CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL

COMMENTARY

ON

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

BY

HEINRICH AUGUST WILHELM MEYER, Th.D.
OBERCONSISTORIALRATH, HANNOVER.

From the German.

THE TRANSLATION REVISED AND EDITED, WITH THE SANCTION OF THE AUTHOR, BY

WILLIAM P. DICKSON, D.D.,
PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW.

PART IV.
THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.
VOL. I.

EDINBURGH:
T. AND T. CLARK, 38 GEORGE STREET.
MDCCCLXXIII
NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

MESSRS. CLARK have much pleasure in publishing the first issue of Dr. Meyer's Commentary, viz.:—

GALATIANS, One Volume.
ROMANS, Volume I.

Both of these are translated from editions quite recently published, of which early sheets were, by special arrangement, supplied by the German Publishers.

The extreme care which has been given to the editing of these volumes will appear, the Publishers trust, in their great accuracy, and this will be a feature of the whole series. It is evident that the value of the Commentary very much depends on minute accuracy.

It is impossible that the same regularity can be maintained in the publication of Meyer as in the other series of Messrs. Clark. The care demanded prevents speed either in editing or printing, but no pains will be spared to proceed as rapidly as possible, and it is hoped other two volumes may be ready about Spring next year.

The volumes will not average more than from 350 to 400 pages each, on account of the great expense involved in the undertaking from first to last.

The Subscription is One Guinea for Four Volumes, payable in advance (24s. when not so paid).

Edinburgh, 38 George Street,

October 1873.
CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL HANDBOOK TO THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

BY HEINRICH AUGUST WILHELM MEYER, Th.D. OBERCONSISTORIALRATH, HANNOVER.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FIFTH EDITION OF THE GERMAN BY REV. JOHN C. MOORE, B.A., HAMBURG.

VOL. I.

EDINBURGH: T. AND T. CLARK, 38 GEORGE STREET. MDCCCLXXIII.
AMONG the many valuable contributions with which the scholars and theologians of Germany have enriched the literature of New Testament exegesis, the Kritisch-exegetischer Kommentar über das Neue Testament of Dr. Meyer has been pronounced by the almost unanimous verdict of competent judges the best, as it is unquestionably the most careful and elaborate, work of its kind. The title indicates with sufficient clearness its distinctive character as at once critical and exegetical, although the former element stands in subordination to the latter. The critical remarks prefixed to each chapter present a lucid statement of the evidence with reference to all questions of any moment affecting the constitution of the text, and are especially valuable for the concise explanations which they give of the probable origin of the various readings, and of the grounds which, in a conflict of evidence and of critical opinion, have determined Dr. Meyer's own judgment. But, terse and discriminating as is its textual criticism, a still higher value belongs to the exegesis which forms the pith and marrow of the book. While there are many commentaries of more or less excellence which occupy themselves with the theological import of Scripture, with popular exposition or with homiletic illustration, and others which are largely devoted to historical criticism—as it is called, although it is in reality too often mere arbitrary speculation—Dr. Meyer has chosen and has steadily cultivated the special field of exegesis pure and simple. His sole aim is to ascertain the grammatical and historical meaning of Scripture in accordance with the legitimate principles, and in the use of the proper resources, of interpretation, leaving the result thus obtained to be turned to due account by the theologian, the preacher, or the critical inquirer for their respective purposes. That the primary sense of Scripture can be rightly arrived at only by the method of grammatico-historical interpretation, is now admitted on all hands; and it is acknowledged that all Christian theology must rest on the foundation of sure and solid exegesis. The theologian must presume the processes, and must accept the assured results, of interpretation; nor can the preacher be regarded as duly equipped for his work, unless he is able to draw directly from the fountain-head—integros accedere fontes atque haurire—and to quicken and deepen his Christian insight by fresh and daily renewed study of the living word.

In this, as in other departments of science, the best results have been attained by dividing labour and specialising research; and Dr. Meyer has, by the concentration of his energies for upwards of forty years on the exegetical study of the New Testament, made the field essentially his own. The Commentaries on the Gospels, on Acts, and on the Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon proceed from his own hand, and have all of them been revised and enlarged in successive editions—several even a fifth time. For the completion of the work on the same general plan he called in the services of able colleagues—Dr. Lünemann for the Epistles to the Thessalonians and Hebrews, Dr. Huther for the Pastoral and the Catholic Epistles, and Dr. Düsterdieck for the Apocalypse. The labours of Meyer in New Testament exegesis may be regarded as correlative and complementary to those of Winer in New Testament Grammar. While Winer rescued the grammar of the New Testament idiom from the dogmatism and caprice which had prevailed before his time, and rendered it, in the confident but just language of his title-page, "the sure foundation of New Testament exegesis," he dealt, from the nature of the case, merely with the isolated phenomena as illustrations. Meyer undertook the task of applying the same principles and methods to the interpretation of the New Testament as a whole. This work he has accomplished with rare exegetical tact and unrivalled philological precision. We say, unrivalled; for—without derogating from the merits of other labourers in the same field, and without denying the excellence more especially of various recent monographs formed after his model—it may safely be affirmed that his work remains, in its own line and in its most characteristic features, unequalled. The only book which, as covering the same ground, may be fairly brought into comparison with it is the "Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zum Neuen Testament" of de Wette—a masterpiece of exegetical skill, unquestionably well entitled to a place by its side. Each work has its own special excellences; and no one has acknowledged the merits of Meyer more frankly than de Wette himself, who repeatedly refers, as does also Meyer on his part, to the help which each derived from the labours of the other—to the candour with which they accepted, or the fairness with which they controverted, as the case might be, each other's views—and who pronounced Meyer, even at the outset of his exegetical career, an expositor distinguished by thoroughness (Gründlichkeit), correct perception, and sure judgment. The Handbook of de Wette is marked by a singular power of condensation and felicity of clear and terse expression; but the Commentary of Meyer is superior in philological accuracy, and in the fulness with which it sets forth not only the grounds on which his own

1 Mr. Moulton, in his most accurate and admirable translation of Winer, omits the word "sure," probably deeming it unnecessary any longer to affirm what nobody now denies.
interpretation rests, but also the reasons which may be urged in support of, or in opposition to, the interpretations of others—a feature which gives special value to it as a practical discipline for the student of exegesis. And—individually of other considerations—the work of Dr. Meyer possesses the marked advantage of having undergone to a much greater extent successive revisions at the hands of its author, and has thus been enriched, not only by the working in of results gathered in the interval from the labours of others, but also by the ample fruits of the author's own more extended experience and more mature judgment. The first part of de Wette's Handbook appeared in 1836, and it was completed in 1848, while his death took place in 1849. The first part of Dr. Meyer's Commentary appeared in 1832, and it has ever since been receiving alterations and additions down to the spring of the present year. No doubt the work of de Wette has been reissued, since his death, in various editions by able and careful scholars, such as Brückner, Messner, and Moeller. But in this case we have no assurance, that the manipulation which the work has undergone is such as would have been approved by the mature judgment of the author, or even that it may be consistent with his known principles and views. Indeed, a lately reissued part of the work—the Commentary on Acts, as edited by Overbeck—presents a flagrant instance to the contrary. For Dr. Overbeck has not only made additions of his own, which amount to nearly two-thirds of the whole book, but—with a liberty, which in this country we should deem wholly unwarrantable, and strangely disrespectful to the memory of a man so distinguished as de Wette—he has overlaid the original work with a running commentary of tedious minuteness, written in support of critical views, to which de Wette had, in the preface to his own last edition, declared himself wholly opposed.¹ In Dr. Meyer's case, on the other hand, we have the latest judgments of the great exegete himself, as he passes under review the fresh contributions to the literature of the subject, and in their light re-examines his earlier positions, and recalls, modifies, or vindicates anew his conclusions. Nothing indeed is more remarkable in connection with Dr. Meyer's work than the results furnished by a comparison of its successive editions, as evincing the diligence with which he read and digested every new academic dissertation that might throw light on his subject, the impartiality and truth-loving spirit with which his mind remained open to fresh light and was ready to change or modify its interpretation wherever there seemed due ground, and the assiduous care with which he revised every sentence. The interleaved sheets—at present in my possession—shewing the corrections and additions made by Dr. Meyer on the fourth edition in preparation for the fifth, furnish, in their MS. erasures and copious marginal annotations, even a more striking illustration of the extent and variety of this alteration than the subjoined specimen, taken ad aperturam, in which I have underlined the portions changed. 1 This constant process of alteration may possibly occasion disappointment in some quarters; but, besides that it would have required more space than I have at my disposal, I deem such a refutation superfluous. Extravagant criticism of this sort nullifies itself; and the only benefit arising from it is, that by exceeding all bounds it awakens the feeling of a necessity for imposing self-restraint." In the face of this condemnation Dr. Overbeck has superinduced on the work of de Wette an elaborate treatise carrying out in detail that very criticism, and thereby—whatever might under other circumstances be its value—fundamentally altering the standpoint and perverting the character of the book. The pleas by which he attempts to vindicate his course are wholly inadequate to justify so unprecedented a violation of the respect due to a great name and a great book, as is the publication, under cover of a new edition, of views diametrically opposed to the last judgment of the author.

¹ De Wette's words—sufficiently remarkable—are to this effect: "That I have not entered more at length into a refutation of the destructive criticism of Baur,
GENERAL PREFACE BY THE EDITOR.

1 Rom. v. i. The underlining shows the extent of the alterations.

V. 1. 1 Ös v folgert aus dem ganzen vorigen Abschnitt 3, 21—4, 25, und zwar formell so weiterführend, dass δικαιοθέτεται.

Fifth Edition.

V. 1. 1 Ös v folgert aus dem ganzen vorigen Abschnitt 3, 21—4, 25, und zwar formell so weiterführend, dass δικαιοθέτεται.

and addition serves to account, in a great measure, for the somewhat awkward form of many of the sentences, broken up as they are by subsequent parenthetical insertions, or prolonged by the appending of fresh clauses not contemplated at the outset.

Fifth Edition.

In estimating the character and value of Dr. Meyer's work, it is essential that we should always bear in mind the precise standpoint from which it is written. That is simply and solely, as we have already indicated, the standpoint of the exegete, who endeavours in the exercise of his own independent judgment to arrive, by the use of the proper means, at the historical sense of Scripture. His object is not to seek support for the doctrines, nor does he bind himself or regulate his operations by the definitions or decisions of any particular Church. On the contrary, he reaches his results by a purely exegetical process, and places them, when so found, at the disposal of the Church. Under these circumstances, it is not perhaps surprising that these results do not in all respects accord with the traditional interpretation, or with the received doctrines, of the Church to which he belonged (the Lutheran). But as little is it surprising, on the other hand, that the longer Dr. Meyer prosecuted the study of Scripture from his own standpoint, the closer was the approximation of his general results to the conclusions embodied in the great Confessions of the Protestant Church. Some petulant critics, indeed, who seem slow to give to any that differ from them credit for that love of the truth to which they themselves lay claim, have sneered at the comparatively conservative and orthodox issues of his later exegesis; but no one has ventured openly to affirm that these issues were reached otherwise than by the consistent and conscientious application of his exegetical principles. The general result in Dr. Meyer's case—which is only what may be reasonably expected, unless we are to suppose that the great body of earlier interpreters have studied Scripture wholly in vain—coincides with the well-known statement of Winer, that "the controversies among interpreters have usually led back to the admission that the old Protestant views of the meaning of Scripture are the correct ones."¹ If the study of this book is fitted to supersede a mere blind attachment to foregone conclusions, it is no less adapted to counteract the too prevalent tendency in our own day to empty Scripture of all definite and objective significance, or to find in it just what suits the sentiments or wishes of the seeker.

¹ In the Preface to the fourth edition of his Commentary on Romans, issued in 1865, Meyer has some interesting remarks as to the phases of opinion which had come and gone (or nearly so) within his own experience. "We older men," he says, "have seen the day when Dr. Paulus and his devices were in vogue; he died without leaving a disciple behind him. We passed through the tempest raised by Strauss some thirty years ago; and with what a sense of solitariness might its author now celebrate his jubilee! We saw the constellation of Tubingen arise, and, even before Baur departed hence, its lustre had waned. A fresh and firmer basis for the truth which had been assailed, and a more complete apprehension of that truth—these were the blessings which the waves left behind; and so will it be when the present surge has passed away. What Strauss says by way of censure on Schleiermacher—that he had himself lashed with cords to the mast of faith in Christ, in order that he might pass by the dangerous island of criticism unharmed—will always (in the sense in which it held true of that Ulysses) redound to his praise. The Church and its science will continue bound to the strong mast of faith in Christ, and bound to it with the cords—that cannot be torn sunder—which the New Testament has woven in its living word. Only in the event of these bands giving way would the voices of criticism prove sirensongs leading it to destruction."

Much impressed by frequent use with the value of the work, I have long cherished a wish that its contents might be made available in an English dress to the professional student of Scripture, who might not be able to consult it with facility in the original; and when sometime ago Messrs. Clark obtained the consent of the German publishers to the issue of an English translation, I undertook at their request, and with the readily given sanction of Dr. Meyer, to edit the work. I was induced to do so, not only because it seemed important that the translation of such a work should be executed on uniform principles, and on a common plan—which it was not likely to be, if its several parts were rendered by different translators acting independently—but also because it appeared desirable that a work of so technical a character, the value of which largely depends on the minute accuracy of the rendering, should be revised and passed through the press by some one more or less familiar with its professional use. It has frequently happened that translations otherwise good have been disfigured by blunders springing from the want of this special knowledge on the part of the translators.¹ I trust

¹ I subjoin a few illustrations, out of a great many culled from various sources, which have come at different times under my own observation, and which may suffice to indicate the character of the mistakes into which translators not specially conversant with the subject under discussion are apt to fall:—Zusammensetzung des Worts, “connection of the words”;”den gewichtigen Gleichbau,” “the forcible comparison”;”wasser betrifft der Structur,” “as regards the style;” “prinzipiell,” “principal;” in einer... Section, “in a direction;” zu interpolieren, “to interpolate;” sächliche Objecte, “sensible objects;” sinnliche Vorstellung, “ingenious representation;” sinnfällig, “spirit-crushing;” in dem ergänzten Vordersatzes,” “in the enlarged premise;” technischer Terminus, “technical terminus;” unverträglich, “unbearable;” Vorwurf, “theme;” Ausweg, “elucidation;” Vorhaltung des thatsächlichen Bestandes, “reproach against the actual resistance offered;” ein Anklang unserer Stelle, “a corroboration of our passage;” Hellenen, “Hellenists;” verzweifelnde Verachtung, “doubtful repute;” Cult, “culture;” absonderlich, “ingenious;” Attraction, “contraction;” den von Hofm. angezogenen Belegen gemäss, “not in conformity to the accompaniments added to it by H.;” thatsächliche Belege zu, “actual consequences of;” eigentlicher Sinn, “actual sense;” mit Accus. der Person und der Sache, “with the accusative of the person that the present translation—on which no small pains have been bestowed both by the translators and by the reviser—may be found tolerably free from these grosser errors; although, on looking into it afresh, I find not a few instances in which the effort to reproduce the form as well as the matter of the original may occasion some perplexity to the English reader, and there are others where I am by no means certain that we have seized or have clearly enough expressed the meaning. This specially applies to some of the passages in which Dr. Meyer deals with the new interpretations so copiously thrown out by the subtlety of Dr.
von Hofmann of Erlangen, whose ingenious refinements and obscurities—to which I suppose Dr. Meyer's strong language towards the close of his Preface to the German edition to allude —are by no means easy to render. The changes which, in the fulfilment of my somewhat delicate task, I have ventured to make may not—I can well suppose—always appear to the translators as improvements; and it is but fair to them that I should accept the responsibility of the form in which their translation appears.

In reproducing so great a masterpiece of exegesis, I have not thought it proper to omit any part of its discussions or of its references—however little some of these may appear likely to be of interest or use to English scholars—because an author such as Dr. Meyer is entitled to expect that his work shall not be tampered with, and I have not felt myself at liberty to assume and on the case generally;" als der Welt verfallen, "as adapted to the world;"

das Richturtheil, "the right sentence;" dem sittlichen Dunkel, "individuals in moral darkness;" eine schleppende Wiederholung, "a repetition too long delayed;"
der so gewandt die griechische Schriftsprache handhabende, "who so cleverly applied to his use utterances of the Greek Scriptures;" Medium (used of the "middle" voice) "the medium;" ist erst Folge, "is the first consequence;" ein schiefer Gedanke, "a deeper thought;" frei nach der LXX, "entirely from the LXX;" anschauliche Bezeichnung, "a subjective relation;" der nachsätzliche δέ,
"the emphatic δέ;" Reihe und Glied, "row and member;" theistic, "theistic;" unter dogmatischen Händeln sein Leben verlor, "lost his life by ecclesiastical visitation;" Beides halbirend, "preserving both;" Philo Lc. "Philo passim;" Isidorus Hispalensis, "Isidore of Spain;" Theophil. ad Autol., "Theophyllact ad Autol.;" Beyenschlag (proper name), "a bye-blow."
GENERAL PREFACE BY THE EDITOR.

that the judgment of others as to the expediency of any omission would coincide with my own. Nor have I deemed it necessary to append any notes of dissent from, or of warning against, the views of Dr. Meyer, even where these are decidedly at variance with opinions which I hold. Strong representations were made to me that it was desirable to annex to certain passages notes designed to counteract their effect, but it is obvious that, if I had adopted this course in some instances, I should have been held to accept or approve of the author's views in other cases where I had not inserted any such caveat. The book is intended for, and can in fact only be used with advantage by, the professional scholar. Its general exegetical excellence far outweighs its occasional doctrinal defects; and, in issuing it without note or comment, I take for granted that the reader will use it, as he ought, with discrimination. He will find a valuable exhibition of complementary views in the American translation of Dr. Lange's Commentary, accompanied with elaborate notes by Dr. Schaff, and issued in this country by Messrs. Clark, while the logical sequence and doctrinal significance of the Epistle will be found specially developed in the Commentary of Dr. Charles Hodge.

The translation of the present volume has been made with care by the Rev. John C. Moore. I have revised it throughout, and carried it through the press. I subjoin to this Preface a note of the Exegetical Literature of the Epistle to the Romans, and of the Pauline or Apostolic Epistles generally; because information respecting it is often desired, and is only to be gathered from such works as Walch's Bibliotheca Theologica, Winer's Handbuch der theologischen Literatur, Darling's Cyclopaedia Bibliographica, and other sources, which are not always accessible to the student. I have also indicated, in general, the official position of the writers, and the date of their death. A notice is also prefixed to this volume—once for all—of some abbreviations, etc. used throughout the work.
The General Preface, specially written by Dr. Meyer for the English translation, will now be read with a deeper interest, as it was the last production of his pen. As these sheets were passing through the press—and while recent accounts had testified to the almost unimpaired vigour with which he was still pursuing in a green old age the revision of his Commentary—the news arrived of his death, after a very brief illness, on the 21st of June. The life of a scholar presents in general little of outward incident; but the following brief outline of the leading facts in his career, which has been kindly furnished to me by his son Dr. Gustav Meyer, will not be without interest.

Heinrich August Wilhelm Meyer was born on 10th January 1800 at Gotha, where his father was shoemaker to the Court. He attended the Gymnasium of his native town, where he was imbued by Schulze, Doering, and Rost with the most earnest zeal for the study of the classical languages, and, while at school there, he laid the foundation of those sure and solid attainments, and of that grammatical acuteness and precision, by the application of which to exegesis he has acquired so well-founded a reputation in the theological world. At the age of eighteen he finished his school course with the greatest distinction as primus omnium, and entered the University of Jena, with a view to study theology under the guidance of Gabler, Danz, and Schott, while he also attended the prelections of Luden on History and of Fries on Philosophy. After two years and a half of study there he left Jena, passed his examination, and went to Grone near Göttingen, to act as resident tutor in the Academy of Pastor Oppermann, whose daughter he afterwards married. In January 1823, after having been examined afresh, he was appointed to the pastoral cure of the hamlet of Osthhausen. On the dying out of the Gotha line, Osthhausen was annexed to the Duchy of Meiningen. While settled there, he issued his edition of the Libri symbolici ecclesiae Lutheranae, which was published in 1830 by Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht at Göttingen. He had already acquired, in the year 1827, by Colloquium from the Consistory of Hannover the necessary recognition ad eundem in that kingdom, and in January 1831 he became pastor at Harste near Göttingen. Here he commenced the work, to which with untiring zeal he devoted himself (mostly during the earliest hours of the morning) down to the end of his life—his Commentary on the New Testament. In the autumn of 1837 he was called to Hoya as Superintendent, and after four years was transferred to Hannover as Consistorialrath, Superintendent and Pastor Primarius in the Neustädter Kirche. In 1845 the degree of Doctor of Theology was conferred on him by the Theological Faculty of Göttingen. A very painful abdominal affection in the year 1846, which compelled him to refrain entirely from work for a considerable period, tended to mature his resolution to give up a position which involved too great an amount of labour, and to devote himself to the Consistory alone. He did so accordingly in the summer of 1848. In May 1861 he received the title of Oberconsistorialrath. On the 1st October 1865 he retired, retaining at first the superintendence of certain examinations, which however he soon also gave up. During the night of the 15th June in the present year he was seized with intussusception, which proved beyond the reach of medical skill, and which, after a painful illness, put an end to his busy life on the 21st of June.

If the great work, on which rests his fame, shall meet in this country with but a tithe of the acceptance which it has found in Germany, those who have taken part with me in reproducing it will not account their labour lost.

W. P. D.

Glasgow College, September 1873.
EXEGETICAL LITERATURE OF THE EPISTLE.

[For Commentaries, and collections of Notes, embracing the whole New Testament, see Preface to the Commentary on the Gospel of St. Matthew. The following list includes works which deal with the Apostolic or the Pauline Epistles generally, or which treat specially of the Epistle to the Romans. Works mainly of a popular or practical character have, with a few exceptions, been excluded, since, however valuable they may be on their own account, they have but little affinity with the strictly exegetical character of the present work. Several of the older works named are of little value; others are chiefly doctrinal or controversial. Monographs on chapters or sections are generally noticed by Meyer in loc. The editions quoted are usually the earliest; al. appended denotes that the work has been more or less frequently reprinted. † marks the date of the author's death, c. = circa, an approximation to it.]

ABAILARD (Peter), † 1142, Scholastic: Commentariorum super S. Pauli Epistolam ad Romanos libri v. [Opera.]

ALESIUS [or HALES] (Alexander), † 1565, Prof. Theol. at Leipzig: Disputationes in Epistolam ad Romanos, cum P. Melanthonis praefatione. 8°, Vitemb. 1553.

ALEXANDER Natalis. See NOEL (Alexandre).

ALTING (Jacobus), † 1679, Prof. Theol. at Gröningen: Commentarius theoretico-practicus in Epistolam ad Romanos. [Opera.]

AMBROSIASTER [or PSEUDO-AMBROSIUS], c. 380, generally identified with Hilarius the Deacon: Commentarius in Epistolam xiii. B. Pauli. [Ambrosii Opera.]

ANSELMUS [or HERVEUS], c. 1100: Enarrationes in omnes S. Pauli Epistolae. 2°, Paris. 1533.

AQUINAS (Thomas), † 1274, Scholastic: Expositio in omnes Epistolae S. Pauli. 2°, Basil. 1475 al.

ARETIUS (Benedictus), † 1574, Prof. Theol. at Berne: Commentarii in omnes Epistolae D. Pauli, et canonicas. 2°, Morgiis, 1683.

BALDWIN (Friedrich), † 1627, Prof. Theol. at Wittenberg: Commentarius in omnes Epistolae apostoli Pauli . . . (Separately, 1608-1630). 4°, Francof. 1644 al.
BAUMGARTEN (Sigmund Jakob), † 1757, Prof. Theol. at Halle: Auslegung des Briefes Pauli an die Römer. 4°, Halae, 1749.

BAUMGARTEN-CRUSIUS (Ludwig Friedrich Otto), † 1843, Prof. Theol. at Jena:
Commentar zum Römerbrief. 8°, Jena, 1844.

BEDA Venerabilis, † 735, Monk at Jarrow: Expositio in Epistolae Pauli
[a Catena from the works of Augustine, probably by Florus Lugdunensis, c. 852], et In Epistolae septem catholicas liber. [Opera.]

BELEN (Jean-Théodore), R. C. Prof. of Or. Lang. at Louvain: Commentarius in Epistolam S. Pauli ad Romanos. 8°, Lovani, 1854.

BELSHAM (Thomas) † 1829, Unitarian minister in London: The Epistles of Paul the Apostle translated, with an exposition and notes.

BENECKE (Wilhelm), † 1837, retired Hamburg merchant: Der Brief Pauli
an die Römer erläutert; 8°, Heidelb. 1831.

BISPING (August), R. C. Prof. Theol. at Münster: Exegetisches Handbuch
tzu den Briefen der Apostels Paulus. 8°, Münster, 1854-8 al.

BOHME (Christian Friedrich), † 1844, Pastor at Lucka near Altenburg:
Epistola Pauli ad Romanos Graece cum commentario perpetuo.

BRAIS (Etienne de), c. 1680, Prof. Theol. at Saumur: Epistolae Pauli ad
Romanos analysis paraphrastia cum notis. 4°, Salmurii, 1670.

BRENT (Johann), † 1570, Provost at Stuttgart: Commentarius in Epistolam ad Romanos, 2°, Francof. 1564 al.

BROWN (David), D.D., Prof. Theol. Free Church College, Aberdeen: Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, embracing the last results of criticism. 12°, Glasg. 1860.

BROWN (John), D.D., † 1858, Prof. Exeg. Theol. to the United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh: Analytical Exposition of the Epistle of Paul d to the Romans. 8°, Edin. 1857.

BRUNO, † 1101, Founder of the Carthusian Order: Commentarius in omnes Epistolae Pauli. 2°, Paris. 1500.

BUCER (Martin), † 1551, Prof. Theol. at Cambridge: Metaphrasis et enarratio in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos. 2°, Basil. 1562.

BUGENHAGEN (Johann), † 1558, Prof. Theol. at Wittenberg: Interpretatio Epistolae Pauli ad Romanos. 8°, Hagenoae, 1823.

BULLINGER (Heinrich), † 1575, Pastor at Zürich: Commentarii in omnes
Epistolae apostolorum. 2°, Tiguri, 1537 al.

CAJETANUS [Tommaso da Vio], † 1534, Cardinal: Epistolae S. Pauli et aliorum apostolorum ad Graecam veritatem castigatae et juxta sensus literalem narratae. 2°, Venet. 1531 al.

CALIXTUS (Georg), † 1656, Prof. Theol. at Helmstadt: Expositiones litterales in Epistolae ad Romanos, ad Corinthios priorem et posteriorem, ad Galatas, ad Ephesios, ad Philippenses, ad Colossenses, ad Thessalonienses . . . et ad Titum. 4°, Helmstadii, 1664-66.
XX
EXEGETICAL LITERATURE OF THE EPISTLE.

CALVIN [CHAUVIN] (Jean), †1564: Commentarii in omnes Epistolae Pauli apostoli atque etiam Epistolam ad Ebraeos; necnon in Epistolae canonicas.

CAPELLUS [CAPPEL] (Louis), †1658. See Acta.

CARPZOV (Johann Benedict), †1803, Prof. Theol. and Greek at Helmstadt: Stricturae theologicae et criticæ in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos...

CASSIODORUS (Magnus Aurelius), †563, Chancellor of the Ostrogoth empire: Complexiones in Epistolae apostolorum, in Acta et in Apocalypsim quasi brevissima explanatione decursas...

CAPPELL (Louis), †1658. See Acts.

Carpzov (Johann Benedict), †1803, Prof. Theol. and Greek at Helmstadt: Stricturae theologicae et criticã in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos...

8°, Helmst. 1758.

CASSIODORUS (Magnus Aurelius), †563, Chancellor of the Ostrogoth empire: Complexiones in Epistolae apostolorum, in Acta et in Apocalypsim quasi brevissima explanatione decursas...

8°, Helmst. 1758.

CATHARINO (Ambrogio). See POLITI (Lanzelotto).

CHALMERS (Thomas), D.D., †1847, Principal of F. C. College, Edinburgh: Lectures on the Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans.

12°, Glasg. 1842 al.

CHRYSTOSTOMUS (Joanneus), †407, Archbishop of Constantinople: Homiliae in Epistolae Pauli. [Opera.]

CHRYSOSTOMUS (Joanneus), †407, Archbishop of Constantinople: Homiliae in Epistolae Pauli. [Opera.]

CHYTRAEC (or KOCHHAFF) (David), †1600, Prof. Theol. at Rostock: Epistolae Pauli ad Romanos, brevi ac dialectica dispositione partium et grammatica declaratione textus... explicata. 8°, n. p. 1599.

CLAUDE (Jean), †1687, Minister at the Hague: Commentaire sur l'Epttre aux Romains. [Œuvres.]

CONTARINI (Gaspare), †1542, Cardinal: Scholia in Epistolae Pauli. [Opera.]

2°, Paris. 1571 al.

CONTZEN (Adam), †1618, Jesuit at Mentz: Commentaria in Epistolam S. Pauli ad Romanos.

CONTZEN (Adam), †1618, Jesuit at Mentz: Commentaria in Epistolam S. Pauli ad Romanos.

2°, Colon. 1629.

4°, Lond. 1852 al.

COX (Robert) M.A., P. C. of Stonehouse, Devon: Horae Romanae, or an attempt to elucidate St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, by an original translation, explanatory notes, and new divisions. 8°, Lond. 1824.

CRAEMER (Johann Andreas), †1788, Prof. Theol. at Kiel: Der Brief Pauli an die Römer aufs neue übersetzt und ausgelegt. 4°, Leip. 1784.

CREEL (Johann), †1633, Socinian teacher at Cracow: Commentarius in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos, ex praelectionibus ejus conscriptus a Jona Schlichtingio...

8° Racov. 1636.

CRUCIGER [CREUZINGER] (Kaspar), †1548, Pastor at Leipzig: Commentarius in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos.

8°, Vitemb. 1567.

DALE (John): Analysis of all the Epistles of the New Testament.

12° Oxf. 1652.

DAMASCENUS (Joannes), †754, Monk at S. Saba: Ex universa interpretatione J. Chrysoestomi excerpta compendiaria in Epistolae S. Pauli. [Opera.]

DELLTSCH (Franz), Prof. Theol. at Leipzig: Brief an die Römer aus dem griechischen Urtext in das hebräische übersetzt und aus Talmud und Midrasch erläutert.

8° Leip. 1870.
EXEGETICAL LITERATURE OF THE EPISTLE.  xx i

DICKSON (David), † 1662, Prof. Theol. at Glasgow and Edinburgh: Expositio analytica omnium apostolica rum Epistolurarum.  ... 4°, Glasg. 1645. and Analytical Exposition of all the Epistles.  2°, Lond. 1659.

DINU (Louis de), † 1642, Prof. in the Walloon College at Leyden: Animadversiones in Epistolam ad Romanos. Accessit spicilegium in reliquas eijusdem apostoli, ut et catholicas epistolulas.  4°, Lugd. Bat. 1646.

DIONYSIUS CARThUSIANUS [Denys de Ryckel], † 1471, Carthusian monk: Elucidissima in divi Pauli Epistolulas commentaria.  8°, Paris. 1531.

EDWARDS (Timothy), M.A., Vicar of Okehampton, Devon: Paraphrase, with critical annotations on the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians, with an analytical scheme of the whole.  4°, Lond. 1752.

EST [ESTIUS] (Willem Hessels van), † 1613, R. C. Chancellor of Douay: In omnes beati Pauli et aliorum apostolorum Epistolulas commentarius.  2°, Duaci, 1614-16, al.

EWALD (Georg Heinrich August), Prof. Or. Lang. at Göttingen: Die Sendschreiben des Apostels Paulus übersetzt und erklärt.  8°, Götting. 1857.

EWBANK (William Withers), M.A., Incumbent at Everton: Commentary on the Epistle of Paul to the Romans ...  8°, Lond. 1850-51.

FABER Stapulensis (Jacobus) [Jacques Lefevre d'Etaples], † 1536, resident at Nerac: Commentarius in Epistolae Pauli ...  2°, Paris. 1512 al.

FAYE (Antoine de la), † 1616, Prof. at Geneva: Commentarius in Epistolam ad Romanos.  8°, Genevae, 1608.

FELL (John), † 1686, Bishop of Oxford: A Paraphrase and annotations upon all the Epistles of St. Paul, by Abraham Woodhead, Richard Allestry and Obadiah Walker. Corrected and improved by Dr. John Fell. [First issued anonymously in 1676.]  8°, Lond. 1708.

FERME (Charles), † 1617, Principal of Fraserburgh College: Analysis logica in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos.  12°, Edin. 1651 al.

FERUS [WILD] (Johannes), † 1554, Cathedral Preacher at Mentz: Exegesis in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos.  8°, Paris. 1559.

FEUARDENT (François), † 1612, Franciscan preacher at Paris: Commentarius in Epistolam ad Romanos.  8°, Paris, 1599.

FLATT (Johann Friedrich von), † 1821, Prof. Theol. at Tübingen: Vorlesungen über den Brief Pauli an die Römer, herausgegeben von Ch. D. F. Hoffmann.  8°, Tübing. 1825.

FLORUS Lugdunensis, c. 852. See Beda.

FORBES (John), LL.D., Prof. of Oriental Languages at Aberdeen: Analytical commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, tracing the train of thought by the aid of parallelism.  8°, Edinb. 1868.

FRITZSCHE (Karl Friedrich August), † 1846, Prof. Theol. at Rostock: Pauli ad Romanos Epistola. Recensuit et cum commentariis perpetuis editit.  8°, Halis, 1836-43.
EXEGETICAL LITERATURE OF THE EPISODE.

FROMOND (Libert), † 1653, Prof. Sac. Scrip. at Louvain: Commentarius in omnes Epistolae Pauli apostolae et in septem canonicae aliorum apostolorum epistolae. 2°, Lovan. 1663 al.

GAGNEE (Jean de), † 1549, Rector of the University of Paris: Brevissima et facillima in omnes divi Pauli et canonicae epistolae scholia. 8°, Paris, 1543 al.

GERHARD (Johann), † 1637, Prof. Theol. at Jena: Adnotationes posthumae in Epistolam at Romanos, cum Analectis Jo. Ernesti Gerhardi. 4°, Jenae. 1666 al.

GLOECKER (Conrad),: Der Brief des Apostel Paulus an die Römer erklärt. 4°, Frankf. a. M. 1834.

GRÖNEWEGEN (Henricus), † 1692, Minister at Enkhuizen: Vytleginge van den Zendbrief Paulli aan de Romeynen. 4°, Gorinchem, 1681.

GUILLAUD (Claude), † 1550, Theological Lecturer at Autun: Collationes in omnes Epistolae apostolae. 2°, Tiguri, 1599.

HÄNEL (Wessel Albert van), Prof. Theol. in Leyden: Interpretatio Epistolae Pauli ad Romanos. 8°, Lugd. Bat. 1854-9.

HALDAINE (Robert), of Airthrey, † 1842: Exposition of the Epistle to the Romans, with remarks on the Commentaries of Dr. Macknight, Prof. Tholuck, and Prof. Moses Stuart. 12°, Lond. 1842 al.

HAYMO, † 853, Bishop of Halberstadt [or Remigius]: Commentarius in Epistolam S. Pauli. 2°, Paris. 1556 al.

HEMMING [or HEMMINGSEN] (Niels), † 1600, Prof. Theol. at Copenhagen: Commentarius in omnes Epistolae apostolae. 2°, Lips. 1572 al.

HEMSEN (Johann Tychsen), † 1830, Prof. Theol. at Göttingen: Der Apostel Paulus, sein Leben, Wirken, und seine Schriften herausgegeben von F. Luecke. 8°, Götting. 1830.

HENGEL (Wessel Albert van), Prof. Theol. in Leyden: Interpretatio Epistolae Pauli ad Romanos. 8°, Lugd. Bat. 1854-9.

HILDEBRAND (Remigius), † 1130, Benedictine. See ANSELMUS.

HESCHUSIUS (Tilemann), † 1588, Prof. Theol. at Helmstadt: Commentarius in omnes Epistolae Pauli. 2°, Lips. 1605.

HIPPESTE (Johann), † 1681, Prof. in Gymnasium at Bremen: Collationes philosophicae in Epistolam ad Romanos. 4°, Bremae, 1675.

HODGE (Charles, D.D., Prof. Theol. at Princeton: Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans. 8°, Philadelphia, 1835 al.

HOFMANN (Johann Christian Konrad von), Prof. Theol. at Erlangen: Die Heilige Schrift Neuen Testaments zusammenhängend untersucht. III. Theil. Brief an die Römer. 8°, Nördlingen, 1868.
Hugo de S. Victore, † 1141, Monk at Paris: Quaestiones circa Epistolas Pauli. [Opera.]

Hyperius [Gerhard] (Andreas), † 1564, Prof. Theol. at Marburg: Commentarii in Pauli Epistolas. 2°, Tiguri, 1583.

Jatho (Georg Friedrich), Director of Gymnasium at Hildesheim: Pauli Brief an die Römer nach seinem inneren Gedankengange erläutert. 8°, Hildesheim, 1858-9.

Jowett (Benjamin), M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford: The Epistles of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, Galatians, Romans, with critical notes and dissertations. 8°, Lond. 1855.

Kistemaker (Johann Hyazinth), † 1834, R. C. Prof. Theol. at Münster: Die Sendschreiben der Apostel (und die Apocalypse), übersetzt und erklärt. 8°, Münster, 1822-3.

Klee (Heinrich), † 1840, R. C. Prof. Theol. at München: Commentar über des Apostel Pauli Sendschreiben an die Römer. 8°, Mainz, 1830.

Knight (Robert): A Critical Commentary on the Epistle of St. Paul the Apostle to the Romans. 8°, Lond. 1854.

Köllner (Wilhelm Heinrich Dorotheus Eduard), c. 1850, Prof. Theol. at Göttingen: Commentar zu dem Briefe des Paulus an die Römer. 8°, Darmst. 1834.

Krehl (August Ludwig Gottlob), † 1855, Prof. Pract. Theol. at Leipzig: Der Brief an die Römer ausgelegt. 8°, Leip. 1849.

Lanfranc, † 1089, Archbishop of Canterbury: Commentariorum in omnes D. Pauli Epistolas. [Opera.]

Lapide (Cornelius à) [Van den Steen], † 1637, S. J. Prof. of Sacred Scripture at Louvain: Commentaria in omnes D. Pauli Epistolas. 2°, Antwerp. 1614 et al.

Launay (Pierre de), Sieur de La Motte: Paraphrase et exposition sur les Épistres de S. Paul. 4°, Saumur et Charenton, 1647-50.

Leeuwen (Gerbrand van), † 1721, Prof. Theol. at Amsterdam: Verhandeling van den Sendbrief Paulus aan de Romeynen. 4°, Amst. 1688-99.

Lewin (Thomas), M.A.: The life and Epistles of S. Paul. 8°, Lond. 1851.

Limborch (Philipp van), † 1712, Arminian Prof. Theol. at Amsterdam: Commentarius in Acta Apostolorum et in Epistolas ad Romanos et ad Ephesios. 2°, Roterod. 1711.

Livermore (Abiel Abbot), Minister at Cincinnati: The Epistle of Paul to the Romans, with a commentary and revised translation, and introductory essays. 12°, Boston, U. S., 1855.
Locke (John), † 1704. See Galatians.
Lombardus (Petrus), † 1160, Scholastic: Collectanea in omnes Epistolas D. Pauli ex SS. Patribus. 2°, Paris. 1535 al.

Macknight (James), D.D., † 1800, Minister at Edinburgh: A new literal translation . . . of all the apostolical Epistles, with a commentary and notes, philological, critical, explanatory and practical . . . 4°, Edin. 1795 al.
Maier (Adalbert), R. C. Prof. Theol. at Freiburg: Commentar über den Brief Pauli an die Römer. 8°, Freiburg, 1847.
Martin (Peter) [Vermigl], † 1562, Prof. Theol. at Strasburg: In Epistolam ad Romanos commentarii . . . 2°, Basil. 1558, al.
Mehring (H. J. F.): Der Brief Pauli an die Römer uiebersetzt und erklärt. 8°, Stettin, 1859.
Melanchthon (Philipp), † 1560, Reformer: Adnotationes in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos et Corinthios . . . 4°, Basil. 1522.—Commentarii in Ep. Pauli ad Romanos. 8°, Argent. 1540.—Epistolae Pauli ad Romanos scriptae enarratio . . . 8°, Vitemb. 1556 al.
Melville (Andrew), † 1622, Principal of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews: Commentarius in divinam Pauli Epistolam ad Romanos . . . 8°, Edin. 1849.
Momma (Willem), † 1677, Pastor at Middelburg: Meditationes posthumae in Epistolam ad Romanos et Galatas. 8°, Hag. Com. 1678.
Morison (James), D.D. Prof. Theol. to the Evangelical Union, Glasgow: An exposition of the Ninth chapter of Paul's Epistle to the Romans. 8°, Kilmarnock, 1849. And A critical exposition of the Third chapter . . . 8°, Lond. 1866.
Musculus [or Meusslin] (Wolfgang), † 1563, Prof. Theol. in Berne: In Epistolam ad Romanos commentarius. 2°, Basil. 1555 al.

Nielsen (Rasmus), Prof. Theol. at Copenhagen: Der Brief Pauli an die Römer entwickelt . . . 8°, Leip. 1843.
Noel (Alexandre) [Natalis], † 1724, Dominican teacher of Church History at Paris: Expositio litteralis et moralis in Epistolam D. Pauli. 2°, Paris. 1710.

Oecumenius, c. 980, Bishop of Tricca: Commentaria in Acta Apostolorum, in omnes Pauli Epistolas, in Epistolae catholicae omnes . . . 2°, Verona, 1532 al.
Oltramare (Hugues), Minister at Geneva: Commentaire sur l'Epître aux Romains. [1—V. 11.] 8°, Genève, 1843.
EXEGETICAL LITERATURE OF THE EPISTLE. XXV

Origenes, † 254, Catechete at Alexandria: Fragmenta in Epistolae Pauli. [Opera.]

Osorio (Jeronymo), † 1580, Bishop of Sylvae: In Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos libri quatuor. [Opera.] 3°, Romae, 1592.

Pareus [or Waengler] (David), † 1622, Prof. Theol. at Heidelberg: Commentarius in Epistolam ad Romanos. 4°, Francof. 1608 al.

Paulus (Heinrich Eberhard Georg), † 1851. See Galatians.

Peile (Thomas Williamson), D.D., Vicar of Luton: Annotations on the apostolical Epistles, designed chiefly for the use of students of the Greek text. 8°, Lond. 1848-52.

Peliatus, c. 420, British monk: Commentarii in Epistolae S. Pauli. [Hieronymi Opera.]

Philippi (Friedrich Adolph), Prof. Theol. at Rostock: Commentarius über den Brief an die Römer. 8°, Erlangen and Frankf. 1848-52.

Picquigny (Bernardin) [Bernardinus A Piconio], Cistercian monk: Epistolae Pauli triplex expositio, cum analysis, paraphrasis et commentariis. 2°, Paris, 1703.

Politi (Lanzelotto) [Ambrogio Catarnio], † 1553, Archbishop of Conza: Commentarius in omnes divi Pauli et alias septem canonicas Epistolae. 2°, Romae, 1546 al.

Posselt (August), c. 1715, Pastor at Zittau: Richtig Erklärung der Epistel Pauli an die Römer . . .

Przepecov or Przypkowski (Samuel), † 1670, Socinian teacher: Cogitationes sacrae ad omnes Epistolae apostolicas. 2°, Eleutheropoli [Amstel.], 1692.

Purdue (Edward), M.A.: A Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, with a revised translation. 8°, Dubl. 1855.

Quistorp (Johann), † 1648, Superintendent at Rostock: Commentarius in omnes Epistolae Paulinas. 4°, Rostoch, 1652.

Rabanus Maurus, † 856, Archbishop of Mentz: Enarrationum in Epistolae B. Pauli libri triginta. [Opera.]

Rambach (Johann Jakob), † 1735, Superintendent in Giessen: Ausführliche und gründliche Erklärung der Epistle Pauli an die Römer. 4°, Bremae, 1738.

Introductio historico-theologica in Ep. P. ad Romanos, cum Martini Lutheri Praefatione variis observationibus exegetica illustrata. 8°, Halae, 1727.
Reiche (Johann Georg), Prof. Theol. in Göttingen: Versuche einer ausführlichen Erklärung des Briefes Pauli an die Römer, mit historischen Einleitung und exegetisch-dogmatischen Excursen.

Commentarius criticus in Novum Testamentum, quo loca graviora et difficiliora lectionis dubiae accurate recensentur et explicantur.

Tom I.—III. Epistolas Paulinas et catholicas continentes.

8°, Götting. 1833-4.

Reithmayr (Franz Xaver), R. C. Prof. Theol. at Munich: Commentar zum Briefe an die Römer.

8°, Regensburg, 1845.

Remigius (of Auxerre), † 899. See Haymo.

Rollock (Robert), † 1598, Principal of the University of Edinburgh Analysis dialectica in Pauli apostoli Epistolam ad Romanos . . .

8°, Edin. 1594 al.

Rückert (Leopold Immanuel), c. 1845, Prof. Theol. at Jena; Commentar über den Brief an die Römer.

8°, Leip. 1831.

Sadoleto (Jacopo), † 1547, Cardinal: Commentarius in Epistolam ad Romanos.

8°, Venet. 1536 al.

Salmeron (Alphonso), † 1585, Jesuit: Commentarii in Epistolas S. Pauli.

[Opera.]

Schlichtino (Jonas), † 1664. See Crell (Johann).'

Schoell (Theodor): Der Römerbrief seinem Endzweck und seinem Gedankengang nach ausgelegt.

8°, Erlangen, 1858.

Sedulius Scotus Hiberniensis, c. 800?: In omnes S. Pauli epistolas collectaneum.

2°, Basil. 1528.

Semler (Johann Salomon), † 1791, Prof. Theol. at Halle: Paraphrasis Epistolae Pauli ad Romanos cum notis et translatione vetusta.

8°, Halis, 1769.

Selnecker (Nicolaus), † 1592, Prof. Theol. in Leipzig: In omnes Epistolae Pauli apostoli commentarius plenissimus.

2°, Lips. 1595.

Shuttleworth (Philip Nicholas), D.D., Bishop of Chichester: A Paraphrastic translation of the apostolical Epistles, with notes.

8°, Oxf. 1829 al.

Slade (James), † 1860, Rector of West Kirby: Annotations on the Epistles; being a continuation of Mr. Elsley's Annotations.

8°, Lond. 1824 al.
Soto (Domingo de), † 1560, Prof. Theol. at Salamanca: Commentarius in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos. 2°, Antverp. 1550.

Spener (Philipp Jakob), † 1705, Provost at Berlin: Auslegung des Briefes an die Römer aufs neue herausg. von H. Schott. 8°, Leip. 1859 al.

Steinhofer (Friedrich Christoph), † 1761: Erklärung des Epistel Pauli an die Römer; mit einem Vorwort von J. T. Beck. 8°, Tübing. 1851.

Stengel (Liborius), † 1835, R. C. Prof. Theol. at Freiburg: Commentar über den Brief des Paulus an die Römer ... 8°, Freiburg, 1836.

Stenersen (Stener Johannes), † 1835, Prof. of Church History at Christiania: Epistolae Paulinae perpetuo commentario illustratae. Vol. I. Ep. ad Rom. Voll. II. III. Epp. ad Corinth. IV. Ep. ad Galat. 8°, Christiania, 1829-34.

Stuart (Moses), † 1852, Prof. of Sacred Literature at Andover: A Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, with a translation and various excursus ... 8°, Andover, 1832 al.

Taylor (John), D.D., † 1761, Minister at Norwich: A Paraphrase with notes on the Epistle to the Romans: to which is prefixed a Key to the apostolic writings. 4°, Lond. 1745 al.

Terrot (Charles Hughes), D.D., Bishop, Edinburgh: The Epistle to the Romans, with an introduction, paraphrase and notes. 8°, Lond. 1828.

Theodorus, † 429, Bishop of Mopsuestia: Commentarii in Epistolas Pauli. [Fragments in the Catenae, collected by Fritzsche: Theodori Mops. Commentaria in N. T. 1847. From Galatians to Philemon, in a Latin translation, incorporated in Rabanus Maurus.]

Theophylactus, c. 1070, archbishop of Acris in Bulgaria: In D. Pauli Epistolas commentarius Graece et Latine cura A. Lindselli ... 2°, Lond. 1636 al.

Tholuck (Friedrich August Gottreu), Prof. Theol. at Halle: Auslegung des Briefes Pauli an die Römer, nebst fortlaufenden Auszügen aus den exegetischen Schriften der Kirchenväter und Reformatoren. 8°, Berl. 1824 al.—Translated by the Rev. Robert Menzies, D.D. 8°, Edin. 1842.

Til (Salomon van), † 1713, Prof. Theol. at Leyden: De Sendbrieven van Paulius aan de Romeinen en Filippensen, ontleedt, verklaardt en betoogt. 4°, Haarlem, 1721. Commentarius in quatuor Pauli Epistolas, nempe priorem ad Corinthios, Ephesios, Philippenses, ac Colossenses. 4°, Amstel. 1726.

Titelmann (Franz), 1553, Provincial of Capuchins at Rome: Elucidatio in omnes Epistolae apostolicas. 8°, Antwerp, 1532 al.
XXVIII EXEGETICAL LITERATURE OF THE EPISTLE.

Toletus [Francisco de Toledo], † 1596, S. J. Cardinal: Commentarius et annotationes in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos.
4°, Romae, 1602 al.

Turner (Samuel Hulbeart), D.D., † 1861, Prof. of Biblical Interpretation at New York: The Epistle to the Romans, in Greek and English. With an analysis and exegetical commentary.
8°, New York, 1853.

Turrettini (Jean-Alphonse), † 1737, Prof. Theol. at Geneva: In Pauli ad Romanos Epistolae capita priora xi, praelectiones criticæ, theologicae et concinnatoriae.
4°, Lausannae, 1741.

Umbreit (Friedrich Wilhelm Karl), † 1860, Prof. Theol. at Heidelberg: Der Brief an die Römer, auf dem Grunde des Alten Testaments ausgelegt.
8°, Gotha, 1856.

Varen (August), † 1684, Prof. Theol. at Rostock: Paulus evangelista Romanorum succincta divinissimae . . . Epistolae ad Romanos analysis et exegesi repraesentatus.
8°, Hamb. 1696.

Vaughan (Charles John), D.D., Master of the Temple: St. Paul’s Epistle to the Romans, with notes. 8°, Camb. 1857.—Third edition, enlarged.
8°, Lond. and Camb. 1870.

Vitrinæa (Kempe), † 1722, Prof. Theol. at Franeker: Verklaringe over de acht eerste capittelen van de Brief Paulli aan de Romeinen.
4°, Franek. 1729.

Vorst (Koonrad), † 1629, Prof. Theol. at Leyden: Commentarius in omnes Epistolæ apostolicæ, exceptis secunda ad Timotheum, ad Titum, ad Philemonem et ad Ebraeos. 4°, Amstel. et Harder. 1631.

Walford (William), † 1850, Pastor at Uxbridge: Curae Romanæ: notes on the Epistle to the Romans.
12°, Lond. 1846.

Weingart (Johann Friedrich), Pastor at Grossfahnern, Gotha: Commentarius perpetuus in Pauli Epistolam ad Romanos. [Et in decem Apostoli Pauli epistolas, quas vulgo dicunt epistolæ minores.]
8°, Gothae, 1816.

Weinrich (Georg), † 1629, Prof. Theol. at Leipzig: Commentarii in Epistolæ Pauli.
4°, Lips. 1620.

Weller (Jakob), † 1664, Chief Chaplain at Dresden: Adnotationes in Epistolam Pauli ad Romanos . . . collectae opera Jo. Schindleri.
4°, Brunsvigæ, 1654.

Willett (Andrew), † 1631, Prebendary of Ely: Hexapla, that is, a sixfold commentator upon the most divine Epistle . . . to the Romans.
2°, Lond. 1620.

Wilson (Thomas), c. 1620, Minister at Canterbury: A Commentary on the most divine Epistle of St. Paul to the Romans.
4°, Lond. 1614 al.
EXEGETICAL LITERATURE OF THE EPISTLE.    xxix

WINZER (Julius Friedrich), † 1845, Prof. Theol. at Leipzig: Adnotationes ad loca quaedam Epistolae Pauli ad Romanos.     4°, Lips. 1835.
WITTICH (Christoph), † 1687, Prof. Theol. at Leyden: Investigatio Epistolae ad Romanos . . . una cum paraphrasi.     4°, Lugd. Bat. 1685.
WOODHEAD (Abraham). See FELL (John).

ZACHARIIAE (Gotthilf Traugott), † 1777, Prof. Theol. at Kiel: Paraphrastische
Erklärung des Briefes Pauli an die Römer.     8°, Götting. 1786.
ABBREVIATIONS.

al., et al. = and others; and other passages; and other editions.
ad or in loc., refers to the note of the commentator or editor named on the particular passage.
comp. = compare. "Comp. on Matt. iii. 5" refers to Dr. Meyer's own commentary on the passage. So also "See on Matth. iii. 5."
codd. = codices or manuscripts. The uncial manuscripts are denoted by the usual letters, the Sinaitic by S.
min. = codices minusculi, manuscripts in cursive writing. Where these are individually quoted, they are marked by the usual Arabic numerals, as 33, 89.
Rec. or Recepta = Textus receptus, or lectio recepta (Elzevir).
l. c. = loco citato or laudato.
ver. = verse, vv. = verses.
f. ff. = and following. Ver. 16 f. means verses 16 and 17. vv. 16 ff. means verses 16 and two or more following.
vv. = versions. These, when individually referred to, are marked by the usual abridged forms. E.g. Syr. = Peschito Syriac; Syr. p. = Philoxenian Syriac.
e. g. exempli gratia.
sc. = scilicet.
k.τ.λ. = καὶ τὰ λοιπά.
The colon (;) is largely employed, as in the German, to mark the point at which a translation or paraphrase of a passage is introduced, or the transition to the statement of another's opinions.

. . . . indicates that words are omitted.
The books of Scripture and of the Apocrypha are generally quoted by their usual English names and abbreviations. Ecclus. = Ecclesiasticus. 3 Esd., 4 Esd. [or Esr.] = the books usually termed 1st and 2d Esdras.
The classical authors are quoted in the usual abridged forms by book, chapter, etc. (as Xen. Anab. vi. 6, 12) or by the paging of the edition generally used for that purpose (as Plat. Pol. p. 291 B. of the edition of H. Stephanus). The names of the works quoted are printed in Italics. Roman numerals in small capitals are used to denote books or other internal divisions (as Thuc. iv.); Roman numerals in large capitals denote volumes (as Kühner, II.).
The references to Winer's Grammar, given in brackets thus [E. T. 152], apply to the corresponding pages of Mr. Moulton's English translation.
PREFACE

SPECIALY WRITTEN BY THE AUTHOR FOR THE ENGLISH EDITION.

It cannot but be of great importance in the interests of a thorough, sure, and comprehensive knowledge, that the results of progressive effort and research in the wide domain of the sciences should be mutually exchanged and spread from people to people, and from tongue to tongue. In this way of a living fellowship of mind, penetrating to the farthest limits of civilisation, the various scientific peculiarities of national development and culture are necessarily more and more elevated into common property as regards their excellences, while their several defects and shortcomings are reciprocally compensated and supplied; and thus the honest efforts and labours of individuals, pressing forward in common towards a deeper and clearer knowledge, are at once encouraged by their mutual respect and stimulated by a generous rivalry. Especially, and in an eminent degree, does this hold true within the sphere devoted to the highest object of human effort—the sphere of scientific theology. To the cultivation of this science, in accordance with its healthy life springing from the Divine Word and with its destination embracing time and eternity, belongs in an eminent sense the noble vocation of applying every gift received from God freely and faithfully to the service of the great whole—the building up of His kingdom. In its view the nations with their various characteristic powers, capacities, and tongues, are members of the one body, to which they are to hail each other as belonging in the fellowship of the one Head, which is Christ, and of the one Spirit, whose motions and influences are not restrained by any limits of nation or of language.

From this point of view it cannot but be in every sense a matter for congratulation that in our day more than formerly those literary works of German theology, which have on their native soil obtained a fair position in the literature of the science to which they relate, should by translation into the English tongue have that more extended field opened up to them, whose only limit is the ever-increasing diffusion and prevalence of that language in both hemispheres. Thus German theological labour goes forth into the wide world; becomes at home in distant lands and in a foreign dress; communicates what has been given to it, in order, by the mutual working of the Spirit, to receive in its turn from abroad; stimulates so far as in it lies, in order that it may itself find stimulus and furtherance, instruction and correction; and in all this lends its aid, that the divided theological strivings of the age and the various tendencies of religious national character may be daily brought closer together, and united in the eternal focus of all genuine science, which is truth and nothing but truth—and in the realm of theology the highest truth of all, that of divine revelation.

In the transplanting of the literary products of German theology to the soil of the English language the well-known publishing house of the Messrs. T. & T. Clark of Edinburgh have earned special distinction; and their efforts, supported by select and able professional scholars, have already found, and continue increasingly to find, an appreciation corresponding to their merits both in British and American circles. I have therefore readily and willingly given my consent to the proposal of the above-mentioned honourable publishers to set on foot and to issue an English translation of my Commentary on the New Testament; and with no less readiness have my esteemed German publishers, Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht in Göttingen, declared their agreement to it. I earnestly wish that the version thus undertaken, the first portion of which is given to the public in the present volume, may not fail to receive, in the field of the English language and of the science which it represents, an indulgent and kindly reception, such as, during a long series of years, has been accorded to the German work by the German theological public. And if I venture to couple with this wish some measure of a hope corresponding to it, I am induced to do so simply by the fact that even in the German idiom these works have already found their way, in no inconsiderable numbers, both to England and America.

Respecting the object and intention of my Commentaries no special explanation is needed, since, in point of fact, these are obvious on the face of them. They aim at exactly ascertaining and establishing on due grounds the purely historical sense of Scripture. This aim is so clear and so lofty, that all the produce of one's own thoughts and subjective speculation must fall entirely into the background, and must not be allowed to mix up anything of its own with what objectively stands forth in the revelation of the New Testament and simply seeks to be understood just as it so stands. For exegesis is a historical science, because the sense of Scripture, the investigation of which is its task, can only be regarded and treated as a historical fact; as positively given, it can only be known, proved, established, and set forth so as to be clearly and surely understood, by the positive method of studying the grammar, the usus loquendi, and the connection in detail as well as in its wider and widest sense. Exegetical research therefore cannot regard any definitions of the doctrinal system of a Church as binding or regulative for its operations, as if forsooth, in cases where the Confession has spoken, its duty were to seek only what it was d priori directed to seek, and thereupon to find only what it so seeks. No! it is just when perfectly unprejudiced, impartial, and free—and thus all the more consciously and consistently guided simply and solely by those historically given factors of its science—that it is able with genuine humility to render to the church, so far as the latter maintains its palladium in the pure Word of God, real and wholesome service for the present and the future. Unhappily the Church of Rome, by its unchangeable tradition beyond the pale of Scripture, and now completely by its Vaticanum, has refused to receive such service in all points affecting its peculiar doctrine. But with the Evangelical Church it is otherwise. However deep may be the heavings of conflicting elements within it, and however long may be the duration of the painful throes which shall at last issue—according to the counsel of God and when His hour has come—in a happier time for the church when men’s minds shall have attained a higher union, the pure word of Scripture, in its historical truth and clearness and in its world-subduing divine might, disengaged from every addition of human scholasticism and its dividing formulae, must and shall at length become once more a wonderful power of peace unto unity of faith and love. The Evangelical Church bears inalienably in its bosom the Word as the living and imperishable leaven of that final development.

Such is the ideal goal, which the scientific exposition of Scripture, while it desires nothing else than to elucidate and further the true historical understanding of Scripture, may never lose sight of in regard to the church, which is built on the Word. But how limited is the measure of the attainments and of the gifts conferred upon the individual! and how irresistibly must it impel him, in the consciousness of his fragmentary contributions, to the humbling confession, “Not as though I had already attained!” Nevertheless let each strive faithfully and honestly, according to what has been given to him, for that noble goal in the field of Scripture-science, in firm assurance that God can bless even what is little and be mighty in what is weak. And so may the gracious God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ accompany my humble labours on His Word, as they are now going forth in the dress of another language to far distant brethren, with the blessing on which all success depends, that they may conduce to the knowledge of His Truth, to the service of His Church, and to the glory of His Holy Name.

Dr. HEIN. AUG. WILH. MEYER, OBERCONSISTORIALRATH.

HANNOVER, March 1873.
PREFACE

TO THE GERMAN EDITION.

FORTY years have now elapsed since my Commentaries on the New Testament were first given to the public. The first edition of the first volume—the weak commencement—appeared in January 1832. A scientific work, which has passed through a long course of development and still continues that course, has always a history—a biography—of its own, which of course is intimately interwoven with that of its author. Yet in this retrospect I can only be filled with praise and thanksgiving to the divine grace; of myself I have nothing to say. The indulgence of friendly readers, which I have experienced so long, will not, I hope, fail to be still extended to me, when my day's work is drawing to its end.

This fifth edition of the Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans is based—as was of course to be expected, and may be inferred from the increase in the number of the sheets—on a new and careful revision of the fourth edition, which was issued in 1865. This enlargement—although in particular instances much has been abridged or even deleted—could not be avoided, if on the one hand the more recent publications relating to the Epistle were to meet with due attention,¹ and if on the other hand

¹ I could not take into consideration the treatise of Dr. Eklund: "σαρξ vocabulum, quid ap. Paulum significet," Lund, May, 1872, which, cautiously proceeding by a purely exegetical method, in the definition of the ethical side of that the general plan of the book—according to which it has to provide along with the exposition itself a critical view of the interpretations contrasting with it, and so of the detailed history of the exegesis—was to be preserved.

But on what portion of the New Testament could the labour and trouble— which are being continually renewed, wherever exegetical science conscientiously strives to reach its pure and clear historic aim— be less spared than on this, the grandest and richest in contents of all the Apostle's letters? Especially at the present time. The Epistle to the Romans still stands forth as a never silent accuser confronting the Roman ecclesiasticism, which has strained to the uttermost spiritual arrogance in the dethroned head, and Loyalist submissiveness in the members, of its hierarchy (peri de ac si essent cadaver a); it is still the steadfast divine charter of the Reformation, as formerly our Luther found mainly in it the unyielding fulcrum by the aid of which he upheaved the firmly-knit Roman structure from its old foundations. Amidst the vehement and pretentious conflicts, which continually surround us in the field of evangelic belief, we still have in this Epistle— just because it sets clearly before us the pure apostolic Gospel in its deepest and most comprehensive scope— the clearest and most prominent criterion for the recognition of what belongs to the pith and marrow of the Confession, in order that we may distinguish with steadfast eye and conscience that which is essential from all the fleeting, temporary, notion arrives substantially at the explanation of Augustine and Luther—a result, nevertheless, in which I am still precluded from concurring, as regards the Epistle to the Romans, by the contrast of ἡμι and νοῦς, as well as that of ἡμι and the moral νοῦς in ch. vii.—I must here also make supplementary mention of Hilgenfeld’s dissertation “Petrus in Rom und Johannes in Kl. Asien” (Zeitschrift, 1872. 3); in it he declares himself in favour of the nearly contemporary martyrdom of Peter and Paul in Rome as a historically accredited fact, and, as I must still even after the doubts of Lipsius assume, with just reason, even as respects its independence of the Simon legend.—During the very printing of this Preface there have come into my hands the two dissertations by Harmen, who defends the reference of the doxology in ix. 5 to God, and Hilgenfeld, who maintains the genuineness of chapters xv. and xvi. (in the latter's Zeitschrift, 1872. 4).

controversial or scholastic forms, with which it has become connected and interwoven through the historical relations of ecclesiastical symbols; a distinction, to which even the Introduction to the Formula Concordiae, although this most of all bears the theological impress of the time, significantly enough points, and which better meets the exigencies of the restless present than the overbearing cry—recklessly transcending limit or measure—after unity of doctrine, which yet does not remove or even so much as conceal the dissensions among the criers themselves. The unity which they desire—were it uniformly established, as it were in the lump, for all doctrinal definitions of the Confession—would be Roman, and the very negation of truth and truthfulness in the church, because it would be contrary to the freedom of conscience in the understanding of Scripture, which has its ground and support, its standard and limit, and the holy warrant of its upright confidence, not beyond the pale of Scripture, but in it, and in it alone.

Let us only advance with clearness along the straight path of pure historical exegesis, in virtue of which we have always to receive what Scripture gives to us, and never to give to it aught of our own. Otherwise we run a risk of falling into the boundless maze of an interpretation of Scripture at our own pleasure, in which artificial and violent expedients are quickly enough resorted to, with a view to establish results which are constructed from foregone premisses, and to procure doctrines which are the creations—obtruded on Scripture—of a self-made world of thought and its combinations. Exegetes of this sort—whose labours, we may add, are usually facilitated by a lack of sure and thorough philosophical culture,1 and of needful respect for linguistic authorities—

1 We theologians are far too much given to neglect a comprehensive and precise knowledge of the Greek grammar. If the exegete of the present day supposes himself adequately furnished with such a Grammar as that of Rost (whose memory, as my former Gymnasial teacher, I gratefully revere) he is mistaken; it is no longer sufficient. We ought not to overlook the progress of philology in the field of the classics, but should be diligent in turning to account, for the New Testament, whatever the contributions of the present day furnish. Otherwise we neglect have the dubious merit of provoking refutation more than others do, and thereby indirectly promoting the elucidation of the true sense of Scripture. Yet they may, as experience shows, attain for a time an influence, especially over younger theologians who have not yet reached the steadiness and soberness of mature exegetic judgment, by the charm of novelty and of a certain originality, as well as of a dialectic art, which veils its mistakes so that they are not at once recognised—an influence under which good abilities are misled and learn to be content with extracting from the words of Scripture a meaning, which, originating from their own presuppositions, belongs really to themselves. Indeed, if such a mode of handling Scripture, with its self-deceptions and with its often very singular caprices, could become dominant (which, looking to the present state and progress of science, I do not reckon possible), there would be reason to fear that gradually the principle of Scripture authority, which preserved in its full objectivity is the aegis of the evangelical churches, would become illusory. All the worse and more confusing is it, when such an exegesis employs as the organ of presenting and communicating its views a mode of expression, the quaint drapery of which hinders us from clearly discerning the substance of the meaning lying beneath it, and in fact frequently permits the effort of translating it into current forms of speech which cannot mislead to be attended with but dubious success.¹

¹ In presence of such wretched evils of style we may be allowed to recall the simple rule, which the epigrammatist bids the rhetoricians (Anth. Pal. xi. 144, 5 f.) lay to heart:

Νοίν ὑποκείσθαι δὲ τοῖς γράμμασι καὶ φράσεις αὐτῶν
einai kounsteran, ὅστε νοεῖν ἄ λέγεις.
For the critical remarks the part of the editio octava of Tischendorf's New Testament, which includes the present Epistle, was in good time to be turned to account. As it deviates in many cases from the editio septima, and this diversity is partly due to a modification of the critical principles adopted, I have deemed it advisable to specify not merely the readings of the octava, but also those of the septima. The one I have indicated by Tisch. (8), the other by Tisch. (7); but where the two editions agree, I put merely Tisch.

With confidence then in God, who sits as Ruler and knows how to guide all things well, this work is left to make its way once more into the much agitated theological world. May He ward off harm, so far as it contains what is erroneous, and grant His blessing, so far as it may minister to the correct, unstinted, and undisguised understanding of His revealed Word.

Dr. Meyer.

Hannover, 24th July 1872.
INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. Sketch of the Apostle's Life.

PAUL, who received this Roman name, according to Jerome, Catal. 5—and from Acts xiii. 9, this view seems the most probable—on occasion of the conversion of Sergius Paulus the Roman Proconsul of Cyprus, but was at his circumcision named Ἰωάννης, was the son of Jewish parents belonging to the tribe of Benjamin (Rom. xi. 1; Phil. iii. 5), and was born at Tarsus (Acts xi. 11, xxii. 39, xxii. 3), a πόλις μεγάλη καὶ εὐδαίμον (Xen. Anab. i. 2, 23) of ancient renown, founded according to the legend by Perseus, in Cilicia. The year of his birth is quite uncertain (A.D. 10-15?); but it is certain that he was of Pharisaic descent (see on Acts xxiii. 6), and that his father was a Roman citizen (see on Acts xvi. 37). He therefore possessed by birth this right of citizenship, which subsequently had so important a bearing on his labours and his fate

1 See the particulars on Acts xiii. 9.

2 Since both names were generally current, every attempt to explain their meaning in reference to our Paul is utterly arbitrary—from that of Augustine, according to whom he was called Saul as persecutor (as Saul persecuted David), and Paulus as prædicator (namely, as the minimus apostolorum, 1 Cor. xv. 9), down to Umbreit's play on the word ἅγιος (the made one, created anew) in the Stud. u. Krit. 1852, p. 377 f., and Lange's fancy that the Apostle was called the little, because he overcame Elymas as the little David overcame Goliath.

3 Not at Gischala in Galilee, according to the statement of Jerome, de Vir. ill. 5 (comp. also what he says on Philem. 23), which cannot be taken into consideration after the Apostle's own testimony (see especially Acts xxii. 3), unless with Krenkel (Paulus d. Ap. d. Heiden, 1869, p. 215) we distrust the accounts of the Book of Acts even in such a point lying beyond the scope of its dogmatic tendency.
(Acts xxii. 27 f.). Of his first youthful training in his native city, where arts and sciences flourished (Strabo, xiv. 5, 13, p. 673), we know nothing; but it was probably conducted by his Pharisaic father in entire accordance with Pharisaic principles (Phil. iii. 5; Gal. i. 14), so that the boy was prepared for a Pharisaic rabbinical school at Jerusalem. While yet in early youth (Acts xxii. 3, xxvi. 4, comp. vii. 58; Gal. i. 14; Tholuck, in the Stud. u. Krit. 1835, p. 364 ff.; also in his Vermischte Schr. II. p. 274 ff.) he was transferred to Jerusalem, where he had perhaps even then relatives (Acts xxiii. 16), though there is no evidence that the entire family migrated thither (Ewald). He entered a training-school of Pharisaic theology, and became a rabbinic pupil of the universally honoured (Acts v. 34) Gamaliel (Acts xxii. 3), who, notwithstanding his strict orthodoxy (Lightfoot, ad Matth. p. 33), shows himself (Acts v. 34 ff.) a man of wise moderation of judgment. In accordance with a custom, which was rendered necessary by the absence of any regular payment of the Rabbins and was very salutary for their independence (see on Mark vi. 3, and Delitzsch, Handwerkerleben zur Zeit Jesu, 1868, V.), the youthful Saul combined with his rabbinical culture the learning of a trade—tentmaking (Acts xviii. 3)—to which he subsequently, even when an apostle, applied himself in a way highly honourable and remarkably conducive to the blessing of his official labours, and for that reason he felt a just satisfaction in it (Acts xviii. 3, xx. 34; 1 Thess. ii. 9; 2 Thess. iii. 7 ff.; 1 Cor. iv. 12, ix. 6, xii. 15; 2 Cor. xi. 8, xii. 13). At the feet of Gamaliel he of course received an instruction which, as to form and matter, was purely rabbinic; and hence his epistles exhibit, in the mode in which they unfold their teaching, a more or less distinct rabbinico-didactic impress. But it was natural also that his susceptible and active mind should not remain unaffected by Hellenic culture, when he came into contact with it; and how could he escape such contact in Jerusalem, whither Hellenists flocked from all quarters under heaven? This serves to explain

1 See traits of the mild liberality of sentiment, which marked this grandson of the celebrated Hillel, quoted from the Rabbins in Tholuck, I. c. p. 378. The fact that nevertheless the youthful Saul developed into a zealot cannot warrant any doubt, in opposition to Acts viii. 34 ff., as to his having been Gamaliel's pupil (such as Hausrath expresses, nebst. Zeitgesch. II. p. 419 ff.).
a dilettante acquaintance on his part with Greek literary works, which may certainly be recognized in Acts xvii. 28, if not also in 1 Cor. xv. 33 (Tit. i. 12); and which, perhaps already begun in Tarsus, may have been furthered without its being sought by his subsequent relations of intercourse with Greeks of all countries and of all ranks. It is impossible to determine how much or how little of the virtues of his character, and of the acuteness, subtlety, and depth of lofty intellect which he displayed as apostle, he owed to the influence of Gamaliel; for his conversion had as its result so entire a change in his nature, that we cannot distinguish—and we should not attempt to distinguish—what elements of it may have grown out of the training of his youth, or to what extent they have done so. We can only recognize this much in general, that Saul, with excellent natural gifts, with the power of an acute intellect, lively feelings, and strong will, was, under the guidance of his teacher, not merely equipped with Jewish theological knowledge and dialectic art, but had his mind also directed with lofty national enthusiasm towards divine things; and that, however deeply he felt sin to be the sting of death (Rom. vii. 7 ff.), he was kept free (Phil. iii. 6) from the hypocritical depravity which was at that time prevalent among Pharisees of the ordinary type (Schrader, II. p. 23 ff.; comp. also Keim, Gesch. Jesu, I. p. 265). Nevertheless it is also certain that the moderation and mildness of the teacher did not communicate themselves to the character of the disciple, who, on the contrary, imbibed in a high degree that prevailing rigour of Pharisaism, the spirit of which no Gamaliel could by his individual practical wisdom exorcise. He became a distinguished zealot for the honour of Jehovah and the law (Acts xxii. 3), as well as for Pharisaic principles (Gal. i. 14), and displayed all the recklessness and violence which are wont to appear, when fiery

1 The exaggerations of the older writers (see e.g. Schramm, de stupenda eruditione Pauli, Herborn. 1710) are pure inventions of fancy. So too is Schrader's opinion, that Paul had by Greek culture prepared himself to be a Jewish missionary, a proselytiser. It cannot even be proved that he formed his diction on the model of particular authors, such as Demosthenes (Köster in the Stud. u. Krit. 1854, p. 305 ff.). The comparisons instituted with a view to establish this point are too weak and general. How many similar parallels might be collected, e.g. from Plato, and even from the tragedians! On the whole the general remark of Jerome, at Gal. iv. 24, is very appropriate: "P. scisse, licet non ad perfectum, litteras saeculares."
youthful spirits concentrate all their energies on the pursuit of an idea embraced with thorough enthusiasm. His zeal was fed with abundant fuel and more and more violently inflamed, when the young Christian party growing up in Jerusalem became an object of hostility as dangerously antagonistic to the theocracy and legal orthodoxy (comp. Acts vi. 13, 14), and at length formal persecution broke out with the stoning of Stephen. Even on that occasion Saul, although still in a very subordinate capacity, as merely a youth in attendance, took a willing and active part (Acts viii. 1, xxii. 20); but soon afterwards he came forward on his own account as a persecutor of the Christians, and, becoming far and wide a terror to the churches of Judaea (Gal. i. 22 f.), he raged against the Christians with a violence so resolute and persistent (Acts xxii. 3 f., xxvi. 10 ff.), that his conduct at this time caused him ever afterwards the deepest humiliation and remorse (1 Cor. xv. 8, 9; Gal. i. 13; Eph. iii. 8; Phil. iii. 6; comp. 1 Tim. i. 13). Yet precisely such a character as Saul—who, full of a keen but for the time misdirected love of truth and piety, devoted without selfish calculation his whole energies to the idea which he had once embraced as his highest and holiest concernment—was, in the purpose of God, to become the chief instrument for the proclamation and extension of the divine work, of which he was still for the moment the destructive adversary. A transformation so extraordinary required extraordinary means. Accordingly when Saul, invested with full powers by the Sanhedrin (Acts ix. 1, xxvi. 9), was carrying his zealous labours beyond the bounds of Palestine, there took place near Damascus (35 A.D.) that wonderful appearance to him of the exalted Jesus in heavenly glory (see on Acts ix. 3; 1 Cor. ix. 1, xv. 8) which arrested him (Phil. iii. 12), and produced no less a result than that Saul—thereby divinely called, and subsequently favoured with an inward divine revelation of the Son of God (see on Gal. i. 15 f.)—gradually became,

1 Not as a married man or already a widower, of about thirty years of age, (Ewald, Hausrath); comp. on Acts vii. 58.
2 The attempts of the Tübingen school (especially of Baur and Holsten) to represent the Gospel of Paul as having originated from the intrinsic action of his own mind, and the event at Damascus as a visionary picture drawn from his own spirit, are noticed and refuted at Acts ix., and by Beyschlag in the Stud. u. Krit. 1870, 1. Compare generally Dorner, Gesch. d. prot. Theol. p. 829 ff.
under the further guidance of the divine Spirit and in the school of his own experiences so full of trial, the Apostle, who by the most extensive and most successful proclamation of the Gospel, especially among the Gentiles, and by his triumphant liberation of that Gospel from the fetters of Mosaicism on the one hand and from the disturbing influences of the current theosophic speculations on the other, did more than all the other apostles—he, the Thirteenth, more than the Twelve, who had been called in the first instance for the δωδεκαφίλον of Israel (Gal. ii. 9; 1 Cor. xv. 10). His conversion was completed through Ananias, who was directed to him by means of an appearance of Christ (Acts ix. 10ff); and, having been baptized, he at once after a few days, in the resolute consciousness of his spiritual life transformed with a view to his apostolic vocation (Gal. i. 16), preached in the synagogues of Damascus Jesus¹ as being the Son of God (Acts x. 19 ff.). For all half-heartedness was foreign to him; now too he was, whatever he was, thoroughly, and this energetic unity of his profound nature was now sanctified throughout by the living spirit of Christ. His apostolic labours at Damascus, the birthplace of his regenerate life, lasted three years, interrupted however by a journey to Arabia (Gal. i. 17), the object of which most probably was to make merely a preliminary and brief trial of his ministry in a foreign field.²

¹ The chief facts in the life of Jesus could not but have been already known to him in a general way, whilst he was actively opposing the Christians at Jerusalem; but now, for the first time, there dawned upon him the saving knowledge of these facts and of their truth, and his constant intercourse with believers henceforth deepened more and more this saving knowledge. Thus, following the living historical tradition within the circle of Christianity under the influence of the Christ revealed in him, he became the most important witness for the history of Jesus apart from the Gospels. Comp. Keim, Geschichte Jesu, I. p. 36 ff.; also Hausrath, neut. Zeitgesch. II. p. 457. But that he had seen Christ Himself, cannot be inferred from 2 Cor. v. 16; see on that passage.

² Schrader, Köllner, Köhler (Abfassungen d. epistol. Schr. p. 43 f.), Rückert, and Schott on Gal. l.c., Holsten, Döllinger, Krenkel, and others, think that Paul withdrew immediately after his conversion to a neighbouring desert of Arabia, in order to prepare himself in retirement for his calling.
Compare also Hausrath, neut. Zeitgesch. II. p. 455. This view is decidedly at variance with Acts ix. 19, 20, where the immediate public teaching at Damascus, a few days after the conversion, receives very studious prominence. But we should only have to assume such an inconsistency with the passage in Acts, in the event of that assumed object of the Arabian journey being exegetically deducible from the Apostle's own words in Gal. i. 17, which, however, is by no means the case.
Persecution on the part of the Jews—which was subsequently so often, according to the Divine counsel, the salutary means of extending the sphere of the Apostle's labours—compels him to escape from Damascus (Acts ix. 19-26; 2 Cor. xi. 32 f.); and he betakes himself to the mother-church of the faith on account of which he has suffered persecution in a foreign land, proceeding to Jerusalem (A.D. 38), in order to make the personal acquaintance of Peter (Gal. i. 18). At first regarded by the believers there with distrust, he was, through the loving intervention of Barnabas (Acts ix. 27 f.), admitted into the relation of a colleague to the apostles, of whom, however, only Peter and James the brother of the Lord were present (Gal. i. 19). His first apostolic working at Jerusalem was not to last more than fifteen days (Gal. i. 18); already had the Lord by an appearance in the temple (Acts xxii. 17 ff.) directed him to depart to the Gentiles; already were the Hellenists resident in the city seeking his life; and he therefore withdrew through Syria to his native place (Acts ix. 30; Gal. i. 20). Here he seems to have lived and worked wholly in quiet retirement, till at length Barnabas, who had appreciated the greatness and importance of the extraordinary man, went from Antioch, where just at that time Gentile Christianity had established its first church, to seek him out at Tarsus, and brought him thence to the capital of Syria; where both devoted themselves for a whole year (A.D. 43) without interruption to the preaching of the Gospel (Acts xi. 25, 26). We know not whether it was during this period (see Anger, temp. rat. p. 104 ff.), or during his sojourn in Cilicia (see Ewald, apost. Zeit. p. 440, ed. 3), that the Apostle became the subject of that spiritual ecstasy and revelation which, even after the Luke, it is true, makes no mention at all of the Arabian journey; but for that very reason it is highly improbable that it had as its object a silent preparation for his official work. For in that case the analogous instances of other famous teachers who had prepared themselves in the desert for their future calling (Ex. xxiv. 18, xxxiv. 28; Deut. ix. 9; 1 Kings xix. 8), and the example of John the Baptist, and even of Christ Himself, would have made the fact seem too important either to have remained wholly unknown to Luke, or to have been passed over without notice in his history; although Hilgenfeld and Zeller suppose him to have omitted it intentionally. On the other hand, we cannot suppose that the sojourn in Arabia extended over the whole, or nearly the whole, of the three years (Eichhorn, Hemsen, Anger, Ewald, Laurent, and older expositors). See generally on Gal. i. 17.

SKETCH OF THE APOSTLE'S LIFE.

lapse of fourteen years, continued to be regarded by him as so extremely remarkable (2 Cor. xii. 2-4).

But the great famine was now approaching, which, foretold at Antioch by the prophet Agabus from Jerusalem, threatened destruction to the churches of Judaea. On this account the brethren at Antioch, quite in the spirit of their new brotherly love, resolved to forward pecuniary aid to Judaea; and entrusted its transmission to Barnabas and Saul (Acts xi. 27-30). After the execution of this commission (A.D. 44), in carrying out which however Saul at least cannot have gone all the way to Jerusalem (see on Gal. ii. 1), the two men were formally and solemnly consecrated by the church at Antioch as apostles to the Gentiles (Acts xiii. 1-3); and Saul now undertook—at first with, but afterwards without, Barnabas—his missionary journeys so fruitful in results. In the course of these journeys he was wont, where there were Jews, to attempt the fulfilment of his office in the first instance among them, in accordance with what he knew to be the divine order (Rom. i. 16, xv. 8 ff.), and with his own deep love towards his nation (Rom. ix. 1 ff.); but when, as was usually the case, he was rejected by the Jews, he displayed the light of Christ before the Gentiles. And in all variety of circumstances he exhibited a vigour and versatility of intellect, an acuteness and depth, clearness and consistency, of thought, a purity and steadfastness of purpose, an ardour of disposition, an enthusiasm of effort, a wisdom of conduct, a firmness and delicacy of practical tact, a strength and freedom of faith, a favour and skill of eloquence, a heroic courage amidst dangers, a love, self-denial, patience, and humility, and along with all this a lofty power of gifted genius, which secure for the Saul whom Christ made His chosen instrument the reverence and admiration of all time.1

In accordance with the narrative of Acts, three missionary journeys of the Apostle may be distinguished; and in the description of these we may insert the remaining known facts of his history.

(1.) On his consecration as Apostle to the Gentiles, Paul went along with Barnabas the Cyprian, and with Mark accompanying them as apostolic servant, first of all to the neighbouring Cyprus; where, after his advance from Salamis to Paphos, his work was crowned by a double success—the humiliation of the Eylam, and the conversion of the proconsul Sergius Paulus (Acts xiii. 6-12). Then Pamphylia, where Mark parted from the apostles (xiii. 13), Pisidia and Lycaonia became in turn fields of his activity, in which, together with Barnabas, he founded churches and organized them by the appointment of presbyters (xiv. 23). At one time receiving divine honours on account of a miracle (xiv. 11 ff.), at another persecuted and stoned (xiii. 50, xiv. 5, 19), he, after coming down from Perga to Attalia, returned to the mother-church at Antioch.

While Paul and Barnabas were here enjoying a quiet sojourn of some duration among the brethren (Acts xiv. 28), there came down from Judaea Pharisaic Christians jealous for the law, who required the Gentile converts to submit to circumcision as a condition of Messianic salvation (Acts xv. 1; Gal. ii. 4). It was natural that this demand should encounter a decided opponent in the highly enlightened and liberal-minded Paul, whose lively assurance of the truth, resting on revelation and upheld by his own experience, could tolerate no other condition of salvation than faith in Christ; and in consequence both he and the likeminded Barnabas became entangled in no small controversy (Acts xv. 2). The dispute involved the fundamental essence and independent standing of Christianity and the whole freedom of a Christian man, and was therefore of such importance that the church at Antioch, with a view to its settlement,

1 The supposition that there were other chief journeys, which, it is alleged, are left unnoticed in the Acts (Schrader), is quite incompatible with the course of the history as there given. He must, however, have made many subordinate journeys, for the Book of Acts is far from giving a complete account of his labours, as is clearly shown by various intimations in the Epistles. For example, how many journeys and events not noticed in the Acts must be assumed in connection with 2 Cor. xi. 14 ff. deputed their most influential men, Paul, who also received a revelation for this purpose (Gal. ii. 2), and Barnabas along with some others (Paul also took Titus with him, Gal. ii. 1), to proceed to Jerusalem (fourteen years after the Apostle's first journey thither, A.D. 52), and there discuss with the apostles and elders the points in dispute. And how happy was the result of this so-called Apostolic Council! Paul laid the Gospel which he preached to the Gentiles before the church, and the apostles in particular, with the best effect (Gal. ii. 2, 6); and, as to the point of circumcision, not even his apostolic associate Titus, a Gentile, was subjected to the circumcision demanded by members of the church who were zealous for the law. With unyielding firmness Paul contended for the truth of the Gospel. The apostles who were present—James, the brother of the Lord, Peter and John—approved of his preaching among, and formally recognized him as Apostle to, the Gentiles (Gal. ii. 1-10); and he and Barnabas, accompanied by the delegates of the church at Jerusalem, Judas Barsabas and Silas, returned to Antioch bearers of a decree (Acts xv. 28-30) favourable to Christian freedom from the law, and important as a provisional measure for the further growth of the church (Acts xvi. 4 f.), though not coming up to that complete freedom of the Gospel which Paul felt himself bound to claim, and for this reason, as well as in virtue of his consciousness of independence as Apostle to the Gentiles, not urged by him in his Epistles. Here they prosecuted afresh their preaching of Christ, though not always without disturbance on the part of Jewish Christians, so that Paul was compelled in the interest of Christian freedom openly to oppose and to admonish even Peter, who had been carried away into dissimulation, especially seeing that the other Jewish Christians, and even Barnabas, had allowed themselves to be tainted by that dissimulation (Gal. ii. 11 ff.). Paul had nevertheless the welfare of his foreign converts too much at heart to permit his wishing to prolong his stay in Antioch (Acts xv. 36). He proposed to Barnabas a journey in which they should visit those converts, but fell into a dispute with him in consequence of the latter desiring to take Mark (Acts xv. 37-39)—a dispute which had the beneficial consequence for the church, that the two men, each of whom was qualified to fill a distinct field of labour, parted from one another and never again worked in conjunction.

