteristic, however, could not prove the reality (since it might appear as well in a φάντασμα or εἴδωλον), but probably the identity though apart from the reality, for which latter the conviction was to be added by means of touch. — ὅτε] is in both cases: that. Ver. 44. Ἐίπεν δὲ αὐτῶις] after the eating; a continuation of the same scene. According to the simple narrative, it is altogether unwarrantable to place an interval between these about the question whether Jesus was actually or only apparently dead (in respect of which he sophistically misuses Acts ii. 27); but still a merely apparent death does not come to the same thing, and it is only opposed to the (true) view of the resurrection that the disciples took internal for external phenomenon. two passages. No impartial reader could do this, and how easy would it have been for Luke to give a hint to that effect! — οὕτωι οἷς λόγοι κ.τ.λ.] these (namely, that I—as ye have now convinced yourselves—after my sufferings and death have actually arisen) are the words (in their realization, namely) which I spoke to you while I was yet with you, to wit, that all things must be fulfilled, etc. (the substance of the λόγοι). Jesus assuredly often actually said this to them, according to the substance generally. Under the law was reckoned merely the Pentateuch; under the prophets, Joshua, Judges, 1st and 2d Samuel, 1st and 2d Kings (:not Προφητείας), and 1 But to say, with Ebrard, p. 596, that the passage vv. 44-49 depicts in general the whole of the teaching communicated to the disciples by Christ after His resurrection, is just as marvellous a despairing clutch of harmonists. So also older harmonists, and even Grotius. Wieseler, in the Chronol. Synopsis, p. 423 f., like Bengel and others, places between ver. 43 and ver. 44 the forty days, after the lapse of which ver. 44 ff. is spoken on the day of the ascension. But his proof depends on the presupposition that in the Gospel and in Acts i. Luke must needs follow the same tradition in respect of the time of the ascension. The separation of ver. 44 from what precedes ought not only to have been prevented by the use of the ἐκ (comp. on ver. 50), but also by the use of the ἀν ὡς, referring as it does to what goes before. Lange, L. J. II. 3, p. 1679, represents ver. 45, beginning with τίτι διήλθεν κ.τ.λ., as denoting the forty days' ministry of Jesus begun on that evening; for he maintains that the unfolding of the knowledge did not occur in a moment. But why not? At least there needed no longer time for that purpose than for the instructions of ver. 27. Rightly, Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 2, p. 5, declares himself opposed to separations of that kind; nevertheless, he afterwards comes back to a similar arbitrary interpolation of the forty days in vv. 45-49. If the place for the forty days has first been found here, there is indeed sufficient room to place the direction of ver. 49, καὶ ταῦτα ἐν τῇ πέλει κ.τ.λ., first after the return of the disciples from Galilee, as Lange does; but Luke does not, since he here absolutely excludes a withdrawal on their part to Galilee. Ewald rightly recognises (Gesch. des Apost. Zeitalt. p. 93) that Luke limits all appearances of the Risen One to the resurrection Sunday. So also, impartially, Bleek, Holtzmann.

the prophets properly so called, except Daniel (דניאל אָחָרִים); under the Hagiographa, all the rest of the canonical Scriptures, including Daniel, Esther, Ezra and Nehemiah (the two reckoned together as one book), and Chronicles. See Bava Bathra f. xiv. 2; Lightfoot, p. 900. Yet, according to the use of προφητ. and ψαλμ. elsewhere (comp. xx. 42) from the mouth of Jesus, it is not to be assumed that He by these two designations intended to express that definite literary historical extent of the נביאים, and the whole of the Hagiographa. He means the prophets proper who have prophesied of Him (ver. 25), from whom He certainly, moreover, did not think Daniel excluded (Matt. xxiv. 15); and by ψαλμ., the actual Psalms in the accustomed sense as that portion of the Scripture in which, besides the law and the prophets, the Messianic prophecy is chiefly deposited. Moreover, observe the non-repetition of the article before προφ. and ψαλμ., whereby the three portions appear in their connection as constituting one whole of prophecy.