(2.) Paul, accompanied by Silas, entered on a second missionary journey (A.D. 52). He went through Syria and Cilicia, strengthening the Christian life of the churches (Acts xv. 41); and then through Lycaonia, where at Lystra (see on Acts xvi. 1) he associated with himself Timothy, whom he circumcised—apart however from any connection with the controversy as to the necessity of circumcision (see on Acts xvi. 3)—with a view to prevent his ministry from causing offence among the Jews. He also traversed Phrygia and Galatia (Acts xvi. 6), in the latter of which he was compelled by bodily weakness to make a stay, and so took occasion to plant the churches there (Gal. iv. 13). When he arrived at Troas, he received in a vision by night a call from Christ to go to Macedonia (xvi. 8 ff.). In obedience to this call he stepped for the first time on the soil of Europe, and caused Christianity to take permanent root in every place to which he carried his ministry. For in Macedonia he laid the foundation of the churches at Philippi, Thessalonica, and Beroea (Acts xvi. 12 ff., xvii. 1 ff., 10 ff.); and then, driven away by repeated persecutions (comp. also 1 Thess. ii. 1 ff., i. 6)—but leaving Silas and Timothy behind in Beroea (Acts xvii. 14)—he brought to Christ His first-fruits even in Athens, where he was treated by the philosophers partly with contempt and partly with ridicule (Acts xvii. 16 ff.). But in that city, whence he despatched Timothy, who had in the meanwhile again rejoined him, to Thessalonica (1 Thess. iii. 1 ff.), he was unable to found a church. The longer and more productive was his labour in Corinth, whither he betook himself on leaving Athens (Acts xviii. 1 ff.). There, where Silas and Timothy soon joined him, he founded the church which Apollos afterwards watered (1 Cor. iii. 6, 10, iv. 15, ix. 1); and for more than a year and a half (Acts xviii. 11, 18; A.D. 53 and 54)—during which period he received support from Macedonia (2 Cor. xi. 9), as he had previously on several occasions from the Philippians (Phil. iv. 15 f.)—overcame the wisdom of the world by the preaching of the Crucified One (1 Cor. ii. 1 ff.). The relation here formed with his fellow-craftsman Aquila (Acts xviii. 1 ff.), who as a Roman emigrant was sojourning with his wife Priscilla in Corinth, could not fail to exercise essential influence on the Christian church at Rome (Rom. xvi. 3). In Corinth he wrote also at this time the first of his doctrinal Epistles preserved to us—those to the Thessalonians. Corinth was the terminus of his second missionary journey. From Corinth he started on his return, not however taking a direct course, but first making by way of Ephesus (whither he brought Aquila and Priscilla with him) a journey to Jerusalem to attend a festival (Acts xviii. 18-22; a.d. 55), whence, without prolonging his stay, he returned to the bosom of the Syrian mother-church. But he did not remain there long (Acts xviii. 23); his apostolic zeal soon impelled him to set out once more.

(3.) He made his third missionary tour through Galatia and Phrygia, strengthening the churches which he had founded from town to town (Acts xviii. 23); and traversed Asia Minor as far as Ephesus, where for nearly three years (a.d. 56-58) he laboured with peculiar power and fervour and with eminent success (Acts xix. 1-xx. 1), although also assailed by severe trials (Acts xx. 19; 1 Cor. xv. 32, comp. 2 Cor. i. 8). This sojourn of the Apostle was also highly beneficial for other churches than that at Ephesus; for not only did he thence make a journey to Corinth, which city he now visited for the second time (see on 2 Cor. introd. § 2), but he also wrote towards the end of that sojourn what is known to us as the First Epistle to the Corinthians, receiving subsequently intelligence of the impression made by it from Timothy, whom he had sent to Corinth before he wrote, as well as from Titus, whom he had sent after writing it. The Epistle to the Galatians was also issued from Ephesus. He was impelled to leave this city by his steadfast resolution now to transfer his labours to the far West, and indeed to Rome itself, but before doing so to revisit and exhort to steadfastness in the faith his Macedonian and Achaean converts (Acts xix. 21, xx. 2), as well as once more to go to Jerusalem (Acts xix. 21). Accordingly, after Demetrius the silversmith had raised a tumult against him (Acts xix. 24 ff.), which however proved fruitless, and after having suffered in Asia other severe afflictions (2 Cor. i. 8), he travelled through Macedonia, whither he went by way of Troas (2 Cor. ii. 12), and where, after that in addition to Timothy Titus also from Corinth had joined him, he wrote the Second Epistle to the Corinthians. He then remained three months in Achaia (Acts xx. 3), where he issued from Corinth—which he now visited for the third time (2 Cor. xii. 14, xiii. 1)—his Epistle to the Romans. Paul now regards his calling in the sphere of labour which he has hitherto occupied as fulfilled, and is impelled to pass beyond it (2 Cor. x. 15 f.); he has preached the Gospel from Jerusalem as far as Illyria (Rom. xv. 19, 23); he desires to go by way of Rome to Spain, as soon as he shall have conveyed to Jerusalem a collection gathered in Macedonia and Greece (Rom. xv. 23 ff.). But it does not escape his foreboding spirit that suffering and tribulation await him in Judaea (Rom. xv. 30 ff.).

The Apostle’s missionary labours may be regarded as closed with this last sojourn in Achaia; for he now entered on his return journey to Jerusalem, in consequence of which the capital of the world was to become the closing scene of his labours and sufferings. Hindered solely by Jewish plots from sailing directly from Achaia to Syria, he returned once more to Macedonia, and after Easter crossed from Philippi to Troas (Acts xx. 3-6), where his companions, who had set out previously, awaited him. Coming thence to Miletus, he bade a last farewell with touching fervour and solemnity to the presbyters of his beloved church of Ephesus (Acts xx. 17 ff.); for he was firmly convinced in his own mind, filled as it was by the Spirit, that he was going to meet bonds and afflictions (xx. 23). At Tyre he was warned by the Christians not to go up to Jerusalem (xxi. 4); at Caesarea Agabus announced to him with prophetic precision the approaching loss of his freedom (xxi. 10 ff.), and his friends sought with tears to move him even now to return; but nothing could in the least degree shake his determination to follow absolutely the impulse of the Spirit, which urged him towards Jerusalem (xx. 22). He went thither (A.D. 59) with heroic self-denial and yielding of himself to the divine purpose, in like manner as formerly the Lord Himself made His last pilgrimage to the Jewish capital. Arriving there shortly before Pentecost—for his object was not only to convey to the brethren the gifts of love collected for them, but also to celebrate the national festival, Acts xxiv. 17—he was induced by James and the presbyters immediately on the following day to undertake, for the sake of the Judaists, a Nazarite vow (xxi. 17 ff.). But, while it was yet only the fifth day of this consecration (see on Acts xxiv.11), the Asiatic Jews fell upon him in the temple, accusing him of having, as an enemy of the law and the temple, brought Gentiles with him into the holy place; and they would have killed him, had not the tribune of the fort Antonia rescued him by military force from their hands (xxi. 28-34). In vain he defended himself before the people (Acts xxii.), and on the following day before the Sanhedrin (xxiii. 1-10); but equally in vain was a plot now formed by certain Jews who had bound themselves by an oath to put him to death (xxiii. 11-22); for the tribune, when informed of it, had the Apostle conducted immediately to the Procurator Felix at Caesarea (xxiii. 23-35). Felix was base enough, in spite of Paul's excellent defence, to detain him as a prisoner for two years, in the expectation even of receiving a bribe; and on his departure from the province, from a wish to gratify the Jews, left the Apostle to be dealt with by Porcius Festus his successor (summer, A.D. 61), Acts xxiv. Even from the more equitable Festus, before whom the Jews renewed their accusations and Paul the defence of his innocence, he did not receive the justice that was his due; wherefore he found himself compelled to make a formal appeal to the Emperor (xxv. 1-12). Before this date however, whilst living in the hope of a speedy release, he had written at Caesarea his Epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon (which are usually assigned to the Roman captivity); see on Eph. introd. § 2. His appeal, notwithstanding the unanimously favourable opinions pronounced regarding him (Acts xxvi.) after his solemn defence of himself before King Agrippa II. and his sister (xxv. 13 ff.), was necessarily followed by his transference from Caesarea to Rome. During the autumn voyage, on which he was accompanied by Luke and Aristarchus, danger succeeded danger, after the Apostle's wise warnings were despised (Acts xxvii. 10, 11, 21); and it was only in consequence of his advice being afterwards followed (Acts xxvii. 30-36) that all were saved and, after the stranding of their vessel at Malta, happily landed to pass the winter on that island. In the following spring he saw Rome, though not—as it had been so long his earnestly cherished wish to visit it (Rom. i. 10 ff.)—as the free herald of the Gospel. Still he there enjoyed the favour—after receiving a custodia militaris—of being permitted to dwell in his own hired house and to continue without interruption his work of instruction among all who came to him. This mild imprisonment lasted two full years (from the spring of 62): and as at this time his intrepid fidelity to his office failed not to make oral proclamation of the kingdom of God (Acts xxviii. 30, 31; Phil. i. 12 ff.), so in particular the Epistle to the Philippians, which emanated from this time of captivity, is a touching proof of that fidelity, as well as of the love which he still received and showed, of the sufferings which he endured, and of the resignation and hope which alternated within him. This letter of love may be called his swan’s song. The two years’ duration of his further imprisonment did not decide his cause; and it does not make his release by any means self-evident, for Luke reports nothing from this period respecting the progress of the Apostle’s trial. But now all at once we lose all trustworthy accounts bearing on the further course of his fate; and only thus much can be gathered from the testimonies of ecclesiastical writers as historically certain, that he died the death of a martyr at Rome under Nero, and nearly at the same time2 as Peter suffered crucifixion at the same place. See the testimonies in Credner, P. spect., Gott. 1848; and generally Baur, Paulus, I. p. 243 ff.
ed. 2; Wieseler, p. 547 ff.; Otto, Pastoralbr. p. 149 ff.; from the Catholic point of view, Döllinger, Christenth. und Kirche, p. 79
ff. ed. 2.

The question however arises, Whether this martyrdom (be-heading) was the issue of his trial at that time (Petavius, Larder, Schmidt, Eichhorn, Heinrichs, Wolf, de altera Pauli captivit.
Lips. 1819, 1821, Schrader, Hemsen, Köllner, Winer, Fritzche,

2 Whether Peter suffered martyrdom somewhat earlier than Paul (Ewald), or some time later, cannot be made out from Clement, Cor. I. 5, any more than from other sources. Moreover this question is bound up with that as to the place and time of the composition of the First Epistle of Peter. But that Peter never came to Rome—as, following Baur and others, Lipsius, Chronol. d. Röm. Bischöfe, 1869, 1869, p. 306 ff., seek to prove (see the earlier literature on the question in Bleek’s Einleitung, p. 562)—cannot, in view of the church tradition, be maintained.
The discussion of this question in detail belongs to another place.

1 Who, curiously enough, further assumes a third and fourth captivity.
2 Nothing at all bearing upon our question can be derived from the testimony of Dionysius of Corinth, quoted by Euseb. ii. 25, to which Wiesinger still attaches weight. It merely affirms that Peter and Paul having come to Italy, there taught, and died as martyrs. Comp. Caius ap. Eus. l.c., Iren. Haer. iii. 1; Tertull. Scorp. 15, praescr. 36; and even the κηρύγμα Πέτρου (Clem. Strom. vi. 5). These testimonies do not in the least suggest the idea of a second presence in Rome.
3 Dressel follows the recension of Jacobson (Oxon. 1838, and 2d ed. 1840), who collated Cod. A anew, and carefully rectified its text of the epistle first issued by Patrocinus Junius (Oxon. 1633), followed substantially in that form by Cotelerius (Paris 1672), and then amended by Wotton (Cantabr. 1718). The variations however of the different revisions of the text, which is only preserved, and that in a very faulty form, in Cod. A, do not essentially affect the present question. Even the form in which Laurent (neuest. Stud. p. 105 ff., and in the Stud. u. Krit. 1870, p. 135 ff.) gives the text of the passage in Clement on the basis of Tischendorf's reproduction of Cod. A, is without influence on our question. This holds true also with respect to the latest critical editions of the Clementine Epistles by Hilgenfeld (N. T. extra canonem, 1866, 1.), by Lightfoot (S. Clementi of Rome. The two Epistles, etc. 1869), and by Laurent (Clem. Rom. ad Cor. epistula, etc. 1870).
THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

κλέος ἠλαβεν, δικαιοσύνην διδάξας ὅλων τῶν κόσμων, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως ἐλθὼν, καὶ μαρτυρήσας ἐπὶ τῶν ἡγουμένων. Οὕτως ἀπήλλαγη τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ εἰς τὸν ἁγιον τόπον ἐπορεύθη, ὑπομονῆς γενόμενος μέγιστος ὑπογραμμός. This passage, it is thought, indicates clearly enough that Paul before his death, passing beyond Italy, had reached the farthest limit of the West, Spain, and that therefore a second Roman imprisonment must be assumed. See especially Credner, Gesch. d. Kanon, p. 51 ff.; Huther, Pastoralbr. Einl. p. 32 ff. ed. 3; Lightfoot l.c., who understands by τέρμα τ. δ. Gades. In opposition to this view we need not seek after any different interpretation of τὸ τέρμα τ. δύσεως; whether it may be taken to signify the western limit appointed to Paul (Baur, Schenkel, Otto)—which certainly would be very meaningless—or the line of demarcation between East and West (Schrader, Hilgenfeld, apost. Väter, p. 109); or even the centre of the West (Matthies). But it is to be observed:—1st. that the language generally bears a highly rhetorical and hyperbolic character, and, were it only for this reason, it is very hazardous to interpret the "limit of the West" (τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως) with geographical accuracy. And is not even the immediately preceding δικαιοσ. διδάξας ὅλων τῶν κόσμων a flourish of exaggeration? 2d. Clement does not speak of East and West from his own Roman stand-point, but, as was most naturally accordant with the connection and design of his statement, from the stand-point of Paul, into whose local relations he in thought transports himself. While the Apostle laboured in Asia, he was in the East: then he passed over to Greece, and thus had become, from his Oriental point of view, a herald also in the West. But in the last crisis of his destiny he came even to the far West, as far as Rome: and for this idea how naturally, in the midst of the highly coloured language which he was using, did the expression ἐπὶ τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως ἐλθὼν suggest itself! It could not have been misunderstood by the readers, because people at Corinth could not but know the place where Paul met his death. 3d.

1 So also Ewald, apost. Zeit. p. 620 ff. ed. 3, who supposes that, when Paul heard in Spain of the horrors of the Neronian persecutions, he hurried back to Rome to bear witness for Christianity; that there he was arrested, placed once more on trial, and condemned to death. According to Ewald the Book of Acts itself, at i. 8, points by way of anticipation to the Spanish journey.
SKETCH OF THE APOSTLE'S LIFE.

Ἐπὶ τῶν ἡγουμένων denotes (in allusion to Matth. x. 18) the rulers generally, before whom Paul gave testimony concerning Christ (μαρτυρίων τιμάς), after he had reached this τέρμα τῆς δύσεως. If the latter denotes Rome, then we may without hesitation, on historical grounds, conclude that the rulers are those Roman magistrates before whom Paul made his defence in Rome. But if Spain should be the "goal of the West," we should find ourselves carried by the μαρτυρίων ἐπὶ τῶν ἡγουμ. to some scene of judicial procedure in Spain; and would it not in that case be necessary to assume a sojourn of the Apostle there, which that very trial would render specially memorable? But how opposed to such a view is the fact, that no historical trace, at all certain, is preserved of any church founded by Paul in Spain! For the testimonies to this effect adduced by Gams, Kirchengesch. v. Spanien, p. 26, Sepp, Gesch. der Ap. p. 314, ed. 2, and others, contain nothing but traditions, which have merely arisen from the hypothetical Spanish journey of Paul. And to say with Huther that the Apostle had travelled (ελθὼν) to Spain, but had not laboured there, is to have recourse to an explanation at variance with the intrinsic character of Paul himself and with the context of Clement. Besides, according to Rom. xv. 23 f., Paul desired to transfer his ministry, that was accomplished in the East, to Spain. 4th. If ἐπὶ τὸ τέρμα τ. δύσεως ἐλθὼν was intended to transport the reader to Spain, then it would be most natural, since οὕτως sums up the previous participial clauses, to transfer the ἀποθαλαμή τοῦ κόσμου also to Spain; for just as this ἀπαλλλ. τ. κ. is manifestly correlative to the δικαιοσύνην διδάσκων τ. κόσμου, so εἰς τ. ἀγιόν τότον ἑπορεύθη corresponds with the ἐπὶ τ. τέρμα τ. δύσεως κ.τ.λ.; so that Paul, starting from the τέρμα τ. δύσεως, which he has reached, and where he has borne his testimony before the rulers, enters on his journey to the holy place. It is only, therefore, when we understand Italy as the western limit, that the language of Clement is in harmony with the historical circumstances of the case.1 See, moreover, Lipsius,

If we render μαρτυρίων martyrium passus (Credner, Lange, and older writers), this result comes out more clearly, since at all events Paul died in Rome; along with which indeed Dollinger further finds in ἐπὶ τῶν ἡγουμ. an evidence for the year 67 that has been the traditional date since Eusebius, Chron. (comp. also Gams, Jahr d. Martyrertodes, etc.; and Sepp, l.c. p. 379), when Nero was absent and the Prefects ruled in Rome. See his Christenth. u. Kirche, p. 101, ed.

1
THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

de Clem. Rom. ep. ad Cor. I. p. 129, and Chronol. d. röm. Bisch. p. 163 ff. It cannot withal be overlooked that in the so-called Epist. Clem. ad Jacobum, c. 1, there is manifestly an echo of our passage, and yet Rome alone is designated as the final goal of the Apostle's labours: τὸν ἑσύμενον ἄγαθον ὅλῳ τῷ κόσμῳ μὴν τα αἱ βασιλεά, μέχρις ἑπτάδα τῇ Ῥώμῃ γενόμενος, θεοβολοθήτω διδασκαλία σῶζων ἀνθρώπους, αὐτὸς τοῦ νῦν βίου βιαίως τὸ ἐξ ἐμὲ μετῆλλαξέν. After this the conjecture of Wieseler (and Schaff, Hist. of Apost. Church, p. 342), who, instead of εἰρρτὶ τὸ τέρμα as given by Junius, would read ὑπὸ τὸ τέρμα, and explain it "before the supreme power of the West," is unnecessary. It is decisive against this view that Jacobson, as well as Wotton, found εἰρρτὶ in the Cod. A, and that Tischendorf likewise has attested the existence of καὶ εἰρρτὲ as beyond doubt. But, besides, Wieseler's expedient would not be admissible on grounds of linguistic usage, for τέρμα in the sense assumed is only used with ἐχειω; see Eur. Suppl. 617, Or. 1343, Jacobs. ad Del. epigr. p. 287. From the very corrupt text of the Canon Muratorii,¹

2. Against that chronological determination, see generally Baxmann, dass Petr. u. Paul nicht am 29. Junius 67. gemarciert worden sind, 1867.

¹ The passage in question runs, "Acta autem omnium apostolorum sub uno libro sunt. Lucas optime Theophile comprindit (comprehendit), quis sub praesentia ejus singula gerebantur, sicuti et semote passionem Petri evident declarat, sed proficiendum Petri ab urbe ad Spaniam proficiendum." Wieseler conjectures that after proficiendum the word omittit has been left out; that semote means: at a separate place, viz. not in the Acts of the Apostles, but in the Gospel, xxxi. 31-23. A very forced conjecture, with which nevertheless Volkmar (in Credner's Gesch. d. Kanon, p. 348) agrees, supposing that a non has dropped out after proficiendum. Credner, l.c. p. 155 f., conjectured semota (namely oca, which is supposed to refer to John xxi. 18 ff., and Rom. xv. 24), and then et instead of sed. Otto, p. 154, would read sic et instead of sed; making the meaning: "Consequently (sic) he declares openly, that just as (uts et) in his absence the martyrdom of Peter took place, so likewise (sic et) the journey of Paul," etc. But how much must we thus introduce into the semote! Laurent alters into: "semota passione...et profectione," etc. Various suggestions are made by others; see Ewald, Jahrb. VIII. p. 126, whose own procedure is the boldest. Hilgenfeld, Kanon u. Krit. d. N. T., thinks that the author has "guessed" the martyrdom of Peter and the Spanish journey of Paul from the abrupt close of the Acts of the Apostles. Such a theory should have been precluded by the "evidenter declarat," for which indeed Ewald would read "evidenter decerpit" or "decollat." If we must resort to conjecture (and it is necessary), it seems the simplest course, instead of et semote, to insert τὸ semotam, and then instead of sed, et. This would yield the sense: as this circumstance (τὸ), viz. the writing down only what took place in his presence, evidently explains the exclu-
nothing can be gathered bearing on our question, except that the author was already acquainted with the tradition of the journey to Spain afterwards reported by Eusebius; not, that he wished to refute it (Wieseler, p. 536). On the other hand, Origen (in Euseb. iii. 1: τί δει περί Παύλου λέγειν ἀπὸ Ἡρονίσαλῆμα μέχρι τοῦ Ἡλιομενοῦ πεπληρωκότος τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ ὑστερον ἐν τῇ Ῥώμῃ ἐπὶ Νέρωνος μεμαρτυρηκότος) tacitly excludes the Spanish journey. The tradition regarding it arose very naturally out of Rom. xv. 24; (Jerome: “ad Italiam quoque et, ut ipse scribit, ad Hispanias—portatus est”), and served as a needed historical basis for the explanation of 2 Tim., acquiring the more general currency both on this account and because it tended to the glorification of the Apostle. It is further worthy of attention that the pseudo-Abdias, in his Historia Apostolica, ii. 7, 8 (in Fabricius, Cod. Apocr. p. 452 ff.), represents the execution as the issue of the captivity reported in the Acts. Had this author been a believer in a liberation, as well as in a renewed missionary activity and second imprisonment, he would have been the last to refrain from bringing forward wonderful reports regarding them. Substantially the same may be said of the Acta Petri et Pauli in Tischendorf, Act. ap. apocr. p. 1 ff.

Note.—If we regard the Epistles to Timothy and Titus—which, moreover, stand or fall together—as genuine, we must take, as Eusebius in particular has done with reference to 2 Tim., the tradition of the Apostle's liberation from Rome and of a second captivity there as an historical postulate,1 in order to gain the room which cannot otherwise be found for the historical references of those Epistles, sion (semotam) of the passion of Peter and of the journey of Paul from Rome to Spain. On both of these occasions the author accordingly thinks that Luke was not present, and thereby the fact that he has omitted them in his book is explained.

1 This is the ground assumed by the latest expositors of the Pastoral Epistles, who maintain their genuineness, Wiesinger and Huther; whilst Rudow, again, in the already mentioned Dissert. 1852, only rejects the First Ep. to Timothy (comp. Bleek), and, calling in question a second captivity, ascribes the Second Ep. to Timothy to the first imprisonment, and the Ep. to Titus to the sojourn at Ephesus. So also Otto, with respect to the two last-named Epistles; but he regards the First Ep. to Timothy as a letter of instruction for Timothy in view of his mission to Corinth, consequently as nearly contemporaneous with the Ep. to Titus. See, in opposition to Otto, Huther on the Pastoral Epistles, Introd. ed. 3 and the latest possible time for their other contents. But the more defective the proof of the second imprisonment is, the more warranted remain the doubts as to the genuineness of these Epistles, which arise out of their own contents; while in virtue of these doubts the Epistles, in their turn, cannot themselves be suitably adduced in proof of that captivity. Besides, it cannot be left out of view that in all the unquestionably genuine Epistles which Paul wrote during his imprisonment every trace of the previously (Rom. xv. 24) cherished plan of a journey to Spain has vanished; and that in the Epistle to the Philippians, which was certainly not written till he was in Rome (i. 25 f., ii. 24), he contemplates as his further goal in the event of his liberation, not the far West, but Macedonia, or in other words a return to the East. From Acts xxiii. 11, however, no evidence can be adduced against the Spanish journey (as Otto contends), because in this passage there is no express mention of a last goal, excluding all further advance.

§ 2. The Christian Church at Rome.¹

That the Christian Church in Rome had been in existence for a considerable time when Paul wrote to it, is clear from i. 8-13 and xiii. 11, 15; and that it was already a church formally constituted, may be gathered from the general analogy of other churches that had already been long in existence, from xii. 5 ff., and less certainly from xvi. 5. Especially may the existence of a body of presbyters, which was essential to church organization (Acts xiv. 23), be regarded as a matter of course. In the Acts of the Apostles the existence of the Church is presupposed (xxviii. 15) as something well known; and the author, who follows the thread of his Apostle’s biography, had no occasion to narrate its origin or development.

The origin of the Roman Church cannot therefore be determined with certainty. It is not incredible that even during the lifetime of Jesus faith in Him had taken root, in individual cases, among the Roman Jews (comp. Clem. Recogn. i. 6). For

among the pilgrims who flocked to the festivals at Jerusalem from all countries Romans also were wont to be present (Acts ii. 10), and that too in considerable numbers, because the multitude of Jews in Rome had since the time of Pompey become extraordinarily great (see Philo, leg. ad Caj. II. p. 568; Dio Cass. xxxvi. 6; Joseph. Antt. xvii. 11, 1), including Jews directly from Palestine (prisoners of war, see Philo, l.c.), of whom a large portion had attained to freedom, the rights of citizenship, and even wealth. Is it unlikely that individual festal pilgrims from Rome, impressed by the words and works of Jesus in Jerusalem, carried back with them to their homes the first seeds of the faith? To this view it cannot be objected (as by Reiche), that Christianity did not spread beyond the bounds of Palestine until after the miracle of Pentecost; for there is mention, in fact, in Matt. x. of the official missionary activity of the Apostles, and in Acts viii. 1 ff. of that of emigrants from Jerusalem. If the former and the latter did not labour in foreign lands until a subsequent period, this by no means excludes the possibility of the conversion of individual foreigners, partly Jews, partly proselytes, who became believers in Jerusalem. It is further probable that there were some Romans among the three thousand who came over to the Christian faith at the first Pentecost (Acts ii. 10); at least it would be very arbitrary to exclude these, who are expressly mentioned among the witnesses of what occurred at Pentecost, from participation in its results. Lastly, it is probable that the persecution which broke out with the stoning of Stephen drove some Palestinian Christians to take refuge even in the distant capital of the world, distinguished by its religious toleration, and in fact inclined to Oriental modes of worship (Athenaeus, Deipn. I. p. 20 B., calls it ἐπιτομήν τῆς οἰκουμένης, and says: καὶ γὰρ ὅλα τὰ ἑθνα ἀθρόως αὐτόθι συνώκισται). For that, this dispersion of the Christians of Jerusalem was not confined to Samaria and Judaea (an objection here urged by Reiche and Kollner), is proved by Acts xi. 19, where emigrants are mentioned who had gone as far as Phoenicia and Cyprus. And how easily might some find their way even to Rome, seeing that the brisk maritime intercourse between these places and Italy afforded them opportunity, and seeing that they might expect to find admittance and repose among their countrymen in Rome, who were strangers to the fanatical zeal of Palestine. But although, in consequence of the constant intercourse maintained by the Jews at Rome with Asia, Egypt and Greece, and especially with Palestine (Gieseler, Kirchengesch. I. § 17), various Christians may have visited Rome, and various Jews from Rome may have become Christians, all the influences hitherto mentioned could not establish a Christian congregational life in Rome. Individual Christians were there, and certainly also Christian fellowship, but still no organized church. To plant such a church, there was needed, as is plain from the analogy of all other cases of the founding of churches with which we are acquainted, official action on the part of teachers endowed directly or indirectly with apostolic authority.

Who the founder of the Roman congregational life was, however, is utterly unknown. The Catholic Church names the Apostle Peter; concerning whom, along with the gradual development of the hierarchy, there has been a gradual development of tradition, that he came to Rome in the second year, or at any rate about the beginning of the reign of the Emperor Claudius (according to Gams, a.d. 41), to overcome Simon Magus, and remained there twenty-five years (Gams: twenty-four years and an indefinite number of days), till his death, as its first bishop. See Eusebius, Chron. (in Mai's Script. vet. nov. coll. VIII. p. 376, 378); and Jerome, de vir. ill. 1. But that Peter in the year 44, and at the date of the apostolic conference in the year 52, was still resident in Jerusalem, is evident from Acts xii. 4, xv. 7, and Gal. ii. 1 ff. From Acts xii. 7 a journey to Rome cannot be inferred.

Further, that still later, when Paul was living at

---

1 See, generally, Lipsius, d. Quellen d. Röm. Petruswes, Kiel, 1872. As to the way in which that tradition, the germs of which are found in Dionysius of Corinth (Euseb. H. E. ii. 25), gradually developed itself into the complete and definite form given above, see Wieseler, chronol. Synops. p. 571; regarding the motley legends connected with it, see Sepp, Gesch. d. Ap. p. 341, ed. 2; concerning the unhistorical matter to be eliminated from the report of Jerome, see Huther on 1 Peter, Introd.; comp. Credner, Einl. II. p. 382. The alleged presence of Simon in Rome is probably the mere product of a misconception, by which Justin, Apol. i. 26 (comp. Irenaeus, Haer. i. 23), explained an old inscription as referring to Simon Magus. Comp. also Uhlhorn, d. Homil. u. Recogn. d. Olem. p. 378 f.; Möller in Herzogs Encyk. XIV. p. 392 ff.; Bleek, p. 563 f.

2 Even if Peter had actually, in the course of his foreign travels (1 Cor. ix. 5), visited Rome once in the time of Claudius (comp. on Acts xii. 17), which Ewald (apost. Zeit. p. 606 f. ed. 3.) concedes to ecclesiastical tradition, not calling in Ephesus, Peter had not been labouring in Rome, is evident from Acts xix. 21, because Paul followed the principle of not interfering with another Apostle's field of labour (Rom. xv. 20; comp. 2 Cor. x. 16); and, had Peter been in Rome when Paul wrote to the Romans, he would have been saluted by the latter before all others; for the numerous salutations in ch. xvi. presuppose an accurate acquaintance with the teachers who were then in Rome. Peter cannot have been labouring in Rome at all before Paul himself was brought thither, because the former, as Apostle to the Jews, would have brought Christianity into closer contact with the Jewish population there than is apparent in Acts xxviii. 22. It is even in the highest degree improbable that Peter was in Rome prior to the writing of the Epistle to the Philippians—the only one which was certainly written by Paul in Rome—or at the time of its being written; for it is inconceivable that Paul should not in this letter have mentioned a fellow-Apostle, and that one Peter, especially when he had to complain so deeply of being forsaken as at Phil. ii. 20. Consequently the arrival of Peter in Rome, which was followed very soon by his execution—and which is accredited by such ancient and strong testimony (Dionysius of Corinth, in Euseb. ii. 25; Caius, in Euseb. ii. 25; Origen, in Euseb. iii. 1; Irenaeus; Tertullian, etc.) that it cannot be in itself rejected—is to be placed only towards the end of Paul's captivity, subsequent to the composition of the Epistle to the Philippians. If, therefore, the tradition of the Roman Church having been founded by Peter—a view disputed even by Catholic theologians like Hug, Herbst, Feilmoser, Klee, Ellendorf, Maier, and Stengel, who however are vehemently opposed by Windischmann, Stengelein, Reithmayr, and many others¹

¹ Dollinger, Christenth. u. Kirche, p. 95 ff. ed. 2, still seeks to support it on the usual grounds, and in doing so starts from the purely fanciful à priori premiss, that the Roman Church must have been founded by an Apostle, with the equally arbitrary conclusion: "And that Apostle can only have been Peter." He gives to the twenty-five years' duration of the Petrine episcopatus a curious round-about interpretation, according to which the episcopate is made to mean merely ecclesiastical dignity in general; see p. 317. The passage of Dionysius of Corinth in Euseb. ii. 25 is misinterpreted by him.—It ill accords with the Roman epis-
must be entirely disregarded (although it is still defended among Protestants by Bertholdt, Mynster and Thiersch), it is on the other hand highly probable, that a Christian church was founded at Rome only subsequent to Paul's transference of his missionary labours to Europe; since there is no sort of indication, that on his first appearance in Macedonia and Achaia he anywhere found a congregation already existing. He himself in fact stood in need of a special direction from Christ to pass over to Europe (Acts xvi. 9 f.); and so another official herald of the faith can hardly before that time have penetrated as far as Italy. But, when Paul was labouring successfully in Greece, it was very natural that apostolic men of his school should find motive and occasion for carrying their evangelic ministry still further westward,— to the capital of the Gentile world. The expulsion of the Jews from Rome under Claudius (Sueton. Claud. 25; Acts xviii. 2) served, under Divine guidance, as a special means for this end. Refugees to the neighbouring Greece became Christians, Christians of the Pauline type, and then, on their return to Rome, came forward as preachers of Christianity and organisers of a church. We have historical confirmation of this in the instance of Aquila and Priscilla, who emigrated as Jews to Corinth, dwelt there with Paul for upwards of a year and a half, and at the date of our Epistle had again settled in Rome, where they appear, as previously in Ephesus (1 Cor. xvi. 19), according to Rom. xvi. 3 as teachers and the possessors of a house where the Roman church assembled. It is probable that copate of Peter that in Euseb. iii. 2, and Irenaeus, iii. 3, Linus is expressly named as the first Roman bishop; and in fact in the Constit. ap. vii. 46, 1, it is said that he was appointed by Paul; while Peter only nominated the second bishop (Clemens) after the death of Linus. According to this statement Peter had nothing to do with the founding of the Roman episcopate, and neither Paul nor Peter was bishop in Rome. On the whole it is to be maintained that no Apostle at all was bishop of a church. The apostolate and the presbyterate were two specifically distinct offices in the service of the Church. In Rome especially the succession of bishops can only be historically proved from Xystus onwards (ob. 125); see Lipsius, l.c.
1 That this married pair came to Corinth, not as Christians, but as still Jews, and were there converted to Christianity through Paul, see on Acts xviii. 1, 2. Comp. Reiche, I. p. 44 f.; Wieseler, l.c. p. 588.—Moreover, that the Christians (Jewish-Christians) resident in Rome were driven into exile along with other Jews by the edict of Claudius, can neither be proved nor yet controverted from the well-known passage in Sueton. Claud. 25 (see on Acts xviii. 1); for at that time others also, especially among the persons mentioned in ch. xvi., were in similar ways led by God; but it is certain that a chief place among the founders of the church belongs to Aquila and Priscilla; since among the many who are greeted by Paul in the 16th chap. he presents to them the first salutation, and that with a more laudatory designation than is accorded to any of the others.

Christianity, having taken root in the first instance among the Jews in Rome, because the popular heathen religion had already fallen into a contempt inducing despair both among the cultivated and uncultivated classes (see Gieseler I. i. § 11-14; Schneckenburger, neuest. Zeitgesch. p. 59 f.; Holtzmann, Judenthum u. Christenthum, p. 305 ff.). Hence the inclination to Monotheism was very general; and the number of those who had gone over to Judaism was very great (Juvenal, Sat. xiv. 96 ff.; Tac. Ann. xv. 44, Hist. v. 5; Seneca, in Augustine, de civ. Dei, vii. 11; Joseph. Antt. xviii. 3, 5). How much attention and approval, therefore, must the liberal system of religion, elevated above all the fetters of a deterrent legal rigour, as preached by Aquila and other Pauline teachers, have met with among the Romans dissatisfied with heathenism! From the description of most of the persons named in ch. xvi., from the express approval given to the doctrine in which the Romans had been instructed, xvi. 17, vi. 17, and even from the fact of the composition of the letter itself, inasmuch as not one of the now extant letters of the Apostle is directed to a non-Pauline church, we may with certainty infer that Pauline Christianity was preponderant in Rome; and from this it is a further necessary inference that a very important part of the Roman church consisted of Géntile-Christians. This Géntile-Christian part must have been the preponderating one, and must have formed its chief constituent element (in opposition to Baur, Schwegler, Krehl, Baumgarten-Crusius, van Hengel, Volkmar, Reuss, Lutterbeck, Thiersch, Holtzmann, Mangold, Grau, and Sabatier), since Paul expressly and repeatedly designates and addresses the Romans in general as belonging to the ἔθνη (i. 6, 13, xi. 13); and asserts before them the importance the Christian body, which at all events was very small and isolated, was not yet independent, but still united with the Jewish population.
of his calling as Apostle to the Gentiles (xv. 15 f., i. 5; comp. xvi. 4, 26). Comp. Neander, Gesch. d. Pflanzung, etc., ed. 4, p. 452 ff., Tholuck, Philippi, Wieseler, Hofmann. Indeed, we must presume in accordance with the apostolic agreement of Gal. ii. 7 ff., that Paul would not have written a doctrinal Epistle to the Romans, especially one containing his entire gospel, if the church had been, in the main, a church of the περιτομη and not of the ἀκροβυστία. Even ch. vii. 1, where the readers are described as γινώσκοντες νόμον, as well as the numerous references to the Old Testament, and proofs adduced from it, are far from attesting the predominance of Jewish Christianity in Rome. They are fully explained, when we recollect that in the apostolic age all Christian knowledge was conveyed through the channel of the Old Testament (xvi. 26); that an acquaintance with the law and the prophets, which was constantly on the increase by their being publicly read in the assemblies (comp. on Gal. iv. 21), was also to be found among the Gentile-Christians; and that the mingling of Jews and Gentiles in the churches, even without a Judaizing influence being exerted on the latter (as in the case of the Galatians), could not but tend to further the use of that Old Testament path which Christian preaching and knowledge had necessarily to pursue. The grounds upon which Baur (in the Tübing. Zeitschr. 1836, 3, p. 144 ff. 1857, p. 60 ff., and in his Paulus, I. p. 343 ff. ed. 2; also in his Christenth. d. drei erst. Jahrb. p. 62 ff. ed. 2; see also Volckmar, d. Röm. Kirche, p. 1 ff.; Holsten, z. Ev. u. Paul. u. Petr. p. 411) seeks to establish the preponderance of Jewish Christianity will be dealt with in connection with the passages concerned; as will also the defence

1 By this Epistle he would have gone beyond the line laid down by him for his own field of labour (comp. 2 Cor. x. 13 ff.), and would have interfered in the sphere not assigned to him—the Apostleship to the Jews.

2 Even in the Epistle of Clement, written in the name of the Roman Church, with its numerous O. T. references, the Gentile-Christian and Pauline element of thought predominates, although there is a manipulation of Pauline views and ideas in accordance with the "Christian legalism" (Ritschl, altkath. K. p. 274 ff.) of a later period. Comp. Lipsius, de Clem. Rom. Ep. ad Cor. pr. 1855; and Mangold, p. 167 ff. I cannot agree with Wieseler and others that this Epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, but with Ritschl and others assign it to the time of Domitian; comp. Cotelerius.
of that preponderance which Mangold has given, while correcting in many respects the positions of Baur. The middle course attempted by Beyschlag, l.c. p. 640—that the main element of the church consisted of native Roman proselytes to Judaism, so that we should regard the church as Gentile-Christian in its lineage, but as Jewish-Christian in its habits of thought—is unsupported by any relevant evidence in the Epistle itself, or by any indication in particular of a previous state of proselytism.

But even if there was merely a considerable portion of the Christian church at Rome consisting of those who had been previously Jews (as, in particular, xiv. 1 ff. refers to such), it must still appear strange, and might even cast a doubt upon the existence of a regularly organized church (Bleek, Beitr. p. 55, and Einl. p. 412; comp. Calovius and others), that when Paul arrives as a prisoner in Rome, and wishes to acquaint himself with the Jewish community there, the leaders of the latter make no mention of a Christian congregation at Rome, but evince merely a superficial cognisance of the Christian sect in general (Acts xxviii. 22). But the Jewish leaders are here speaking as officials, and, as such, are not inclined without special immediate occasion to express their views before the captive stranger as to the position of the Christian body which existed in Rome itself. A designation of the Christian sect generally in accordance with its notorious outward reputation—such as might bring it into suspicion—is enough for them; but as to the precise relation in which this sect stands to them in Rome itself they do not feel themselves called upon to say anything for the present, and, with discreet reserve, are therefore wholly silent respecting it. This narrative therefore of Acts is neither to be regarded as a fiction due to the tendency of the author (Baur, Zeller, Holtzmann), nor to be explained, arbitrarily and inadequately, by the expulsion of the Jews under Claudius (Olshausen), which had induced the Roman Jewish-Christians to separate themselves entirely from the Jews, so that on the return of the latter from exile the former remained unnoticed by them. Neither is it to be accounted for, with Neander—overlooking the peculiar character of Jewish religious interests—by the vast size of the metropolis; nor, with Baumgarten, by the predominance of the Gentile-Christians there; nor yet, with older writers, by the hypothesis—unjust and incapable of proof—that the Roman Jews acted a dishonest and hypocritical part on the occasion. Not dishonesty, but prudence and caution are evinced in their conduct (comp. Schneckenburger, Philippi, Tholuck, Mangold), for the explanation of which we do not require, in addition to what they themselves express in ver. 22, to assume any special outward reason, such as that they had been rendered by the Claudian measure more shy and reserved (Philippi; comp. Ewald, apost. Zeit. p. 588, ed. 3); especially seeing that there is no just ground for referring the words of Suetonius, "Judaeos impulsore Chresto assidue tumultuantes Roma expulit" (Claud. 25), to disputes between Jews and Christians relative to the Messiahship of Jesus, contrary to the definite expression "tumultuare." 1

We may add that our Epistle—since Peter cannot have laboured in Rome before it was written—is a fact destructive of the historical basis of the Papacy, in so far as the latter is made to rest on the founding of the Roman church and the exercise of its episcopate by that Apostle. For Paul the writing of such a didactic Epistle to a church of which he knew Peter to be the founder and bishop, would have been, according to the principle of his apostolic independence, an impossible inconsistency.

1 The Chrestus of Suetonius was a Jewish agitator in Rome, who was actually so called. See on Acts xviii. 2, and Wieseler, p. 585. Every other interpretation is fanciful, including even the one given above, which is adopted by the majority of modern writers, among others by Baur, Holtzmann, Keim, Grau, and Mangold. Thielsch is peculiar in adding to it the groundless assertion that "the disturbances arose through the testimony of Peter to the Messiah in Rome, but that Peter had again left Rome even before the expulsion of the Jews by Claudius." Groundless is also the opinion of Philippi, that, if Chrestus is to be taken as an agitator, he must have been a pseudo-Messiah. The pseudo-Messiahs appeared much later. But after the analogies of Judas and Theudas, other insurgents are conceivable enough—enthusiasts for political freedom and zealots. Beyschlag, p. 652 ff., likewise taking Chrestus as equivalent to Christus, infers too rashly, from the passage in Suetonius, that the Roman Church was chiefly composed of proselytes, who, when the native-born Jews were expelled, remained behind. Märcker (Lehre von der Erlös. nach d. Römerbr. Meining. 1870, p. 3) rightly rejects the interchange of the names Chrestus and Christus.
§ 3. Occasion, Object and Contents of the Epistle.

Long before writing this Epistle (ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐτῶν, xv. 23) the Apostle had cherished the fixed and longing desire (Acts xix. 21) to preach the Gospel in person at Rome (i. 11 ff.)—in that metropolis of the world, where the flourishing of Christianity would necessarily exert an influence of the utmost importance on the entire West; and where, moreover, the special relation in which the church stood to the Apostle through its Pauline founders and teachers, and through the many friends and fellow-labourers whom he possessed in the city (ch. xvi.), claimed his ardent and loving interest. His official labours in other regions had hitherto prevented the carrying out of this design (i. 13, xv. 22). Now indeed he hoped that he should soon accomplish its realisation; but, partly because he wished first to undertake his collection-journey to Jerusalem (xv. 23-25), and partly because Spain, and not Rome (xv. 24-28), was to be the goal of his travels to the West, a lengthened sojourn in Rome cannot have formed part of his plan at that time. Accordingly, in pursuance of his apostolic purpose with reference to the Roman church, he could not but wish, on the one hand, no longer to withhold from it at least such a written communication of his doctrine, which he had so long vainly desired to proclaim orally, as should be suitable to the church’s present need; and on the other hand, by this written communication to pave the way for his intended personal labours in such fitting manner as to render a prolonged stay there unnecessary. This twofold desire occasioned the composition of our Epistle, for the transmission of which the journey of the Corinthian deaconess Phoebe to Rome (xvi. 1) afforded an opportunity which he gladly embraced. He could not fail to possess a sufficient acquaintance with the circumstances of the church, when we consider his position towards the teachers saluted in ch. xvi., and the eminent importance of the church itself—of whose state, looking to the active intercourse between Corinth and Rome, he was certainly thoroughly informed—as well as the indications afforded by ch. xii. xiv. xv. That the Epistle was called forth

1 See, besides the works quoted in § 2, Riggenbach in the Luther. Zeitschr. 1868, p. 33 ff.
by special communications made from Rome itself (possibly by Aquila and Priscilla) is nowhere apparent from its contents; on the contrary, such a view is, from the general nature of the contents, highly improbable. Of all the Apostle's letters, our present Epistle is that which has least arisen out of the necessity of dealing with special casual circumstances. According to Baur, the readers, as Jewish Christians (imbued also with erroneous Ebionite views), gave rise to the letter by their opposition to Paul, in so far, namely, as they saw in Paul's apostolic labours among the Gentiles a detriment to the Jews, contrary to the promises given to them by God, and therefore asserted the national privileges of their theocratic primacy in an exclusive spirit as opposed to the universalism of the Pauline teaching. Comp. also Schwegler, nachapost. Zeit. I. p. 285 ff.; Volckmar, i.e. p. 7 ff.; and also Reuss, Gesch. d. N. T. § 105 ff. ed. 4. In this view the Epistle is made to assume a specifically polemic character, which it manifestly has not (how very different in this respect the Ep. to the Galatians and those to the Corinthians!); it is assumed that the Church was a Jewish-Christian one; and an importance, too great in relation to the whole, and indefensible from an exegetical point of view, is attached to the section, chs. ix.-xi. (even in Baur's second edition, which contains on this point a partial retraction), while, on the other hand, the two last chapters have to be sacrificed to critical doubts that have no foundation. In no other Pauline Epistle is the directly polemical element so much in the background; and where it does find expression, it is only for the moment (as in xvi. 17-20), — a sure proof that it was least of all the concrete appearance and working of Antipaulinism which the Apostle had occasion in this Epistle to oppose. Against that enemy he would have waged a very different warfare, as is shown in particular in the case of the Epistle to the Galatians, so nearly allied in its contents. Nor is that enemy to be discovered in the weak in faith of xiv. 1 ff. Of course, however, Paul could not present his Gospel otherwise than in antagonism to the Jewish righteousness of works and arrogance, which it had already overcome and would continue to do so; for this antagonism belonged to the essence of his Gospel and had to assert itself, wherever there was Judaism—only in various forms and degrees according to the given circumstances—and therefore at Rome as well. The view of Thiersch (Kirche im apostol. Zeitalt. p. 166), that Paul desired to elevate the Jewish-Christian church, which had consisted of the simple followers of Peter, from their still somewhat backward standpoint to more enlarged views, rests on the erroneous opinion that Peter had laboured in Rome.

The object of our Epistle, accordingly, was by no means the drawing up of a systematic doctrinal system in general (see, against this view, Köstlin in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1856, p. 68 ff.; Grau, Entwickelungsgesch. II. p. 114); but it is not on the other hand to be restricted more specially than by saying: Paul wished to lay before the Romans in writing, for their Christian edification (i. 11, xvi. 25), his evangelic doctrine— the doctrine of the sole way of salvation given in Christ— viewed in its full, specific character as the superseding of Judaism, in such a way as the necessities and circumstances of the Church demanded, and as he would have preached it among them, had he been present in person (i. 11). The mode in which he had to accomplish this was determined by the circumstance, that he deemed it necessary for his object fully to set forth before the Roman church, in a manner proportioned to the high importance of its position, this Gospel as to which his disciples had already instructed them, in the entire connection of its constituent fundamental principles. ¹ In no other letter has he done this so completely and thoroughly;² hence it is justly regarded as a grand scheme of his whole teaching,³ in the precise

---

¹ Against which Hofmann unjustifiably urges ἄπο μέρος and ὃς ἐπαναμμήνοικων ὕμᾶς in xv. 15. See on that passage.
² So completely, that we can well enough understand how this Ep. could become the basis of Melancthon's loci communes.
³ Comp. Hausrath, neut. Zeitgesch. II. p. 514 ff. Observe, at the same time, that though the Epistle deals very much with legal notions, this does not arise from its being destined for the Romans to whom Paul had become a Roman (Grau, i.e. p. 113), but from the very nature of the Pauline Gospel in general, and is therefore found e.g. also in the Epistle to the Galatians.
form which he held to be suitable for its presentation to the Romans. How much he must have had this at heart! How much he must have wished to erect such a complete and abiding memorial of his Gospel in the very capital of the Gentile world, which was to become the Antioch of the West! Not merely the present association of Jews and Gentiles in the church, but, generally, the essential relation in which, according to the very Pauline teaching, Christianity stood to Judaism, required him to subject this relation in particular, viewed in its strong antagonism to all legal righteousness, to an earnest and thorough discussion. This was a necessary part of his design; and consequently its execution, though on the whole based on a thoroughly didactic plan, nevertheless assumed, in the presence of the given points of antagonism, partly an apologetic, partly a polemic form, as the subject required; without however any precise necessity to contend against particular doctrinal misconceptions among the Romans, against divisions and erroneous views, such as had appeared, for example, among the Galatians and Corinthians; or against a Judaistic leaven brought with them by the Jews and Jewish-Christians who had returned to Rome (comp. Grau). The actual dangers for the moment in the Church were more of a moral than a dogmatic character—a remark which applies also to the opposition between the Gentile Christians, strong in faith, and the scrupulous Jewish Christians—and have merely given occasion to some more special notices (xiii. 1 ff.; xiv. 1 ff.), and hints (xvi. 1 ff.) in the hortatory portion of the Epistle. The Judaistic opponents of Pauline Christianity had not yet penetrated as far as Rome, and were not to arrive there till later (Ep. to the Philippians). It was therefore an untenable position when, even before the time of Baur, who assumed the object of the Epistle to be the systematic and radical refutation of Jewish exclusiveness, its aim was very frequently viewed as that of a polemic against Jewish arrogance, which had been specially aroused on account of the calling of the Gentiles (Augustine, Theodoret, Melancthon, Michaelis, Eichhorn, Schmidt, Flatt, Schott, and others 1). The same may be said of the hypothesis

1 Comp. van Hengel, who assumes that Paul desired to instruct the Romans
_how to refute the subtleties of the Jews_ with reference to the calling of the Gentiles, and to free them from errors and doubts thence arising.
that Paul wished, in a conciliatory sense, to obviate misunderstandings between Jewish and Gentile Christians (Hug). There is no evidence in the Epistle of actual circumstances to justify any such special definitions of its object; and even from xvi. 20 it cannot be assumed that Judaistic temptation had already begun (as Grau thinks). The comprehensiveness of the object of our Epistle—from which, however, neither the combating of Judaism, which arose naturally and necessarily out of the nature of the Pauline Gospel, nor (seeing that the future coming forward of his opponents could not be concealed from the Apostle) the prophylactic design of it, may be excluded—has been justly defended by Tholuck, Rücker, de Wette, Reiche, Köllner, Fritzschke, Philippi, Wieseler, Hausrath and others. Comp. Ewald, p. 317 f. Along with it, however, Th. Schott (comp. also Mangold, Riggenbach, Sabatier) has assumed a special personally apologetic purpose on the part of the Apostle;¹ namely that, being now on the point of proceeding with his Gentile mission-work in the far West, Paul wished to gain for his new labours a fixed point of support in the Roman church,² and on this account wished to instruct the Romans as to the significance and justification of the step, and to inspire them with full confidence regarding it, for which reason he exhibits to them in detail the nature and principles of his work. Against this view it may be urged, in general, that Paul nowhere gives expression to this special purpose, though the announcement of it would have been of decided importance, both ¹ Hofmann also makes the object of the Apostle personal. Paul assumes it to be a matter of surprise in Rome that he, the Apostle of the Gentiles, should have hitherto always kept aloof from the world's capital, and even now had not come to it. It might seem as if the church, that had arisen without his aid, had no interest for him; or as if he were afraid to proclaim the message of salvation in the great centre of Gentile culture. This twofold erroneous notion he was especially desirous to refute. As a proof how far he was from being thus afraid, he sets forth what in his view the message of salvation was, etc. etc. Thus he might hope that the church in the metropolis of the world would be just as steady a point of support for his ministry in the farthest West, as if it had been founded by himself. In this way, however, assumptions and objects are assigned to the Epistle which are not expressed in it, but are imputed to it on the ground of subordinate expressions, as will be shown in the exposition.

² Compare also Sabatier, l'apôtre Paul, p. 160 f., who at the same time affirms of the “grand missionaire:” dont l'ambition était aussi vaste que le monde. According to Sabatier, Paul gives down to chap. viii. the defence of his doctrine, and in chaps. ix.-xi. that of his apostleship.
for his own official interests and for the information of the Roman church (they could not read it between the lines either in the preface, vv. 1-15, or in the conclusion, xv. 14-44); and, in particular, that the Apostle's intention of visiting the Romans only in passing through, without making a lengthened sojourn, is incompatible with the assumed purpose which he is alleged to have formed regarding the church. Moreover, a justification on so great a scale of the Gentile mission would presuppose not a Gentile-Christian, but a Jewish-Christian, church and its requirements. Hence Mangold, holding the same view that the Epistle contains a justification of the Gentile apostleship, has the advantage of consistency in his favour; his theory is nevertheless based on the unsatisfactory ground adopted by Baur, namely, that the Church was Jewish-Christian. See, further, Beyschlag, l.c. p. 636 ff., and especially Dietzsch, Adam u. Christus, p. 14 ff.

As to contents, our Epistle, after the salutation and introduction (i. 1-15), falls into two main portions, a theoretical and a hortatory, after which follows the conclusion (xv. 14-xvi. 27). The theoretic portion (i. 16-xi. 36) bears its theme at the outset, i. 16, 17: "Righteousness before God, for Jews and Gentiles, comes from faith." Thereupon is established, in the first place, the necessity of this plan of salvation, as that which the whole human race required, Gentiles and Jews alike, because the latter also, even according to their own law, are guilty before God, and cannot attain to righteousness (i. 17-iii. 20). The nature of this plan of salvation is then made clear, namely, that righteousness really and only comes from faith; which is especially obvious from the justification of Abraham (iii. 21-iv. 25). The blessed results of this plan of salvation are, partly the blissful inward condition of the justified before God (v. 1-11); partly that justification through Christ is just as universally effective, as Adam's fall was once universally destructive (v. 12-21); and partly that true morality is not only not endangered by the manifestation of grace in Christ, but is promoted and quickened by it (chap. vi.), and made free from the fetters of the law (vii. 1-6). This last assertion demanded a defence of the law, as that which is in itself good and holy, but was abused by the sinful principle in man, against his own better will, to his destruction (vii. 17-25)—a sad variance of man with himself, which could not be removed through the law, but only through Christ, whose Spirit produces in us the freedom of the new divine life, the consciousness of adoption, and assurance of future glory (ch. viii.). From the lofty description of this blessed connection with Christ, Paul now suddenly passes to the saddening thought that a great part of that very Jewish people, so signally favoured of God, has rejected the plan of redemption; and therefore he develops at length a Theodicée with regard to the exclusion, apparently irreconcileable with the divine promises, of so many members of the theocracy from the attainment of salvation in Christ (chs. ix.–xi.). The hortatory portion (chs. xii.–xv. 13) gives the essentials of the Pauline ethical system, partly in the form of general exhortations (xii. 1-21; xiii. 8-14), and partly in some special discussions which were deemed necessary in the circumstances of the Romans (xiii. 1-7, xiv. 1–xv. 13). The conclusion comprises in the first place—corresponding to the introduction (i. 8-15)—personal explanations with regard to the Apostle’s intended journey by way of Rome to Spain (xv. 14-33); then the recommendation of Phoebe (xvi. 1 ff.) and salutations (xvi. 3-16); a warning with a closing wish (xvi. 17-20); some supplementary salutations with a second closing wish (xvi. 21-24); and, finally, a concluding doxology (xvi. 25-27).

"This Epistle is the true masterpiece of the N. T., and the very purest Gospel, which is well worthy and deserving that a Christian man should not only learn it by heart, word for word, but also that he should daily deal with it as with the daily bread of men’s souls. For it can never be too much or too well read or studied; and the more it is handled, the more precious it becomes and the better it tastes.”—Luther, Preface.

§ 4. Place and Time of Composition.—Genuineness of the Epistle.

Since the Apostle, when he composed his letter, was on the point of conveying to Jerusalem the proceeds of a collection made in Macedonia and Achaia (xv. 25-27), and intended to journey thence by way of Rome to Spain (xv. 28, comp. Acts xix. 21), we are thus directed to his last sojourn—of three months—in Achaia, Acts xx. 3. His purpose was to cross over directly from Achaia to Syria in order to reach Jerusalem, but he was led, owing to Jewish plots, to take quite a different route, namely, back through Macedonia (Acts x. 3). This change in the plan of his journey had not been made when he wrote his Epistle; otherwise he would not have failed to mention in ch. xv.—where he had at vv. 25 and 31 very immediate inducement to do so—a circumstance so remarkable on account of its novelty and importance. We justly infer therefore—even apart from the fact that the composition of such an epistle presupposes a somewhat lengthened and quiet abode—that it was written before Paul again departed from Achaia. Although Luke mentions no particular city as the scene of the Apostle's three months' residence at that time, still it is, à priori, probable that he spent at least the greater part of the time in Corinth. For Corinth was the principal church of the country, and was in the eyes of the Apostle pre-eminently important and precious on account of his earlier labours there. But our attention is also directed to Corinth by the passages 1 Cor. xvi. 1-7, 2 Cor. ix. 4, xii. 20—xiii. 3, from which it is plain that, on his journey down from Macedonia to Achaia, Paul had chosen that city as the place of his sojourn, where he wished to complete the business of the collection, and from which he would convey the money to Jerusalem. Now, since the recommendation of the deaconess Phoebe from the Corinthian seaport Cenchreae (xvi. 1, 2), as well as the salutation from his host Gaius (xvi. 23, comp. with 1 Cor. i. 14), point to no other city than Corinth, we may, beyond all doubt, abide by it as the place of writing, and not with Dr. Paulus (de orig. ep. P. ad Rom. paralip. Jen. 1801, and Römerbrief, p. 231), on account of xv. 19 (see on that passage), put forward a claim on behalf of a town in Illyria. Theodoret has admirably proved in detail its composition at Corinth.

The time of composition accordingly falls in A.D. 59, when Paul regarded his ministry in the East as closed, and (see xv. 19, 23) saw a new and vast scene of action opened up to him in the West, of which Rome should be the centre and Spain the goal.

The genuineness is decisively attested by the testimonies of the orthodox church (the first express and special quotations from it are found in Irenaeus, Haer. iii. 16, 3, 9, while previously there are more or less certain echoes of its language or traces of its use), as well as of the Gnostics Basilides, Valentinus, Heracleon, Epiphanes, and Theodotus; and there is not a single trace that even the Judaizing heretics, who rejected the authority of the Apostle, at all rejected the Pauline authorship of our Epistle. In order to warrant any doubt or denial of its authenticity, therefore, the most cogent internal grounds would need to be adduced; and in the utter absence of any such grounds, the worthless scruples of Evanson (Dissonance of the four generally received Evangelists, 1792, p. 259 ff.) and the frivolities of Bruno Bauer could find no supporters. The Epistle bears throughout the lively original impress of the Apostle’s mind, and his characteristic qualities, in its matter and its form; is the chief record of his Gospel in its entire connection and antagonism; and is therefore also the richest original-apostolic charter and model of all true evangelical Protestantism. The opinion of Weisse (philosop. Dogm. I. p. 146), which ultimately amounts to the suggestion of a number of interpolations as interwoven throughout the Epistle (see his Beitr. z. Krit. d. Paul. Br., edited by Sulze, p. 28 ff.), rests simply on a subjective criticism of style, which has discarded all weight of external evidence.
GENUINENESS OF THE EPISTLE.

The originality of the Epistle extends also to its language, the Greek, in which Paul dictated it to Tertius. The note of the Syrian Scholiast on the Peshito, that Paul wrote his letter in Latin—a theory maintained also, but for a polemical purpose, by Hardouin, Salmeron, Bellarmine, Corn. à Lapide, and others—is based merely upon a hasty inference from the native language of the readers. Its composition in Greek however corresponds fully, not only with the Hellenic culture of the Apostle himself, but also with the linguistic circumstances of Rome (see Credner’s Eint. II. p. 383 ff.; Bernhardt, Griech. Literat. ed. 2, p. 483 ff.), and with the analogy of the rest of the ancient Christian writings addressed to Rome (Ignatius, Justin, Irenaeus, et al.).

That the two last chapters are genuine and inseparable parts of the Epistle, see in the critical remarks on ch. xv.

1 Clem. Cor. i. 35; Polycarp, ad Phil. 6; Theoph. ad Autol. i. 20, iii. 14; letter of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons in Euseb. v. 1.

2 The reason why Paul did not usually write his Epistles himself is to be sought, not in a want of practice in the writing of Greek—which is a supposition hardly reconcilable with his Hellenic culture—but in his apostolic position, in which—when, instead of the oral preaching for which he was called, he had to enter on written communication—friendly and subordinate hands were at his service. Comp. on Gal. vi. 11.
CHAPTER I.

Ver. 1. Ἰησοῦ X.] Tisch., following B, reads Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ against decisive testimony. — In ver. 7 ἐν Ρώμη, and in ver. 15 τοῖς ἐν Ρώμη, are wanting in G. Börn.; and on ver. 7 the scholiast of cod. 47 remarks: τὸ ἐν Ρώμη οὐτε ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, οὐτε ἐν τῷ ρητῷ μνημονεύει (who? probably the codex, which lay before the copyist). · This quite isolated omission is of no critical weight; and is in no case to be explained by the very unnatural conjecture (of Reiche) that Paul in several Epistles (especially in that to the Ephesians) addressed the readers simply as Christians, and that then the place of residence was inserted by the copyists in accordance with the context or with tradition. In ver. 7 the omission might be explained by the reading ἐν ἀγάπῃ, which G and a few other authorities give instead of αὐτῷ ἐν; but, since τοῖς ἐν Ρ. is wanting in ver. 15 also, another unknown reason must have existed for this. Perhaps some church, which received a copy of the Epistle from the Romans for public reading, may have, for their own particular church-use, deleted the extraneous designation of place, and thus individual codices may have passed into circulation without it. Rückert's conjecture, that Paul himself may have caused copies without the local address to be sent to other churches, assumes a mechanical arrangement in apostolic authorship, of which there is elsewhere no trace, and which seems even opposed by Col. iv. 16. — Ver. 8. ὑπὲρ] A B C D* K, N, min., Dam. read περί, which Griesb. has recommended, and Lachm. and Tisch. have adopted: justly, on account of the preponderant attestation, since both prepositions, though ὑπὲρ less frequently (Eph. i. 16; Phil. i. 4), were used for the expression of the thought (in opposition to Frötsche). — Ver. 13. The less usual construction τινά καρπόν (Elz. κ. τ.) is established by decisive testimony; as also ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ (Elz. δ. γ. Θ.) in ver. 19; and δὲ καὶ (Elz. τὲ καὶ) in ver. 27, although not on equally strong authority. — Instead of ὀὐθὲλῳ in ver. 13, D* E G, It. and Ambrosiaster read οὐκ οὖν. Defended by Rinck. But the very assurance already expressed in vv. 10, 11 might easily cause the ὀὐθὲλῳ to seem unsuitable here, if due account was not taken of the new element in the progress of the discourse contained in προεθέμενον. — After εὕγαγγες in ver. 16 τοῦ Χριστοῦ (Elz.) is omitted on decisive authority; πρῶτον, however, which Lachmann has bracketed, ought not to be rejected on the inadequate adverse testimony of B G, Tert. as it might seem objectionable along with πιστεύοντι (not so in ii. 9 f.). — Ver. 24. The καὶ is indeed wanting after διό in A B C Ν, min., Vulg. Or. al.; but it was very easily passed over as superfluous; comp. ver. 26; ii. 1. Nevertheless Lachm. and Tisch. (8) have deleted it. — ἐν ἑαυτοῖς Lachm. and Tisch. read ἐν αὐτοῖς, following A B C D* Ν, min. But how frequently was the reflexive form neglected by the copyists. It occurred also in ver. 27 (B K). — Ver. 27. ἀπορρέεις] B D* G, 73, Or. Eus. Oec. read ἀπερρέεις. Adopted by Lachm. Fritzsche and Tisch. (7). Since two different forms cannot be supposed to have been used in the same verse, and in that which follows ἀπερρέεις ἐν ἀπερρέατι is undoubtedly the true reading (only A* Ν, min., and some Fathers reading uniformly ἀπρός ἐν ἀπρός), we must here adopt the form ἀπερρέεις almost invariably used in the N. T. (only the Apoc. has ἀπρός.) — Ver. 29. τοποισι] wanting after ἀδικοῦ in A B C K Ν, min., and several vs. and Fathers. Deleted by Lachm. Fritzsche, and Tisch., and rightly so; it is an interpolation introduced by those who did not perceive that the naming of this vice was not again appropriate here. It was written in the margin, and introduced at different places (for we find it after τοποις also, and even after κακία), so that it in some instances even supplanted τοποια. — The placing of κακία immediately after ἀδικοῦ (Lachm. on weak authority), or according to A Ν, Syr., after τοποια (Tisch. 8), is explained by the aggregation of terms of a similar kind. — Ver. 31. After ἀστόργος Elz. and Scholz read ἀσπόνδονος, which Mill condemned, and Lachm. and Tisch. have omitted. It is wanting in A B D* E G and Ν*, Copt. Clar. Germ. Boern. and several Fathers. It is found before ἀστόργη in 17, 76, Theophyl. Taken from 2 Tim. iii. 3. — Ver. 32. After ἐγείνωντες D E Bas. read οὐκ ἐγέιναν, and G, οὐκ ἐγείναν. That death is the wages of sin—this Christian doctrinal proposition seemed not at all to correspond with the natural knowledge of the Gentiles. — Instead of αὐτὰ τοιοῦτον, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνενδοκοῦσται B reads αὐτὰ τοιοῦτας, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνενδοκοῦστες; so Lachm. in margin. This arose from the fact, that εἰσίν was erroneously taken for the chief verb in the sentence; or else it was a consequence of the introduction of
Vv. 1-7.—The Apostolic salutation.

Ver. 1. \( \Pi \alpha \omega \lambda \sigma \) See on Acts xiii. 9.— \( \delta \omega \lambda \sigma \) ... ev\( \alpha \gamma \gamma \). \( \Theta \varepsilon \omicron \upsilon \) is the exhaustive statement of his official dignity, proceeding from the general to the particular, by which Paul earnestly—as dealing with the Church of the metropolis of the world, which had as yet no personal knowledge of him—opens his Epistle as an official apostolic letter; without, however, having in view therein (as Flatt thinks) opponents and calumniators of his apostleship, for of the doings of such persons in Rome the Epistle itself contains no trace, and, had such existed, he would have set forth his dignity, not only positively, but also at the same time negatively (comp. Gal. i. 1).—In the first place Paul describes by \( \delta \omega \lambda \sigma \) 'I. X. his relation of service to Christ, as his Ruler, whose servant he is, and that in general (comp. on Phil. i. 1), just as the Old Testament \( \pi \tau \nu \tau \rho \upsilon \nu \) expresses the relation of service to Jehovah, without marking off in itself exclusively any definite class, such as the prophetic or the priestly (see Josh. i. 1, xiv. 7, xxii. 4; Judg. ii. 8; Ps. cxxxi. 10; comp. Acts xvi. 17). This relation of entire dependence (Gal. i. 10; Col. iv. 12) is then specifically and particularly indicated by \( \kappa \lambda \pi \tau \omicron \varsigma \) \( \alpha \pi \omega \sigma \tau \omicron \lambda \omicron \) \( \alpha \), and for this reason the former \( \delta \omega \lambda \sigma \) 'I. X. cannot be rendered merely in general Christi cultor (so Fritzsche), which is inadequate also at 1 Cor. vii. 22; Eph. vi. 6. Paid was called to his office, like all the earlier Apostles; he did not arrive at it by his own choice or through accidental circumstances. For the history of this divine calling, accomplished through the exalted Christ Himself, see Acts ix. (xxii. 26), and the remarks thereon. This \( \kappa \lambda \pi \tau \omicron \varsigma \) presented itself so naturally to the Apostle as an essential element in the full description of his official position which he meant to give (comp. 1 Cor. i. 1), that the supposition of a side-glance at uncalled teachers (Cameron, Glöckler) seems very arbitrary. — \( \alpha \phi \omega \rho \iota \iota \sigma \mu \epsilon \omicron \nu \); eis ev\( \alpha \gamma \gamma \). \( \Theta \varepsilon \omicron \upsilon \) characterizes the \( \kappa \lambda \pi \tau \omicron \varsigma \) \( \alpha \pi \omega \sigma \tau \omicron \lambda \omicron \) more precisely: set apart (definitely separated from the rest of mankind) for God's message of salvation, to be its preacher and minister (see on Eph. iii.

1 See Weiss in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1857, p. 97 ff.
7). The article before εὐαγγελίον elsewhere invariably given in the N. T., is omitted here, because Paul views the message of God, of which he desires to speak, primarily under its qualitative aspect (comp. also van Hengel and Hofmann). Concrete definiteness is only added to it gradually by the further clauses delineating its character. This mode of expression implies a certain festal tone, in harmony with the whole solemn character of the pregnant opening of the Epistle: for a gospel of God, which He promised before, etc. Still we are not to understand, with Th. Schott, a work of proclamation, since εὐαγγελίον is not the work of conveying a message, but the message itself. Θεοῦ is the genitive subjecti (auctoris), ver. 2, not objecti (Chrysostom). See on Mark i. 1. It is God who causes the message of salvation here referred to, which is Ής λόγος (Acts x. 36), to be proclaimed; comp. xv. 16; 2 Cor. xi. 7; 1 Thess. ii. 2, 8, 9; 1 Pet. iv. 17. The destination of Apostle to the Gentiles is involved in ἀφορίσας ἐς εἰς Θ. though not expressed (as Beza and others think). Further, since ἀφορίσας is parallel with the previous καλέσας, it is neither to be explained, with Toletus and others, including Olshausen, by Acts xiii. 2, nor with Reiche, Ewald and van Hengel (following Chrysostom and others) by Gal. i. 15, comp. Jer. i. 5; but rather by Acts ix. 15 (σκέυος ἐκλογής), comp. xxvi. 16 ff. The setting apart took place as a historical fact in and with his calling at Damascus. Entirely different is the mode of presenting the matter in Gal. i. 15, where ἀφορίσας με ἐκ κοιλ. μητρ. as the act of predestination in the counsel of God, is placed before the καλέσας, as the historically accomplished fact. The view of Drusius (de sectis, ii. 2, 6) and Schoettgen (comp. Erasmus and Beza), which Dr. Paulus has again adopted, viz. that Paul, in using the word ἀφορίσας, alludes to his former Pharisaism (“the true Pharisee in the best sense of the word”), is based on the Peschito translation (see Grotius), but is to be rejected, because the context gives no hint of so peculiar a reference, for which also no parallel can be found in Paul’s other writings.

Ver. 2. A more precise description of the character of this εὐαγγελίον Θεοῦ, according to its concrete peculiarity, as far as ver. 5 inclusive, advancing and rising to a climax under the urgent sense of the sacredness of his office, which the Apostle has frankly to assert and to establish before the church of the metropolis of the world, personally as yet unknown to him.—

δ προεπηγγείλατο κ.τ.λ.] How natural that the Apostle with his Old Testament training should, in the light of the New Testament revelation which he had received, first of all glance back at the connection divinely established in the history of salvation between the gospel which he served and ancient prophecy, and should see therein the sacredness of the precious gift entrusted to him! To introduce the idea of an antithetic design (“ut invidiam novitatis depelleret,” Pareus, Estius, Grotius and others, following Chrysostom and Theophylact) is quite arbitrary, looking to the general tenor of vv. 1-7. The news of salvation God has previously promised (προεπηγγείλατο, 2 Cor.
ix 5; Dio Cass. xlii. 32) through His prophets, not merely in so far as these, acting as the organs of God (αὐτῶν), foretold the Messianic age, with the dawn of which the εἰς ὑπέρλειον, as the “publicum de Christo exhibito praeconium” (Calovius), would necessarily begin, but they foretold also this praeconium itself; its future proclamation. See x. 18, xv. 21; Isa. xl. 1 ff., xlii. 4, lii. 1 ff.; Zeph. iii. 9; Ps. xix. 5, lxviii. 12; Deut. xviii. 15, 18.
It is the less necessary therefore to refer, with Philippi and Mehring, to the contents of the gospel.— τῶν προφητῶν] is not to be limited, so as either to include merely the prophets proper in the narrower sense of the word, or to go back—according to Acts
iii. 24, comp. xiii. 20—only as far as Samuel. The following ἐν γραφαῖς ἀγ. suggests, on the contrary, a reference to all who in the O. T. have prophesied the gospel (even Moses, David and others not excluded); comp. Heb. i. 1.— ἐν γραφαῖς ἀγίαις] Not: in the holy Scriptures (so most expositors, even Fritzsche), in which case the article must have been used; but qualitatively: in holy writings. The divine promises of the gospel, given through the prophets of God, are found in such books as, being God’s records for His revelations, are holy writings. Such are the prophetic writings of the O. T.; thus designated so as to lay stress on their qualitative character. In a corresponding manner is the anarthrous γραφῶν προφητικῶν to be understood in xvi. 26.

Vv. 3, 4. 1 We must, with Lachmann and Tischendorf, set aside the view which treats τοῦ γενομένου .... νεκρῶν, and vv. 5, 6, as parentheses, because we have to deal with intervening

1 Comp. Pfleiderer in Hilgenfeld’s Zeitschr. 1871, p. 502 ff.
clauses which accord with the construction, not with insertions which interrupt it. See Winer, p. 526 [E. T. 707]. — \(\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\ \tau\omicron\upsilon\ \upsilon\omicron\upsilon\ \alpha\nu\tau\omicron\upsilon\) "Hoc refertur ad illud quod praecestit \(\epsilon\upsilon\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\omicron\upsilon\); explicatur nempe, de quo agat ille sermo bona nuntians," Grotius. So, also, Toletus, Cajetanus, Calvin, Justiniani, Bengel, Flatt, Reiche, Köllner, Winzer, Baumgarten-Crusius, Krehl, Umbreit, Th Schott, Hofmann, and others. But it may be objected to this view, on the one hand, that \(\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\) is most naturally connected with the nearest suitable word that precedes it; and on the other that \(\epsilon\upsilon\alpha\gamma\gamma\), frequently as it is used with the genitive of the object, nowhere occurs with \(\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\) in the N. T.;¹ and still further, that if this connection be adopted, the important thought in ver. 2 appears strangely isolated. Therefore, the connection of \(\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\) with \(\delta\ \pi\rho\omicron\epsilon\pi\eta\gamma\gamma\) is to be preferred, with Tholuck, Klee, Rückert, Fritzsch, Reithmayr, Philippi, van Hengel, Ewald, Mehring, and others, following Theodoret; so that the great personal object is introduced, to which the divine previous promise of the gospel referred; consequently, the person concerning whom was this promise of the future message of salvation. God could not (we may remark in opposition to Hofmann's objection) have previously promised the gospel in any other way at all than by speaking of Christ His Son, who was to come and to be revealed; otherwise his \(\pi\rho\omicron\epsilon\pi\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\lambda\omicron\sigma\theta\alpha\iota\epsilon\upsilon\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\omicron\upsilon\) would have had no concrete tenor, and consequently no object. — \(\tau\omicron\upsilon\ \gamma\nu\nu\omicron\mu\omicron\upsilon\omicron\nu\) down to \(\nu\epsilon\kappa\rho\omicron\nu\) describes under a twofold aspect (\(\kappa\alpha\tint\)) the exalted dignity of Him who had just been designated by \(\tau\omicron\upsilon\ \upsilon\omicron\upsilon\ \alpha\nu\tau\omicron\upsilon\): (1) \(\kappa\alpha\tint\ \sigma\alpha\rho\alpha\kappa\), He entered life as David's descendant; (2) \(\kappa\alpha\tint\ \pi\nu\varepsilon\omicron\nu\alpha\ \acute{\alpha}\gamma\iota\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\), He was powerfully instated as Son of God by His resurrection. Nevertheless \(\delta\ \upsilon\omicron\upsilon\ \tau\omicron\upsilon\ \Theta\epsilon\omicron\omicron\), in the words \(\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\ \tau\omicron\upsilon\ \upsilon\omicron\upsilon\ \alpha\nu\tau\omicron\upsilon\) (not \(\alpha\nu\tau\omicron\upsilon\)), is not by any means to be taken in the general, merely historical theocratic sense of Messiah (Winzer, Progr. 1835, p. 5 f.; comp. also Holsten, z. Ev. d. Paul. u. Petr. p. 424; and Pfliegerer, l.c.), because this is opposed to the constant usage of the Apostle, who never designates Christ as \(\upsilon\omicron\upsilon\ \Theta\epsilon\omicron\omicron\) otherwise than from the standpoint of the knowledge which God had given to him by revelation (Gal. i. 16) of the metaphysical Sonship (viii. 3, 32; Gal. iv. 4; Col. i. 13 ff.; Phil. ii. 6 ff. al.); and the hypothesis of a modification having taken place in Paul's view (Usteri, Köllner; see, on the other hand, Rückert) is purely fanciful. Here also the υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ is conceived in the metaphysical sense as He who had proceeded out of the essence of the Father, like Him in substance (not, as Baur thinks, as organ of the Spirit, which is the purer form of human nature itself), and is sent by Him for the accomplishment of the Messianic counsel. But since it was necessary for this accomplishment that He should appear as man, it was necessary for Him,—and these essential modal definitions are now added to the υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ,—as a human phenomenon, (1) to be born κατὰ σάρκα, and indeed of the seed of David,¹ and yet (2) to be actually instated κατὰ πνεῦμα, as that which, although from the time of His birth in appearance not different from other men (Phil. ii. 7; Gal. iv. 4), He really was, namely the Son of God. These two parallel clauses are placed in asyndetic juxtaposition, whereby the second, coming after the first, which is itself of lofty and honourable Messianic significance, is brought out as of still greater importance. See Bernhardy, p. 448; Dissen. ad. Pind. Exc. II., de Asynd. p. 275. Not perceiving this, Hofmann fails to recognise the contrast here presented between the two aspects of the Son of God, because Paul has not used κατὰ πνεῦμα δὲ ὄρισθέντος in the second clause,—κατὰ σάρκα in respect of flesh; for the Son of God had a fleshly mode of being on earth, since His concrete manifestation was that of a materially human person. Comp. ix. 5; 1 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 18; Phil. ii. 7; Rom. v. 15; 1 Cor. xv. 21; 1 Tim. ii. 5. To the σάρξ belonged in the case of Christ also, as in that of all men, the ψυχή as the principle of the animal life of man; but this sensuous side of His nature was not, as in all other men, the seat and organ of sin. He was not σαρκικός (vii. 14), and ψυχικός (1 Cor. ii. 14), in the ethical sense, like all ordinary men, although, in virtue of that sensuous nature, he was capable of being tempted (Heb. ii. 18; iv. 15). Although in this way His body was a σῶμα τῆς σαρκὸς (Col. i. 22), yet He did not appear ἐν σαρκὶ ἁμαρτίας, but ἐν ὠμοίωματι σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας (Rom. viii. 2). With reference to His fleshly nature, therefore, i.e. in so far as He was a materially-human phenomenon, He was born (γενομένου, comp. Gal. iv. 4), of the seed (as descendant) of David, as was necessarily the case with the Son of God who appeared as the promised Messiah (Jer. xxiii. 5; Ps. cxxxi. 11; Matth. xxii. 42; John vii. 42; Acts xiii. 23; 2 Tim. ii. 8). In this expression, the ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυίδ is to be understood of the male line of descent going back to David (comp. Acts ii. 30, ἐκ καρποῦ τῆς σόφιας), as even the genealogical tables in Matthew and Luke give the descent of Joseph from David, not that of Mary; and Jesus Himself, in John v. 27 (see on that passage), calls Himself, in contradistinction to His Sonship of God, son of a man, in which case the correlate idea on which it is founded can only be that of fatherhood. It is, therefore, the more erroneous to refer ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυίδ to Mary (“ex semine David, i.e. ex virgine Maria,” Melanchthon; comp. also Philippi), especially since Paul nowhere (not even in viii. 3, Gal. iv. 4) indicates the view of a supernatural generation of the bodily nature of Jesus (Usteri, Lehrbegr. p. 328; Rich. 1)

¹ Hofmann erroneously thinks that Paul could not have added the object of his divine message otherwise than by \(\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\). He would have only needed to repeat the \(\epsilon\upsilon\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\omicron\upsilon\) with rhetorical emphasis, in order then to add the object in the genitive (\(\tau\omicron\upsilon\ \upsilon\omicron\upsilon\ \alpha\nu\tau\omicron\upsilon\)). Comp. Dissen. ad Dem. de cor. p. 315.

¹ But at the same time the idea of "an accommodation to the Jewish-Christian mode of conception" (Holsten, z. Ev. Paul. u. Petr. p. 427), is not to be entertained. Paul gives the two main epochs in the history of the Son of God, as they actually occurred and had been already prophetically announced.

1 In opposition to Hofmann, Weissag. u. Erfüll. II. p. 49 (comp. the Erlangen Zeitschr. 1868, 6, p. 369 ff.), who generalizes the sense of the words in such a way as to convey the meaning that Christ appeared as one belonging to the collective body which traces its descent back to David. But in fact it is simply said that Christ was born of the seed of David. The reading γενομένου (in min., and MSS. used by Augustine) is a correct gloss; and Hofmann himself grants (heil. Schriften N. T., in loc.) that γενομένου ἐκ here signifies descent by birth. And even if γενομένου be taken as meaning: who appeared, who came (comp. on Mark i. 4; Phil. ii. 7; so Ewald), still the genetic relation to the σπέρμα of David remains the same. He came καρὰ σόφρα of the seed of David, and that in no other way than through His birth. This remark holds good also against other obscure evasions to which Hofmann resorts in his Schriften. II. 1, p. 113; in his heil. Schriften N. T. he adheres substantially to his earlier view (“come of the race which called itself after David, because tracing its descent to his ancestry”). No, the σπέρμα of David is nothing else than his semen virile, out (ἐκ) of which, transmitted (comp. ἀπό, Acts xiii. 23) through the male line from γενεὰ to γενεὰ (Matth. i. 6 ff.), at length the Son of God καρὰ σόφρα—Christ, the David’s son of promise—was born. See besides, against Hofmann, Rich. Schmidt, i.e.—Because Christ was ἐκ σπέρματος of David, He might also Himself be called σπέρμα of David, in the same way as He is called in Gal. iii. 16 σπέρμα Ἀδραμύ; and He is so called Matth. i. 1. Comp. further on ἐκ σπέρματος, in the sense of fatherhood, Soph. O. C. 214: τίνος ἐστὶ σπέρματος... παρθένη.
Schmidt, Paulin. Christol. p. 140 ff.; Pfeiderer, l.c.), even apart from the fact that the Davidic descent of the mother of Jesus can by no means be established from the N. T. It is the more unjustifiable, to pronounce the metaphysical divine Sonship without virgin birth as something inconceivable (Philippi). — There now follows the other, second mode in which the Son of God who has appeared on earth is to be contemplated, viz. with reference to the spirit of holiness, which was in Him. The parallelism between κατὰ σάρκα and κατὰ πνεῦμα ἄγ., apparent even in the position of the two elements, forbids us to understand κατὰ πν. ἄγωσ τόεν τόεν ἄγωσ τόεν, as denoting the presupposition and regulative cause of the state of glorious power ascribed to the Son of God (Hofmann). In that case Paul must have used another preposition, conveying the idea on account of, perhaps διά with the accusative (comp. the διά, Phil. ii. 9), in order to express the thought which Hofmann has discovered, namely, that the holiness of His spirit, and therefore of His life, was to make His divine Sonship a state of glorious power. Regarding the view taken of ἐν δύναμις in connection with this, see the sequel. Ἀγιωσύνη, in Paul's writings as well as in the Sept. (in Greek authors and in the other writings of the N. T. it does not occur), invariably means holiness (2 Cor. vii. 1; 1 Thess. iii. 13; Ps. xcvi. 6, xcvii. 12, cxliv. 5), not sanctification (as rendered by the Vulgate, Erasmus, Castalio, and many others, including Glöckler and Schrader). So also in 2 Macc. iii. 12. The genitive is the gen. qualitatis (Hermann, ad Viger. pp. 887, 891; Kühner, Π. I. 1, p. 226), and contains the specific character of the πνεῦμα. This πνεῦμα ἄγωστόν, is, in contradistinction to the σάρξ, the other side of the being of the Son of God on earth; and, just as the σάρξ was the outward element perceptible by the senses, so is the πνεῦμα the inward mental element, the substratum of His νοῦς (1 Cor. ii. 16), the principle and the power of His inner life, the intellectual and moral "Ego" which receives the communication of the divine—in short, the ἑσω ἅθρωπος of Christ. His πνεῦμα also was human (Matth. xxvii. 50; John xi. 33, xix. 30)—altogether He was an entire man, and the Apollinarian conception is without support in the N. T. teaching—but it was the seat of the divine nature belong-

1 This opinion rests on a premiss assumed a priori, on an abstract postulate, the propriety of which it is impossible to prove. Comp. on Matth. i. 18, note.
ing to His person; not excluding the specialty of the latter (in opposition to Byschlag, Christol. pp. 212, 231), but being rather that which contained the metaphysical υἱότης Θεου, or—according to the Johannine type of doctrine—the seat and the organ of the Δόγμα, which became flesh in the human person of Jesus, as also of the fulness of the Holy Spirit which bore sway in Him (John iii. 34; Acts i. 2; 2 Cor. iii. 17). Consequently the πνεῦμα of Christ, although human (comp. Pfleiderer), was exalted above all other human spirits, because essentially filled with God, and thereby holy, sinless, and full of divine unpolluted life, as was no other human πνεῦμα; and for this reason His unique quality is characterized by the distinguishing designation πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης, i.e. spirit full of holiness. This purposely-chosen expression, which is not to be abated to the studium sanctitatis (van Hengel), must, seeing that the text sets forth the two sides of the personal nature of Christ, absolutely preclude our understanding it to refer to the πνεῦμα ἁγιον,¹ the third person of the divine Trinity, which is not meant either in 1 Tim. iii. 16, or in Heb. ix. 14. Nevertheless, the majority of commentators, since Chrysostom, have so explained it; some of them taking it to mean: “secundum Sp. S. ei divinitus conces-sum” (Fritzsche; comp. Beza, Calixtus, Wolf, Koppe, Tholuck, and others);² some referring it to the miraculous working of the Holy Spirit (Theodoret), or to the bestowal of the Spirit which took place through Christ (Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Luther, Estius, Böhme, and others). Since the contrast between σάρξ and πνεῦμα is not that between the human and the divine, but that between the bodily and the mental in human nature, we must also reject the interpretation which refers the words to the divine nature (Melanchthon, Calovius, Bengel, and many others); in which case some take ἁγιωσύνη as equivalent to θεότης (Winzer); others adduce in explanation of πνεῦμα the here irrelevant πνεῦμα ὁ Θεός, John iv. 24 (Beza, Winzer, Olshausen, Maier, Philippi); others take the expression as substantially equivalent to the Johannine λόγος (Rückert; comp. Reiche, “the principle of His higher essence”), and thus have not avoided an Apollinarian conception. The correct interpretation is substantially given by Köllner, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Ewald (also in his Jahrb. 1849, p. 93), and Mehring. Comp. Hofmann (“spirit which supposes, wherever it is, a condition of holiness”), and also Lechler, apost. u. nachapost. Zeitalt. p. 49, who nevertheless understands the divine nature of Christ as also included.¹ — ὅρισθεντος] The translation of the Vulgate, qui praedestinatus est, based on the too weakly attested reading προορισθεντος (a mistaken gloss), drew forth from old writers (see in Estius) forced explanations, which are now properly forgotten. Ὁρίζειν, however, with the double accusative, means to designate a person for something, to nominate, to instate (Acts x. 42; comp. Meleager in the Anthol. xii. 158, 7: σὲ θεὸν ὅρισε δαίμων), nor is the meaning different here.² For although Christ was already the Son of God before the creation of the world, and as such was sent (viii. 3; Gal. iv. 4), nevertheless there was needed a fact, by means of which He should receive, after the humiliation that began with His birth (Phil. ii. 7 f.), instating into the rank and dignity of His divine Sonship; whereby also, as its necessary consequence with a view to the knowledge and conviction of men, He was legitimately established as the Son. The fact which constituted instatement was the resurrection, as the transition to His δόξα; comp. on Acts xiii. 33; and ἐκκοιμήσει in Acts ii. 36. Inaccurate, because it confounds that consequence with the thing itself, is the gloss of Chrysostom: δεικθέντως, ἀποφανθέντως, καθθέντως; and that of Luther: “shewn.” Umbreit’s rendering is erroneous: “separated,” namely from all men. — ἐν δυνάμει] Not: through omnipotence (Umbreit), but: mightily (Luther), forcibly; for this installation of the Son of God as Son of God was a work of divine power, which (see what follows) was accomplished by means of the resurrection from the dead. Thus commanding power, divinely-energetic and effectual, forms the characteristic quality, in which the ὁρισμός took place. On ἐν, as paraphrase of the adverb (Col. i. 29; 2 Thess. i. 11), see Bernhardy, p. 209. ἐν δύναμις is not, with Melanchton, Schottgen, Pareus, Sebastian Schmid, and others, including Paulus, Baugarten-Crusius, Philippi, Mehring, Holsten, Hofmann, and Pfleiderer, to be connected with νίκος Θεοῦ (as the mightily powerful Son of God); for it was here of importance to dwell, not on a special predicate of the Son of God, but, in contradistinction to the ἐκ περιμ. Ναυ. κατά αὐρακα, upon the divine Sonship in itself; of which Sonship He was indeed the hereditary possessor, but yet needed, in order to become instated in it with glorious power, resurrection from the dead. Thus, however, ἐν δυνάμει, even when rightly connected with ὁρισθείσα, is not, with Chrysostom and Theophylact, to be taken as “per virtutem, i.e. per signa et prodigia” (Calovius, comp. Grotius); nor with Fritzsche: vi ei datē; for Paul himself defines the how of the mighty ὁρισμός by: eκ ἀναστ. νεκρῶν. This, namely, was the causal fact, by virtue of which that ὁρισμός was accomplished; for by the resurrection of Christ, God, who raised Him up (comp. 2 Cor. xiii. 4), accomplished in point of fact His instating declaration: Thou art my Son, this day, etc., Acts xiii. 33. Paul might accordingly have written διά, but ἐκ is more expressive of the thought that Christ in virtue of the resurrection, etc. On ἐκ, used of causal issuing forth, see Buttmann’s neut. Gr. p. 281; Ellendt, Lex.

¹ This is called in the Test. XII. Patr. p. 588, πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης, in so far as it produces holiness.

² Comp. also Zeller in the theol. Jahrb. 1842, p. 486. In his view (2 Cor. iii. 17), the πνεῦμα is the element of which the higher personality of Christ consists. According to Baur, Paulus II. p. 375, it is the Messianic spirit, the intrinsic principle constituting the Messiahship of Christ. According to Holsten, z. Ev. d. Paul. u. Petr. p. 425, it is in itself a transcendent pneumatic force, which produces the ἁγιωσύνη, a radiance of the divine πνεῦμα ἁγιον.

¹ A more accurate and precise definition of the idea may be found in Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 313; also Rich. Schmidt, p. 105 f.; Pfeiferer in Hilgenfeld’s Zeitschr. 1871, p. 169, 503 f.

² But not in the sense: destined to become something, as Hofmann thinks; nor generally, in the sense: qui destinatus est, but rather: qui constitutus est (was instated). For otherwise the aorist participle would be unsuitable, since it must necessarily indicate an act following the ἐκκοιμήσει, etc.; whereas the divine destination would be prior to the birth. Consequently, were that sense intended, it must have been, as in Acts x. 42, ὅρισθεντος.

1 As if only a change of His attributes was concerned, or the transition into the full reality of the divine Sonship (Pfleiderer). The question concerned the installation of the Son of God as such, as it were His enthronisation, which had not taken place previously, but was accomplished by the resurrection with a mighty power. By means of the latter He received—as the Son of God, which from the beginning and even in the days of His flesh He really was—a de facto instatement, which accomplished itself in a way divinely powerful. What accrued to Him thereby, was not the full reality (see viii. 3; Gal. iv. 4), but the full efficiency of the Son of God; because He was now exalted above all the limitations of the state of His κληρον (Phil. ii; 2 Cor. viii. 9); comp. e.g. vi. 9; xi. 33 f.; v. 10; 2 Cor. xiii. 4; and numerous other passages. The Son was now the κύριος πάντων, had the name above every name, etc, etc.
Soph. I. p. 550 f. The temporal explanation, since or after (Theodoret, Erasmus, Luther, Toletus, and others, including Reithmayr; comp. Flatt, Umbreit, and Mehring), is to be rejected, because the raising up of Jesus from the dead was itself the great divine act, which, completed through the majesty of the Father (vi. 4), powerfully instated the Son in the Son's position and dignities; hence it was also the basis of the apostolic preaching, Acts i. 22, ii. 24 ff., xiii. 30, xvii. 31 f., xxvi. 23; Rom. iv. 24; 1 Cor. xv. 3 ff. We are not to take the expression ἡ αναστ. ἐκρ., as is often done, for ἡ ἀναστ. ἐκ ἐκρ., the second ἐκ being omitted for the sake of euphony: but it must be viewed as a general designation of the category (ἐκρ. ἐκατόρ., see on Matth. ii. 20): through resurrection of the dead, of which category the personal rising of the dead Jesus was the concrete case in point. Comp. xvii. 32. So, also, de Wette, Hofmann; comp. Philippi, who however, following Erasmus and Bengel, introduces also the idea, foreign to this passage, that our resurrection is involved in that of Christ.— The following Ἰησ. Χριστ. ἐν ἐκατ. is in apposition to τοῦ νεκροῦ ανωτός in v. 3; not necessary in itself, but in keeping with the fulness of expression throughout this opening portion of the Epistle, which exhibits a character of majesty particularly in vv. 3, 4. — Observe, further, that the exhibition of the holy and exalted nature of Christ in our passage serves to express the high dignity of the apostolic office. Of diversities in faith and doctrine in Rome regarding the person of Christ there is not a trace in the whole Epistle.¹

Ver. 5. To the general τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, which designates Christ as the Lord of Christians in general, Paul now adds the special relation in which he himself stands to this common κύριος. He entertained too lively a consciousness of the bliss and dignity of that relationship, not to set it forth once more (comp. ver. 1) in this overflowing salutation; this time, however, with closer reference to the readers, in accordance with his definite character as Apostle of the Gentiles. — Vv. 5, 6 are not to be enclosed in a parenthesis; and only a comma should be placed after ver. 6. — δι’ ὃν through whom, denotes nothing else than the medium; nowhere, not even in Gal. i. 1, the causa principalis. The view of the Apostle is, as Origen rightly perceived, that he had received grace and apostleship through the mediation of Christ, through whom God called him at Damascus. Regarding Gal. i. 1, see on that passage. — Ἀδέσποτες] He means himself alone, especially since in the address he specifies no joint author of the letter; not however—as Reiche, following Estius and many others, thinks—using the plural out of modesty (in the solemnity of an official epistolary greeting?), but rather (comp. iii. 9) in accordance with the custom, very common among Greek authors, of speaking of themselves in the plural of category (Krüger, § 61, 2; Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 2, 46). This is, no doubt, to be traced back to the conception “I and my equals;” but this original conception was in course of use entirely lost. The opinion, therefore, that Paul here includes along with himself the other apostles (Bengel, van Hengel) is to be all the more rejected as unsuitable, since the subsequent ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ξύνεσι points to Paul himself alone as the Apostle of the Gentiles. To understand Paul’s official assistants as included (Hofmann) is forbidden by the subsequent ἀποστολὴν, which does not mean mission in general, but, as invariably in the N. T., specially apostleship. — χάριν κ. ἀποστολὴν grace (generally) and (in particular) apostleship. χάριν is to be understood, not merely of pardoning grace (Augustine, Calvin, Calovius, Reiche, Tholuck, Olshausen, and others), or of the extraordinary apostolic gifts of grace (Theodoret, Luther, and others, including Flatt and Mehring); for such special references must be demanded by the context; but on the contrary generally of the entire divine grace, of which Paul was made partaker through Christ, when he was arrested by Him at Damascus in his career which was hateful to God (Phil. iii. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 10), converted, enlightened (Gal. i. 16), and transferred into the communion of God’s beloved ones and saints. The special object (Gal. i. 16) and at the same time the highest evidence of this χάρις which he had received, was his reception of the ἀποστολὴν,1 and that for the Gentile world. Others find here a ἐν διὰ δύοιν (Chrysostom, Beza, Piscator, Grotius, Glass, Rich. Simon, Wetstein, Semler, Koppe, Böhme, Fritzsche, Philippi, and others): χάριν ἀποστολὴν. This might certainly be justified in linguistic usage by the explicative καί (Fritzsche, ad Matth. p. 856; Nagelsbach, z. Ilias, iii. 100); but it arbitrarily converts two elements, which taken separately yield a highly appropriate sense, into one, and fails to recognise—what is involved in the union of the general and the particular—the fulness and force of the discourse moving the grateful heart. This remark applies also against Hofmann, according to whom the Apostle terms one and the same vocation "a grace and a mission;" in which view ἀποστ. is erroneously rendered (see above), and in consequence thereof εἰς ἐνακ. Π. is then joined merely to χάρ. κ. ἀπ., and not also to ἐλαβ. — εἰς ἐνακ. πίστ.] Object of the ἐλαβ. χάρ. κ. ἀποστ.: in order that obedience of faith may be produced, i.e. in order that people may subject themselves to the faith, in order that they may become believing. Comp. xvi. 26; Acts vi. 7; 2 Cor. x. 5 f.; 2 Thess. i. 8. To take πίστις for doctrina fidei (Beza, Toletus, Estius, Bengel, Heumann, Cramer, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Fritzsche, Tholuck, and others), is altogether contrary to the linguistic usage of the N. T., in which πίστις is always subjective faith, although often, as in the present instance, conceived of objectively, as a power. Comp. xvi. 26; Gal. i. 23. The activity of faith in producing works (Reithmayr), however, is not contained in the expression. The πίστις is, according to Paul, the conviction and confidence (assensus and fiducia) regarding Jesus Christ, as the only and perfect Mediator of the divine grace, and of eternal life, through His work of atonement. Faith alone (to the exclusion of works) is the causa apprehendens of the salvation promised and obtained through Christ; but, because it transfers us into living and devoted fellowship with Him, altogether of a moral character, it becomes the subjective moral power of the new life regenerated through the power of the Holy Spirit—of the life in Christ, which, however, is the necessary consequence, and never the ground of justification. See Luther's Preface. — The genitive πίστεως, in accordance with the analogy of the expressions kindred in meaning ὑπακοὴ τοῦ Χριστοῦ in 2 Cor. x. 5, and ὑπακ. τῆς ἀληθείας in 1 Pet. i. 22, necessarily presents itself (comp. Acts vi. 7; Rom. x. 16; 2 Thess. i. 8; also 2 Cor. ix. 13) as denoting that to which the obedience is rendered; not (Grotius, following Beza) the causa efficien: "ut Deo obedientur per fidem," in which explanation, besides, the "Deo"

1 Augustine aptly remarks: “Gratiam cum omnibus fidelibus, apostolatum autem non cum omnibus communem habet.” Comp. Bengel: “Gratia et singularis gratiae mensura apostolis obtigit.”
is arbitrarily introduced. Hofmann is also wrong in taking the genitive πίστεως as epexegetical (an obedience consisting in faith). — ἐν τῷ θρόνῳ τοῖς ἔθνεσιν is to be joined with εἰς ὑπακ. πίστεως, beside which it stands; the ἔθνη, however, are not all nations generally, inclusive of the Jews (so most expositors, including Rückert, Reiche, Köllner, Fritzche, Baur), but, in accordance with the historical destination of the Apostle (Gal. i. 16; Acts ix. 15, xxvi. 17 f.), and in consequence of the repeated prominence of his calling as Gentile Apostle in our letter (ver. 13, xi. 13, xv. 16), all Gentile nations, to which also the Romans belonged (Beza, Tholuck, Philippi, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, van Hengel, Ewald, Hofmann and others); and these regarded not from a geographical point of view (Mangold, p. 76), but from a popular one, as ἔθνη; which precludes us from thinking—not as to a section, but at any rate as to the mass, of the Roman congregation—that it was Jewish-Christian. This his apostolic calling for the Gentiles is meant by Paul in all passages where he describes the ἔθνη as the object of his labours (Gal. i. 16, ii. 2, 8, 9; Eph. iii. 1, 8; Col. i. 27; 1 Thess. ii. 16). — ὑπέρ τοῦ ὑπάτου ἀντιούμενον belongs, in the most natural connection, not to ἀλαβάστρον, ἀποστ. (Rückert) or to δι᾽ οὗ ἔθεσεν (de Wette, Mehring, Hofmann), but to εἰς ὑπακοὴν ἔθνεσιν; "in order to produce obedience to the faith among all Gentile nations for the sake of (for the glorifying of, comp. Acts v. 41; Phil. ii. 13) His name." Acts ix. 15, xv. 26, xxi. 13; 2 Thess. i. 12, serve to illustrate the matter referred to. The idea of wishing to exclude the glorifying of his own name (Hofmann) is not for a moment to be imputed to the Apostle. He would have needed a very special motive for doing so.

Ver. 6. Application of the contents of ver. 5 to the relation in which the Apostle stood to his readers, whereby he indicates how he is officially entitled to address them also, teaching, exhorting, and so forth — ἐν οἷς ἐστε καὶ ὑμεῖς καὶ ἡγεῖται Ἰ. X.] To be written thus, without a comma after ὑμεῖς, with Heu-

1 So also van Hengel, on the ground of passages like v. 19; Phil. ii. 12, where however the sense of obedience to God results from the context; and Ernesti, Ueber d. Sünde, II. p. 281 ff., who urges against our view that it makes ὑπέρ τοῦ ὑπάτου superfluous. But the glory of Christ is precisely the lofty end of all ὑπακοήν τῷ πίστει. Where it takes place, it is acknowledged that Jesus Christ is Lord, Phil. ii. 11.
mann, Lachmann, Tischendorf, de Wette, Hofmann, and Bisping: among whom also are ye called (ones) of Jesus Christ. Among the Gentile nations the Roman Christians were, like other Gentile-Christian churches, called of the Lord; amidst the Gentile world, nationally belonging to it (in opposition to Mangold's mere geographical interpretation), they also shared this high distinction. The reference of the καί to Paul (Th. Schott), and consequently the interpretation: as I, so also ye, is erroneous, because the Apostle has asserted concerning himself something far higher than the mere Christian calling. The common interpretation of κλητοί Ἡ. X. as an address (so too Rückert, Fritzscbe, Philippi, van Hengel, Mehring) makes the ἐν δόξῃ ἐστε κ. ὑμ. quite a meaningless assertion; for Bengel's suggestion for meeting the difficulty, that ἐν δόξῃ has the implied meaning: among which converted nations, is purely arbitrary.— Since the calling (to the Messianic salvation; see on Gal. i. 6; also 1 Cor. vii. 17) is invariably ascribed by Paul to God (viii. 30, ix. 24; 1 Cor. i. 9, vii. 15, 17; 1 Thess. ii. 12; 2 Thess. ii. 14; comp. Usteri, p. 281; Weiss, bibl. Theol. § 127; what Schmidt urges in opposition, in Rudelbach's Zeitschr. 1849, II. p. 188 ff. is untenable) we must explain it, not as: called by Christ (Luther, Rückert, Mehring, Hofmann, and others), but as: called (by God) who belong to Christ (so Erasmus, Beza, Estius, and most modern commentators, also Winer, p. 183). The genitive is possessive, just as in the analogous τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς αὐτοῦ in Matth. xxiv. 31. With the substantive nature of κλητοί (comp. Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 147) the genitive by no means admits merely the interpretation which points to the calling subject, as in 2 Sam. xv 11; 1 Kings i. 41, 49; Zeph. i. 7; but admits of very different references, as e.g. in Homer, Od. xvii. 386, κλητοί γε βροτῶν are not those called by mortals, but those who are called among mortals (genitive totius).

Ver. 7. Now for the first time, brought by ver. 6 nearer to his readers, Paul passes from the throng of the great intervening thoughts, ver. 2 ff., in which he has given full and conscious expression to the nature and the dignity of his calling, to the formal address and to the apostolic salutation.— πᾶσι κ.τ.λ.] directs the letter to all beloved of God who are in Rome, etc., and therefore to the collective Roman Christian church, Phil. i. 1; Eph. i. 1;
Col. i. 1), but not, as Tholuck thinks (comp. Turretin, Wolf, and Böhme), at the same time also to those foreign Christians who were accidentally staying in Rome, for against this view ver. 8, in which ἵππῳ πάντως ὑμῶν can only refer to the Romans, is decisive. The πᾶντι would be self-obvious and might have been dispensed with, but in this Epistle, just because it is so detailed and is addressed to a great church still far away from the Apostle, πᾶντι carries with it a certain diplomatic character. Similarly, though from other grounds, Phil. i. 1. — ἀγαπητή Θεοῦ, καλητῶν ἄγιοιν] Characteristic special analysis of the idea “Christians” in accordance with the high privileges of their Christian condition. For, as reconciled with God through Christ, they are beloved of God (v. 5 ff., viii. 39; Col. iii. 12); and, as those who through the divine calling to the Messianic salvation have become separated from the κόσμος and consecrated to God, because members of the new covenant of grace, they are called saints; comp. 1 Cor. i. 2. This saintship is produced through the justification of the called (viii. 30), and their accompanying subjection to the influence of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. i. 30). De Wette erroneously interprets: “those who are called to be saints.” So also Baumgarten-Crusius. The calling always refers to the salvation of the Messiah’s kingdom. But that the ἀγιότης is to be understood in that Christian theocratic sense after the analogy of the Old Testament שור, and not of individual moral holiness (Pareus, Toletus, Estius, Grotius, Flatt, Glöckler, de Wette, and others), is plain from the very fact, that all Christians as Christians are ἅγιοι. — χάρις . . . εἰρήνην] See Otto, in the Jahrb. f. d. Theol. 1867, p. 678 ff. Χάρις is the disposition, the subjective feeling in God and Christ, which the Apostle wishes to be entertained towards and shown to his readers; εἰρήνη is the actual result, which is produced through the manifestation of the χάρις: grace and salvation (Diaph), the latter in every aspect in which it presents itself as the Christian issue of the χάρις. Comp. Melancthon. The

1 With these parallels before us, it is unreasonable to ask why Paul does not designate the readers as a church. Bengel and van Hengel are of opinion that no regular congregational bond was as yet in existence. Th. Schott thinks that Paul as yet stood in no relation whatever to the church. The ἔστες ἢ Ρώμη κ.τ.λ. are the church, and it is to the churches that he has written where he does not write to specified persons.
specifically Christian element in this salutation\(^1\) lies in ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς .... Χριστοῦ. Comp. 1 Cor. i. 3; 2 Cor. i. 2; Eph. i. 2; Phil. i. 2; 1 Thess. i. 1; 2 Thess. i. 1 f.; 1 Tim. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 2; Tit. i. 4; Phil. 3. The special rendering of εἰρήνη, peace, which, following Chrysostom and Jerome, the majority, including Reiche, Olshausen, Tholuck, Philippi; Umbreit and others retain (the higher peace which is given, not by the world, but by the consciousness of divine grace and love, see especially Umbreit, p. 190 ff.), must be abandoned, because χάρις καὶ εἰρήνη represent the general epistolary χαίρειν (Acts xv. 23; James i. 1), and thus the generality of the salutation is expressed in a way characteristically Christian. — πατρὸς ἡμῶν means God, in so far as we, as Christians, are His children through the υἱοθεσία (see on Gal. iv. 5; Rom. viii. 15). — καὶ κυρίου] i.e. καὶ ἀπὸ κυρίου, not, as Glöckler, following Erasmus, takes it, "and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," for against this view stands the decisive fact that God is never called our and Christ's Father; see also Tit. i. 4; 2 Tim. i. 2. The formal equalisation of God and Christ cannot be certainly used as a proof (as Philippi and Mehring contend) of the divine nature of Christ—which, however, is otherwise firmly enough maintained by Paul—since the different predicates πατρὸς and κυρίου imply the different conceptions of the causa principalis and mediāns. For this purpose different prepositions were not required; comp. on Gal. i. 1.

Vv. 8-15. First of all the Apostle now—as under various forms in all his epistles, with the exception of that to the Galatians (also not in 1 Timothy and Titus)—expresses with thanksgiving towards God his pious joy at the faith of his readers; and then assures them of his longing to be with them and to labour among them personally. The thanksgiving is short, for it relates to a church not only personally unknown to him, but also far removed from the sphere of labour which he had hitherto occupied; but the expression of it is in accordance with the position of the church in the metropolis of the world.

Ver. 8. Πρὸς τὸν μεν] To that, which Paul desires first of all to write, there was meant to be subjoined something further, possibly by ἐπειτα ἤ. But, amidst the ideas that now crowd upon him, he abandons this design, and thus the μέν remains alone. Comp. iii. 2; and on Acts i. 1; 1 Cor. xi. 18; Schaefer, ad Dem. IV. p. 142; Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 410. — τῷ Θεῷ μου] οὗ εἰμὶ, ὃ καὶ λατρεύω, Acts xxvii. 23; comp. 1 Cor. i. 4; Phil. i. 3, iv. 19; Philem. 4. — διὰ Ἡρόν Χριστοῦ] These words—to be connected with εὐχαριστῶ, not with μου, as Koppe and Glöckler think, against which vii. 25 and Col. iii. 17 are clearly decisive—contain the mediation, through which the εὐχαριστῶ takes place. The Apostle gives thanks not on his own part and independently of Christ, not διὰ εαυτοῦ, but is conscious of his thanksgiving being conveyed through Jesus Christ, as one who is present to his grateful thoughts; in so far, namely, as that for which he thanks God is vividly perceived and felt by him to have been brought about through Christ. Comp. on Col. iii. 17; Eph. v. 20. Thus Christ is the mediating causal agent of the thanksgiving. To regard Him as its mediating presenter (Orig., Theophylact, Bengel, and others, including Hofmann) cannot be justified from Paul's other writings, nor even by Heb. xiii. 15. Theodore of Mopsuestia well observes: τοῦ Χριστοῦ ταύτῃ ἡμῖν τῆς εὐχαριστίας τὴν αἰτίαν παρασχομένου. — ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν] quite simply: your faith (on Christ); the praiseworthy character of the πίστις is only set forth by the context (καταγγέλλα, ἐν δλῳ τ. κ.) afterwards. Everywhere one hears your faith openly spoken of. Comp. xvi. 19. Observe how this flattering expression of the Apostle and the thanksgiving coupled with it, as also the στηριχθηναι κ.τ.λ., in vv. 11, 12, point to the church not as Jewish-Christian but as Pauline. Mangold's reference to Phil. i. 15-18, in opposition to this inference, leaves out of view the quite different personal situation under which the latter was written. Comp. on Phil. i. 18, note. — ἐν δλῳ τ. κόσμῳ] a popular hyperbole, but how accordant with the position of the church in that city, towards which the eyes of the whole world were turned! Comp. 1 Thess. i. 8. It is, moreover, obvious of itself, that the subjects of the καταγγέλλειν are the believers. As to the unbelievers, see Acts xxviii. 22.

\(^1\) Regarding Otto's attempted derivation of it from the Aaronic benediction, see on 1 Cor. i. 3.

Ver. 9. Γὰρ] The pith of the following proof of the assurance conveyed in ver. 8 lies in ἀδιαλείπτως, not in the desire to come to Rome, which is not subjoined till ver. 10 (Th. Schott). The interest felt by the Apostle in the Romans, which was so vivid that he unceasingly remembered them, etc., had even now urged him to his eυχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ κ.τ.λ. — μάρτυς ... Θεός] The asseveration in the form of an oath (comp. 2 Cor. i. 23, xi. 31; Phil. i. 8) is intended solemnly to strengthen the impression of what he has to say; viewed with reference to the circumstance which might readily excite surprise, that he, the Apostle of the Gentiles, had never yet laboured in the church—which nevertheless was The hypothesis of "iniquos rumores," that had reached his ears from Rome (van Hengel), is unnecessary and unsupported by any trace in the letter. — ὁ λατρεύω κ.τ.λ.] added to strengthen the asseveration with respect to its sacred conscientiousness: to whom I render holy service in my spirit, i.e. in my moral self-consciousness, which is the living inner sphere of that service.¹
This ἕν τῷ πν. μου, on which lies the practical stress of the relative clause, excludes indeed all λατρεύειν of a merely external kind, exercising itself in works, or even impure; but is not intended to suggest a definite contrast to this, which would here be without due motive. It is rather the involuntary expression of the profoundly vivid feeling of inward experience. The Apostle knows and feels that the depths of his innermost life are pervaded by his λατρεύειν. Comp. ὁ λατρεύω .... ἐν καθαρᾷ συνειδώσει, in 2
Tim. i. 3; also Heb. xii. 28. Τὸ πνεύμα μου cannot be the Holy Spirit (Theodoret),² but Paul bore the witness of that Spirit in his own spirit (viii. 16; ix. 1.) — ἕν τῷ εὐαγγ. τ. νοῦν αὐτοῦ] in the gospel of His Son, which I preach, defend, etc. That is the great sphere to which He is called in the service of God, in the consciousness of which he is impelled by an inward necessity to devote to his readers that fervent sympathy of which he assures them. Grotius and Reiche think there is an implied contrast to the λατρεία ἐν τῷ νόμῳ, which however is quite foreign to the connection. Can we think of a side-glance at the Jewish style of teaching—when the discourse breathes only love and warmth of affection? — ὡς ἄνδαλ.] ὡς does not stand for ὅτι (as following the Vulgate, the majority, including Fritzsche, think), but ex-

¹ Comp. Ernesti, Urspr. d. Sünde, II. p. 89 f.; see also on John iv. 23.
² Holsten also (z. Ev. d. Paul. u. Petr. p. 386) understands it of the Holy Spirit as bestowed on the Apostle (μου). See, against this view, Rich. Schmidt, presses the manner (the degree). God is my witness, how unceasingly, etc. Comp. Phil. i. 8; 2 Cor. vii. 15; 1 Thess. ii. 10; Acts x. 28; Calvin; Philippi; van Hengel; see also Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 1000. The idea of modality must be everywhere retained, where Ὄς takes the place of ὅτι. See the passages in Heindorf, ad Plat. Hipp. maj. p. 281, Jacobs. ad Ach. Tat. p. 566. — μν. ἵμων.] make mention of you, viz. in my prayers. See ver. 10. Comp. Eph. i. 16; Phil. i. 3; 1 Thess. i. 2.

Ver. 10. Πάντοτε . . . δεῖμενος] annexes to Ὄς ᾧδικα the more precise definition: in that (so that) I always (each time) in my prayers request. ἐπί, which is to be referred to the idea of definition of time (Bernhardy p. 246), indicates the form of action which takes place. Comp. 1 Thess. i. 2; Eph. i. 16; Phil. iv. 4; Winer, p. 352 [E.T.470]. — εἴπως ἥδη ποτέ] if perhaps at length on some occasion. For examples of ἥδη, already (Baeumlein, Part. p. 138 ff.), which, comparing another time with the present, conveys by the reference to something long hoped for but delayed the idea at length, see Hartung, Partikel. I. p. 238; Klotz, ad Devar. p. 607; comp. Phil. iv. 10, and the passages in Kypke. Th. Schott incorrectly renders πάντοτε, under all circumstances, which it never means, and ἥδη πότε as if it were ἥδη νῦν or ἅρτη. The mode of expression by εἴπως implies somewhat of modest fear, arising from the thought of possible hindrances.1 — εὐδοκῶθησομαι. I shall have the good fortune. The active εὐδοκῶ is seldom used in its proper signification, to lead well, expeditum iter praebere, as in Soph. O. C. 1437; Theophr. de caus. pl. v. 6, 7; LXX. Gen. xxiv. 27, 48; the passive, however, never means via recta incidere, expeditum iter habere, but invariably (even in Prov. xvii. 8) metaphorically: prospero successu gaudere. See Herod. vi. 73; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; 3 John 2; LXX. 2 Chron. xiii. 12; Ps. i. 3, and frequently; Ecclus. xi. 16, xli. 1; Tob. iv. 19, v. 16; Test. XII. Patr. p. 684. Therefore the explanation of a prosperous journey, which besides amounts only to an accessory modal idea (Beza, Estius, Wolf, and many others following the Vulgate and Oecumenius; including van Hengel and Hofmann), must be rejected, and not combined with ours (Umbreit). — εἴ τῷ θελ. τ. Θεοῦ] in virtue of the will of God; on this will the εὐδοκῶ causally depend.

Ver. 11. Ἐπὶ ποθέσοι not vale cupio, but denoting the direction of the longing. Comp. on 2 Cor. v. 2; Phil. i. 8.— χάρισμα πνευματικόν] Paul calls that, which he intends to communicate to the Romans through his longed-for personal presence among them (ἴδειν; comp. Acts xix. 21, xxvii. 20) a spiritual gift of grace; because in his apprehension all such instruction, comfort, joy, strengthening, etc., as are produced by means of his labours, are regarded not as procured by his own human individuality, but as a result which the πνεῦμα ἅγιον works by means of him—the gracious working of the Spirit, whose organ he is. While it was highly arbitrary in Toletus, Bengel, Michaelis and others to refer the expression to the apostolic miraculous gifts—against which the εὐαγγελίζεσθαι in ver. 15 is conclusive—it was a very gratuitous weakening of its force to explain it (as is done by Morus, Rosenmüller, Kölner, Maier, Th. Schott) as a gift referring to the (human) spirit; “a gift for the inner life,” Hofmann. In such an interpretation the specifically Christian point of view (1 Cor. xii. 4; comp. εἰλογία πνευματική, Eph. i. 3) is left out of account; besides, πνευματικά would imply nothing characteristic in that case; for that Paul did not desire to communicate any gifts of another sort, e.g. external, would be taken for granted.— The expression τι . . . Χ. is modest (μεταγενέσθαι, Oecumenius). Note also the arrangement by which the words are made to stand apart, and this delicate τι, the substantial χάρισμα, and the qualifying πνευματικόν, are brought into the more special prominence.1— εἰς τὸ στήρ. ὑμᾶς] Object of the intended communication of such a gift; that ye may be established, namely, in the Christian character and life. See ver. 12; comp. Acts xvi. 5; Rom. xvi. 25; 1 Thess. iii. 2. The στήριζει is conceived as being divinely wrought by means of the Spirit, hence the passive expression; it was to be accomplished however, as Paul hoped, through him as the instrument of the Spirit. Mangold, p. 82, has, without any ground in the text, assumed that this establishment has reference to “their abandoning their Jewish-Christian scruples regarding the mission to the Gentiles,” whereas ver. 12 rather testifies to the Pauline Christianity of the Romans. This remark applies also against Sabatier, p. 166, who understands “une conception de l’évangile de Jésus plus large et plus spirituelle."

1 Comp. xi. 14; and on Phil. iii. 11; 1 Macc. iv. 10.

1 On μεταγενέσθαι τινι (instead of τινι πνεον), comp. 1 Thess. ii. 8; Tob. vii. 9; 2 Macc. i. 35. So sometimes, although seldom, in classic authors, Herod. viii. 5, ix. 34; Xen. Anab. iv. 5, 5; Schaef. Melit. p. 21; Kühner, II. i. p. 295.

Ver. 12. Τούτο δὲ ἐστὶ This, however, which I have just designated as my longing (namely, ἰδεῖν ύμᾶς, ἵνα ... στηριχθ. ύμᾶς) means, thereby I intend to say nothing else than, etc. By this modifying explanation, subjoined with humility, and expressed in a delicate complimentary manner (Erasmus puts the matter too strongly, “ pia vafrities et sancta adulatio”), Paul guards himself, in presence of a church to which he was still a stranger, from the possible appearance of presumption and of forming too low an estimate of the Christian standpoint of his readers.¹ — συμπαρακληθῆναι] must be understood not, with the Peschito, Vulgate, Valla, Erasmus, Luther, Piscator, de Dieu, and many others, including Koppe and Ewald, in the sense of comfort or of refreshment (Castalio, Grotius, Cramer, Rosenmüller, Böhme)— which it would be necessary that the context should call for, as in 1 Thess. iii. 2; 2 Thess. ii. 17, but which it here forbids by the general ἰδεῖν ύμᾶς, ἵνα κ.τ.λ.— but in the quite general sense of Christian encouragement and quickening. The συμ.— however is not to be explained by ύμᾶς καὶ ἐμαυτόν; on the contrary, the ἐν ύμῖν renders it necessary that Paul alone should be conceived as the subject of συμπαρακληθῆναι. He desires to be quickened among the Romans (ἐν ύμῖν) at the same time with them, and this by the faith common to both, theirs and his, which should mutually act and react in the way of the Christian sympathy that is based on specific harmony of faith. That the readers are not the subject of the συμπαρακλῆ. (Fritzsche, van Hengel) is certain from ἐν ύμῖν, which, if it meant in animis vestris (van Hengel), would be a perfectly superfluous addition.— The compound συμπαρακλῆ occurs only here in the N. T., and is not found in the LXX. or Apocr.; but see Plat. Rep. p. 555 A; and Polyb. v. 83, 3. — ἦ ἐν ἄλληλοις πίστις, more significant of the ¹ The delicate turn which he gives to the matter is this: “to see you, in order that I,” etc., means nothing more than “to be quickened along with and among you,” etc. Consequently συμπαρακλῆ is parallel to the ἰδεῖν; for both infinitives must have the same subject. If συμπαρακλ. κ.τ.λ. had been meant to be merely a delicate explanation of στηριχθηθαί ύμᾶς (the usual exposition after Chrysostom), then τούτο must necessarily have been added to συμπαρακλ. Grotius aptly says: “συμπαρακλ. regitur ab ἐπιθοῦς.” The true interpretation is given also by Bengel and Th. Schott; comp. Olshausen, Ewald, and Hofmann, who erroneously imputes to me the common view.

hearty character of the faith than ἡ ἀλληλων πίστις, is the faith of both viewed in its mutual identity, so that the faith which lives in the one lives also in the other.— ἡμῶν τε καὶ ἐμοί placed in this order with delicate tact.

Ver. 13. My longing towards you has often awakened in me the purpose of coming to you, in order also among you etc. Paul might have placed a καὶ before προεθ., but was not obliged to do so (in opposition to Hofmann's objection); and he has not put it, because he did not think of it. The discourse proceeds from the desire (ver. 11) to the purpose, which is coming nearer to realisation. Hence it is the less necessary to transfer the weight of the thought in ver. 13 to the clause expressive of purpose (Mangold).— οὗ θέλω δὲ ἡμ. ἄγν.] The Apostle lays stress on this communication. Comp. on xi. 25. The δὲ is the simple μεταβατικόν.— καὶ ἐκαλ. ἄξιοι τοῦ δεῦρο] is a parenthesis separated from the structure of the sentence, so that ᾧ attaches itself to προεθ. ἐλαθ. πρ. ἡμ. The καὶ, however, is not to be taken as adversative, as Köllner still thinks (see, in opposition to this, Fritzsche), but as the simple and marking the sequence of thought, which here (comp. John xvii. 10) intervenes parenthetically. For the view which makes it still dependent on ὅτι, so that it introduces the second part of what the readers are to know (Hofmann), is precluded by the following clause of purpose, which can only apply to that resolution so often formed.— δεῦρο] used only here in the N. T. as a particle of time, but more frequently in Plato and later authors; see Wetstein. That by which Paul had been hitherto hindered, may be seen in xv. 22; consequently it was neither by the devil (1 Thess. ii. 18) nor by the Holy Spirit (Acts xvi. 6 f.). Grotius aptly observes (comp. xv. 22): "Magis urgebat necessitas locorum, in quibus Christus erat ignotus."— ὅνα τίνα καρπόν κ.τ.λ.] is entirely parallel in sense with ὅνα τί μεταδῶ κ.τ.λ. in ver. 11, and it is a gratuitous refining on the figurative καρπόν to find specially indicated here the conversion of unbelievers beyond the range which the church had hitherto embraced (Hofmann); comp. also Th. Schott, and even Mangold, who takes the Apostle as announcing his desire to take in hand the Gentile mission also among his readers, so that the καρπός would be Gentiles to be converted. No; by καρπὸν Paul, with a complimentary egotism flattering to the readers, describes that which his personal labours among the Romans would have effected—consequently what had been said without metaphor in ver. 11—according to a current figure (John iv. 36, xv. 16; Phil. i. 22; Col. i. 6), as harvest-fruit which he would have had among them, and which as the produce of his labour would have been his (ideal) possession among them. But in this view the literal sense of εὐχείν (comp. vi. 21 f.) is not even to be altered by taking it as consequi (Wolf, Kypke, Koppe, Köllner, Tholuck, and others). To postpone the having the fruit, however, till the last day (Mehring) is quite alien to the context. — καθὼς καὶ ἐν τοῖς λαοῖς ἔστε, as also among the remaining nations, i.e. Gentiles (see on ver. 5), namely, I have fruit. In the animation and fulness of his thought Paul has inserted twice the καὶ of comparison, inasmuch as there was present to his mind the twofold conception: (1) “among you also,” as among;” and (2) “among you, as also among.” So frequently in Greek authors. See Baeumlein, Partikell. p. 153; Stallbaum, ad Plat. Gorg. p. 457 E; Winer, p. 409 [E. T. 547]. There is therefore no grammatical reason for commencing the new sentence with καθὼς (Mehring), nor is it in accordance with the repetition of the ἐν.

Vv. 14, 15. Fuller explanation regarding the previous ἱνα τινὰ καρπ. σχῶ καὶ ἐν υἱῶν, καθὼς καὶ ἐν τ. λαοῖς. ζηνας εἰν.—Respecting βάρβαροι (δύναμα τὸ οὐν Ἑλληνικόν, Ammonius), which, according to Greek feeling and usage, denotes generally all non-Greeks (Plat. Polit. p. 262 D)—all who were strangers to Greek nationality and language—see Dought. Anal. II. p. 100 f.; Hermann, Staatsalterth. § 6, 1. How common it was to designate all nations by thus dividing them into Ἑλλ. κ. βάρβ., see in Wetstein and Kypke, with examples from Philo in Loesner, p. 243.

1 That the “you” must mean the Roman Christians, and not the still unconverted Romans (Th. Schott), is clearly shown by all the passages, from ver. 8 onwards, in which the ὑμῖν occurs; and especially by the οὗτος τοίς ἐν Ἑλληνικόν in ver. 15. As regards their nationality, they belong to the category of Gentiles. Comp. xi. 13, xvi. 4; Gal. ii. 12, 14; Eph. iii. 1. But if Paul is the Apostle of the Gentiles, the Gentiles already converted also belong to his apostolic sphere of labour, as, e.g., the Colossians and Laodiceans, and (vv. 5, 6) the Romans. Schott is compelled to resort to very forced suggestions regarding ἐν ὑμῖν and ὑμῖν, especially here and in ver. 15; as also Mangold, who can only find therein a geographical designation (comp. Hofmann: “he addresses them as a constituent portion of the people of Rome”). Comp. on ver. 15.
Of course the Hellenes included the Jews also among the βαρβαροι (a view which is attributed even to Philo, but without sufficient ground), while the Jews in their turn applied this designation to the Hellenes. See Grimm on 2 Macc. ii. 21, p. 61. Now it may be asked: did Paul include the Romans among the Ἑλληνες or among the βαρβαροι? The latter view is maintained by Reiche and Köllner, following older writers; the former is held by Ambrosiaster, Estius, Kypke, and others, and the former alone would be consistent with that delicacy which must be presumed on the Apostle's part, as in fact, since Hellenic culture had become prevalent in Rome, especially since the time of Augustus, the Roman community was regarded from the Roman point of view as separated from the barbaria, and only nations like the Germans, Scythians, etc., were reckoned to belong to the latter. Comp. Cicero, de fin. ii. 15, "non solum Graecia et Italia, sed etiam omnis barbaria. But the following σοφοὶς τε καὶ ἀνοίττοις, as also the circumstance that the Romans, although they separated themselves from the barbarians (Greek authors included them among these, Polyb. v. 104, 1, ix. 37, 5, Krebs and Kypke in loc.), are nowhere reckoned among the Hellenes or designated as such, make it evident that the above question is to be entirely excluded here, and that Paul's object is merely to set forth generally his obligation as Apostle of the Gentiles in its universality. This he does in the form of a two-fold division, according to nationality, and according to condition of culture, so that the thought which he would express is: I am in duty bound to all Gentiles, without distinction of their nationality or of their culture; therefore I am ready, to you also etc. — ὅπειραν] Paul regards the divine obligation of office, received through Christ (ver. 5), as the undertaking of a debt, which he has to discharge by preaching the Gospel among all Gentile nations. Comp., in reference to this subject, Acts xxvi. 17 f.; Gal. ii. 7; 1 Cor. ix. 16. — ὅτι is, that is, in accordance with this relation, by which I am in duty bound to the "Ἑλληνες τ. κ. βαρβαρος, to the σοφ. τ. κ. ἀνοίττα. It does not refer to καθός, ver. 13, which is dependent on the preceding καὶ ἐν ῥόμιν, but gathers up in itself the import of "Ἑλληνες .... εἰμὶ: so then, ita, sic igitur. See Hermann, ad Luc. de hist. conscr. p. 161; Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 307. Bengel well says: "est quasi ephiphonema et illatio a toto ad partem insig-nem.” — The oútw τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ πρόθυμον (sc. ἔστι) is to be translated: accordingly, the inclination on my part [lit. the on-my-part inclination] is, so that τὸ belongs to πρόθυμον, though the expression τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ πρόθυμον is not substantially different from the simple τὸ πρόθυμον μου, but only more significantly indicative of the idea that Paul on his part was willing, etc. Comp. on Eph. i. 15. He says therefore: in this state of the case the inclination which exists on his side is, to preach to the Romans also. At the same time κατ' ἐμὲ is purposely chosen out of a feeling of dependence on a higher Will (ver. 10), rather than the simple τὸ πρόθυμον μου, instead of which τὸ ἐμὸν πρόθυμον would come nearer to the expression by κατ' ἐμὲ. On the substantival πρόθυμον, in the sense of προφυμα, comp. 3 Macc. v. 26; Plat. Leg. ix. p. 859 B; Eur. Med. 178; Thuc. iii. 82, 8; Herodian, viii. 3, 15. The above connection of τὸ . . . πρόθυμον is adopted by Seb. Schmid, Kypke, Reiche, Fritzsche, Philippi, van Hengel, Mehring, and others. So also Th. Schott, who however takes oútw in a predicative sense; as does likewise Hofmann: Thus the case stands as to the fact and manner of the inclination on my part. This however is the less appropriate, because ver. 14 contains, not the mode, but the regulative basis of the προφυμα of ver. 15. If τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ be taken by itself, and not along with πρόθυμον, there would result the meaning: there is, so far as I am concerned, an inclination; comp. de Wette. But, however correct in linguistic usage might be τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ (see Schaefer, ad Bos. Ell. p. 278; Matthiae, p. 734), which would here yield the sense προ mea virili, as in Dem. 1210, 20, the πρόθυμον without a verb would stand abruptly and awkwardly, because not the mere copula ἔστι, but ἔστι in the sense of πάρεστι, adest, would require to be supplied. Beza, Grotius, Bengel, Tholuck, Rückert, Kollner, Baumgarten-Crusius, take τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ as a periphrasis for ἐγώ, so that πρόθυμον must be taken as the predicate (L. on my part am disposed). Without sanction from the usu loquendi; what is cited by Kollner from Vigerus, p. 7 f., and by Tholuck, is of a wholly different kind. The Greek would express this meaning by τὸ γ' ἐμὸν πρόθυμον (Stallbaum, ad Plat. Rep. p. 533 A). — καὶ ὑμῖν] as also included in that general obligation of mine; and not: although ye belong to the σοφοί (Bengel, Philippi), which the text does not suggest. But τοῖς ἐν Πώμη is added with emphasis, since Rome ("caput et theatrum orbis terrarum," Bengel) could least of all be exempted from the task assigned to the Apostle of the Gentiles. Hofmann erroneously holds (comp. Mangold, p. 84) that Paul addresses the readers by ὑμῖν, not in their character as Christians, but as Romans, and that εὐαγγελίσασθαι means the preaching to those still unconverted; comp. Th. Schott, p. 91. No, he addresses the Christian church in Rome, to which he has not yet preached, but wishes to preach, the tidings of salvation, which they have up to the present time received from others. As in every verse, from the 6th to the 13th, so also here the ὑμεῖς can only be the κλητοὶ Ι. Χ., ver. 6 f., in Rome. See besides, against Mangold, Beyschlag in the Stud. u. Krit. 1867, p. 642 f.

Vv. 16, 17. Transition to the theme (ὡς γὰρ ἐπαινεῖς. τ. εὐαγγ.), and the theme itself (δύναμις . . . ἔσται).

Ver. 16. Γὰρ] Paul confirms negatively his προθυμία . . . εὐαγγελίσασθαι, for which he had previously assigned a positive motive. — ὡς γὰρ ἐπαινεῖς. τ. εὐαγγ.] Written, no doubt, with a recollection of what he had experienced in other highly civilized cities (Athens, Corinth, Ephesus), as well as, generally, in reference to the contents of the Gospel as a preaching of the cross (1 Cor. i. 18).1 Hence the negative form of the expression, as in contrast with the feeling of shame which that experience might have produced in him, as if the Gospel were something worthless, through which one could gain no honour and could only draw on himself contempt, mockery, etc. Comp. 2 Tim. i.12. — ἐπαινεῖς (Plat. Soph. p. 247, D; 2 Tim. i. 8), and αἰσχύνομαι, with accusative of the object; see Kühner, II. i. p. 255 f.; Bernhardy, p. 113. — δύναμις γὰρ Θεοῦ ἐστιν] Ground of the ὑμεῖς ἐπαινεῖς. τ. εὐαγγ. Power of God (genitive of the subject) is the Gospel, in so far as God works by means of the message of salvation. By awaking repentance, faith, comfort, love, peace, joy, courage in life and death, hope, etc., the Gospel manifests itself as power, as a mighty potency, and that of God, whose revelation and work the Gospel is (hence τὸ εὐαγγ. τὸν Θεοῦ, xv. 16; 2 Cor. xi. 7; 1 Thess. ii. 2). Comp. 1 Cor. i. 18, 24. The expression asserts more than that the Gospel is “a powerful means in the hand of God” (Rückert), and is based on the fact that it is the living self-manifestation and effluence of God, as ῥῆμα Θεοῦ (Eph. vi. 17). Paul knew how to honour highly the message of salvation which it was his office to convey, and he was not ashamed of it. Here also, as in vv. 1, 9, τὸ εὐαγγ. is not the work or business of conveying the message (Th. Schott), but the message itself. — εἰς σωτηρίαν] Working of this power of God: unto salvation, consequently with saving power. And what salvation is here meant, was understood by the reader; for σωτηρία and σώζωσθαι are the standing expressions for the eternal salvation in the Messianic kingdom (comp. τίσταται, ver. 17), the opposite of ἀπώλεια (Phil. i. 28; comp. ἡματίας, 2 Cor. ii. 16). Comp. generally, James i. 21, τὸν λόγον τὸν δυνάμενον σώσαι τᾶς ψυχῶς ὑμῶν. As to how the Gospel works salvation, see ver. 17. — παρῆι τῷ ποιητῶντι] shows to whom the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Faith is the condition on the part of man, without which the Gospel cannot be to him effectually that power; for in the unbeliever the cause apprehends of its efficacy is wanting. Comp. ver. 17. Melancthon aptly says: “Non enim intelligatur haec efficacia, ut si de calefactione loquemur: ignis est efficax in stramine, etiamis stramen nihil agit.” — παρῆι gives emphatic prominence to the universality, which is subsequently indicated in detail. Comp. iii. 22. — Ἰουνάιφ τε πρῶτον κ. “Ελληνι] τε . . . καὶ denotes the equality of what is added. See Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 99; Baeumlein, Part. p. 225. πρῶτον expresses the priority; but not merely in regard to the divinely appointed order of succession, in accordance with which the preaching of the Messiah was to begin with the Jews and thence extend to the Gentiles, as Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Grotius, and many others, including Olshausen, van Hengel and Th. Schott, have understood it; but in reference to the first claim on the Messianic salvation in accordance with the promise, which was in fact the ground of that external order of succession in the communication of the Gospel. So Erasmus, Calovius, and others, including Reiche, Tholuck, Rückert, Fritzsche, de Wette, Philippi, Ewald, Hofmann. That this is the Pauline view of the relation is plain from iii. 1 f.; ix. 1 ff.; xi. 16 ff.; xv. 9; comp. John iv. 22; Matth. xv. 24; Acts xiii. 46. The Jews are the νοὶ τῆς βασιλείας, Matth. viii. 12. — Ἐλληνικοί] denotes, in contrast to Τουδαίοι, all Non-Jews. Acts xiv. 1; 1 Cor. x. 32 al.

1 From his own point of view, viz. that the church in Rome was Jewish-Christian, Mangold, p. 98 f., suggests theocratic scruples on the part of the readers regarding the Apostle's universalism. An idea inconsistent with the notion conveyed by ἐπαινεῖς, and lacking any other indication whatever in the text; for the subsequent οὐδὲν τε πρῶτον κ.τ.λ. cannot have been designed cautiously to meet such doubts (see, on the other hand, ii. 9); but only to serve as expression of the objective state of the case as regards the historical order of salvation, in accordance with the doctrinal development of principles which Paul has in view.

Ver. 17 illustrates and gives a reason for the foregoing affirmation: δύναμις Θεοῦ ἐστὶν εἰς σωτ. π. τ. πιστ., which could not be the case, unless δικαίοσύνη Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ. — δικαίοσύνη Θεοῦ] That this does not denote, as in iii. 5, an attribute of God, is plain from the passage cited in proof from Hab. ii. 4, where, by necessity of the connection, δικαιος must denote the person who is in the state of the δικαίοσύνη Θεοῦ. Comp. iii. 21 ff. It must therefore be an ethical relation of man that is meant; and the genitive Θεοῦ must (otherwise in Jas. i. 20) be rendered as the genitive of emanation from, consequently: righteousness which proceeds from God, the relation of being right into which man is put by God (i.e. by an act of God declaring him righteous). Comp. Chrysostom, Bengel, and others, including Rückert, Olshausen, Reiche, de Wette, Winer, p. 175 [E. T. 232]; Winzer (de vocib. δικαιος, δικαῖοσύνη, et δικαῖοσύνη in ep. ad Rom. p. 10); Bisping, van Hengel, Ernesti, Urspr. d. Sünde, I. p. 153; Mehring; also Hofmann (comp. his Schriftbew. I. p. 627); Holsten, z. Ev. d. Paul. u. Petr. p. 408 f.; Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 330 f.; Rich. Schmidt, Paulin. Christoph. p. 10. This interpretation of the genitive as gen. originis, acutely and clearly set forth anew by Pfleiderer (in Hilgenfeld's Zeitschr. 1872, p. 168 ff.), is more specially evident from iii. 23, where Paul himself first explains the expression δικαίοσύνη Θεοῦ, and that by δικαιούμενοι δῷρεαν τῇ αὐτῶν χάριτι, which is turned in ver. 26 to the active form: δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἐκ πίστεως; comp. ver. 30, viii. 33, according to which the genitive appears equivalent to ἐκ Θεοῦ (Phil.

1 It has been understood as the truthfulness of God (Ambrosiaster); as the justitia Dei essentialis (Osiander); as the justitia distributiva (Origen, and several of the older expositors, comp. Flatt); as the goodness of God (Schoettgen, Semler, Morus, Erehl); as the justifying righteousness of God (Märcker). According to Ewald it is the divine righteousness regarded as power and life-blessing, in the goodness of which man may and must fully participate, if he would not feel its sting and its penalty. Comp. Matthías on iii. 21: a righteousness, such as belongs to God, consequently, “a righteousness which exists also inwardly and is in every respect perfect.”

2 Where what is meant is the righteousness required by God, which man is supposed to realise through exerting himself in works.
iii. 9), in contrast to the ἕμι and ἰδία δικαιοσύνη (Rom. x. 3), and to the δικαίον ιευτόν (Luke xii. 15). The passage in 2 Cor. v. 21 is not opposed to this view (as Fritzschethinks); see in loc.; nor are the expressions δικαιοσθαί ἐνώπιον Θεοῦ (iii. 20), and παρὰ Θεῷ (Gal. iii. 11), for these represent a special form under which the relation is conceived, expressing more precisely the judicial nature of the matter. Hence it is evident that the interpretation adopted by many modern writers (including Köllner, Fritzsch, Philippi, Umbreit), following Luther: "righteousness before God," although correct in point of substance, is unsuitable as regards the analysis of the genitive, which they take as genitive of the object. This remark applies also against Baur, who (Paulus, II. p. 146 ff.) takes the genitive objectively as the δικαιοσύνη determined by the idea of God, adequate to that idea; whilst in his neutest. Theol. p. 134, he prefers to take the genitive subjectively: the righteousness produced through God, i.e. "the manner in which God places man in the adequate relation to Himself."— The following remarks may serve exegetically to illustrate the idea of δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, which in the Gospel is revealed from faith:—Since God, as the holy Lawgiver and Judge, has by the law imposed on man the task of keeping it entirely and perfectly (Gal. iii. 10), He can only receive and treat as a δίκαιος (who is such, as he should be) —as one normally guiltless and upright, who should be so, therefore, habitually—the person who keeps the whole law; or, in other words, only the man who is perfectly obedient to the law can stand to God in the relation of δικαιοσύνη. Such perfection however no man could attain; not merely no Gentile, since in his case the natural moral law was obscured through immorality, and through disobedience to it he had fallen into sin and vice; but also no Jew, for natural desire, excited by the principle of sin in him through the very fact of legal prohibition, hindered in his case the fulfilment of the divine law, and rendered him also, without exception, morally weak, a sinner and object of the divine wrath. If therefore man was to enter into the relation of a righteous person and thereby of a future participator in the Messianic blessedness, it was necessary that this should be done by means of an extraordinary divine arrangement, through which grace and reconciliation should be imparted to the object of wrath, and he should be put forward for the judgment of God.
as righteous. This arrangement has been effected through the sending of His Son and His being given up to His bloody death as that of a guiltless sacrifice; whereby God's counsel of redemption, formed from eternity, has been accomplished,—objectively for all, subjectively to be appropriated on the part of individuals through faith, which is the ὀργανων ληττικών. And, as this plan of salvation is the subject-matter of the Gospel, so in this Gospel that which previously, though figured by the justification of Abraham, was an unrevealed μυστήριον, namely, righteousness from God, is revealed (ἀποκαλύπτωντες), inasmuch as the Gospel makes known both the accomplished work of redemption itself and the means whereby man appropriates the redemption, namely, faith in Christ, which, imputed to him as righteousness (iv. 5), causes man to be regarded and treated by God out of grace and σωτερία (iii. 24) as righteous (δικαιος), so that he, like one who has perfectly obeyed the law, is certain of the Messianic bliss destined for the δικαιος.1 The so-called obedientia Christi activa is not to be included in the causa meritoria of the divine justification; but is to be regarded as the

1 Justification is simply imputative, an actus forensis, not inherent, and therefore not a gradual process, as Romang anew maintains, but produced by the imputation of faith. The new moral life in Christ is the necessary consequent (Rom. vi. 8), so that regeneration comes after justification—a divine order of salvation inconsistent with all Osianid views. See Ritschl, in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1857, p. 795 ff., allkath. Kirche, p. 78 ff. The regenerate life is neither a part (Baumgarten-Crusius) nor the positive side (Baur) of justification, the conception of which is not to be referred either to the consciousness of liberation from guilt given with conversion (Schleiermacher); or to the unity of forgiveness with the instilling of love (Marheineke); or to an anticipation of the judgment of God on faith in respect to the divine life which develops itself from it as its fruit (Rothe, Martensen, Hundeshagen, and others, including Tholuck on v. 9, and Catholics like Döllinger, see on iv. 3)—so that, with regard to its truth it would have to be made dependent on sanctification (Nitzsch), or the dying out of sin (Beck), and so forth,—or to the establishment of the new sanctified humanity in the person of Christ (Menken-Hofmann). The Form. Conc., p. 687, rightly warns: "ne ea, quae fidem praecedunt et ea quae eam sequuntur, articulo de justificatione, tanquam ad justificationem pertinientia, admisceantur." Respecting the sensus forensis of justification, which is by no means a product of mediæval scholasticism (in opposition to Sabatier, p. 263), comp. Köstlin in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1856, p. 89 ff.; and in its purely exegetical aspect, especially Wieseler on Gal. ii. 16, Pfleiderer in Hilgenfeld's Zeitschr. 1872, p. 161 ff., and Weiss, bibl. Theol. § 112. We may add that with Luther's doctrine of justification Zwingli substantially concurs. See, for defence of the latter (against Stahl), Ritschl, Rechtfert. u. Veröhnung, 1870, I. p. 165 ff.
fulfilment of a preliminary condition necessary to the death of Jesus, so far as the justification of man was objectively based on the latter; without the complete active obedience of Christ (consequently without His sinlessness) His passive obedience could not have been that causa meritoria (2 Cor. v. 21). — ἀποκαλύπτεται is revealed; for previously, and in the absence of the Gospel, the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ was and is something quite hidden in the counsel of God, the knowledge of which is first given in the Gospel (comp. xvi. 25; Acts xvii. 30). The prophecies of the Old Testament were only preparatory and promissory (ver. 2), and therefore were only the means of introducing the evangelical revelation itself (xvi. 26). The present is used, because the Gospel is conceived of in its continuous proclamation. Comp. the perfect, πεφανέρωται, iii. 21, and on the other hand the historical aorist πανερωθέντος in xvi. 26. Through the ἀποκάλυπτεται ensues the πανερωθεί through the revelation the being manifest as object of knowledge. — ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν may not be connected with δικαιοσύνη. (Luther, Hammond, Bengel, Koppe, Rückert, Reiche, Tholuck, Philippi, Mehring, and others), but rather—as the only arrangement which the position of the words admits without arbitrariness—with ἀποκάλυπτεται. So also van Hengel and Hofmann; comp. Luke ii. 35. The δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, namely, is revealed in the Gospel ἐκ πίστεως, inasmuch as in the Gospel faith on Christ is made known as the subjective cause from which righteousness comes. Thus the Gospel, as the ῥήμα τῆς πίστεως (x. 8) and λόγος τῆς καταλαλαγῆς (2 Cor. v. 19), makes the divine righteousness become manifest from faith, which it in fact preaches as that which becomes imputed; for him who does not believe the ἀκοή πίστεως (Gal. iii. 2), it leaves this δικαιοσύνη to remain a locked-up unrevealed blessing. But it is not merely ἐκ πίστεως, but also εἰς πίστιν; to faith (comp. 2 Cor. ii. 16). Inasmuch, namely, as righteousness is revealed in the Gospel from faith, faith is aimed at, i.e. the revelation spoken of proceeds from faith and is designed to produce faith. This sense, equivalent to "ut fides habeatur," and rightly corresponding alike with the simple words and the context, is adopted by Heumann, Fritzsche, Tholuck, Krehl, Nielsen, and van Hengel. It is not "too meaningless" (de Wette), nor "saying pretty nearly nothing" (Philippi); but is on the contrary emphatically appropriate to the purpose of representing faith as the Fac totum ("prora et puppis," Bengel, comp. Baur, II. p. 161). See also Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 629 f. Comp. vi. 19; 2 Cor. ii. 16. Therefore εἰς πίστιν is not to be taken as equivalent to εἰς τὸν πιστεύοντα, for the believer (Oecumenius, Seb. Schmid, Morus, Rosenmüller, Rückert, Reiche, de Wette, Olshausen, Reithmayr, Maier, and Philippi), a rendering which should have been precluded by the abstract correlative εἰς πίστεως. Nor does it mean: for the furtherance and strengthening of faith (Clem. Al. Strom. v. 1, II. p. 644 Pott., Theophylact, Erasmus, Luther, Melanchthon, Beza, Cornelius & Lapide, and others, including Köllner; comp. Baumgarten-Crusius, Klee, and Stengel); for the thought: "from an ever new, never tiring, endlessly progressive faith" (Ewald; comp. Lipsius, Rechtsfertigungsli. p. 7, 116, and Umbreit), is here foreign to the connection, which is concerned only with the great fundamental truth in its simplicity; the case is different in 2 Cor. iii. 18. Quite arbitrary, moreover, was the interpretation: "ex fide legis in fidem evangelii" (Tertullian; comp. Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret: δεί γὰρ πιστεύει τοῖς προφήταις, καὶ δεὶ ἑκείνω εἰς τὴν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου πίστιν ποιήσαντι, Zeger, and others). Finally, to take πίστιν as faithfulness, and to understand εἰς πίστιν in the sense of faith in the faithfulness of God (Mehring), is to introduce what is neither in the words nor yet suggested by the context. Ewald in his Jahrb. IX. p. 87 ff., interprets: faith in faith, the reference being to the faith with which man meets the divine faith in his power and his good will (?). But the idea of "faith from beneath on the faith from above," as well as the notion generally of God believing on men, would be a paradox in the N. T., which no reader could have discovered without more clear and precise indication. After εἰς πίστιν, every one could not but understand εἰς πίστιν. also as meaning human faith; and indeed everywhere it is man that believes, not God. — καθὼς γέγραπται represents what has just been stated, δικαιοσύνη...πίστιν, as taking place in accordance with a declaration of Scripture, consequently according to the necessity of the divine counsel of salvation. He who from faith (on Christ) is righteous (transferred into the relation of the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ) shall live (be partaker of the Messianic eternal life). This, as the Messianic sense intended to be conveyed by the Spirit of God (2 Peter i. 21) in the prophetic words, Hab. ii. 4, "the righteous shall by his faithfulness live" (attain the theocratic life-blessedness), is recognised by Paul, and expressed substantially in the language of the LXX., rightly omitting the μον, which they inaccurately add to πίστεως. In doing so Paul might, in accordance with the Messianic reference of the passage, connect εκ πίστεως (τηννοει) — seeing that on this causal definition the stress of the expression lies — with δικαιος; because, if the life of the righteous has πίστις as its cause, his δικαιοσύνη itself can have no other ground or source. That he has really so connected the words, as Beza and others rightly perceived (see especially Hölemann, de justitiae ex fide ambab. in V. T. sedibus, Lips. 1867), and not, as most earlier expositors have supposed (also de Wette, Tholuck, Delitzsch, on Hab. l.c., Philippi, Baumgarten-Crusius, van Hengel, Ewald, and Hofmann), εκ πίστις. γιηται, is plain from the connection, according to which it is not the life εκ πίστις, but the revelation of righteousness ἐκ πίστις that is to be confirmed by the Old Testament. The case is different in Heb. x. 38. See further, generally, on Gal. iii. 11.—

The εἰς is, without having any bearing on the matter, adopted along with the other words from the LXX. Comp. on Acts ii. 17. A contrast to the unrighteous who shall die (Hofmann) is neither here nor in Hab. ii. 4 implied in the text.

Vv. 18-32. Proof of ver. 17 deduced from experience, and that in the first instance with respect to Gentile humanity (the proof in regard to the Jews begins at ch. ii.).

Ver. 18. This great fundamental proposition of the Gospel, ver. 17, is proved (γάρ) agreeably to experience, by the fact that, where there is no πίστις, there is also no ἀποκάλυψις of righteousness, but only of the wrath of God. "Horrendum est initium ac fulmen," Melancthon, 1540. — ἀποκάλυπται] Emphatically placed, in harmony with the ἀποκάλ. in ver. 17, at the beginning. — ὁργὴ Θεοῦ] The antithesis of δικαιοσύνη. Θεοῦ, ver. 16. The ὁργὴ of God is not to be explained with several of the Fathers (in Suicer), Erasmus, and many later authorities, as poena divina, which is nothing but a rationalizing interchange of ideas, but rather in the proper literal sense: wrath, an affection of the personal God, having a necessary connection with His love. The wrath of God, the reality of which is indisputable as the very presupposition of the work of atonement, is the love of the holy God (who is neither neutral nor one-sided in His affection) for all that is good in its energy as antagonistic to all that is evil. Even Lactantius has aptly remarked, de ira Dei, v. 9: “Si Deus non irascitur impis et injustis, nec pios justosque diliget; in rebus enim diversis aut in utramque partem moveri necesse est, aut in neutram.” See on Matth. iii. 7; Eph. ii. 3. — ἀράρανοῦ is neither to be connected with ὁργῇ, as Beza, Estius, and many others hold, nor with the bare ὁ ἡ θεὸν (Mehring), but, as the order of the words and the parallel definition ἐν αὐτῷ in ver. 17 require, belongs to ἀποκαλυπτεῖαι; so that heaven, the dwelling-place and throne of God (comp. on Matth. vi. 9), is designated as the place from which the ἀποκαλύψεις of the ὁργὴ, as ἡ θεὸν issues. “Majestatem irati Dei significat,” Bengel. The revelation of righteousness takes place ἐν εἰδαγγελίᾳ, ver. 17, as something spiritually brought home to the consciousness through the medium of the Gospel; but that of the divine wrath descends from heaven, manifested as a divine matter of fact; by which description, however, the destructive character of this working of divine power is not expressed (Th. Schott), although it is in fact implied in the entire context. But what revelation of divine wrath is meant? Paul himself supplies the information in ver. 24 ff., in which is described what God in His sufficiently well-grounded (v. 19-23) wrath did (παρέδωκεν αὐτῷ). God's wrath therefore is revealed from heaven in this way, that those who are the objects of it are given up by God to terrible retribution in unchastity and all vice. Against this interpretation (comp. Mehring), which is adopted also by Tholuck, Weber (vom Zorne Gottes, p. 89), and Th. Schott, it cannot be objected, with Hofmann, that Paul must have written ἀπεκαλύφθη; for he here in fact expresses the general proposition of experience, to which the concrete historical representation subsequently shall correspond; the divine axiom is placed first (present), and then the history of it follows (aorist). Irrelevant is also the objection of Philippi, that ἀποκαλυπτεῖα always denotes

1 This faithfulness, in the prophet's sense, the πίστις, and the πίστις in the Christian sense, have the same fundamental idea, trustful self-surrender to God: Comp. Umbreit, p. 197.

1 The idea of the divine ὁργῇ is diametrically opposed to every conception of sin as a necessity interwoven with human development.
a supernatural revelation. For \( \text{αποκαλύπτω} \) means to reveal what was previously unknown, what was veiled from our cognition, so that it now becomes manifest; and, in reference to this, it is a matter of indifference whether the revelation takes place in a natural or in a supernatural manner.\(^1\) The mode of revealing is not indicated in the word itself, but in the context; and hence according to the connection it is used also, as here, of a revelation in fact, by which a state of things previously unknown comes to our knowledge (Matth. x. 26; Luke ii. 35; 2 Thess. ii. 3, 6, 8). Moreover, even according to our interpretation, a divine revelation is meant, by which there is certainly brought to light a μεταφυσικόν, namely, the connection of the phenomenon with the divine ὅργη. According to others, Paul means the inward revelation of the divine wrath, given by means of reason and conscience (Ambrosiaster, Wolf, and others, including Reiche and Glöckler), in support of which view they appeal to ver. 19. But, on the contrary, \( \text{αποκαλύπτω} \) requires us to understand an \( \text{αποκαλύπτως} \) cognisable by the senses; and ver. 19 contains not the mode of the manifestation of wrath, but its moving cause (διότι). Others hold that the \( \text{αποκαλύπτως} \) of the divine wrath has come through the Gospel (“continens minas,” Grotius), and that \( \text{εἰς αὐτῷ} \) is to be again supplied from ver. 17. So Aquinas, Bellarmine, Corn. à Lapide, Estius, Grotius, Heumann, Semler, Morus, Böhme, Benecke, Maier; comp. Umbreit, who includes also the Old Testament. It is decisive against this view that \( \text{αποκαλύπτω} \) just because it is parallel to \( \text{εἰς αὐτῷ} \) in ver. 17, lays down a mode of manifestation quite different from \( \text{εἰς αὐτῷ} \). Had the latter been again in Paul’s mind here, he would have repeated it with emphasis, as he has repeated the \( \text{αποκαλύπτως} \). Others hold that the manifestation of wrath at the general judgment is meant (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Oecumenius, Toletus, Limborch, Koppe, Philippus, Reithmayr, and Ewald). The present, considered in itself, might be chosen in order to express a vivid realisation of the future, or might be accounted for by the \( \text{εἰς αὐτῷ} \), which, it is alleged, is to be again mentally supplied (Ewald); but the former explanation is to be rejected on account of the preceding purely present \( \text{αποκαλύπτως} \) in ver. 17; and against the latter may be urged the very fact, that ἐν αὐτῷ is not repeated. Had this been the meaning, moreover, the further course of the exposition must have borne reference to the general judgment, which it by no means does; and therefore this interpretation is opposed to the connection, as well as unwarranted by ii. 5 (where the mention of the revelation of judgment belongs to quite a different connection); and not required by the idea of ἀποκαλύπτειν itself, since that idea is adequately met by the divine matter-of-fact revelation of wrath here intended (see above), and besides, the word is repeated intentionally for rhetorical effect. Lastly, while others have contented themselves with leaving the ἀποκαλύφθης here in its entire generality (Olshausen, Tholuck; comp. Calovius), and thus relieved themselves from giving any explanation of it, the reference to the religion of the O. T. (Bengel and Platt) seems entirely arbitrary and groundless, and the interpretations which apply it to evils generally affecting the world as an expression of the divine wrath (Hofmann), or to the external and internal distress of the time (Baumgarten-Crusius), are too general and indefinite, and thereby devoid of any concrete import in keeping with the text. — ἐπὶ πᾶσῃ ἀδικίᾳ ἀνθρώποι.] contains the hostile direction (comp. Dcm. 743, 22) of the ἀποκαλύφθης: against every ungodliness and immorality of men, which, etc. Ἀσέβεια and ἀδικία (Plat. Prot. p. 323 E; Xen. Cyr. viii. 8, 7; Tittmann, Synon. N. T. p. 48) are distinguished as irreligiousness and immorality, so that both describe the improprietas, but under different aspects, in reference to the fear of God and to the standard of morals; hence the former, as involving the idea of impiety, is the stronger expression. Comp. Dem. 548, 11: ἀσέβημα, οὐκ ἀδικημα μόνον. That the distinction between them is not to be understood, with Kollner, following Theophylact, Grotius, Calovius, Wolf, and many others, as profanitas in Deum and injuria in proximum, is proved by the following ἐν ἀδικία καταχ. — τῶν τ. ἀληθ. ἐν ἀδικ. καταχ.] who keep down the truth through immorality, do not let it develop itself into power and influence on their religious knowledge and their moral condition. The article (quippe qui] introduces that characteristic of the ἀνθρώπων, not yet more precisely defined, which excites the divine wrath. Rightly in the Vulgate: eorum qui. See Winer, p. 127 [E. T. 174]. It may be paraphrased: "of those, I mean, who." Comp. Kühner, ad Xen. Anab. ii. 7, 13. Bengel, moreover, aptly remarks: “veritas in mente nititur et urgeb, sed homo eam impedit.” This is the peculiar, deeply unfortunate, constant self-contradiction of the heathen character. Comp. Nägelsbach, Homer. Theol. I. p. 11 ff. On κατέχειν, to hinder, comp. 2 Thess. ii. 6; Luke iv. 42; 1 Macc. vi. 27; Plat. Phaed. p. 117 C; Soph. El. 754; Pind. Isthm. iii. 2, and Dissen in loc. Against the interpretation of Michaelis, Koppe and Baur, who take κατέχειν here as meaning to possess (1 Cor. vii. 30; 2 Cor. vi. 10), “who possess the truth in unrighteousness, who know what God’s will is, and yet sin,” ver. 21 is decisive, where the continuous possession of the truth is negatived by ἐμαυταώδησαν . . . καρδία; wherefore also it cannot be rendered with Melanchthon and van Hengel: who hold the truth in the bondage of immorality (vii. 6; Gen. xxxix. 20, xlii. 19). The ἄληθεια is correctly interpreted in the sense of divine truth generally; the mode of revelation, in which it is presented to man’s knowledge, is furnished by the context, here, by ver. 19 f., as the truth apparent by natural revelation in the works of God; not therefore in the sense of the doctrine of the Gospel, which is hindered in its diffusion by Jews and Gentiles (Ammon, comp. Ewald). — εν δικία instrument. To make it equivalent to ἀδικία (Reiche, following Theophylact, Beza, Calvin, Piscator, Raphael, and others; comp. εν δικαίωμεν in ver. 4) arbitrarily deprives the representation of an element essential to its fulness and precision, and renders it tame; for it is self-evident that the κατέχειν τ. ἄλ. is unrighteous or sinful, but not so much so that it takes place through sin. — Finally, it is to be noted that Paul, in ἀνθρωπίν. (correlative of Θεὸν) τῶν τ. ἄληθ. εν δικ. κατέχει, expresses himself quite generally, making apparent by ἀνθρωπίν. the audacity of this God-opposing conduct; but he means the Gentiles, as is indicated even by εν δικίᾳ (comp. 1 Cor. vi. 1), and as is confirmed beyond doubt by the continuation of the discourse in ver. 19 ff. Koppe supposed that Paul meant the Jews especially, but included also the Gentiles; Benecke, that he speaks of the whole human race in general, which view Mehring specially defends. But the peculiar character of what is contained in vv. 21-32 shows that the Jews are to be entirely excluded from the description which is carried on to the end of the chapter. It is not till ch. ii. 1 that the discourse passes over to them, and makes them suddenly see themselves reflected in the Gentile mirror.

\(^1\) In this case it cannot make any difference whether God is or is not the revealing subject, as is most plainly seen from Matth. xvi. 17.

Ver. 19. \( \Delta \iota \tau i \] propertea quod—only to be separated by a comma from the foregoing—specifies more precisely the causal relation, on account of which the wrath of God comes upon such men, etc. (ver. 18). They keep down the truth through immorality; if they did so out of ignorance, they would be excusable: but they do not do so out of ignorance, and therefore God's wrath is manifested against them. This view of the connection is suggested by the literal meaning of \( \delta \iota \tau i \) itself, and confirmed by \( e \iota \tau \, t \, \gamma \iota \nu \, \epsilon \iota \nu \, a \nu \tau \iota \nu \, s \, a \mu \alpha \tau \sigma \iota \, l \gamma \). Comp. Hofmann. So also Fritzsche, who, however, takes \( \delta \iota \tau i \) as equivalent to \( \gamma \rho \), as does also Philippi,—a use of it that never occurs, not even in Acts xviii. 10. This linguistically erroneous interpretation of \( \delta \iota \tau i \) condemns also the view of Tholuck, Rückert, de Wette, and Reithmayr, who discover here the proof, that the Gentiles keep down the truth by immorality; or (so Th. Schott) that Paul rightly describes them as \( k a t \, \epsilon \chi \, o\nu \tau e \, s \) k.t.l. No; for the very reason that they have the \( \gamma \nu \omega \sigma \tau \iota \nu \, t \, o \, \Theta \iota \nu \), which renders them inexcusable, does the wrath of God go forth against the \( k a t \, \epsilon \chi \, o\nu \tau e \, s \); ver. 18. — \( t \, o \, \gamma \nu \omega \sigma \tau \iota \nu \, t \, o \, \Theta \iota \nu \) that which is known concerning God, not: that which is knowable concerning God, a signification which, though adopted by Origen, Theophylact, Oecumenius, Erasmus, Beza, Castalio, Calvin, Piscator, Estius, Grotius, Wolf, Koppe, Rückert, Kollner, Baumgarten-Crusius, Maier, Ewald, Umbreit, Mehring, Hofmann, and others, is never conveyed by \( \gamma \nu \omega \sigma \tau \iota \nu \) in the N. T. or in the LXX. and Apocrypha, though it frequently occurs in classic authors (see the passages from Plato quoted by Ast, Lex. I. p. 401; Dorrill. ad Charit. p. 502; Hermann, ad Soph. Oed. T. 361; comp. \( \alpha \gamma \nu \omega \sigma \tau \iota \nu \), which in Plato invariably means unknowable). In all the places where it occurs in the Scriptures, as also, though less frequently, in the classics (Xen. Cyr. vi. 3, 4; Arrian. Epict. ii. 20, 4; Aesch. Choeph. 702; Beck, Antiiatt. p. 87, 25), it means \( q u o d \, n o t u m \, e s t \) (Vulgate), and is therefore equivalent to \( \gamma \nu \omega \sigma \tau \iota \nu \) or \( \gamma \nu \alpha \rho \iota \mu \iota \sigma \), also in Acts iv. 16; Ecclus. xxi. 7. The opposite: \( \alpha \gamma \nu \omega \sigma \tau \iota \nu \), Acts xvii. 23. Comp. Luther, 1545: "das (nicht: dass) man weiss, dass (nicht: dass) Gott sei." That which is known of God excludes that which needed a special revelation to make it known, as in particular the contents of the Gospel; the former is derived from the general revelation of nature. If we should take $\gamma\nu\omega\tau\omicron\nu$ as knowable, the assertion of the Apostle would be incorrect without some limiting qualification; for the positively revealed belonged to that which was knowable, but not to that which was known of God,\(^1\) into which category it was brought only through special revelation, which it would otherwise not have needed.— $\epsilon\nu\ \alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\omicron\iota\varsigma$] i.e. in their consciousness, $\epsilon\nu\ \tau\alpha\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\rho\delta\iota\alpha\varsigma\ \alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\omicron$, ii. 15. Comp. Gal. i. 16. The explanation inter ipsos, which Erasmus and Grotius (both referring it arbitrarily to the Gnosis of the philosophers among the Gentiles), Köllner and Baumgarten-Crusius give, is to be rejected for this reason, that $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\omicron\iota\varsigma\ \epsilon\varphi\alpha\nu\epsilon\rho\omicron\omicron\sigma\omicron\sigma\epsilon$, compared with $\nu\nu\omicron\upsilon\mu\epsilon\nu\alpha\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\theta\omicron\rho\alpha\tau\alpha\omicron\iota$, points to a manifestation of the $\gamma\nu\omega\tau\omicron\nu\ \tau\omicron\upsilon\ \Theta\epsilon\omicron\upsilon$, which is inward, although conveyed through the revelation of nature.— $\epsilon\varphi\alpha\nu\epsilon\rho\omicron\omicron\sigma\omicron\sigma\epsilon$] God—and this subject is again named with emphasis— has laid it clearly before them, made it lie openly before their view as an object of knowledge. Comp. on the matter itself Acts xiv. 17, xvii. 26 f.; 1 Cor. i. 21.

Ver. 20 f. Τά γὰρ ἀόρατα .... θειότης] Giving a reason for, and explaining, the previous ὣ Θεὸς γὰρ αὐτῶι ἐφανέρωσε. — τά ἁναρατα αὐτοῦ] His invisible things, the manifold invisible attributes, that constitute His nature. Paul himself explains it afterwards by ἡ ἁδίος αὐτῶι δύναμις καὶ θειότης; therefore it is not actiones Dei invisibles (Fritzsche; comp. Theodoret). — $\nu\nu\omicron\upsilon\mu\epsilon\nu\alpha\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\theta\omicron\rho\alpha\tau\alpha\omicron\iota]$ through the works are seen becoming discerned; $\nu\nu\omicron\upsilon\mu\epsilon\nu\alpha\varsigma$ defines the manner in which the $\kappa\alpha\theta\omicron\rho\alpha\tau\alpha\omicron\iota$ takes place, otherwise than through the senses (the νοεῖν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ὀμμασί θεωρεῖν, Plat. Rep. p. 529 B), in so far as it is effected by means of mental discernment, by the agency of intelligent perception. The $\kappa\alpha\theta\omicron\rho\alpha\tau\alpha\omicron\iota$ forms with ἁναρατα a striking oxymoron, in which the compound selected for that purpose, but not elsewhere occurring in the N. T., heightens still further the idea conveyed by the simple form. Comp. Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 31.: εἰ γὰρ .... ἡμᾶς οἱ πολέμιοι θεάσωνται

\(^1\) Which, however, is not to be transformed, with Fritzsche, Tholuck, Krehl, and others, into the subjective scienzia Dei—which has no precedent in usage, is unsuitable to the following φανερόν ἐστι, and is not to be supported even by the LXX. Gen. ii. 9; in which passage, if the text be not corrupted, τὸ ξύλον τοῦ εἰδέναι γνωστὸν καλὸν κ. τοπορφοῦ must be rendered: the tree by which they were to learn what is known of good and evil, i.e. by which they were to become aware of that which they—by the very enjoyment—had known of good and evil.
80 THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

....πάλιν καθορώντες ἡμῶν τὸ πλῆθος. Pind. Pyth. ix. 45.: ὁνήθα .... ἐδ ἱκαθορᾶς. On the oxymoron itself, comp. Aristotle, de mundo, 6, p. 399, 21. Bekk: ἀδεωρητῶς ἀπ' αὐτῶν τῶν ἔργων θεωρεῖται (ὁ θεός). — τοῖς ποιήμασι] embraces all that God as Creator has produced, but does not at the same time include His governing in the world of history, as Schneckenburger thinks, Beitr. p. 102 f.; for πᾶς, with which ποιήμα corresponds (LXX. Eccles. iii. 11, vii. 13, al.), is the formal expression for God's works of creation; as also Paul himself, in Eph. ii. 10, describes the renewing of man as analogous to creation. It is only of the works of creation that the Apostle could assert what he here says, especially as he adds ἀπὸ κτίσεως κόσμου. Since, moreover, τοῖς ποιήμασι, by means of the works, contains the instrumental definition appended to νοούμενα καθοράται, ἀπὸ κτίσ. κόσμου cannot be taken in a causal sense (see Winer, p. 348 [E. T. 463]), as the medium cognoscendi (so Luther and many others, including Calovius, Pearson, Homberg, Wolf, Heumann, Morus and Reithmayr), but only in the sense of temporal beginning: since the creation of the world they are so perceived. — η τε ἀιώνος αὐτοῦ δῶν. κ. θειώτης] A more precise definition of the previous τα ἀδιάρρατα αὐτοῦ. Αἰώνος, everlasting, belongs to both substantives; but καὶ annexes the general term, the category, of which the δῶναμις is a species. See Fritzsche ad Matth. p. 786. Its relation to the preceding τε consists in its completing the climax and cumulation, for which τε prepares the way. Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 98. Hofmann is unsupported by linguistic usage in inferring from the position of τε, that ἀιώνος is not meant to apply also to θειότης. It is just that position that makes ἀιώνος the common property of both members (see especially Hartung, l.c. p. 116 f.), so that, in order to analyse the form of the conception, we may again supply ἡ ἀιώνος αὐτοῦ after καὶ (Stallbaum, ad Plat. Crit. p. 43 B.; Schaefer, Poet. gnom. p. 73; Schoemann, ad Is. p. 325 f.; also Winer, p. 520 [E. T. 727]). The θειότης is the totality of that which God is as a Being.