Vv. 46, 47. Καὶ οὕτως ἕδει being deleted (see the critical remarks), the passage reads: for thus it is written that the Messiah should suffer and rise again, etc., and that there should be announced, etc. By means of οὕτως Jesus adds the circumstance in the way of motive, on account of which He opened their νοῦς, etc.; οὕτως, however, has its reference in these instructions just given: in the manner, in such a way as I have just introduced you into the understanding of the Scripture. What follows, being conceived under the form of doctrinal positions ("the Messiah suffers," etc.) as far as the end of ver. 47, is then the Messianic summary of Old Testament prophecy. — ἐπὶ τῷ ὄνομα. ἀντων] on the foundation of His name—on the confession of this name, to wit, by which the whole evangelic agency is supported—depends the announcement of repentance and forgiveness, as far as concerns their specific purpose and their characteristic nature. Hence: “But it is your business to testify that according to the prophecies of Scripture the Messiah actually suffered, and is risen again, and repentance and forgiveness are announced on the ground of His name,” etc. Of the former two points the apostles were eye-witnesses; of the last, they were themselves the first executors, and could therefore in their office testify of their experience that according to the prophecies of Scripture is announced, etc.

xxi. 1; de Wette, comp. Ebrard) in such an extension as this (according to de Wette, he forgot in ver. 50 to specify the late date), is an entirely erroneous supposition. There remains nothing else than the exegetic result—that a twofold tradition had grown up—to wit—(1) that Jesus, even on the day of the resurrection, ascended into heaven (Mark xvi., Luke in the Gospel); and (2) that after His resurrection He abode still for a series of days (according to the Acts of the Apostles, forty days) upon the earth (Matthew, John). Luke in the Gospel followed the former tradition, but in the Acts the latter. Hence we may infer in regard to the latter account, either that he did not learn it until after the compiling of his Gospel, or, which is more probable, that he adopted it as the correct account. As to the variation in the traditions regarding the locality of the appearances of the risen Lord, see on Matt. xxviii. 10. — ἐξω] with verbs compounded with ἐκ; see Lobeck, ad Aj. p. 334, ad Phryn. p. 10; Bornemann, Schol. p. 166. — ἐνος ἐς Βηθ.] as far as to Bethany, not necessarily into the village itself, but (comp. The passive voice does not require us to assume that there were any agents to carry Him up (according to de Wette, probably angels or a cloud). The imperfect is pictorial. Luke thinks of the ascension as a visible incident, which he has more fully represented at Acts i. According to Paulus, indeed, κ. ἀνεφέρ. εἰς τ. οὐρ. is held to be only an inference! Moreover, if the words κ. ἀνεφέρ. εἰς τ. οὐρ. are not genuine (see the critical remarks), then the ascension is certainly meant even by the mere διέστη ἀπ' αὐτῶν; but here it is not yet definitely indicated, which indication, together with the detailed description, Luke reserves for the beginning of his second book,—till then, that διέστη ἀπ’ αὐτῶν was sufficient,—the matter of fact of which was already incidentally mentioned at ix. 51, and was elsewhere familiar. On διέστη, secessit, comp. Hom. II. xii. 86, xvi. 470; Valckenaer, Schol. in loc.

Remark.—On the subject of the ascension\(^1\) the following considerations are to be noted:—(1) Considered in general, it is incontestably established as an actual fact by means of the testimony of the New Testament.\(^2\) For, besides that in the passage before us it is historically narrated (comp. with Acts i. and Mark xvi.), it is also expressly predicted by Jesus Himself, John xx. 17 (comp. as early as the suggestion in vi. 62); it is expressly mentioned by the apostles as having happened (Acts ii. 32, 33, iii. 21; 1 Pet. iii. 22; Col. iii. 1 ff.; Eph. ii. 6, iv. 10. Comp. Acts vii. 56; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Heb. ix. 24); and it forms—and that, too, as a bodily exaltation into heaven to the throne of the glory of God—the necessary historical presupposition of the whole preaching of the Parousia (which is a real and bodily return) as of the resurrection of the dead and transformation of the living (which changes have their necessary condition in the glorified body of Him who is to accomplish them, viz. Christ, 1 Cor. xv. 5 ff., 8, 16, 22, 23; Phil. iii. 20, 21, and elsewhere). (2) But the idea of a visibly, yea, sensibly glorious event must the rather be considered as an addition of subsequent tradition which grew up as a reflection of the idea of the Parousia, Acts i. 11, since only Luke, and that certainly merely in the Acts (Mark not at all, xvi. 18), expressly relates \(^1\) Heaven is not herein to be taken in the sense of the omnipresence of the courts of God, as the old Lutheran orthodoxy, in the interest of the doctrine of Christ’s ubiquity, would have it (thus also Thomasius, Christi Pers. u. Werk, II. p. 232 ff.), or of the unextended ground of life which bears the entire expanse of space (Schoebelen, Grundl. d. Heils, p. 67), but locally, of the dwelling-place of the glory of God; see on Matt. vi. 9; Mark xvi. 18; Acts iii. 21. Erroneously, likewise in the sense of ubiquity, says Gess, Pers. Chr. p. 265: “Where Jesus, according to His divinity, chooses to be essentially present, there He will also be according to His human corporeality.” No; according to the New Testament view, it must mean: He there effectuates this His presence by the Holy Spirit in whom He communicates Himself. See, especially, John xiv.–xvi.; Rom. viii. 9, 10. A becoming bodily present is a marvellous exception, as in the case of Paul’s conversion, see on Acts ix. 3. Calvin, Inst. II. 16, rightly designates the being of Christ in heaven as a corporalitas absentia from the earth.