1 Not merely to νοούμενα (Hofmann), which is closely bound up with καθοράται as showing the manner of it, so that both together are defined instrumentally by τοῖς ποιήμασι. On νοῦς, as denoting the intellectual animaladvertent in seeing (Hom. II. λ. 599, in the inverse position: τῶν ἐν τῷ ἑνῷ ἑνοφεία), comp. Nägelsb. 2. Ilias, p. 416, ed. 3; Duncan, ed. Rost, p. 787.
possessed of divine attributes, as \( \theta \varepsilon \iota \sigma \nu \), the collective sum of the divine realities. This comprehensive sense must by no means be limited. The eternal power—this aspect of His \( \theta \varepsilon \iota \sigma \tau \nu \) which comes into prominence at first and before all others—and the divinity of God in its collective aspect, are rationally perceived and discerned by means of His works. Arbitrary is the view of Reiche, who holds that Paul means especially wisdom and goodness, which latter Schneckenburger conceives to be intended; and also that of Hofmann (comparing Acts xvii. 29; 2 Pet. i. 4), that the spiritual nature of the divine being is denoted. We may add that Rückert holds the strange view, that \( \theta \varepsilon \iota \sigma \tau \nu \), which could not properly be predicated of God, is only used here by Paul for want of another expression. It might be and was necessarily said of God, as being the only adequate comprehensive expression for the conception that was to be denoted thereby. For analogous references to the physico-theological knowledge of God, see Wetstein, and Spiess, Logos spermaticos, 1871, p. 212. The suggestion of Philo as the Apostle's source (Schneckenburger) is out of the question. Observe further how completely, in our passage, the transcendent relation of God to the world—the negation of all identity of the two—lies at the foundation of the Apostle's view. It does not exclude the immanence of God in the world, but it excludes all pantheism. See the passages from the O. T. discussed in Umbreit.—\( \varepsilon \iota \sigma \tau \, \tau \varepsilon \iota \nu \, \alpha \nu \tau \omicron \upsilon \nu \varepsilon \alpha \varsigma \pi \alpha \sigma \tau \omega \lambda . \) has its logically correct reference to the immediately preceding \( \tau \alpha \, \gamma \alpha \rho \, \alpha \delta \omicron \rho \alpha \tau \alpha \) \( \ldots \, \theta \varepsilon \iota \sigma \tau \nu \), and therefore the parenthesis, in which Griesbach and others have placed \( \tau \alpha \, \gamma \alpha \rho \, \alpha \delta \omicron \rho \ldots \, \theta \varepsilon \iota \sigma \tau \nu \), must be expunged. The \( \varepsilon \iota \sigma \) cannot be said of the result, as Luther, and many others, including Reiche, Köllner, de Wette, Rückert, Fritzsche, Reithmayr, Philippi, Ewald, following the Vulgate (\( \text{ita ut sint inexcusabiles} \)), have understood it; for the view,

1 On the difference between this word and \( \theta \varepsilon \iota \sigma \tau \nu \) (Col. ii. 9), which denotes Deitas, Godhead, the being God, see Elster, Obs. p. 6, and Fritzsche in loc. Van Hengel has erroneously called in question the distinction. In Wisd. xviii. 9, namely, \( \delta \, \tau \rho \, \theta \varepsilon \iota \sigma \tau \nu \, \rho \lambda \omicron \omicron \) is not the law of the Godhead, but the law whose nature and character is divinity,—of a divine kind; and in Lucian, de Calumn. 17, \( \eta \, \theta \varepsilon \omega \sigma \tau \iota \lambda \iota \omicron \nu \right\) is the divinity of Hephaestion, his divine quality. In Plutarch \( \theta \varepsilon \iota \sigma \tau \nu \) very frequently occurs. Appropriately rendered in Vulgate by divinitas.
which takes it of the purpose, is not only required by the prevailing usage of eis with the infinitive\(^1\) (see on 2 Cor. viii. 6), but is also more appropriate to the connection, because the καθοράται is conceived as a result effected through God's revelation of Himself (ver. 19), and consequently the idea of the divine purpose in eis τὸ εἰλατι κ.τ.λ. is not to be arbitrarily dismissed. Comp. Erasmus ("ne quid habent" etc.), Melancthon ("propter quas causas Deus" etc.), Beza, Calvin ("in hoc ut"), Bengel and others. But Chrysostom, even in his time, expressly opposes this view (comp. also Oecumenius), and at a later period it became a subject of contention between the Lutherans and the Reformed. See Calovius. The view, which interprets it of the result, hesitates to admit the conception of a divine decree, under which Paul places the inexcusableness of men; and yet not only may this stand to the perception of God from His works which has existed since the beginning in the relation of result, but, in accordance with the thoroughly Scriptural idea of destiny (comp. e.g. v. 20), it must stand to it in the relation of that decree. In this connection, which inserts the results in the divine counsel, the inexcusableness of man appears as telically given with the self-manifestation of God. Ver. 21, as in general even ver. 18, contains the perverse conduct of men manifesting itself in the course of human history, on account of which God, who foresees it, has in His natural self-manifestation made their inexcusableness His aim. Inexcusable they are intended to be; and that indeed on account of the fact, that, although they had known God (namely from that natural revelation), they have not glorified Him as God. — διὸρι] as in ver. 19, only to be separated by a comma from what precedes: inexcusable on this account, because. — γνώρις] not: cum agnoscere potuissent (Flatt, Nielsen; also as early as Oecumenius); nor yet: although they knew God, so that it would be contemporaneous with οὐκ... ἔδοξασαν. So Philippi and van Hengel;
also Delitzsch, biib. Psychol. p. 346. They had attained the knowledge from the revelation of nature (for to this, according to vv. 19, 20, we must refer it, and not, with Rückert, to the history in Genesis of the original revelation, but only actu directo, so far as that same self-manifestation of God had presented itself objectively to their cognition; the actus reflexus remained absent (comp. Delitzsch, p. 347), and with them who keep down the truth ἐν δόξαις, ver. 18, the issue was not to the praise of God, etc.; so that γνώριμος is thus previous to the οὐχ ... ἐδόξασαν. Paul sets forth the historical emergence of that for which they were inexcusable. They had known God, and yet it happened that they did not praise Him, etc. — οὐχ ὁς Θεὸν ἐδόξασαν ἢ ψιχαρ. It would have been becoming for them to have rendered to God as such, agreeably to His known nature, praise and thanks; but they did neither the one nor the other. Regarding ὁς in the sense: according to the measure of His divine quality, comp. on John i. 14. The praising and thanksgiving exhaust the notion of the adoration, which they should have offered to God. — ἀλλ’ ἐματ. ἐν τοῖς διαλ. αὐτῶν] but they were frustrated in their thoughts (comp. 1 Cor. iii. 20), so that the conceptions, ideas, and reflections, which they formed for themselves regarding the Deity, were wholly devoid of any intrinsic value corresponding with the truth. Comp. Eph. iv. 17. The ματαιότης is a specific attribute of heathenism. Jer. ii. 5; 2 Kings xvii. 5; Ps. xciv. 11. Comp. also Acts xiv. 15; Judith vi. 4. — καὶ ἐσκοτίσθη κ.τ.λ. forms a climax to the foregoing. Comp. Eph. iv. 18, i. 18. Their heart that had been rendered by the ματαιόθησαν unintelligent, incapable of discerning the true and right, became dark, completely deprived of the light of the divine ἀλήθεια that had come to them by the revelation of nature. καρδία, like ἡ, denotes the whole internal seat of life, the power which embraces all the activity of reason and will within the personal consciousness. Comp. on Eph. i. 18; Delitzsch, p. 250. To take ἀσύνετος here in a proleptic sense (see on Matth. xii. 13) is quite inappropriate, because it destroys the climax. Comp. moreover on ἀσύνετος, Wisd. xi. 15; as also on the entire delineation of Gentile immorality, ver. 20 ff.; Wisd. xiii.−xv. This passage as a whole, and in its details, presents unmistakeable reminiscences of this section of the book of

Vv. 22, 23. In a false conceit of wisdom (comp. 1 Cor. i. 17 ff.) this took place (viz. what has just been announced in ἔμπαθενθῷς...κατοικία), and what a horrible actual result it had! — The construction is independent, no longer hanging on the διότι in ver. 21 (Glöckler, Ewald); the further course of the matter is described. While they said that they were wise (comp. 1 Cor. iii. 21), they became foolish. Comp. Jer. x. 24 f. This becoming foolish must be understood as something self-incurred—produced through the conceit of independence—as is required by the description of God's retribution on them in ver. 24; therefore the "dirigente Deo," which Grotius understands along with it in accordance with 1 Cor. i. 21, is here foreign to the connection. The explanation of Köllner, Baumgarten-Crusius, and others, including Usteri: "they have shown themselves as fools," is erroneous, because the aorist passive in ver. 21 does not admit of a similar rendering. — For examples of ταῦτα-κειν, dictitare, in the sense of unfounded assertion (Acts xxiv. 9, xxv. 19; Rev. ii. 2), see Raphel, Xenoph. and Kypke. Comp. Dem. Phil. i. 46, iii. 9; Herodian, iii. 12, 9. Their pretended wisdom was a μάρτιος δοξοσοφία, Plat. Soph. p. 231 B. We may add that this definition is not aimed at the Gentile philosophers, who came much later and in fact did not do what is declared in ver. 23 (comp. Calvin), but generally at the conceit of wisdom (1 Cor. i. 21), which is necessarily connected with an estrangement from divine truth, and from which therefore idolatry also, with its manifold self-invented shapes, must have proceeded. For heathenism is not the primeval religion, from which man might gradually have risen to the knowledge of the true God, but is, on the contrary, the result of a falling away from the known original revelation of the true God in His works. Instead of the practical recognition and preservation of the truth thus given comes the self-wisdom rendering them foolish, and idolatry in its train. — καὶ ἁλαξ. κ.τ.λ.] and they exchanged the majesty of the imperishable God for a likeness of an image of a perishable man, etc., i.e. instead of making, as they ought to have done, the glory of the eternal God manifested to them in the revelation of nature—יְהֹוָ֫֔לֶל, i.e. His glorious perfection (ver. 20)—the object of their adoration, they chose for that purpose what was shaped like an image of a perishable man, etc.; comp. Ps. cvii. 20; Jer. ii. 11. The év (comp. Ecclus. vii. 18) is instrumental, as is elsewhere the simple dative (Herod. vii. 152; Soph. Nicod. fr. 400, Dind.): thereby, that they made and adored such an ὄμοιωμα, and on the other hand rejected the glory of God, which they ought to have worshipped. Comp. LXX. Ps. i.c.; ἕλλαξαν τὴν δόξαν αὐτῶν ἐν ὄμοιωματι μόσχου. On the genitive eikόνος comp. also 1 Macc. iii. 48; Rev. ix. 7; and on ὄμοιωμα itself in the sense of likeness, v. 14, vi. 5, viii. 3; Phil. ii. 7; Ecclus. xxxviii. 28; 2 Kings xvi. 10; Isa. xl. 18; 1 Sam. vi. 5; Plat. Phaedr. p. 250 A; Parm. p. 132 D. It is not mere similarity, but conformity with the object of comparison concerned as agreeing therewith in appearance; see also Holsten, z. Ev. des Paul. u. Petr. p. 440; Pfleiderer in Hilgenfeld's Zeitschr. p. 523 f.—καὶ πετειν. κ. τετραπ. κ. ἐρπ.] No doubt as Paul, in using ἄνθρωπον, thought of the forms of the Hellenic gods, so in πετειν. κ.τ.λ. he had in his mind the Egyptian worship of animals (Ibis, Apis, serpents). Philo, Leg. ad. Caj. p. 566, 570. For passages from profane authors respecting the folly (at which the φαρτός here also points) of image-worship, see especially Dougtaeus, Anal. 69, p. 102, Grotius and Wetstein. We may add that, like the previous φαρτός ἄνθρωπον, the genitives πετεινῶν κ.τ.λ. are dependent on eikόνος, not on ὄμοιωματι (van Hengel), which is less natural and not required by the singular eikόνος, that in fact refers to each particular instance in which a man, birds, etc. were copied for purposes of divine adoration by means of statues and other representations.
CHAP. L 24.

Ver. 24. Wherefore (as a penal retribution for their apostasy) God also gave them up in the lusts of their hearts to impurity. καὶ, also, indicates the giving up as a thing corresponding to the guilt. Comp. on Phil. ii. 9. —ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθ. τ. κ. αὐτ.] contains that, in which they were involved, i.e. the moral condition in which they were found when they were given up by God to impurity. Comp. ver. 27; Eph. ii. 3; Bernhardy, p. 209. The instrumental rendering (Erasmus, Er. Schmid, Glöckler and Krehl) is unnecessary, because the immediate literal sense of év is quite sufficient, and the former is less suitable as to sense, since it conveys something which is obvious of itself. —παρέδῶκειν] expresses the real active giving up on the part of God. The favourite explanation of it by εἰλασμένος, so often resorted to since Origen and Chrysostom, is nothing but a rationalising gloss at variance with the literal meaning. To the Apostle God is the living God, who does not passively permit the retributive consequences of fidelity or of apostasy—thus, as it were, letting them run their course, as an artificer does with his wheel work—but Himself, everywhere active, pervades and effectively develops the arrangements which He has made. If then God has so arranged that man by apostasy from Him should fall into moral impurity, and that thus sin shall be punished by sin (and this connection of sin with sin is in accordance both with experience and Scripture, Is. vi. 10; Job viii. 4; Ps. lxix. 28, lxxxi. 13; Mark iv. 12), this arrangement can only be carried out in reality through the effective action of its originator; and God Himself must give up the apostates unto impurity, inasmuch as it is by His doing that that moral connection is in point of fact accomplished. Comp. Acts vii. 42; Rom. ix. 19; also 2 Thess. ii. 11 f.; and the rabbinical passages quoted by Schoettgen, especially from Pirke Aboth, c. 4: "Festina ad praeceptum leve tanquam ad grave, et fugite transgressionem; praeceptum enim trahit praeceptum, et transgressionem transgressionem: quia merces praecepti praeceptum est, et transgressionis transgressio." Consequently, if the understanding of ἵππωκειν in its strictly proper and positive meaning is quite in keeping with the universal agency of God, in His physical and moral government of the world, without, however, making God appear as the author of sin, which, on the contrary, has its root in the evil of man, we must reject as insufficient the privative interpretation that became current after Augustine and Oecumenius, which Calovius has adopted in part, and Rückert entirely. Comp. Philippi, who thinks of the withdrawal of the Divine Spirit and its results, though in the sense of a positive divine infliction of punishment. This withdrawal, through which man is left in the lurch by God, is the immediate negative precursor of the παρεξώκεν (Ecclus. iv. 19). Reiche thinks that Paul here avails himself, with more or less consciousness of its being erroneous, of the general view of the Jews regarding the origin of the peculiar wickedness of the Gentiles (Ps. lxxxi. 13; Prov. xxi. 8; Ecclus. iv. 19; Wisd. x. 12, xiii. 1; Acts vii. 42); and that this representation of moral depravity as a divine punishment is to be distinguished from the Christian doctrinal system of the Apostle. But how very inconsistent it is with the character of Paul thus consciously to bring forward what is erroneous, and that too with so solemn a repetition (vv. 26, 28)! And is it not an arrangement accordant with experience, that apostasy from God is punished by an ever deeper fall into immorality? Can this arrangement, made as it is by God "justo judicio" (Calvin), be carried out otherwise than by God? Analogous are even heathen sayings, such as Aesch. Agam. 764 ff., and the heathen idea of the θεοβαλβεία; comp. also Ruhnken, ad Vellej. ii. 57, 3. But just as man, while his fidelity is rewarded by God through growth in virtue, remains withal free and does not become a virtuous machine; so also he retains his freedom, while God accomplishes the development of His arrangement, in accordance with which sin is born of sin. He gives himself up (Eph. iv. 19), while he is given up by God to that tragic nexus of moral destiny; and he becomes no machine of sin, but possesses at every moment the capacity of μετάνοια, which the very reaction resulting from the feeling of the most terrible misery of sin—punished through sin—is designed to produce. Therefore, on the one hand, man always remains responsible for his deterioration (ver. 32, ii. 6, iii. 5, vii. 14); and, on the other, that punishment of sin, in which the teleological law of the development of evil fulfils itself, includes no contradiction of the holiness of God. For this reason the view of Kölner—that the Apostle's idea is to be separated from its Jewish and temporal form, and that we must assume as the Christian truth in it, that the apostasy of men from God has brought them into deepest misery, as certainly as the latter is self-inflicted—is a superfluous uneexegetical evasion, to which Fritzsche also has recourse. — ἄκαθαρσίαν spurious, impurity, and that lustful (comp. Gal. v. 19; Eph. iv. 19; Col.

1 It is at bottom identical with the permissive rendering. Therefore Chrysostom not only explains it by εἰλασμένος, but illustrates the matter by the instance of a general who leaves his soldiers in the battle, and thus deprives them of his aid, and abandons them to the enemy. Theodoret explains it: τῆς ἀλεξίας προμηθείας εὐμῶνως, and employs the comparison of an abandoned vessel. Theophylact illustrates the ἵππωκειν by the example of a physician who gives up a refractory patient (ἱππόδωκον αὐτῷ τῇ ἐπὶ πλέων νοσεῖν).
iii. 5), as is plain from the following context; not generally: "all action and conduct dishonouring the creaturely glory of man" (Hofmann). The τὸν ἄτιμαξεσθαι may be taken either as the genitive of the purpose: that they might be dishonoured (Rückert, Philippi, van Hengel), or as the genitive of more precise definition depending on ἀκαθαρσία. (impurity of the becoming dishonoured, i.e. which consisted therein; so Fritzsche, Winer, Tholuck and de Wette). The latter (see Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 230 f.) is the more probable, partly because the ἄτιμαξεσθαι κ.τ.λ. already constitutes the impurity itself, and does not merely attend it as a result; and partly on account of the parallel in ver. 28, where τοῖς κ.τ.λ. is likewise epeexgetical. ἄτιμαξεσθαι is not however the middle, whereby the αὐτοπαθεία would be expressed, for which there is no empirical usage, but the passive: that their bodies were dishonoured among themselves, mutually. This ἐν ἑαυτοῖς refers to the persons (αὐτῶν, not to be written αὐτῶν), not asserting that the ἄτιμαξεσθαι takes place on themselves, which is in fact already conveyed by τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν, but rather based on the nature of participation in unchastity, according to which they bring one on the other reciprocally the dishonouring of the body. In this personal reciprocity of those who practise unchastity with each other lies the characteristic abominableness of the dishonouring of the body; and this point is designated by ἐν ἑαυτοῖς more expressly, because in contrast to non-participating third persons, than it would have been by ἐν ἀλλιῷκατατα (Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 6, 20).—The vices of unchastity, which moreover are still here referred to quite generally (it is otherwise in ver. 26 f.), and not specially as unnatural, according to their disgraceful nature, in whatever forms they may have been practised, are specifically heathen (in fact, even partially belonging to the heathen cultus), as a consequence of apostasy from the true God (comp. 1 Thess. iv. 5). As they again prevail even among Christians, wherever this apostasy spreads through unbelief, they must verify even in Christendom their heathen nature, and, along with the likewise

1 Hofmann refers the reading which he follows, ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, to the σώματα, but explains this: the body of each person in himself; consequently, as if the expression were ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, and that in the sense in semel ipsa. With the reading ἐν ἑαυτοῖς we should rather render it simply: in order that among them (i.e. in their common intercourse) their bodies should be dishonoured. Such was to be the course of things among them.
essentially heathen πλεονεξία, pre-eminently exclude from the salvation of the Messiah (Eph. v. 5 f.; Col. iii. 5; 1 Cor. vi. 9 f.).

With ἀτιμάζετες τ. σώματι compare the opposite, 1 Thess. iv. 4, where τὸ ἐαυτῶν σκέυος must be explained of the body as the vessel of the Ego proper.

Ver. 25. ὡτίνες μετηλαξαν κ.τ.λ.] as those who exchanged, etc. In this description of the character of those who are given up, attached to ver. 24, Paul makes once more apparent the motive which determined God to give them up. The words are a renewed tragic commentary (comp. vv. 22, 23) on the διό, ver. 24. On ἀτριτις, quippe qui, which brings up the class to which one belongs, and thereby includes the specification of the reason, see Hermann, ad Soph. Οἰ. 688; Matthiae, p. 1073. Hofmann erroneously makes a relative protasis begin with ἡτίνες, with which then δία τοῦτο κ.τ.λ., ver. 26, would be connected by way of apodosis: them, who exchanged etc., God has therefore given up. This would not be inconsistent with αὐτῶν in ver. 26, which would then be resumptive; but the very praise of God, in which ver. 25 terminates, and still more the concluding ἄμην, which can only indicate the end of the sentence (comp. ix. 5, xi. 36; Gal. i. 5; Eph. iii. 21), ought to have decidedly precluded such a forced intermixture of sentences, which is not to be justified by subtleties. — The compound μετηλαξε (exchanged) is more significant than ἡλαξαν (changed) in ver. 23. — τὴν ἀληθή τοῦ Θεοῦ to be taken entirely in harmony with the expression τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Θεοῦ in ver. 23; therefore τοῦ Θεοῦ is to be taken as genitive of the subject: the truth of God, the true divine reality, so as to make it in point of actual meaning, though not in the abstract form of the conception, identical with: “true God” (Luther, and most expositors, including Rückert, de Wette, Tholuck, Fritzsche, Philippi, van Hengel). It is differently rendered by Wolf, whom Köllner follows: the truth revealed to the Gentiles by God. Reiche and Mehring (following Pareus, Camerarius, Estius, Seb. Schmid, and Cramer) take it as the true knowledge of God, so that Θεοῦ would be genitive of the object. Compare Piscator, Usteri and Glöckler, who understand by it the original consciousness of God. Opposed to these views is the exact parallel in which ver. 25 stands to ver. 23, so that τοῦ Θεοῦ ought not to be taken without necessity as having a different reference in the two verses. \( \tau \nu \upsilon \alpha \lambda \iota \theta \). P. \( \Theta \epsilon \omega \omicron \upsilon \) is explained concretely by \( \tau \nu \upsilon \kappa \tau \iota \sigma \alpha \nu \tau \alpha \) in the second half of the verse. — \( \epsilon \nu \tau \phi \psi \epsilon \omicron \delta \epsilon i \) with the lie; \( \epsilon \nu \) as in ver. 23. By this Paul means, in contrast to \( \tau \nu \upsilon \alpha \lambda \iota \theta \). P. \( \Theta \epsilon \omega \omicron \upsilon \) (but otherwise than in iii. 7), the false gods, which are \( \kappa \alpha \tau ' \epsilon \xi o \chi \nu \nu \) the \( \psi \epsilon \omicron \delta \delta \omicron \sigma \) in concrete, the negation of the truth of God. Comp. on 1 Cor. viii. 4 f., x. 20. Grotius has aptly said: “pro Deo vero sumserunt imaginarios.” Comp. Is. xliiv. 20; Jer. iii. 10, xxxi. 25, xvi. 19, al.; Philo, vit. Mos. p. 678 C, p. 679 A. — \( \kappa \alpha \iota \epsilon \sigma \epsilon \beta \delta \alpha \sigma \theta \gamma \sigma \alpha \). . . \( \kappa \tau \iota \sigma \alpha \nu \tau \alpha \) more precise explanation of the first clause of the verse. — \( \epsilon \sigma \epsilon \beta \). \( \kappa \). \( \epsilon \lambda \alpha \tau \rho \). The former is general (coluertunt), the latter took place through sacrifices, and other definite rites and services; hence Paul designates his own specific service of God in ver. 8 by \( \lambda \alpha \tau \rho \epsilon \omicron \nu \). \( \sigma \epsilon \beta \alpha \omicron \omicron \mu \alpha i \), in Homer: to be afraid of (II. vi. 167, 417), is employed in the later Greek like \( \sigma \beta \omicron \omicron \mu \alpha i \) in the sense to revere, Orph. Arg. 550, Aqu. Hos. x. 5. In the N. T. it only occurs here. — \( \tau \phi \kappa \tau \iota \sigma \epsilon i \) Corresponding with the verb standing next to it, so that the accusative is to be supplied with \( \epsilon \sigma \epsilon \beta \). See Matthiae, § 428, 2. — \( \pi \alpha \rho \alpha \tau \tau . \). \( \kappa \tau \iota \sigma \alpha \nu \tau \alpha \) in the sense of comparison: praes creatore, in which case the context alone decides whether the preference of the one before the other is only relative, or whether it excludes the latter altogether (see on Luke xviii. 14; and van Hengel on our passage). The second case is that which occurs here, in accordance both with the nature of the case, seeing that the Gentiles did not worship the Creator at all, and with the immediate connection (\( \mu \epsilon \tau \iota \lambda \lambda \alpha \xi \alpha \) . . . \( \epsilon \nu \tau \phi \psi \epsilon \omicron \delta \epsilon i \)). The sense therefore substantially amounts to praeterito creatore (Hilary), or relictio creatore (Cyprian), i.e. they honoured the creature and not the Creator, whom they ought to have honoured. Theophylact says aptly, with reference to the comparative \( \pi \alpha \rho \alpha \tau \tau \); \( \epsilon \kappa \tau \iota \sigma \epsilon \iota \sigma \). . . \( \tau \omicron \psi \epsilon \omicron \delta \delta \omicron \) \( \tau \epsilon \gamma \kappa \lambda \lambda \alpha \) \( \epsilon \tau \alpha \iota \rho \)\. So in substance also Beza, Estius, and others, including Reiche, Tholuck, Olshausen, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Krehl, Reithmayr, Maier, Philippi, van Hengel. The relative interpretation: more than the Creator (Vulgate, Erasmus, Luther, Castalio, Grotius, Ammon, Rückert, and others), is therefore in point of fact erroneous. The contra creatorem, which Hammond, Koppe, Flatt, Fritzscbe and Mehring find here, may likewise be traced to the sense of comparison (see Bernhardy, p. 259; Winer, p.

1 Not “the truth, which God Himself is” (Hofmann); but that, which God is in true reality. That is just the adequate substance of His δόξα.
377 [E. T. 504]; and the passages from Plato in Ast. Lex. III. p. 28), but has against it the fact, that in the whole context Paul presents the matter in the light of a μετάλλαξις, of an exchanging the true for the false, not of hostility to the true. From that point of view the Gentiles have worshipped the creature, and not the Creator. Quite parallel is παρ' ἐκείνων in Luke, xviii. 14, Lachm. — The doxology: who is praised, παραξύνεται, not: celebrandus (comp. on Eph. i. 3; 2 Cor. xi. 31; Mark xiv. 61), for ever! Amen,—is a natural effusion of deeply-moved piety, called forth by the detestable contrast of the Gentile abominations just described, without any further special design (Koppe: "ne ipse in majestatem divinam videri possit;" comp. Tholuck).

Vv. 26, 27. Διὰ τοῦτο] Beginning an independent sentence (against Hofmann, see on ver. 25), refers to the description δίτυνας...κτίσαντα contained in ver. 25. The giving up is set forth once more (comp. ver. 24, διὸ) as the punishment of apostasy, and now indeed with such increasing force of delineation, that out of the category which is kept quite general in ver. 24 unnatural sensual abominations are specially adduced. — εἰς πάθη ἀτιμίας] Genitive of quality. Comp. on πνεῦμα ἀγαθόν in ver. 4, and Bornemann, Schol. in Luc. p. 21. Parallel to the passions of a disgraceful character is εἰς ἀκαθαρσίαν in ver. 24; comp. Col. iii. 5; but the stronger expression here selected prepares the way for the following description of a peculiarly abominable form of vice. Still the unnatural element is not implied in πάθη ἀτιμίας itself (Hofmann: they are a dishonouring, not merely of the body, but of "humanity"), since morally dishonouring passions are the agents, not only in the case of unnatural, but also in that of natural unchastity. — Respecting τί γὰρ, namque, for indeed (vii. 7; 2 Cor. x. 8), see Hermann, ad Soph. Trach. 1015; Hartung, I. p. 115; Klotz, ad Devar. p. 749 ff. — The expressions θηλείαι and ἀρσενεῖς, their females and their males, not γυναικεῖς and ἄνδρες, are chosen because the predominant point of view is simply that of sex; Reiche thinks: out of contempt, because the words would also be used of beasts; but in fact, such unnatural things are foreign to the very beasts. Besides, the words are used even of the gods (Homer, Π. viii. 7, and frequently). — τίνι φυσικῷ Χρηστίν of their sex, not: of the male, which is unsuitable to the vice indicated. Regarding χρῆσιν in the sense of sexual use, see Wetstein and Kypke, also Coray, ad Heliodor. Aeg., p. 31. — How very prevalent among the Gentiles (it was found also among the Jews, see Schoettgen, Hor. in loc.) was the so-called Lesbian vice, λεσβαία (Lucian, D. Mer. 5, 2), women with women abusing their sex (tribades, in Tertullian frictrices), see Salmasius, foen. Trapez. p. 143 f., 152 f.; and the commentators on Ael. V. H. iii. 12. Comp. the ἐταιρίστριαι in Plat. Symp. p. 191 E, and the ασέλγεια τριβακῆ in Luc. Amor. 28; and see Ruhnken, ad Tim. p. 124, and generally Rosenbaum, Gesch. d. Lustseuche im Alterth. ed. 2, 1845. — That ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ after the preceding τέ makes the latter an anakolouthon, is commonly assumed, but altogether without foundation, because in τὲ γὰρ the τέ does not necessarily require any correlative. See Klotz l.c. If it were put correlatively, we should have in ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ the other corresponding member really present (as is actually the case, e.g. in Plat. Symp. p. 186 E), which however would in that case inappropriately stand out with greater emphasis and weight than the former1 (Stallbaum, ad Plat. Polit. p. 270 D, Rep. p. 367 C; Dissen, ad Pind. Ol. viii. 56; Klausen, ad Aesch. Choeph. p. 199). The reading τέ (instead of δὲ) in Elz., as well as the entire omission of the particle (C, min., Origen, Jerome) is a too hasty emendation. — εὐκαιρίθησαν] Stronger than the simple form. Comp. Alciphr. iii 67; εὐκαιρίθην εἰς ἔρωτα. Such a state is the πυροῦσθαι in 1 Cor. vii. 9. Moreover, Paul represents here not the heat that precedes the act of unchastity, but that which is kindled in the act itself (κατεργαζόμενοι ... ἀπολαμβάνοντες). — ἀρσενες ἐν ἀρσενε] whilst they, males on males, performed the (known, from ver. 26) unseemliness. On the emphatic juxtaposition of ἀρσ. ἐν ἀρσ. comp. generally Lobeck, ad Aj. 522, and in particular Porphyr. de abst. iv. 20; and Wetstein in loc. On κατεργαζόμεναι, which is used both of evil (ii. 9, vii. 9, xv. 17 f.) and good (v. 3, xv. 18; Phil. ii. 12), but which, as distinguished from ἐργαζόμεναι, always expresses the bringing to pass, the accomplishment, comp. especially ii. 9, and van Hengel thereon; 1 Cor. v. 3; 2 Cor. vii. 10, and the critical remarks thereon. On ἀσχημ. see Gen. xxxv. 7.—ην ἀντι-μισθίαν κ.τ.λ.] The aberration, which Paul means, see in vv. 21-23, 28; it is the aberration from God to idols, not that implied in the sexual perversion of the divine order (Hofmann), which perversion, on the contrary, is brought by δια in ver. 24, and by διὰ τοῦτο in ver. 26, under the point of view of penal retribution for the πλάνη. By the recompense for the πλάνη Paul does not at all mean that the men "have that done to them by their fellows, which they themselves do to theirs" (Hofmann), but rather, in harmony with the connection of cause and effect, the abominable unnatural lusts just described, to which God has given up the Gentiles, and thereby, in recompensing godlessness through such wicked excesses (ver. 18), revealed His δραμα. Therefore also ἦν ἐδε is added, namely, in accordance with the necessity of the holy divine order. See vv. 24, 26, 28. On ἀντιμισθία comp. 2 Cor. vi. 13; Clem. Cor. II. 1. It occurs neither in Greek authors, who have the adjective ἀντιμισθια (Aesch. Suppl. 273), nor in the LXX. or Apocrypha,—ἐν ἑαυτοῖς] on themselves mutually (ἐν ἑαυτοῖς), as in ver. 24. It enhances the sadness of the description. For a number of passages attesting the prevalence of unchastity between man and man, especially of pæderastia among the Gentiles, particularly the Greeks (it was forbidden to the Jews in Lev. xviii. 22), see Becker, Charikl. I. p. 346 ff.; Hermann, Privatalterth. § 29; Bernhardy, Griech. Lit. ed. 2, p. 50 ff. Moreover, Bengel aptly observes regarding the whole of this unreserved exposure of Gentile unchastity: "In peccatis arguendis saepe scapha debet scapha dici. Pudorem praeposterum ii fere postulant, qui pudicitia carent. . . . Gravitas et ardor stilli judicialis proprietate verborum non violat verecundiam." Observe, nevertheless, how the Apostle delineates the female dishonour in less concrete traits than the male. He touches the matter in ver. 26 briefly and clearly enough, but with delicate avoidance of detailed description.

1 Hofmann thinks that with ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ κ.τ.λ. the argument ascends to the greater danger for the continuance of the human race. But that is a purely imported thought. The Apostle's point of view is the moral ἄρσεν, which, in the case of female depravity, comes out most glaringly. And therefore Paul, in order to cast the most tragic light possible on these conditions, puts the brief delineation of female conduct in the foreground, in order then symmetrically to subjoin, with ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ, the male vice as the second part of the filthy category.

Ver. 28. From the previous exclusive description of the sensual vice of the Gentiles, Paul now proceeds to a summary enumeration of yet other vices to which they had been given up by God in punishment of their apostasy.—καθώς] is not causal, but quamadmodum. The giving them up was something corresponding to their disdainful rejection of the knowledge of God, proportionate as punishment. — οὐκ ἐδοκίμασαν] they deemed God not worth (1 Thess. ii. 4); οὐ γὰρ ἀγνοοῖσαν, ἀλλὰ μελέτης εἶναι φησὶ τὰ τολμήματα, Chrysostom. — ἐχειν ἐν ἐπιγνώσει] Their γινώσκον τὸν ὘εόν, derived from the revelation of nature (ver. 21), ought to have been brought by cultivation to an ἐπιγνώσει, that is, to a penetrating and living knowledge of God (see on Eph. i. 17; 1 Cor. xiii. 12); thus they would have attained to the having God ἐν ἐπιγνώσει; but they would not, and so became τὰ ἐθνη τὰ μὴ εἰδότα τὸν ὘εόν, 1 Thess. iv. 5; Gal. iv. 8; Eph. ii. 12; Acts xvii. 30. On ἐχειν ἐν with an abstract noun, which represents the object as appropriated in the action, so that it is possessed in the latter (here in ἐπιγνώσει), comp. Locella, ad Xen. Eph. p. 255. Similar is ἐν ὀργῇ ἐχειν, and the like, Krüger on Thucyd. ii. 8, 3. — εἰς ἀδόκιμον νοῦν] An ingenious paronomasia with οὐκ ἐδοκίμασαν, to set forth the more prominently the recem pense, to which the emphatically repeated ὁ ὘εός also contributes: as they did not esteem God worthy, etc., God gave them up to an unworthy, reprobate νοῦ (the collective power of the mind's action in theoretic and moral cognition). The rendering judiciicxpers (Beza, Glockler and others) is opposed to the genius of the language, even as Bengel turns it, and Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 280, defines it. The ἀδόκιμον of the νοῦ is its blameworthiness according to an objective moral standard, but does not express the mode of thinking which they themselves must condemn among one another (Th. Schott; comp. Hofmann), which is neither to be taken by anticipation from ver. 32, nor extracted from μὴ. — ποιεῖν τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα to do what is not becoming, what is not moral. Comp. 3 Macc. iv. 16. The Stoical distinction between καθήκοντα and κατόρθωμα Paul has not thought of (as Vitringa conceives). The infinitive is epexegetical: so that they do. The participle with μὴ indicates the genus of that which is not seemly (Baeumlein, Partik. p. 296); τὰ οὐ καθήκοντα (comp. Eph. v. 4), would be the unseemly. The negative expression is correlate to the ἀδόκιμος νοῦ.

1 Comp. on vii. 23, and Kluge in the Jahrb. f. D. Th. 1871, p. 329. The νοῦ is ἀδόκιμος when, not receptive for divine truth, it does not determine the ethical conduct in accordance with it.
Vv. 29-31. Πεπληρομένους τάση ἄδικα] a more precise definition of ποιεῖν τὰ μὴ καθήκ.: as those who are full of every unrighteousness (ver. 18). This is the general statement, and all the points subsequently introduced are its several species, so that μετατιθέντος φθόνον and then ψυχυριστάς κ.τ.λ. are oppositions to πεπληρ. τ. ἄδικ. Similar catalogues of sins are 2 Cor. xii. 30; Gal. v. 19 ff.; Eph. v. 3 f.; 1 Tim. i. 9 f.; 2 Tim. iii. 2 ff.—πονηρίας... κακίας] malignity (malice), comp. Eph. iv. 31; Col. iii. 8; Tit. iii. 3...vileness (meanness), the latter, in Aristotle and other writers, opposed to ἁρετή, and translated in Cicero, Tusc. iv. 15, 34, by vitiiositas. Comp. 1 Cor. v. 8.—φόνον] Conceived here as the thought which has filled the man, the ψευδής ὑποεὐθύνη, Homer, Od. xix. 2, comp. Acts ix. 1. On the paronomasia with ψαλλεῖν comp. Gal. v. 21. The latter is just the σημεῖον φύτευες παντάπασι ποιημάς, Dem. 499, 21.—κακοθείας] malicious disposition, whose peculiarity it is ἐπὶ τὸ χείρον ὑπολαμβάνειν τὰ πάντα (Aristotle, Rhet. ii. 13). As the context requires a special vice, we may not adopt, with Erasmus, Calvin, and Homberg, the general signification perversitas, corruptrio morum (Xen. Cyn. xiii. 16; Dem. 542, 11; Plat. Rep. p. 348 D). See regarding the word generally Homberg, Parerg. p. 196; Kypke, II. p. 155 f.—ψυχυραρτ.] whisperers, talebearers, consequently secret slanderers (Dem. 1358, 6); but κατάλαλοι, calumniators, detractors generally, not precisely open ones (Theophylact, Köllner, de Wette and others). Comp. ψυχυρισμοῦς τε καὶ καταλαλιάς, Clem. Cor. i. 35. The construction of καταλαλούς as an adjective with ψυχυραρτ. (Hofmann), must be rejected, because none of the other elements has an adjectival definition annexed to it, and because καταλαλάλως would not add to the notion of ψυχυραρτ. anything characteristic in the way of more precise definition. ψυχυραρτ. would be better fitted to form a limiting definition of καταλάλως. But in 2 Cor. xii. 20 also, both ideas stand independently side by side. —θεοτυγχαίοις] hated by God, Deo odibiles (Vulgate). This passive rendering of the word which belongs especially to the tragedians (Pollux, i. 21), so that it is equivalent to θεός ἐχθαρφώμενος (comp. Soph. Αφ. 458), is clearly attested by the usus logou πιείναι as the only correct one. See Eurip. Troad. 1213, Cycl. 395, 598, Neophr. ap. Stob. serm. 20, p. 172. Comp. θεοτυγχάνως in Aesch. Choeph. 635, Fritzsche in loc., and Wetstein. Since no passage whatever supports the active signification, and since even Suidas and Oecumenius clearly betray that they knew the active meaning adopted by them to be a deviation from the usage of the ancient writers,1 we must reject, with Koppe, Rückert, Fritzsche, de Wette, Philippi, Baumgarten-Crusius, and Hofmann, the interpretation, Dei osores, that has been preferred by the majority since the time of Theodoret.2 Even the analogous forms that have been appealed to, ϑεομισθής, βροτοστυγῆς (Aesch. Choeph. 51, Prom. 799), are to be taken as passives, and therefore testify against the active interpretation.3 Comp. ϑεοβάρβης, stricken of God, Herod. viii. 137, al. In particular, ϑεομισθής is quite the same as ϑεοστυγῆς, the opposite of ϑεοφλής, beloved of God. (See Plat. Rep. p. 612 E, Euth. p. 8 A; Dem. 1486, ult.; Arist. Ran. 443.) Comp. θεω μισητόν, Wisd. xiv. 9; and, as regards the idea, the Homeric ὁ χε θεοίς ἀπέχθηται μικάρεσιν, Od. κ. 74. The accentuation ϑεοστυγῆς, approved of even by Grotius and Beza, to distinguish it from the passive ϑεοστυγῆς, is nothing but an ancient (Suidas) unsupported fiction. See Buttmann, II. p. 371, Winer, p. 53 [E. T. 61]. God-hating is expressed by μισόθεος, Lucian, Tim. 35, Aesch. Ag. 1090; comp. φιλόθεος, God-loving. The adoption, nevertheless, of the active sense was occasioned by the consideration: “ut in passivo positum dicatur, nulla est ratio, quum P. hic homines ex vitiis evidentibus reos faciat,” Calvin; but even granting a certain unsuitableness in the pas-

1 Suidas says: Θεοστυγῆς θεομισθής, οἱ ὑπὸ Θεοῦ μισοῦντες παρὰ τῇ ἀνοστάλχῃ θεοστυγείς οὐχ οἱ ὑπὸ Θεοῦ μισοῦντες, ἀλλὰ οἱ μισοῦντες τὸν Θεὸν. Oecumenius: Θεοστυγῆς δὲ ὁ τοῦ ὑπὸ Θεοῦ μισοῦντος, οὐ γὰρ αὐτῷ τοῦτο δεῖ τις πρόκειται νῦν, ἀλλὰ τοὺς μισοῦντας Θεὸν. These negative definitions, which both give, manifestly point to the use of the word in other authors, from which Paul here departs. It is doubtful whether Clement, Cor. I. 35, where there is an echo of our passage, had in view the active or the passive sense of θεοστυγῆς. He uses indeed the evidently active θεοστυγῆ, but adds at the close of the list of sins: ταύτα οἱ πράσσοντες συνηγαλίζοντο τῷ Θεῷ υπάρχουσι. Chrysostom does not express his opinion regarding the word.

2 The Dei osores was taken to refer to the heathen vice of wrath against the gods conceived as possessing human passions. See Grotius and Reiche. Others have understood it variously. Tholuck thinks of accusers of providence, Promethean characters; Ewald, of blasphemers of God; Calvin, of those who have a horror of God on account of His righteousness. Thus there is introduced into the general expression what the context gives no hint of. This applies also to Luther’s gloss: “the real Epicureans, who live as if there were no God.”

3 Even in Clem. Hom. i. 12, there is nothing whatever in the connection opposed to the passive rendering of θεοστυγῆς.
sive sense, still we should not be justified in giving an explanation contrary to the usus loquendi; we should be obliged to abide by the view that Paul had mixed up a less suitable term among the others. But this objection is diminished, if we take θεοστη, in accordance with the idea of divine holiness, as a characteristic designation of infamous evil-doers in general. So Fritzsche, and also Philippi. Comp. Plat. Legg. viii. p. 838 B: θεομοση . . . και αλοχρων αδσιστα. And it vanishes altogether, if, leaving the word in its strict signification, hated of God, we recognise in it a summary judgment of moral indignation respecting all the preceding particulars; so that, looking back on these, it forms a resting point in the disgraceful catalogue, the continuation of which is then carried on by υβριστας κ.τ.λ. According to Hofmann, θεοστηγερνυ. is an adjective qualifying υβριστας. But we do not see why precisely this single point in the entire catalogue, insulance (the notion of which is not to be arbitrarily heightened, so as to make it denote "the man-despiser who treads upon his fellows"), among so many particulars, some of them even worse, should be accompanied by an epithet, and one, too, of so extreme severity. — The continuation begins with a threefold description of self-exaltation, and that in a descending climax. Regarding the distinction between υβρισταται, the insolent (qui prae superbia non solum contemnunt alios, sed etiam contumeliose tractant, comp. 1 Tim. i. 13), υπερφαινοι, the proud (who, proud of real or imaginary advantages, despise others), and αλαξωνες (boasters, swaggerers, without exactly intending to despise or insult others with their vainglory), see Tittmann, Synon. N. T. p. 73 f. Comp. Grotius and Wetstein; on αλας, especially Ruhnke. ad Tim. p. 28, Ast, ad Theophr. Char. 23. If υπερψηφ. be taken as adjective with the latter (Hofmann), then the vice, which is invariably and intrinsically immoral, would be limited merely to a particular mode of it. — εφευρ. κακων] devisers (Anacr. xii. 3) of evil things, quite general; not to be limited to things of 1 For neither καταλας. nor υπερψηφ. are to be taken adjectives. See on those words. Hofmann seems to have adopted such a view, merely in order to gain analogies in the text for his inappropriate treatment of the objectionable θεοστηγερνυ as an adjective.

2 See Xen. Mem. i. 7, 1 f., where αλαξωνελα is the antithesis of δρατα. It belongs to the category of the φευδεσθαι, Aesch. adv. Cleor. 99; Plat. Lys. p. 218 D. Compare also 2 Tim. iii. 2; Clem. Cor. I. 35.
luxury, with Grotius; nor, with Hofmann, to evils which they desire to do to others. Comp. 2 Macc. vii. 31, and the passages from Philo in Loesner; also Tacit. Ann. iv. 11, and Virg. Aen. ii. 161. — ἄσωνθέτους] irrational, unreflecting, who, in what they do and leave undone, are not determined by the σύνεσις, by morally intelligent insight. Luther rightly says: “Mr. Unreason going rashly to work [Hans Unvernunft, mit dem Kopfe hindurch].” So also Ecclus. xv. 7. The rendering devoid of conscience (according to Suidas) deviates from the proper signification of the word. — ἄσωνθέτους] makes a paronomasia with the foregoing, and means, not unsociable (Castalio, Tittmann, Ewald, comp. Hofmann), for which there is no warrant of usage, but covenant-breakers (Jer. iii. 8, 10 f.; Suidas, Hesychius; see also Dem. 383, 6). On ἀστόργυ. (without the natural affection of love) and ἀνελεήμ. (unmerciful), see Tittmann, Synon. p. 69. — The succession of the accumulated particulars is not arranged according to a systematic scheme, and the construction of such a scheme leads to arbitrary definition of the import of individual points; but still their distribution is so far in accordance with approximate categories, that there are presented: — 1st, The general heathen vices, τεπληρωμένοις .... κακία; 2nd, dispositions inimical to others, μεστοί .... κακοθείας, and calumniatory speeches, ψιθυρ., καταλάλ.; both series concluding with the general θεοστυγείς; then, 3rd, The arrogant character, ἐβρισσας .... ἀλαζόνας; and finally, 4th, A series of negative particulars (all with a privative), but headed by the positive, general ἐφευρ. κακίων. This negative series portrays the want of dutiful affection in family life (γον. ἀπεθ.), of intelligence (ἀσωνετ.), fidelity (ἀσωθ.), and love (ἀστόργυ. ἀνελ.), consequently the want of every principle on which moral action is based.

Ver. 32. οἴτινεσ] quippe qui, of such a character, that they, cannot be the specification of a reason, as in ver. 25, and cannot consequently be intended to repeat once more the laying of the blame on themselves, since ver. 32 merely continues the description of the wickedness. It rather serves to introduce the awful completion of this description of vice; and that in such a way, that the Gentile immorality is brought clearly to light as an opposition to knowledge and conscience, and is thereby at the last very evidently shown to be wholly inexcusable (comp. ii. 1). — τὸ δικαίωμα τ. Θεοῦ i.e. that which God as Lawgiver and Judge has ordained; what He has determined, and demands, as right. Comp. Krüger on Thuc. i. 41, 1; and see on v. 16. Paul means the natural law of the moral consciousness (ii. 15), which determines: ὅτι ὁ τὰ τοιαύτα πράσσοντες κ.τ.λ. This τὸ τ.κ.τ.λ. therefore is not to be treated as a parenthesis. — εἰρενώντες although they have discerned (comp. on ver. 28), not merely γνώντες; but so much the greater is the guilt. — θανάτου What in the view of the heathen was conceived of as the state of punishment in Hades (comp. Philippi and Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 277), which was incurred through vice and crime, Paul designates, in accordance with the truth involved in it (comp. Plat. Rep. p. 330 D), from his standpoint as θανάτοις, and by this he means eternal death (comp. 2 Thess. i. 8); not temporal (Bengel, van Hengel, Mehring); or execution (Grotius, Hofmann); also not indefinitely severe punishments, the misery of sin, and so forth (so even Fritzsche and de Wette). — συνεδόκοντες τοῖς πράσσοντες they are consenting with them that do them (comp. Luke xi. 48; Acts viii. 1; 1 Cor. vii. 12; 1 Mac. i. 60; 2 Mac. xi. 24). They not only do those things, but are also in their moral judgment (so wholly antagonistic to conscience has the latter become in the abandonment unto which God has decreed them, ver. 28) in agreement with others who so act. Bengel well remarks: "pejus est sucevitur; nam qui malum patrat, sua sibi cupiditate abducitur," etc., and how sharply are we otherwise accustomed to see and judge the mote in the eye of another! (Matth. vii. 3). This climax to the description of immorality, moreover, is neither to be referred with Grotius and Baumgarten-Crusius to the philosophers, who approved of several vices (paederastia, revenge, etc.) or regarded them as adiaphora; nor with Heumann and Ewald to the magistrates, who left many crimes unpunished and even furthered them by their own example; but, in harmony with the quite general delineation of Gentile depravity, to be taken as a general feature marking the latter, which is thus laid bare in the deepest

1 Melancthon says well against this view: "P. non loquitur de politica gubernatione, quae tantum externa facta punit: verum de judicio proprio in cujusque conscientia intuente Deum."

2 The climax lies necessarily in ἀλλὰ καί (in opposition to Reiche, Comm. crit. p. 6).
slough of moral perversity. — The πράσσοντες and πράσσονσι are more comprehensive than the simple ποιοῦσιν (do), designating the pursuit of these immoralities as the aim of their activity. See on John iii. 20. Comp. Rom. ii. 3, vii. 15, xiii. 4; Dem. de cor. 62: τί προσήκον ἢν ἔλεσθαι πράττειν κ. ποιεῖν.
CHAPTER II.

Ver. 5. After δεικνύω. D*K*L*N, min., and several versions and Fathers, including Or., read καί, which is adopted by Mill, Wetst. Matth. and Fritzsche. Against it is the greatly preponderant authority of the uncials, and the suspicion of having been added by way of relief to the accumulation of genitives. — Ver. 8. μέν after δεικνύω is wanting in B D* G N*, and is omitted by Lachm. and Tisch. (8), but was easily passed over from inattention as seeming superfluous. — The order δραγή καί θρούσ (thus also Lachm. and Tisch) is decisively attested. — Ver. 13. The article before νόμου, which Elz. and Fritzsche read both times, but which Lachm. and Tisch. both times omit, is wanting in A B D E (which however has it in the first case) G N, 31, 46, Damascus; and betrays itself in the general form of the saying as inserted in order to denote the Mosaic law. — Ver. 14. ποιήσα] Lachm. and Tisch. read ποιήσαν, following A B N, min., Clem. Or. Damascus. (D* G have ποιήσαν). The plural is an amendment suggested by the context. — Ver. 16. Instead of οίκε Lachm. following A and some Fathers, has οίκε; an interpretation; as is also εν ημέρα in B. — Ver. 17. Εἰ ημερήσα] The too weakly attested Recepta Εἰ ημερήσα or Εἰ ημερήσα is either a mere copyist's error, or an alteration to get rid of the supposed anakoluthon. See Reiche, Comm. crit.

Ver. 1.—ch. iii. 20. Having shown, ch. i. 18-32, in the case of the Gentiles, that they were strangers to the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, Paul now, ch. ii.—iii. 20, exhibits the same fact with reference to the Jews, and thus adduces the second half of the proof as to the universal necessity of justification by faith. Naturally the Apostle was chiefly concerned with this second half of the proof, as the δικαιοσύνη of heathenism was in itself clear; but we see from ch. ii. that the detailed character of that delineation of Gentile wickedness was intended at the same time as a mirror for degenerate Judaism, to repress all Jewish conceit. Comp. Mangold, p. 102.

1 Defended also by Philippi and Reiche, Comm. crit., who thinks that the καί has been rejected on account of δεικνύω appearing not to receive more precise definition. See on the other hand van Hengel.
102 THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

Ver. 1. διό] refers back to the main tenor of the whole previous exposition (vv. 18-32), and that indeed in its more special aspect as setting forth the moral condition of heathenism in respect to its inexcusableness. This reference is confirmed by the fact, that ἀνατολόγητος εἰ is said with a manifest glancing back to i. 20; it is laid down by Paul as it were as a finger-post for his διό. The reference assumed by Reiche, Fritzsche, Krehl, de Wette, and older writers, to the proposition in ver. 32, that the rightful demand of God adjudges death to the evil-doers; or to the cognizance of that verdict, in spite of which the Gentiles were so immoral (Philippi, Baur, Th. Schott, Hofmann, Mangold), has against it the fact that this thought formed only a subsidiary sentence in what went before; whereas here a new section begins, at the head of which Paul very naturally has placed a reference, even expressly marked by ἀνατολόγητος, to the entire section ending with ver. 32, over which he now throws once more a retrospective glance. The connection of ideas therefore is: "wherefore," i.e. on account of that abomination of vice pointed out in vv. 18-32, "thou art inexcusable," etc.; "for"—to exhibit now more exactly this "wherefore"—wherein thou judgest the other, thou condemnest thyself, because thou dost the same thing. In other words: before the mirror of this Gentile life of sin all excuse vanishes from thee, O man who judgest, for this mirror reflects thine own conduct, which thou thyself therefore condemnest by thy judgment. A deeply tragic de te narratur! into which the proud Jewish consciousness sees itself all of a sudden transferred. A proleptic use of διό (Tholuck) is not to be thought of; not even γάρ is so used in the N. T. (see on John iv. 44), and διό neither in the N. T. nor elsewhere.—Just as Paul, i. 18, designated the Gentiles by the general term ἀνθρώπων πᾶς ὁ κρίνων] Just as Paul, i. 18, designated the Gentiles by the general term ἀνθρώπων, and only brought forward the special reference to them in the progress of the discourse; so also he now designates the Jews, not as yet by name (see this first at ver. 17), but generally by the address ἀνθρώπως, which however already implies a trace of reproach (ix. 20; Luke xii. 14; Plat. Prot. p. 330 D, Gorg. p. 452 B, and the passages in Wetstein, Ellendt, Lex. Soph. I. p. 164), while at the same time he makes it by his πᾶς ὁ κρίνων sufficiently apparent that he is no longer speaking of the class already delineated, but is turning now to the Jews.
contrasted with them; for the self-righteous judging respecting the Gentiles as rejected of God (Midr. Tillin f. 6, 3; Chetubb. f. 3, 2; and many other passages) was in fact a characteristic of the Jews. Hence all the more groundless is the hasty judgment, that this passage has nothing whatever to do with the contrast between Jews and Gentiles (Hofmann). Comp. ver. 17 ff. And that it is the condemning κρίνει which is meant, and not the moral capacity of judgment in general (Th. Schott) and its exercise (Hofmann) (comp. on Matth. vii. 9), follows from the subsequent κατακρίνεις more precisely defining its import. Consequently the quite general interpretation (Beza, Calovius, Benecke, Mehring, Luthardt, vom freien Willen, p. 416) seems untenable, as well as the reference to the Gentiles as the judging subjects (Th. Schott), or to all to whom i. 32 applied (Hofmann), or even specially to Gentile authorities (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Oecumenius, Cajetanus, Grotius).— Regarding the nomi native as further ethical exegesis of the vocative, see Bernhardy, p. 67, Buttmann, Neut. Gr. p. 123.— ἐν δὲ either instrumental: thereby, that, equivalent to ἐν τούτῳ δὲ (Hofmann); or, still more closely corresponding to the τὰ γὰρ αὐτὰ πράσσεις: in which thing, in which point. Comp. xiv. 22. The temporal rendering: eodem tempore quo (Köllner, Reithmayr), arbitrarily obscures the moral identity, which Paul intended to bring out. The κατακρίνεις however is not facto condemnatis (Estius, van Hengel), but the judgment pronounced upon the other is a condemnatory judgment upon thyself, namely, because it applies to thine own conduct. On the contrast between ἐπερον and συνάντην comp. ver. 21; 1 Cor. x. 24, 29; Gal. vi. 4; Phil. ii. 4.— τὰ αὐτὰ the same sins and vices, not indeed according to all their several concrete manifestations, as previously described, but according to their essential moral categories; see vv. 17-24. Comp. on the idea John viii. 7.— δὲ κρίνει with reproachful emphasis.

Ver. 2. Οἱ θαυματεύοντες] Paul means to pronounce it as in his own view and that of his readers an undoubted truth (comp. iii. 19), that the judicial decision which God will one day pronounce, etc. The δὲ carries on the discourse, and the entire sentence forms the propositio major to what is now (ver. 3) to be proved, namely, that the person judging (the Jew), who yet makes himself guilty of wickedness similar to the things (τὰ τοιαύτα) in question, deceives himself if he thinks to escape the true judgment of God (ver. 5). Thus τὸ κρίμα\(^1\) τ. Θεοῦ has the emphasis of contrast with that human judgment so inconsistent with their own conduct. The predicate of being κατὰ ἀλήθειαν ἐπὶ τοὺς κ. τ. λ. belongs not to the latter, but to the divine κρίμα. Th. Schott erroneously emphasises πρὸς ὁμολογίας, dislocating the clear train of thought, as if Paul were treating of the truth that the Gentile's knowledge of what was right would not shield him from sin and condemnation. Hofmann also introduces a similar confusion.— κατὰ ἀλήθειαν contains the standard, in accordance with which the judgment of God is pronounced against the τὰ τοιαῦτα πρὸς ὁμολογίας: in accordance with truth, so that it is, without error or partiality, entirely adequate to the moral condition of these subjects. Raphael, Köllner, Krehl, Mehring, and Hofmann take it as equivalent to ἀλήθεια, really (4 Macc. v. 15; and in Greek writers), so that the meaning would be: it is in reality issued over them. But it could not be the object of the Apostle to remind them of the reality of the divine judicial sentence, which was under all circumstances undoubted and undisputed, so much as of its truth, for the sake of the Jews who fancied that that judgment would condemn the Gentiles, but would spare the descendants of Abraham as such, and on account of their circumcision and other theocratic privileges; by which idea they manifestly denied the ἀλήθεια of the κρίμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, as if it were an untrue false sentence, the contents of which did not correspond to the existing state of the facts.

Ver. 3. Antithesis of ver. 2, “That God judges evildoers according to truth, we know (ver. 2); but judgest thou (in the face of that proposition) that thou shalt . . . escape?” This would indeed be at variance with the ἀλήθεια of the judgment. Comp. Matth. iii. 7; and the passages from profane writers in Grotius. The non-interrogative rendering of vv. 3, 4 (Hofmann) is not called for by the connection with the assertive declaration in ver. 5; it weakens the lively force of the discourse, and utterly fails to suit the ἢ in ver. 4, so prevalent in double questions.— τοῦτο preparing with emphasis (here: of surprise) for the following δὲ τὸ

\(^1\) Not κρίμα. With Lachmann it is to be accentuated κρίμα; see Lobeck, Para. lip. p. 418. Lipsius is of a different opinion as regards the N. T. (grammat. Unters. p 40 f.)
CHAP. II. 4.

ἐκφ. κ.τ.λ.; Bernhardy, p. 284. — σὺ] Thou on thy side, as if thou madest an exception; opposed to the Jewish self-conceit (Matth. iii. 7 ff.; Luke iii. 7 f.). The emphasis is not on Ὄεον (Chrysostom, Theophylact, and others). — ἐκφευ[χ:] not: through acquittal (Bengel), comp. Dem. 602, 2, Aristoph. Vesp. 157 al., but inasmuch as thou shalt not be subjected to the κρίμα of God, but shalt on the contrary escape it and be secure afar off from it. Comp. 2 Macc. vi. 26, vii. 35; 1 Thess. v. 3; Heb. ii 3. According to the Jewish illusion only the Gentiles were to be judged (Bertholdt, Christol. p. 206 ff.), whereas all Israel were to share in the Messianic kingdom as its native children (Matth. viii. 12).

Ver. 4. Or—in case thou hast not this illusion—despiset thou, etc. The ἦ draws away the attention from the case first put as a question, and proposes another; vi. 3; 1 Cor. ix. 6, and often elsewhere, Baeumlein, Partikell. p. 132. — The despising the divine goodness is the contemptuous unconcern as to its holy purpose, which produces as a natural consequence security in sinning (Ecclus. v. 5 f.). — τὸ δὶσ πλούτου τῆς χρηστ., as designation of the "abundantia et magnitudo" (Estius), is a very current expression with the Apostle (ix. 23, xi. 35; Eph. i. 7, ii. 4, 7, iii. 16, Col. i. 27), but is not a Hebraism (Ps. v. 8, lxix. 17 al.), being used also by Greek authors; Plat. Euth. p. 12 A, and see Loesner, p. 245. — χρηστότητος is the goodness of God, in accordance with which He is inclined to benefit (and not to punish). Comp. Tittmann’s Synon. p. 195. — ἀνοιχτόν and μακροβ., patience and long-suffering—the two terms exhausting the one idea—denote the disposition of God, in accordance with which He indulgently tolerates the sins and delays the punishments. See Wetstein, and the passages from the Fathers in Suicer, Thes. II. p. 294. Comp. Tittmann, Synon. p. 194. — ἀγνοο[ῦν] inasmuch as it is unknown to thee, that etc. By this accompanying definition of the καταφρονεῖς the (guilty) folly of the despiser is laid bare as its tragic source. Bengel says aptly: "miratur Paulus hanc ignorantiam." The literal sense is arbitrarily altered by Pareus, Reiche, de Wette, Maier, and others, who make it denote the not being willing to know, which it does not denote even in Acts xvii. 23; Rom. x. 3; by Kollner, who, following Grotius, Koppe, and many others, holds it to mean non considerans; and also by Hofmann: “to perceive, as one ought.” Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 34. —
\(\delta\gamma\varepsilon\iota\) of ethical incitement by influencing the will. Plat. Rep. p. 572 D, al. See Kypke and Reisig, ad Soph. O. C. 253. Comp. viii. 14. But it is not to be taken of the conatus (desires to urge), but of the standing relation of the goodness of God to the moral condition of man.\(^1\) This relation is an impelling to repentance, in which the failure of result on the part of man does not cancel the act of the \(\delta\gamma\varepsilon\iota\) itself. Comp. Wisd. xi. 23; Appian. ii. 63.

Ver. 5. A vividly introduced contrast to the preceding proposition \(\sigma\tau\iota\tau\iota\chi\rho\nu\sigma\tau\iota\nu\) ... \(\delta\gamma\varepsilon\iota\); not a continuation of the question (Lachmann, following Koppe and others; also Baumgarten-Crusius, Ewald), but affirmative (by which the discourse becomes far more impressive and striking) as a setting forth of the actual position of things, which is brought about by man through his impenitence, in opposition to the drawing of the divine kindness; for the words can only, in pursuance of the correct interrogative rendering of ver. 3, be connected with ver. 4, and not also (as Hofmann holds) with ver. 3. — \(\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\] in accordance with; in a causal sense. Comp. on Phil. iv. 11. On \(\sigma\kappa\lambda\eta\rho\nu.\ k. \ \dot{\alpha}\mu\epsilon\tau\alpha\nu\). \(\kappa\alpha\rho\delta.\) comp. Acts vii. 31. It is correlative with the previous \(\epsilon\iota\sigma\) \(\mu\epsilon\tau\alpha\nu\alpha\iota\alpha\nu\). — \(\theta\sigma\nu\alpha\rho\iota\varepsilon\iota\sigma\) \(\sigma\varepsilon\alpha\nu\tau\omega\ \dot{o}\rho\gamma\nu\) Wolf aptly says: “innuitur ... irae divinae judicia paulatim coacervari, ut tandem universa promantur.” Comp. Calovius; and see Deut. xxxii. 33-35; Prov. i. 18, ii. 7; Ecclus. iii. 4. For passages of profane writers, where \(\theta\sigma\nu\alpha\rho\iota\varepsilon\iota\sigma\) and \(\theta\sigma\nu\alpha\rho\iota\varepsilon\iota\sigma\) are used to express the accumulation of evils, punishments, and the like, see Alberti, Obs. p. 297; Münthe in loc., from Philo: Loesner, p. 246. The purposely chosen word glances back to the previous \(\tau\iota\omega\ \pi\lambda\omega\iota\tau\omicron\nu\kappa.\tau.\lambda.\) and \(\sigma\varepsilon\alpha\nu\tau\omega\), to thyself, heightens the tragic nature of the foolish conduct that redounds to one's own destruction; comp. xiii. 2. — \(\dot{\epsilon}\nu \ \dot{\gamma}\mu\epsilon\rho\alpha\ \dot{o}\rho\gamma.\) not to be taken with Luther, Beza, Castalio, Piscator, Calvin, Estius, and many others as in diem irae (Phil. i. 10; Jude 6; Tob. iv. 9), belongs to \(\dot{o}\rho\gamma\nu\) which breaks out on the day of wrath. Comp. 1 Thess. iii. 13. Regarding the repetition of \(\dot{o}\rho\gamma\nu\) after \(\dot{o}\rho\gamma\nu\) Bengal correctly remarks: “\(\delta\epsilon\nu\omicron\tau\omicron\nu\kappa\) sermonis magna vi.” \(\dot{W}\) hose wrath, is self-evident, without its being necessary to connect \(\dot{o}\rho\gamma\nu\) with \(\Theta\epsilon\omicron\dot{\nu}\) (Hofmann), which is forbidden by the intervening ἀποκαλ. and by the previous absolutely put ὁργή. The article was not required by ὡμέρα on account of the genitive definitions; 1 Cor. vi. 2; Eph. iv. 30; Phil. i. 6, al.; Winer, p. 118 f. [E. T. 155 f.]; Kühner, II. 1, p. 524. — Paul characterises the day of judgment, and with what powerful emphasis! by an accumulation of genitives and weighty expressions, with reference to the fate of the bad as ὡμέρα ὁργή, but with reference to its general destination (afterwards ver. 6 ff. to be further carried out in detail) for good and bad as a day ἀποκαλ. δικαιοκρισία. τ. Θεοῦ, i.e. on which God’s righteous judgment (which until then remains hidden) is revealed, publicly exhibited. With the exception of passages of the Fathers, such as Justin, de resurr. p. 223, δικαιοκρισία occurs only in an unknown translation of Hos. vi. 5 (where the LXX. read κρίμα) and the the Test. XII. Patr. p. 547 and 581.

\(^{1}\) Therefore no predestination to damnation can be supposed.

Ver. 6. Compare Ps. lxii. 13; Prov. xxiv. 12; analogies from Greek writers in Spiess, Logos spermat. p. 214. — κατὰ τὰ ὁργαντοὐ ἀνήκοντο] i.e. according as shall be commensurate with the moral quality of his actions. On this, and on the following amplification down to ver. 16, it is to be observed: — (1) Paul is undoubtedly speaking of the judgment of the world, which God will cause to be held by Christ, ver. 16; (2) The subjects who are judged are Jews and Gentiles, ver. 9 ff., consequently all men, ver. 16. The distinction, as to whether they are Christians or not, is left out of view in this exposition, as the latter is partly intended to introduce the reader to a knowledge of the necessity of justification by faith (down to iii. 20); and it is consequently also left out of view that judgment according to works cannot result in bliss for the unbelievers, because there is wanting to them the very thing whose vital action produces the works in accordance with which the Judge awards bliss, namely, faith and the accompanying regeneration. (3) The standard of the decision is moral action and its opposite, vv. 6-10; and this standard is really and in fact the only one, to which at the last judgment all, even the Christians themselves, shall be subjected, and by which their fate for eternity shall be determined, Matth. xvi. 27, xxv. 31 ff.; 2 Cor. v. 10; Gal. vi. 7 ff.; Eph. vi. 8; Col. iii. 24; Rev. ii. 23, xx. 12, xxii. 12. But (4) the relation of moral action in the case of the Christian to the fides salvifica, as the necessary effect and fruit of which that action must be demanded at the judgment, cannot, for the reason given above under (2), be here introduced into the discussion. (5) On the contrary, the law only (in the case of the Jews the Mosaic, in the case of the Gentiles the natural), must be presented as the medium of the decision, ver. 12 ff.; a view which has likewise its full truth (compare what was remarked under (3) above), since the Christian also, because he is to be judged according to his action, must be judged according to law (compare the doctrine of the tertius legis usus), and indeed according to the πληρωµα τοῦ νόµου introduced by Christ, Matth. v. 17. Comp. xxv. 31 ff.; Rom. xiii. 8-10,—although he becomes partaker of salvation, not through the merit of works (a point the further development of which formed no part of the Apostle's general discussion here), but through faith, of which the works are the practical evidence and measure. Accordingly the "phrasis legis" (Melancthon) is indeed to be recognised in our passage, but it is to be apprehended in its full truth, which does not stamp as a mere theoretic abstraction (Baur) the contrast, deeply enough experienced by Paul himself, between the righteousness of works and righteousness of faith. It is neither to be looked upon as needing the corrective of the Christian plan of salvation; nor as an inconsistency (Fritzsche); nor yet in such a light, that the doctrine of justification involves a partial abrogation of the moral order of the world (Reiche), which is, on the contrary, confirmed and established by it, iii. 31. But our passage yields nothing in favour of the possibility, which God may grant to unbelievers, of turning to Christ after death (Tholuck), or of becoming partakers of the salvation in Christ in virtue of an exercise of divine power (Th. Schott): and the representation employed for that purpose,—that the life of faith is the product of a previous life-tendency, and that the ἐφανερώθη perfect themselves in faith (Luthardt, Tholuck),—is erroneous, because incompatible with the N. T. conception of regeneration as a new creation, as a putting off of the old man, as a having died and risen again, as a being begotten of God through the Spirit, etc. etc. The new life (vi. 4) is the direct opposite of the old (vi. 19 ff.). The possibility referred to is to be judged of in connection with the descensus Christi ad inferos, but is irrelevant here.

1 It is rightly observed by Calovius: "secundum opera, i.e. secundum testimonium operum," is something different from "propter opera, i.e. propter meritum operum." Comp. Apol. Conf. A, art. 3, and Beza in loc.

Ver. 7. To those, who by virtue of perseverance in morally-good work seek to obtain glory and honour and immortality, eternal life sc. ἀποστολήν ἀγαθ. Consequently καθ ἔργον ἀγαθόν contains the standard, the regulative principle, by which the seeking after glory, honour, etc. is guided, and ἔργον ἀγαθόν, which is not with Beza to be connected with δόξαν, is the genitive of the object to which the ἔργον ἀγαθόν refers (1 Thess. i. 3; Polyb. iv. 51, 1; Theophr. Char. 6, 1); while δόξαν κ. τιμήν κ. ἀφθαρσίαν is an exhaustive description of the future salvation according to its glorious appearing (2 Cor. iv. 17; Matth. xiii. 43), according to the honour united with it (for it is the prize of victory, 1 Cor. ix. 25; Phil. iii. 14; 2 Tim. iv. 8; James i. 12; 1 Pet. v. 4, the joint heirship with Christ, viii. 17, the reigning along with Him, 2 Tim. ii. 12), and according to its imperishableness (1 Cor. xv. 52 ff.; Rev. xxi. 4; 1 Pet. i. 4). Paul presents the moral effort under a character thus specifically Christian, just because he can attribute it only to Christian Jews and Gentiles; and hence he is only able to give his description of this first half of the subjects of future judgment, notwithstanding the generality of his language, in the Christian form, in which alone it really takes place. In keeping with this is also the ξοῖαν αἰώνιον, i.e. eternal life in the kingdom of the Messiah, v. 21, vi. 22 f.; Gal. vi. 8. The above construction of the words is already followed by Theophilus, ad Autol. i. 20, ed. Wolf, and by most expositors, including Tholuck, Rückert, Köllner, de Wette, Olshausen, Philippi, Maier, van Hengel, Umbreit. The objection raised against it by Reiche and Hofmann, that according to the analogy of ver. 6 καθ ἔργον ἀγαθόν, must contain the standard of the ἀποστολήν, and cannot therefore belong to ξητοῦσι, is untenable, because καθ ἔργον ἀγαθόν, though attached to ξητοῦσι, nevertheless does contain (indirectly) the standard of ἀποστολήν; so

1 The singular without the article indicates the thing in abstracto; the rule is for every given case: perseverance in good work. The idea that the work of redemption is referred to (Mehring, in accordance with Phil. i. 6), so that ἔργον ἀγαθόν, would be equivalent to ἔργον πιστίς, ought to have been precluded by the parallel in ver. 10. Comp. ver. 2.
that there remains only an immaterial difference, which however is in fact very consonant to the lively versatility of the Apostle's thought. Still less weight attaches to the objection, that to seek glory and honour is not in itself a praiseworthy thing; for the moral tenor of the \( \xi\tau\tau\iota\nu \) \( \delta\omicron\varepsilon\upsilon\nu \) \( \kappa\tau\lambda. \) (comp. Matth. vi. 33; John v. 44) is most definitely assured by \( \kappa\alpha\theta\upsilon \) \( \upsilon\tau\omicron\omega. \) \( \varepsilon\rho\gamma. \) \( \alpha\gamma. \) Utterly unfounded, in fine, is the objection of clumsiness (Hofmann); the symmetrical fulness of vv. 7, 8, has a certain solemnity about it. Reiche and Hofmann, following Oecumenius,\(^1\) Estius, and others, arrange it so that to \( \delta\omicron\varepsilon\upsilon\nu \) \( \kappa\tau\mu. \) \( \kappa\alpha\theta\varphi\alpha\rho\alpha\tau\iota\nu \) \( \alpha\nu\iota\kappa. \) whilst \( \xi\tau\tau\iota\nu\omega\iota \) is to be combined with \( \xi\nu\nu \) \( \alpha\iota\nu\gamma. \) and regarded as an apposition or (Hofmann) reason assigned to \( \tau\omicron\iota\zeta \) \( \mu\epsilon\nu, \) and \( \kappa\alpha\theta\upsilon \) \( \upsilon\tau\omicron\omega. \) \( \varepsilon\rho\gamma. \) \( \alpha\gamma. \) is the standard of \( \alpha\tau\omicron\delta\omega\sigma\tau\epsiloni. \) Substantially so also Ewald. No syntactic objection can be urged against this rendering; but how tamely and heavily is the \( \xi\tau\tau\iota\nu\omega\iota \) \( \xi\nu\nu \) \( \alpha\iota\nu\gamma. \) subjoined! Paul would have written clearly, emphatically, and in harmony with the contrast in ver. 8: \( \tau\omicron\iota\zeta \ldots \) \( \alpha\gamma\alpha\theta\omicron\nu \) \( \xi\nu\nu \) \( \alpha\iota. \) \( \xi\tau\tau\iota\nu\omega\iota \) \( \delta\omicron\varepsilon\upsilon\nu \) \( \kappa\tau\mu. \) \( \kappa\alpha\theta\beta. \)

Ver. 8. \( \tau\omicron\iota\zeta \) \( \delta\epsilon \) \( \varepsilon\gamma \) \( \varepsilon\rho\theta\upsilon\epsilon\iota\alpha\sigma\iota\zeta \) sc. \( \sigma\omicron\iota\zeta. \) : paraphrase of the substantive idea, to be explained from the conception of the moral condition as drawing its origin thence (comp. iii. 26; iv. 12, 14; Gal. iii. 10; Phil. i. 17, al.). See Bernhardy, p. 288 f. Comp. the use of \( \nu\omicron\iota\iota \) and \( \tau\epsilon\kappa\nu \) in Eph. ii. 2. We are precluded from taking (with Hofmann) \( \epsilon\kappa \) in a causal sense (\( \text{in consequence of} \) \( \varepsilon\rho\theta\upsilon\epsilon\iota\alpha\sigma\iota\zeta \) ), and as belonging to \( \alpha\tau\omicron\theta\epsilon\theta. \) \( \kappa\tau\lambda. \) by the \( \kappa\alpha\iota, \) which would here express the idea, unsuitable to the connection: even (Baeuml. Partik. p. 150, also Xen. Mem. i. 3, 1). This \( \kappa\alpha\iota, \) the simple \( \alpha\theta\eta, \) which is not however with Hofmann to be interpreted as if Paul had written \( \mu\alpha\lambda\lambda\omicron \) \( \tau\omicron\nu\alpha\nu\tau\iota\nu\omicron \) ("instead of seeking after eternal life, rather," etc.), clearly shows that \( \tau\omicron\iota\zeta \) \( \delta\epsilon \) \( \varepsilon\gamma \) \( \varepsilon\rho\theta\upsilon\epsilon\iota\alpha\sigma\iota\zeta \) is to be taken by \( \alpha\theta\eta, \) as it has been correctly explained since the time of the Vulgate and Chrysostom. — \( \varepsilon\rho\theta\upsilon\epsilon\iota\alpha\sigma\iota\zeta \) is not to be derived from \( \varepsilon\rho\iota\sigma \) or \( \varepsilon\rho\iota\omega, \) but from \( \varepsilon\rho\theta\upsilon, \) a hired

\(^1\) Τὸ \( \upsi\omicron\beta\sigma\alpha\tau\sigma\nu \) \( \sigma\omicron\tau\omicron\tau\omicron \) \( \tau\alpha\kappa\tau\omicron\nu \) \( \tau\omicron\iota\zeta \) \( \kappa\alpha\theta\upsilon \) \( \upsilon\tau\omicron\omega. \) \( \varepsilon\rho\gamma. \) \( \alpha\gamma. \) \( \xi\nu\nu \) \( \alpha\iota\nu\gamma. \) \( \alpha\nu\iota\kappa. \ldots \) \( \alpha\phi\theta\alpha\rho\alpha\tau\iota\nu. \) But there is no ground whatever for the assumption of a hyperbaton, in which Luther also has entangled himself. Very harshly Bengel, Fritzsche, and Krehl separate \( \tau\omicron\iota\zeta \) \( \kappa\alpha\theta\upsilon \) \( \upsilon\tau\omicron\omega. \) \( \varepsilon\rho\gamma. \) \( \alpha\gamma. \) from what follows, and supply \( \sigma\omicron\tau\omicron\tau\omicron \); and then take \( \delta\omicron\varepsilon\upsilon\nu \ldots \) \( \xi\tau\tau\iota\nu\omega\iota \) as apposition to \( \tau\omicron\iota\zeta \ldots \) \( \varepsilon\rho\gamma. \) but make \( \xi\nu\nu \) \( \alpha\iota, \) likewise dependent on \( \alpha\tau\omicron\delta\omega\sigma\tau\epsiloni. \)
laborer, a spinner (Homer, xviii. 550, 560; Hesiod, ἔργ. 600 f.; Dem. 1313, 6; LXX. Is. xxxviii. 12; hence ἐπιθέω, to work for hire (Tob. ii. 11), then also: to act selfishly, to lay plots. Compare ἔρποθεωσθαι, Polyb. x. 25, 9, and ἀνέρποθευτος (without party intrigues) in Philo, p. 1001 E. ἐπιθέω has therefore, besides the primary sense of work for hire, the twofold ethical signification (1) mercenary greed; and (2) desire of intrigue, pursuit of partisan courses; Arist. Pol. v. 2 f. See Fritzche, Excursus on ch. ii.; regarding the composition of the word, see on 2 Cor. xii. 20. The latter signification is to be retained in all passages of the N. T. 2 Cor. xii. 20; Gal. v. 20; Phil. i. 16, ii. 3; James iii. 14, 16.—οἱ ἐπιθείαι are therefore the intriguers, the partisan actors; whose will and striving are conducive not to the truth (for that in fact is a power of an entirely different kind, opposed to their character), but to immorality; wherefore there is added, as further characterizing them: καὶ ἀπειθούσι. Compare Ignatius, ad Philad. 8, where the opposite of ἐπιθ. is the χριστιανάθεια, i.e. the discipleship of Christ, which excludes all selfish partisan effort. Haughtiness (as van Hengel explains it), and the craving for self-assertion (Mehring and Hofmann) are combined with it, but are not what the word itself signifies. The interpretation formerly usual: qui sunt ex contentione (Vulg.), those fond of strife (Origen, Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Erasmus, Luther, Beza, Calvin, etc.), which was understood for the most part as those rebelling against God, is based partly on the erroneous derivation from ἐρίσι, partly on the groundless assumption that in the other passages of the N. T. the sense of quarrelsome ness is necessary. Since this is not the case, Reiche’s conjecture is irrelevant, that the vulgar usus loquendi had erroneously derived the word from ἐρίσι and had lent to it the corresponding signification. Kollner explains it rightly as partisanship, but gratuitously assumes that this was a special designation for “godless character” in general. So in substance also Fritzche: “hominem nequam.” The very addition, further describing these men, καὶ ἀπειθούσι. . . . . . ἀδικία, quite allows us to suppose that Paul had before his mind the strict and proper meaning of the word partisanship; and it is therefore unwarrant-

1 See Valck. ad Theocr. Adonias. p. 373. Compare σφιάκως frequent in Greek authors.
able to base the common but linguistically erroneous explanation on the affinity between the notions of partisanship and of contentiousness (Philippi). The question to be determined is not the category of ideas to which the ἐπιθετεῖν belongs, but the definite individual idea which it expresses. — ὀργή κ. θυμός] sc. ἔσται. In the animation of his description Paul has broken off the construction previously followed. To connect these words with what follows (Mehring) disturbs unnecessarily the important symmetry of the passage. On the distinction between the two words, see Tittmann's Synon. p. 131 ff. θυμός: vehement passion, in Cic. Tusc. iv. 9, 21 rendered exandescencia, here, as also in Gal. v. 20, Eph. iv. 31, Col. iii. 8, Rev. xvi. 19, xix. 15, often also in the O. T. and the Apocrypha, made known by its combination with ὀργή, and by its being put last as the more vehement, as the holy divine wrath. Compare Isoc. xii. 81: ὀργής κ. θυμοῦ μετατι. Herodian, viii. 4, 1: ὀργή κ. θυμὸν χρῶμενον. Lucian, de calumn. 23, al.

Vv. 9, 10. Emphatic recapitulation of vv. 7 and 8, inverting the order, and in addition, giving special prominence to the universality of the retribution. The placing the penal retribution first gives to this an aspect the more threatening and alarming, especially as the terms expressing it are now accumulated in one breath. — ὑλής κ. στενοχωρία] Tribulation and anguish, sc. ἔσται. The calamity is thus described as pressing upon them from without (ὑλής), and as felt inwardly with the sense of its being beyond help (στενοχωρία), viii. 35; 2 Cor. iv. 7, vi. 12; compare LXX. Is. xxx. 6; Deut. xxviii. 53. — ἐπὶ πᾶσαν ψυχήν ἀνθρώπον] denotes not simply "upon every man" (so even Philippi), but "upon every soul which belongs to a man" who practises evil. The ψυχή is thereby designated as that which is affected by the ὑλή. κ. στενοχωρία. (Acts ii. 43; Matth. xxvi. 28, al.); comp. Winer, p. 147 [E. T. 194]. It is the part which feels the pain. 1 — πρῶτον] Quite as in i. 16. The Jews, as the people of God, in possession of the revelation with its promises and threatenings, are therefore necessarily also those upon whom the retribution of judgment—not the reward merely, but also the punishment—has to find in the first instance its execution. In both aspects they have the priority based on their position in the history of salvation as the theocratic people, and that as certainly as God is impartial. "Judaei particeps Graecus," Bengel. The Jewish conceit is counteracted in the first clause by Ἰουδαίον τε προτόν, in the second by καὶ Ἑλληνι, and counteracted with sternly consistent earnestness. The second προτόν precludes our taking the first as ironical (Reiche). — εἰρήμην welfare, by which is intended that of the Messiah's kingdom, as in viii. 6. It is not materially different from the ἀφθαρσία and ζωὴ αἰώνιος of ver. 7; the totality of that which had already been described in special aspects by δόξα and τιμή (comp. on ver. 7).—Regarding the distinction between ἐργαζόμενος and κατεργαζόμενος (works and brings to pass) see on i. 27.

Ver. 11. Ground assigned for vv. 9 and 10, so far as concerns the Ἰουδ. π. κ. Ἑλληνι. — προσπολημφία Partial preference from personal considerations. See on Gal. ii. 6. Melanchthon: "dare aequalia inequalibus vel inequalia aequalibus." The ground specified is directed against the Jewish theocratic fancy. Comp. Acts x. 34 f.; Ecclus. xxxii. (xxxv.) 15.

Ver. 12. Assigns the ground in point of fact for the proposition contained in ver. 11, in special reference to the future judgment of condemnation.¹ — ἄνωμος i.e. without the standard of the law (without having had it). Comp. 1 Cor. ix. 21; Wisd. xvii. 2. Those whose sins were not transgressions of the Mosaic law (but of the moral law of nature), the sinful Gentiles, shall be transferred into the penal state of eternal death without the standard of the law, without having their condemnation decided in accordance with the requirements of a νόμος to which they are strangers. The ἀπολούνται, which is to set in at the final judgment, not through natural necessity (Mangold), is the opposite of the σωτηρία, i. 16, of the ξύστεται, i. 17, of the ζωὴ αἰώνιος, ii. 7, of the δόξα κ.τ.λ., ii. 10; comp. John iii. 15; Rom. xiv. 15; 1 Cor. i. 18. This very ἄπολούνται should of itself have precluded commentators from finding in the second ἄνωμος an element of mitigation (Chrysostom, Theophylact, Oecumenius), as if it was meant to exclude the severity of the law. The immoral Gentiles may not hope to remain unpunished on account of their non-possession of the law; punished they shall be independently of the standard of the law. This is the confirmation of the ἀπροσωποληψία of God on the one side, in regard to the Gentiles.—The καὶ before ἀπολ. is the also of a corresponding relation; but not between ἀνόμως and ἀνόμως, as if Paul had written καὶ ἀνόμ. ἀπολ., but between ἡμαρτὼν and ἀπολ.: as they have sinned without law, so shall they also perish without law. In this way ἀνόμως retains the emphasis of the specific how. Compare the following. The praeterite ἡμαρτὼν is spoken from the standpoint of the time of the judgment. — καὶ ὁσοὶ ἐν νόμῳ κ.τ.λ.] This gives the other aspect of the case, with reference to the Jews, who do not escape the judgment (of condemnation) on account of their privilege of possessing the law, but on the contrary are to be judged by means of the law, so that sentence shall be passed on them in virtue of it (see Deut. xxvii.26; comp. John v.45). — ἐν νόμῳ] Not on the law (Luther), which would be εἰς νόμον, but the opposite of ἀνόμως: with the law, i.e. in possession of the law, which they had as a standard,¹ Winer, p. 361 [E. T. 482]. On νόμος without the article, used of the Mosaic law, see Winer, 117 [E. T. 152]. So frequently in the Apocrypha, and of particular laws also in classical writers. To question this use of it in the N. T. (van Hengel, Th. Schott, Hofmann, and others) opens the way for artificial and sometimes intolerable explanations of the several passages.—κριθήσομαι] an unsought change of the verb, suggested by διὰ νόμου.

¹ Only in reference to the judgment of condemnation, because the idea of a Messianic bliss of unbelievers was necessarily foreign to the Apostle; as indeed in vv. 7 and 10 he was under the necessity of describing those to whom Messianic bliss was to be given in recompense, in terms of a Christian character.

Ver. 13 proves the correctness of the proposition, so much at variance with the fancy of the Jews, ὁσοὶ ἐν νόμῳ ἡμαρτὼν, διὰ νόμου κριθήσομαι.—The placing of vv. 13-15 in a parenthesis, as after Beza's example is done by Grotius, Griesbach, and others, also by Reiche and Winer, is to be rejected, because ver. 13, which cannot be placed in a parenthesis alone (as Koppe and Mehring do), is closely joined with what immediately precedes, and it is only in ver. 14 that an intervening thought is introduced by way of illustration. The parenthesis is (with Baumgarten-Crusius) to be limited to vv. 14, 15, as is done also by Lachmann. See on ver. 16. — oí ἀκροαταί] A reference to the public reading of the Thorah on the Sabbath. Comp. Acts xv. 21; 2 Cor. iii. 14; John xii. 34; Josephus, Antt. v. 1, 26, v. 2, 7. The substantive brings out more forcibly than the participial form of expression would have done the characteristic feature: those, whose business is hearing. Compare Theile, ad Jac. i. 22, p. 76. — παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ] ἐνότιον αὐτοῦ iii. 20, according to God's judgment. 1 Cor. iii. 9; 2 Thess. i. 6; Winer, p. 369 [E. T. 492]. — δικαίωθήσονται They shall be declared as righteous, normal. See on i. 17. — This oí ποιηταϊ νόμον δικαίωθησονται is the general fundamental law of God who judges with righteousness (Gal. iii. 12); a fundamental law which required to be urged here in proof of the previous assertion διὸ εἴν νόμῳ ἡμαρτον, διὰ ν. κριθήστε. Compare Weiss, bibl. Theol. § 87. How in the event of its being impossible for a man to be a true ποιητής νόμου (iii. 9 ff.) faith comes in and furnishes a δικαιοσύνη ἐκ πίστεως, and then how man, by means of the καινότης ζωῆς (vi. 4) attained through faith, must and can fulfil (viii. 4) the law completed by Christ (the νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος τῆς ζωῆς, viii. 2), were topics not belonging to the present discussion. Compare on ver. 6. “Haec descriptio est justitia legis, quae nihil impediat alia dicta de justitia fidei,” Melanchthon.

¹ This opposition does not extend beyond the νόμον μὴ ἔχων and νόμον ἔχων, ver. 14. Therefore ἐν νόμῳ is not: within the law as the divine order of common life (comp. iii. 19) as Hofmann takes it.

Vv. 14-16. The oí ποιηταϊ νόμον δικαίωθησονται just asserted did not require proof with regard to the Jews. But, as the regulative principle of the last judgment, it could not but appear to need proof with regard to the Gentiles, since that fundamental rule might seem to admit of no application to those who sin ἀνόμως and perish ἀνόμως. Now the Gentiles, though beyond the pale of the Mosaic law and not incurring condemnation according to the standard of that law, yet possess in the moral law of nature a certain substitute for the Mosaic law not given to them. It is in virtue of this state of things that they present themselves, not as excepted from the above rule oí ποιηταϊ νόμον δικαίωθε, but as subjected to it; namely, in the indirect way that they, although ἀνόμως in the positive sense, have nevertheless in the natural law a substitute for the positive one—which is apparent, as often as Gentiles do by nature that which the positive Mosaic law not given to them enjoins. The connection may therefore be paraphrased somewhat thus: “With right and reason I say: the doers of the law shall be justified; for as to the case of the Gentiles, that ye may not regard them as beyond reach of that rule, it is proved in fact by those instances, in which Gentiles, though not in possession of the law of Moses, do by nature the requirements of this law, that they are the law unto themselves, because, namely, they thereby show that its obligation stands written in their hearts,” etc. It is to be observed at the same time that Paul does not wish to prove a justification of the Gentiles really occurring as a result through the fulfilment of their natural law—a misconception against which he has already guarded himself in ver. 12,—but he desires simply to establish the regulative principle of justification through the law in the case of the Gentiles. Real actual justification by the law takes place neither among Jews nor Gentiles; because in no case is there a complete fulfilment, either, among the Jews, of the revealed law or, among the Gentiles, of the natural law—which in fact is only a substitute for the former, but at the same time forms the limit beyond which their responsibility and their judgment cannot in principle go, because they have nothing higher (in opposition to Philippi, who refers to the πλήρωμα νόμου, xiii. 10).—The connection of thought between ver. 14 and what precedes it has been very variously apprehended. According to Koppe (compare Calvin, Flatt, and Mehring) vv. 14-16 prove the condemnation of the Gentiles asserted in ver. 12, and ver. 17 ff. that of the Jews; while ver. 13 is a parenthesis. But, seeing that in the whole development of the argument γάρ always refers to what immediately precedes, it is even in itself an arbitrary proceeding to make ἂν γάρ in ver. 14, without any evident necessity imposed by the course of thought, refer to ver. 12, and to treat ver. 13, although it contains a very appropriate reason assigned for the second part of ver. 12, as a parenthesis to be broken off from connection with what follows; and decisive against this view are the words ἦ καὶ ἀπολογογομένων in ver. 15, which place it beyond doubt that vv. 14-16 were not intended as a proof of the ἀπολογονται in ver. 12. Philippi regards ver. 14 as establishing only the first half of ver. 13: “not the hearers of the law are just before God, for even the Gentiles have a law, i.e. for even the Gentiles are ἀκροαται τοῦ νόμου.” But we have no right to exclude thus from the reference of the γάρ just the very assertion immediately preceding, and to make it refer to a purely negative clause which had merely served to pave the way for this assertion. The reference to the negative half of ver. 13 would only be warranted in accordance with the text, had Paul, as he might have done, inverted the order of the two parts of ver. 13, and so given to the negative clause the second place.\(^1\) And the less could a reader see reason to refer the γάρ to this negative clause in the position in which the Apostle has placed it, since ver. 14 speaks of Gentiles who do the law, by which the attention was necessarily directed, not to the negative, but to the affirmative, half of ver. 13 (ουὶ ποιηται κ.τ.λ.).\(^2\) Such a mode of presenting the connection is even more arbitrary than if we should supply after ver. 13 the thought: “and therewith also the Gentiles” (Köllner and others), which however is quite unnecessary. Our view is in substance that given already by Chrysostom (οὐκ ἐκβάλλω τὸν νόμον, φησιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐνέτειθεν δίκαιῶ τά ἐθνη), Erasmus, and others; more recently by Tholuck, Rückert, Reiche, Köllner, Fritzsche, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Reithmayr, van Hengel, Ewald, Th. Schott, though with very various modifications.

Ver. 14. "Ὅταν] quando, supposes a case which may take place at any time, and whose frequent occurrence is possible, as “eventus ad experientiam revocatus” (Klotz, ad Devar. p. 689): in the case if, so often as. — γάρ] introducing the proof that the proposition of ver. 13 also holds of the Gentiles. See above. — εὕνη] not to be understood of the Gentiles collectively, to which Reiche, de Wette, Köllner, Philippi refer it—for this must have been expressed by the article (against which view neither ix. 30 nor iii. 29, nor 1 Cor. i. 23, is to be adduced), and the putting of the case ὅταν . . . τοῖς with respect to the heathen generally would be in itself untrue—but Paul means rather Gentiles among whom the supposed case occurs. — τὰ μὴ νόμον ἔχοντα] they who have not the law; a more precise definition bearing on the case, and bringing forward the point on which here the argument turns. See Winer,

\(^1\) Only thus—but not as Paul has actually placed it—could the negative clause be regarded as the chief thought, for which Philippi is obliged to take it, p. 54 f. 3rd ed.

\(^2\) These reasons may also be urged against Hofmann, who, substantially like Philippi, takes vv. 14-16 as a proof, that in the matter of righteousness before God nothing can depend on whether one belongs to the number of those who hear the law read to them.
p. 127 [E. T. 174]. Observe the distinction between \( \mu\eta \nu\omicron\omicron\upsilon\mu\omicron \varepsilon\chi \) and \( \nu\omicron\omicron\upsilon\mu\omicron \mu\eta \varepsilon\chi \). The former negatives—while the contrast of the \( \phi\omicron\omicron\omicron\epsilon\iota \) floats before the mind—the possession of the law, instead of which they have merely a natural analogue of it (compare Stalb. ad Plat. Crit. p. 47 D); the latter negatives the possession of the law, which is wanting to them, whilst the Jews have it. — \( \phi\omicron\omicron\omicron\epsilon\iota \tau\acute{a} \tau\omicron\nu\omicron\nu\omicron \omicron\upsilon\mu\omicron \nu\omicron\pi\omicron\eta \] Most expositors uphold this connection, including Rückert, 2nd ed. On the other hand Bengel and Usteri join \( \phi\omicron\omicron\omicron\epsilon\iota \) to \( \mu\eta \nu\omicron\omicron\upsilon \varepsilon\chi\nu\omicron\tau\alpha\), but thus make it superfluous and even unsuitable, and deprive it of all weight in the connection, especially as the word \( \phi\omicron\omicron\omicron\epsilon\iota \) has here no other sense than \( \text{nativa indoles} \), i.e. the original constitution given with existence, and not moulded by any extraneous training, culture, or other influence beyond the endowments of nature and their natural development (comp. on Eph. ii. 3); \( \phi\omicron\omicron\omicron\epsilon\iota \) : "quia natura eorum ita fert," Stalb. ad Plat. Phaedr. p. 249. The dative denotes the mediating cause. And that it is the \textit{moral prompting of conscience left to itself}, which Paul means by \( \phi\omicron\omicron\omicron\epsilon\iota \) in contrast to the divine leading of the law, is plain from ver. 15. The \( \phi\omicron\omicron\omicron\epsilon\iota \) \( \pi\omicron\omega\iota\epsilon\iota \) lies beyond the sphere of positive revelation and its promptings, leadings, etc. It takes place in virtue of an indoles \( \text{ingenita} \), not \( \text{interventu disciplinae divinæ formata} \), so that the thought of an operation of grace or of the Logos taking place apart from Christ is quite foreign to this passage, and its affirmation is not in harmony with the \textit{truncus et lapis} of the Formula Concordiae. See the later discussions of dogmatic writers as to this point in Luthardt, \textit{v. freien Willen}, p. 366 ff. — \( \tau\acute{a} \tau\omicron\nu\omicron\nu\omicron \omicron\upsilon\mu\omicron \) \textit{what belongs to the law}, i.e. \( \text{its constituent elements, its precepts} \). Paul does not say simply \( \tau\omicron\nu\omicron\nu\omicron \omicron\upsilon\mu\omicron \); for he is thinking not of Gentiles who fulfil the law as a whole, but of those who in \textit{concrete cases} by their action respond to the \textit{particular portions} of the law \textit{concerned}. Compare Luthardt \textit{l.c.} p. 409. The close relation, in which the \( \pi\omicron\omega\iota\epsilon\iota \tau\acute{a} \tau\omicron\nu\omicron\nu\omicron \omicron\upsilon\mu\omicron \) here stands to \( \pi\omega\iota\tau\alpha\tau\omicron \nu\omicron\nu\omicron \omicron\upsilon\mu\omicron \) in ver. 13, is fatal to the view of Beza, Joh. Cappell, Elsner, Wetstein, Michaelis, Flatt, and Mehring, who explain it as \textit{quaes leg facit}, namely, the commanding, convincing, condemning, etc. — \( \varepsilon\alpha\nu\rho\omicron\omicron\iota\omicron\iota \varepsilon\iota\omicron\iota \nu\omicron\mu\omicron \upsilon\omicron\varrho \] \textit{They are the law unto themselves}, i.e. their \textit{moral nature, with its voice of conscience commanding and forbidding, supplies to their own Ego the place of the revealed law possessed by the Jews. Thus in that ποιεῖν they serve for themselves as a regulator of the conduct that agrees with the divine law. For parallels (Manil. v. 495, al.: ipse sibi lex est, Arist. Nicom. iv. 14: νόμος συν έαυτῷ al.) see Wetstein; compare also Porph. ad Marc. 25, p. 304.—Observe further that here, where the participle stands without the article—consequently not οἱ νόμοι μὴ χρηστέεσ (as previously τὰ μὴ . . . . χρηστεύα)—it is to be resolved by since they, because they; which however does not convey the idea: because they are conscious of the absence of the law (as Hofmann objects), but rather: because this want occurs in their case. See Buttmann's neut. Gr. p. 301. The resolution by although (Th. Schott) is opposed to the connection; that by while (Hofmann) fails to convey the definite and logical meaning; which is, that Gentiles, in the cases indicated by δὲ ταύτα κ.τ.λ. would not be έαυτοίς νόμοις, if they had the positive law.—The οὖτοι comprehends emphatically the subjects in question; Kühner, II. 1, p. 568; Buttmann l.c. p. 262 f.

Ver. 15. Οἵτινες κ.τ.λ.] quippe qui. See on i. 25. The οὖτοι of ver. 14 are characterised, and consequently the έαυτοίς εἰσὶ νόμοι, just asserted, is confirmed: being such as show (practically by their action, ver. 14, make it known) that the work of the law is written in their hearts, wherewithal their conscience bears joint witness, etc.—That εἴδεικνυται should be understood of the practical proof which takes place by the ποιεῖν τὰ τοῦ νόμου (not by the testimony of conscience, Bengel, Tholuck) is required by the σὺν in συμμαρτυροῦσας, which is not a mere strengthening of the simple word (Köllner, Olshausen; comp. Tholuck, following earlier expositors; see, on the other hand, viii. 16, ix. 1), but denotes the agreement of the internal evidence of conscience with the external proof by fact.¹ It is impossible to regard the εἴδεικ-νυνται as taking place on the day indicated in ver. 16 (Hofmann), since this day can be no other than that of the last judgment. See on ver. 16. — τὸ ἔργον τοῦ νόμου] The work relating to the law, the conduct corresponding to it, fulfilling it. The opposite is ἀμαρτήματα νόμου, Wisd. ii. 12. Compare on Gal. ii. 16. The singular is collective (Gal. vi. 4), as a summing up of the ἔργα τ. νόμου (iii. 20, 28, ix. 32; Gal. ii. 16, iii. 2, 5, 10). Compare τὰ τοῦ νόμου above. This stands written in their hearts as commanded, as moral obligation, as ethical law of nature.— γραττῶν] purposely chosen with reference to the written law of Moses, although the moral law is ἀγραφὸς (Plato. Legg. p. 481 B, Thuc. ii. 37, 3, and Krüger, in loc. p. 200; Xen. Mem. iv. 4, 19; Soph. Ant. 450; Dem. 317, 23, 639, 22; Dion. Hal. vii. 41). Compare Jer. xxxi. 33; Heb. viii. 10, and the similar designations among the Rabbins in Buxtorf, Lex Talm. p. 852, 1349. The supplying of ὡ serves to explain the adjective, which is used instead of the participle to denote what continues and is constant. Compare Bornemann, ad Xen. Mem. i. 5, 1; Symp. 4, 25. See the truly classic description of this inner law, and that as divine, in Cicero, de Rpubl. iii. 23; of the Greeks, comp. Soph. O. T. 838 ff., and Wunder, in loc. — συμμαρτυροῦσα αὐτῶν συνεδήσεως, καὶ μεταξὺ κ.τ.λ.] While they make known outwardly by their action that the ἔργον of the law is written in their hearts, their inner moral consciousness accords with it; namely (1), in reference to their own, personal relation: the testimony of their own consciences; and (2), in regard to their mutual relation: the accusations or vindications that are carried on between Gentiles and Gentiles (μεταξὺ ἀλλῆλων) by their thoughts, by their moral judgments. This view of the sense is required by the correlation of the points αὐτῶν and μεταξὺ ἀλλῆλων placed with Tholuck συμ. indicates merely the agreement of the person witnessing with the contents of his testimony. This is never the case, and would virtually deprive the συμ- of all significance.

1 This inward law is not the conscience itself, but the regulative contents of the consciousness of the conscience; consequently, if we conceive the latter, and with justice (in opposition to Rud. Hofmann, Lehre vom Geist, 1866, p. 54, 58 f.), as presented in the form of a syllogism, it forms the subject of the major premise of this syllogism. Comp. Delitzsch, bibl. Psychol. p. 138 f.

2 The καὶ added to the ἡ is based on the view taken of the moral state of the Gentiles, that the κατγροφὴ forms the rule. See Baemlein, Partik. p. 126.
emphasis in the foreground (μεταξὺ occurring in Paul's writings only here, and therefore all the more intentionally chosen in this case); so that thus both the personal individual testimony of conscience (αὐτῶν) and the mutual judgment of the thoughts (μεταξὺ ἀλλήλων), are adduced, as accompanying internal acts, in confirmation of the ἐνδείκνυσται. The Gentiles, who do the requirement of the law, practically show thereby that that requirement is inscribed on their hearts; and this is attested at the same time, so far as concerns the actors themselves, by their (following) conscience, and, so far as concerns their relation to other Gentiles, by the accusations or the vindications which they reciprocally practise in their moral thoughts, the one making reflections of a condemning or of a justifying nature on the other. The prominence thus given to αὐτῶν and μεταξὺ ἀλλήλων, and the antithetical correlation of the two points, have been commonly misunderstood (though not by Castalio, Storr, Flatt, Baumgarten-Crusius), and consequently κ. μετ. ἀλλ. τῶν διαλογ. κ.τ.λ. has been taken merely as an explanatory description of the process of conscience, in which the thoughts accuse or vindicate one another (i.e. one thought the other); so that ἀλλήλων is referred to the thoughts, and not, as is nevertheless required by the αὐτῶν standing in contradistinction to it, to the ἑθνη. This view ought even to have been precluded by attending to the fact that, since συμμαρτ.... συνειδήσεως must, in harmony with the context, mean the approving conscience, what follows cannot well suit as an exposition, because in it the κατηγοροῦσαι preponderates. Finally, it was an arbitrary expedient, rendering μεταξὺ merely superfluous and confusing, to separate it from ἀλλήλα, and to explain the former as meaning at a future time, viz. εν ᾧμέρα κ.τ.λ. (Koppe), or between, at the same time (Köllner, Jatho).

Ver. 16 has its connection with what goes before very variously defined. While Ewald goes so far as to join it with ver. 5, and regards everything intervening as a parenthesis, many, and recently most expositors, have connected it with the immediately preceding συμμαρτ.... ἀπολογ.; in which case, however, εν ᾧμέρα cannot be taken for εἰς ᾧμέραν (Calvin), nor the present participles in a future sense (Fritzsch), since, in accordance with the context, they are contemporary with ἐνθείκιννται. And for that very reason we must reject the view, which has been often assumed, that Paul suddenly transports himself from the present into the time of the judgment, when the exercise of conscience in the Gentiles will be specially active, and that for this reason he at once adds ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κ.τ.λ. directly without inserting καί τούτο μᾶλλον, or καὶ τούτο γενόσεται, or the like (Rückert, Tholuck, de Wette, Reithmayr, Philippi, van Hengel, Umbreit; comp. Estius). The supposition of such an illogical and violent leap of thought in so clear and steady a thinker as Paul is thoroughly arbitrary and wholly without analogy. Moreover, the simple temporal self-judgment of the Gentiles fits into the connection so perfectly, that Paul cannot even have conceived of it as an anticipation of the last judgment (Mehring). Quite an incorrect thought, repugnant to ver. 12 and to the whole doctrinal system of the Apostle, is obtained by Luthardt (v. freien Willen, p. 410 f.), when, very arbitrarily joining it only with καὶ ἀπολογομενων, he discovers here the hope “that to such the reconciling grace of Christ shall one day be extended.” This is not confirmed by ver. 26. A relative natural morality never in the N. T. supplies the place of faith, which is the absolutely necessary condition of reconciling grace. Compare iii. 9, 22, vii. 14 ff. al. Lastly Hofmann, who formerly held a view similar to Luthardt’s (see Schriftenw. I. p. 669), now connects ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κ.τ.λ. to ἐνθείκιννται in such a way, that he explains ver. 16 not at all of the final judgment, but, in contrast even to the latter, of every day on which God causes the Gospel to be proclaimed among the Gentiles; every such day shall be for all, who hear the message, a day of inward judgment; whoever believingly accepts it, and embraces salvation, thereby proves that he himself demands from himself what the revealed law enjoins on those who possess it. This interpretation, which would require us to read with Hofmann κρινει (the present) instead of κρινει, is as novel as it is erroneous. For the expressions in ver. 16 are so entirely those formally used to denote the last judgment (comp. on ἡμέρᾳ 1 Cor. i. 8, v. 5; 2 Cor. i. 14 al.; on κρινει, vv. 2, 3, 5, iii. 6 al.; on Θεος as the judge, iii. 6, xiv. 10, 12 al.; on τὰ κρυπτά, 1 Cor. iv. 5; on διὰ Ἰησοῦ X. 2 Cor. v. 10; Acts xvii. 31), that nothing else could occur to any reader than the conception of that judgment, which moreover has been present to the mind since ver. 2, and from which even κατὰ τὸ εἰναγγ. μου does not draw away the attention. Every element in Hofmann’s exposition is subjectively introduced, so that Paul could not have wrapped up the simple thought, which is supposed to be expressed in so precious a manner, in a more strange disguise—a thought, moreover, which is here utterly irrelevant, since Paul has to do simply with the natural law of the Gentiles in its relation to the revealed νόμος of Judaism, and apart as yet from all reference to the occurrence of their conversion; and hence also the comparison with Heb. iv. 12 is here out of place. The proper view of the passage depends on our treating as a parenthesis, not (with Winer and others) vv. 13-15, but with Lachmann, vv. 14, 15. This parenthetical insertion is already indicated as such by the fact, that the great judicial proposition previously expressed: οἱ ποιηταὶ νόμου δικαιωθησονται is in vv. 14, 15 proved only with reference to a part of mankind, with regard to which it might seem possibly doubtful: it is required by the circumstance, that without it εν ημέρα has no proper logical reference whatever; and lastly, it is confirmed by the consideration that, if it is adopted, the whole is wound up not with an illustration having reference to the Gentiles, but—and how emphatically and solemnly!—with the leading thought of the whole discussion.¹ — τὰ κρυπτὰ τῶν ἄνθρ. The hidden things of men, i.e. everything in their inner or outer life which does not come to the knowledge of others at all, or not according to its moral quality. This special characteristic of the judgment is given with reference to ver. 13, inasmuch as it is just such a judging that is necessary for, and the preliminary to, the realisation of what is affirmed in ver. 13. — κατὰ τὸ εἰναγγέλ. μου] contains, according to the usual view, the accordance of the assertion κρινεῖ ὁ θεὸς τὰ κρυπτὰ τ. ἀνθρ. διὰ Ἰ. Χρ. with the Apostle’s official proclamation of salvation. But the fact that God will judge, etc., was so universally known and so entirely undoubted, that the addition in that sense would have been in the highest degree superfluous; and indeed the μου

1 Compare Weiss, Μβλ. Θεόλ. p. 277: "It is testified by the conscience, which teaches them to judge the quality of their own and others' actions."

¹ There is therefore the less reason for assuming with Laurent that ver. 16 was a marginal note of the Apostle on ver. 13, which was copied into the text at the wrong place.
in that case would have no significance bearing on the matter, since no one proclaiming the Gospel could call in question that truth. We must therefore explain it, with Pareus, Calovius, and many others, including Umbreit and Hofmann, as referring to the manner of the κρίμα. Paul was so certain of the sole truth of the Gospel committed to him (xvi. 25; Eph. iv. 20 f.) which he had by revelation of God (Gal. i. 11 f.), that he could not but be equally certain that the future judgment would not be held otherwise than according to his Gospel, whose contents are conceived as the standard of the sentence. In that same Gospel he knew it to be divinely determined, to whom the στέφανος τῆς δικαιοσύνης, the eternal life and its δόξα, or on the other hand its opposite, eternal ἄπώλεια, should be awarded by the judge. But he knew at the same time the axiom announced in ver. 13, with which ver. 16 connects itself, to be not at variance therewith (comp. iii. 31); as indeed on the contrary, it is just in the Gospel that perfection in the fulfilment of the law is demanded, and accordingly (see ch. vi. 8, xiii. 8 ff.) the judicial recompense is determined conformably to the conduct, viii. 4; 2 Cor. v. 10; Eph. v. 5; 1 Cor. vi. 9 f.; Gal. v. 19-23. On μοι Calvin’s note suffices: suum appellat ratione ministerii, and that, to distinguish it from the preaching not of other apostles, but of false, and especially of Judaizing teachers. Comp. xvi. 25; 2 Tim. ii. 8. The mistaken view is held by Origen, Jerome and other Fathers (see Fabricius, Cod. apocr. p. 371 f.), that Paul meant by his Gospel that of Luke.— διὰ Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ] As He is the Mediator of eternal salvation, so also it is He who is commissioned by God to hold the judgment. Comp. Acts xvii. 30, 31; 1 Cor. iv. 5; 2 Cor. v. 10 al.; John v. 27; Matth. xxv. 31.

Vv. 17-24. The logical connection of this “oratio splendida ac vehemens” (Estius), introduced once more in lively apostrophe,1 with what precedes is to be taken thus: Paul has expressed in vv. 13-16 the rule of judgment, that not the hearers but the doers of the law shall in the judgment be justified. He wishes now vividly to bring home the fact, that the conduct of the Jews, with all their conceit as to the possession and knowledge of the law, is in sharp contradiction to that standard of judgment. The δὲ and the emphatic σὺ are to be explained from the conception of the contrast, which the conduct of the Jews showed, to the proposition that only the doers δικαίωθησονται. As to the construction of vv. 17-23, the common assumption of an anakolouthon, by which Paul in ver. 21 abandons the plan of the discourse started with εἰ, and introduces another turn by means of οὖν (see Winer, p. 529 [E. T. 712], Buttmann, p. 331) is quite unnecessary. The discourse, on the contrary, is formed with regular and logically accurate connection as protasis (vv. 17-20) and apodosis, namely thus: But if thou art called a Jew, and supportest thyself on the law, etc., down to ver. 20, dost thou (interrogative apodosis, vv. 21, 22), who accordingly (οὖν, in accordance with what is specified in vv. 17-20) teachest others, not teach thyself? Stealest thou, who preachest against stealing? Committest thou adultery, who forbiddest adultery? Plunderest thou temples, who abhorrest idols? These questions present the contrast to the contents of the protasis as in the highest degree surprising, as something that one is at a loss how to characterise—and then follows in ver. 23, with trenchant precision, the explanation and decision regarding them in the categorical utterance: Thou, who boastest thyself of the law, dishonourest God by the transgression of the law, a result which is then in ver. 24 further confirmed by a testimony from the O. T. Ver. 23 also might indeed (as commonly explained) be taken as a question; but, when taken as declaratory, the discourse presents a form far more finished, weighty and severe. Paul himself, by abandoning the participial expression uniformly employed four times previously, seems to indicate the cessation of the course hitherto pursued. According to this exposition of the connection, in which it must not be overlooked that the force of the οὖν in ver. 21 is limited solely to the relation of the ὁ διδάσκων ἐπερων and the following participles to what has been said before,¹ we must reject the view of Benecke, Glöckler, and Hofmann that the apodosis only begins with ver. 23, but in ver. 21 f. there is a continuation of the hypothetical protasis—an idea which cannot be tolerated, especially at the beginning of the new form of discourse (the antithetical), without repetition of the ei. Paul would have written ei o\nu o\ διδάσκαων κ.τ.λ. (compare Baemlein, Partik. p. 178). Th. Schott erroneously finds in επαναπαίνη and κατάσκαρε the apodosis, which is then explained.

1 To the Jews, not to the Jewish-Christians. Respecting the composition and character of the Roman congregation nothing can be inferred from this rhetorical form of expression. Comp. Th. Schott, p. 188 f.
CHAP. II. 17-24. 125

¹ This is the well-known epanaleptic οὖν, gathering up and resuming what had been said previously. Regarding the frequency of its use also in Greek writers to introduce the apodosis, especially after a lengthened protasis, see Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 22 f.; Klotz, ad Devar. p. 718. Comp. Bengel on ver. 17.

Vv. 17-20 contain the protasis, whose tenor of censure (called in question without ground by Th. Schott and Hofmann) reveals itself at first gently, but afterwards, ver. 19 f., with greater force. — Τουδαίοις επονομαζόντες if thou art named “Jew.” This was the theocratic title of honour opposed to heathenism (καὶ Χριστός, see Philo, Alleg. I. p. 55 B, de plant. Noe, p. 233 A). Comp. Rev. ii. 9. So much the less therefore is επονομαζόντες to be here understood of a surname (Bengel). Full effect is given to the compound in classic writers also by the notion of name-giving, imposing the name. See Plat. Crat. p. 397 E, p. 406 A; Phaedr. p. 238 A al.; Xen. Oec. 6, 17; Thuc. ii. 29, 3; Polyb. i. 29, 2; comp. Gen. iv. 17, 25 f. Van Hengel arbitrarily imports the idea: pro veteri nomine (Israelitarum) novum substituens. — επαναπαίνη τῷ νόμῳ acquiescis, thou reliest (Mic. iii. 11; 1 Macr. viii. 12; see Wetstein) on the law, comp. John v. 45, as if the possession and knowledge of it were to be the guarantee of salvation. The rest, of not being obliged first of all to seek what God’s will is (Hofmann), cannot be meant; since such a seeking cannot be separated from the possession of the law, but is on the contrary directed to that very law (see ver. 18). But in the law the Jew saw the magna charta of his assurance of salvation. He relied upon it. — εἰ Θεόν] As being the exclusive Father and Protector of the nation. Comp. Gen. xvii. 7; Is. xlv. 25; Jer. xxxi. 33. Observe the climax of the three points in ver. 17. The εἰ with καλχ. (2 Cor. x. 15; Gal. vi. 13), a verb which in Greek authors is joined with επι or εἰς or the accusative, denotes that, wherein the καλχ. rests, according to the analogy of χαίρειν, τέρπεσθαι εἰ (Bernhardy, p. 211; Kühner, II. 1, p. 403). — Ver. 18, τὸ θέλημα] κατ’ εξοχήν. Whose will it was, that was to be obeyed on the part of man, was obvious of itself. Comp. on δοκιμάζεις Acts v. 41. — δοκιμάζεις τὰ διαφέροντα] Thou approvest the excellent. Respecting the lexical correctness of this rendering comp. on Phil. i. 10. Its correctness in accordance with the connection is plain from the climactic relation, in which the two elements of
ver. 18 must stand to each other. "Thou knowest the will of God and approvest (theoretically) the excellent"—therewith Paul has conceded to the Jews all possible theory of the ethical, up to the limit of practice. Others, taking δοκιμάζειν as to prove, explain τὰ διαφέροντα as meaning that which is different; and this either (comp. Heb. v. 14) of the distinction between right and wrong (Theodoret, Theophylact, Estius, Grotius and others, including Reiche, Rückert, Tholuck, Fritzsche, Krehl, Philippi, van Hengel, Th. Schott), or that which is different from the will of God, i.e. what is wrong, sinful (Cleri-cus, Glöckler, Mehring, Hofmann; compare Beza). But, after gινώσκεις τὸ θέλημα, how tame and destructive of the climax is either explanation! The Vulgate rightly renders: "probas utiliora." Compare Luther, Erasmus, Castalio, Bengel, Flatt, Ewald. — κατηχοῦμεν ἐκ τ. νόμου] Being instructed out of the law (through the public reading and exposition of it in the synagogues, comp. ἀκρόαται, ver. 13), namely as to the will of God, and as to that which is excellent. — Vv. 19, 20 now describe, with a reference not to be mistaken (in opposition to Th. Schott and Hofmann) to the Jewish presumption and disposition to proselutize (Matth. xxiii. 15), the influence which the Jews, in virtue of their theoretic insight, fancied that they exercised over the Gentiles. The accumulated asyndetic designations of the same thing lend lively force to the description. They are not to be regarded with Reiche as reminiscences from the Gospels (Matth. xv. 14; Luke xx. 32, ii. 32); for apart from the fact that at least no canonical Gospel had at that time been written, the figurative expressions themselves which are here used were very current among the Jews and elsewhere. See, e.g. Wetstein on Matth. xv. 14. Observe, further, that Paul does not continue here with the conjunctive καί, but with the adjunctive τέ, because what follows contains the conduct determined by and dependent on the elements of ver. 18, and not something independent. Comp.
Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 790. — σεαυτὸν δῇς. κ.τ.λ.] that thou thyself for thy part, in virtue of this aptitude received from the law, etc. πεντοίθα, accompanied by the accusative with the infinitive, occurs only here in the N. T., and rarely in Greek authors (Aesch. Sept. 441). — παιδευτὴν κ.τ.λ.] trainer of the foolish, teacher of those in nonage. Comp. Plat. Pol. x. p. 598
C: παιδᾶς τε καὶ ἄφρονας.—τὰν μορφῶν τ. γνώσ. κ. τ.
ἀληθ.] the form of knowledge and of the truth. In the doctrines and precepts of the law religious knowledge and divine truth, both in the objective sense, attain the conformation and exhibition (Ewald: “embodiment”) proper to them, i.e. corresponding to their nature (hence τὰν μορφ.), so that we possess in the law those lineaments which, taken collectively, compose the σχήμαtισμῶς (Hesychius) of knowledge and truth and thus bring them to adequate intellectual cognizance. Truth and knowledge have become in the law ἐμμορφος (Plut. Num. 8, Mor. p. 428 F), or μορφειδῆς (Plut. Mor. p. 735 A). Paul adds this ἔχουμα τὰν μορφ. τ. γν. κ. τ. ἀλ. as an illustrative definition (ut qui habeas, etc.) to all the points previously adduced; and in doing so he places himself entirely at the Jewish point of view (comp.
Wisd. xxiv. 32 ff.), and speaks according to their mode of conception; hence the view which takes μορφ. here as the mere appearance (2 Tim. iii. 5), in contrast to the reality, is quite erroneous (in opposition to τινές in Theophylact, Oecumenius, Pareus, Olshausen). Even Paul himself could not possibly find in the law merely the appearance of truth (iii. 21, 31). On μορφῶν compare Theophrastus, b. pl. iii. 7, 4, and διαμορφῶν in Plut. Mor. p. 1023 C.

Vv. 21, 22. Apodosis interrogating with lively indignation.
See generally, and respecting υἱο, above on vv. 17-24. The form of the questions is expressive of surprise at the existence of an incongruity so much at variance with the protases, ver. 17 f.; it must have been in fact impossible. So also in 1 Cor. vi. 2.—Dost thou, who teachest others accordingly, not teach thine own self? namely, a better way of thinking and living than thou showest by thy conduct. Analogous passages expressing this contrast (comp.
LXX. Ps. l. 16 ff.; Ignat. Eph. 15) from Greek and Rabbinical authors may be seen in Wetstein.—The following infinitives do not include in themselves the idea of δεῖν or ἐξεῖναι (see Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 753 f.), but find their explanation in the idea of commanding, which is implied in the finite verbs; see Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 2, 1, Anab. v. 7, 34; Heindorf, ad Plat. Prot.
p. 346 B; Wunder, ad Soph. O. C. 837.—δ ἰδοῦσινόμενος τὰ ἐκδολα ἱεροσύλεις] Thou, who abhorrest idols, dost thou plunder temples? This is necessarily to be understood of the plundering of idols' temples, with Chrysostom, Theophylact, Clericus, Wetstein, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Fritzsche, de Wette, Tholuck, Philippi, Mehring (Rückert indecisively); as is required by the antithetic relation in which λεηρογολείη stands to the βελησσόμυ. τὰ ἑδόμα. "Thou who holdest all contact with idols as a detestable pollution—dost thou lay plundering hands on their temples?" Abhorrence of idols and (not, it might be, temple-destruction, Deut. vii. 25, but greedy) temple-plundering—Paul could not have placed at the close of his reproachful questions a contrast between theory and practice more incisively affecting Jewish feeling. That robbery of temples actually occurred among the Jews, may justly be inferred from Acts xix. 37, but especially from Josephus, Antt. iv. 8, 10. See also Rabbinical passages in Delitzsch's Hebrew translation, p. 77. It is differently explained by Pelagius, Pareus, Toletus, Grotius, Heumann, Michaelis, Cramer, Reiche, Glöckler, Reithmayr, van Hengel, Ewald, and Hofmann, who understand it of robbing the Jewish temple by the embezzlement or curtailment of the temple-moneys and sacrifices (for proofs of this crime, see Josephus, Antt. viii. 3, 5 f.), by withholding the temple tribute, and the like. Compare Test. XII. Patr. p. 578. Luther, Calvin, Bengel, and others, including Morus, Flatt, Köllner, and Umbreit, interpret it, with still more deviation from the proper sense, as denoting the "profanatio divinae majestatis" (Calvin) generally. Such unjustifiable deviations from the literal sense would not

1 Theophylact (whom Estius follows) very properly refers the λεηρογολείη to the temples of idols, but limits it to the taking away of the αναδήμαρα. His exposition, moreover, aptly brings out the practical bearing of the point: λεηρογολείη λέγει τὴν ἀφαίρεσιν τῶν αναθημάτων τῶν εἰδώλων. καὶ γὰρ εἰ καὶ ἡβέλοντο τὰ εἰδώλα, ἀλλ' ἐμει τῇ φιλοχρηστίᾳ τυραννούμενο ἢπτομο τῶν εἰδωλεῖν ἀναθημάτων δι' ἀληχοροκεφθηκ.

2 The objection urged by Reiche and van Hengel, that λεηρογολείη always refers to temples which the speaker really looks upon as holy places, is irrelevant for this reason, that Paul was obliged to take the word, which he found existing in the Greek, in order to indicate temple-robbery, while he has already sufficiently excluded the idea that the temples themselves were sacred in his eyes by τὰ εἰδώλα.

3 Olshausen thinks that avarice, as inward idolatry, is meant.

L
have been resorted to, if attention had been directed on the one hand to the actual unity of the object in the whole of the antitheses, and on the other to the appropriate climax: theft, adultery, robbery of idols' temples.

Ver. 23 gives to the four questions of reproachful astonishment the decisive categorical answer. See above on vv. 17-24. — διὰ τῆς παραβ. τ. νόμου] To this category belonged especially the ἱεροσυνλείν; for in Deut. vii. 25 f. the destruction of heathen statues is enjoined, but the robbery of their gold and silver is repudiated. — τὸν θεόν ἀτιμάζεις] How? is shown in ver. 24. — τὸν θεόν] who has given the law.

Ver. 24. For confirmation of his τὸν θεόν ἀτιμάζεις Paul subjoins a Scripture quotation, namely Is. lii. 5, in substance after the LXX., not the far more dissimilar passage Ezek. xxxvii. 22 f. (Calvin, Ewald and others), which, according to Hofmann, he is supposed to express according to the Greek translation of Is. i.e. “more convenient” for him. But he applies the quotation in such a way that he makes it his own by the γάρ not found in the original or the LXX.; only indicating by καθὼς γέγραπται at the close, that he has thus appropriated a passage of Scripture. Hence καθὼς γέγ. is placed at the end, as is never done in the case of express quotations of Scripture. The historical sense of the passage is not here concerned, since Paul has not quoted it as a fulfilled prophecy, though otherwise with propriety in the sense of iii. 19. — δι’ ἡμῶν] i.e. on account of your wicked conduct. — Βλασφημεῖται ἐν τοῖς ἐθνεῖς] among the Gentiles, inasmuch, namely, as these infer from the immoral conduct of the Jews that they have an unholy God and Lawgiver, and are thereby moved to blaspheme His holy name. Comp. Clement, Cor. I. 47.

Ver. 25. Having in vv. 17-24 (not merely taken for granted, but) thrown a bright light of illumination on the culpability of the Jews in presence of the law, Paul now briefly and decisively dissipates the fancy of a special advantage, of which they were assured through circumcision. “For circumcision indeed, the advantage of which thou mightest perchance urge against this condemnation, is useful, if thou dost the law; but if thou art a transgressor of the law, thou hast as circumcised no advantage over the uncircumcised.” — γάρ therefore annexes a corroboration of the closing result of vv. 23, 24, and does so by excluding every advantage, which the Jew transgressing the law might fancy himself possessed of, as compared with the Gentile, in virtue of circumcision. \textit{Stat sententia!} in spite of thy circumcision! Hofmann is the less justified, however, in taking the μέν elliptically, with the suppression of its antithesis (Hartung, \textit{Partikell. II.} p. 414, and generally Baeculein, \textit{Part.} p. 163), since against its correspondence with the immediately following δὲ no well-founded logical objection exists. — περὶ τοῦ] circumcision, without the article. It is not however, with Kollner and many others, to be taken as a description of Judaism generally; but definitely and specially of circumcision, to which sacrifice of the body—consecrating men to membership of the people of God (Ewald, \textit{Alterth.} p. 127), and meant to be accompanied by the inner consecration of moral holiness (see on ver. 28)—the theocratic Jewish conceit attributed the absolute value of a service rendering them holy and appropriating the Abrahamic promises. — ωςελει] seeing that it transfers into the communion of all blessings and promises conferred by God on His covenant people; which blessings and promises, however, are attached to the observance of His law as their condition (Gen. xvii. 1 ff.; Lev. xviii. 5; Deut. xxvii. 26; Gal. v. 3), so that circumcision points at the same time to the new covenant, and becomes a sign and seal of the righteousness that is by faith (see on iv. 11). This however the Apostle has not yet in view here. — εὰν \textit{vōu. κ.τ.λ.}] Not on the presupposition that, but rather, as also the two following εὰν: in the case that, Winer, p. 275 [E. T. 366]. — ἀκροβυσσία \textit{γέγονεν} Has become \textit{γέγονεν}, has lost, for thee, every advantage which it was designed to secure to thee over the uncircumcised, so that thou hast now no advantage over the latter, and art, just as he is, no member of God’s people. Paul conceives of the latter as a holy people, like the invisible church of God, in which the mortua membra of the people have no part. The same idea is illustrated concretely by R. Berechias in \textit{Schemoth Rabb.} f. 138, 13: “Ne haeretici et apostatae et impii ex Israelitis dicant: Quandoquidem circumcisi sumus, in infernum non descendimus. Quid agit Deus S. B.? Mittit angelum et praeputia eorum attrahit, ita ut ipsi in infernum descendant.” See other similar passages in Eisenmenger’s entdeckt. Judenth. II. p. 339 f. — γέγονεν] Present of the completed action; vii. 2; xiv. 23; John xx. 23. It is the emergent ethical result, which takes place.

1 It refers to God’s name being dishonoured through the enslaving of the Jews by their tyrants.

Ver. 26. Interrogative inference of the corresponding inverse relation, drawn from ver. 25.— ἠ ἀκροβυστία αὐτῶν] referring to the concrete ἀκροβυστίας understood in the previous ἀκροβυστία. See Winer, p. 138 [E. T. 182]. — τὰ δικαίωματα τ. νόμου φιλ.] The same as τὰ τοῦ νόμου ποιεῖν in ver. 14, as also the following τ. νόμου τέλοσα of ver. 27.¹ A “perfect, deep inner” fulfilment of the law (Philippi), is a gratuitous suggestion, since there is no modal definition appended. Paul means the observance of the Mosaic legal precepts (respecting δικαίωματα comp. on i. 32 and v. 16), which in point of fact takes place when the Gentile obeys the moral law of nature, ver. 14 f. — εἰς περίτ. λογιστήσεως] will be reckoned as circumcision (εἰς in the sense of the result; see ix. 8; Acts xix. 27; Is. xl. 17; Wisd. ix. 6; Theile, ad Jac. p. 138). The future is not that of the logical certainty (Mehring and older expositors), or of the result (Hofmann), which latter sense would be involved in a form of expression corresponding to the γέγονε; but the glance of the Apostle extends (see ver. 27) to the last judgment. To the uncircumcised person, who observes what the law has ordained, i.e. the moral precepts of the law, shall one day be awarded the same salvation that God has destined, subject to the obligation of fulfilment of the law, for those who through circumcision are members of His people. As to the thought comp. Matth. viii. 11, iii. 9; 1 Cor. vii. 19; Gal. v. 6. The reference to proselytes of the gate (Philippi) is not only arbitrary, but also incorrect, because the text has in view the pure contrast between circumcision and uncircumcision, without any hint of an intermediate stage or anything analogous thereto. The proposition is to be retained in its unlimited expression. The mediation,

¹ τὰν νόμων τελείων means, as in James ii. 8, to bring the law into execution. It is only distinguished from φέλασον and τηρεῖν νόμων by its representing the same thing on its practical side, so far as the law is accomplished by the action which the law demands. Comp. Plat. Legg. xi. p. 926 A, xii. p. 958 D; Xen. Cyr. viii. 1, 1; Soph. A. j. 525; Lucian. d. Morte Peregr. 33. On the whole, τελείω frequently answers to the idea pairare, facere. (Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 804.)
however, which has to intervene for the circumcised as well as for the uncircumcised, in order to the procuring of salvation through faith, is still left unnoticed here, and is reserved for the subsequent teaching of the Epistle. See especially ch. iv.

Ver. 27 is regarded by most modern expositors, including Rückert, Reiche (undecidedly), Kollner, Fritzsche, Olshausen, Philippi, Lachmann, Ewald and Mehring, as a continuation of the question, so that οὐχί is again understood before κρυεῖ. But the sequence of thought is brought out much more forcibly, if we take ver. 27 as affirmative, as the reply to the question contained in ver. 26 (as is done by Chrysostom, Erasmus, Luther, Bengel, Wetstein and others; now also by Tholuck, de Wette, van Hengel, Th. Schott, Hofmann). In this case the placing κρυεῖ first conveys a strong emphasis; and καὶ, as often in classic authors (Thiersch, § 354, 5 b.; Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 10, 2) is the simple and, which annexes the answer to the interrogative discourse as if in continuation, and thus assumes its affirmation as self-evident (Ellendt, Lex. Soph. I. p. 880). And the natural uncircumcision, if it fulfils the law, shall judge, i.e. exhibit in thy full desert of punishment (namely, comparatione sui, as Grotius aptly remarks), thee, who, etc. Compare, on the idea, Matth. xii. 41; the thought of the actual direct judgment on the last day, according to 1 Cor. vi. 2, is alien to the passage, although the practical indirect judgment, which is meant, belongs to the future judgment-day.— ἦ ἐκ φύσεως ἀκροβ.] The uncircumcision by nature, i.e. the (persons in question) uncircumcised in virtue of their Gentile birth. This ἐκ φύσεως, which is neither, with Koppe and Olshausen, to be connected with τὸν νόμον τελ., nor, with Mehring, to be taken as equivalent to ἐν σαρκί, is in itself superfluous, but serves to heighten the contrast διὰ γραμμ. κ. περ. The idea, that this ἀκροβυστία is a περιτομή ἐν πνεύματι, must (in opposition to Philippi) have been indicated in the text, and it would have no place in the connection of our passage; see ver. 29, where it first comes in.— τὸν διὰ γράμμ. κ. περ.

1 Not so, that God in judging will apply the Gentile obedience of the law as a standard for estimating the Jewish transgression of it (Th. Schott), which is gratuitously introduced. The standard of judgment remains the law of God (ver. 12 f.); but the example of the Gentile, who has fulfilled it, exposes and practically condemns the Jew who has transgressed it.
παραβ. νόμον who with letter and circumcision art a transgressor of the law. διά denotes the surrounding circumstances amidst which, i.e. here according to the context: in spite of which the transgression takes place.¹ Compare iv. 11, xiv. 20; Winer, p. 355 [E. T. 475]. Others take διά as instrumental, and that either: διὰ νόμου...προαχθεῖς (Oecumenius; comp. Umbreit) or: "occasione legis," (Beza, Estius, and others; comp. Benecke), or: "who transgresses the law, and art exhibited as such by the letter," etc. (Kollner). But the former explanations introduce a foreign idea into the connection; and against Kollner's view it may be urged that his declarative rendering weakens quite unnecessarily the force of the contrast of the two members of the verse. For the most natural and most abrupt contrast to the uncircumcised person who keeps the law is he, who transgresses the law notwithstanding letter and circumcision, and is consequently all the more culpable, because he offends against written divine direction (γραμμ. and theocratic obligation (περιτ.)

Vv. 28, 29. Proof of ver. 27. For the true Judaism (which is not exposed to that κριέ) resides not in that which is external, but in the hidden world of the internal.— ὁ ἐν τῷ φανερῷ i.e. ὃ ἐν τῷ φ. ἐστι (see Bornemann, Schol. in Luc. p. 116): for he is not a Jew, who is so openly, i.e. not he who shows himself to be an Ἰουδαῖος in external visible exhibition (in profession, circumcision, dress, ceremonial service, and the like) is a genuine, ἀληθινός, Ἰουδαῖος answering to the idea. See Matthiae, p. 1533, Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 335 f. The second half of ver. 28, in which ἐν σαρκὶ forms an apposition to ἐν τῷ φανερῷ, more precisely defining it, is to be taken as quite parallel.— Ver. 29 is usually rendered: But he who is a Jew in secret (scil. is a true Jew), and circumcision of the heart, in the spirit, not in the letter (scil. is true circumcision). But against this view it may be urged that ὁ ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ is so completely parallel to the ὁ ἐν τῷ φανερῷ in ver. 28, that a different mode of connection cannot but seem forced. Hence the following construction and exposition result more naturally (comp. Luther, Erasmus, and others; also Fritzsche): But he is a Jew (in the true sense) who is so in secret (in the invisible inner life), and (instead of now saying, in parallel with ver. 28: ἵνα τῷ κρυπτῷ περιτομή, Paul defines both the ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ and the true spiritual meaning of περιτομή more precisely, and says) circumcision of the heart resides (the ἐστὶ to be supplied) in the spirit, not in the letter. Stripped of figure, περιτομή καρδίας is: the separation of all that is immoral from the inner life; for circumcision was accounted even from the earliest times as σύμβολον ἠδονῶν ἔκτομῆς (Philo). See Lev. xxvi. 41; Deut. x. 16, xxx. 6; Jer. iv. 14, ix. 26; Ez. xliv. 7; compare Phil. iii. 3; Col. ii. 11; Acts vii. 51; Philo, de Sacrif. p. 58: περιτέμνεσθε τὰς σκληροκαρδίας, τὸ δὲ ἐστὶ τὰς περιττὰς φύσεις τοῦ ἠγεμονικοῦ, δι' αἰ τομών τὸν παθὸν υἱόπετραν τε καὶ συννήσαν ὁμοία καὶ ὁ κακὸς ψυχής γεωργὸς ἐφύτευσεν, ἀφροῦν, μετὰ σπουδῆς ἀποκείμενε. See also Schoettgen, Hor. p. 815. The uncircumcised heart is ἀμετανόητος, ver. 5.—ἐν πνεύματι] is the power, in which the circumcision of the heart finds its causal ground, namely, in the Spirit, i.e. in the Holy Spirit, through whose power it takes place, not in the letter, which effects the outward circumcision by its commandment. In true Judaism also the Holy Ghost is the divine active principle (comp. vii. 14). So much the less reason is there for making πνεύμα in our passage mean the true Jewish public spirit proceeding from God (de Wette, comp. Tholuck); or the spirit of the law, in contrast to its outward observance (van Hengel, who wrongly urges the absence of the article); or the new life-principle in man, wrought in him by the Spirit of God (Rückert, comp. Luther's gloss); on the contrary, the πνεύμα is to be left as the objective, concrete divine πνεύμα, as the Holy Spirit in the definite sense, and as distinguished from the spiritual conditions and tendencies which He produces. The correct and clear view is held by Grotius, Fritzsche, and Philippi; compare Hofmann. Others, as Theodore of Mopsuestia, Oecumenius (Chrysostom and Theophylact express themselves very indefinitely), Erasmus, Beza, Toletus, Heumann, Morus, Rosenmüller, Reiche, Mehring, take πνεύμα as meaning the spirit of 1 Ewald, who likewise follows our construction in the first clause of the verse, takes in the second half of it καρδίας as predicate: and circumcision is that of the heart. But in that case, since περιτομή in itself would be the true circumcision, we should expect the article before it.

¹ Th. Schott arbitrarily: who with the possession of the law and circumcision does not cease to be a transgressor and to pass for such.

man. But that the circumcision of the heart takes place in the spirit of man, is self-evident; and the similar contrast between πνεύμα and γράμμα, vii. 6 and 2 Cor. iii. 6, clearly excludes the reference to the human spirit.—οὗ] of which, is neuter, and refers to the entire description of the true Jewish nature in ver.
29. The epexegetical relative definition bears to it an argumentative relation: id quod laudem suam habet etc. οὗ γε would be still more emphatic. To interpret it as masculine with reference to Ιουδαίος (Augustine, Erasmus, Beza, Bengel, and many others; including Reiche, Rückert, Köllner, de Wette, Olshausen, Tho-luck, Fritzsche, Philippi, Ewald, and Hofmann; compare van Hengel), is, especially seeing that Paul has not written ἐν, as in
iii. 8 (Schoem. ad Is. p. 243), a very unnecessary violence, which Grotius, who is followed by Th. Schott, makes still worse by twisting the construction as if the ἐστὶν of ver. 28 stood immediately before οὗ (it is not the evident Jew, etc., whose praise, etc.). As is often the case in classic authors, the neuter of the relative belongs to the entire sentence; see especially Richter, de anac. gr. linguae, § 28; Matthiae, II. p. 987 f.—
ὁ ἐπαινός] i.e. the due praise (not recompense). See on 1 Cor. iv. 5.
Compare, on the matter itself, John v. 44, xii 43. Oecumenius rightly says: τὴς γὰρ κρυπτῆς καὶ ἐν καρδίᾳ περιτομῆς οὐκ ἐσται ἐπαινέται ἀθροῖος, ἀλλ' ο ἐγάζων καρδίας καὶ νεφροὺς Θεοῦ. Compare the δόξα Θεοῦ iii. 23. This praise is the holy satisfaction of God [His being well-pleased], as He has so often declared it to the righteous in the Scriptures.—Observe how perfectly analogous ver. 28 f. in its tenor of thought is to the idea of the invisible church. Compare on ver. 25.
CHAPTER III.

Ver. 2. μὲν γάρ] Lachm. following B D* E G, min. vss., Chrys. Aug. reads μὲν. The γάρ was easily lost in consequence of its seeming unnecessary, and of the recollection of i. 8; but is supported by 1 Cor. xi. 18. — Ver. 9. προεγκύμενα] D* G 31, Syr. Erp. Chrys. ms. Theodoret have προκατέχομεν (or κατέχ.) περισσον, and, with several other authorities, omit οὖ πάντως. This προκατ. περισσ. is an erroneous gloss; and the omission of οὖ πάντως is explained by its being no longer suitable after the adoption of τί αὖν προκατέχομεν περισσον; see Reiche, Comm. crit. — Ver. 11. In important codices the article is wanting before συνίσων and ἐκστάσων. But see LXX. Ps. xiv. 2. — Ver. 22. καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας] is wanting in A B C P N*, Copt. Aeth. Arm. Erp. Clem. Or. Cyr. Aug. Deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. 8. But when we consider that a gloss on εἰς πάντας was quite unnecessary, and on the other hand that καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας was equally unnecessary to complete the sense, we may assume that the twice repeated πάντας may have even at a very early date occasioned the omission of καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας. — Ver. 25. τῆς πιστ.] τῆς is wanting in C* D* F G Ν, min., and several Fathers (A and Chrys. omit the whole διὰ τ. πιστ.). Suspected by Griesb., and deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. Still the omission of the article might easily occur if the copyist, as was natural, glanced back at διὰ πιστ., ver. 22. — Ver. 26. πρὸς ἔνδειξ.] Following A B C D* P N, min., we should read with Lachm. and Tisch. πρὸς τήν ἔνδειξ. The article was passed over in accordance with ver. 25. — Ιησοῦ is wanting in F G 52 It.; and is expanded in other authorities (Χριστοῦ Ιησοῦ, or τοῦ κυρίου Ἰ. Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ). Notwithstanding the preponderating testimony in its favour, it is properly deleted by Fritzsche and Tisch. 7. Supplied from looking back to ver. 22. — Ver. 28. γάρ] Elz. and Tisch. 7. read οὖν, against very preponderating testimony, by which also the arrangement δικ. πιστ. ἀνθρωπον (Elz.: τ. δ. α.) is confirmed. Since according to the different modes of apprehending the connection, the emendation might be οὖν as well as γάρ, external attestation only can here be regarded as decisive. — Ver. 29. The reading μόνων (so Tisch. 7. instead of μόνον) is insufficiently attested by B, min. and Fathers; and arose easily out of the context.— οὐχι καί Elz.: οὐχι δὲ καί, against decisive testimony. The δὲ was easily introduced into the text by the contrast, whether the two questions might be taken separately, or together as one.— ἐπειπερ] A B C D N, min., Clem. Or. Cyr. Didym. Damasc.: εἰπερ. Recommended by Griesb.; adopted by Lachm. and Tisch. 8. But how easily may the εἰπερ, only occurring here in the N. T., and therefore unfamiliar to the copyists, have been exchanged for the familiar εἰπερ!

Vv. 1, 2. As an inference (οὖν) from ii. 28, 29, the objection might now be made from the Jewish standpoint against the Apostle, that he quite does away with the advantage of Judaism and the benefit of circumcision. This objection he therefore raises in his own person, in order to remove it himself immediately, ver. 2 ff.— τὸ περισσῶν κ.τ.λ.] the superiority (Matth. v. 47, xi. 9; Plat. Ap. S. p. 20 C; Lucian. Prom. 1; Plut. Demosth. 3) of the Jew, i.e. what he has as an advantage over the Gentile, the Jewish surplus. The following ἡ (or, to express it in other words) τίς ἡ ὁφέλει τ. περιτ. presents substantially the same question in a more specific form.— τὸλού] Much, namely, is the περισσῶν of the Jew or the benefit of circumcision. The neuter comprehends the answer to both; and it must not therefore be said that it applies only to the first question, leaving the second without further notice. It is moreover clear from what precedes and follows, that Paul meant the περισσῶν not in a moral, but in a theocratic sense; comp. ix. 4 f.— κατὰ πάντα τρόπον] in

1 On chap. iii. see Matthias, exeget. Abhandlung über vv. 1-20 (a school-programme), Hanau 1851; and the same author's work: das dritte Kap. d. Br. an d. Röm., ein exeg. Versuch, Cassel 1857; James Morison, A critical exposition of the Third Chapter of Paul's Epistle to the Romans, Lond. 1866.

2 This answer is the Apostle's, not the reply of a Jew asserting his περισσῶν, whom Paul then interrupts in ver. 4 with μὴ γνωρίζει (Baur in the theolog. Jahrb. 1857, p. 69)—a breaking up of the text into dialogue, which is neither necessary nor in any way indicated, and which is not supported by any analogy of other passages. According to Mehring Paul has written ver. 2, and in fact onward to ver. 8, as the sentiments of a Jew to be summarily dealt with, who in πρῶτον had it in view to enumerate yet further advantages, but whose mouth was closed by ver. 9. The unforced exposition of the successive verses does not permit this view; and ii. 25-29 is not at variance with ver. 2, but, on the contrary, leaves sufficiently open to the Apostle the recognition of Jewish privileges, which he begins to specify; comp. ii. 25 and ix. 4 f.
every way (Xen. Anab. vi. 6, 30), in whatever light the matter may be considered. See examples in Wetstein. The opposite: κατ᾽ οὖν εἰναὶ τρόπον, 2 Macc. xi. 31; Polyb. iv. 84, 8, viii. 27, 2. It is an undue anticipation to take the expression as hyperbolical (Reiche), since we do not know how the detailed illustration, which is only begun, would be further pursued.—πρὸ τῶν] first of all, firstly, it is a prerogative of the Jew, or advantage of circumcision, that etc. The Apostle consequently begins to illustrate the πολὺ according to its individual elements, but, just after mentioning the first point, is led away by a thought connected with it, so that all further enumeration (possibly by εἰτα, Xen. Mem. iii. 6, 9) is dropped, and not, as Grotius strangely thinks, postponed to ix. 4. Compare on i. 8; 1 Cor. xi. 18. As the μὲν was evidently meant to be followed by a corresponding δὲ, it was a mere artificial explaining away of the interruption of the discourse, to render πρὸ τῶν praecipue (Beza, Calvin, Toletus, Estius, Calovius, Wolf, Koppe, Glöckler, and others; compare also Hofmann: “before all things”), or to say with Th. Schott, that it indicates the basis from which the πολὺ follows.— δητὶ ἐπιστ. τ. λόγια τ. Θεοῦ] that they (the Jews) were entrusted with the utterances of God, namely, in the holy Scriptures given to them, devoutly to preserve these λόγια as a Divine treasure, and to maintain them for all ages of God’s people as their and their children’s (comp. Acts ii. 39) possession. On the Greek form of expression πιστεύομαι τι (1 Cor. ix. 17; Gal. ii. 7), see Winer, p. 244 [E.T. 326].—τὰ λόγια τ. Θεοῦ] eloquia Dei. That by this general expression (χρησμοῖς αὐτοῖς ἀνωθεν κατηγορθέντος, Chrysostom), which always receives its more precise definition from the context (Acts vii. 38; Heb. v. 12; 1 Pet. iv. 11; compare the passages from the Septuagint in Schleusner, Thes. III. p. 464, from Philo in Loesner, p. 248; and see especially Bleek on Heb. II. 2, p. 114 f.), Paul means here κατ᾽ εἴδοχήν the Messianic prophetic-utterances, is shown by ver. 3, where the ἀποτιὰ of the Jews leaves no room for mistake as to the contents of the λόγια. Compare αἱ ἐπαγγελία, ix. 4. These λόγια τ. Θεοῦ are contained not merely in the prophets proper (Acts iii. 24), but even in the Pentateuch (covenant with Abraham, the promise of Moses); yet the law is not meant, nor even jointly included (Matthias), against which ver. 3 testifies. Just as little is there meant: all making known of God in the history of salvation" (Hofmann), which is too general, and is extended by Hofmann even to the New Testament revelations. Regarding the classic use of λόγια,1 prophecies, see Krüger on Thuc. ii. 8, 2, and generally Locella, ad Xen. Eph. p. 152 f.

Ver. 3. Not an objection to the preceding, but a guarantee of the ἐπιστεύθη. τὰ λόγια τ. Θεοῦ just mentioned, as something that has not been cancelled and revoked through the partial unbelief of the people. "For how? what is the case?2 If some refused the faith, will their unbelief make void the faithfulness of God?" will it produce the effect that God shall now regard the promises once committed to the Jews as void, and Himself as no longer bound to His word therein pledged? The ἡπίστησαν and the ἀτιστήσει are by the context necessarily referred to the λόγια τ. Θεοῦ; the unbelief of a part of the Jews in the promises manifested itself, namely, by their rejecting the Messiah who had appeared according to the promise. So in substance also Matthias, who nevertheless apprehends the notion of ἀπιστεύνει and ἀτιστήσει as unfaithfulness towards what was entrusted to them, which the τίνες did not use for the purpose of letting themselves be led thereby to Christ. But ἀπιστεύνει and ἀτιστήσει (even in 2 Tim. ii. 13) mean specifically throughout the N. T. (see in this Epistle iv. 20, xi. 20, 23; compare Morison, p. 23) unbelief, not unfaithfulness, although Hofmann also ultimately comes to adopt this notion. This remark also applies against the supposition of Köllner, de Wette, Mehring, and older writers, that Paul meant the unfaithfulness (the disobedience) of the Jews in the times before Christ.3 Such a view is opposed to the context; and must not the idea, that the earlier breaches of covenant on the part of the Jews

1 The word is not a diminutive form (Philippi, who finds in it the usual brevity of oracular utterances), but the neuter form of λόγιον. The diminutive conception, little utterances, is expressed not by λόγιον, but by λογίθων, Plat. Bryx. p. 401 E. This applies also in opposition to Morison.

2 τι γάρ; compare Phil. i. 18. Elz., Bengel, and Lachm. place the sign of interrogation after τίνες. Van Hengel follows them, also Th. Schott and Hofmann. It is impossible to decide the question. Still, even in classic authors, the τι γάρ; standing alone is frequent, "ubi quis cum alaritate quadem ad novam sentimentium transgreditur," Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 6, 2; Jacobs. ad Del. epigr. vi. 60; Baemlein, Partik. p. 73 f.

3 Especially would τίνες be quite unsuitable, because it would be absolutely untrue. All were disobedient and unfaithful. See ver. 9 ff.
might possibly annul the λόγια, have been wholly strange to Paul and his Jewish readers, since they knew from experience that, even when the Jews had heaped unfaithfulness upon unfaithfulness, God always committed to them anew, through His prophets, the promises of the Messiah? In the mind of the Apostle the idea of the πάρεσις τῶν προγεγονότων ἀμαρτημάτων was fixed (ver. 25; Acts xvii 30). Therefore we cannot understand (with Philippi) unbelief in the promises shown in the period before Christ to be here referred to. But according to the doctrine of faith in the promised One who had come, as the condition of the Messianic salvation, the doubt might very easily arise: May not the partial unbelief of the Jews since the appearance of Christ, to whom the λόγια referred, possibly cancel the divine utterances of promise committed to the nation? Notwithstanding the simple and definite conception of ἀνωτάτων throughout the N. T., Hofmann here multiplies the ideas embraced so as to include as well disobedience to the law as unbelief towards the Gospel and unbelief towards the prophetic word of promise—a grouping together of very different significations, which is the consequence of the erroneous and far too wide sense assigned to the λόγια τ. Θεοῦ. — τὴν πίστιν τ. Θεοῦ] The genitive is necessarily determined to be the genitive of the subject, partly by ἡ ἀπίστις αὐτῶν, partly by ver. 4, and partly by Θεοῦ δικαιος. in ver. 5. Therefore: the fides Dei in keeping the λόγια, keeping His word, in virtue of which He does not abandon His promises to His people.\(^1\) Compare 2 Tim. ii.13, and the frequent πιστὸς ὁ Θεός, 1 Cor. i.9, x. 13; 2 Cor. i.18 al.—Observe further that Paul designates the unbelievers only by τίνες, some, which is not contemptuous or ironical (Tholuck, Philippi; compare Bengel), nor intended as a milder expression (Grotius), but is rather employed to place in a stronger light the negation of the effect under discussion; and, considering the relative import of τίνες, it is not at variance with the truth, for although there were many (τωῖς καὶ πολλοῖς αὐτοῖς, Plat. Phaed. p. 58 D), still they were not all. Compare xi. 17, and on 1 Cor. x. 7; Krüger, § 51, 16, 14.

\(^1\) It is the fides, qua Deus promissis stat, not in reality different from the idea of the δόθης in ver. 4. The word πίστις, however, is selected as the correlative of δόθης. Despite the Jewish δόθης it continues the case, not that God has been πιστὸς (in that, namely, He has spoken among the people, Hofmann thinks), but that He is πιστὸς, in that, namely, He does not allow Himself to be moved by that δόθης τινῶν to become likewise δόθης, which He would be, if He left His own λόγια committed to the Jews unfulfilled. He will not allow this case of the annulling of His πίστις to occur. Compare 2 Tim. ii. 13.

Ver. 4. Let it not be (far be it)! but God is to be truthful, i.e. His truthfulness is to be the actual result produced (namely, in the carrying out of His Messianic plan of salvation), and every man a liar. To this it shall come; the development of the holy divine economy to this final state of the relation between God and men, is what Paul knows and wishes. — μὴ γένοιτο] The familiar formula of negation by which the thing asked is repelled with abhorrence, corresponding to the χωρὶς (Gen. xliv. 17; Josh. xxii. 29; 1 Sam. xx. 2), is used by Paul particularly often in our Epistle, elsewhere in Gal. ii. 17, iii. 21, 1 Cor. vi. 15, always in a dialectic discussion. In the other writings of the N. T. it occurs only at Luke xx. 16, but is current in later Greek authors (Raphael, Arrian. in loc.; Sturz, de dial. Al. p. 204). — γνεῖσθαω] not equivalent to φανεροῦσθαι, ἀποδεικνύεισθαι (Theophylact), but the historical result which shall come to pass, the actual Theodicee that shall take place. This indeed in reality amounts to a φανεροῦσαι, but it is expressed by γνεῖσθαι, according to its objective reality, which demonstrates itself. In that which God (and man) does, He becomes actually what according to His nature He is. — πᾶς δὲ ἄνθρωπ. ψευστ.] By no means unessential (Rückert), or merely a concomitant circumstance (Th. Schott), is designed, and that all the more forcibly without a preceding μὲν, to appropriate the ἀλήθεια exclusively to God, in contrast to ἥπιστ. τωῖς, ver. 3, outbidding this τωῖς by πᾶς. Every man is a liar, if he does not perform the service to which he has become bound, as is brought to light in the case of the ἥπιστ. by their ἄνθρωποι, since as members of the people of God they had bound themselves to faith in the divine promises. That Paul had Ps. cxvi. 11 in view (Calvin, Wolf, and many others) is the more doubtful, seeing that he immediately quotes another passage. — δύναμις ἀν δικ. κ. τ. λ.] Ps. li. 6 exactly after the LXX. Independently of the more immediate connection and sense of the original text, Paul seizes on the type of the relation discussed by him, which is involved in the words of the Psalm, in the form in which they are reproduced by the LXX.¹ and that in the sense:

¹ The inaccuracies in the translation of the LXX. must be candidly acknowledg-
that thou mayest be justified, i.e. acknowledged as faultless and upright, in thy words, and prevail (in substance the same as the previous δικασθῆς) when thou disputest, namely, with men against whom thou defendest and followest out thy right. From this second clause results that πᾶς δὲ ἃνθρωπος ὑπερστήματος. The exact appropriateness of this view in the connection is decisive against the explanation commonly adopted formerly after the Vulgate and Luther, and again preferred by Mehring, which takes κρίνωσθαι as passive (when thou art subjected to judgment). On the use of the middle, to dispute with, compare LXX. Job ix. 3, xiii. 19, and other passages in Schleusner, Thes. III. p. 385 f. This use has been properly maintained by Beza, Bengel, and others; also Matthias, Tholuck, Philippi, van Hengel, Ewald, Hofmann, and Morison. Compare 1 Cor. vi. 1; Matth. v. 40.— ἐν τοῖς λόγοις σου i.e. in that which thou hast spoken. And that is the category to which λόγια belong, as to which the Apostle has just repelled the idea that God will not keep them on account of their falsehood and will thereby prove untrue. The sense “in sententia ferenda,” when thou passest a sentence (Philippi), cannot be taken out of ἐν τῷ λόγῳ σου, since God is not represented as judge, but as litigant, over whom the justifying judicial decision is pronounced. The view of Hofmann is also erroneous: that it denotes the accusations, which God may bring against men. For the text represents God indeed as the party gaining the verdict and prevailing, but not as the accuser preferring charges; and the λόγοι, in respect of which He is declared justified, point back so directly to the λόγια in ver. 2, that this very correlation has occasioned the selection of the particular passage from Ps. li.— νικᾶν, like vincere, used of prevailing in a process; compare Xen. Mem. iv. 4, 17; Dem. 1436, 18 al. The opposite: ἡττᾶσθαι. — On ὅταν (here in order that in the event of decision) see Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 286, 289; Klotz, ad Devar. p. 685.

Vv. 5, 6. In vv. 3 and 4 it was declared that the unbeliever of a part of the Jews would not make void the truthfulness of God, but that, on the contrary, the latter should be triumphantly ledged; still they do not yield any essential difference of sense from the idea of the original text. These inaccuracies consist in ἰδινὰ (insona sic) being rendered in the LXX. by ἔκφορος, and κρίνωσθαι (sum judicas) being translated ἐν τῷ κρίνωσθαι σε.
justified. But how easily might this be misconstrued by a Jew of the common type as a pretext for his immorality: "the unrighteousness of man in fact brings out more clearly the righteousness of God, and therefore may not be righteously punished by God!" To preclude this misconception and false inference, which so abruptly run counter to his doctrine of universal human guilt, and to leave no pretext remaining (observe beforehand the τι οίν; προεξομεθα in ver. 9), Paul, having in view such thoughts of an antagonist, proposes to himself and his readers the question: "But if our unrighteousness show forth the righteousness of God, what shall we say (infer)? Is God then unrighteous, who inflicteth wrath?" And he disposes of it in the first instance by the categorical answer (ver. 6): No, otherwise God could not be judge of the world. The assumption, that this question is occasioned really and seriously by what goes before, and called forth from the Apostle himself (Hofmann), is rendered untenable by the very addition κατὰ ἄνθρωπον λέγω.

— ἡ ἁδικία ἡμῶν] Quite general: our unrighteousness, abnormal moral condition. To this general category belongs also the ἀπωστία, ver. 3. Paul has regarded the possible Jewish misconception, the notion of which occasions his question, as a general, but for that reason all the more dangerous inference from vv. 3 and 4, in which the words ἁδικία and δικαιοσύνη are suggested by the passage from the Psalms in ver. 4. — ἡμῶν] is said certainly in the character of the ἁδικοὶ in general, and stands in relation to the πᾶς δὲ ἄνθρωπος πειστήσῃ in ver. 4. But as the whole context is directed against the Jews, and the application to these is intended in the general expressions, and indeed expressly made in ver. 19, Paul speaks here also in such a way that the Jewish consciousness, from which, as himself a Jew, he speaks, lies at the bottom of the general form of his representation. — The protasis ei . . . συνιστησι is a concessum, which is in itself correct (ver. 4); but the inference, which the Jewish self-justification might draw from it, is rejected with horror. Observe in this protasis the emphatic juxtaposition ἡμῶν Θεοῦ; and in the apodosis the accent which lies on ἅδικος and τιν ὄργην. — Θεοῦ δικαιοσ. συνιστησι] proves God's righteousness (comp. v. 8; 2 Cor. vi. 4, vii. 11; Gal. ii. 18; Susann. 61; frequently in Polyb. Philo, etc.); makes it apparent beyond doubt, that God is without fault, and such as He must be. The contrast to ἡ ἀδικία ἡμῶν requires δικαιοσ. to be taken thus generally, and forbids its being explained of a particular attribute {truth: Beza, Piscator, Estius, Koppe, and others; goodness: Chrysostom, Theodoret, Grotius, Rosenmuller}, as well as its being taken in the sense of i. 17 (van Hengel). — The τι ἐρωτάμεν (3 Esr. viii. 82) is used by Paul only in the Epistle to the Romans (iv. 1, vi. 1, vii. 7, viii. 31, ix. 14, 30). Compare, however, generally on such questions arousing interest and enlivening the representation, Blomfield, Gloss. in Aesch. Pers. 1013, Dissen, ad Dem. de cor. p. 346 f. — μὴ ἄδικος ὁ Θεός ὁ ἐπιφ. τ. ὀργήν] This question¹ is so put that (as in ver. 3) a negative answer is expected, since Paul has floating before his mind an impious objection conceived of κατὰ ἀνθρωπον. See Hermann, ad Viger. p. 789, 810; Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 159; Baeumlein, p. 302 f. Hence: God is not unrighteous then, who dealeth wrath? This in opposition to Rückert and Philippi, who make the questioner expect an affirmative answer, which can never be the case. In those passages in Greek authors, where an affirmative reply notwithstanding follows, it invariably does so contrary to the expectation of the questioner; see Kühner, II. 2, p. 1024. ἄδικος, prefixed with emphasis, is, on account of its relation to ὁ ἐπιφ. τ. ὀργήν, to be understood in the strict judicial signification unrighteous, which is confirmed by vv. 6 and 7. For examples of ἐπιφέρειν used to express the practical infliction of wrath or punishment see Raphel, Polyb.; Kypke, II. p. 160. The article with the participle indicates the relation as well-known; and τὴν ὀργήν (Sin.* adds αὐτῶ) denotes the wrath definitely conceived of as judicial, inflicted at the judgment. Compare Ritschl, de ira Dei, p. 15. — κατὰ ἀνθρωπον λέγω] To preclude his being misunderstood, as if he were asking εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀδικία ἡμῶν . . . μὴ ἄδικος κ.τ.λ. from his own enlightened Christian view, Paul remarks parenthetically that he says this according to a human standard (Bernhardy, p. 241), after the fashion of ordinary humanity, quite apart from his own higher standpoint of divine enlightenment, to which the idea expressed

¹ After μή, ἐρωτάμεν is not again to be understood, and then ἄδικος κ.τ.λ. to be taken as a question ensuing itheron (Mangold, p. 106). A breaking up of the construction without due ground. Compare, rather, ix. 14, a passage which in form also is perfectly parallel to this one.
in that question would be foreign, and speaking only in accordance with mere human reason. Compare 1 Cor. ix. 8; Gal. iii. 15; Soph. Α. 761: κατὰ ἄνθρωπον φρονεῖ. "I say this just as an ordinary man, not under the influence of the divine Spirit, may well say it." Respecting the expression κατὰ ἄνθρωπος, which is capable according to the context of great variety of meaning, compare Fritzsch in loc. It is wrongly inferred from κατὰ ἄνθρωπος λέγω that the question μὴ ἁδικός κ.τ.λ. was meant to receive an affirmative answer, because as a negative query it would not be κατὰ ἄνθρωπος (see Philippi). But this view overlooks the fact that the whole thought, which is implied in the question calculated though it is for a negative reply,—the thought of the unrighteousness of God in punishing—can in fact only be put into expression κατὰ ἄνθρωπος; in the higher Christian insight a conception so blasphemous and deserving of abhorrence can find neither place nor utterance. The apology however, involved in κατὰ ἄνθρωπος λέγω, is applicable only to what goes before, not to what follows, to which Mehring, Th. Schott and Hofmann refer it. This is the more obvious, since what immediately follows is merely a repudiating μὴ γένοιτο, and the ἐπεί κ.τ.λ., which assigns the ground for this repudiation, is by no means an idea outside the range of revelation, the application of which to a rational inference, and one too so plainly right, cannot transfer it to the lower sphere of the κατὰ ἄνθρωπος λέγειν. — Ver. 6. ἐπεί] gives the ground of the μὴ γένοιτο; for (if the God who inflicts wrath is unrighteous) how will it be possible that He shall judge the world? The future is to be left in its purely future sense, since it refers to a future act taking place at any rate, as to which the only difficulty would be to see how it was to be accomplished, if, etc. On ἐπεί, for otherwise, see Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 308. κρωσεῖ has the emphasis.—τὸν κόσμον is to be taken, with most expositors, generally as meaning all mankind (compare ver. 19). To be judge of the world and yet, as ἐπιθέσεως τ. ὁργ., to be ἁδικός, is a contradiction of terms; the certainty that God is the former would become an impossibility if He were the latter. Compare Gen. xviii. 25. Koppe, Reiche, Schrader, Olshausen, and Jatho, following older authorities, take it only of the Gentile world (χι. 12; 1 Cor. vi. 2, xi. 32): "In that case God could not punish even the Gentile world for its idolatry, since it is only in contrast therewith that the true worship of God appears in its full value" (Reiche) But, in this explanation, the very essential idea: "since . . . appears" has first of all to be imported, an expedient which, in presence of the simplicity and clearness of our view, cannot but seem arbitrary. Even the following proof, ver. 7 f., does not present a reference directly to the judgment of the Gentiles. The argument itself rests on the premiss that God can carry out the judgment of the world only as One who is righteous in His decreeing of wrath. The opposite would be impossible, not only subjectively, in God Himself (Th. Schott), but also objectively, as standing in contradiction to the notion of a world-judgment. See ver. 7 f. This proposition however is so perfectly certain to the consciousness of faith, out of which Paul asserts it, that there is no ground either for complaining of the weakness of the proof (Rückert), or for reading the thoughts that form the proof between the lines (Fritzsche and Mehring, with varying arbitrariness); the more especially as afterwards, in ver. 7, a still further confirmation of the ἐπεί . . . κόσμου follows.

Ver. 7 f. The ἐπεί πῶς κρίνει ὁ Θεὸς τ. κόσμου receives its illustrative confirmation; for as to the case of God, who would thus be unrighteous and nevertheless is to judge the world, every ground for judging man as a sinner must be superseded by the circumstance already discussed, viz. that His truth has been glorified by man's falsehood (ver. 4 f.); and (ver. 8) as to the case of man himself, there would result the principle directly worthy of condemnation, that he should do evil in order that good might come. Comp. Th. Schott, and in substance also Hofmann and Morison. The argument accordingly rests on the basis, that in the case put (ἐπεί from ver. 6) the relation of God to the judgment of the world would yield two absurd consequences. (See this, as early as Chrysostom.) Another view is that of Calvin, Beza, Grotius, Wolf, and many others, including Rückert, Kollner, Tholuck, Philippi and Umbreit, that the objection of ver. 5 is here amplified. But it is quite as arbitrary and in fact impossible (hence Philippi resorts to the violent expedient of putting in a parenthesis not only κατὰ ἄνθρω. λέγω, but also μὴ γένοιτο . . . κόσμου), with the reference of γάρ, to overlap entirely ver. 6, as it is strange to make the discourse so completely abrupt and to represent the Apostle as making no reply at all to the first part of the alleged amplification of the objection (to ver. 7), and as replying to the second part (ver. 8) only by an anathema sit! (ὁν τ. κρ. ἐνδ. ε.). Against the view of Reiche, who, following Koppe, Rosenmüller, and Flatt, thinks that the Gentile is introduced as speaking in ver. 7 (compare Olshausen), we may decisively urge the close connection therewith of ver. 8, where Paul includes himself also, but does not “take speech in hand again” (Reiche). See besides on τὸν κόσμον, ver. 6.— ἀλήθεια and ψεύσματα are terms chosen in reference to ver. 4, because the question proposed in ver. 5 was in fact suggested by that verse; but they represent, as ver. 5 proves, the ideas of δικαιοσύνη and ἀδικία; hence: the moral truth, i.e. the holy righteousness of God (see on John iii. 21; Eph. v. 9; Phil. iv. 8), and the moral falsehood, i.e. the immorality (Rev. xxii. 15), wickedness of man.\footnote{Those who take ver. 7 f. as spoken in the person of the Gentile (see especially Reiche) explain the ἀλήθεια Θεοῦ of the true religion (how entirely opposed to ver. 4 l.), ψεύσματα of idolatry, and ἁμαρτωλός as Gentile.}— ἐπερίσσευεν εἰς τ. δόξ. αὐτοῦ has abounded richly to His glory, that is, has shown itself in superabundant measure, which redounds to His glory. The stress of this protasis lies on ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ ψεύσματι. — The aorist denotes the result of the having abounded, which subsists at the day of judgment (realised as present by τ. εἰς τ. κρ. . . . κρῖνομαι) as up to that point accomplished fact.— εἰς τ. namely, after that assumed result has occurred.— καγώ] emphasising the contradictory relation to the contents of the protasis, according to which this ἐγώ seems actually to have deserved something of God: even I (Baemlein, Partik. p. 150) who have notwithstanding glorified God through my ἔργα. So in substance (“just I” according to Hermann, ad Viger. p. 837) also Tholuck and Morison; compare Philippi: “even I still.” There lies in the expression something of boldness and defiance; but it is not equivalent to καὶ αὐτός, or αὐτός ἐγώ, to the meaning of which Th. Schott and Hofmann ultimately bring it (“even personally still”). We may add that this first person, individualising just like the preceding one (ἐν τ. ἐμῷ ψ.), of course represents the sinner in general (with an intended application to the Jews, see on ver. 5 f), and not the Apostle himself, as Schrader and Fritzsché think. Against this latter theory it is decisive that κρῖνομαι after ver. 6 must indicate, not the judgment of enemies, but necessarily the divine act of judging.— ὁ ἄμαρτ.] as a sinner, not “as a Gentile” (Reiche, Mehring), and others.— Ver. 8. καὶ μὴ] Before μὴ we must again supply τι: and why should we not, etc. Respecting τι μὴ, quædæi, see Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 162. Accordingly, as καὶ continues the question, only a comma is to be placed after κρίνωμαι. — As regards the construction, Paul has dropped the plan of the sentence begun with καὶ μὴ (and why should we not do evil, etc.), being led away from it by the inserted remark, and has joined ἵνα ποιήσωμεν in direct address (let us do) to the λέγειν, so that ἵνα is recitative. But on account of this very blending there is no necessity either to make a parenthesis or to supply anything. For similar attractions (compare especially Xen. Ἀναλ. vi. 4, 18) in which the discourse is interrupted by an intervening clause, and then continued in a regimen dependent on the latter and no longer suitable to the beginning, see Hermann ad Viger. p. 745, 894; Bernhardy, p. 464; Dissen, ad Dem. de cor. p. 346, 418; Krüger, gramm. Unters. p. 457 ff. Many erroneous attempts have been made by commentators (see the various explanations in Morison) to bring out an unbroken construction, as e.g. the supplying of ἐροῦμεν or some such word after μὴ (Erasmus, Calvin, Wolf, Koppe, Benecke, and others, also van Hengel). Even the expedient of Matthias is untenable.¹ The same may be said of that of Hofmann, who supplies an ἐστὶν after καὶ μὴ, and renders: “Why does it not happen to me according to that, as (καθὼς) we are slandered,” etc. But if it is quite gratuitous to supply ἐστὶ, it is still more so to make this ἐστὶ equivalent to γίνεται με. Besides the negation, which, according to our construction, ¹ He brings forward the modal definition: ὁ ἄμαρτωλὸς as the main element; then the modality of the κρίνωμαι opposed to this is καὶ μὴ καθὼς βλασφημ. κ.τ.λ.: “Why then am I even I still judged like a sinner, and not rather according to that, which we are slanderously reported of, and which some affirm that we say: namely, according to this, Let us do evil, that good may come!” Instead of saying: καὶ μὴ ὡς ποιήσας ἂν ἴγαθάδ, Paul, in the indignation of excited feeling, gives to the thought which he had begun the different turn which it presents in the text. With this artificial interpretation, we must remember that Paul would have written καὶ ὄν instead of καὶ μὴ, since it is an objective relation that is here in question (compare Col. ii. 8 et al.); that instead of καθὼς we should have expected the repetition of the ὁ; and that the notion of κρίνω, as it prevails in the connection (compare also the following ἂν κρίμα), does not suit the assumed thought, ὡς ποιήσας ἂν ἴγαθάδ. Comp. also Morison, p. 79.

harmonises with the deliberative sense, would necessarily be not μή but οὐ, since it would negative the reality of the εἴναι understood (1 Cor. vi. 7; Luke xix. 23, xx. 5 al.). The correct view is held also by Winer and Buttmann (p. 235, 211), Philippi and Morison. — καθὼς βλασφημ. as we (Christians) are calumniated, namely, as if we did evil in order that, etc. Then the following καὶ καθὼς... λέγειν contains the accusation, current possibly in Rome also, that the Christians were in the habit of repeating this maxim even as a doctrinal proposition. As to the distinction between φημ. (to assert) and λέγειν, compare on 1 Cor. x. 15. What may have occasioned such slanders against the Christians? Certainly their non-observance of the Mosaic law, to which they ventured to deem themselves not bound, in order to gain eternal life by the grace of God through faith in the redemptive work of Christ, which was an offence to the Jews. The plural is not to be referred to Paul alone, which would be arbitrary on account of the preceding singular; the Christians are conceived as Pauline (comp. Acts xxi. 21); and on the part of Jews and Judaizers (των... certain people, as in 1 Cor. xv. 12) are slanderously and falsely (for see v. 20, vi. 1, 15 ff.) accused of doing evil that good might come (might ensue as result). Under this general category, namely, the calumniators reduced the bearing of the Christians, so far as the latter, without regulating their conduct by the Mosaic law, were nevertheless assured, and professed, that they should through faith in Christ obtain the divine blessings of salvation. That general accusation was an injurious abstract inference thence deduced. — δια i.e. of those, who follow this principle destructive of the whole moral order of God. They form the nearest logical subject. With just indignation the Apostle himself, having a deep sense of morality, makes us feel in conclusion by διά τὸ κρίμα κ.τ.λ. how deserving of punishment is the consequence, which, if God be regarded as an unrighteous judge of the world, must ensue for moral conduct from the premiss that God is glorified by the sin of men. The reference of διά to the slanderers (Theodoret, Grotius, Tholuck, Mehring, Hofmann) is unsuitable, because it separates the weighty closing sentence from the argumentation itself, and makes it merely an accessory thought. — τὸ κρίμα] The definite judicial sentence, decree of punishment at the last judgment. — ἐνδικοῖν accordant with justice, rightful. Compare Heb. ii. 2. Frequently used in classic writers.

Ver. 9. When Paul, in vv. 6-8, has defended the righteousness of God as decreeing wrath (ver. 5) in the face of the proposition, correct in itself, that human sin turns out to God's glory, he has thereby also deprived the sinner of all the defence, which he might derive from the misapplication of that proposition. This position of the case, as it results from vv. 6-8 (οὖν), he now expresses, and that in the lively form of an interrogation, here accompanied by a certain triumph: What then? Are we in the position to apply a defence for ourselves? We cannot therefore with most expositors (including Tholuck, Philippini, Bisping) assume that Paul here reverts to ver. 1.— That the punctuation should not be τὸ οὖν προεξὸμεθα; (as it is given by Oecumenius, 1, Koppe, Th. Schott) is plain from the answer, which is not οὖν πάντως, but οὐ πάντως. And that in adopting the general inclusive form Paul speaks from the standpoint of the Jewish consciousness, and not in the person of the Christians (Hofmann), is apparent from the context both before (see vv. 3, 5, 7) and after (Ἰωνῆας τε καὶ Ἑλλ., and see ver. 19). — τὸ οὖν] sc. ἐστι (Acts xxi. 22; 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 26), what takes place then? how is then the state of the case? Compare vi. 15, xi. 7; frequent in classical writers; comp. on vv. 3, 5.— προεξὸμεθα] Do we put forward (anything) in our defence? Is it the case with us, that something serves us as a defence, that can secure us against the punitive righteousness of God? προεκείνυ, which in the active form means to hold before, to have in advance, to bring forward, and intrinsically to be prominent, also to excel (see Wetstein, also Reiche, Comment. crit. I. p. 24), has in the middle simply the significance to hold before oneself, to have before oneself, either in the proper sense, e.g. of holding forth spears for defence (Hom. Π. xvii. 355), or of having oxen in front (Od. iii. 8), or of holding in front the ram's head (Herod. ii. 42), etc., or in the ethical sense: to put forward, πρὸσχειμα ποιεῖται, to apply something for one's own defence, as in Soph. Ἀντ. 80: σὺ μὲν τάδ' ἐν προοιχεί, Thuc. i. 140, 5 and Krüger in loc., and also Valckenaeer, ad fr. Callim. p. 227. More frequent in Greek writers is the form προϊσχεσθαι, in this sense, as e.g. Thuc. i. 26, 2. Compare also προφασ προϊσχεσθαι, Herod. vi. 117, viii. 3; Herodian, iv. 14, 3; Dem.
THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

in Schol. Hermog. p. 106, 16: προϊςχεσθαι νόμον. This sense of the word is therefore rightly urged by Hemsterhuis, Venema, Koppe, Benecke, Fritzscbe ("utimurne praetextu?") Krehl, Ewald, Morison; compare also Th. Schott. This explanation is the only one warranted by linguistic usage, as well as suited to the connection (see above). The most usual rendering (adopted by Tholuck, Köllner, de Wette, Rückert, Baumgarten-Crusius,Philippi, Baur, Umbreit, Jatho, and Mangold) is that of the Peschito and Vulgate (praecellimus eos?), and of Theophylact: ἐχομέν τι πλέον...καὶ εὑροκιμοῦμεν οὐ Ἰουδαῖοι, ὡς τὸν νόμον καὶ τὴν περιποιήν δεξάμενοι. Compare Theodoret: τι οὖν κατέχομεν περισσότων; Philippi: "Have we any advantage for ourselves?" and now also Hofmann (who held the right view formerly in his Schriftbew. I. p. 501): "Do we raise ourselves above those, upon whom God decrees His judgment of wrath?"