\(^2\) Against the denial of the capability of historical testimony to prove the actuality of miracles in general, see, especially, Rothe, zur Dogmat. p. 84 ff.
an event of that kind; but the first and fourth evangelists, although John had been an eye-witness, are wholly silent on the subject (including John vi. 62), which they hardly either morally could have been or historically would have ventured to be, since such a highest and final external glorification would have incontrovertibly made good, even from a literary point of view, the forcible impression which that event would have necessarily produced upon the faithful, and would have just as naturally and incontrovertibly put forward this most splendid Messianic οὖν as the worthiest and most glorious copestone—the return to heaven corresponding to the heavenly origin. The reasons by which it has been sought to explain and justify their silence (see e.g. in Flatt's Magaz. VIII. p. 67; Olshausen; Krabbe, p. 532 f.; Hug, Gutecht. II. p. 254 ff.; Ebrard, p. 602; Lange, II. p. 1762 ff.) are nothing more than forced, feeble, and even psychologically untenable evasions. Comp. Strauss, II. p. 657 f. (3) The body of the risen Lord was not yet in the state of glorification (it has flesh and bones, still bears the scars of the wounds, is touched, breathes, eats, speaks, walks, etc., in opposition to Theophylact, Augustine, Krabbe, Ewald, Thomasius, Keim, and the old dogmatic writers); but, moreover, no longer of the same constitution as before the resurrection (Schleiermacher), but, as Origen already perceived, in a condition standing midway between mundane corporeality and supra-mundane glorification—and immortal (Rom. vi. 9, 10). Although, on account of the want of any analogy within our experience, such a condition of necessity does not admit of a more exact representation, yet still it explains in general the sort of estrangement between the risen Lord and His disciples,—the partial doubt of the latter as to His identity, His not being hindered by the crucifixion wounds, His marvellous appearance and disappearance, and the like; moreover, by the consideration that Jesus rose again in a changed bodily constitution, the physiological scruples which have been raised against His rising from not merely apparent death are removed. The actual glorification whereby His body became the σῶμα πνευματικόν (1 Cor. xv. 45-47), the σῶμα τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ (Phil. iii. 21), first began in the moment.

1 "Claritas in Christi corpore, cum resurrexit, ab oculis discipulorum potius absconditauisse, quam defuisse credenda est," Augustine, De civ. Dei, xxii. 9.

of the ascension, when His body was transformed into the spiritual body, as they who are still living at the time of the Parousia shall be transformed (1 Cor. xv. 51, 52), still with this difference, that the body of the latter up to that moment is still mortal (1 Cor. xv. 53), whereas the body of Christ, even from the time of the resurrection, was immortal; hence also an appeal to the marvellous healing power of Jesus, which was powerfully exercised on Himself (Hase, L. J. § 118), is here insufficient and inapplicable. The perfecting of this glorification of the body of Christ is not to be regarded as a matter to be perceived by the senses, since in general a glorified bodily organ does not fall into the category of things perceptible by human sense. The same is the case with the taking up of the glorified Christ into heaven, which, according to the analogy of Luke xxiv. 31, is perhaps conceivable in the form of a vanishing. (4) Of the two traditions which had grown up in regard to the time of the ascension (see on ver. 50), in any case the one bearing that after His resurrection Jesus still abode on earth for a series of days, is decidedly to be preferred to the other, that even as early as the day of resurrection He also ascended. And this preference is to be given on the preponderating authority of John, with which is associated also Paul, by his account of the appearances of the risen Lord, 1 Cor. xv. 5–7, and the notices of Acts x. 41, xiii. 31. Still there must remain a doubt therein whether the definite specification of forty days does not owe its origin to tradition, which fixed the approximate time (comp. Acts xiii. 31) at this sacred number. The remarkable testimony of Barnabas, Ep. 15 (ἀφομνεῖ τὴν ἡμέραν τὴν ἡγίστην εἰς εὐφροσύνην, ἐν ἑν τοῖς ἑγίστη ἐν νεκρῶν καὶ θανατωθείς ἀνέβη τοῖς ουρανοῖς), in no way agrees with the forty days.¹

² But to seek to make out an agreement between the narrative of Luke about the appearances of the risen Lord with that of Paul (see e.g. Holtzmann) can in no way be successful.