But the mere usus loquendi, affording not a single instance of the middle employed with the signification antecellere, raising oneself above, surpassing, or the like, decisively condemns this usual explanation in its different modifications. And would not the answer οὐ πάντως, in whatever sense we take it, so long as agreeably to the context we continue to

1 Also adopted by Valck. Schol. in Luc. p. 258. Still he would read προοιμία and take τι ὁπων προεχ. together. But the absolute position of προεχ., which has been made an objection to our explanation (Rückert, Tholuck, de Wette, Philippi, Hofmann), does not affect it, since all verbs, if the object be self-evidently implied in the idea itself, may be used so that we can mentally supply a τι (Winer, p. 559 [E. T. 742]). And the subjunctive, which van Hengel also regards as necessary with our view, is not required; the indicative makes the question more definite and precise (Winer, p. 267 [E. T. 354]). Ewald likewise reads τι ὁπων προοιμία (subjunctive); but expunges γὰρ afterwards, and takes so interrogatively, "What shall we now put forward in defence? did we not already, at the outset, prove altogether that Jews," etc. But the omission of γὰρ is only supported by D. Van Hengel despair of a proper explanation, and regards the text as corrupt.

2 Reiche (and similarly Olahausen) retains the same exposition in his exegetical Commentary; but takes προεχ. as passive, are preferred, referring in support of his view to Plut. de Stoic. contrad. 13 (Mor. p. 1038 C), where, however, in τοις ἀγαθοῖς ταῦτα ταῦτα προοιμία καὶ ὁδὲν προοιμίαν ἦν τοῦ Διὸς, the meaning of this προοιμίαν is becoming surpassed. In his Commentar. crit. I. p. 26 ff., he has passed over to the linguistically correct rendering praetextae, but understands nevertheless the first person of Paul himself, and that in the sense: "num Judaeis pec-candi praetextum porrigio?" But the middle means invariably to hold something (for protection) before oneself; as προφασίζομαι also, by which Hesychius properly explains the word, always refers to the subject, which excuses itself by a pretext.
understand as the subject the Jewish, not the Christian we (as Hofmann takes it), be at variance with the answer τολύ κατὰ τάντα τρόπον given in ver. 2? The shifts of expositors to escape this inconsistency (the usual one being that Paul here means subjective advantages in respect of justification, while in ver. 2 he treats of objective theocratic advantages) are forced expedients, which, not at all indicated by any clause of more precise definition on the part of Paul himself, only cast suspicion on the explanation. Wetstein, Michaelis, Cramer, Storr, and recently Matthias, take προεξ. as the passive: are surpassed: "Stand we (at all) at a disadvantage? Are we still surpassed by the Gentiles?" Compare Xen. Anab. iii. 2, 19; Plut. Mor. p. 1038 C. But how could this question be logically inferred from the foregoing without the addition of other thoughts? And in what follows it is not the sinful equality of the Gentiles with the Jews, but that of the Jews with the Gentiles which is made conspicuous. See also ver. 19. Mehring, in thorough opposition to the context, since not a single hint of a transition to the Gentiles is given, makes the question (comp. Oecumenius, 2), and that in the sense "Are we at a disadvantage?" be put into the mouth even of a Gentile. — οὐ πάντος] Vulgate: nequaquam; Theophylact: οὐδαμῶς. This common rendering (compare the French point de tout) is, in accordance with the right explanation of προεξομεθα, the only proper one. The expression, instead of which certainly πάντος οὐ might have been used (1 Cor. xvi. 12), is quite analogous to the οὐ πάνω, where it means in no wise, as in Xen. Mem. iii. 1, 11; Anab. i. 8, 14; Herodian, vi. 5, 11; Dem. Ol. iii. 21; Plat. Lach. p. 189 C; Lucian, Tim. 24 (see Hartung, Partikett. II. p. 87), so that the negative is not transposed, and yet it does not cancel the idea of the adverb, but on the contrary is strengthened by the adverb. By this means the emphatic affirmation, which would have been given by the πάντος alone, is changed into the opposite. Compare Winer, p. 515 f. [E. T. 693]. The comparison with ἤ — κατ' (Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 334) is utterly foreign, since the expression is a pure Greek one. Compare Theognis, 305, Bekker:

1 Those passages where οὐ πάνω negatives with a certain subtlety or ironical turn (not quite, not just), are not cases here in point; see Schoemann, ad Is. p. 276.
2 Bengel: "Judaeus dicert πάντος, at Paulus contradict."
154 THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

οἳ κακοὶ οὐ πάντως (by no means) κακοὶ ἐκ γαστρός γεγόνασιν. Ἐπ. ad Diogn. 9 : οὐ πάντως ἐφηδόμενος (by no means rejoicing) τοῖς ἀμαρτήμασιν ἡμῶν, ἀλλ' ἀνεχόμενος. Perfectly similar is also the Homeric οὐ πάμπαν, decidedly not; see Nägelsbach on the Iliad, p. 146, ed. 3 ; Duncan, Lex. Hom. ed. Rost, p. 888. Compare οὐδὲν πάντως, Herod. v. 34, 65. The explanation, on which van Hengel also insists: not altogether, not in every respect (Grotius, Wetstein, Morus, Flatt, Köllner, Matthias, Umbreit, Methring and Mangold), as in 1 Cor. v. 10, fails to tally with the true explanation of προεχόμεθα and the unrestricted character of the following proof. — προπητασάμεθα] namely, not just from ver. 5 onward (Hofmann), but, in accordance with the following Ἰουδάιους τε κ. "Ελλήνως, in ii. 1 ff. as to the Jews, and in i. 18 ff. as to the Gentiles.1 It is therefore as in i. 5 and frequently elsewhere, the plural of the author, not: we Christians (Hofmann). As to the construction, πάντας may either be joined as an adjective to Ιουδ. τ. κ. "Ελλ., or as a substantive to the infinitive, in either case expressing the idea of all collectively, nēmine excepto. The latter mode of connection is preferable, because it gives a more marked prominence to the idea of totality, which harmonises with the following vv. 10-12. Hence: we have before brought the charge against Jews and Gentiles, that all, etc. Comp. Hofmann and Morison. There is elsewhere no instance of the compound προαυτ.; the Greeks use προκατηγορεῖν. — υφ' ἀμαρτ. εἶναι] They are— while still unregenerate, a more precise definition that is self-evident—all under sin, an expression denoting not merely a state of sin in general, but moral dependence on the power of sin. Compare vii. 25; Gal. iii. 22. But if this be the case with Jews and Gentiles (not merely on the Gentile side), then the Jew, after the way of escape indicated in ver. 5 has been cut off by vv. 6-8, has no defence left to him as respects his liability to punishment any more than the Gentile.2 Accordingly the idea of liability to punishment is not yet expressed in υφ' ἀμαρτ. εἶναι, but is meant only to be inferred from it.

1 Paul however does not say Gentiles and Jews, but the converse, because here again, as in previous cases where both are grouped together (in the last instance ii. 9 f.), he has before his mind the divine historical order, which in the very point of sinfulness tells against the Jew the more seriously.

2 For statements of Greek writers regarding the universality, without any exception, of sin see Spiess, Logos spermat. p. 220 f.
Vv. 10-18. Conformity with Scripture of the charge referred to, *Ἰουδαίοις τε καὶ Ἑλληνῖς πάντες ὑπὲρ ἄμως εἰναὶ, so far (ver. 19) as this charge cuts off from the Jews every πραξεσθαι of ver. 9. — The recitative δει introduces citations from Scripture very various in character, which after the national habit (Surenhusius, κατ' αλλἡ. thes. 7) are arranged in immediate succession. They are taken from the LXX., though for the most part with variations, partly due to quotation from memory, and partly intentional, for the purpose of defining the sense more precisely. The arrangement is such that testimony is adduced for—1st, the state of sin generally (vv. 10-12); 2nd, the practice of sin in word (vv. 13, 14) and deed (vv. 15-17); and 3rd, the sinful source of the whole (ver. 18). More artificial schemes of arrangement are not to be sought (as e.g. in Hofmann), not even by a play on numbers.1 — οὐκ ἔστι δίκαιος οὐδὲ εἰς [There exists not a righteous person (who is such as he ought to be), not even one. Taken from Ps. xiv. 1, where the Sept. has τοιῶν χρηστότητα instead of δίκαιος; Paul has put the latter on purpose at once, in accordance with the aim of his whole argument, prominently to characterise the ὑπὲρ ἄμως εἰναί as a want of δίκαιος. Michaelsis regards the words as the Apostle's own, "under which he comprehends all that follows." So also Eckermann, Koppe, Köllner and Fritzsche. But it is quite at variance with the habit of the Apostle, after using the formula of quotation, to prefix to the words of Scripture a summary of their contents; and this supposition is here the more improbable, seeing that the Apostle continues in ver. 11 in the words of the same Psalm, with the first verse of which our passage substantially agrees. — Regarding οὐδὲ εἰς see on 1 Cor. vii 5, and Stallbaum, ad Plat. Symp. p. 214 D. — Ver. 11 is from Ps. xiv. 2, and so quoted, that the negative sense which results indirectly from the text in the Hebrew and LXX. is expressed by Paul directly: there exists not the understanding one (the practically wise, i.e. the pious one; see Gesenius, Thes. s. v. דִּבֶּר): there exists not the seeker after God (whose thoughts and endeavours are directed towards God,

1  According to Hofmann the first and second parts consist each of seven propositions. Thus even the conclusion of ver. 12, οὐκ ἐστιν ὁτι οὐκ εἰς, is to be reckoned as a separate proposition! How all the parallelism of Hebrew poetry is mutilated by such artifices!
Heb. xi. 6, and see Gesenius, s. v. שְׁפִּירָה). The article denotes the genus as a definite concrete representing it. Compare Buttmann's newt. Gr. p. 253 f. On the idea, which is also classical, of sin as folly, see Nägelsbach, Hom. Theol. VI. 2.— The form σύνιον (so accentuated by Lachmann; compare Buttmann, I. p. 543), or σύνιον (though the former is the more probable; compare Winer, p. 77 f. [E. T. 97], also Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 768), is the usual one in the Sept. (instead of κύριος, Ps. xxxiii. 15). Ps.
xli. 1 ; Jer. xxx. 12 ; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12 et al. — ἐκτρέπων] stronger than the simple form; compare 1 Pet. i. 10 ; very frequent in the LXX.— Ver. 12. From Ps. xiv. 3 closely after the LXX. ἐξεκλιναν, namely from the right way, denotes the demoralisation (see Gesenius, s. v. יָשִׂיר, as does also יַחְפֵּﻳוּתָ֑א, יִרְאָה: they have become useless, corrupt, good for nothing, יַחְפֵּי (Matth. xxv.
30); Polyb. i. 14. 6, i. 48, 9. The following ποιών χρωστότητα is correlative. This ἄμα (altogether) ἁχρεωφῶς has still πάντες for its subject.— ἐνος ἕνος] The οἴκ ἔστιν holds as far as to one (in-clusively), so that therefore not one is excepted. Compare Jud.
iv. 16. Hebraism, see Ewald, Lehrb. § 217, 3. The Latin ad unum omnes is similar.— Ver. 13 as far as ἐδολ. is from Ps. v. 10, and thence till αὐτῶν from Ps. cxi. 4, both closely after the LXX. 1 — τάφος ἀνέφυμ. ο λάρ. αὐτ. ] Estius: “Sicut sepulcrum patens exhalat tetrum ac pestiferum foetorem, ita ex ore illorum impuri, pestilentes noxiiique sermones exuent.” Comp. Pelagius, Bengel, Tholuck, Mehring and Hofmann. But it is more in harmony with the further description, as well as the parallel in Jer. v. 16 (where the quiver of the Chaldeans is compared with an open grave), to find the comparison in the point that, when the godless have opened their throats for lying and corrupting discourse, it is just as if a grave stood opened (observe the per-fecct) to which the corpse ought to be consigned for decay and destruction. 2 So certainly and unavoidably corrupting is their discourse. Moreover λάρυγξ, which is here to be taken in its original sense (as organ of speech, not equivalent to ϕάρυγξ, the 1 The MSS. of the LXX. which read the whole passage vv. 13-18 at Ps. xiv. 3, have been interpolated from our passage in Christian times. See Wolf, Cur. on ver. 10.
2 The metaphorical representation in classical passages, in which, e.g., the Cyclops is termed ἦδος τύμβος (Anth. Pal. xiv. 109, 8), or the vultures ζυγαρ τάφος (Gorgias, ap. Longin. 8), is not similar.
gullet) is more forcibly graphic than στόμα, representing the speech as passionate crying. Compare λαρυγγίζειν, Dem. 323, 1, and λαρυγγεομός, of crying lustily.— ἐδολιοῦσαν] they were deceiving. The imperfect denotes what had taken place as continuing up till the present time; and on this form of the third person plural, of very frequent occurrence in the LXX., see Sturz, Dial. Al. p. 60; Ahrens, Dial. II. p. 304, I. p. 237.— ἰὸς ἀοπτίσων] The poison of asps, a figure for the insidiously corrupting. See similar passages in Alberti, Obs. p. 301. — Ver. 14 is from Ps. x. 7, taken freely from the LXX., who however with their πυρίας deviate from the Hebrew שלם, because they either read it otherwise or translated it erroneously.— πυρίας, figurative designation of the hateful nature. Comp. Eph. iv. 31; Acts viii. 23; James iii. 14; see Wetstein.— Vv. 15-17 are from Is. lix. 7, 8, quoted freely and with abbreviations from the LXX.— ἐν ταῖς ὀδοῖς αὔτῶν] Where they go, is desolation (fragments ἔως) and misery, which they produce.— ὀδὸν εἰρ. οὐκ ἔγν.] i.e. a way on which one walks peacefully (the opposite of the ὀδοί, on which is σύντριμμα κ. ταλαιπ.), they have not known (2 Cor. v. 21), it has remained strange to them. — Ver. 18 is from Ps. xxxvi. 1. The fear of God, which would have preserved them from such conduct and have led them to an entirely different course, is not before their eyes. “There is objectivity ascribed to a condition which is, psychologically, subjective.” Morison.

Ver. 19. The preceding quotations (“in quibus magna est verborum atrocitas,” Melancthon) were intended to prove that Jews and Gentiles are collectively under the dominion of sin (ver. 9); but how easily might it be imagined on the part of the conceited Jews (see especially Eisenmenger’s entdecktes Judenthum, I. p. 568 ff.) that the above passages of Scripture (of which those in vv. 10, 11 and 12, taken from Ps. xiv., really refer originally to the Gentiles, to Babylon), however they might affect the Gentiles, could have no application to themselves, the Jews, who had no need therefore to take them to themselves, as if they also were included in the same condemnation. Such a distinction, however, which could only promote a self-exaltation and self-justification at variance with the divine purpose in those declarations of His word, they were to forego, seeing that everything that the Scripture says has its bearing for the Jews. The Apostle therefore now continues, and that with very emphatic bringing out of the ὅσα in the first half of the verse and of the πᾶς and πᾶς in the second: we know however (as in ii. 2) that whatsoever the law saith, it speaketh to those that are in the law, consequently that the Jews may not except themselves from the reference of any saying in Scripture. — ὅσα] whatsoever, therefore also what is expressed in such condemnatory passages as the above, without exception. — ὅ νῦμοσ] in accordance with its reference to vv. 10-18, is necessarily to be taken here as designation of the O. T. generally (comp. 1 Cor. xiv. 21; John x. 34, xii. 34, xv. 25; 2 Macc. ii. 18); not, with Hunnius, Calovius, Balduin, and Sebastian Schmid, of the law in the dogmatic sense (comp. Matthias); or of the Mosaic law, as Ammon and Glöckler, Th. Schott and Hofmann take it, confusing in various ways the connection.¹ So also van Hengel, who quite gratuitously wishes to assume an enthymeme with a minor premiss to be understood (but the law condemns all those sinners). The designation of the O. T. by ὅ νῦμοσ, which forms the first, and for Israel most important, portion of it, was here occasioned by τῶν ἐν τῷ νῦμῳ Ἰσραήλ, i.e. those who are in the law as their sphere of life. — λέγει . . . Λαλεῖ] All that the law says (materially, or respecting its contents, all ὅνοι of the law), it speaks (speaks out, of the outward act which makes the ἄνοι be heard, makes known through speech) to those who, etc. Comp. on John viii. 43; Mark i. 34; 1 Cor. ix. 8, xii. 3. The dative denotes those to whom the Λαλεῖν applies (Krüger, § 48, ¹ According to Hofmann (compare his Schriftheilweis, I. p. 623 f.; so too, in substance, Th. Schott) the train of thought is: after ver. 9 ff. the only further question that could be put is, whether anything is given to Christians that exempts them from the general guilt and punishment. The law possibly! No, “they know that this law has absolutely (ὅσα) no other tenor than that which it presents to those who belong to its domain, for this purpose, that the whole world, in the same extent in which it is under sin, must in its own time (this idea being conveyed by the aorists φαγῇ and γεύσασθαι, when it comes to stand before God its Judge, be dumb before Him and recognize the justice of His condemning sentence.” This interpretation, obscuring with a far-fetched ingenuity the plain sense of the words, and wringing out of it a tenor of thought to which it is a stranger, is a further result of Hofmann’s having misunderstood the ὅνοι θημεῖα in ver. 9, and having referred it, as also the subsequent προφητείας θημεῖα, to the Christians as subject, an error which necessarily deranged and dislocated for him the entire course of argument in vv. 9-20. At the same time it would not be even historically true that the law has absolutely no other tenor, etc.
7, 13). Those who have their state of life within the sphere of the law are to regard whatsoever the law says as addressed to themselves, whether it was meant primarily for Jews or Gentiles. How this solemnly emphatic quaeunque heaps upon the Jews the Divine sentence of "guilty," and cuts off from them every refuge, as if this or that declaration did not apply to or concern them! — ἵνα πᾶν στόμα ε.τ.λ., in order that every mouth (therefore also the Jew) may be stopped (Heb. xi. 33; Ps. cvii. 42; Job v. 16; and see Wetstein), etc. This, viz. that no one shall be able to bring forward anything for his justification, is represented in ἵνα — which is not ut ut— as intended by the speaking law, i.e. by God speaking in the law. Reiche unjustly characterises this thought as absurd in every view and from every standpoint; the ἵνα πᾶν ε.τ.λ. does not announce itself as the sole and exclusive end, but on the contrary, without negativing other and higher ends, merely expresses one single and special teleological point, which is however the very point which the connection here required to be cited. The time to be mentally supplied for φαγῇ and γένηται is the future generally reckoned from the present of λαλεῖ, not that of the final judgment, which does not harmonise with the thought in ver. 9 to which the series of Scripture testimonies in vv. 10-18 is appended. — ὑπόδικος punishable, κατάκριτος, ἀπαρφηγιάστος, Theophylact; frequently used by classic writers, but elsewhere neither in the N. T. nor in the LXX. or Apocrypha.— τῷ Θεῷ belongs, not to φαγῇ (Matthias), but, after the manner of the more closely defining parallelism, merely to ὑπόδικ. γένηται: to God, as the Being to whom the penalty is to be paid. The opposite is ἀναίτιος ἀθανάτους, Hesiod, ἔργ. 825, and θεοίς ἀναμπλάκητος, Aesch. Agam. 352. Comp. Plat. Legg. viii. p. 816 B: ὑπόδικος ἐστώ τῷ βλαφθέντι, p. 868 D, 11, p. 932; Dem. 518, 3 al. — γένηται] The result which is to manifest itself, as in ver. 4. — πᾶς ὁ κόσμος] quite generally (ver. 9); comp. Eph. ii. 3. And if Paul has described

1 From the poetic tenor of the passage, ἵνα πᾶν ε.τ.λ. Ewald conjectures that it reproduces a passage from the O. T. that is now lost. But how readily may it be conceived that Paul, who was himself of a deeply poetic nature, should, in the vein of higher feeling into which he had been brought by the accumulated words of psalm and prophecy, spontaneously express himself as he has done! That ὑπόδικος does not again occur in his writings, matters not; ὑπόδικος also in ver. 8 is not again used.
this generality (comp. also ver. 23) thus "insigni figura et verborum emphasi" (Melancthon), the result extending to all humanity is not contradicted by the virtue of individuals, such as the patriarchs; for from the ideal, but at the same time legally true (comp. Gal. iii. 10), standpoint of the Apostle this virtuousness is still no ὑπόδοου εἶναι τῷ Θεῷ. See ver. 20. Though different as respects degree, yet all are affected and condemned by the declarations quoted; every one has a share in this corruption.¹

Ver. 20. Διότι] propterea quod, i. 19, not propterea (Beza, Rosenmüller, Morus, Tholuck), is to be divided from the preceding only by a comma, and supplies the objective reason of that ἵνα κ.τ.λ. of the law: because the relation of righteousness will accrue to no flesh from works of the law. For if ἰκαίωσις should come from works of the law, the law would in fact open up the way of righteousness, and therefore that ἵνα πᾶν κ.τ.λ. would not be correct.² As to πᾶσα σάρξ, equivalent to πᾶς ἄθροιστος, but conveying the idea of moral imperfection and sinfulness in presence of God, see on Acts ii. 17; 1 Cor. i. 20; and compare generally on Gal. ii. 16. That with regard to the Gentiles Paul is thinking of the natural law (ii. 14) cannot be admitted, seeing that in the whole connection he has to do with the law of Moses. But neither may the thought be imported into the passage with reference to the Gentiles: "if they should be placed under the law and should have ἔργα νόμου" (Rückert, comp. Philippi and Mehring), since, according to the context, it is only with reference to the Jews (ver. 19) that the question is dealt with as to no flesh being righteous—a general relation which, as regards the Gentiles, is perfectly self-evident, seeing that the latter are ἀνομοί, and have no ἔργα νόμου in the proper

¹ Compare Ernesti, Urspr. d. Stände, II. p. 152 f.
² According to Hofmann, in pursuance of his erroneous interpretation of ver. 19, ἀλλὰ κ.τ.λ. is meant to contain the specification of the reason "why the word of the law was published to the Jews for no other object, than that the whole world might be precluded from all objection against the condemning sentence of God." Compare also Th. Schott. But Paul has not at all expressed in ver. 19 the thought "for no other object," he must in that case, instead of the simple ἵνα which by no means excludes other objects, have written μονώ ἵνα, or possibly εἰς οἴκος et ἥν ἵνα, or in some other way conveyed the non-expressed thought.
sense whatever.—Respecting ἔργα νόμου,1 works in harmony with the law of Moses, the ἔργα being the prominent conception, works which are fulfilments of its precepts, comp. on ii. 15. Moreover that it is not specially the observance of the ritual portions of the law (Pelagius, Cornelius à Lapide, Semler, Ammon), but that of the Mosaic law in general which is meant, is clear partly from the expression itself, which is put without limitation, partly from the contextual relation of the clause to what goes before, and partly from the following διὰ γὰρ νόμου κ.τ.λ., from which the ethical law is so far from being excluded,2 that it is on the contrary precisely this aspect of the νόμος which is specially meant.—οὐ δικαιοθήσεται.] See on i. 17. The future is to be understood either of the moral possibility, or, which is preferable on account of iii. 20, purely in the sense of time, and that of the future generally: “In every case in which justification (i.e. the being declared righteous by God) shall occur, it will not result from,” etc., so that such works should be the causa meritoria. The reference to the future judgment (Reiche) is controverted by the fact that throughout the entire connection justification is regarded as a relation arising immediately from faith, and not as something to be decided only at the judgment. See ver. 21 ff. and chap. iv. For this reason there is immediately afterwards introduced as the counterpart of the δικαιοσύνη, which comes directly from faith, the ἐπίγνωσις ἀμαρτίας, which comes directly from the law. It is certain, moreover, that in οὐ δικαιοθ. κ.τ.λ. Paul had Ps. cxliii. 2 in view, but instead of πᾶς ζων he put πᾶσα σάρκα as more significant for the matter in hand.—In what sense now shall no one from works of the law become righteous before God, i.e. such that God looks upon him as righteous?3 Not in the sense that perfect compliance with the law would be insuffi-

1 For ἔργων νόμου cannot be taken as law of works, as Märcker uniformly wishes. Comp. on ii. 15.

2 Paul always conceives the law as an undivided whole (comp. Usteri, p. 36), while he yet has in his mind sometimes more the ritual, sometimes more the moral, aspect of this one divine νόμος, according to his object and the connection (Ritschl, altkathol. K. p. 73). Comp. on Gal. ii. 16.

3 In opposition to Hofmann, who in his Schriften. I. p. 612 urges the ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ against the imputative sense of the passive δικαιοθῆσαι, see Wieseler on Gal. p. 192 ff. It is quite equivalent to παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, justice Deo, Gal. iii. 11. See generally the thorough defence of the sensus forensis of δικαιοθῆσαι in the N. T., also from classic authors and from the O. T. in Morison, p. 163 ff.
cient to secure justification, against which the fundamental law of the judge: οἱ πονηταὶ νόμου δικαιώθησονται (ii. 13), would be decisive; but in the sense that no man, even with an outwardly faultless observance of the law (comp. on Phil. iii. 6), is in a position to offer to it that full and right obedience, which alone would be the condition of a justification independent of extraneous intervention; in fact, it is only through the law that man comes to a clear perception and consciousness of his moral imperfection by nature (his unrighteousness). See Luther's preface. That this was the Apostle's view, is proved by the reason which follows: διὰ γὰρ νόμου κ.τ.λ. See, besides, especially chs. vii. and viii.; Gal. iii. 10. There is here no mention of the good works of the regenerate, which however are only the fruits of justification, ch. vi. viii. 2 ff.; Eph. ii. 10 al. Comp. Philippi and Morison. — διὰ γὰρ νόμου ἐπίγν. ἀμ.] The law, when it places its demands before man, produces in the latter his first proper recognition of his moral incongruity with the will of God.
"With these words Paul strikes at the deepest root of the matter," Ewald. Respecting γὰρ Calvin's note is sufficient: "a contrario ratiocinatur....quando ex eadem scatebra non prodeuant vita et mora." The propriety of the argument however rests on the fact that the law does not at the same time supply the strength to conquer sin (viii. 3), but stops short at the point of bringing to cognition the "interiorem immunditiem" which it forbids; "hanc judicat et accusat coram Deo, non tollit," Melancthon. It is different in the case of civil laws, which are designed merely to do away with the externa scelera, and to judge the works in and for themselves, xiii. 3 ff.

Vv. 21-30. Paul has hitherto been proving that all men are under sin, and guilty before God. This was the preparatory portion of the detailed illustration of the theme set forth in ch. i. 17;
for before anything else there had to be recognised the general necessity of a δικαιοσύνη not founded on the law—as indeed such a legal righteousness has shown itself to be impossible.
Now however he exhibits this δικαιοσύνη provided from another source—the righteousness of God which comes from faith to all without distinction, to believing Jews and Gentiles. Hofmann rejects this division, in consequence of his having erroneously taken προεχόμεθα in ver. 9 as the utterance of the Christians.
He thinks that the Apostle only now comes to the conclusion, at which he has been aiming ever since the fifth verse: as to what makes Christians, as distinguished from others, assured of salvation.

Ver. 21.¹ Nuvi is usually interpreted here as a pure adverb of time ("nostris temporibus hac in parte felicissimis," Grotius). So also Tholuck, Reiche, Rückerl, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crussia, Winzer, Reithmayr, Philippi, van Hengel, Mehring, Th. Schott, and others. But since what precedes was not given as a delineation of the past, there appears here not the contrast between two periods, but that between two relations, the relation of dependence on the law and the relation of independence on the law (διὰ νόμου ..., χωρίς νόμου). Hence with Beza, Pareus, Piscator, Estius, Koppe, Fritzsche, de Wette, Matthias, and Hofmann, we render: but in this state of the case. See regarding this dialectic use of the νῦν Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 25; Baeuml. Part. p. 95; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 181. Comp. vii. 17; 1 Cor. v. 11, xii. 18, xiii. 13, al.; 4 Macc. vi. 33, xiii. 3. By Greek authors νυν is not thus used, only νῦν. — χωρίς νόμου] placed with full emphasis at the beginning as the opposite of διὰ νόμου, belongs to ἐπεφανερωταί. Aptly rendered by Luther: "without the accessory aid of the law," i.e. so that in this revelation of the righteousness of God the law is left out of account. Reiche (following Augustine, de grat. Chr. 1, 8, and de spir. et. lit. 9, Wolf, and others) joins it with δικαιοσύνη: "the righteousness of God as being imparted to the believer without the law, without the Mosaic law helping him thereto." Compare also Winzer, Klee, Mehring. But apart from the coactior constructio, with which Estius already found fault, we may urge against this view the parallel of διὰ νόμου, ver. 20, which words also do not belong to ἐπεφανερωταί but to the verb to be supplied.—πεφανερωταί is made manifest and lies open to view, so that it presents itself to the knowledge of every one; the present of the completed action, Heb. ix. 26. The expression itself presumes the previous κρυπτῶν (Col iii. 3 f.; Mark iv. 22), the having been hidden, in accordance with which the righteousness of God has not yet been the object of experimental perception. To men it was an unknown treasure. The mode of the πεφανερωταί however consists in the δικαιοσύνη. Θεοῦ

¹ See Winzer, Comm. in Rom. iii. 21-28, Partic. I. and II. 1829.
having become actual, having passed into historical reality, and having been made apparent, which has been accomplished without mixing up the law as a co-operative factor in the matter. — μαρτυρ. υπὸ τ. νόμ. κ. τ. προφ.] An accompanying characteristic definition of δικαίωσύνη Θεοῦ, so far as the latter is made manifest: being witnessed, etc. If it is thus the case with regard to it, that in its πεφανέρωται it is attested by the witness of the law and the prophets, then this precludes the misconception that the δικαίωσύνη revealed χωρίς νόμου is opposed or foreign to the O. T., and consequently an innovation without a background in sacred history. Comp. xvi. 26; John v. 39. "Novum testamentum in vetere latet, vetus in novo patet." Augustine. In this case we are not to think of the moral requirements (Th. Schott), but of the collective Messianic types, promises and prophecies in the law and the prophets, in which is also necessarily comprised the δικαίωσύνη Θεοῦ as that which is necessary to participation in the Messianic salvation. Comp. i. 2, iii. 2; Acts x. 43, xxviii. 23; Luke xxiv. 27; from the law, the testimony of Abraham, iv. 3 ff. and the testimonies quoted in x. 6 ff. — Observe further that μαρτυροῦμαι has the emphasis, in contrast to χωρίς, not υπὸ τοῦ νόμου (Bengel, Fritzsche and others). We may add Bengel’s apt remark: "Lex stricte (namely, in χωρίς νόμου) et late (in υπὸ τοῦ νόμου) dicitur."

Ver. 22. A righteousness of God, however, (mediated) through faith in Jesus Christ. On δὲ, with the repetition of the same idea, to be defined now however more precisely, the δικαίωσύνη Θεοῦ (not merely δικαίωσύνη, as Hofmann insists contrary to the words); comp. ix. 30. See on Phil. ii. 8. — The genitive Ἰ. Χ. contains the object of faith¹ in accordance with prevailing usage (Mark xi. 22; Acts iii. 16; Gal. ii. 16, 20, iii. 22; Eph. iii. 12, iv. 13;

¹ This view of the genitive is justly adhered to by most expositors. It is with πίστις as with δύναμις, in which the object is likewise expressed as well by the genitive as by ἐλα. Nevertheless, Scholten, Rauwenhoff, van Hengel and Berlage (de formulae Paulinae πίστις Ἰ. Χριστοῦ signif., Lugd. B. 1856) have recently taken it to mean the "fides, quae auctore Jesu Christo Deo habetur" (Berlage). Against this view we may decidedly urge the passages where the genitive with πίστις is a thing or an abstract idea (Phil. i. 27; 2 Thess. ii. 13; Acts iii. 16; Col. ii. 12); also the expression πίστις Θεοῦ in Mark xi. 22, where the genitive must necessarily be that of the object. Comp. the classical expressions πίστις θεοῦ and the like. See besides Lipsius, Rechsfertigungs. p. 109 ff.; Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 336.
Phil. iii. 9; James ii. 1). The article before διὰ πίστ. was not needed for the simple reason that δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ is without it. Therefore, and because the point at issue here was not the mode of becoming manifest, but the specific characterising of the righteousness itself that had become manifest, neither διὰ πίστ.

(Fritzsche, Tholuck) nor the following εἰς πάντας κ.τ.λ. (de Wette, Fritzsche, Tholuck, Winer, Mehring and others) is to be made dependent on πεφανέρωται. — εἰς πάντας κ. επὶ π. τ. πίστ.] scil. ὑπάρχει; see Bornemann, ad Xen. Symp. 4, 25. The expression is an earnest and significant bringing into prominence of the universal character of this δικαιοσύνη διὰ πίστ. 'I. X.: which is for all, and upon all who believe. Both prepositions denote the direction of aim, in which the δικαιοσύνη presents itself, though with the special modification that under the εἰς lies the notion of destination (not "the immanent influx," Reithmayr), under the επί that of extending itself over all. On the peculiar habit, which the Apostle has, of setting forth a relation under several aspects by different prepositional definitions of a single word, see Winer, p. 390 [E. T. 521]; compare generally Kühner, II. 1, p. 475 ff. While recent expositors (including Rückert, Reiche, Köllner, de Wette) have often arbitrarily disregarded the distinction in sense between the two prepositions, and have held both merely as a strengthening of the idea all ("for all, for all without exception," Koppe), the old interpreters, on the other hand, forced upon the εἰς and επί much that has nothing at all in common with the relation of the prepositions; e.g. that εἰς π. applies to the Jews and επί π. to the Gentiles; thus Theodoret, Oecumenius, and many others, who have been followed by Bengel, Böhme and Jatho (and conversely by Matthias, who explains ἐκ and εἰς in i. 17 in the same way). — οὐ γὰρ ἔστι διαστ.] Ground assigned for the πάντας τ. πίστ.

"For there is no distinction made, according to which another

1 For in none of the similar passages are the prepositions synonymous. See iii. 20, xi. 36; Gal. i. 1; Eph. iv. 6; Col. i. 16. See also Matthias and Mehring in loc. The latter, following out his connection πεφανέρ., explains: "manifested to all men and for all believers." But it is arbitrary to take τῶν πιστεύων as defining only the second πάντας, as Morus and Flatt (see also Morison, p. 229 ff.) have already done. After the emphatic δικαιοσύνη διὸ Θεοῦ διὰ πίστ. in both instances. That τῶν πιστεύων must define the πάντας in both instances.
way to the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ would stand open for a portion of men, perchance for the Jews,” and that just for the reason that (ver. 23) all have sinned, etc.

Ver. 23. Ἡμαρτον] The sinning of every man is presented as a historical fact of the past, whereby the sinful state is produced. The perfect would designate it as a completed subsisting fact. Calvin, moreover, properly remarks that according to Paul there is nulla justitia “ nisi perfecta et absoluta,” and “ si verum esset, nos partim operibus justificari, partim Dei gratia, non valeret hoc Pauli argumentum.” Luther aptly observes: “They are altogether sinners, etc., is the main article and the central point of this Epistle and of the whole Scripture.” — καὶ ἰστερφ.] They have sinned, and in consequence of this they lack, there is wanting to them, etc. This very present expression, as well as the present participle δικαιούμενοι, ought to have kept Hofmann from understanding τῶν τινων of all believers; for in their case that ἰστερείσθαι no longer applies (v. 1 f., viii. 1 al.), and they are not δικαιούμενοι but δικαιώθεντες; but, as becoming believers, they would not yet be πιστεύοντες. — τῆς δόξας τ. Θεοῦ] The genitive with ἰστερείσθαι (Diod. Sic. xvi. 71; Joseph. Antt. xv. 6, 7) determines for the latter the sense of destitui. See Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 237. Comp. on 1 Cor. i. 7. They lack the honour which God gives,1 they are destitute of the being honoured by God, which would be the case, if the ἰστερον did not occur; in that case they would possess the good pleasure of God, and this, regarded as honour, which they would have to enjoy from God: the δόξα τοῦ Θεοῦ. Comp. ii. 29; John xii. 43, compared with v. 44. Köllner’s objection to this view, which first offers itself, of τ. Θεοῦ as the genitive auctoris, which is also held by Piscator, Hammond, Grotius, Fritzche, Reiche, de Wette, Tholuck, and others, following Chrysostom (comp. Philippi), that it is not the fault of men if they should not have an honour, which proceeds from God, is of no weight; since it certainly is the fault of men, if they render it impossible for a holy God to give them the honour which proceeds from Him. Moreover, Köllner’s own explanation: honour

1 The genitive τ. Θεοῦ cannot, without arbitrariness, be explained otherwise than was done in the case of δικαιοσύνη τ. Θεοῦ. In consequence of his erroneous exposition of δικαωσ. τ. Θεοῦ (see on i. 17), Matthias understands here “glory such as is that of God,” i.e. the glory of personal holiness.
before God (quite so also Calvin; and comp. Philippi), which is said according to the analogy of human relations, in point of fact quite coincides with the above view, since in fact honour before God, or with God (Winzer), is nothing else than the honour that accrues to us from God's judgment. Comp. Calvin: "ita nos ab humani theatri plausu ad tribunal coeleste vocat." Accordingly, the genitive is here all the less to be interpreted coram, since in no other passage (and especially not in δικαίος Θεοῦ, see on i. 17) is there any necessity for this interpretation. This last consideration may also be urged against the interpretation of others: gloriatio coram Deo; "non habent, unde coram Deo glorientur," Estius. So Erasmus, Luther, Toletus, Wolf, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Reithmayr, and others. It is decisive against this view that in all passages where Paul wished to express gloriatio, he knew how to employ the proper word, κατὰ Χηνσίς (ver. 27; 2 Cor. vii. 14, viii. 24 al.). Others, again, following Oecumenius (Chrysostom and Theophylact express themselves too indefinitely, and Theodoret is altogether silent on the matter), explain the δοξα τ. Θεοῦ to mean the glory of eternal life, in so far as God either has destined it for man (Glöckler), or confers it upon him (Böhme, comp. Morison); or in so far as it consists in partaking the glory of God (Beza, comp. Bengel and Baumgarten-Crusius). Mehring allows a choice between the two last definitions of the sense. But the following δικαιούμενοι proves that the δοξα τοῦ Θεοῦ cannot in reality be anything essentially different from the δικαίος Θεοῦ, and cannot be merely future. Utterly erroneous, finally, is the view of Chemnitz, Flacius, Sebastian Schmid, Calovius, Hassaeus, Alting, Carpzov, Ernesti, recently revived by Rückert, Olshausen, and Mangold, that the δοξα τοῦ Θεοῦ is the image of God; "a godlike δοξα," as Rückert puts it, and thus gets rid of the objection that δοξα is not synonymous with εἰκόν. But how arbitrarily is the relation of the genitive thus defined, altogether without the precedent of a similar usage (2 Cor. xi. 2 is not a case in point)! That the idea of the image of God is not suggested by anything in the connection is self-evident, since, as the subsequent δικαιούμενοι κ.τ.λ. abundantly shows, it is the idea of the want of righteousness that is under discussion. Hofmann and Ewald have explained it in the same way as Rückert, though they take the genitive more accurately (a δόξα such as God Himself possesses). The latter\(^1\) understands “the glory of God which man indeed has by creation, Ps. viii. 8, but which by sin he may lose for time and eternity, and has now lost.” Compare Hofmann: “Whatsoever is of God has a share, after the manner of a creature, in the glory of God. If this therefore be not found in man, the reason is that he has forfeited the relation to God in which he was created.”

1 He takes δοξα τοῦ Θεοῦ as "gloria homini a Deo concessa in creatione;" this gloria having been the divine image, which we forfeited after the fall.

But even apart from the fact that such a participation in the glory of God had been lost already through the fall (v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 22), and not for the first time through the individual ἡμαρταν here meant, it is decisive against this exposition that the participation in the divine δόξα nowhere appears as an original blessing that has fallen into abeyance, but always as something to be conferred only at the Parousia (v. 2; 1 Thess. ii. 12); as the συνδόξασθηναι with Christ (viii. 17 f.; Col. iii. 4); as the glorious κληρονομία of God (comp. also 2 Tim. iv. 8; 1 Pet. v. 4); and consequently as the new blessing of the future αἰῶν (1 Cor. ii. 9). That is also the proleptic εὐδόξασθε in viii. 30, which however would be foreign to the present connection.

Ver. 24. Δικαιούμενοι does not stand for the finite tense (as even Rückert and Reiche, following Erasmus, Calvin and Melancthon, think); nor is, with Ewald, ver. 23 to be treated as a parenthesis, so that the discourse from the accusative in ver. 22 should now resolve itself more freely into the nominative, which would be unnecessarily harsh. But the participle introduces the accompanying relation, which here comes into view with the ὑπερερχόμενα τῆς δόξης τ. Θεοῦ, namely, that of the mode of their δικαιοσύνη: so that, in that state of destitution, they receive justification in the way of gift. Bengel aptly remarks: “repente sic panditur scena amoenior.” The participle is not even to be resolved into καὶ δικαιοσύνην (Peschito, Luther, Fritzsche), but the relation of becoming justified is to be left in the dependence on the want of the δόξα Θεοῦ, in which it is conceived.

\(^1\) Similarly already Melancthon: “gloria Dei, i.e. luce Dei fulgente in natura incorrupta, seu ipso Deo carent, ostendente se et ascendente ardentem dilectionem et alios motus legi congruentes sine ullo peccato.” Previously (1540) he had explained: “gloria, quam Deus approbat.”
and expressed. Against the Osiandrian misinterpretations in their old and new forms see Melancthon, Enarr. on ver. 21; Kahnis, Dogm. I. p. 599 ff.; and also Philippi, Glaubenslehre, IV. 2, p. 247 ff. — δῶρεάν] gratuitously (comp. v. 17, and on the adverb in this sense Polyb. xviii. 17, 7; 1 Macc. x. 33; Matth. x. 8; 2 Thess. iii. 8; 2 Cor. xi. 7) they are placed in the relation of righteousness, so that this is not anyhow the result of their own performance; comp. Eph. ii. 8; Tit. iii. 5. — τῷ αὐτοῦ χάριν, διὰ τῆς ἀπόλ. τῆς ἐν Χ. Ἰ.] in virtue of His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. This redemption is that which forms the medium of the justification of man taking place gratuitously through the grace of God. By the position of the words τῷ αὐτοῦ χάριν, the divine grace, is, in harmony with the notion of δωρεάν, emphasised precisely as the divine, opposed to all human co-operation; comp. Eph. ii. 8. In ἄπολύτρωσις (comp. Plut. Pomp. 24, Dem. 159, 15) the special idea of ransoming (comp. on Eph. i. 7; 1 Cor. vi. 20; Gal. iii. 13) is not to be changed into the general one of the Messianic liberation (viii. 23; Luke xxii. 28; Eph. i. 14, iv. 30; and see Ritschl in the Jahrb. f. d. Theol. 1863, p. 512); for the λύτρον or ἄντι-λυτρον (Matth. xx. 28; 1 Tim. ii. 6) which Christ rendered, to procure for all believers remission of guilt and the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, was His blood, which was the atoning sacrificial blood, and so as equivalent accomplished the forgiveness of sins, i.e. the essence of the ἄπολύτρωσις. See ver. 25; Eph. i. 7; Col. i. 14; Heb. ix. 15; comp. on Matth. xx. 28; 1 Cor. vi. 20; Gal. iii. 13; 2 Cor. v. 21. Liberation from the sin-principle (from its dominion) is not the essence of the ἄπολύτρωσις itself (Lipsius, Rechtfertigungsl. p. 147 f.), but its consequence through the Spirit, if it is appropriated in faith (viii. 2). Every mode of conception, which refers redemption and the forgiveness of sins not to a real atonement through the death of Christ, but subjectively to the dying and reviving with Him guaranteed and produced by that death (Schleiermacher, Nitzsch, Hofmann, and others, with various modifications), is opposed to the N. T. — a mixing up of justification and sanctification. Comp. on ver. 26; also Ernesti, Ethik d. Ap. P. p. 27 f. — ἐν Χ. Ἰσραήλ] i.e. contained and resting in Him, in His person that has appeared as the Messiah (hence the Χριστός is placed first). To what extent, is shown in ver. 25.
—Observe further that justification, the causa efficiens of which is the divine grace (τὸ αὐτοῦ χαρίτι), is here represented as obtained by means of the ἀπολύτρωσις, but in ver. 22 as obtained by means of faith, namely, in the one case objectively and in the other subjectively (comp. ver. 25). But even in ver. 22 the objective element was indicated in πίστ. Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, and in ver. 24 f. both elements are more particularly explained.

Ver. 25. See on ver. 25 f. Ritschl, in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1863, p. 500 ff.; Pfeiderer in Hilgenfeld's Zeitschr. 1872, p. 177 ff.; the critical comparison of the various explanations in Morison, p. 268 ff. — ὁ προέθετο κ.τ.λ. whom God has openly set forth for Himself.¹ This signification, familiar from the Greek usage (Herod. iii. 148, vi. 21; Plat. Phaed. p. 115 E; Eur. Ale. 667; Thuc. ii. 34, 1, 64, 3; Dem. 1071, 1; Herodian, viii. 6, 5; also in the LXX.), is decidedly to be adopted on account of the correlation with εἰς ὑπερεξεῖν κ.τ.λ. (Vulgate, Pelagius, Luther, Beza, Bengel and others; also Rückert, de Wette, Philippi, Tholuck, Hofmann and Morison); and not the equally classic signification: to propose to oneself, adopted by Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Toletus, Pareus, de Dieu, Eisner, Heumann, Böhme, Flatt and Fritzsche (i. 13; Eph. i. 9; 3 Macc. ii. 27): “quem esse voluit Deus piaculum sacrificium,” Fritzsche.² In that case an infinitive must have been required; and it was with the publicity of the divine act before the whole world that the Apostle was here concerned, as he has already indicated by τὸ παραγόντα in ver. 21. Matthias explains it: whom He caused to be openly made known, to be preached. But the classical use of προφητῆμα, in the active and middle, in the sense of promulgare is here foreign, since it refers to the summoning or proclamation of assemblies (Soph. Ant. 160, and Hermann in loc.; Lucian, Necyom. 19, and Hemsterhuis in loc.; Dion. Hal. vi. 15 al.; see Schoem. Comit. p. 104; Dorvill. ad Charit. p. 266 f.) or to the promulgation of laws. Besides the ἐνδείξεις τῆς δικαιοσύνης of God rests, in fact, not on the preaching of the atoner, but on the work of atonement itself, which God accomplished by the προέθετο κ.τ.λ. — God's own participation therein (for it was His ἱλαστήριον, willed and instituted by Himself) which is expressed by the middle, is placed beyond question by the εἰς ἐνδείξειν κ.τ.λ., and decisively excludes Hofmann's conception of the death of Christ as a befalling. Compare on ver. 26. — ἱλαστήριον] is the neuter of the adjective ἱλαστήριος, used as a substantive, and hence means simply expiatrix in general, without the word itself conveying the more concrete definition of its sense. The latter is supplied by the context. Thus, for example, in the LXX. (in the older profane Greek the word does not occur) the lid of the ark of the covenant, the ἱλαστήριον, as the propitiatorium operculum, is called τὸ ἱλαστήριον (see below), which designation has become technical, and in Ex. xcv. 17 and xxxvii. 6 receives its more precise definition by the addition of ἐπίθεμα. They also designate the ledge (choir) of the altar for burnt offerings, the τῆς (Ex. xliii. 15, 17, 20) in the same way, because this place also was, through the blood of reconciliation with which it was sprinkled, and generally as an altar-place, a place of atonement. When they render ἱλάσμα in Amos ix. 1 (knob) by ἱλαστήριον, it is probable that they read ἱλασμός. See generally Schleusner, Thes. III. p. 108 f. The word in the sense of offerings of atonement does not occur in the LXX., though it is so used by other writers, so that it may be more specially defined by ιερὸν or θ分布在. Thus in Dio Chrys. Orat. xi. 1, p. 355 Reiske: ἱλαστήριον Ἀχαιοὶ τῇ Ἀθηνᾶ τῇ Ἰλιάδι, where a votive gift bears this inscription, and is thereby indicated as an offering of atonement, as indeed votive gifts generally fall under the wider idea of offerings (Ewald, Alterth. p. 96; Hermann, gottesd. Alterth. § 25, 1); again in Nonnus, Dionys. xiii. p. 383: ἱλαστήρια (the true reading instead of ἰκαστήρια) Γοργοῦς. 4 Macc. xvii. 22: διὰ τοῦ ζήματος τῶν εὐσεβῶν εἰκών καὶ τοῦ ἱλαστήριον τῶν ἑαυτῶν αὐτῶν. Hesych.: ἱλαστήριον καθάρσιον. Comp. Schol. Apoll. Rhod. ii. 487, where λωφήια ιερὰ is explained by ἔξολαστήρια; also the corresponding expressions for sacrifices, σωτήριον (Xen. Anab. iii. 2, 9; v. 1, 1; LXX. Ex. xx. 24); καθάρσιον (Herod. i. 35; Aeschin. p. 4, 10); καθαρτήριον (Poll. i. 32); χαριστήριον (Xen. Cyr. iv. 1, 2; Polyb. xxi. 1, 2); εὐχαριστήριον (Polyb. v. 14, 8). Compare also such expressions as ἐπινίκια θέαν; and see generally Schaefer, ad Bos. Ell. p. 191 ff. Even in our passage the context makes the notion of an atoning sacrifice (comp. Lev. xvii. 11) sufficiently clear by ἐν τῷ αἵματι αἰματί; compare Pfleiderer, l.c. p. 180. The interpretation expiatory sacrifice is adopted by Chrysostom (who at least represents the λαστήριον of Christ as the antitype of the animal offerings), Clericus, Bos, Elsner, Kypke, and others, including Koppe, Flatt, Klee, Reiche, de Wette, Köllner, Fritzsche, Tholuck, Messner and Kwald; Weiss (bibl. Theol. p. 324) is in doubt between this and the following explanation. Others, as Morus, Rosenmüller, Rückert, Usteri and Glöckler, keep with the Vulgate (propitiacionem) and Castalio (placamentum), to the general rendering: means of propitiation. So also Hofmann (comp. Schriften, II. i, p. 338 f.), comparing specially 1 John iv. 10, and σωτήριον in Luke ii. 30; and Rich. Schmidt, Paul. Christol. p. 84 ff. But this, after the προέθετο which points to a definite public appearance, is an abstract idea inappropriate to it (as “propitiation”), especially seeing that ἐν .... αἵματι belongs to προέθετο, and seeing that the view of the death of Jesus as the concrete propitiatory offering was deeply impressed on and vividly present to the Christian consciousness (Eph. v. 2; 1 Cor. v. 7; Heb. ix. 14, 28; 1 Pet. i. 19; John i. 29, xvii. 19 al.). Origen, Theophylact, Erasmus, Luther, Calvin, Piscator, Pareus, Hammond, Grotius, Calovius, Wolf, Wetstein, and others; also Ols- hausen, Tholuck (ed. 5), Philipp, Umbreit, Jatho, Ritschl in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1863, p. 247, and altkathol. Kirche, p.

¹ Which has been done by the crucifixion. Compare the discourse of Jesus where He compares Himself with the serpent of Moses, John iii. Christ has been thus held up to view as ἰματηρῶν. In Greek authors the word προφητῆμα is specially often used to express the exhibition of dead bodies (Kruger on Thuc. ii. 34, 1; Stallbaum, ad Plat. Phaed. p. 115 E). We are not to suppose however that this usage influenced the Apostle in his choice of the word, since he had Christ before his eyes, not as a dead body, but as shedding His blood and dying.

² Ewald has in the translation predestined, but in the explanation exhibited. Van Hengel declares for the latter.

1 The article is, critically, uncertain; but at all events the blood is conceived as atoning sacrificium-blood; comp. ver. 19.

It was already taken as masculine (propitiatorium) in the Syriac (compare the reading propitiacionem in the Vulgate) by Thomas Aquinas and others; also Erasmus (in his translation), Melancthon and Vatablus; more recently also by Vater, Schrader, Reithmayr and van Hengel. But to this it may be objected that there is no example of θαυμάριον used with reference to persons. This remark also applies against Mehring, who interprets powerful for atonement. Kahnis, Dogm. I. p. 584, and similarly Mangold, properly retain the rendering: expiatory offering; and even Morison recognises the sacrificial conception of the “propitiatory,” although like Mehring he abides in substance by the idea of the adjective.
85; Weber, vom Zorne Gottes, p. 273; Delitzsch, on Heb. p. 719, and in the illustrations to his Hebrew translation, p. 79; Märocker, and others, have rendered ἱλαστήριον in quite a special sense, namely, as referring to the canopy-shaped cover suspended over the ark of the covenant (see Ewald, Alterth. p. 164 ff.), on which, as the seat of Jehovah's throne, the blood of the sacrifice was sprinkled by the high priest on the great day of atonement (Ex. xxv. 22; Num. vii. 89; Lev. xvi. 13 ff.; Keil, Arch. I. § 84, and generally Lund, Jüd. Heiligth. ed. Wolf, p. 37 ff.), and which therefore, regarded as the vehicle of the divine grace (see Bähr, Symbolik, I. p. 387 ff.; Hengstenberg, Authent. des Pentateuches, II. p. 642; Schulz, alttest. Theol. I. p. 205), typified Christ as the atoner.¹ That the Kapporeth was termed ἱλαστήριον is not only certain from the LXX.² (Ex. xxv. 18, 19, 20, xxxi. 7 al), but also from Heb. ix. 5, and Philo (vit. Mos. p. 668, D and E; de profug. p. 465 A), who expressly represents the covering of the ark as a symbol of the ἵνα ἄκμα τεύχος of God. Compare also Joseph. Antt. iii. 6, 5. There is consequently nothing to be urged against this explanation, either as respects the usus loquendi or as respects the idea, in accordance with which Christ, the bearer of the divine glory and grace, sprinkled with His own sacrificial blood, would be regarded as the antitype of the Kapporeth. But we may urge against it: (1) that τὸ ἱλαστήριον does not stand with the article, as in the Sept. and Heb. ix. 5, although Christ was to be designated as the realised idea of the definite and in fact singly existing ἱνάμα (τὸ ἀληθινὸν ἱλαστήριον, Theodoret); (2) that even though the term ἱλαστήριον, as applied to the cover of the ark, was certainly familiar to the readers from its use by the LXX., nevertheless this name, in its application to Christ, would come in here quite abruptly, without anything in the context preparing the way for it or leading to it; (3) that προεθέτο would in that case be inappropriate, because the ark of the covenant, in the Holy of Holies, was removed from the view of the people;

¹ So also Funke, in the Stud. u. Krit. 1842, p. 314 f. The old writers, and before them the Fathers, have in some instances very far-fetched points of comparison. Calovius, e.g., specifies five: (1) quod causam efficientem; (2) quod materiam (gold and not perishable wood—divine and human nature); (3) quod numerum (only one); (4) quod objectum (all); (5) quod usum et finem.

² The LXX. derived the word Kapporeth, in view of the idea which it represented, from Ἴς, condonavit. Comp. also the Vulgate ("expiatorium").
(4) that, if Christ were really thought of here as ἡμᾶς, the following eis ἐνδείξεως τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ would be inappropriate, since the ἡμᾶς must have appeared rather as the ἐνδείξεως of the divine grace (comp. Heb. iv. 16); (5) and lastly, that the conception of Christ as the antitype of the cover of the ark is found nowhere else in the whole N. T., although there was frequent opportunity for such expression; and it is therefore to be assumed that it did not belong to the apostolic modes of viewing and describing the atoning work of Christ. Moreover, if it is objected that this interpretation is unsuitable, because Christ, who shed His own blood, could not be the cover of the ark sprinkled with foreign blood, it is on the other hand to be remembered that the Crucified One sprinkled with His own blood might be regarded as the cover of the ark with the same propriety as Christ offering His own blood is regarded in the Epistle to the Hebrews as High Priest. If, on the other side, it is objected to the interpretation expiatory offering (see Philippi), that it does not suit προθετεύω because Christ offered Himself as a sacrifice to God, but God did not present Him as such to humanity, the objection is untenable, since the idea that God has given Christ to death pervades the whole N. T.—not that God has thereby offered Christ as a sacrifice, which is nowhere asserted, but that He has set forth before the eyes of the universe Him who is surrendered to the world by the very fact of His offering Himself as a sacrifice in obedience to the Father’s counsel, as such actually and publicly, namely, on the cross. An exhibition through preaching (as Philippi objects) is not to be thought of, but rather the divine act of redemption which took place through the sacrificial death on Golgotha. — διὰ τῆς πίστεως] may be connected either with προθετεύω (Philippi, following older writers) or with ἡλαστήριον (Rückert, Matthias, Ewald, Hofmann, Morison, and older expositors). The latter is the right construction, since faith, as laying hold of the propitiation, is the very thing by which the ἡλαστήριον set forth becomes subjectively effective; but not that whereby the setting forth itself, which was an objective fact independent of faith, has been accomplished.1 Hence: as a sacrifice producing the

1 Even had no one believed on the Crucified One—a contingency indeed, which in view of the divine προὔπνεον could not really occur—He would still have Without faith the \( \text{λαστήριον} \) would not be actually and in result, what it is in itself; for it does not reconcile the unbeliever. — \( \text{ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ αἰματί} \) belongs to \( \text{προέθετο κ.τ.λ.} \). God has set forth Christ as an effectual expiatory offering through faith by means of His blood; i.e. in that He caused Him to shed His blood, in which lay objectively the strength of the atonement.\(^1\) Observe the position of \( \text{αὐτῷ} \): "quem proposuit ipsius sanguine." Krüger, § 47, 9, 12. Comp. xi. 11; Tit. iii. 5; 1 Thess. ii. 19; Heb. ii. 4 al. Comp. ver. 24. Still \( \text{ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ αἰμ} \) is not to be joined with \( \text{λαστήριον} \) in such a way as to make it the parallel of \( \text{διὰ τ. πίστ.} \). (Wolf, Schrader, Köllner, Reithmayr, Matthias, Mehring, Hofmann, Mangold, and others); for \( \text{ἐις ἐνδεικνύω κ.τ.λ.} \) requires that \( \text{ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ αἰμ} \) shall be the element defining more closely the divine act of the \( \text{προέθετο κ.τ.λ.} \), by which the divine righteousness is apparent; wherefore also \( \text{ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ αἰμ} \) is placed immediately before \( \text{ἐις ἐνδεικνύω κ.τ.λ.} \), and not before \( \text{λαστήριον} \). (against Hofmann's objection). Other writers again erroneously make \( \text{ἐν... αἰματί} \) dependent on \( \text{πίστεως} \) (Luther, Calvin, Beza, Seb. Schmid, and others; also Koppe, Klee, Flatt, Olshausen, Tholuck, Winzer, and Morison), joining \( \text{διὰ τ. πίστ.} \). likewise to \( \text{λαστήριον... through faith on His blood.} \) In that case \( \text{ἐν} \) would not be equivalent to \( \text{ἐις} \), but would indicate the basis of faith (see on Gal. iii. 26); nor can the absence of the article after \( \text{πίστ.} \) be urged against this rendering (see on Gal. l.c.): but the \( \text{ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ αἰμ} \) becomes in this connection much too subordinate a point. Just by means of the shedding of His blood was the setting forth of Christ for a propitiatory offering accomplished; in order that through this utmost, highest, and holiest sacrifice offered for the satisfaction of the divine justice—through the blood of Christ—that justice might be brought to light and demonstrated. From this connection also we may easily understand why \( \text{ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ αἰμ} \), been set forth as a propitiatory offering, though this offering would not have subjectively benefited any one.

\(^{1}\) This \( \text{ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ αἰματί} \) secures at all events to the Apostle's utterance the conception of a sacrifice atoning, i.e. doing away the guilt, whichever of the existing explanations of the word \( \text{λαστήριον} \) we may adopt. This also applies against Rich. Schmidt l.c., according to whom (comp. Sabatier, p. 262ff.) the establishment of the \( \text{λαστήριον} \) consisted in God actually passing sentence on sin itself in the flesh of His Son, and wholly abolishing it as an objective power exercising dominion over humanity—consequently in the destruction of the sin-principle. Regarding viii. 3 see on that passage.
which moreover, following ἔρημοτρίαν, was a matter of course, is added at all; though in itself unnecessary and self-evident, it is added with all the more weight, and in fact with solemn emphasis. For just in the blood of Christ, which God has not spared, lies the proof of His righteousness, which He has exhibited through the setting forth of Christ as an expiatory sacrifice; that shed blood has at once satisfied His justice, and demonstrated it before the whole world. On the atoning, actually sin-effacing power of the blood of Christ, according to the fundamental idea of Lev. xvii. 11 (compare Heb. ix. 22), see v. 9; Matth. xxvi. 28; Acts xx. 28; Eph. i. 7; Col. i. 14; Rev. v. 9 al.; 2 Cor. v. 14, 21; Gal. iii. 13 al. · Comp. Kahnis, Dogm. I. p. 270 ff., 584 f. Reiche considers that διὰ τῆς πίστεως should be coupled with δικαιοσύνη, and ὅπως ἐκλάσαι should be a parenthesis, whilst ἐν τ. αὐτ. αὐτῇ is to be co-ordinated with the διὰ τ. πίστεως. But by this expedient the discourse is only rendered clumsy and overloaded.— εἰς ἐνδείξεις τ. δικ. αὐτοῦ] purpose of God in the προέθετο .... ἀματε. The δικαιοσύνη is righteousness, as is required by the context (διὰ τ. πάρεσαν .... ἐν τῇ ἀνοχῇ τ. Θεοῦ), not: truth (Ambrosiaster, Beza, Turretin, Hammond, Locke, Böhme), or goodness (Theodoret, Grotius, Semler, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Morus, Reiche, also Tittmann, Synon. p. 185)—significations which the word never bears. It does not even indicate the holiness (Fritzsche, Reithmayr, Klaiber, Neander, Gurlitt in the Stud. u. Krit. 1840, p. 975; Lipsius, Rechtfertigungsl. p. 146 ff.); or the righteousness, including grace (Ritschl); or generally the Divine moral order of justice (Morison); or the self-equality of God in His bearing (Hofmann); but in the strict sense the opposite of ἄδικος in ver. 5, the judicial (more precisely, the punitive) righteousness (comp. Ernesti, Urspr. d. Sünde, I. p. 169 ff.), which had to find its holy satisfaction, but received that satisfaction in the propitiatory offering of Christ, and is thereby practically demonstrated and exhibited. On ἐνδείξεις, in the sense of practical proof, comp. 2 Cor. viii. 24, and on εἰς Eph. ii. 7: ἵνα ἐνδείξηται. Following ver. 26, Chrysostóm and others, including Krehl and Baumgarten-Crusius, take it unsatisfactorily as justifying righteousness. Anselm, Luther, Elsner, Wolf, and others, also Usteri, Winzer, van Hengel and Mangold, hold that it is, as in ver. 21, the righteousness, that God gives. On the other hand, see the immediately following eis . . . δικαιον. — δια τὴν πάρεσιν κ.τ.λ.] on account of the passing by of sins that had previously taken place, i.e. because He had allowed the pre-Christian sins to go without punishment, whereby His righteousness had been lost sight of and obscured,\(^1\) and therefore came to need an ἐνδείξεις for men.\(^2\) Thus the atonement accomplished in Christ became "the divine Theodicè for the past history of the world" (Tholuck), and, in view of this ἐνδείξεις, that πάρεσις ceases to be an enigma. — πάρεσις, which occurs only here in the N. T. (see however Dionys. Hal. vii. 37; Phalar. Epist. 114; Xen. de præf. eq. 7, 10; and Fritzsc. in loc.; Loesner, p. 249); erroneously explained by Chrysostom as equivalent to νέκρωσις is distinguished from ἀφεσις in so far as the omission of punishment is conceived in πάρεσις as a letting pass (ὑπερισχόν, Acts xvii. 30; comp. xiv. 16), in ἀφεσις (Eph. i. 7; Col. i. 14) as a letting free. Since Paul, according to Acts i. e., regarded the non-punishment of pre-Christian sins as an "overlooking" (comp. Wisd. xi. 23), we must consider the peculiar expression, πάρεσις, here as purposely chosen. Comp. παρέτειναι, Ecclus. xxiiii. 2.

1 If he had written ἀφεσις, the idea would be, that God, instead of retaining those sins in their category of guilt (comp. John xx. 23), had let them free, i.e. had forgiven them.\(^3\) He has not forgiven them, however, but only let them go unpunished (comp. 2 Sam. xxiv. 10), neglexit. The wrath of God, which nevertheless frequently burst forth (comp. i. 17 ff.) in the ages before Christ over Jews and Gentiles (for Paul, in his perfectly general expressions, has not merely the former in view), was not an adequate recompense counterbalancing the sin, and even increased it (i. 24 ff.); so

\(^1\) Compare J. Müller, v. d. Stände, I. p. 352, ed. 5.

\(^2\) The explanation that "ἀδ here indicates that, whereby the δικαιοσύνη manifests itself" (Reiche; so also Benecke, Koppe, and older expositors) is incorrect, just because Paul in all cases (even in viii. 11 and Gal. iv. 13) makes a sharp distinction between ἀδ with the accusative and with the genitive. This interpretation has arisen from the erroneous conception of δικαιοσύνη (as goodness or truth).

\(^3\) In ἀφεσις the guilt and punishment are cancelled; in πάρεσις both are tacitly or expressly left undealt with, but in their case it may be said that "omittance is not acquittance." For the idea of forgiveness ἀφεσις and ἀφεδραν alone form the standing mode of expression in the N. T. And beyond doubt (in opposition to the view of Luther and others, and recently Mangold) Paul would here have used this form, had he intended to convey that idea. The πάρεσις is intermediate between pardon and punishment. Compare Ritschl in the Jahrb. f. D. Th. 1863, p. 501.
that God's attitude to the sin of the time before Christ, so long as it was not deleted either by an adequate punishment, or by atonement, appears on the whole as a letting pass (comp. Acts xiv. 16) and overlooking. As the correlative of πάρεσις, there is afterwards appropriately named ἀνοχὴ (comp. ii. 4), not χάρις, for the latter would correspond to ἅφεσις, Eph. i. 7. — The pre-Christian sins are not those of individuals prior to their conversion (Mehring and earlier expositors), but the sum of the sins of the world before Christ. The ἔλαστήριον of Christ is the epoch and turning-point in the world's history (comp. Acts xvii. 30, xiv. 16. — ἐν τῷ ἀνοχῇ τ. Θεοῦ] in virtue of the forbearance (tolerance, comp. ii. 4) of God, contains the ground which is the motive of the πάρεσις. It is not to be attached to προγεγομένων, (Oecumenius, Luther, and many others; also Rückert, Gurlitt, Ewald, van Hengel, Ritschl, and Hofmann), which would yield the sense with or "during the forbearance of God." Against this view we may urge the very circumstance that the time when the sins referred to took place is already specified by προγεγομένων, and expressed in a way simply and fully corresponding with the contrast of the νῦν καιρός that follows, as well as the special pertinent reason, that our mode of connecting ἐν τ. ἀνοχῇ τ. Θ. with διὰ τ. πάρεσιν κ.τ.λ. brings out more palpably the antithetical relation of this πάρεσις to the divine δικαιοσύνη. Moreover, as ἀνοχὴ is a moral attribute, the temporal conception of ἐν is neither indicated nor appropriate. What is indicated and appropriate is simply the use, so common, of ἐν in the sense of the ethical ground. Reiche connects ἐν τῷ ἀνοχῇ τ. Θεοῦ with εἰς ἐνδ. τ. δικ. αὐτ., making it co-ordinate with the διὰ ... ἀμαρτ.: "the δικαιοσύνη showed itself positively in the forgiveness of sins, negatively in the postponement of judgment." Incorrect, on account of the erroneous explanation of διὰ and δικαιοσύνη thus necessitated.—Our whole interpretation of the passage from διὰ τ. πάρεσιν to Θεοῦ is not at variance (as Usteri thinks) with Heb. ix. 15; for, if God has allowed pre-Christian sins to pass, and then has exhibited the

1 Paul writes Θεοῦ, not again ἄνοχος, because he utters the διὰ τῆς πάρεσιν ... Θεοῦ from his own standpoint, so that the subject is presented objectively. Comp. Xen. Anab. i. 9, 15. But even apart from this the repetition of the noun instead of the pronoun is of very frequent occurrence in all Greek authors, and also in the N. T. (Winer, p. 130 [E. T. 190]).
atoning sacrifice of Christ in proof of His righteousness, the death of Christ must necessarily be the λύτρον for the transgressions committed under the old covenant, but passed over for the time being. But there is nothing in our passage to warrant the reference to the sins of the people of Israel, as in Heb. l.c.
(in opposition to Philippi).

Ver. 26. Πρὸς τὴν ἐνδειξίν] Resumption of the eἰς ἐνδειξίν in
ver. 25, and that without the δὲ, ver. 22 (comp. on Luke i. 71);
while eἰς is exchanged for the equivalent πρὸς unintentionally, as Paul in ver. 30, and also frequently elsewhere (comp. on Eph.
i. 7 and Gal. ii. 16) changes the prepositions.¹ The article, however (see the critical notes), serves to set forth the definite, historically given ἐνδειξίς, which is in accord with the progress of the representation; for Paul desires to add now with corresponding emphasis the historical element ἐν τῷ νῦν καὶ ῥαφό not previously mentioned. The resumption is in itself so obvious, and also in such entire harmony with the emphasis laid upon the ἐνδειξίς τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ as the chief point, that for this very reason the interpretation of Rückert and Gurlitt (comp.
Beza), which joins πρὸς τὴν ἐνδειξίν κ.τ.λ. with διὰ τ. πάρεσιν . . .
Θεοῦ, and takes it as the aim of the πάρεσις or the ἀνοχή (Baumgarten-Crusius; comp. Hofmann and Th. Schott), at once falls to the ground. Mehring, rendering πρὸς in reference to or in view of, understands the δικαιοσύνη in ver. 26 to mean imputed righteousness, and finds the ἐνδειξίς of the latter, ver. 26, in the resurrection of Jesus; but a decisive objection to his view is that Paul throughout gives no hint whatever that his expressions in
ver. 26 are to be taken in any other sense than in ver. 25;
and a reference to the resurrection in particular is here quite out of place; the passage goes not beyond the atoning death of Christ. — eἰς τὸ εἶναι κ.τ.λ. cannot stand in an epexegetical relation to the previous eἰς ἐνδειξίν κ.τ.λ. because that ἐνδειξίς has in fact already been doubly expressed, but now the further element καὶ δικαιοῦντα κ.τ.λ. is added, which first brings into full view the teleology of the λαστήριον. eἰς τὸ εἶναι κ.τ.λ. is therefore the definition presenting the final aim of the whole affirmation from ἀν προέθετο to καὶ ῥαφό. It is its keystone: that He may be just and justifying the believers, which is to be taken as the intended result (comp. on ver. 4): in order that, through the Ἰάστηριος of Christ, arranged in this way and for this ἐνδείξεις, He may manifest Himself as One who is Himself righteous, and who makes the believer righteous (comp. Ἰάστηρ, διὰ τ. πίστεως, ver. 25). He desires to be both, the one not without the other. The εἴναι however is the being in the appearance corresponding to it. The “estimation of the moral public” (Morison) only ensues as the consequence of this. Regarding τὸν εκ πίστεως, comp. on oi είς ἐπιθέσεις, ii. 8. The αὐτόν however has not the force of ipse or even alone (Luther), seeing it is the subject of the two predications δικαίον κ. δικαιοῦσα; but it is the simple pronoun of the third person. Were we to render with Matthias and Mehring1 καὶ δικαιοῦσα: even when He justifies, the καὶ would be very superfluous and weakening; Paul would have said δικαίον δικαιοῦσα, or would have perhaps expressed himself pointedly by δικαίον κ. δικαιοῦσα ἄδικον εν πίστεως.

¹ Comp. Kühner, II. 1, p. 475 f.

1 They are joined by Ernesti, Ethik d. Ap. F. p. 32.

2 "In consequence of man’s having allowed himself to be induced through the working of Satan to sin, which made him the object of divine wrath, the Triune God, in order that He might perfect the relation constituted by the act of creation between Himself and humanity into a complete fellowship of love, has had recourse to the most extreme antithesis of Father and Son, which was possible without self-negation on the part of God, namely, the antithesis of the Father angry at humanity on account of sin, and of the Son belonging in sinlessness to that humanity, but approving Himself under all the consequences of its sin even unto the transgressor’s death that befell Him through Satan’s agency; so that, after Satan had done on Him the utmost which he was able to do to the sinless One in does not permit the simple and—on the basis of the O. T. conception of atoning sacrifice—historically definite ideas of vv. 25, 26, as well as the unbiased and clear representation of the απολύτρωσις in ver. 24 (comp. the λύτρον ἀντί, Matth. xx. 28, and ἀντιλύτρον, 1 Tim. ii. 6) to subsist alone with it. On the other hand these ideas and conceptions given in and homogeneously pervading the entire N. T., and whose meaning can by no means be evaded, exclude the theory of Hofmann, not merely in form but also in substance, as a deviation evading and explaining away the N. T. type of doctrine, with which the point of view of a "befalling," the category in which Hofmann invariably places the death of Jesus, is especially at variance. And Faith in the atoning death has not justification merely "in its train" (Hofmann in loc.), but justification takes place subjectively through faith (vv. 22, 25), and indeed in such a way that the latter is reckoned for righteousness, iv. 5, consequently immediately (ἐξαίρεσις, Chrysostom).

Ver. 27. Paul now infers (οὖν) from vv. 21-26—in lively interchange of question and answer, like a victor who has kept the field—that Jewish boasting (not human boasting generally, Fritzsche, Krehl, Th. Schott) is excluded. The article indicates that which is known, and has been before mentioned (ii. 17 ff.), consequence of sin, without obtaining any other result than His final standing the test, the relation of the Father to the Son was now a relation of God to the humanity beginning anew in the Son,—a relation no longer determined by the sin of the race springing from Adam, but by the righteousness of the Son." Hofmann in the Erl. Zeitschr. 1856, p. 179 ff. Subsequently (see espec. Schriftb. II. 1, p. 186 ff.) Hofmann has substantially adhered to his position. See the literature of the entire controversy carried on against him, especially by Philippi, Thomasius, Ebrard, Delitzsch, Schneider, Weber, given by the latter, vom Zorne Gottes, p. xliii. ff.; Weizäcker in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1858, p. 154 ff. It is not to the ecclesiastical doctrine, but to Schleiermacher's, and partially also Mencken's subjective representation of it, that Hofmann's theory, although in another form, stands most nearly related. Comp. on ver. 24; and for a more detailed account Ritschl, Rechsfertigung und Versöhnung, 1870, I. p. 569 ff., along with his counter-remarks against Hofmann at p. 575 ff. As to keeping the Scriptural notion of imputed righteousness clear of all admixture with the moral change of the justified, see also Köstlin in the Jahrb. für Deutsche Theol. 1856, p. 105 ff., 118 ff., Gess, in the same, 1857, p. 679 ff., 1858, p. 713 ff., 1859, p. 467 ff.; compared however with the observations of Philippi in his Glaubenslehre, IV. 2, p. 237 ff., 2nd edition.

1 Hofmann's misconception of ver. 9 still affects him, so as to make him think here of Christian ἀλλήλου. Comp., for the right view, especially Chrysostom.
182 THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

looking back to vv. 9 and 1. — πον] As it were, seeking that which has vanished from the sphere of vision, Luke viii. 25; 1 Cor. i. 20, xv. 55; 1 Pet. iv. 18; 2 Pet. iii. 4; also frequently used thus by classic writers.—The καύχησις is not the object of boasting (Reiche), which would be καύχημα, but the vaunting itself, which is presented with vivid clearness as that which no longer exists. — ἐξεκλείσθην] οὐκ ἔτι χώραν ἔχει, Theodoret. — διὰ ποίου νόμου;) scil. ἐξεκλείσθη, not δικαιοῦμεθα, which Mehring, following Michaelis, wholly without logical ground wishes to be supplied. The exclusion, namely, must necessarily have ensued through a law no longer allowing the καύχησις; but through what sort of a law? of what nature is it? Is it one that demands works? No, but a law of faith. In these attributes lies the ποιότης of the law, which is the subject of inquiry. This cannot have the quality of the Mosaic law, which insists upon works, but thereby fosters and promotes the parade of work-righteousness (ii. 17); it must, on the contrary, be a law that requires faith, as is done by the Christian plan of salvation, which prescribes the renunciation of all merit through works, and requires us to trust solely in the grace of God in Christ. The Christian plan of salvation might be included under the conception of a νόμος, because the will of God is given in it by means of the Gospel (comp. 1 John iii. 23), just as in the O. T. revelation by means of the Mosaic law. And the expression was necessary in the connection, because the question διὰ ποίου νόμου; required both the old and new forms of the religious life to be brought under the one conception of νόμος. Therefore the literal sense of νόμος remains unchanged, and it is neither doctrine (Melancthon and many others) nor religious economy. Comp. ix. 31.

Ver. 28 gives the ground of the οὐχι κ.τ.λ. — λογιζόμεθα] οὐκ ἐπὶ ἀμφιβολως λέγεται (Theodore of Mopsuestia): censetur, we deem, as in ii. 3, viii. 18; 2 Cor. xi. 5. The matter is set down as something that has now been brought between Paul and his readers to a common ultimate judgment, whereby the victorious tone of ver. 27 is not damped (as Hofmann objects), but is on the contrary confidently sealed. — πιστει] On this, and not on δικαιοσθαι (Th. Schott, Hofmann), lies the emphasis in accordance with the entire connection; χωρίς ἔργον νόμου is correlative. Paul has conceived λόγ. γ. δικ. together, and then placed first the word which has the stress; compare the critical observations. The dative denotes the procuring cause or medium, just like διὰ πίστεως. Bernhardy, p. 101 f. The word "alone," added by Luther—formerly an apple of discord between Catholics and Lutherans (see the literature in Wolf)—did not belong to the translation as such, but is in explanation justified by the context, which in the way of dilemma "cuts off all works utterly" (Luther), and by the connection of the Pauline doctrinal system generally, which excludes also the fides formata. See Form. Conc. p. 585 f., 691. Comp. on Gal ii. 16, Osiander in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1863, p. 703 f.; Morison in loc. All fruit of faith follows justification by faith; and there are no degrees in justification. Without the co-operation therein of works of the law (ver. 20), which, on the contrary, remain apart from all connection with it. Comp. ver. 21.—On the quite general ἄνθρωπον, a man, comp. Chrysostom: τῷ οἰκουμένῳ τὰς θύρας ἀνοίξας τῆς σωτηρίας, φησίν, ἄνθρωπον, τὸ κοινὸν τῆς φύσεως ὄνομα θεῖα. See afterwards περιτομή.... καὶ ἀκροβυστ., ver. 30. Comp. Gal. ii. 16.

Ver. 29. Or—in case what has just been asserted in ver. 28 might still be doubted—is it only Jews to whom God belongs? and not also Gentiles? He must, indeed, have only been a God for the Jews, if He had made justification conditional on works of the law, for in that case it could only be destined for Jews, insomuch as they only are the possessors of the law. Consequently vv. 29, 30 contain a further closing thought, crowning the undoubted accuracy of the confidently expressed λογιζόμενα κ.τ.λ. in ver. 28. The supplying of a predicative Θεός (Hofmann, Morison, and earlier expositors) is superfluous, since the prevailing usage of εἶναι τίνος is amply sufficient to make it intelligible, and it is quite as clear from the context that the relationship which is meant is that of being God to the persons in question.—How much the ναι καὶ ἔθνων, said without any limitation whatever—in their case, as with Ἰουδαίων, God is conceived as protecting them, and guiding to salvation—run counter to the degenerate theocratic exclusiveness; see on Matth. iii. 9, and in Eisenmenger’s enthdeckt. Judenth. I. p. 587 f. But Paul speaks in the certain assurance, which had been already given by the prophetic announcement of Messianic bliss for the Gentiles, but which he himself had received by revelation (Gal. i. 16), and which the Roman church, a Pauline church, itself regarded as beyond doubt.

1 Luther has not added it in Gal. ii. 16, where the Nürnberg Bible of 1483 reads "only through faith."
3 Not for Gentiles also, unless they become proselytes to Judaism, whereby they would cease to be Gentiles.

Ver. 30 is to be divided from the previous one merely by a comma. Regarding εἰς εἰρήνη, whereas (in the N. T. only here) introducing something undoubted, see Hermann, ad Viger. p. 786; Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 342 f.; Baeumlein, p. 204.—The unity of God implies that He is God, not merely of the Jews, but also of the Gentiles; for otherwise another special Deity must rule over the Gentiles, which would do away with monothelism.—ὁ δικαιώσει who shall (therefore) justify. This exposition contains that which necessarily follows from the unity of God, in so far as it conditions for both parties one mode of justification (which however must be χριστὸς ἐργαζόμενος, ver. 28). For Jews as well as for Gentiles He must have destined the way of righteousness by faith as the way of salvation. The future is neither put for δικαιοί (Grotius, and many others), nor to be referred with Beza and Fritzsche to the time of the final judgment, nor to be taken as the future of inference (Rückert, Mehring, Hofmann), but is to be understood as in ver. 20 of every case of justification to be accomplished. Erasmus rightly says, “Respexit enim ad eos, qui adhuc essent in Judaismo seu paganismo.”—The exchange of ἐκ and διὰ is to be viewed as accidental, without real difference, but also without the purpose of avoiding misconception (Mehring). Comp. Gal. ii. 16, iii. 8; Eph. ii 8. Unsuitable, especially for the important closing thought, is the view of Calvin, followed by Jatho, that there is an irony in the difference: “Si quis vult habere differentiam gentilis a Judaeo, hanc habeat, quod ille per fidem, hic vero ex fide justitiam consequitur.” Theodore of Mopsuestia, Wetstein, Bengel, Hofmann, and others explain it by various other gratuitous suggestions;¹

¹ Bengel: “Judaei pridem in fide fuerant; gentiles fideum ab illis recens nacti erant.” Comp. Origen. Similarly Matthias: in the case of the circumcised
van Hengel is doubtful. The interchange of πίστεως and ἡ πίστ. (from faith—through the faith), in which the qualitative expression advances to the concrete with the article, is also without special design, as similar accidental interchanges often occur in parallel clauses (Winer, p. 110 [E. T. 149]).

Ver. 31—iv. 24. The harmony of the doctrine of justification by faith with the law, illustrated by what is said in the law regarding the justification of Abraham. The new chapter should have begun with ver. 31, since that verse contains the theme of the following discussion. If we should, with Augustine, Beza, Calvin, Melancthon, Bengel, and many others, including Flatt, Tholuck, Köllner, Rückert, Philippi, van Hengel, Umbreit, and Mehring, assume that at iv. 1 there is again introduced something new, so that Paul does not carry further the νόμον ιστώμεν, v. 31, but in iv. 1 ff. treats of a new objection that has occurred to him at the moment, we should then have the extraordinary phenomenon of Paul as it were dictatorially dismissing an objection so extremely important and in fact so very naturally suggesting itself, as νόμον οὖν καταργοῦμεν κ.τ.λ., merely by an opposite assertion, and then immediately, like one who has not a clear case, leaping away to something else. The more paradoxical in fact after the foregoing, and especially after the apparently antinomistic concluding idea in ver. 30, the assertion νόμον ιστώμεν must have faith appears as the ground, in that of the uncircumcised as the means of justification; ἐκ πίστ. signifies: because they believe, ἐν τ. πίστ.: if they believe. In the case of the circumcised faith is presupposed as covenant-faithfulness. Comp. also B Simpson. According to Hofmann, Paul is supposed to have said in the case of the circumcised in consequence of faith, because these wish to become righteous in consequence of legal works; but in the case of the uncircumcised by means of faith, because with the latter no other possible way of becoming righteous was conceivable. In the former instance faith is the preceding condition; in the latter the faith existing for the purpose of justification (therefore accompanied by the article) is the means, by which God, who works it, helps to righteousness. This amounts to a subjective invention of subtleties which are equally incapable of proof as of refutation, but which are all the more groundless, seeing that Paul is fond of such interchanges of prepositions in setting forth the same relation (comp. ver. 25 f., and on 2 Cor. iii. 11, and Eph. i. 7). How frequent are similar interchanges also in classic authors! Moreover, in our passage the stress is by no means on the prepositions (Hofmann), but on περιομφανεσ and ἀποφυγεῖναι. And as to the variation of the prepositions, Augustine has properly observed (de Spir. et lit. 29) that this interchange serves non ad aliquid differentiam, but ad varietatem locutionis. Comp. on ἐκ πίστεως δικαιον (here said of Jews) also of Gentiles, Gal. iii. 8; Rom. ix. 30, and generally i. 17.
sounded, the more difficult becomes the assumption that it is merely an anticipatory declaration abruptly interposed (see especially Philippi, who thinks that it is enlarged on at viii. 1 ff.); and the less can ver. 20, διὰ γ. νόμον ἐπίγνωσις ἀμαρτ. be urged as analogous, since that proposition had really its justification there in what preceded. According to Th. Schott, νόμος is not meant to apply to the Mosaic law at all, but to the fact that, according to ver. 27, faith is a νόμος, in accordance with which therefore Paul, when making faith a condition of righteousness, ascribes to himself not abrogation of the law, but rather an establishment of it, setting up merely what God Himself had appointed as the method of salvation. The discourse would thus certainly have a conclusion, but by a jugglery with a word (νόμος) which no reader could, after ver. 28, understand in any other sense than as the Mosaic law. Hofmann explains substantially in the same way as Schott. He thinks that Paul conceives to himself the objection that in the doctrine of faith there might be found a doing away generally of all law, and now in opposition thereto declares that that doctrine does not exclude, but includes, the fact that there is a divine order of human life (?)

Ver. 31. Οὐ τὸν ἄνθρωπον to himself from his doctrine of justification ἐκ πίστεως . . . χωρίς ἔργων νόμου—just discussed— a possible objection and reproach: Do we then make away with the law (render it invalid) through faith? — νόμον emphatically put first, and here also to be understood neither of the moral law, nor of every law in general, nor of the entire O. T., but, as is proved by the antithesis between νόμος and πίστις and the reference as bearing on ver. 28, of the Mosaic law. Comp. Acts xxi. 28, Gal. iv. 21 f. — διὰ τὴν πίστιν i.e. thereby, that we assert faith as the condition of justification. — νόμον ἰστάσεων Not: we let the law stand (Matthias), but: we make it stand, we produce the result, that it, so far from being ready to fall, in reality stands upright (Βεβαιωμεν, Theodoret) in its authority, force, and obligation. Comp. 1 Macc. xiv. 29, ii 27; Ecclus. xlv. 20-22. This ἰστάσεων of the law, whereby there is secured to it stability and authority instead of the καταργείσθαι, takes place by means of (see ch. iv.) the Pauline doctrine demonstrating and making good the fact that, and the mode in which, justification by the grace of God through faith is already taught in the law, so that Paul and his fellow teachers do not come into antagonism with the law, as if they desired to abolish and invalidate it by a new teaching, but, on the contrary, by their agreement with it, and by proving their doctrine from it, secure and confirm it in its position and essential character. — The νόμον ἰστάμεν, however, is so little at variance with the abrogation of the law as an institute of works obligatory in order to the becoming righteous, which has taken place through Christianity (x. 4; 2 Cor. iii. 7; Gal. iii.; Rom. vii. 4; Gal. ii. 19; Col. ii. 14), that, on the contrary, the law had to fall in this aspect, in order that, in another aspect, the same law, so far as it teaches faith as the condition of the δικαίωσίν, might be by the gospel imperishably confirmed in its authority, and even, according to Matth. v. 17, fulfilled. For in respect of this assertion of the value of faith the law and the gospel appear one. — If the νόμον ἰστάμεν and its relation to the abrogation of the law be defined to mean that “from faith proceeds the new obedience, and the love develops itself, which is the πληρωμα νόμου, xiii. 10” (Philippi; comp. Rückert, Krehl, Umbreit, Morison), as Augustine, Melanchthon, who nevertheless mixes up with it very various elements, Luther, Calvin, Beza, Vatablus, Calovius, and others assumed (comp. also Apol. C. A. p. 83, 223), the further detailed illustration of ch. iv. is quite as much opposed to this view, as it is to the interpretations which conceive the law as pedagogically leading to Christ (Grotius, Olshausen), or as fulfilled in respect of its object, which is justification by faith (Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, and others²). In the case of the two latter views, faith appears as something added to the law, which is just what Paul combats in ch. iv. On the form ἰστάμεν, from ἰστάω, see Matthiae, p. 482, Winer, p. 75 [E. T. 93]. Still the ἰστάνουμεν, recommended by Griesbach and adopted by Lachmann and Tischendorf, has preponderant attestation (so also Ν*; but Ν has ἰστῶμεν), which is here decisive (in opposition to Fritzsche), especially when we take into account the multitude of other forms in MSS. (στάνουμεν, ἰσταμεν, συνιστῶμεν, συνιστάνομεν et al.).