³ It may be supposed, with Weisse, that the ascension was here placed on the resurrection Sunday, or, with Ebrard, Lange, and many others, that it was generally placed on a Sunday. In respect of the latter supposition, indeed, the number forty has been given up, and it has been taken as a round number and increased to forty-two. But if, with Dressel, Patr. Ap. p. 36, a point be put

LUKE II.
(5) If the appearances of the risen Lord are transferred as products of the imaginative faculty into the subjective region (Strauss, Holsten, and others), or if, in spite of the unanimous attestation of the third day as being that on which they first began, they are viewed as spiritual visions of the glorified One in the deepest excitement of aspiration and prayer (Ewald, Gesch. d. Apost. Zeitalt, p. 68ff.); then, on the one hand, instead of the resurrection, in the sense of the New Testament, as an historical starting-point, there remains only the personal continuance of the exalted One (Schenkel); and, on the other hand, the ascension does not appear as an objective fact, but just as nothing more than the end of that powerful excitement, and this must carry with it the conclusion that from him to whom He in such wise appeared, the glorified One vanished again tranquilly into His everlasting glorification with God (Ewald, l.c. p. 95 ff.). Every spiritualizing of those appearances into internal experiences, "into glorifications of the image of His character in the hearts of His faithful people" (Schenkel), and the like, must convert a strange, widespread fanaticism into the fruitful mother of the mighty apostolic work, and into the foundation of the ecclesiastical edifice, but must regard the Gospel narratives on the matter as products and representations of self-deceptions, or as a kind of ghost stories,—a view which the narratives of the Apostle John in reference thereto most decisively forbid. Comp. on Matt., Remark after xxviii. 10. This, withal, is opposed to the generalization of the concrete appearances into continued influences of the Lord, who still lived, and of His Spirit (Weizsäcker), in which for the ascension, as such, there is left nothing historical. Weisse's view, moreover, is absolutely irreconcilable with the New Testament narratives, identifying as it does the ascension with the resurrection, so that, according to apostolic view, the fact was no going forth of the body from the grave, but the taking up of the soul (with a spiritual corporeality) out of Hades into heaven, whence the exalted One announced Himself in visions (see also Weisse, Evangelienfrage, p. 272 ff.; Gebhardt, Auferst. Chr. p. 72). To make out of the ascension absolutely the actual death which Jesus, being awakened from apparent death, soon after died (Paulus), could only be attained at the height of naturalistic outrage on the New Testament, but is not after νεκρῶν, and what follows be taken as an independent clause, this is a very unfortunate evasion, by means of which καὶ οὐκ ἔχει ἀπερχόμενος κ.τ.λ. is withdrawn from all connection, and is placed in the air. Not better is Gebhardt's notion, Auferst. Chr. p. 52, that Barnabas, in mentioning also the ascension, did not intend to make specification of date at all for it.
avoided also by Schleiermacher in his wavering expressions. The mythical construction out of Old Testament recollections (Strauss), and the directly hostile crumbling and destruction of the Gospel narratives (Bruno Bauer), amount to subjective assumptions contradictory of history; whilst, on the other hand, the revival of the Socinian opinion of a repeated ascension (Kinkel in the Stud. u. Krit. 1841, p. 597 ff.) depended on erroneous interpretations of single passages (especially John xx. 17). Finally, the abandoning of all attempts historically to ascertain the fact (de Wette on ver. 53) does justice neither to the accounts and intimations of the New Testament itself, nor to the demands which science must make on the ground of those intimations.

Ver. 52. Kai avtoi] and they on their part, after the Lord was separated from them (and was taken up into heaven). To the anefērēto eis t. oukr. corresponds in this place the equally suspicious προσκυν. aivτων (see the critical remarks on ver. 51 ff.), which is referred to Him who was exalted to heavenly dominion. — μετὰ χαρᾶς μεγάλα.] at this final blessed perfecting of their Lord Himself (John xiv. 28), and at the blessing which they had just received from Him. "Praeludia Pentecostes," Bengel. "Corpus sumum intulit coelo, majestatem suam non abstulit mundo," Augustine.

¹ Comp. moreover, Taute, Religionsphilosophie, II. i, p. 380 ff., according to whom the resurrection of Christ is said to have been His first descent out of the intelligible region of the existence of all things, but the ascension His last resurrection appearance, so that resurrection and ascension are so related to one another as special epoch-making appearances of the Lord before the brethren after His death. With such extravagant imaginations of historical details of faith is the philosophy of Herbart, even against its will, driven forth far beyond the characteristic limits which by Herbart himself are clearly and definitely laid down.