1 This objection in no way affects the question διὰ τὸν νόμον, ver. 27 (in opposition to Hofmann's objection) where the very τὸν placed along with it requires the general notion of νόμον.

² "Ο γὰρ ἠθέλη ὁ νόμος, τούτωσι τὸ δικαιῶσαι ἦθρωπον, οὐκ ἴσχυεν δὲ τινὰς, τούτο ἡ πίστις τελείω· ἡμῶν γὰρ τῷ πιστεύσαι τινα δικαιώτατα, Theophylact.
CHAPTER IV.

Ver. 1. Ἀβραὰμ... εἰρηκέναι] Lachm. and Tisch. (8) read εὑρηκ. Ἀβρ. τὸν πρωτάτορα ἡμῶν, which Griesb. also approved. This position of the words has indeed preponderant attestation (A C D E F G N, min., Copt. Arm. Vulg. It. and several Fathers), but may be suspected of being a transposition intended to connect κατὰ σάρκα with τὸν πατέρα ἡμ., as in fact this construction was prevalent among the ancients. πρωτάτορα (Lachm.) though attested by A B C N, 5, 10, 21, 137, Syr. Copt. Arm. Aeth. and Fathers, appears all the more probably a gloss, since πατέρα here is not used in a spiritual sense as it is afterwards in vv. 11, 12, 17, 18.— Ver. 11. περιτομῆς] Griesb. recommended περιτομῆν, which however is only attested by A. C*, min., Syr. utr. Arm. and some Fathers; and on account of the adjoining accusatives very easily slipped in, especially in the position after ἐλασθε.— καὶ αὐτοῖς] καὶ is wanting in A B N*, min. Ar. pol. Vulg. ms. Orig. in schol. Cyr. Damasc. Condemned by Mill and Griesb., omitted by Lachm. and Tisch. (8). But after the final syllable ΝΑΙ the καὶ, not indispensable for the sense, was very easily overlooked. On the other hand the ground assumed for its addition, by Reiche, that “the copyists would not have the Jews altogether excluded,” cannot be admitted as valid, because in fact the Jews are immediately after, ver. 12, expressly included.— The article before δικαιοσύνης, which Tisch. (8) has omitted, has preponderant attestation. Its omission is connected with the old reading (A) εἰς δικαιοσύνης (comp. ver. 9, v. 3). Ver. 12. ὑπὸ ἐν τῷ ἀκροβ. πίστ. The reading τῆς πίστ. τῆς ἐν τῷ ἀκροβ., recommended by Griesb. and adopted by Scholz, lacks the authority of most and the best uncials, and seems a mechanical alteration after ver. 11. The article τῆς however is, with Tisch. in accordance with decisive testimony, to be deleted, and to be regarded as having been likewise introduced from ver 11 (not as omitted after ver. 10, as Fritzsche thinks).— Ver. 15. ὅδ̄ γάρ] A B C N*, min., Copt. Syr. p. (in margin), Theodoret, Theophyl. Ambr. Ruf. read ὅδ̄ δέ. Recommended by Griesb. and adopted by Lachm. Fritzsche, Tisch. (8). An alteration, occasioned by the contrast on failing to perceive the appropriateness of meaning in the γὰρ. — Ver. 17. ἐπιστευεῖ] F G and some vss. and Fathers read ἐπιστευεῖς (so Luther). The κατέναντι οὖν κ.τ.λ. was still regarded as belonging to the passage of Scripture. — Ver. 19. οὐ] Wanting in A B C N, 67, 93, 137, Syr. Erp. Copt. Chrys. Damasc. Julian. Condemned by Griesb. and deleted by Lachm. and Tisch. (8). But this omission of the οὐ, as well as the very weakly attested ὅς and licet, manifestly arose from incorrectly having regard here to Gen. xvii. 17 (as is done even by Buttmann, neut. Gr: p. 305 f. and Hofmann). See the exegetical remarks. — ἤδη] Wanting in B F G 47 et. al. and several vss. and Fathers. Bracketed by Lachm. deleted by Fritzsche and Tisch. It is to be regarded as an addition, which suggested itself very easily, whereas there would have been no reason for its omission.

Ver. 1. οὖν] Accordingly, in consequence of the fact that we do not abrogate the law through faith, but on the contrary establish it.1 This οὖν brings in the proof to be adduced from the history of Abraham (“confirmatio ab exemplo,” Calvin), for the νόμον ἵστασεν just asserted (iii. 31), in the form of an inference. For if we should have to say that Abraham our father has attained anything (namely, righteousness) κατὰ σάρκα, that would presuppose that the law, which attests Abraham’s justification, in nowise receives establishment διὰ τῆς πίστεως (iii. 31). Hence we have not here an objection, but a question proposed in the way of inference by Paul himself, the answer to which is meant to bring to light, by the example of Abraham, the correctness of his νόμον ἵστ. His object is not to let the matter rest with the short and concise dismissal of the question in iii. 31, but to enter into the subject more closely; and this he does now by attaching what he has further to say to the authoritatively asserted, and in his own view established, νόμον ἱστάνομεν in the form of an inference. Moreover, the whole is to be taken as one question, not to be divided into two by a note of interrogation.

1 Observe, in reference to ch. iv. (with iii. 31), of what fundamental and profound importance, and how largely subject to controversy, the relation of Christianity to Judaism was in the Apostolic age, particularly in the case of mixed churches. The minute discussion of this relation, therefore, in a doctrinal Epistle so detailed, cannot warrant the assumption that the church was composed mainly of Jews, or at least (Beyschlag) of proselytes.
after ἐρωῦμεν; in which case there is harshly and arbitrarily supplied to εὐρηκέων (by Grotius, Hammond, Clericus, Wetstein, and Michaelis) δικαιοσύνην, or at least (van Hengel) the pronoun it representing that word, which however ought to have been immediately suggested by the context, as in Phil. iii. 12 (comp. Nägelsbach on II. 1, 76, 302, ed. 3). In the affirmation itself Αβραὰμ is the subject (quid dicemus Abrahamum nactum esse?). Th. Schott, by an unhappy distortion of the passage, makes him the object (“why should we then say that we have gained Abraham in a fleshly, natural sense for our ancestor?”) This misconception should have been precluded by attending to the simple fact, that in no passage in our Epistle (and in other Epistles the form of expression does not occur) does the τι in τι οὖν ἐρωῦμεν mean why. Hofmann, who had formerly (Schriftb. II. 2, p. 76 ff.) apprehended it in substance much more correctly, now agrees with Schott in so far that he takes τι οὖν ἐρωῦμεν as a question by itself, but then explains Αβραὰμ likewise as the object, so that the question would be, whether the Christians think that they have found Abraham as their forefather after the flesh? “The origin of the church of God, to which Christians belong, goes back to Abraham. In fleshly fashion he is their ancestor, if the event through which he became such (namely, the begetting of Isaac) lie within the sphere of the natural human life; in spiritual fashion, on the other hand, if that event belong to the sphere of the history of salvation and its miraculous character, which according to the Scripture (comp. Gal. iv. 23) is the case.” This exposition cannot be disputed on linguistic grounds, especially if, with Hofmann, we follow Lachmann’s reading. But it is, viewed in reference to the context, erroneous. For the context, as vv. 2, 3 clearly show, treats not of the contrast between the fleshly and the spiritual fatherhood of Abraham in the case of Christians, but of the justification of the ancestor, as to whether it took place κατὰ σάρκα or by faith. Moreover, if Αβραὰμ was intended to be the object, Paul would have expressed himself as unintelligibly as possible, since in vv. 2, 3 he in the most definite manner represents him as the subject, whose action is spoken of. If we take Hofmann’s view, in which case we do not at all see why the Apostle should have expressed himself by εὐρηκέων, he would have written more intelligibly by substituting for this the simple εἰναι, so that
'Aβραµ. would have been the subject in the question, as well as in what follows. Finally the proposition that Abraham, as the forefather of believers as such, was so not κατὰ σάρκα, was so perfectly self-evident, both with reference to the Jewish and the Gentile portion of the Ἰσραὴλ θεου, that Paul would hardly have subjected it to discussion as the theme of so earnest a question, while yet no reader would have known that in κατὰ σάρκα he was to think of the miraculous begetting of Isaac. For even without the latter Abraham would be the προτάτορ of believers κατὰ πνεύμα, namely, through his justification by faith,
ver. 9 ff. — τ. πατέρα ἡμ.] "fundamentum consequentiae ab Abrahamo ad nos," Bengel. Comp. ver. 11 f. ἡμῶν however (comp. James ii. 21) is said from the Jewish standpoint, not designating Abraham as the spiritual father of the Christians (Reiche, Hofmann, Th. Schott), a point that is still for the present (see ver. 11) quite out of view. — κατὰ σάρκα] is, following the Peschito, with most expositors to be necessarily joined to εὐρήκ.; not, with Origen, Ambrosiaster, Chrysostom, Photius, Theophylact, Erasmus, Castalio, Toletus, Calvin, whom Hofmann,
Th. Schott, Reithmayer, Volckmar in Hilgenfeld’s Zeitschr. 1862,
p. 221 ff., follow, to τ. πατέρα ἡμ. (not even although Lachmann’s reading were the original one); for the former, and not the latter, needed the definition. Abraham has really attained righteousness, only not κατὰ σάρκα, and εἰς ἐργαν. in ver. 2 corresponds to the κατὰ σάρκα. Besides with our reading the latter connection is impossible. — The σάρκα on its ethical side 1 is the material-psychic human nature as the life-sphere of moral weakness and of sinful power in man, partly as contrasted with the higher intellectual and moral nature of the man himself, which is his πνεύμα along with the νοῦς (i. 9, vii. 18, 25,

1 The most recent literature on this subject: Ernesti, Urspr. d. Sünde, 1. p.
426 ff.; Delitzsch, Psychol. p. 374 ff.; Holsten, Bedeutung des Wortes σάρξ im Lehrwiss. § 22; Kling in Herzog’s Encycl. IV. p. 419 ff.; Hofmann, Schriftenw.
I. p. 557 ff.; Weber, vom Zorne Gottes, p. 80 ff.; also Ritschl, allkath. Kirche, Christol. 1870, p. 8 ff.; Weiss, bibl. Theol. § 93; Philippi, Glaubensl. III.
p. 207 ff., and the excursus thereon, p. 231 ff., ed. 2. For the earlier literature see Ernesti, p. 50.
and see on Eph. iv. 23), and partly as opposed to the super-human divine life-sphere and its operation, as here; see the sequel. Hence κατὰ σάρκα is: conformably to the bodily nature of man in accordance with its natural power, in contrast to the working of divine grace, by virtue of which the εἰρηκέναι would not be κατὰ σάρκα, but κατὰ πνεῦμα, because taking place through the Spirit of God. Comp. on John iii. 6. Since the ἐργα are products of the human phenomenal nature and conditioned by its ethical determination, not originating from the divine life-element, they belong indeed to the category of the κατὰ σάρκα, and ἐκ ἐργῶν is the correlative of κατὰ σάρκα (wherefore also Paul continues, ver. 2, εἰ γὰρ Ἀβρα. εἶ ἐργων κ.τ.λ.), but they do not exhaust the whole idea of it, as has often been assumed, following Theodoret (κατὰ σάρκα τὴν ἐν ἐργοις, λέγει, ἐπεὶδὴ οὖσιν διὰ τοῦ σώματος ἐκ πληροφορίας τὰ ἐργα), and is still assumed by Reiche. Köllner, limiting it by anticipation from ver. 4, holds that it refers to the human mode of earning wages by labour. Entirely opposed to the context, and also to the historical reference of ver. 3, is the explanation of circumcision (Pelagius, Ambrosiaster, Vatablus, Estius, and others; including Koppe, Flatt, Baur, and Mehring), which Rückert also mixes up, at the same time that he explains it of the ἐργα. Philippus also refers it to both.—On εἰρηκ., adeptum esse, comp. εὐρείν κέρδος, Soph. El. 1297, ἀρχην, Dem. 69, 1. The middle is still more expressive, and more usual; see Krüger, § 52, 10, 1, Xen. ii. 1, 8, and Kühner in loc. The perfect infinitive is used, because Abraham is realised as present; see ver. 2.

Ver. 2. The question in ver. 1 contained the negative sense, which had therefore necessarily to be limited by κατὰ σάρκα: "We may not assert that Abraham has obtained anything according to the flesh." The reason for this is now assigned (γάρ): "For, assuming that Abraham has been justified by works" (as was the Jewish opinion1), "he has cause for boasting," namely, that he has attained righteousness through his actions, but he has not this ground of boasting with respect to God (as if

---

1 In the Talmud it is even inferred from Gen. xxvi. 5 that Abraham kept the whole law of Moses. Kiddusch f. 82, 1; Joma f. 28, 2; Beresch. rabba f. 57, 4. Comp. the passages from Philo quoted by Schneckenburger in the Stud. u. Krit. 1833, p. 135.
his justification were the divine act), since, namely, in the case supposed it is not God to whom he owes the justification, but on the contrary he has himself earned it, and God would simply have to acknowledge it as a human self-acquirement. God has not, in that supposed case, done anything for him, on account of which he might thus boast with regard to God as his justifier; for ἡ τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἐργῶν πληρῶσις αὐτοῦ στεφανοὶ τοὺς ἐργα-ζομένους; τὴν δὲ τ. Θεοῦ φιλανθρωπίαν οὐ δεικνυόν, Theodorot. Comp. also Chrysostom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact. Thus for the proper understanding of this difficult passage (Chrysostom: ἀσάφεις τὸ εἴρημένον) we must go back to the explanation of the Greek expositors, which is quite faithful both to the words and the context. Comp. on vv. 3, 4. This interpretation, now adopted also by Tholuck (comp. Reithmayr and Th. Schott), has especially this advantage, that ἐδικαιώθη is not taken otherwise than in the entire development of the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, not therefore as somewhat indefinite and general ("justus appa-ruit," Grotius), in which case it would remain a question by whom Abraham was found righteous (Rückert, Philippi; comp. Beza and others; also Grotius and Koppe, and, with trifling variation, de Wette, likewise Spohn in the Stud. u. Krit. 1843, p. 429 ff., Volck-mar, and others). That Abraham was justified with God was known to no Jew otherwise (comp. Ecclus. xli. 19 ff.; Manass. 8; Joseph. Antt. xi. 5, 7; Eisenmenger, entdeckt. Judenth. I. p. 322, 343), and no reader could in accordance with the entire context understand ἐσκαίωθη otherwise, than in this definite sense, consequently in the solemn absolute sense of the Apostle (in opposition to Lipsius, Rechtsfertigungsl. p. 35). The only question was, whether ἐξ ἐργῶν or ἐκ πίστεως. If we suppose the former case, it is indeed for Abraham worthy of all honour, and he may boast of that which he has himself achieved, but with reference to God, as if He had justified him, he has no ground for boasting.1 Observe besides, that πρὸς is used not in the sense of ἐνώπιον, coram (Hofmann: overagainst), or ἀπὸ (Vulgate), but in accordance with the quite common usage of ἔχειν with the object of the thing (to have something to do, to say, to boast, to ask, to censure, etc.), and with specification of the relation of reference to some one through πρός τινα. The opposite of ἔχειν καύχημα πρός is ἔχειν μομφήν πρός, Col. iii. 13. The special mode of the reference is invariably furnished by the context, which here, in accordance with the idea of δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, suggests the notion that God is the bestower of the blessing meant by καύχημα. To that the ἔχειν καύχημα of Abraham does not refer, if he was justified by works. In the latter case he cannot boast of himself: ὁ Θεὸς με ἐδίκαιωσε, Θεὸν τὸ δῶρον. Reiche and Fritzsche, following Calvin, Calovius, and many others, have discovered here an incomplete syllogism, in which ἀλλ' οὖ πρὸς τ. Θεὸν is the minor premiss, and the conclusion is wanting, to this effect: "Si suis bene factis Dei favorem nactus est, habet quod apud Deum glorietur . . . ; sed non habet, quod apud Deum glorietur, quum libri s. propter fidem, non propter pulchre facta eum Deo probatum esse doceant (ver. 3) . . . ; non est igitur Abr. ob bene facta Deo probatus," Fritzsche. So in substance also Kraussold in the Stud. u. Krit. 1842, p. 783; Baur in the Theol. Jahrb. 1857, p. 71; Köstlin in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1856, p. 92. Forced, and even contrary to the verbal sense; for through the very contrast ἀλλ' οὖ π. τ. Θ. the simple καύχημα is distinguished from the καύχημα πρός τ. Θεόν, as one that takes place not πρός τὸν Θεόν. Paul must have written: ἔχει καύχημα πρός τὸν Θεόν ἀλλ' (or ἄλλα μὴν) οὐκ ἔχει. Mehring takes ἄλλα οὖ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν as a question: "If Abraham has become righteous by works, he has glory, but has he it not before God?" But in what follows it is the very opposite of the affirmation, which this question would imply, that is proved. If the words were interrogative, ἄλλα μὴ must have been used instead of ἄλλα οὐ (but yet not before God?) Hofmann, in consequence of his erroneous exposition of ver. 1, supposes that Paul wishes to explain how he came to propose the question in ver. 1, and to regard an answer to it as necessary. What is here involved, namely, is nothing less than a contradiction between what Christians say of themselves (when they deny all possibility of becoming righteous by their own actions), and what holds good of "an Abraham," the father of the people of God. If the latter has become righteous through his own action, he has glory, and by this very circumstance his ancestry is distinguished from that of all others. But then the Scripture teaches that what God counted worthy in Abraham was his faith, and it is therefore clear that the glory which he has, if he has become righteous by works, is no glory in presence of God, and consequently is not fitted to be the basis of his position in sacred history. This is a chain of ideas imported into the passage; instead of which it was the object of the Apostle himself merely to set forth the simple proposition that Abraham was not justified by works, and not at all to speak of the mode in which the Christian ancestry of the patriarch came to subsist. — καύχημα (comp. on Phil. i. 26, ii. 16) is throughout the N. T. materies glorianti; as also in the LXX. and Apocrypha; although in classic authors (Pind. Isthm. v. 65; Plut. Ages. 31) it also occurs as the equivalent of καύχησις, gloriatio. In Gal. vi. 4, also, it is joined with ἔχειν.

---

1 Van Hengel places a point after καὶ, and takes διὰ τοῦ πρὸς τ. Θεοῦ as an independent sentence, in which he supplies sequendum litteras sacras, making the sense: "Atqui gloriandi materiam Deum Abrahamo denegare videmus in libris sacrās." But that is, in fact, not there. Against my own interpretation in the 1st ed. (making *et . . . ἐδικαιώθη the question, and then ἐκεῖ . . . Θεόν the answer negating it) see Philippi. The et must be the dialectic if.

Ver. 3. I am right in saying: ομία πρός τὸν Θεόν, for Scripture expressly derives the justification of Abraham from his faith, not from his works, and indeed as something received through imputation; so that he consequently possesses, not the previously supposed righteousness of works, but the righteousness of faith as a favour of God, and has ground for boasting of his righteousness in reference to God. That righteousness by works he would have earned himself. Comp. ver. 4. The emphasis lies on ἐπίστευσε and ἐλογίσθη, not on τῷ Θεῷ (Mehring). See ver. 4 f. The passage quoted is Gen. xv. 6, according to the LXX., which renders the active ἔπιστα by the passive κ. ἐλογίσθη. In the Hebrew what is spoken of is the faith which Abraham placed in the divine promise of a numerous posterity, and which God put to his account as righteousness, νομος, i.e. as full compliance with the divine will in act and life; comp. on Gal. iii. 6. Paul however has not made an unwarrantable use of the passage for his purpose (Rückert), but has really understood δικαιοσύνη in the dogmatic sense, which he was justified in doing since the imputation of faith as νομος was essentially the same judicial act which takes place at the justification of Christians. This divine act began with Abraham, the father of the faithful, and was not essentially different in the case of later believers. Even in the πιστεύειν τῷ Θεῷ on the part of Abraham Paul has rightly discerned nothing substantially different from the Christian πίστις (compare Delitzsch on Gen. l.c.), since Abraham's faith had reference to the divine promise, and indeed to the promise which he, the man trusted by God and enlightened by God, recognised as that which embraced in it the future Messiah (John viii. 56). Tholuck, because the promise was a promise of grace, comes merely to the unsatisfactory view of "a virtual parallel also with the object of the justifying faith of Christians." Still less (in opposition to Neander and others) can the explanation of the subjective nature of faith in general, without the addition of its specific object (Christ), suffice for the conception of Abraham as the father of all believing in Christ; since in that case there would only have been present in him a pre-formation of faith as respects its psychological quality generally, and not also in respect of its subject-matter, which is nevertheless the specific and distinguishing point in the case of justifying faith.— We may add that our passage, since it expresses not a (mediate) issuing of righteousness from faith, but the imputation of the latter, serves as a proof of justification being an actus forensis; and what the Catholic expositors (including even Reithmayr and Maier) advance to the contrary is a pure subjective addition to the text.1 It is well said by Erasmus: that is imputed, "quod re persolutum non est, sed tamen ex imputantis benignitate pro soluto habetur." Comp. also Philippi in loc., and Hoelemann, de justitiae ex fide ambabus in V. T. sedibus, 1867, p. 8 ff.—Instead of the καί in the LXX., Paul, in order to put the ἐπίστρ. with all weight in the foreground, has used δὲ, which does not otherwise belong to the connection of our passage.— εἰς δικ. Comp. ii. 26. — On the passive ἔλογγίσθη see Bernhardt, p. 341; Kühner, II. 1, p. 105.

Vv. 4, 5. These verses now supply an illustration of ver. 3 in two general contrasted relations, from the application of which—left to the reader—to the case of Abraham the non-co-operation of works (the χωρίς ἐργαν., ver. 6) in the case of the latter's justification could not but be clear. — δὲ] is the simple μεταβατικῶν. — τῷ ἐργαζόμενῳ to the worker, here, as the contrast

1 Not even with the exception of Döllinger (Christenth. u. K. p. 188, ed. 2), who says that God accounts the principle of the new free obedience (the faith) as already the whole service to be rendered, as the finished righteousness. Comp. however on i. 17, note.
shows, with the pregnant sense: to him who is active in works, of whom the ἔργα are characteristic. Luther aptly says: "who deals in works."—ὁ μισθός] i.e. the corresponding wages (comp. ii. 29), justa merces. The opposite: ἡ δίκη, merita poena; see Kühner, ad Xen. Anab. i. 3, 20.—οὐ λογίζεται κατὰ χάριν, ἄλλα κατὰ ὀφειλήματα] Comp. Thuc. ii. 40, 4: οὐκ ἐστὶ χάριν ἄλλα ἐστὶ ὀφειλήματα τὴν ἀρετὴν ἀποδόσων. The stress of the contrast lies on κ. χάριν and κ. ὀφειλήματα, not in the first part on λογίζεται (Hofmann), which is merely the verb of the Scripture quotation in ver. 3, repeated for the purpose of annexing to it the contrast that serves for its illustration. Not grace but debt is the regulative standard, according to which his wages are awarded to such one; the latter are not merces gratiae, but merces debiti. As in Abraham's case an imputation κατὰ χάριν took place (which Paul assumes as self-evident from ver. 3) he could not be an ἔργα δόθησιν; the case of imputation which occurred in relation to him is, on the contrary, to be referred to the opposite category which follows: but to him that worketh not, but believeth on Him who justifieth the ungodly, his faith is reckoned as righteousness. Looking to the exact parallel of vv. 4 and 5, the unity of the category of both propositions must be maintained; and ver. 5 is not to be regarded as an application of ver. 4 to the case of Abraham (Reiche), but as likewise a locus communis, under which it is left to the reader to classify the case of Abraham in accordance with the above testimony of Scripture. Hence we cannot say with Reiche: "the μὴ ἔργα δόθησιν and ἀσέβης is Abraham." On the contrary both are to be kept perfectly general, and ἀσέβης is not even to be weakened as equivalent to ἄδικος, but has been purposely selected (comp. v. 6), in order to set forth the saving power of faith by as strong a contrast as possible to δικαιοσύνη.

1 ἀσέβης in his view is an allusion to the earlier idolatry of Abraham, reported by Philo, Josephus, and Maimonides, on the ground of Joshua xxiv. 2. This was also the view of Grotius, Wetstein, Cramer, Michaelis, Rosenmüller, and Koppe; comp. also Döllinger, Christenth. u. K. p. 197, ed. 2. The Rabbins have a different tradition, to the effect that Abraham demolished the idols of his father Terah, etc.; see Eisenmenger, entdeckt. Judenth. I. p. 490 ff., 941.

2 Consequently subjective faith is meant, not its objective ground, the righteousness of Christ, i.e. according to the Form. Conc. p. 884 f., the active and passive obedience of Christ, which is "applied and appropriated" to us through faith. The merit of Christ always remains the causa meritoria, to which we are indebted for the imputation of our faith. But the apprehensio Christi, which is the essence — On πιστεύω ἐπὶ τῶν, expressing faith in its direction towards some one, comp. ver. 24; Acts ix. 42, xi. 17; Wisd. xii. 2.

Vv. 6-8. Accordance (καθάπερ) of ver. 5 with an assertion of David, that great and revered Messianic authority. That it is only what is said in ver. 5 that is to be vouched by David's testimony, and consequently that the quotation forms only an accessory element in the argument, appears from its being annexed by καθάπερ, from the clear intended relation in which ὁ θεὸς λογ. δικ. appears to λογ. ἡ πίστ. αὐτ. εἰς δικ. ver. 5, as well as χωρίς ἔργων to τῷ μὴ ἔργαζ. in the same verse, and from the fact that Paul immediately, in ver. 9, returns to Abraham.

Vv. 6-8 cannot therefore be regarded as a second example of justification from the O. T. (Reiche and many others), or even as the starting-point of the reply to the question of ver. 1 (Hofmann). This is forbidden by the proper conception of νόμος in iii. 31, in accordance with which Paul could only employ an example from the law: and such an example was that of Abraham, Gen. xv., but not that of David.—λέγει τ. μακαρ.] asserts the congratulation; μακαρισμὸς does not mean blessedness, not even in Gal. iv. 15, see in loc. Comp. Plat. Rep. p. 591 D; Aristot. Rhet. i. 9, 4. — λογίζεται δικαιοσύνη] Here δικαιοσύνη is conceived directly as that, which God reckons to man as his moral status. The expression λογίζεται τινί ἀμαρτιῶν is perfectly analogous. In the classics λογίζεται τινί τι is also frequently met with. — χωρὶς ἔργων] belongs to λογίζεται. For, as David represents the λογίζεται δικαιοσύνη as the forgiveness of sins, it must be conceived by him as ensuing without any participation (iii. 21) of meritorious works. — μακάριοι κ.τ.λ.] Ps. xxxii. 1, 2 exactly after the LXX. — ἐπεκα-λύφθ.] The amnesty under the figure of the covering over of sin. Comp. Augustine on Ps. l.c., "Si texit Deus peccata, noluit animadvertere; si noluit animadvertere, noluit punire." Comp. 1 Pet. iv. 8. — οὐ μὴ λογίζηται] will certainly not impute. It refers to the future generally, without more precise definition (Hermann, ad Soph. Oed. C. 853; Hartung, Partikel. II. p. 156 f.), not specially to the final judgment (de Wette).

Of justifying faith, must not be made equivalent to the apprehensus Christus (Calovius; comp. Philippi). The former is the subjective, which is imputed; the latter the objective, on account of which the imputation by God takes place. The Formula Concordiae in this point goes ultra quod scriptum est.
Vv. 9, 10. From the connection (καθάπερ, ver. 6) of this Davidic μακαρισμὸς with what had previously been adduced, vv. 3-5, regarding Abraham, it is now inferred (οὖν) that this declaration of blessedness affects, not the circumcised as such, but also the uncircumcised; for Abraham in fact, as an uncircumcised person, was included among those pronounced blessed by David. — έπὶ τ. περίτ.] The verb obviously to be supplied is most simply conceived as ἔστι (the μακαρισμὸς extends to etc.; comp. ii. 9; Acts iv. 33 et al.). Less natural is λέγεται from ver. 6 (Fritzsche); and πιπτεῖ (Theophylact, Bos) is arbitrary, as is also ἡλθεν (Oecumenius), and ἔρχεται (Olshausen). Comp. ver. 13, and see Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 120 f. — έπὶ τ. περίτ. κ.τ.λ.] to the circumcised, or also to the uncircumcised? The καὶ shows that the previous έπὶ τ. περίτ. is conceived as exclusive, consequently without a μονον. — λέγομεν γάρ κ.τ.λ.] In saying this Paul cannot wish first to explain, quite superfluously, how he comes to put such questions (Hofmann), but, as is indicated by λέγομεν, which lays down a proposition as premise to the argument that follows, he enters on the proof (γάρ) from the history of Abraham for the καὶ επὶ τ. ἀκροβ. which is conceived as affirmed. The present denotes the assertion pointing back to ver. 3 as continuing: for our assertion, our proposition is, etc. The plural assumes the assent of the readers. The emphasis however is not on τῷ Ἀβραάμ (Fritzsche, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Maier, Philippi, and others), which Paul would have made apparent by the position of the words στι τῷ Ἀβραάμ. ἐλογίσθη; nor on ἐλογίσθη, which in that case would necessarily have a pregnant meaning not indicated in the whole connection (as a pure act of grace, independent of external conditions); but on η πίστις εἰς δικαιοσύνην (and thus primarily on πίστις) brought together at the end, by which the import of ver. 3, ἐπίστευσεν. … δικαιοσύνην, is recapitulated. — πῶς οὖν ἐλογίσθη] The proposition, that to Abraham, etc., is certain; consequently the point at issue is the question quomodo, viz. under what circumstances as to status (whether in his circumcision, or whilst he was still uncircumcised) that imputation of his faith to him for righteousness took place. Hofmann places

1 Respecting the form of the discourse, Erasmus aptly observes: "Præter interrogationis gratiam multum lucis addit dilemma, cujus altera parte
the first mark of interrogation after πῶς ὁδοῖν, so that the second question is supposed to begin with ἐλογίσθη. But without sufficient ground, and contrary to the usage elsewhere of the interrogative πῶς by Paul, who has often put τί δοῖν thus without a verb, but never πῶς ὁδοῖν. We should in such case have to understand ἐλογίσθη; but this word, according to the usual punctuation, is already present, and does not therefore need to be supplied.—οὐκ ἐν περιτομῇ, ἀλλὰ ἐν ἄκροβ.] scil. ὅτι. The imputation in question took place as early as Gen. xv.; circumcision not till Gen. xvii.; the former at least fourteen years earlier.

Ver. 11. An amplification of the οὐκ ἐν περιτ., ἀλλὰ ἐν ἄκροβ. viewed as to its historical bearings, showing namely the relation of Abraham’s circumcision to his δικαιοσύνη, and therefore only to be separated by a comma from ver. 10. “And he received a sign of circumcision as seal (external confirmation, 1 Cor. ix. 2, and see on John iii. 33) of the righteousness of faith (obtained through faith, vv. 3, 5), which he had in uncircumcision.” That τῆς ἐν τῷ ἄκροβ. is not to be connected with δικαιοσύνη. (Rückert, Reiche) is plain from the following context (πιστεύνοντων δι’ ἄκροβουστίας ver. 11, and τῆς ἐν τῇ ἄκροβ. πίστεως ver. 12). The genitive περιτομῆς is usually taken as that of apposition: the sign consisting in circumcision. But in that case the article could not be omitted before σημεῖον (the absence of it drove van Hengel to the reading περιτομῆ, which Hofmann also prefers), since the concrete, historically definite sign would here be meant (compare 2 Cor. v. 5; Eph. ii. 14 et al.). It is therefore to be rendered: And a sign, which took place through circumcision, a signature which was given to him in the fact that he was circumcised, he received as seal, etc. The genitive is thus to be taken simply as completing the notion of σημεῖον, i.e. as defining it more precisely as respects its modal expression. Observe at the same time the dislocation in the order of the words, which brings into emphatic relief the idea of the σημεῖον. According to Gen.

rejecta alteram evincit. Nullum enim argumentandi genus vel apertius vel violentius.”

1 Hofmann explains: and as a sign he received circumcision, as seal (apposition to σημ. In that case περιτομῆς must have had the article (John vii. 22; otherwise in ver. 20). For to take λαμβάνειν περιτομῆρ as equivalent to περιτομῆς is forbidden by σημεῖον, with which the περιτομῆ can be correlative only as a substantive conception.
XI. 17 circumcision was the sign of the covenant1 which God made with Abraham. But with correct dogmatic consistency Paul represents it as the significant mark which had been the seal of the righteousness by faith, since in that covenant what God promised was the Messianic κληρονομία (Gen. xv. 5, 18), and Abraham on his part rendered the faith (Gen. xv. 6) which God imputed to him for righteousness. — εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν κ.τ.λ. in order that he might be, etc., contains the divinely appointed aim of the σημείων ἔλαβε περίτ. κ.τ.λ. This telic rendering is grammatically necessary (see on i. 20), as more in keeping with the biblical view (ὁ γὰρ τῶν ἄλλων θεὸς προέδωκε ὡς θεὸς, ὡς εἶναι λαὸν ἐξ ἐθνῶν καὶ ᾠδαίων ἄθροισει καὶ διὰ πίστεως αὐτοῖς τὴν σωτηρίαν παρέδει, ἐν τῷ πατριάρχῃ Ἅβραμ ἀμφότερα προδιέγραψε, Théodoret), and with the importance of the matter, than the ecbatic explanation καὶ οὕτως ἐγένετο πατήρ, which has been justly abandoned of late. — πατέρα πάντων τῶν πιστῶν. διὰ ἀκροβυ. The essence of this spiritual fatherhood is the identity of the relation forming the basis of the sacred-historical connection of all believers with the patriarch without intervention of circumcision—a relation which began with Abraham justified through faith whilst still uncircumcised. Thus the Jewish conception of the national-theocratic childship of Abraham is elevated and enlarged by Paul (comp. Matth. iii. 9; John viii. 37, 39), into the idea of the purely spiritual-theocratic childship, which embraces, not Jews and proselytes as such, but the believers as such—all uncircumcised who believe, and (ver. 12) the believing circumcised. For Abraham's righteousness through faith was attained, when as yet there was no distinction between circumcised and uncircumcised; and to this mode of becoming just before God, independent of external conditions, Christianity by its δικαιοσύνη ἐκ πίστεως leads back again, and continues it. — δι' ἀκροβυ. with foreskin, although they are uncircumcised. Comp. on ii. 27, Barnab. Ep. 13: τέθεικα σε πατέρα εἶναι τῶν πιστῶν καὶ κυρίω. — εἰς τὸ λογισθῆναι κ.τ.λ.] is taken by many, including Tholuck and

---

1 In the Talmud also it is presented as the sign and seal of the covenant. See Schoettgen and Wetstein. To the formulary of circumcision belonged the words: "Benedictus sit, qui sanctificat dilectum ab utero, et signum (ἡν) posuit in arne, et filios suos sigillavit (ἡν) signo foederis sancti." Berachoth f. 18, 1.
Philippi, as a parenthetical illustration of ἐις τὸ Εἰναι αὐτῶν πατέρα κ.τ.λ. But as we can attach ἐις τὸ λογισθαιναι κ.τ.λ. without violence or obscurity to πιστεύουσιν, there is no necessity for the assumption of a parenthesis (which is rejected by Lachmann, Tischendorf, van Hengel, Ewald, Mehring, and Hofmann). Nevertheless ἐις τὸ λογισθ. is not: who believe on the fact, that to them also will be imputed (Hofmann), for the object of faith is never expressed by ἐις with a substantival infinitive, but, quite in accordance with the telic sense of this form of expression (as in the ἐις τὸ Εἰναι previously): who believe (on Christ) in order that (according to the divine final purpose ruling therein) to them also, etc. — καὶ αὐτῶις] to them also, as to Abraham himself; τὴν δικαιοσύνην expresses the righteousness which is under discussion, that of faith.

Ver. 12. The construction carries onward the foregoing πατέρα πάντων κ.τ.λ.: and father of circumcision, i.e. father of circumcised persons (not of all circumcised, hence without the article). And in order to express to what circumcised persons this spiritual fatherhood of Abraham belongs, Paul adds, by way of more precise definition: for those (dativus commodi, comp. Rev. xxi. 7; Luke vii. 12) who are not merely circumcised (comp. ii. 8), but also walk in the footsteps, etc. With this rendering (Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Ambrosiaster, Erasmus, Beza, Calvin, Estius and others; including Ammon, Bohnie, Tholuck, Klee, Rückert, Benecke, Reiche, Glöckler, Köllner, de Wette, Philippi, and Winer) it must be admitted (against Reiche and Köllner, whose observations do not justify the article) that τοῖς is erroneously repeated before στοιχεῖον. Paul unsuitably continues with ἀλλὰ καὶ, just as if he had previously written an οὐ μόνον τοῖς. As any other rendering is wholly inadmissible, and as καὶ τοῖς cannot be an inversion for τοῖς καί (Mehring), we are driven to the assumption of that erroneous insertion of the article, as a negligence of expression. The expression in Phil. i. 29 (in opposition to Fritzsche) would be of the same nature only in the event of Paul having written \( \tau οίς \ldots \) \( ού \ μόνον \ τοίς \ εκ \ \piεριτομῆς, \ \alphaλλὰ \ καί \ldots \ τοίς \ \sigmaτοιχοῦαι \ \kτ.λ. \). Others take \( τοίς \ \omegaύκ \) for \( ού \ τοίς \) (as 37, 80, Syr. Arr. Vulg. Slav. and several Fathers read as an emendation), thus making a distinction to be drawn here not between merely circumcised and unbelieving Jews, but between Jews and Gentiles (\( \alphaλλὰ \ \kαί \ τοίς \ \kτ.λ. \)). So Theodoret, Luther, Castalio, Koppe, Storr, Flatt, Schrader (Grotius is doubtful). But such an inversion is as unnatural (comp. ver. 16) as it is unprecedented (it is an error to refer to ii. 27; 1 Thess. i. 8); and how strange it would be, if Paul should have once more brought forward the fatherhood as to the believing Gentiles, but should have left that relating to the Jews altogether without conditioning definition! Hofmann (comp. also his \textit{Schriften}. II. 2, p. 82) understands \piεριτομῆς, after the analogy of \( \circ \ \Thetaεός \ \tauῆς \ \δόξης \ \kτ.λ. \), as the genitive of quality ("a father, whose fatherhood is to be designated according to circumcisedness;") as a circumcised person he has begotten Isaac, etc.; then assumes in the case of \( \tauοίς \ \omegaύκ \) \( \epsilonκ \ \piεριτομῆς \ \muόνον \) the suppressed antithesis to complete it, \( \alphaλλὰ \ \kαί \ \epsilonκ \ \piίστευς \); and finally explains \( \alphaλλὰ \ \kαί \ τοίς \ \στοιχ. \) as a supplementary addition, while he takes \( \alphaλλὰ \ \kαί \ \) to mean not \textit{but also}, but also \textit{however}. A hopeless misinterpretation! For, as genitive of quality, \piεριτομῆς must have had the article (comp. Acts vii. 2; 2 Cor. i. 3; Eph. i. 17 al.), and every reader must have understood \piεριτομῆς in conformity with \( \piαν- \tauον \ \kτ.λ. \), ver. 11, as a specification whose father Abraham further is. The reader could all the less mentally supply after \( \tauοίς \ \omegaύκ \) \( \epsilonκ \ \piεριτ. \) a suppressed contrast, since the expressed contrast follows immediately with \( \alphaλλὰ \ \kαί \); and for that reason, again, it could occur to no one to understand this \( \alphaλλὰ \ \kαί \) in any other sense than elsewhere after negations, namely, \textit{but also}, not \textit{also however}. (How inappropriate is Hofmann's citation of Luke xxiv. 22, where no negation at all precedes!) Wieseler's attempt (in Herzog's \textit{En- cyklop.} XX. p. 592) is also untenable, since he imports into \( \tauοίς \ \omegaύκ \) \( \epsilonκ \ \piεριτ. \) \muόνον the sense: "\textit{who do not make circumcision the exclusive condition of salvation,}" and likewise renders \( \alphaλλὰ \ \kαί \) \textit{also however}; thus making Paul indicate (1) the Jewish Christians who were not rigid partisans of the law (such as were to be found in Palestine especially), and (2) the Pauline Jewish Christians.

1 Not even in ver. 18. And Acts xv. 11, to which Hofmann appeals as an analogous passage, tells directly against him, because there the construction of the infinitive obtains in the usual way, that the subject of the governing verb is understood, as a matter of course, with the infinitive. Comp. Hofmann himself above on ver. 1; Krüger, § 55, 4, 1. Besides the result, according to Hofmann’s interpretation, would be an awkward thought, not in keeping with the faith of Abraham.
who so walk (see on Gal. v. 25) that they follow the footsteps which Abraham has left behind through his faith manifested in his uncircumcised condition, i.e. who are believers after the type of the uncircumcised Abraham. The dative, commonly taken as local, is more correctly, in keeping with the other passages in which Paul uses the dative with στοιχεῖον (Gal. v. 16, 25, vi. 16; Phil. iii. 16), interpreted in the sense of the norm.

Ver. 13. Ground assigned for the foregoing, from εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτῶν πατέρα onwards. "The father of all believing Gentiles and Jews;" for it was not the law, but the righteousness of faith, that procured for Abraham or his seed the promise of possessing the world. Had the law been the agent in procuring that promise, then the Jews, as possessors of the law, would be the children of Abraham who should receive what was promised; as it is, however, it must be the believers, no matter whether Jews or Gentiles, since not the law has been at work, but on the contrary the righteousness of faith. — διὰ νόμου] through the agency of the law, is not to be arbitrarily limited (Piscator, Calovius, and others: per justitiam legis; Pareus and others: per opera legis); for, as the Mosaic law was not yet even in existence, it could in no way procure the promise. Hence it is not to be rendered with Grotius: "sub conditione observandi legem Mosis," because διὰ δικαιοσ. πίστ. does not admit of a corresponding interpretation. — ἡ ἐπαγγελία] seil. ἐστι. The supplying of this (usually: ἐγένετο) is quite sufficient; comp. on ver. 9. The relation is realised as present. — ἡ τῷ στέρμα. αὐτῶν] neither to Abraham nor to his seed, etc. With ἡ τῷ στέρμα. αὑτ. Paul takes for granted that the history of the promise in question is known; and who are meant by the στέρμα under the Messianic reference of the promise cannot, according to the context (see especially ver. 11), be doubtful, namely the believers, who are the spiritual posterity of Abraham (ix. 6 ff.; Gal. iv. 22 ff.); not Christ according to Gal. iii. 16 (Estius, Cornelius à Lapide, Olshausen); but also not the descendants of Abraham proper (van Hengel). — τὸ κληρ. αὐτ. εἶναι κόσμον] Exegesis of ἡ ἐπαγγελία. See Kühner, II. 1, p. 518, and ad Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 22. The αὐτῶν,

1 For to this διὰ νόμου must be referred (see ver. 14 ff.) not to circumcision, which is brought under the wider conception of the law (Mehring).
referring to Abraham, is so put not because \( \eta \tau. \sigma\pi. \alpha\nu\tau\omega \) is only incidentally introduced (Rückert), but because Abraham is regarded as at once the father and representative of his \( \sigma\pi\epsilon\rho\mu\alpha \) included with him in the promise. — \( \kappa\omicron\sigma\mu\omicron\omicron \) The inheritance of the land of Canaan, which God promised to Abraham for himself and his posterity (Gen. xii. 7, xiii. 14, 15, xv. 18, xvii. 8, xxii. 17; comp. xxvi. 3; Ex. vi. 4), was in the Jewish Christology taken to mean the universal dominion of the Messianic theocracy, which was typically pointed at in these passages from Genesis. “Abrahamo patri meo Deus possidendum dedit coelum et terram,” Tanchuma, p. 165, 1, and see Wetstein. The idea of Messianic sovereignty over the world, however, which lies at the bottom of this Jewish particularistic conception, and which the prophets invested with a halo of glory,\(^1\) is in the N. T. not done away, but divested of its Judaistic conception, and raised into a Christological truth, already presented by Christ Himself (comp. Matth. v. 5) though in allegoric form (Matth. xix. 28 ff.; Luke xxii. 30; Matth. xxv. 21). Its necessity lies in the universal dominion to which Christ Himself is exalted (Matth. xxviii. 18; John xvii. 5; Phil. ii. 9 ff.; Eph. iv. 10 al.), and in the glorious fellowship of His believers with Him. Now as the idea of this government of the world, which Christ exercises, and in which His believers (the spiritual children of Abraham) are one day to participate, was undeniably also the ideal of Paul (viii. 17; 1 Cor. vi. 2; comp. 2 Tim. ii. 12), it is arbitrary to take \( \kappa\omicron\sigma\mu\omicron\omicron \) here otherwise than generally, and either to limit it to the sphere of earth (Koppe, Köllner, Maier), or to explain it as relating to the dominion of the Jews over the Gentile world (van Hengel), or the reception of all peoples into the Messianic kingdom (Beza, Estius and others) or Messianic bliss generally (Wetstein, Flatt, comp. Benecke and Glöckler), or the spiritual dominion of the world (Baumgarten-Crusius), as even Hengstenberg does: “the world is spiritually conquered by Abraham and his seed” (Christol. I. p. 49). The interpretation which takes it to mean the extension of the spiritual fatherhood over all nations (Mehring) would only be possible in the absence of \( \eta \tau\omega \sigma\pi\epsilon\rho\mu\alpha\tau\etai \alpha\nu\tau\omega \), and would likewise be set aside by the firmly established historical notion of the \( \tau\beta\mu\alpha \). The \( \kappa\lambda\rho\omicron\nu\omicron\omicron\omicron \)

\(^1\) Comp. Schultz, alttest. Theol. I. p. 225 ff.
eingai tov kosmou of believers is realised in the new glorious world (εν τῷ παλιγγενεσίᾳ, Matth. xix. 28, comp. Rom. viii. 18, 2 Pet. iii. 13) after the Parousia; hence the Messianic kingdom itself and all its δόξα, as the completed possession of salvation promised to believers, is designated by the theocratic technical term κληρονομία (see on Gal. iii. 18). — διὰ δικ. πίστ.] Since the νόμος was not the procurer of the promise, but Abraham was righteous through faith (ver. 3), the δικαιοσύνη πίστεως must necessarily have been that which procured the promise (moved God to grant it). See ver. 14. It is true that the promise in question was given to Abraham prior to his justification by faith (Gen. xii. 7, xiii. 14 f.); but it was renewed to him subsequently (xv. 18, xvii. 8); hence we must assume that here Paul had only these latter passages in view.

Vv. 14-17. Proof of the antithesis ou διὰ νόμου... ἀλλὰ κ.τ.λ. in ver. 13, conducted not historically (as in Gal. iii. 13 ff.), but dogmatically, a priori, from the nature of the law, from which results the opposite of the latter, the πίστις, as cause of the κληρονομία.

Ver. 14. Here also νόμος is not (as Flatt and others take it) the moral law (to which however the saying may certainly be applied), but the law of Moses, viewed in excluding antithesis to the πίστις. By οἱ ἐκ νόμου, “those of the law” (Luther), are meant those who belong to the law, are as such subjected to it; consequently the Jews at all events, but just so far as they are not believers, not belonging to the Ἰσραήλ τοῦ Θεοῦ (Gal. vii. 16). The opposite: οἱ ἐκ πίστεως, iii. 26, Gal. iii. 7. That they wish to attain to the κληρονομία by the way of the law, is true in itself, but is not expressed in the mere οἱ ἐκ νόμου (in opposition to Hofmann). — κεκένωσαι ἡ πίστις κ.τ.λ.] then faith is made void and the promise done away, i.e. faith is thereby rendered inoperative and the promise of no effect. If it be true that to be subject to the law is the condition of obtaining the possession of the world, nothing further can be said either of a saving power of faith (comp. 1 Cor. i. 17), or of the validity of the promise (comp. iii. 31, Gal. iii. 17). And why not? Because (ver. 15) the law, to which in accordance with that protasis the κληρονομία would be appended, has an operation so entirely opposed to the essence of faith (which trusts in the divine χάρις) and of the promise (which is an emanation from this ἀπός), (comp.ver.16), that it brings about the divine wrath, since its result is transgression. On this ground (διὰ τοῦτο, ver.16) because the law worketh wrath, its relation to the κηρονομία, laid down in ver. 14, cannot exist; but on the contrary the latter must proceed from faith that it may be according to grace, etc., ver. 16.—The πίστις is the Christian saving faith, of which Abraham's faith was the beginning and type, and the εὐαγγελία is the Divine promise of the κηρονομία, given to Abraham and his seed, ver. 13.

Ver. 15. On the connection see above. The assigning of a reason (γάρ) has reference to the previous κεκένωσις ἡ πίστις κ. κατήργη ἡ ἐπαγγ., which are closely connected (see ver. 16), and not merely to the κατήργη ἡ ἐπὰγγ. (Chrysostom, Fritzsche, Mehring, and others). The law produces wrath. It is the divine wrath that is meant, not any sort of human wrath (against the judgment of God, as Melancthon thought). Unpropitiated, it issues forth on the day of judgment, ii. 5 ff., iii. 5, ix. 22; Eph. ii. 3, v. 6; Col. iii. 6 al.; Ritschl, de ira Dei, p. 16; Weber, vom Zorne Gottes, p. 326 f.—οὗ γάρ οὐκ ἐστι νόμος κ.τ.λ. Proof of the proposition that the law worketh wrath: for where the law is not, there is not even (οὐδέ) transgression, namely, which excites the wrath of God (the Lawgiver). This short, terse and striking proof—which is not, any more than the three previous propositions introduced by γάρ, to be reduced to a “justifying explanation” (Hofmann), or to be weakened by taking οὐδέ to mean “just as little” (Hofmann)—proceeds a causa ad effectum; where the cause is wanting (namely, ἐπαγγελία), there can be no mention of the effect (ἀγγελία). This negative form of the probative proposition includes—in accordance with the doctrine of the Apostle elsewhere regarding the relation of the law to the human ἐπαθεματικόν (Rom. vii. 7 ff.; 1 Cor. xv. 56; Gal. iii. 19 al.), which is kindled on occasion of the law by the power of sin which exists in man—the positive counterpart, that, where the law is, there is also transgression. Paul however expresses himself negatively, because in his mind the negative thought that the fulfillment of the promise is not dependent on the law still preponderates; and he will not enter into closer analysis of the positive side of it—viz., that faith is the condition—until the sequel, ver. 16 ff. Observe moreover that he has not written οὐδέ ἀμαρτία, which he could not assert (ver. 13), but ὧδὲ ταράξασις, as the specific designation of the ἀμαρτία in relation to the law, which was the precise point here in question. Comp. ii. 23, 25, 27, v. 14; Gal. ii. 18, iii. 19. Sins without positive law (ver. 13) are likewise, and indeed on account of the natural law, ii. 14, objects of the divine wrath (see i. 18 ff.; Eph. ii. 3); but sins against a given law are, in virtue of their thereby definite quality of transgression, so specifically and specially provocative of wrath in God, that Paul could relatively even deny the imputation of sin when the law was non-existent. See on ver. 13.

Ver. 16 f. Διὰ τοῦτο] Inference from ver. 15, consequently from the wrath-operating nature of the law, on account of which it is so utterly incapable of being the condition of the κληρονομία, that the latter must on the contrary result from the opposite of the law—from faith, etc. Comp. on ver. 14 f. This conclusion is so evident and pertinent that it required only the incomplete, but thus all the more striking expression: "therefore of faith, in order that according to grace," to the end that, etc. — ἐκ πίστεως] scil. ὧδὲ κληρονομοί εἶσι, according to ver. 14. The supplying, by Fritzsche and others, of ἡ ἐπαγγελία γίνεται ὃ ἐγένετο from ver. 13 is forbidden by the contrast in which ὧδὲ πίστ. stands to ἐκ νόμου, ver. 14. — ἵνα κατὰ χάριν] The purpose of God in ἐκ πίστεως: "in order that they might be so by way of grace," not by way of merit. Comp. ver. 4 and δοεαν iii. 24. — εἰς τὸ εἶναι βεβαιαν κ.τ.λ.] contains now in turn the divine purpose,¹ which prevails in the κατὰ χάριν. They shall be heirs by way of grace; and why by way of grace? In order that the promise may be sure, i.e. may subsist in active validity as one to be realised (the opposite of κατηγορηταί, ver. 14) for the collective posterity (i.e. for all believers, see v. 11, 13), not for those alone, who are such out of the law (not solely for believers who have become so out of the legal bond of Judaism), but also for those who are such out of the faith of Abraham,² i.e. whose Abrahamic kinship is based on Abraham’s faith, the uncircumcised believers. Theophylact: παντὶ τῷ στέρματι, τούτεστι πᾶσι τοῖς πιστεύοντιν οὐ μόνον τοῖς ἐκ νόμου, τούτεστι τοῖς ἐμπεριτόμοις, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἀκροβύστοις, οὕτως εἰς στέρμα Ἀβραὰμ ἐκ πίστεως αὐτῶ γενηθέντες. If anything else than χάρις (such as ὁφειλήμα) were the reason determining God to confer the κληρονομία, then both halves of the στέρμα, in their legal imperfection, would be unsecured with respect to the promise. As it is, however, believing Jews as also believing Gentiles have in the divine χάρις the same guarantee that the κληρονομία shall be imparted to them ἐκ πίστεως. — ὅς ἐστι πατ. πάντ. ἡμῶν] reiterated (comp. w. 11, 12) solemn setting forth of the fatherhood of Abraham for all (πάντας) believers (ἡμῶν), which was indeed the pith and fundamental idea of the entire argument (since ver. 9); there is therefore no new point raised here (Hofmann), but this fatherhood of the patriarch in the history of salvation, already clearly laid down, is summarily expressed afresh, in order (ver. 17), after the insertion of a testimony from Scripture, to present it, by means of κατέναντι οὗ κ.τ.λ., in its holy, divine guarantee and dignity. — ὅτι πατέρα πολλῶν κ.τ.λ.] Gen. xvii. 5, closely after the LXX.; therefore ὅτι, for, which in the original text specifies the reason of the name Abraham, is repeated by Paul without any special bearing on his connection, simply as forming part of the words of Scripture. — πατέρα πολλῶν ἐδω.] Aptly explained, in the sense of the Apostle, by Chrysostom and Theophylact: οὗ κατὰ φυσικὴν συγγένειαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ οἰκείωσιν πίστεως. In this spiritual sense—which the passage of Scripture expresses typically—he is constituted by God as father of many nations (in so far, namely, as all believers from among the Jews and all Gentile peoples are to be, in the history of salvation, his spiritual στέρμα), i.e. appointed, and thus made so (compare Heb. i. 2; 1 Macc. x. 65, xiv. 34; Hom. Od. xv. 253, Il. vi. 300; Plat. Theaet. p. 169 E; Pind. Ol. xiii. 21). Even the original text cannot have meant by ἡμῶν merely the twelve tribes of Israel (Hofmann). It means the posterity of Abraham, in so far as Gentile peoples also shall be subjected to it. The Israelite tribes would be ἡμῶν — κατέναντι οὗ ἐπίστ. Θεοῦ] is connected, after the parenthesis (καθὼς . . . . σε), with ὅς ἐστι πατὴρ πάντ. ἡμῶν. To get rid of the parenthesis by supposing a suppressed intervening thought (Philippi), or an asyndeton, as if it were καὶ κατέναντι κ.τ.λ. (van Hengel), is a harsh and arbitrary course; while it is impossible to regard κατέναντι κ.τ.λ. as explanation of the καθὼς γέγραπται (Hofmann), because καθὼς γέγρ. can only be taken as the quite common (occurring thirteen times in our Epistle) simple formula for quoting a Scripture proof, and not as: “in harmony with the Scripture passage.” — κατέναντι, equivalent to the classical κατενάντιον, means over against (Mark xi.2, xii.41; Luke xix.30), i.e. here: in presence of (κατεναντίον), coram, as after the Heb. frequently in the LXX. and Apocrypha. See Biel and Schleusner. The attraction is to be resolved into: κατέναντι τοῦ Θεοῦ, κατέναντι οὖ ἐπίστευσες: coram Deo, coram quo credidit.1 Quite analogous are such passages as Luke i.4, περὶ ὧν κατῆχθης λόγων, instead of περὶ τῶν λόγων περὶ ὧν κατηχεῖται, Matth. vii.2 al. See Bornemann, Schol. in Luc. p. 177; Schmid in the Tub. Zeitschr. f. Theol. 1831, 2, p. 137 ff.; Winer, p. 155 f. [E. T. 204]; comp. on Acts xxi.16. So also rightly Philippi and Hofmann;2 comp. Marcé. The mode of resolving it adopted by most commentators (Thomas Aquinas, Castalio, Calvin, Beza, Fr. Schmid, Grotius, Estius, and others; also Tholuck, Rückert, Reiche, Köllner, Fritzschke, Ewald, van Hengel, Buttmann): κατέναντι Θεοῦ οὐ ἐπίστευσε, is at least at variance with the usual

¹ Here also the peculiar deeper scope of the view given is often left unnoticed, and εἰς τὸ εἶναι is taken as inference: so that, etc. See on the other hand on i. 20.
² ἐν πίστ.] Ἀβραὰμ goes together (in opposition to Fritzsche, who has conceived the σπέρματι to be supplied as before Ἀβρ., and made the genitive Ἀβραὰμ dependent on it), since it is not Jews and Christians, but Jewish and Gentile believers who are placed side by side, and in the latter the faith of Abraham (comp. ver. 10) is the characteristic.
CHAP. IV. 16, 17.

1 The coram, in presence of, is neither to be explained ad exemplum (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact and others), nor “according to the will” (Reiche, Krehl and others), nor “according to the judgment” (Rückert, Köllner, Fritzschke, Maier, Umbreit and others), nor “vi atque potestate divina” (Koppe), nor “before the omniscience of God” (Olshausen), but is to be left without any modifying explanation. Abraham is realised as present, just as he stands πάρθος πάντων ἡμῶν face to face with the God who had appeared to him, and has become a believer in conspectu Dei. This vivid realisation of the believing patriarch, as if he were standing there as father of us all before the face of God, just as formerly in that sacred moment of history, is a plastic form of presentation which, inaptly condemned by Hofmann, quite accords with the elevated and almost poetic strain of the following words. It also fully warrants the coupling of κατέναντι κ.τ.λ. with ὅσοι ἐστί πάρθος πάντων ἡμῶν; it is unnecessary to seek a connection with ὅτι πάρθος... τιθέναι σε, either with Bengel, who compares Matth. ix.6, or with Philippi, who, thereby getting rid of the parenthesis, inserts after τιθέναι σε the thought: “and as such he has been appointed.”

2 Who, nevertheless, in consequence of his incorrect view of καθὼς γέγραπται, professes to illustrate the κατέναντι thus: “At that time, when he believed, he stood face to face with God as Him who quickeneth the dead, etc.; and by the fact, that God has shown Himself to be just the same as Him before whom he then stood, it has so come to pass, that he is now before Him the father of us all.”
mode of attraction, since the attraction of the relative, which, not attracted, would stand in the dative, has no precedent in the N. T., and even in Greek authors very seldom occurs (Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 2, 5, Gramm. II. 2, p. 914). Finally, the explanation which takes κατέναντι οὗ as equivalent to κατέναντι τοῦτοι, ἃτι, and the latter as equivalent to ἄνθρωπος, propterea quod, and in accordance with which Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ. is then taken as genitive absolute ("whilst God, who quickeneth the dead, calleth also to that which is not, as though it were present," Mehring), is wrong just because κατέναντι has not the sense supposed. — τοῦ ξωοτ. τ. νεκρούς, καὶ κ.τ.λ.] Distinguishing quality of God as the Almighty, selected with practical reference to the circumstances of Abraham (vv. 18-21): "Who quickeneth the dead and calleth the non-existent as though it were," and certainly, therefore, can quicken the decayed powers of procreation, and dispose of generations not yet in existence. A reference to the offering of Isaac, whom God could make alive again (Erasmus, Grotius, Baumgarten-Crusius and Mangold), is so foreign to the connection that it would have required definite indication. The χωοτοείν τοῦς νεκρούς is a formal attribute of the almighty God. 1 Sam. ii. 6; Wisd. xvi. 13; Tob. xiii. 2; comp. Deut. xxxii. 9. See also John v. 21; 2 Cor. i. 9; 1 Tim. vi. 13. Origen, Ambrosiaster, Anselm, erroneously hold that the νεκροί are spiritually dead, a view which the context must have rendered necessary; comp. Olshausen, who holds that ξωοτ. and κ.τ.λ. indicate typically the spiritual awakening and the new birth; also Ewald, who will have the application made to the revivifying of the dead Gentiles into true Christians. — καλοὶντος τὰ μὴ ὅντα ὡς ὅντα] i.e. "who utters His disposing decree over that which does not exist, equally as over the existing." What a lofty expression of all-commanding power! And how thoroughly in harmony with the then position of Abraham! For as he stood before God and believed (Gen. xv. 6), God had just showed to him the stars of heaven, with the promise οὐτῶς ἐσται τὸ σπέρμα σου! So that God hereby issued his potent summons (so shall it be!) to something that was not (the σπέρμα of Abraham) as though it had been. This explanation (followed also by Rückert and Philippi) is perfectly faithful to the sense of the words, and as much in harmony with the vividly realised situation of Abraham as it is appropriate to the parallelism; for the latter is climaetic, leading from the νεκροῖς to the τὰ μὴ ὄντα. καλεῖν, like καὶ, does not here mean to name (Hofmann, comp. Loesner and Benecke), which would refer to the name of father pronounced by God and have in view the divine knowledge, but on the contrary, correlative with the mighty ξυποτείνω τ. νεκρ. (comp. ὄντας ver. 21), it denotes the call of the Ruler, which He issues to that which is subject to His power. Comp. Ps. 1. 1; Is. xl. 26; υ郤ύ is the simple as of comparison. Parallels in point are found in Philo, de Jos. p. 544 C, where it is said of the force of imagination, that it pictures τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα; and Artemidor. i. 53, p. 46, ed. Rigalt. where it is said of the painter, that he represents τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα. Paul could also have, like Clement, Cor. II. 1, used τὰ οὐκ ὄντα (the non-existent, Xen. Mem. ii. 2, 3), as the contradictory antithesis of τὰ ὄντα (comp. also Plat. Rep. p. 476 E); but the negation is conceived subjectively, from the standpoint of the subject who calls: he calls the things, which he knows as non-existent, as if they were. Comp. Xen. Anab. iv. 4, 15, and Kühner in loc.; Baeumlein, Partik. p. 278. Still what Delitzsch, Psychol. p. 37 f., deduces from τὰ μὴ ὄντα—that that which enters into historical existence was not previously an absolute nothing, but an object of divine knowledge—is based on the common conception of καλεῖν in the sense of creative activity, which is erroneous. No doubt καλεῖν, as is well known, often denotes the creating call of God (Isa. xxii. 12, xlii. 4, xlviii. 13; 2 Kings viii. 1; Wisd. xi. 25; Philo, de creat. princ. p. 728 B, where τὰ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεσεν is further defined by εἰς τὸ εἶναι; comp. de Opif. p. 13 E). In this case we should have to think by no means of the historical act of creation out of nothing (Piscator, Estius and others), but rather, on account of the present partici-

1 Quite contrary to the context Erasmus, Ch. Schmid, Koppe and Böhme take καλεῖν in the dogmatic sense. And yet even Fritzsche and Mangold have gone over to this explanation: "homines nondum in lucem editos ad vitam aeternam invitavit." Van Hengel takes καλεῖν as assertere, and τὰ μὴ ὄντα that which is of no account (see on 1 Cor. i. 28), so that the sense would be: "quaecunque nullius numeri sunt asserta (to the childship of Abraham), quasi sint in pretio." But this peculiar interpretation of μὴ ὄντα and ὄντα must have been specifically suggested by the context, especially as it strips off the whole poetical beauty of the expression.
ciple, either of the continuous creative activity (Köllner), or (better still on account of the parallel of ξωσις) of an abiding characteristic of God generally, from which no time is excluded. But this whole interpretation of καλείν is set aside here by ὡς ὄντα. For ὡς cannot be taken for εἰς (Luther, Wolf, and others), because an use so utterly isolated in the N. T. is in itself very improbable, and because, where ὡς stands in classic authors in the sense of εἰς, it is only so used in reference to persons (Hermann, ad Viger. p. 853; Poppo, ad Thuc. III. 1, p. 318 ff.), or, at the most, where what is personal is represented by neuter objects; see Düderlein, philolog. Beitr. p. 303 ff. Some desire ὡς ὄντα to be taken for ὡς ἐσώμενα (de Wette), or as a summary expression for εἰς τὸ εἶναι ὡς ὄντα (Reiche, Köllner, Tholuck, de Wette, Bisping), but these expedients are arbitrary in themselves, and, in the case of the latter especially—seeing that ὄντα would have to be taken in the sense of the result, as only adjectives are elsewhere used (see on Matth. xii. 43, and Breitenbach, ad Xen. Oec. 4, 7)—ὡς would only be superfluous and confusing.

Vv. 18–21. More particular setting forth of this faith of Abraham, according to its lofty power and strength. Ἐλέες τῶς τίθησι καὶ τὰ κωλύματα καὶ τὴν ύψηλὴν τοῦ δικαίου γνώμην πάντα ὑπερβαίνουσαν, Chrysostom.

Ver. 18. "Ὅσοι Parallel to the ὡς ἐστὶ κ.τ.λ. ver. 16; therefore only a comma or a colon need be put after ὡς ὄντα. — ἐπʼ ἐλπίδι] on hope, is the basis of the ἐπίστ. Comp. 1 Cor. ix. 10; frequent in Greek authors. See also Tit. i. 2. Abraham’s faith was opposed to hope (παρ’ ἐλπίδα, frequent in classical writers) in its objective reference, and yet not ἀνέλπιστος, but rather based on hope in its subjective reference,—a significant oxymoron. — εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι κ.τ.λ.] Rightly Luther: in order that he might be. Comp. Rückert, Tholuck, Philippi. It contains the end, ordained by God, of the ἐπίστ., thus exhibiting Abraham’s faith in its teleological connection with the divine decree, and that in reference to the word of God, ver. 17; hence, it is less in harmony with the context to take εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι κ.τ.λ. as the purpose of Abraham. Ver. 11, εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν κ.τ.λ. is quite analogous. Following Beza, many writers (including even Reiche, Köllner, Baumgarten-Crusius, Krehl, Mehring, Hofmann) take εἰς τό γεν. as the object of ἐπίστ. ; quite contrary to the usage of the N. T.; see on ver. 11. Here, as in every case previously, the object of faith (the divine promise) is quite self-evident. The view which explains it of the consequence (Böhme, Flatt, Fritzsche, following older writers) for καὶ οὕτως ἐγένετο, is linguistically erroneous (see on i. 20), and quite at variance with the tenor of the discourse; for in vv. 19-21 the delineation of the faith itself is still continued, so that at this stage the result (it is introduced in ver. 22) would be quite out of place.—κατὰ τὸ εἰρημ. belonging to γενέσθαι κ.τ.λ., not to ἐπίστευσε (Hofmann, in accordance with his incorrect view of εἰς τό κ.τ.λ.).—οὕτως What is meant by this, Paul assumes to be familiar to his readers; and therefore the corresponding part is by no means wanting. F G and several Fathers (also Vulg. ms.) have after σου the addition: ὦς οἱ ἀστέρες τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ ή ἅμμος τῆς θαλάσσης. The first half only is a proper gloss; the καὶ ή ἅμμ. τ. θαλ. does not lie in the οὕτως, Gen. xv. 5, but is imported from Gen. xii. 16.

Vv. 19-21 are still dependent on ὦς, completing the description of the believing Abraham: and (who), because he was not weak in faith, regarded not his own dead body.¹ Theophylact has properly expressed the meiosis in μὴ ἄσθ. : μὴ ἀσθενήσας τῇ πίστει, ἀλλ’ ἵσχυραν αὐτῷ ἐκκ. By μὴ the ἀσθεν. is negatived from the point of view of the subject. Comp. on ver. 17.—οὐ κατενόησε] he did not fix his attention thereon. Comp. Heb. iii. 1, x. 24; Luke xii. 24; Judith x. 14. This remark is no historical blunder inconsistent with Gen. xvii. 17 (de Wette; comp. Rückert), but is quite in harmony with the account given in Gen. xv. 5, 6, where, immediately after the divine promise οὕτως ἔσται τῷ σπέρμα σου, it is said: καὶ ἐπίστευσεν Ἀβρ. τῷ Θεῷ. This (and not what is related in Gen. xvii. 17) is the fact which Paul here exhibits in greater detail, inasmuch as he depicts the καὶ ἐπίστευσε of Gen. l.c., in its strength at first negatively (in the non-consideration of bodily obstacles) and then positively. The immediately decided faith of Abraham in Gen. xv., to which Paul here refers, is not inconsistent with the subsequent hesitation, Gen. xvii. (the account of which, moreover, belongs to another author); the latter is a wavering which may easily be understood from a psychological point of view. Comp. the doubt of the Baptist as to the Messiahship of Jesus, Matth. xi. 2 ff. — νενεκρωμένον and νέκρωσις conveying the idea of decrepitude with reference to the powers of procreation and of conception respectively. Comp. Heb. xi. 12; Kypke, II. p. 164.— ἐκατονταετίς κ.τ.λ.] although so advanced in years that he might naturally have regarded etc., yet he did not do so. The ποια is the circiter in approximate statements of number; Herod. i. 119; vii. 5; Diog. L. viii. 86. Comp. Xen. Oec. 17, 3. Not used by Paul elsewhere. Abraham was then ninety-nine years old. See Gen. xvii. 1, 17, xxii. 5. “Post Semum nemo centum annorum generasse Gen. xi. legitur,” Bengel.1 — Observe, as to καί τ. νέκ., that the negation οὐ κατένοησε extends to both the objects of the sentence. Hofmann’s objection to our reading,2 and his declaration that instead of καί we should expect οὐ δὲ, are erroneous; see Winer, p. 460 [E. T. 610]; Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 315.3 The νέκρωσις is the deadness of the womb attested as having already set in at Gen. xviii. 11. Was Sarah still to become a mother ἐκ πολιάς γαστρός (Pind. Pyth. iv. 98)! — εἰς δὲ τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν κ.τ.λ.] The negative proposition in ver. 19 is, in the first place, still more specially elucidated, likewise negatively, by εἰς . . . ἀπιστία (δὲ, the epexegetical autem), and then the positive opposite relation is subjoined to it by ἀλλ’ ἐνέδωκν. κ.τ.λ. In the former negative illustrative clause the chief element giving the information is εἰς τ. ἐπαγγ. τ. Θεοῦ, which is therefore placed first with great emphasis: “but with regard to the promise of God he waxed not incredulously, but waxed strong in faith,” etc.

¹ i.e. his own body: which was one already dead. Therefore versus without the article. Comp. Kühner, ad Xen. Anat. iv. 6, 1; Stallbaum, ad Plat. Rep. p. 573 Δ.

1 With regard to the children subsequently begotten with Keturah, Gen. xxv. 1 ff., the traditional explanation, already lying at the foundation of Augustine, de Civ. D. xvi. 28, is sufficient, viz. that the power of begetting, received from God, continued after the death of Sarah.—On ἐκατονταετίς comp. Pind. Pyth. iv. 503. According to the uncertain canon of the old grammarians (see Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 406 f.) it ought to have been written here as an oxytone (so Lachmann) because it is the predicate of a person. Comp. Kuhner, I. p. 420.

2 With the reading without οὖ (see the crit. remarks) the thought conveyed is: and without having been weak in faith he regarded, etc., but did not become doubtful in respect to the promise of God, etc. Comp. Hofmann. But μὴ δὲ τ. πιστ. would thus be superfluous, and even logically unsuitable in relation to ver. 20. Simply and clearly Paul would only have written: καὶ κατένοησε μὲν τὸ ἐκατοντάετα μῦ κ.τ.λ. εἰς δὲ τὴν ἐπαγγ. κ.τ.λ.

3 Comp. also Jacobs, ad Del. epigr. vi. 10, not. crit.
Since in this way the discourse runs on very simply and suitably to the sense, it is unnecessary to resort to the more awkward suggestion, that Paul already begins the antithetic statement with δὲ (however, see Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 171), to which nevertheless he has again given the emphasis of contrast through the negative and positive forms (Philippi, who, however, admits our view also; comp. Tholuck and others). In no case, however, can it be said, with Rückert, that Paul wished to write εἰς δὲ τ. ἔπαγγ. τ. Θεοῦ ἐπίστ. μὴν διακρίνομενος, but that his love for antitheses induced him to divide the idea of ἐπίστ. into its negative and positive elements, and that therefore εἰς should be referred to the ἐπίστ. at first thought of. De Wette (comp. Krehl) conjectures that, according to the analogy of πιστεύειν εἰς, εἰς is the object of διεκρ. It is the quite usual in regard to, as respects; see Winer, p. 371 [E. T. 496]. — διακρίνεσθαι] To waver, the idea being that of a mental struggle into which one enters, xiv. 23; Matth. xxi. 21; Acts x. 20; see Huther on James i. 6. This usage is so certain in the N. T., that there is no need to translate, with van Hengel: non contradixit, referring to Gen. xvii. 17 ff., in which case τῇ ἀπίστ. is supposed to mean: “quanquam in animo volvebat, quae diffidentiam inspirarent.” Such a thought is foreign to the connection, in which everything gives prominence to faith only, and not to a mere resignation. — τῇ ἀπίστ. is instrumental, in the sense of the producing cause, but τῇ πίστ. on account of the correlation with ἀσθεν. τῇ πίστ. in ver. 19, is to be taken as the dative of more precise definition, consequently: he wavered not by means of the unbelief (which in such a case he would have had), but became strong as respects the faith (which he had). Hofmann’s explanation is erroneous, because not in keeping with the ἀσθεν. τ. πίστ. above. He takes τῇ πίστ. as causal: by faith Abraham was strengthened “to an action in harmony with the promise and requisite for its realisation.” This addition, which can hardly fail to convey a very indelicate idea, is a purely gratuitous importation. — ἐνεδυναμώθη] became strong, heroic in faith; passive. Comp. Aq. Gen. vii. 20: ἐνεδυναμώθη τὸ δῶρ. Heb. xi. 34; Acts ix. 32; Eph. vi. 10; LXX. Ps. lli. 7: ἐνεδυναμώθη ἐπὶ τῇ σατανάτητι αὐτὸς. In Greek authors the word does not occur. —
CHAP. IV. 23-25. 217

δοῦς δόξαν τῷ Θεῷ] while he gave God glory, and\(^1\) was fully persuaded (xiv. 5; Col. iv. 12) that, etc. The aorist participles put the διόνως δόξαν ἡμᾶς not as preceding the ἐνυπναμομένη, or as presupposed in it, but as completed simultaneously with it. (comp. on Eph. i. 5). — διόνως δόξαν (πιστις) τῷ Θεῷ denotes generally every act (thinking, speaking or doing) that tends to the glory of God (Josh. vii. 19; Jer. xiii. 16; Esr. x. 11; Luke xvi. 18; John ix. 24; Acts xii. 23); and the context supplies the special reference of its meaning. Here: by recognition of the divine omnipotence (not circumcision subeunda, as van Hengel thinks), as is shown by what follows, which is added exegetically. "Insigne praeconium fidei est, gloriam Deo tribuere," Melancthon. The opposite: 1 John v. 10. — ἐπίγγειλται] in a middle sense. Winer, p. 246 [E. T. 328].

Ver. 22. Result of the whole disquisition, emphatically pointing back to ver. 3 (ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην). — διὸ καὶ on which account also (i. 24), namely because Abraham believed so strongly as is described in vv. 18-21. — The subject of ἐλογίσθη (it was reckoned) is self-evident, viz. the believing. Comp. Nägelsbach, zur Ilias, p. 60, ed. 3.

Vv. 23-25. Relation of the Scripture testimony as to Abraham's justification to the justification of Christians by faith; with which the proof for the νόμον ἵστημεν διὰ τῆς πίστεως (iii. 31) is completed. — διὰ αὐτοῦ] on his account, in order to set forth the mode of his justification. Then, corresponding thereto: δι' ἡμᾶς. Comp. Beresch R. 40, 8: "Quicquid scriptum est de Abrahamo, scriptum est de filiis ejus." On the idea generally comp. xiv. 4; 1 Cor. ix. 10, x. 6, 11; Gal. iii. 8.— μέλλει λογιζομαι] namely the πιστεύειν, which, in accordance with the divine ordination, is to be reckoned to us Christians (μέλλει), — to us, as those who believe on Him that raised up Jesus. μέλλει (comp. on viii. 13) is therefore not to be taken for ἐμελέλει (Böhme, comp. Olshausen), but contains what God has willed, which shall accomplish itself continuously as to each concrete case (not for the first time at the judgment, as Fritzsche thinks) where Christ

\(^1\) The evidence against καὶ is too weak. Without it πληροφ. would be subordinated to the δοῦς δόξας τῷ Θ. Oecumenius has aptly remarked on πληροφ.: σῴετε πιστεύοντες, ἀλλ' ἑμφατικῶτερον. It corresponds with the full victory of the trial of the patriarch's faith at the close of its delineation.
is believed on. The ημεῖς, i.e. the community of believers (not however conceived as becoming such, as Hofmann supposes), are the constant recipients of the fulfilment of that which was once written not merely for Abraham’s sake but also for theirs.
— τοῖς πιστεύοντις not: who from time to time become believing (Hofmann), which is not consistent with ημας, but: quippe qui credunt. The επὶ τῶν ἔγειραντα k.τ.λ. that is added then points out the specific contents, which is implied in the μελλει λογιζεσθαι, for the πιστεύον that has not yet been more precisely defined. In and with this faith we have constantly the blessing of the λογιζεσθαι divinely annexed to it. Comp. viii. 1. And the έπὶ τῶν ἔγειραντα k.τ.λ. (comp. x. 9) is purposely chosen to express the character of the faith, partly on account of the necessary analogy with ver.
17,¹ and partly because the divine omnipotence, which raised up Jesus, was at the same time the strongest proof of divine grace ( ver. 25). Regarding επὶ, comp. on ver. 5 — παρεδόθη standing designation for the divine surrender of Christ, surrender unto death (viii. 32), perhaps after Is. lili. 12. It is at the same time self-surrender (Gal. ii. 20; Eph. v. 2), since Christ was obedient to his Father.— διὰ τὰ παραπτ. ημῶν on account of our sins, namely, that they might be atoned for by the ἔλαστημιν of Jesus, iii. 24 f., v. 8 f.— διὰ τὴν δικαιώσιν ημῶν on account of our justification, in order to accomplish on us the judicial act of transference into the relation of δικαιονῦν. Comp. v. 18. For this object God raised Jesus from the dead;² for the resurrection of the sacrificed One was required to produce in men the faith, through which alone the objective fact of the atoning offering of Jesus could have the ¹ But in point of fact to “believe on Christ” and to “believe on God who raised Christ,” are identical, because in both cases Christ is the specific object.

² Compare Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 329. For the view which the older Reform-theologians (comp. also Gerhard in Calovius) took of the state of the case as an acquittal from our sins, which was accorded to Christ and to us with Him through His resurrection, see Ritschl, Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung, I. p. 283 f. Ac-according to Beza, Christ could not have furnished the atonement of our sins, if He had not, as the risen victor, vanquished death. But the case is rather conceived as the converse: Christ could not have risen, if His death had not expiated our sins.
In this way Christ has not merely died ὠνείρ. ημῶι, but has also been raised again
(2 Cor. v. 15); without His saving power, however, having been in itself conditioned only by the resurrection (to which, in the main, the views of Ottinger and Menken ultimately come).
effect of δικαίωσις subjectively, because Christ is the ἀστρίῳν διὰ τῆς πίστεως, iii. 25. Without His resurrection therefore the atoning work of His death would have remained without subjective appropriation; His surrender διὰ τὰ παραπτ. ἡμῶν would not have attained its end, our justification. Comp. especially 1 Cor. xv. 17; 2 Cor. v. 20 f., xv.; 1 Pet. i. 21. Moreover the two definitions by διὰ are not two different things, but only the two aspects of the same exhibition of grace, the negative and the positive; of which, however, the former by means of the parallelism, in which both are put in juxtaposition, is aptly attributed to the death as the objective ἀστρίῳν, and the latter to the resurrection, as the divine act that is the means of its appropriation. Melancthon has well said: "Quanquam enim praecessit meritum, tamen its ordinatum fuit ab initio, ut tunc singulis applicaretur, cum fide acciperent." The latter was to be effected by the resurrection of Jesus; the meritum lay in His death, but the raising Him up took place for the δικαίωσις, in which His meritum was to be realised in the faithful. Comp. viii. 34. Against the Catholic theologians, who referred διὰ to sanctification (as Maier, Bisping, Dollinger and Reithmayer still do), see Calovius. Nor is intercession even (viii. 34) to be introduced into διὰ τὴν δικαίωσιν ἡμῶν (Calvin and others; also Tholuck and Philippi), since that does not take place to produce the δικαίωσιν, but has reference to those who are already justified, with a view to preserve them in the state of salvation; consequently the δικαίωσις of the subjects concerned precedes it.

1 The reference to the fellowship with the death of Christ, whereby believers have died to their former life, and with His resurrection as an entrance into a new state of life no longer conditioned by the flesh (see Rich. Schmidt, Paulin. Christol. p. 74), is inadmissible; because it does not correspond to the prototype of Abraham, which determines the entire representation of justification in this chapter.
CHAPTER V.

Ver. 1. ἔχωμεν] Lachm. (in the margin), Scholz, Fritzsche, and Tisch. (8) read ἔχωμεν, following A B* C D K L ἅ*, min., several vss. (including Syr. Vulg. It.) and Fathers. But this reading, though very strongly attested, yields a sense (let us maintain peace with God) that is here utterly unsuitable; because the writer now enters on a new and important doctrinal topic, and an exhortation at the very outset, especially regarding a subject not yet expressly spoken of, would at this stage be out of place. Hence the ἔχωμεν, sufficiently attested by B ἅ F G, most min., Syr. p. and some Fathers, is to be retained; and the subjunctive must be regarded as having arisen from misunderstanding, or from the hortatory use of the passage.— Ver. 2. τῇ πίστει wanting in B D E F G, Aeth. It.; omitted by Lachm. and Tisch. (7), as also by Ewald. Following ver. 1, it is altogether superfluous; but this very reason accounts for its omission, which secured the direct reference of εἰς τ. χάρ. ταύτ. το προσαγ. The genuineness of τῇ πίστει is also attested by the reading εν τῇ πίστει (so Fritzsche) in A 93, and several Fathers, which points to a repetition of the final letters of ἐκχικαμ.ΕΝ.— Ver. 6. After ἄσθενων preponderating witnesses have ἐτί, which Griesb. Lachm. and Tisch. (8) have adopted. A misplacement of the ἐτί before γάρ, because it was construed with ἄσθενων, along with which it came to be written. Thus ἐτί came in twice, and the first was either mechanically allowed to remain (A C D* ἅ), or there was substituted for it εἰ γέ (B), or εἰς τί (F G), or εἰ γάρ. The misplacement of the ἐτί came to predominate, because a Church-lesson began with Χριστοῦ.— Ver. 8. ὁ Θεός, which a considerable number of witnesses have before εἰς ημᾶς (so Tisch. 7), is wanting in B. But as the love of Christ, not that of God, appeared from ver. 7 to be the subject of the discourse, ὁ Θεός was omitted.— Ver. 11. καυκάωμενοι] F G read καυκάωμεν; L, min., and several Fathers καυκάωμεθα. Also Vulg. It. Arm. Slav. ex—

1 This even, in opposition to the opinion of Tisch. (8), that on account of the weighty testimony in its favour ἔχωμεν cannot be rejected, "nisi prorsus ineptum sit; ineptum vero non videtur." Hofmann also has not been able suitably to explain the ἔχωμεν which he defends. See the exegetical remarks.
press gloriamur. An erroneous interpretation. See the exegetical remarks.— Ver. 12. The second ὅ θάνατος is wanting in D E F G 62, It. Syr. p. Aeth. and most Fathers, also Aug. In Syr. with an asterisk; Arm. Chrys. Theodoret place it after διηλθεν. Tisch. (7) had omitted it. But as the word has preponderant testimony in its favour, and as in order to the definiteness of the otherwise very definitely expressed sentence it cannot be dispensed with, if in both halves of ver. 12 the relation of sin and death is, as is manifestly the design, to be expressly put forward, ὅ θάνατος omitted by Tisch., must be defended. Its omission may have arisen from its apparent superfluousness, or from the similarity between the final syllables of ἄνθρωπος and θάνατος.— Ver. 14. μὴ] is wanting in 62, 63, 67, Or. and others, codd. in Ruf. and Aug., and is declared by Ambrosiaster to be an interpolation. But it is certified partly by decisive testimony in its favour; partly by the undoubted genuineness of the καὶ; and partly because the μὴ apparently contradicts the erroneously understood ἐφʼ ὅ (ἐν ὑπὸ) πάντες ήμαρτον in ver. 12. See Reiche, Commentar. crit. I. p. 39 ff. — Ver. 16. ἄμαρτήσατος] D E F G, 26, 80, and several vss. and Fathers read ἄμαρτήσατος, which Griesb. recommended. A gloss occasioned by the antithesis ἐκ πολλ. παραπτώματων. — Ver. 17. τῶ τοῦ ἐνὸς παραπτώματι] So also Lachm. and Tisch. (8) following B C K L P N, vss., and Fathers. But A F G read ἐν ἐνὶ παραπτ., D E ἐν τῶ ἐνὶ παραπτ. 47, Or. ἐν ἐνὸς παραπτ. The original reading was most probably the simplest, ἐν ἐνὶ παραπτ., which, though not most strongly, is nevertheless sufficiently attested (also recommended by Griesb. and adopted by Tisch. (7), because from it the rise of the other variations can be very naturally explained. By way of more specific indication in some cases, the article was added (D E), in others ἐνὶ was changed into ἐνὸς (47, Or.). But, seeing that in any case the sense was quite the same as in the τῶ τοῦ ἐνὸς παραπτ. read in ver. 15, this was at first written alongside as a parallel, and then taken into the text.

CONTENTS.—Paul has hitherto described the δικαιοσύνη ἐκ πίστεως in respect of its necessity (i. 18—iii. 21); of its nature (iii. 21—30); and of its relation to the law (iii. 31—iv. 25). He now discusses the blessed assurance of salvation secured for the present and the future to the δικαιωθέντες ἐκ πίστεως (ver. 1-11); and then—in order clearly to exhibit the greatness and certainty of salvation in Christ, more especially in its divine world-wide significance as the blissful epoch-forming counterpart of the Adamite ruin—he presents us with a detailed parallel between this salvation and the misery which once came through Adam (vv. 12-19), and was necessarily augmented through the law (vv. 20, 21).

Ver. 1. Ὅν draws an inference from the whole of the preceding section, iii. 21–iv. 25, and develops the argument in such a form that δικαίωθετες, following at once on διὰ τὴν δικαίωσιν ἡμ., heads the sentence with triumphant emphasis. What a blessed assurance of salvation is enjoyed by believers in virtue of their justification which has taken place through faith, is now to be more particularly set forth; not however in the form of an exhortation (Hofmann, in accordance with the reading ἔχουμεν) "to let our relation to God be one of peace" (through a life of faith), in which case the emphasis, that obviously rests in the first instance on δικαίωθετες and then on ἐπήρημην, is taken to lie on διὰ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμ. [I. X.—ἐπήρημην ἔχε, π. τ. Θεόν] He who is justified is no longer in the position of one to whom God must be and is hostile (ἐχθρὸς Θεοῦ, ver. 9 f.), but on the contrary he has peace (not in a general sense contentment, satisfaction, as Th. Schott thinks) in his relation to God. This is the peace which consists in the known objective state of reconciliation, the opposite of the state in which one is subject to the divine wrath and the sensus irae. With justification this peace ensues as its immediate and abiding result. Hence δικαίωθετες... ἔχουμεν (comp. Acts ix. 31; John xvi. 33).

And through Christ (διὰ τοῦ κυρίου κ. τ. λ.) as the εἰρηνοτοίοις is this pacem obtinere (Bremi, ad Isocr. Archid. p. 111) procured; a truth obvious indeed in itself, but which, in consonance with the strength and fulness of the Apostle's own believing experience, is very naturally again brought into special prominence here, in order to connect, as it were, triumphantly with this objective cause of the state of peace which we owe to it respecting the point in question, ver. 2. There is thus the less necessity for joining διὰ τοῦ κυρίου κ. τ. λ. with ἐπήρημην (Stölting); it belongs, like πρὸς τ. Θεόν, in accordance with the position of ἔχουμεν, to the latter word. — πρὸς (of the ethical relation, Bernhardy, p. 265), as in Acts ii. 47, xxiv. 16. Comp. Herodian, viii. 7, 8: ἀντὶ πολέμου μὲν ἐπηρήμην ἔχουτες πρὸς θεοῦς. Plat. Pol. v. p. 465 B: ἐπηρήμην πρὸς ἀλλήλους oi ἀνδρέων ἄξουσιν; Legg. xii. p. 955 B; Alc. i. p. 107 D; Xenoph. and others. It is not to be confounded with the divinely wrought inward state of mental peace, which is denoted by εἰρήνη τοῦ Θεοῦ in Phil. iv. 7; comp. Col. iii. 15. The latter is the subjective correlate of the objective relation of the εἰρήνη, which we have πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, although inseparably combined with the latter.

2 Comp. Dorner, die Rechtfert. durch den Glauben, p. 12 f.

Ver. 2. Δι' οὗ καὶ κ. τ. λ. Confirmation and more precise definition of the preceding διὰ....Ἰησοῦ Χ. The καὶ does not merely append (Stöltzing), but is rather the "also" of corresponding relation, giving prominence precisely to what had here an important practical bearing i.e. as proving the previous διὰ κυρίου κ. τ. λ. Comp. ix. 24; 1 Cor. iv. 5; Phil. iv. 10. The climactic interpretation here (Köllner: "a heightened form of stating the merit of Christ;" comp. Rückert) is open to the objection that the προσαγαγῇ εἰς τ. χάρ. is not something added to or higher than the εἰρήνη, but, on the contrary, the foundation of it. If we were to take καὶ.....καὶ in the sense "as well....as" (Th. Schott, Hofmann), the two sentences, which are not to be placed in special relation to iii. 23, would be made co-ordinate, although the second is the consequence of that which is affirmed in the first. — τὴν προσαγαγῇν] the introduction,1 Xen. Cyrop. vii. 5, 45; Thuc. i. 82, 2; Plut. Mor. p. 1097 E, Lucian, Zeux. 6; and see also on Eph. ii. 18. Through Christ we have had our introduction to the grace, etc., inasmuch as He Himself (comp. 1 Pet. iii. 18) in virtue of His atoning sacrifice which removes the wrath of God, has become our προσαγαγείς, or, as Chrysostom aptly expresses it, μακρὰν ὀντας προσήγαγε. In this case the preposition διὰ, which corresponds with the διὰ in ver. 1, is fully warranted, because Christ has brought us to 1 Προσαγαγῆς ought not to be explained as access (Vulg. accessum, and so most interpreters), but as leading towards, the meaning which the word always has (even in Eph. ii. 18, iii. 12). See Xen. l.c.: τὸν ἐμοῦ φίλον δεμένου προσαγαγῆς. Polybius uses it to express the bringing up of engines against a besieged town, ix. 41, 1, xiv. 10, 9; comp. i. 48, 2; the bringing up of ships to the shore, x. i. 6; the bringing of cattle into the stall, xii. 4, 10. In Herod. ii. 58 also the literal meaning is: a leading up, carrying up in solemn procession. Tholuck and van Hengel have rightly adopted the active meaning in this verse (comp. Weber, vom Zorne Gottes, p. 316); whilst Philippi; Umbrecht, Erdahl, Hofmann (comp. Mehring) abide by the rendering "access." Chrysostom aptly observes on Eph. ii. 18: οὗ γὰρ δεῦτα τοῦ προσήλθειμα, αλλ' Ϝα' αὐτόῦ προσήχθης ὑμεῖς.

grace in His capacity as the divinely appointed and divinely given Mediator. Comp. Winer, p. 354 f. [E. T. 473]. — To τ. προσαγ. ἐσχήκαμεν belongs εἰς τ. χάριν ταύτην; and τῇ πίστει, by means of faith, denotes the subjective medium of τ. προσαγ. ἐσχήκαμεν. On the other hand, Oecumenius, Bos, Wetstein, Michaelis, Reiche, Baumgarten-Crusius take τ. προσαγωγ. absolutely, in the sense of access to God (according to Reiche as a figurative mode of expressing the beginning of grace), and εἰς τὴν χάριν ταύτ. as belonging to τῇ πίστει. In that case we must supply after προσαγ. the words πρὸς τ. Οἰκον from ver. 1 (Eph. ii. 18, iii. 12); and we may with Bos and Michaelis explain προσαγωγὴ by the usage of courts, in accordance with which access to the king was obtained through a προσαγωγεύς, sequester (Lamprid. in Alex. Sév. 4). But the whole of this reading is liable to the objection that πίστει εἰς τὴν χάριν would be an expression without analogy in the N. T. — ἐσχήκαμεν Not: habemus (Luther and many others), nor nactisumus et habemus (most modern interpreters, including Tholuck, Rückert, Winzer, Ewald), but habuimus, namely, when we became Christians. So also de Wette, Philippi, Maier, van Hengel, Hofmann. Comp. 2 Cor. i. 9, ii. 13, vii. 5. The perfect realises as present the possession formerly obtained, as in Plat. Apol. p. 20 D, and see Bernhardy, p. 379. — εἰς τὴν χάριν ταύτ.] The divine grace of which the justified are partakers¹ is conceived as a field of space, into which they have had (ἐσχήκαμεν) introduction through Christ by means of faith, and in which they now have (ἐχομεν) peace with God. — ἐν τῇ ἐστήκαμεν does not refer to τῇ πίστει (Grotius), but to the nearest antecedent, τὴν χάριν, which is also accompanied by the demonstrative: in which we stand. The joyful consciousness of the present, that the possession of grace once entered upon is permanent, suggested the word to the Apostle. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 1; 1 Pet. v. 12. — καὶ καυχώμεθα] may be regarded as a continuation either of the last relative sentence (ἐν ᾗ ἐστὶν, so van Hengel, Ewald, Mehring, Stölting), or of the previous one (δὴ οὖ καὶ κ.τ.λ.), or of the principal sentence (εἰρήνη, ἐξουσίων). The last alone is suggested by the context, because, as ver. 3 shows, a new and independent element in the description of the blessed condition is introduced with καὶ καυχόμεθα. — καυχάσθαι expresses not merely the idea of rejoicing, not merely "the inward elevating consciousness, to which outward expression is not forbidden" (Reiche), but rather the actual glorifying, by which we praise ourselves as privileged ("what the heart is full of, the mouth will utter"). Such is its meaning in all cases. — On ἐπὶ, on the ground of, i.e. over, joined with καυχ. comp. Ps. xlviii. 6; Prov. xxv. 14; Wisd. xvii. 7; Ecclus. xxx. 2. No further example of this use is found in the N. T.; but see Lycurgus in Beck. Aeneid. 275, 4; Diod. S. xvi. 70; and Kühner, II. 1, p. 436. It is therefore unnecessary to isolate καυχόμεθα, so as to make ἐπὶ ἐλπίδι: independent of it (iv. 18; so van Hengel). Comp. on the contrary, the σεμονόθεσθαι ἐπὶ τινι frequent in Greek authors. The variation of the prepositions, ἐπὶ and in ver. 3 εἰς, is not to be imputed to any set purpose; comp. on iii. 20; iii. 25 f. al. — The δόξα τ. Θεοῦ is the glory of God, in which the members of the Messiah's kingdom shall hereafter participate. Comp. 1 Thess. ii. 12; John xvii. 22, also viii. 17; Rev. xxi. 11; 1 John iii. 2; and see Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 376. The reading of the Vulg.: gloriae filiorum Dei, is a gloss that hits the right sense. Reiche and Maier, following Luther and Grotius, take the genitive as a genit. auctoris. But that God is the giver of the δόξα, is self-evident and does not distinctly characterize it. Rücker urges here also his exposition of iii. 23; comp. Ewald. But see on that passage. Flatt takes it as the approval of God (iii. 23), but the ελπίς, pointing solely to the glorious future, is decisive against this view. It is aptly explained by Melancthon: "quod Deus sit nos gloria sua aeterna ornaturus, i. e. vita aeterna et communicatione sui ipsius."

¹ For to nothing else than the grace experienced in justification can εἰς τ. χάρ. τ. be referred in accordance with the context (δικαιωθέντες)—not to the blessings of Christianity generally (Chrysostom and others, including Flatt and Winzer; comp. Rückert and Köllner); not to the Gospel (Fritzsche); and not to the ἐφημ (Mehring, Stölting), which would yield a tautology. — The demonstrative ταύτῃ implies something of triumph. Compare Photius. The joyful consciousness of the Apostle is still full of the high blessing of grace, which he has just expressed in the terms δικαιωθέντες and δικαιωθέντες.

Vv. 3, 4. Oὐ μὸνον ἐ] scil. καυχόμεθα ἐπὶ ἐλπίδι τῆς δόξης

1 See a climax of description, similar in point of form in the Tractat. ἀριθμ. 9, 15 (see Surenghi. III. 309): "Providentia parit alacritatem, alacritas innocentiam, innocentia puritatem, puritas abstinentiam, abstinentia sanctitatem, sanctitas modestiam, modestia timorem, timor sceleris pietatem, pietas spiritum sanctum, 226 THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

τ. Θεοῦ. Examples of the usage (ver. 11, viii. 23, ix. 10; 2 Cor. viii. 19) may be seen in Kypke, II. p. 165; Vigerus, ed. Herm. p. 543; Heind. and Stallb. ad Phaed. p. 107 B. Comp. Legg. vi. p. 752 A; Men. p. 71 B.— ev ταῖς θλίψις of the tribulations (affecting us), as commonly in the N. T. ev is connected with καυχάσθαι (ver. 11; 2 Cor. x. 15; Gal. vi. 13). Comp. Senec. de prov. iv. 4: “gaudent magni viri rebus adversis non aliter quam fortes milites bellis triumphant.” As to the ground of this Christian καυχάσθαι, see the sequel. On the thing itself, in which the believer’s victory over the world makes itself apparent (viii. 35 ff.), comp. 2 Cor. xi. 30, xii. 9; Matth. v. 10, 12; Acts v. 41; 1 Pet. iv. 12 f. Observe further, how with the joyful assurance of ample experience the triumphant discourse proceeds from the ἐλπίς τῆς δόξης, as subject-matter of the καυχάσθαι, to the direct opposite (ἐν ταῖς θλίψις), which may be likewise matter of glorying. Others (Glöckler, Baumgarten-Crusius, Stölting) erroneously render ἐν as in, which the contrast, requiring the object, does not permit, since ἐν τ. Θ. is not opposed to the ἐν ὑμῖν in ver. 2.— ὑπομονῆς endurance (“in ratione bene considerata stabilis et perpetua permanio,” Cic. de inv. ii. 54), namely, in the Christian faith and life. Comp. ii. 7; Matth. x. 22, xxiv. 13. Paul lays down the ἡ θλίψις ὑπομονῆς κατεργάζεται unconditionally, because he is speaking of those who have been justified ἐκ πίστεως, in whose case the reverse cannot take place without sacrifice of their faith.— δοκιμής] triedness, 2 Cor. ii. 9, viii. 2, ix. 13; Phil. ii. 22, “quae ostendit fidem non esse simulatam, sed veram, vivam et ardentem,” Melancthon. Triedness is produced through endurance (not made known, as Reiche thinks); for whosoever does not endure thereby becomes ἀδόκιμος. There is here no inconsistency with James i. 3. See Huther. — ἐλπίδα] namely, τῆς δόξης τ. Θεοῦ, as is self-evident after ver. 2. The hope, it is true, already exists before the δοκιμή; nevertheless, the more the Christian has become tried, the more also will hope (which the ἀδόκιμος loses) consciously possess him. Comp. James i. 12. Hope is therefore present, and yet withal is produced by the emergence of the δοκιμή, just as faith may be et spiritus sanctus resurrectionem mortuorum.” In contrast with this, how fervent, succinct, and full of life is the climax in our passage! For other chains of climactic succession, see viii. 29 ff., x. 14 ff.; 2 Pet. i. 5 ff.
present, and yet be still further produced through something emerging (John ii. 11). Comp. Lipsius, Rechtfertigungsbl. p. 207 f. — Observe further, how widely removed from all fanatical pride in suffering is the reason assigned with conscious clearness for the Christian \( \epsilon \lambda \pi \iota \zeta \) uniformly meant and designated as the highest subjective blessing of the justified person, who is assured of the glorious consummation (not in ver. 3 f. as conduct and only in ver. 2 as blessing, as Hofmann thinks). Comp. the \( \eta \delta \varepsilon i a \) \( \epsilon \lambda \pi \iota \zeta \), which \( \alpha e i \pi \alpha r e s e t i \), in contrast to the \( \xi \eta \nu \nu \eta t a k a k \iota \) \( \epsilon \lambda \pi \iota \delta \zeta \) in Plato, Rep. p. 331 A.

Ver. 5. \( \eta \delta \varepsilon i a \) \( \epsilon \lambda \pi \iota \zeta \) not, "the hope thus established" (Oecumenius, Olshausen, Stolting), but, in accordance with the analogy of the preceding elements, and without any excluding limitation, the hope (of glory), as such, consequently the Christian hope. This deceives no one who has it. It is self-evident, and the proof that follows gives information as to the fact, that this is uttered in the consciousness and out of the inward assurance of real living justification by faith. — \( \nu \) \( \kappa a t a i s c h i v e i \) makedth not ashamed, i.e. "habet certissimum salutis (of the thing hoped for) exitum," Calvin, as will be shown at the judgment. "Spes erit res," Bengel. Comp. ix. 33; Ecclus. ii. 10; Bar. vi. 39; Ps. xxii. 6. Comp. also Plat. Conv. p. 183 E, \( \lambda \rho \gamma \omicron o u k a i \nu \tau o s \chi e t e i s \kappa a t a i s c h i v a s \). Polit. p. 268 D; Dem. 314, 9. The expression of triumphant certainty in the present is not to be removed by changing it into the future (Hofmann, who would read \( \kappa a t a i s c h i v e i \)). — \( \omicron \) \( \eta \) \( \alpha \gamma a t \eta \tau \). The divine love, effectually present in the heart through the Holy Spirit, is to the Christian consciousness of faith the sure pledge that we do not hope in vain and so as to be put to shame at last, but that God will on the contrary fulfill our hope. \( \Theta e o u \) is the genitive of the subject; the love of God to us (so most expositors following Origen, Chrysostom and Luther), not of the object: love to God (Theodoret, Augustine, Anselm and others; including Klee, Glöckler, Umbreit, Hofmann, Stölting), which appears from ver. 8 as incorrect.¹ Comp. viii. 39; 2 Cor. xiii. 13. As respects the justified, the wrath of God has given place to His love, which has its presence in them through the Spirit, its dwelling and sphere of action in believing hearts; and thus it is to them, like the Spirit Himself, ἀρπαγωγὸν of the hoped-for δόξα, 2 Cor. i. 22, v. 5.—ἐκκένωσαν] Figure for abundant, living effective communication (Acts ii. 17, x. 45). The idea of abundance is already implied in the sensuous image of outpouring, but may also, as in Tit. iii. 6, be specially expressed. Comp. generally Suicer, Thes. I. p. 1075.—ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις] Trans. for abundant, living effective communication. The idea of abundance is already implied in the sensuous image of outpouring, but may also, as in Tit. iii. 6, be specially expressed. Comp. LXX. Ps. xlv. 2.—διὰ πνεύματος κ.τ.λ.] Through the agency of the Spirit bestowed on us, who is the principle of the real self-communication of God, the divine love is also poured out in our hearts; see viii. 15, 16; Gal. iv. 6.

2 As is well said by Calovius: "quaes charitas effusa in nobis non qua in- haecionem subjectivam, sed qua manifestationem et qua effectum vel sensum ejusdem in cordibus nostris effusum." — Comp. Melancthon (against Osiander).

Ver. 6. Objective actual proof of this ἀγάπη τ. Θεοῦ, which through the Spirit fills our heart. Comp. as to the argument viii. 39. "For Christ, when we were yet weak, at the right time died for the ungodly."—ἐτί] can in no case belong to ἀπέδανε (Stölting), but neither does it give occasion for any conjecture (Fritzsche: ἦ τί). Paul should perhaps have written: ἐτί γὰρ ὄντων ἡμῶν ἁμαρτονῦν Χριστός κ.τ.λ., or: Χριστός γὰρ ὄντων ἡμῶν ἁμαρτονῦν ἐτί κ.τ.λ. (hence the second ἐτί in Lachmann); but amidst the collision of emphasis between ἐτί and the subject both present to his mind, he has expressed himself in exactly, so that now ἐτί seems to belong to Χριστός, and yet in sense necessarily belongs, as in ver. 8, to ὄντων κ.τ.λ.² Comp. Plat. Rep. p.

¹ Among Catholics this explanation of active love was favoured by the doctrine of the justitia infusa.
² Van Hengel decides in favour of the reading with the double ἐτί (Griesbach, Lachmann, see the critical remarks); he thinks that Paul had merely wished to say: ἐτί γὰρ Χριστός κ.τ.λ. ὡς ἁμαρτονῦν ἡμῶν κ.τ.λ. Mehring also follows Lachmann's reading. He thinks that Paul intended to write, with emphatic repetition of the ἐτί: ἐτί γὰρ Χριστός, ἐτί ἐπεξεργάζεται, but interrupted the sentence by the insertion of ἡμῶν ἡμῶν κ.τ.λ. Ewald, holding εἰς γὰρ or εἰς to be the original (see critical remarks), and then reading ἐτί after ἁμαρτονῦν, finds in ver. 9 the apodosis of ver. 6, and takes vv. 7, 8 as a parenthesis. Comp. also Usteri, Lehrbegr. p. 118. Th. Schott also follows the reading εἰς γὰρ (and after ἁμαρτονῦν κ.τ.λ.), but finds the apodosis so early as ver. 6, by supplying after ἡμῶν τ.τ.τ.: ἁμαρτονῦν κ.τ.λ.; whereas Hofmann (in his Schriften. II. p. 347), following the same 503 E: ἐτί δὴ ὁ τότε παρείμεν νῦν λέγομεν; p. 363 D: οἷ δ᾽ ἐτί τούτων μακροτέρους ἀποτείνοντι μισθούς (where ἐτί ought to stand before μισθ.). Achill. Tat. v. 18: ἔγω δὲ ἐτί σοι ταῦτα γράφω παρθένος, and see Winer, p. 515 [E. T. 692]. Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 333 f.; and Fritzsche in loc. To get rid of this irregularity, Seb. Schmid, Oeder, Koppe, and Flatt have taken ετί as in-supra, and that either in the sense of adeo (Koppe, also Schrader), which however it never means, not even in Luke xiv. 26; or so that a “for further, for moreover” (see Baeumlein, Partik. p. 119) introduces a second argument for ἕ δὲ εἴπις οὐ κατασχ. (Flatt, also Baumgarten-Crusius). Against this latter construction ver. 8 is decisive, from which it is clear that vv. 6-8 are meant to be nothing else than the proof of the ἀγάπη τ. Θεοῦ. On ἐτί itself, with the imperfect participle in the sense of tunc adhuc, comp. Ellendt, Lex. Soph. I. p. 693. It indicates the continued existence, which the earlier condition still had; Baeumlein, p. 118; Schneider, ad Plat. Rep. p. 449 C. — ὅντων ἡμ. ἀσθενῶν] when we were still (ἐτί) without strength, still had not the forces of the true spiritual life, which we could only receive through the Holy Ghost. The sinfulness is purposely described as weakness (need of help), in order to characterise it as the motive for the love of God interfering to save. The idea of disease (Theodoret: τῆς ἀσεθείας περικειμένων τῆς νόσου; comp. Theophylact, Umbreit and others), or that of minority (van Hengel), is not suggested by anything in the context.— κατὰ καιρὸν] may either (1) be rendered according to the time, according to the nature of the time, so that with Erasmus, Luther, Flacius, Castalia, Pareus, Seb. Schmid, also Schrader and Th. Schott, it would reading, like Ewald, made ver. 9 fill the place of the apodosis, but now prefers to read ἐτὶ at the beginning as well as also after ἀσθενῶν, and to punctuate thus: ἐτὶ γ. Χριστὸς ὤν ἡμῶν ἀσθενῶν, ἐτὶ κατὰ καιρὸν ὑπ. ἀσθ. ἀκέφ. With this reading Hofmann thinks that the second ἐτὶ begins the sentence anew, so that with Χριστὸς ἀπέβαλεν an ἐτὶ stands twice, the first referring to ὄντων ἡμῶν ἀσθενῶν, and the second to ὑπὲρ ἀσθενῶν. But it is self-evident that thus the difficulty is only doubled, because ἐτὶ would both times be erroneously placed, which would yield, especially in the case of the second ἐτὶ, a strange and in fact intolerable confusion, since there would stand just beside it a definition of time (κατὰ καιρὸν), to which nevertheless the word elsewhere, so frequently used with definitions of time, is not intended to apply—a fact which is not to be disguised by subtleties. Märcker also would read ἐτὶ twice, but render the first ἐτὶ “moreover,” which, however, would be without reference in the text. have to be connected with ἀσθ. ;\(^1\) or (2) it may belong to ἐπερ ἀσβ. ἐπέθανε, and mean, in accordance with the context, either at the appointed time (Gal. iv. 4), as it is here taken usually, also by de Wette, Tholuck, Philippi, Maier, Baumgarten-Crusius; or (3) at the proper time (see Kypke; comp. Pind. Isthm. ii. 32; Herod. i. 30; Lucian, Philops. 21; LXX. Is. lx. 22; Job v. 16; xxxix. 18; Jer. v. 24), the same as ἐν καιρῷ, ἐς καιρόν, ἐπὶ καιρῷ; Phavorinus: κατὰ τὸν ἐκκαιρόν κ. προσήκοντα καιρόν; and so the bare καιρόν (Bernhardt, p. 117), equivalent to καιρῶν, the opposite of ἀπὸ καιρῶν and παρὰ καιρῶν. In the first case, however, κ. κ. would either assign to the ἀσθ. an inappropriate excuse, which would not even be true, since the ἀσθενεία has always obtained since the fall (ver. 13); or, if it was meant directly to disparage the pre-christian age (Flacius, "ante omnem nostram pietatem," comp. Stolting and Hofmann), it would characterise it much too weakly. In the second case an element not directly occasioned by the connection (proof of God's love) would present itself. Therefore the third interpretation alone: at the right time (so Ewald and van Hengel) is to be retained. The death of Jesus for the ungodly took place at the proper season, because, had it not taken place then, they would, instead of the divine grace, have experienced the final righteous outbreak of divine wrath, seeing that the time of the ἐκκαιρία, iii. 25, and of the ἀνοχή of God had come to an end. Comp. the idea of the πληρωμα τῶν καιρῶν, Eph. i. 10; Gal. iv. 4. Now or never was the time for saving the ἀσβείας; now or never was the καιρός δεκτός, 2 Cor. vi. 2; and God's love did not suffer the right time for their salvation to elapse, but sent Christ to die for them the sacrificial death of atonement.\(^2\) — ἐπερ] for, for the benefit of.

\(^1\) Comp. Stolting: "conformably to the time," i.e. as it was suitable for the time, namely, the time of ungodliness. Similarly Hofmann, "in consideration of the time," which was a time of godlessness, "without the fear of God on the part of individuals making any change thereon."

\(^2\) According to my former explanation of the passage the meaning would be, that, if Christ had appeared and died later, they would have perished unredeemed in their ἀσθενεία, and would have had no share in the act of atonement. But this view is untenable; because Paul cannot have looked on the divine proof of love, given in the redeeming death of Christ, otherwise than in a quite general light, i.e. as given to all mankind, as it appears everywhere in the N. T. since John iii. 16. Comp. Philippi, with whose view I now in substance concur, although in καὶ καιρός, by explaining it as "seasonably," I find more directly an element of the love, which the context proposes to exhibit.
Comp. Eur. Alc. 701: μὴ θυσίαν ὑπὲρ τοῦ· ἀνδρὸς οὐδέ εἰγὼ πρὸ σοῦ, Ἰπ. A. 1389; Soph. Track. 705; Ἀj. 1290; Plat. Conv. p. 179 B: ἐθέλησασα μόνη ὑπὲρ τοῦ αὐτῆς ἀνδρὸς ἀποθανεῖν; Dem. 690, 18; Xen. Cyr. vii. 4, 9 f.; Isocr. iv. 77; Dio. Cass lxiv. 13; Ecclus. xxix. 15: ἔδωκε γὰρ τὸν ψυχὶν αὐτοῦ ὑπὲρ σοῦ; 2 Macc. vi. 28, vii. 9, viii. 21; comp. also Ignatius, ad Rom. 4: ὑπὲρ θεοῦ ἀποθανεῖσκα.¹ So in all passages where there is mention of the object of Christ's death. Luke xxii. 19, 20; Rom. viii. 32, xiv. 15; 1 Cor. i. 13; 2 Cor. v. 14; Gal. iii. 13; Eph. v. 1; 1 Thess. v. 9, 10; 1 Tim. ii. 6; Tit. ii. 14. See also Ritschl in the Jahrb. für Deutsche Theol. 1863, p. 242. That Paul did not intend by ὑπὲρ to convey the meaning instead of, is shown partly by the fact, that while he indeed sometimes exchanges it for the synonymous (Bremi, ad Dem. Ol. iii. 5, p. 188, Goth.) περί (Gal. i. 4, like Matth. xxvi. 20; Mark xiv. 25), he does not once use instead of it the unambiguous ἀντί (Matth. xx. 28), which must nevertheless have suggested itself to him most naturally; and partly by the fact, that with ὑπὲρ as well as with περί he puts not invariably the genitive of the person, but sometimes that of the thing (ἀμαρτήσων), in which case it would be impossible to explain the preposition by instead of (viii. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 3). It is true that he has certainly regarded the death of Jesus as an act furnishing the satisfactio vicaria, as is clear from the fact that this bloody death was accounted by him as an expiatory sacrifice (iii. 25; Eph. v. 2; Steiger on 1 Pet. p. 342 f.), comp. αὐτίνυτρον in 1 Tim. ii. 6; but in no passage has he expressed the substitutionary relation through the preposition. On the contrary his constant conception is this: the sacrificial death of Jesus, taking the place of the punishment of men, and satisfying divine justice, took place as such in commodum (ὑπὲρ, περί) of men, or—which is the same thing—on account of their sins (in gratiam), in order to expiate them (περί or ὑπὲρ ἀμαρτήσων). This we hold against Flatt, Olshausen, Winzer, Reithmayr, Bising, who take ὑπὲρ as loco. That ὑπὲρ must at least be understood as loco in Gal. iii. 13; 2 Cor. v. 14 (notwithstanding ver. 15); 1 Pet. iii. 18 (Rückert, Fritzsche, Philippi), is not correct. See on Gal. l.c. and 2 Cor. l.c.; Philem. 13 is not here a case in point. — ἀρεβὼν

¹ Comp. the compound ὑπερθανασκευ with genit., so frequent especially in Euripides.
Paul did not write \( \text{ἔμων} \), in order that after the need of help (\( \text{ἀσέβων} \)) the unworthiness might also be made apparent; \( \text{ἀσέβων} \) is the category; to which the \( \text{ἔμεις} \) have belonged, and the strong expression (comp. iv. 5) is selected, in order now, through the contrast, to set forth the more prominently the divine love in its very strength.

Vv. 7, 8. Illustrative description (\( \text{γὰρ} \)) of this dying \( \text{ὑπὲρ \ ἀσέβων} \) as the practical demonstration of the divine love (ver. 8). Observe the syllogistic relation of ver. 8 to ver. 7; which is apparent through the emphatic \( \text{ἐαυτῶ} \).—Scarce, namely, for a righteous man (not to mention for \( \text{ἀσέβεις} \)) will any one die. This very contrast to the \( \text{ἀσέβεις} \) completely shuts out the neuter interpretation of \( \text{δίκαιον} \) ("pro re justa," Melancthon, comp. Ols-hausen, Jerome, Erasmus, Annot. Luther). On account of the same contrast, consequently because of the parallel between \( \text{ὑπὲρ \ τὸν \ ἀγαθὸν} \) and \( \text{ὑπὲρ \ δίκαιον} \), and because the context generally has to do only with the dying for persons, \( \text{τὸν \ ἀγαθὸν} \) also is to be taken not as neuter,\(^1\) but as masculine; and the article denotes the definite \( \text{ἀγαθὸς \ who \ is \ in \ question} \) in the case concerned. Since, moreover, an essential distinction between \( \text{δικαῖος} \) and \( \text{ἀγαθός} \) (comp. on the contrary Matth. v. 45; further, \( \text{ἀνὴρ \ ἀγαθός \ κ. \ δίκαιος} \) in Luke xxiii. 50; \( \text{ἡ \ ἐντολὴ \ ἀγία \ κ. \ δίκαια \ κ. \ ἀγαθὴ} \) in Rom. vii. 12; \( \text{ὁ \ δίκαιος \ ἡμῖν \ ἀναπέφανται \ ὅν \ ἀγαθὸς \ τε \ καὶ \ σοφός} \), Aesch. Sept. 576; Eur. Hipp. 427; Thes. fr. viii, 2) is neither implied in the context, where on the contrary the contrast to both is \( \text{ἀσέβων} \) and \( \text{ἀμαρτωλῶν} \), nor is in the least hinted at by Paul, no explanation is admissible that is based on an essential difference of idea in the two words; such as that \( \text{τὸν \ ἀγαθὸν} \) should be held to express something different from or higher than \( \text{δίκαιον} \). Therefore the following is the only explanation that presents itself as conformable to the words and context: After Paul has said that one will hardly die for a righteous man, he wishes to add, by way of confirmation (\( \text{γὰρ} \)), that cases of the undertaking such a death might possibly occur, and expresses this in the form: for perhaps for the good man one even takes it upon him to die. Thus the previously asserted \( \text{ὑπὲρ \ δίκαιον \ τις \ ἀποθα}-\begin{footnote}
\(^1\) Köster also in the \text{Stud. u. Krit. 1854, p. 312, has taken both words as neuter: "hardly does one die for others for the sake of their (mere) right; sooner at all events for the sake of the manifestly good, which they have."}
\end{footnote}
vetrai, although one assents to it vix et aegre, is yet said with reason,—it may perhaps occur. Paul has not however written τοῦ δικαιου in the second clause of the verse, as he might have done, but introduces τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ, and prefixes it, in order now to make still more apparent, in the interest of the contrast, the category of the quality of the person for whom one may perhaps venture this self-sacrifice. This is substantially the view arrived at by Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Erasmus, in the Paraphr., Beza, Calvin (“rarissimum sane inter homines exemplum exstat, ut pro justo mori quis sustineat, quamquam Mūd nonnunquam accidere possit”), Castalio, Calovius, and others; recently again by Fritzsche (also Oltramare and Reithmayr); formerly also by Hofmann (in his Schriftbew. II. 1, p. 348). It has been wrongly alleged that it makes the second half of the verse superfluous (de Wette) and weakening (Kollner and Rückert); on the contrary, in granting what may certainly now and again occur, it the more emphatically paves the way for the contrast which is to follow, that God has caused Christ to die for quite other persons than the SiKalovs and ayadovs—for us sinners. Groundless also is the objection (of van Hengel), that in Paul’s writings the repeated τις always denotes different subjects; the indefinite τις, one, any one, may indeed even here represent in the concrete application different subjects or the same. Comp. 2 Cor. xi.20. And, even if δικαιου and τοῦ ἀγαθου be regarded as two distinct conceptions, may not the second τις be the same with the first? But the perfect accordance with the words and context, which is only found in the exposition offered, shuts out every other. Among the explanations thus excluded are: (1) Those which take τοῦ ἀγαθου as neuter, like the rendering of Jerome, Erasmus, Annot. (“bonitatem”), Luther, Melancthon (“pro bona et suavi re, i. e. incitati cupiditate aut opinione magnae utilitatis”), and more recently Rückert (“for the good, i. e. for what he calls his highest good”), Mehring (“for for his own advantage some one perhaps risks even life”); now also Hofmann (“what is in itself and really good .... a moral value, for which, when it is endangered, one sacrifices life, in order not to let it perish”).—(2) Those explanations which indeed take τοῦ ἀγαθου properly as masculine, but yet give self-invented distinctions of idea in reference to δικαιου; namely (a), the exposition, that ὁ ἀγαθὸς means the benefactor: hardly does any one die for a righteous man (who stands in no closer relation to him); for for his benefactor one dares perchance (out of gratitude) to die. So Flacius, Knatchbull, Estius, Hammond, Clericus, Heumann, Wolf, and others; including Koppe, Tholuck, Winer, Benecke, Reiche, Glöckler, Krehl, Maier, Umbreit, Bisping, Lechler and Jatho. They take the article with ἀγαθὸν as: the benefactor whom he has, against which nothing can be objected (Bernhardy, p. 315). But we may object that we cannot at all see why Paul should not have expressed benefactor by the very current and definite term ἐὔργετης; and that ἀγαθὸς must have obtained the specific sense of beneficence (as in Matth. xx. 15; Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 4, al. ap. Dorvill. ad Charit. p. 722; and Tholuck in loc.) from the context—a want, which the mere article cannot supply (in opposition to Reiche). Hence, in order to gain for ἀγαθὸς the sense beneficent in keeping with the context, δίκαιος would have to be taken in the narrower sense as just (with Wetstein and Olshausen), so as to yield a climax from the just man to the benevolent (who renders more than the mere obligation of right binds him to do). An apt illustration of this would be Cicero, de off. iii. 15: "Si vir bonus is est, qui prodest quibus potest, nocet nemini, recte justum virum, bonum non facile reperiemus." But in ver. 8 there is no reference to ἀγαθὸς in the sense assumed; and the narrower sense of δίκαιος is at variance with the contrasting ἀμαρτωλῶν in ver. 8, which demands for δίκ. precisely the wider meaning (righteous). Besides the prominence which Paul intends to give to the love of God, which caused Christ to die for sinners, while a man hardly dies for a δίκαιος, is weakened just in proportion as the sense of δίκαιος is narrowed. The whole interpretation is a forced one, inconsistent with the undefined τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ itself as well as with the entire context. — (b) No better are the explanations which find in τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ a greater degree of morality than in δίκαιον, consequently a man more worthy of having life sacrificed for him. So, but with what varied distinctions! especially Ambrosiaster (the δίκαιος is such exercitio, the ἀγαθὸς natura), Bengel (δίκ. homo innoxius, ὁ ἀγαθὸς, omnibus pietatis numeris absolutus

1 Clav. I. p. 693. "Vix accidit, ut quis suam vitam profundat pro justissimis; pro eo tamen, qui alicui valde est utilis, forsitan mori non recuset."
... v.g. pater patriae), Michaelis, Olshausen, Kollner (δίκ.: legally just, ἁγαθ.: perfectly good and upright), de Wette (δίκ.: irreproachable, ἁγαθ.: the noble), Philippi and Th. Schott (both substantially agreeing with de Wette), also van Hengel (δίκ.: probus coram Deo, i.e. venerabilis, ἁγαθ.: bonus in hominum oculis, i.e. amabilis), and Ewald, according to whom δίκ. is he "who, in a definite case accused unto death, is nevertheless innocent in that particular case," while the ἁγαθὸς is "he, who not only in one such individual suit, but predominantly in his whole life, is purely useful to others and guiltless in himself;"¹ comp. Stöltting, who finds in δίκ. the honest upright man, and in ἁγαθὸς him whom we personally esteem and love. But all these distinctions of idea are artificially created and brought in without any hint from the context.²— On τάγα, fortasse, perhaps indeed, expressing possibility not without doubt, comp. Xen. Anab. v. 2, 17; Philem. 15; Wisd. xiii. 6, xiv. 19. In classic authors most frequently τὰ ἵπται τόμος προσανεῖν, he has even the courage,³ can prevail upon himself, audet. The καὶ is the also of the corresponding relation. In presence of the good man, he ventures also to die for him. — We may add, that the words from ὑπὲρ γὰρ τοῦ ἁγαθοῦ down to ἀποθανεῖν are not to be put (with Lachmann) in parenthesis, since, though they form only a subordinate confirmatory clause, they cause no interruption in the construction. — Ver. 8. δὲ] Not antithetical ("such are men, but such is God," Mehring), as if the sentence began with ὅ δὲ Ὁχίς, but rather carrying it onward, namely, to the middle term of the syllogism (the minor proposition), from which then the conclusion, ver. 9, is designed to result. — ὅποιος ἔστω αὐτοῦ proves, as in iii. 5. The accomplished fact of the atoning death is

¹ Ewald supposes an allusion to cases like these in 1 Sam. xiv. 45, xx. 17; but that it is also possible, that Paul might have in view Gentile examples that were known to himself and the readers.
² Kunze, in the Stud. u. Krit. 1850, p. 407 ff., also rightly recognises this; but explains the second half, contrary to the words, as if the proposition were expressed conditionally (et kal), "for if even some one lightly ventures to die for the good man, still however God proves his love," etc. Comp. Erasm. Paraphr. — Märtzer explains it in the sense of one friend dying for another; and suggests that Paul was thinking of the example of Damon and Pythias.
conceived according to its abiding effect of setting forth clearly the divine love; hence the present. The emphasis indeed lies in the first instance on πνειστης (for from this proof as such a further inference is then to be drawn), but passes on strengthened to ῥή ἐαυτοῦ, because it must be God's own love, authenticating itself in the death of Christ, that gives us the assurance to be expressed in ver. 9. God Himself, out of His love for men, has given Christ to a death of atonement; iii. 24, viii. 32; Eph. ii. 4; 2 Thess. ii.
16; John iii. 16; 1 John iv. 10 et al. To find in τ. ἐαυτοῦ ἀγαπ.
the contrast to our love towards God (Hofmann; comp. on ver. 5) is quite opposed to the context, which exhibits the divine demonstration of love in Christ's deed of love. That is the clear relation of ver. 8 to ver. 6 f., from which then the blessed inference is drawn in ver. 9. Hence we are not to begin a new connection with συνι-στης δὲ κ.π.λ. (Hofmann, "God lets us know, and gives us to experience that He loves us; and this He does, because Christ, etc.). The δὲ cannot be the motive of God for His συνιστής κ.π.λ., since He has already given Christ out of love; it is meant on the contrary to specify the actual ground of the knowledge of the divine proof of love (= εἰς ἐκείνο, δὲ, comp. on 2 Cor. i. 18; John ii. 18). — εἰς ἡμᾶς] belongs to συνιστ. — ἓτι ἀμαρτ. δικτ. ἡμ.]
For only through the atoning death of Christ have we become δικασθέντες. See ver. 9.

Ver. 9. To prove that hope maketh not ashamed (ver. 5), Paul had laid stress on the possession of the divine love in the heart
(ver. 5); then he had proved and characterised this divine love itself from the death of Christ (vv. 6-8); and he now again infers, from this divine display of love, from the death of Christ, that the hoped-for eternal salvation is all the more assured to us. — πολλαὶ ὡν μᾶλλον] The conclusion does not proceed a minori ad majus (Estius and many, including Mehring), but, since the point now turns on the carrying out of the divine act of atonement, a majori (vv. 6-8) ad minus (ver. 9). — πολλαὶ μᾶλλον expresses the enhancement of certainty, as in vv. 15-17: much less therefore can it be doubted that, etc.; νῦν stands in reference to ἓτι ἀμαρτωλῶν δικτοῦ ἡμῶν in ver. 8. — σωθήσωμεθα ἀπὸ τ. ὁργῆς] we shall be rescued from the divine wrath (1 Thess. i. 10; comp. Matth. iii. 7), so that the latter, which issues forth at the last judgment (ii 5, iii. 5), does not affect us. Comp. Winer,
p. 577 [E. T. 743]; Acts ii. 40. This negative expression for the attainment of the hoped-for δόξα renders the inference more obvious and convincing. For the positive expression see 2 Tim. iv. 18. — δι' αυτοῦ] i.e. through the operation of the exalted Christ, ἐν τῷ ξημέρῳ αὐτοῦ, ver. 10. — Faith, as the ληστικὸν of justification, is understood as a matter of course (ver. 1), but is not mentioned here, because only what has been accomplished by God through Christ is taken into consideration. If faith were in the judgment of God the anticipation of moral perfection (but see note on i. 17), least of all could it have been left unmentioned. Observe also how Paul has justification in view as a unity, without different degrees or stages.

Ver. 10. More special development (γάρ, namely) of ver. 9. — ἐξ θερείου] namely, of God, as is clear from κατηκόλασεν. τῷ Θεῷ. But it is not to be taken in an active sense (hostile to God, as by Rückert, Baur, Reithmayr, van Hengel, Mehring, Ritschl in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1863, p. 515 f.; Weber, vom Zorne Gottes, p. 293, and others); for Christ's death did not remove the enmity of men against God, but, as that which procured their pardon on the part of God, it did away with the enmity of God against men, and thereupon the cessation of the enmity of men towards God ensued as the moral consequence brought about by faith. And, with that active conception, how could Paul properly have inferred his ἄγατον Θεόν, k. t. l., since in point of fact the certainty of the σωθησόμεθα is based on our standing in friendship (grace) with God, and not on our being friendly towards God? Hence the passive explanation alone is correct (Calvin and others, including Reiche, Fritzschke, Tholuck, Krehl, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Philippi, Hofmann): enemies of God, i.e. those against whom the holy θεοσεχοπία, the ὀργη of God on account of sin, is directed; θεοσευγοίεις, i. 30; τέκνα ὀργῆς, Eph. ii. 3. Comp. xi. 28; and see on Col. i. 21; comp. Pfleiderer in Hilgenfeld's Zeitschr. 1872, p. 182. This does not contradict the ἄγατον Θεόν praised in ver. 8 (as Rückert objects), since the very arrangement, which God made by the death of Jesus for abandoning His enmity against sinful men without detriment to His holiness, was the highest proof of His love for us (not for our sins).—Consequently κατηλλαγόμεν and καταλλαγέντες must also be taken not actively, but passively: reconciled with God, so that He is no longer hostile towards us, but has on the contrary, on account of the death of His (beloved) Son, abandoned His wrath against us, and we, on the other hand, have become partakers in His grace and favour; for the positive assertion (comp. ver. 1 f.), which is applicable to all believing individuals (ver. 8), must not be weakened into the negative and general conception “that Christians have not God against them” (Hofmann). See on Col. i. 21 and on 2 Cor. v. 18. Tittmann's distinction between διάλλαττεν and καταλλαττεν (see on Matth. v. 24) is as arbitrary as that of Meh-ring, who makes the former denote the outward and the latter the inward reconciliation. Against this view, comp. also Philli's Glaubenslehre, II. 2, p. 270 ff.—ἐν τῷ ξοφῶν αὐτοῦ] by His life; more precise specification of the import of δι' αὐτοῦ in ver. 9; therefore not “cum vita ejus simus participes” (van Hengel, comp. Ewald). The death of Jesus effected our reconciliation; all the less can His exalted life leave our deliverance unfinished. The living Christ cannot leave what His death effected without final success. This however is accomplished not merely through His intercession, viii. 34 (Fritzsche, Baumgarten-Crusius), but also through His whole working in His kingly office for His believers up to the completion of His work and kingdom, 1 Cor. xv. 22 ff.

Ver. 11. Οὐ μόνον δὲ] Since καυχῶμενοι cannot stand for the finite tense (as, following Luther, Beza and others, Tholuck and Philippi still would have it) οὐ μόνον δὲ cannot be supplemented by σωθησόμεθα (Fritzsche, Krehl, Reithmayr, Winer, p. 329, 543 [E. T. 441, 729], following Chrysostom), so as to make Paul say:
we shall be not only saved (actually in itself), but also saved in such a way that we glory, etc. Moreover, the present καυ-χᾶσθαι could not supply any modal definition at all of the future σωθησόμεθα. No, the participle καυχόμενος compels us to conceive as supplied to the elliptical οὐ μόνον δὲ (comp. on ver. 3) the previous participle καταλλαγέντες (Köllner, Baumgarten-Crusius, Hofmann; formerly also Fritzsche); every other expedient is arbitrary.¹

¹ Most arbitrary of all is the view of Mehring, that οὕ μόνον δὲ refers back to ἐν τῷ ξοφῶν αὐτοῦ; and that Paul would say: not merely on the life of Christ do we place our hope, but also on the fact that we now glory in our unity with God (I). Th. Schott refers it to σωθησόμεθα, but seeks to make καυχῶμενοι suitable participles answer to each other, is confirmed by the concluding refrain: δι' οὗ νῦν τ. κατάλληλ. ἐλάβοντος, which is an echo of the καταλληλαγήντες understood with οὗ μόνον δέ. Accordingly we must render: not merely however as reconciled, but also as those who glory, etc. Thus the meaning is brought out, that the certainty of the σωθήσεσθαι εν τ. ζωή αὐτοῦ (ver. 10) is not only based on the objective ground of the accomplished reconciliation, but has also subjectively its corresponding vital expression in the καυχάσθαι εν τῷ θεῷ κ.τ.λ., in which the lofty feeling of the Christian's salvation reveals itself. — εν τῷ θεῷ Luther's gloss is apt: "that God is ours, and we are His, and that we have in all confidence all blessings in common from Him and with Him." That is the bold and joyful triump of those sure of salvation. — διὰ τ. κυρίου κ.τ.λ.] This glorying is brought about through Christ, because He is the author of our new relation to God; hence: δι' οὗ νῦν τ. κατάλληλ. ἐλάβοντος. The latter is that κατηλλαγμέν of ver. 10 in its subjective reception which has taken place by faith. — νῦν is to be taken here (differently from ver. 9) in contrast, not to pre-Christian times (Stölting), but to the future glory, in reference to which the reconciliation received in the present time (continuing from the conversion of the subjects of it to Christ) is conceived as its actual ground of certainty.

²

Vv. 12-19. Parallel drawn between the salvation in Christ and the ruin that has come through Adam. — Εἰ πῶς, διπαρακολουθεῖν ἡμᾶς ὁ Χριστός, ἀνατρέπει εἰπὶ τὴν φύσαν τοῦ κακοῦ, τὴν ἁμαρτίαν καὶ τὸν θανάτον, καὶ διείκνυσιν διὰ τά τὰ δύο διὰ ἐνός ἀνθρώπου, τοῦ Δαμά, εἰσέθησαν εἰς τὸν κόσμον. . . . καὶ ἀδιότι ἐνός ἀνατρέπεσαν ἀνθρώπου, τοῦ Χριστοῦ, Theophylact; comp. Chrysostom, who compares the Apostle here with the physician who penetrates to the source of the evil. Thus the perfect objectivity of the salvation, which man has simply to receive, but in no way to earn, and of which the Apostle has been treating since chap. i. 17, is, by way of a grand conclusion for the section, set forth afresh in fullest light, and represented in its deepest and most comprehensive connection with the history of the world. The whole μυστήριον of the divine plan of salvation and its history is still to be unfolded before the eyes of the reader by referring it to the entire time, in which the salvation is still future, as if therefore Paul had written: οὗ μόνον δὲ σωθησόμεθα, ἀλλὰ καὶ νῦν, οὗ εν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ καιρόμεθα.
ere the moral results that are associated with it are developed in chap. vi.

Ver. 12.\footnote{1} \textit{Διὰ τοῦτο} Therefore, because, namely, we have received through Christ the \textit{κατάλλαληγία} and the assurance of eternal salvation, ver. 11. The assumption that it refers back to the whole discussion from chap. i. 17 (held by many, including Tholuck, Rückert, Reiche, Kollner, Holsten, Picard) is the more unnecessary, the more naturally the idea of the \textit{κατάλλαληγία} itself, just treated of, served to suggest the parallel between Adam and Christ, and the \textit{διὰ τῆν κατάλλαληγίαν ἕλάβομεν} in point of fact contains the summary of the whole doctrine of righteousness and salvation from i. 17 onward; consequently there is no ground whatever for departing, as to \textit{διὰ τοῦτο}, from the connection with what immediately precedes.\footnote{2} This remark also applies in opposition to Hofmann (comp. Stöltling and Dietzsch), who refers it back to the entire train of ideas embraced in vv. 2-11. A recapitulation of this is indeed given in the grand concluding thought of ver. 11, that it is Christ to whom we owe the reconciliation. But Hofmann quite arbitrarily supposes Paul in \textit{διὰ τοῦτο} to have had in view an \textit{exhortation} to think of Christ conformably to the comparison with Adam, but to have got no further than this \textit{comparison.} — \textit{ὡσπερ} There is here an \textit{ἀνανταπόδοτον} as in Matth. xxv. 14; and 1 Tim. i. 3. The comparison alone is expressed, but not the thing compared, which was to have followed in an apodosis corresponding to the \( \delta \sigma \tau \epsilon \lambda \). The illustration, namely, introduced in vv. 13, 14 of the \( \epsilon \phi \ \delta \ \tau \alpha \nu \tau \xi \tau e \ \varepsilon \mu a r t o n \) now rendered it impossible to add the second half of the comparison syntactically belonging to the \( \delta \sigma \tau \epsilon \lambda \), and therefore the Apostle, driven on by the rushing flow of ideas to this point, from which he can no longer revert to the construction with which he started, has no hesitation in dropping the latter (comp. generally Buttmann's neut. Gr. p. 331; Kühner, II. 2, p. 1097), and in subsequently bringing in merely the main tenor of what is wanting by the relative clause attached to \( \varepsilon \lambda \delta \alpha \mu : \delta \varepsilon \tau i \ \tau \upsilon o \xi \ \tau o \mu \ \varepsilon \lambda \lambda \alpha \nu o \tau o s \) in ver. 14. This \( \delta \varepsilon \ldots \mu \varepsilon \lambda \lambda \) is consequently the substitute for the omitted apodosis, which, had it not been supplanted by vv. 13, 14, would have run somewhat thus: so also through one man has come righteousness, and through righteousness life, and so life has come to all. Calvin, Flacius, Tholuck, Köllner, Baur, Philippi, Stölting, Mangold, Rothe (who however without due ground regards the breaking off as intended from the outset, in order to avoid sanctioning the Apokatastasis) find in \( \delta \varepsilon \tau i \ \tau \upsilon o \xi \ \tau o \mu \ \varepsilon \lambda \lambda \alpha \nu o \tau o s \), in v. 14, the resumption and closing of the comparison,1 not of course in form, but in substance; compare also Melancthon. According to Rückert, Fritzsche (in his commentary), and de Wette, Paul has come, after vv. 13, 14, to reflect that the comparison begun involved not merely agreement but also discrepancy, and has accordingly turned aside from the apodosis, which must necessarily have expressed the equivalence, and inserted instead of it the opposition in ver. 15. This view is at variance with the entire character of the section, which indeed bears quite especially the stamp of most careful and acute premeditation, but shows no signs of Paul's having been led in the progress of his thought to the opposite of what he had started with. According to Mehring, ver. 15, following vv. 13, 14 (which he parenthesises) is meant to complete the comparison introduced in ver. 12, ver. 15 being thus taken interrogatively. Against this view, even apart from the inappropriateness of taking it as a question, the \( \varepsilon \lambda \lambda \) in ver. 15 is decisive.

\footnote{2}{The close junction with ver. 11 is maintained also by Klöpper, who unsuitably however defines the aim of the section, vv. 12-21, to be, to guard the readers against a timid littleness of faith, as though, notwithstanding justification, they were still with reference to the future of judgment not sure and certain of escaping the divine wrath; a timid mind might see in the tribulations anticipations of that wrath, etc. But how far does the entire confession of vv. 1-11 stand elevated above all such littleness of faith! In the whole connection this finds no place whatever, and receives therefore in vv. 12-21 not the slightest mention or reference.}

1 The objection of Dietzsche, p. 48, that \( \tau o \nu o s \) asserts nothing real regarding the second member of the comparison, is unsatisfactory, since Paul is just intending to bring forward a very definite special statement regarding the typical relation which he now merely expresses in general terms.
Winer, p. 503 [E. T. 712] (comp. Fritzsche’s Conject. p. 49) finds the epanorthosis in πολλῶν μᾶλλον, ver. 15, which is inadmissible, because with ἀλλ' οὐχ in ver. 15 there is introduced the antithetical element, consequently something else than the affirmative parallel begun in ver. 12. Others have thought that vv. 13-17 form a parenthesis, so that in ver. 18 the first half of the comparison is resumed, and the second now at length added (Cajetanus, Erasmus Schmid, Grotius, Wetstein, Heumann, Ch. Schmid, Flatt, and Reiche). Against this view may be urged not only the unprecedented length, but still more the contents of the supposed parenthesis, which in fact already comprehends in itself the parallel under every aspect. In ver. 18 f. we have recapitulation, but not resumption. This much applies also against Olshausen and Ewald. Others again have held that ver. 12 contains the protasis and the apodosis completely, taking the latter to begin either with καὶ οὐτῶς (Clericus, Wolf, Glöckler), or even with καὶ διὰ (Erasmus, Beza, Benecke), both of which views however are at variance with the parallel between Adam and Christ which rules the whole of what follows, and are thus in the light of the connection erroneous, although the former by no means required a trajectio (καὶ οὐτῶς for οὐτώ καὶ). While all the expositors hitherto quoted have taken ὄστερος as the beginning of the first member of the parallel, others again have thought that it introduces the second half of the comparison. So, following Elsner and others, Koppe, who after διὰ τοῦτο conceives ἔλαιον καταλαγήν δι' οὐτῶν supplied from ver. 11; so also Umbreit and Th. Schott (for this reason, because we σωθησόμεθα ἐν τῷ ζωῇ οὐτῶν, Christ comes by way of contrast to stand just as did Adam). Similarly Märcker, who attaches δι' οὐτῶ to ver. 11. These expositions are incorrect, because the universality of the Adamite ruin, brought out by ὄστερον κ.τ.λ., has no point of comparison in the supplied protasis (the explanation is illogical); in Gal. iii. 6 the case is different. Notwithstanding van Hengel (comp. Jatho) thinks that he removes all difficulty by supplying ἔστι after διὰ τοῦτο; while Dietzsch, anticipating what follows, suggests the supplying after διὰ τοῦτο: through one man life has come into the world.—δι' ἐνός ἀνθρώπου] through one man, that is, δι' ἐνός ἁμαρτισμάτων, ver. 16. A single man brought upon all sin and death; a single man also righteousness and life. The causal relation is based on the fact that sin, which previously had no existence whatever in the world, only began to exist in the world (on earth) by means of the first fall\(^1\) Eve, so far as the matter itself is concerned (Ecclus. xxv. 14; 2 Cor. xi. 3; 1 Tim. ii. 14; Barnab. Ep. 12), might as well as Adam be regarded as the \(\epsilon \iota \varsigma \ \alpha \nu \theta \rho \omicron \); the latter, because he sinned as the first man, the former, of whom Pelagius explained it, because she committed the first transgression. Here however, because Paul's object is to compare the One man, who as the bringer of salvation has become the beginer of the new humanity, with the One man who as beginer of the old humanity became so destructive, in which collective reference (comp. Hofmann's Schriftbew. I. p. 474) the woman recedes into the background, he has to derive the entrance of sin into the world from Adam, whom he has in view in \(\delta \iota \ ' \epsilon \iota \omicron \nu \omicron \alpha \nu \theta \rho \omicron \iota \omicron \omicron \omicron \). Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 21 f., 45 f. This is also the common form of Rabbinical teaching. See Eisenmenger's entdeckt. Judenth. II. p. 81 f. — \(\gamma \ \alpha \mu \alpha \rho \pi \omicron \iota \alpha \) not: sinfulness, habitus peccandi (Koppe, Schott, Flatt, Usteri, Olshausen), which the word never means; not original sin (Calvin, Flacius, and others following Augustine); but also not merely actual sin in abstracto (Fritzsche: "nam ante primum facinus patratum nullum erat facinus"), but rather what sin is according to its idea and essence (comp. Hofmann and Stölting), consequently the determination of the conduct in antagonism to God, conceived however as a force, as a real power working and manifesting itself—exercising its dominion—in all cases of concrete sin (comp. ver. 21, vi. 12, 14, vii. 8, 9, 17 al.). This moral mode of being in antagonism to God became existent in the human world through the fall of Adam, produced death, and spread death over all. Thus our verse itself describes the \(\alpha \mu \alpha \rho \pi \omicron \iota \alpha \) as a real objective power, and in so doing admits only of this explanation. Compare the not substantially different explanation of Philippi, according to which the actual sin of the world is meant as having come into the world potentialiter through Adam; also Rothe, who conceives it to refer to sin as a principle, but as active; and Dietzsche. — On \(\epsilon \iota \varsigma \ \tau \ \kappa \omicron \sigma \mu \omicron \omicron \), which applies to the earth as the dwelling-place of mankind (for in the universe generally sin, the devil, was already in existence), comp. Wisd. ii. 24, xiv. 14; 2 John 7; Clem. Cor. I. 3; Heb. x. 5. Undoubtedly sin by its entrance into the world came into human nature (Rothe), but this is not asserted here, however decisively our passage stands opposed to the error of Flacius, that man is in any way as respects his essential nature āμαρτία. — The mode in which the fall took place (through the devil, John viii. 44; 2 Cor. xi. 3) did not here concern the Apostle, who has only to do with the mischievous effect of it, namely, that it brought āμαρτία into the world, etc. — καὶ διὰ τ. āμαρτ. ὁ θάνατος: scil. εἰς τ. κόσμον εἰανθέθε. The θάνατος is physical death (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Augustine, Calovius, Reiche, Fritzsche, Maier, van Hengel, Klöpper, Weiss, and many others), viewed as the separation of the soul from the body and its transference to Hades (not as “citation before God’s judgment,” Mehring), with which however the conception of the φθορά and ματαιότης of the κτίσις in ch. viii., very different from the θάνατος of men, must not be mixed up (as by Dietzsch), which would involve a blending of dissimilar ideas. The interpretation of bodily death is rendered certain by ver. 14 as well as by the considerations, that the text gives no hint of departure from the primary sense of the word; that the reference to Gen. ii. 17, iii. 19 could not be mistaken by any reader; and that on the basis of Genesis it was a universal and undoubted assumption both in the Jewish and Christian consciousness, that mortality was caused by Adam’s sin. See Wisd. ii. 24; John viii. 44; 1 Cor. xv. 21; Wetstein and Schoettgen, in loc.; and Eisenmenger’s entdeckt. Judenthum, II. p. 81 f. Compare, respecting Eve, Ecclus. xxv. 24. Had Paul taken θάνατος in another sense therefore, he must of necessity have definitely indicated it, in order to be understood. This is decisive not only against the Pelagian interpretation of spiritual

\(^1\) Not merely came to light as known sin (Schleiermacher, Usteri). See Lechler, p. 104.

1 Compare Holsten, sum Ev. d. Paul. u. Petr. p. 418: who thinks that the unholiness lying dormant in human nature first entered actually into the visible world as a reality in the transgression of Adam; also Baur, neut. Theol. p. 191, according to whom the principle of sin, that from the beginning had been immanent in man, only came forth actually in the wapťβαις of the first parent. In this way sin would not have come into the world, but must have been in the world already before the fall, only not having yet attained to objective manifestation.

2 This remark holds also against Mau in Pel’s theol. Mitarb. 1838, 2, who understands the form of life after the dissolution of the earthly life.
death, which Picard has repeated, but also against every combination whatever—whether complete (see especially Philippi and Stölting), or partial—of bodily, moral (comp. νεκρός, Matth. viii. 22), and eternal death (Schmid, Tholuck, Köllner, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Olshausen, Reithmayr; Rückert undecidedly); or the whole collective evil, which is the consequence of sin, as Umbreit and Ewald explain it; compare Hofmann: “all that runs counter to the life that proceeds from God, whether as an occurrence, which puts an end to the life wrought by God, or as a mode of existence setting in with such occurrence.” As regards especially the inclusion of the idea of moral death (the opposite of the spiritual ξωή), the words θάνατος and ἀποθνῄσκειν are never used by Paul in this sense; not even in vii. 10 (see in loc.), or in 2 Cor. ii. 16, vii. 10, where he is speaking of eternal death. The reference to spiritual death is by no means rendered necessary by the contrast of δίκαιος. ξωή in ver. 18, comp. ver. 21; since in fact the death brought into the world by Adam, although physical, might be contrasted not merely in a Rabbinical fashion, but also generally in itself, with the ξωή that has come through Christ; for to this ξωή belongs also the life of the glorified body, and it is a life not again subject to death.—καὶ οἴνωσι] and in such manner, i.e. in symmetrical correspondence with this connection between the sin that entered by one man and the death occasioned by it. Fuller explanation is then given, by the εὕρη πάντες ἡμαρτον, respecting the emphatically prefixed εἰς πάντας, to whom death, as the effect of that first sin of the One, had penetrated. Since οἴνωσι sums up the state of the case previously expressed (comp. e.g. 1 Cor. xiv. 25; 1 Thess. iv. 17) any further generalization of its reference can only be arbitrary (Stölting: “through sin”). Even the explanation: “in virtue of the causal connection between sin and death” (Philippi and many others) is too general. The οἴνωσι, in fact, recapitulates the historical state of the case just presented, so far as it specifies the mode in which death has come to all, namely, in this way, that the One sinned and thereby brought into the world the death, which conse-

1 In 2 Tim. i. 10 θάνατος is used in the sense of eternal death, which Christ (by His work of atonement) has done away; the opposite of it is ξωή καὶ δεσποτία, which He has brought to light by His gospel. Not less is Eph. ii. 1 to be explained as meaning eternal death.
quenty became the lot of all. — διὰ γὰρ τοῦ ἐβασμένος, came throughout (Luke v. 15). This is the progress of the eἰς τῶν κόσμων εἰσῆλθε in its extension to all individuals, eἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπων, which in contrast to the ὁ ἐνός ἀνθρ. is put forward with emphasis as the main element of the further description, wherein moreover διὰ γὰρ, correlative to the εἰσῆλθε, has likewise emphasis. On διέρχεσθαι eἰς τῶν comp. Plut. Alcib. 2. Compare also ἐπὶ τῶν in Ez. v. 17 and Ps. lxxxvii. 17. More frequent in classic authors with the simple accusative, as in Luke xix. 1. — εἰς ὅ πάντες ἡμαρτον] on the ground of the fact that, i.e. because, all sinned, namely (and for this the momentary sense of the aorist is appropriate) when through the One sin entered into the world. Because, when Adam sinned, all men sinned in and with him, the representative of entire humanity (not: "exemplo Adami," Pelagius; comp. Erasmus, Paraphr.), death, which came into the world through the sin that had come into it, has been extended to all in virtue of this causal connection between the sin that had come into existence through Adam and death. All became mortal through Adam's fall, because this having sinned on the part of Adam was a having sinned on the part of all; consequently τῷ τῶν ἐνός παραπτώματι οἱ πολλοὶ ἁπέθανον, ver. 15. Thus it is certainly on the ground of Adam that all die (ἐν τῷ Ἀδὰμ πάντες ἀποθνῄσκοντων, 1 Cor. xv. 22), because, namely, when Adam sinned, all sinned, all as ἡμαρτώλοι κατεστάθησαν (ver. 19), and consequently the death that came in through his sin can spare none. But it is in a linguistic point of view erroneous, according to the traditional Catholic interpretation after the example of Origen, the Vulgate, and Augustine (Estius, Cornelius

1 The most complete critical comparison of the various expositions of these words may be seen in Dietzsch, p. 50 ff.

2 Hofmann erroneously holds (Schriftbew. l.c.) that the imperfect must have been used. What is meant is in fact the same act, which in Adam's sin is done by all, not another contemporaneous act. Comp. 2 Cor. v. 15. It is mere empty arbitrariness in Thomasius l.c. p. 816, to say that our explanation is grammatically unjustifiable. Why so? Stöting (comp. Dietzsch) objects to it that then ὁ ὁδιάνως διέλθεν must also be taken in the momentary sense. But this by no means follows, since εἰς ὅ παντες ἡμεῖς is a special relative clause. Nevertheless even that ὁ ὁδιάνως διέλθεν is not something gradually developing itself, but a thing done in and with the sin of the One man. This One has sinned and has become liable to death, and thereby all have become mortal, because Adam's sin was the sin of all.
à Lapide, Klee; not Stengel, Reithmayr, Bisping, and Maier; but revived by Aberle), to take ἐφ' ὁ as equivalent to ἐν ὑμὶν quod scil. Adamo, as also Beza, Erasmus Schmid, and others do; compare Irenaeus, Haer. v. 16, 3. The thought which this exposition yields ("omnes ille unus homo fuerunt," Augustine) is essentially correct, but it was an error to derive it from ἐφ' ὁ, since it is rather to be derived from πάντες ἱμαρτων, and hence also it is but arbitrarily explained by the sensuous notion of all men having been in the loins (Heb. vii. 9, 10) of Adam (Origen, Ambrosiaster, Augustine). Chrysostom gives in general the proper sense, though without definitely indicating how he took the ἐφ' ὁ: "τί δὲ ἐστιν ἐφ' ὁ πάντες ἱμαρτων; ἐκεῖνος ἱεροτός καὶ οἱ μὴ φαγόντες ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἑسوف γεγονόσαι ἐχ' ἐκεῖνος πάντες θνητοί." So also substantially Theophylact, though explaining, with Photius, ἐφ' ὁ as equivalent to ἐπὶ τὸ 'Αδὰμ. The right view is taken by Bengel ("quia omnes peccarunt... Adamo peccante"); Koppe ("ipso actu, quo peccavit Adamus"), Olshausen, Philippi, Delitzsch, Psychol. p. 126, 369, and Kahnis, Dogm. I. p. 590, III. p. 308 f.; comp. also Klöpper. The objection that in this way the essential definition is arbitrarily supplied (Tholuck, Hofmann, Stölting, Dietzsch, and others) is incorrect; for what is maintained is simply that more precise definition of ἱμαρτων, for which the immediate connection has necessarily prepared the way, and therefore no person, from an unprejudiced point of view, can speak of "an abortive product of perplexity impelling to arbitrariness" (Hofmann). Nor is our view at variance with the meaning of οὔτως (as Ernesti objects), since from the point of view of death having been occasioned by Adam's sin (οὔτως) the universality of death finds its explanation in the very fact, that Adam's sin was the sin of all. Aply (as against Dietzsch) Bengel compares 2 Cor. v. 14: εἰ εἰς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανε, ἀρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον (namely, Christo moriente); see on that passage. Others, and indeed most modern expositors (including Reiche, Rückert, Tholuck, Fritzsche,

1 Who, although avoiding the direct expression of our interpretation, nevertheless in substance arrives at the same meaning, p. 505: "All however sinned, because Adam's sin penetrated to them, inasmuch as God punished the fault of Adam so thoroughly that his sin became shared by all his descendants." For Klöpper properly explains the ἐφ' ὁ, defining the relation as imputation of Adam's sin to all.
de Wette, Maier, Baur, Ewald, Umbreit, van Hengel, Mehring, Hofmann, Stölling, Thomasius, Mangold, and others,) have interpreted \( \eta \mu \alpha \pi t o v \) of individual sins, following Theodoret:
\[ \sigma\nu \varphi \delta i\delta a \tau\iota \nu \tau\iota \nu \pi \rho \rho \alpha \pi \alpha \tau \rho o s \alpha \mu \alpha \rho \tau \iota \alpha \nu, \alpha \lambda \lambda \alpha \delta i\delta a \tau\iota \nu \iota \iota \iota \epsilon \iota \kappa e \iota \alpha v \varepsilon \kappa a \tau o s \delta \varepsilon \chi e \tau a i t o u \tau o u \theta \alpha \alpha \alpha \tau o u \tau o v \delta \varrho o v. \]
Compare Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 263; Märcker l.c. p. 19. But the taking the words thus of the universal having actually sinned as cause of the universal death (see other variations further on) must be rejected for the simple reason, that the proposition would not even be true;¹ and because the view, that the death of individuals is the consequence of their own actual sins, would be inappropriate to the entire parallel between Adam and Christ, nay even contradictory to it. For as the sin of Adam brought death to all (consequently not their own self-committed sin), so did the obedience of Christ (not their own virtue) bring life to all. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 22. This objective relation corresponding to the comparison remains undisturbed in the case of our exposition alone, inasmuch as \( \varepsilon \phi \tau o \varepsilon \pi \alpha \nu \tau o r. \eta \mu \alpha \pi t o r. \) shows how the sin of Adam necessarily brought death to all. To explain \( \eta \mu \alpha \pi t o r. \) again, as is done by many, and still by Picard and Aberle: they were sinful, by which is meant original sin (Calvin, Flacius, Melancthon in the \( \varepsilon \kappa a r r. \): "\( \alpha m n e s h a b e n t \) peccatum, scilicet pravitatem propagatum et reatum"), or to import even the idea poenam luere (Grotius), is to disregard linguistic usage; for \( \eta \mu \alpha \pi t o r. \) means they have

¹ Namely, in respect to the many millions of children who have not yet sinned. The reply made to this, that Paul has had in view only those capable of sin (Castalio, Wetstein, Fritzsche and others) is least of all applicable in the very case of this Apostle and of the present acutely and thoroughly considered disquisition, and just as little is an appeal to the disposition to sin (Tholuck) which children have (Paul says plainly \( \eta \mu \alpha \pi t o r. \) ). This way out of the difficulty issues in an exegetical self-deception.—He who seeks to get rid of the question regarding children must declare that it is not here raised, since the passage treats of the human race as a whole (comp. Ewald, Jahrh.*VI. p. 182, also Mangold, p. 118 f.). This would suffice, were the question merely of universal sinfulness; for in such a case Paul could just as properly have said \( \pi \rho \rho \iota \varepsilon s \eta \mu \alpha \pi t o r \) here, with self-evident reference to all capable of sin, as in iii. 23. But the question here is the connection between the sin of all and the dying of all, in which case there emerges no self-evident limitation, because all, even those still incapable of peccatum actually, must die. Thus the question as to children still remains, and is only disposed of by not taking \( \eta \mu \alpha \pi t o r. \) in the sense of having individually sinned; comp. Dietzsch, p. 57 f. This also applies against Stölling, according to whom Paul wishes to show that sin works death in the case of all sinners without exception.
sinned, and nothing more. This is acknowledged by Julius Müller (v. d. Sünne, II. p. 416 ff. ed. 5), who however professes to find in ἐφ' ὥ ἤ. only an accessory reason for the preceding, and that in the sense: "as then" all would besides have well deserved this severe fate for themselves by their actual sins. Incorrectly, because ἐφ' ὥ does not mean "as then" or "as then also" (i.e. ὅς καί); because the statement of the reason is by no means made apparent as in any way merely secondary and subjective, as Neander and Messner have rationalised it, but on the contrary is set down as the single, complete and objective ground; because its alleged purport would exercise an alien and disturbing effect on the whole development of doctrine in the passage; and because the sense assigned to the simple ἡμαρτον (this severe fate they would have all moreover well merited) is purely fanciful. Ernesti takes ἐφ' ὥ not of the objective ground, but as specifying the ground of thinking so, i.e. the subjective ground of cognition: "about which there can be no doubt, in so far as all have in point of fact sinned;" this he holds to be the logical ground for the οὖτος κ.τ.λ. But, as there is no precedent of usage for this interpretation of ἐφ' ὥ (Phil. iii. 12 is unjustifiably adduced), Ernesti is compelled to unite with ἐφ' ὥ vv. 13 and 14 in an untenable way. See on ver. 13 f., remark 1, and Philippi, Glaubensl. III. p. 222 ff. ed. 2.—Respecting ἐφ' ὥ, which is quite identical with ἐφ' οἷς, we have next to observe as follows: It is equivalent to ἐπὶ τοῦτω δι' ὁμιλεῖται, and means on the ground of the fact that, consequently in real sense propter e quod; because (dieuweil, Luther), of the causa antegressa (not finalis), as also Thomas Magister and Favorinus have explained it as equivalent to δι' οἵτινες. So in the N. T. at 2 Cor. v. 4 and Phil. iii. 12. Comp. Theophilus, ad Autol. ii. 40, ed. Wolf: ἐφ' ὥ οὐκ ἴσχυσε θανατῶσαι αὐτούς (because he was unable to put them to death), Diod. Sic. xix. 98: ἐφ' ὥ .... τὸ μὲν μείζον καλοῦσθε ταῦτα, τὸ δὲ ἔλασσον μόρχον (because they call the greater a bull, etc.); just so ἐφ' οἷς, Plut. de Pyth. orac. 29. Favorinus quotes the examples: ἐφ' ὥ τῷ κλοπῆν

1 Baur also, II. p. 202 (comp. his neutest. Theol. p. 138), approves the rendering because, but foists on this because the sense: "which has as its presupposition." Thus it should be understood, he thinks, also in 2 Cor. v. 4 and Phil. iii. 12; and thus Paul proves from the universality of death the universality of sin. See, in opposition to this logical inversion, Ernesti, p. 212 ff.
Thomas Magister cites the example from Synesius ep. 73: εφ' ὃ Γεννάδιον ἔγραψεν (propterea quod Gennadium accusasset, comp. Herm. ad Viger. p. 710). Another example from Synesius (in Devarius, ed. Klotz, p. 88) is: εφ' ὃς γὰρ Σεκούνδον εἶπ ἐποίησας (on the ground of this, that, i.e. because thou hast done well to Secundus) ὡς ἐτίμησας, καὶ εφ' ὃς οὕτω γράφων τιμᾶς, ἐξηρτήσω σαυτοῦ κ. ἐποίησας εἶναι σοῦ. See further Josephus, Antt. i. 1, 4: ὁ ὅφις συνδιαίσθημεν τῷ τῇ Αδάμῳ καὶ τῷ γυμνῷ φθονερῶς εἴρειν, εφ' ὃς (propterea quod) αὐτοὺς εὐδαιμονήσειν ἠετὸς πεπεσφείνοντος τοῖς τοῦ Θεοῦ παραγγέλθαι. Antt. xvi. 8, 2: καὶ τὸ δικαίως αὐτοὶ παθεῖν, εφ' ὃς ἀλλήλους ὕδηκεν, προλαμβάνοντες μόνον. Kothe (followed by Schmid, bibl. Thol. p. 260) has taken it as: "under the more definite condition, that" (ἐπὶ τούτῳ ὡστε), so that individual sins are the consequence of the diffusion of death through Adam's sin over mankind. But this view is wholly without precedent in the usus loquendi, for the very frequent use of ἐφ' ὃ, under the condition, that (usually with the infinitive or future indicative), is both in idea and in practice something quite different; see Kühner, II. 2, p. 1006. Of a similar nature are rather such passages as Dem. 518, 26: εὖ γὰρ μηδὲν ἐστιν, εφ' ὃ τῶν πεπραγμένων οὐ δίκαιος ὧν ἀπολογήθη εἰς ἀρνήσεται (upon the ground of which he will not seem worthy, etc.); de cor. 114 (twice); as well as the very current use of ἐπὶ τούτῳ, propterea (Xen. Mem. i. 2, 61), of ἐπὶ αὐτῷ τούτῳ, for this very reason (Dem. 578, 26; Xen. Cyr. ii. 3, 10), etc.; and further, such expressions as ἐπὶ μὲν δὴ τούτῳ δίκη πληγῆς ἔλαβον (Xen. Cyr. i. 3, 16), where ἐπὶ with the dative specifies the ground (Kühner, II. 1, p. 436). Ewald formerly (Jahrb. II. p. 171), rejecting the second ὁ θάνατος, explained: "and thus there penetrated to all men that, whereunto all sinned," namely death, which, according to Gen. ii. 17, was imposed as punishment on sin, so that whosoever sinned, sinned so that he had to die, a fate which he might know beforehand. In this way the ἐφ' ὃ would (with Schmid and Glöckler, also Umbreit) be taken of the causa finalis (Xen. Cyr. viii. 8, 24: οὖν γὰρ δὲ δραπανοφόροις ἐπὶ χρονονται, εφ' ὃ Kύρος αὐτά ἐποίησατο, iii. 3, 36, ὕπομιμήσειν, εφ' ὃς τῇ ἐπιρέφθειμα, Thuc. i. 134, 1, al.; and see especially Wisd. ii. 23), and the subject of διῆλθεν (τοῦτο) would be implied.
in it. But, apart from the genuineness of \( \delta \theta \alpha \nu \alpha \tau \sigma o s \), which must be defended, there still remains, even with the explanation of \( \varepsilon \phi ^{\prime} \circ \) as final, so long as \( \eta \mu \alpha r t o n \) is explained of individual actual sins, the question behind as to the truth of the proposition, since not all, who die, have actually sinned; and indeed the view of the death of all having been caused by the actual sins of all is incompatible with what follows. See also Ernesti, p. 192 ff.; comp. his Ethik. d. Ap. P. p. 16 f. Moreover the telic form of expression itself would have to be taken only in an improper sense, instead of that of the necessary, but on the part of the subjects not intended, result, somewhat after the idea of fate, as in Herod. i. 68: \( \varepsilon \tau i \ k a k o \ \alpha \nu \theta \rho \alpha \tau o v o n \ \sigma \delta \eta \nu o s \ \alpha \nu \epsilon v \nu \rho \tau t a u \). Subsequently (in his Sendschr. d. Ap. P.) Ewald, retaining the second \( \delta \theta \alpha \nu \alpha \tau o s \), has assumed for \( \varepsilon \phi ^{\prime} \circ \) the signification, so far as (so also Tholuck and van Hengel); holding that by the limiting phrase “so far as they all sinned,” death is thus set forth the more definitely as the result of sin, so that \( \varepsilon \phi ^{\prime} \circ \) corresponds to the previous \( \sigma \nu \tau o s \). But even granting the not proved limiting signification of \( \varepsilon \phi ^{\prime} \circ \) (which \( \varepsilon \phi ^{\prime} \sigma \sigma o n \) elsewhere has, xi. 13), there still remain with this interpretation also the insurmountable difficulties as to the sense, which present themselves against the reference of \( \eta \mu \alpha r t o n \) to the individual sins. Hofmann (comp. also his Schriftenarb. I. p. 529 f.) refers \( \varepsilon \phi ^{\prime} \circ \) to \( \delta \theta \alpha \nu \alpha \tau o s \), so that it is equivalent to \( \sigma \sigma o \ \pi a r \rho \nu t o s \): amidst the presence of death; making the emphasis to lie on the preposition, and the sense to be: “death was present at the sinning of all those to whom it has penetrated; and it has not been invariably brought about and introduced only through their sinning, nor always only for each individual who sinned.” Thus \( \varepsilon \tau i \) might be justified, not indeed in a temporal sense (which it has among poets and later prose writers only in proper statements of time, as in Homer, Il. viii. 529, \( \varepsilon \tau i \ \nu v k t i \)), but perhaps in the sense of the prevailing circumstance, like the German “bei” [with, amidst].

---

1 Along with which it may be observed that there is the less warrant for mentally supplying, in the contrasted propositions on the side of salvation, a condition corresponding to the \( \varepsilon \phi ^{\prime} \circ \circ \circ \). Mangold; \( \alpha \nu \ \pi \alpha v t e s \ \pi o t e b o w o n \), which is implicitly involved in \( \lambda \mu b \alpha \nu \alpha \nu t e s \), ver. 17), the more essential this antitypical element would be.

2 So also Dietzsch has taken it, in substantial harmony with Hofmann, less artificially, but not more tenably: amidst the presence of death. He thinks that
But apart from the special tenor of the thought, which we are expected to extract from the bare εφ’ ψ, and which Paul might so easily have conveyed more precisely (possibly by εφ’ ψ ἕδη παρόντι, or οὔ ἕδη παρόντος), this artificial exposition has decidedly against it the fact that the words εφ’ ψ πάντες ἡμαρτον must necessarily contain the argumentative modal information concerning the preceding proposition κ. οὖτως εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους ὁ θᾶν. διεκδείπεν, which they in fact contain only when our view is taken. They must solve the enigma which is involved in the momentous οὖτως of that clause; and this enigma is solved only by the statement of the reason: because all sinned, so that the δαίμονα ἡμαρτία of Adam was the sin of all. Against Hofmann, compare Philippi’s Glaubensl. III. p. 221 f. ed. 2.

Remark 1. The Rabbinical writers also derived universal mortality from the fall of Adam, who represented the entire race in such a way that, when Adam sinned, all sinned. See the passages in Ammon, Opusc. nov. p. 72 ff. Even perfectly righteous persons are “comprehensi sub poena mortis” (R. Bechai in Cod hackemann f. 5, 4). It may reasonably be assumed therefore that the doctrine of the Apostle had, in the first instance, its historical roots in his Jewish (comp. Ecclus. xxv. 23; Wisd. ii. 23 f.; xiv. 14) and especially his Rabbinical training, and was held by him even prior to his conversion; and that in his Christian enlightenment he saw no reason for abandoning the proposition, which on the contrary he adopted into the system of his Chris-the Apostle desires to emphasise the view that death, originating from the One, is and prevails in the world, quite apart from the sinning of individuals; that independently of this, and prior to it, the universal dominion of death springing from Adam is already in existence. But with what strange obscurity would Paul in that case have expressed this simple and clear idea! How unwarranted it is to attach to his positive expression the negative signification (apart from, independently of)! With just as little warrant we should have to attach to the πᾶσαι, since in no case could it include the children who have not yet sinned, a limitation of meaning, which yet it is utterly incapable of bearing after the εἰς πᾶσας ἀνθρώπους just said. The exposition of Dietzsch, no less than that of Hofmann, is a laboriously far-fetched and mistaken evasion of the proposition clearly laid down by Paul: “because they all sinnned,” namely, when through one man sin came into the world and death through sin.

1 This applies equally against the similar exposition of Thomasius (Chr. Pers. u. Werk. I. p. 316 f.), amidst the presence of which relation (ψ as neuter). As if previously a “relation” had been expressed, and not a concrete historical fact! Weisse took εφ’ ψ even as although,—a linguistic impossibility, which Finckh also presents.
tian views, and justified by continuing to assert for it in the development of the divine plan of redemption the place which is here assigned to it, as even Christ Himself traces death back to the fall (John viii. 44). Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 22: ἐν τῷ Ἀδὰμ πάντες ἀποθνῄσκουν, on which our passage affords the authentic commentary. We may add that, when Maimonides is combating (More Nevuch. iii. 24) the illusion that God arbitrarily decrees punishments, there has been wrongly found in the dogmatic proposition adduced by him, "non est mors sine peccato, neque castigatione sine iniuritate," the reverse of the above doctrine (see especially Fritzsche, p. 294). The latter is on the contrary presupposed by it.

Remark 2. That Adam was created immortal, our passage does not affirm, and 1 Cor. xv. 47 contains the opposite. But not as if Paul had conceived the first man as by his nature sinful, and had represented to himself sin as a necessary natural quality of the σάρξ (so anew Hausrath, neut. Zeitgesch. II. p. 470), but thus: if Adam had not sinned in consequence of his self-determination of antagonism to God, he would have become immortal through eating of the tree of life in Paradise (Gen. iii. 22). As he has sinned, however, the consequence thereof necessarily was death, not only for himself, seeing that he had to leave Paradise, but for all his posterity likewise. From this consequence, which the sin of Adam had for all, it results, in virtue of the necessary causal connection primevaly ordained by God between sin and death, by reasoning back ab effectu ad causam, that the fall of Adam was the collective fall of the entire race, in so far as in fact all forfeited Paradise and therewith incurred death.—If ἐὰν ὁ πάντες ἤμαρτον be explained in the sense of individual actual sins, and at the same time the untenableness of the explanation of Hofmann and Dietzsch be recognised, it becomes impossible by any expedients, such as that of Rothe, I. p. 314, ed. Schenkel, to harmonize the view in our passage with that expressed in 1 Cor. xv. 47; but, if it be referred to the fall of Adam, every semblance of contradiction vanishes.

Ver. 13 f. Demonstration, that the death of all has its ground in the sin of Adam and the causal connection of that sin with death. This argument, conducted with great conciseness, sets out from the undoubted historical certainty (it is already sufficiently attested in Gen. iv.–vi.) that during the entire period prior to the law (ἄχρι νόμου = ἀπὸ 'Αδὰμ μέχρι Μωϋσέως, ver. 14) there was sin in humanity; then further argues that the death of individuals, which yet has affected those also who have not like Adam sinned against a positive command, cannot be derived from that sin prior to the law, because in the non-existence of law there is no imputation; and allows it to be thence inferred that consequently the death of all has been caused (ἐφ’ ἡ πάντες ἡμαρτον) by the sin of Adam (not by their individual sins). Paul however leaves this inference to the reader himself; he does not expressly declare it, but instead of doing so he says, returning to the comparison begun in ver. 12: ὅς ἐστι τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος, for in that death-working operation of Adam’s sin for all lay, in fact, the very ground of the typical relation to Christ. Chrysostom aptly says: εἰ γὰρ ἐξ ἡμαρτίας ὁ θάνατος τῆς μίξας ἐσχε, νόμου δὲ οὐκ ἄνοιξεν ἡ ἡμαρτία οὐκ ἐλλογεῖται, τῶς ὁ θάνατος ἔκρατει; ὅπερ δὴλον ὅτι οὐκ ἂντη ἡ ἡμαρτία ἡ τῆς τοῦ νόμου παραβίασις, ἀλλ’ ἐκεῖνη τῆς τοῦ Ἅδαμ παρακοῆς, ἂντη ἦν ἡ πάντα λυμαινομένη. Καὶ τίς ἡ τοῦτον ἀποδέξεις; τὸ καὶ πρὸ τοῦ νόμου πάντας ἀποδέξεις ἐβασιλεύει γὰρ κ.τ.λ. Compare Oecumenius.— ἄχρι νόμου] i.e. in the period previous to the giving of the law, comp. ver. 14; consequently not during the period of the law, ἐως ὁ νόμος ἔκρατει,1 Theodoret; comp. Origen, Chrysostom, and Theodore of Mopsuestia.— ἐλλογεῖται] preserved nowhere else except in Boeckh, Inscript. I. p. 850 A, 35, and Philem. 18 (text rec.), but undoubtedly meaning: is put to account (consequently equivalent to λοιπεῖται, iv. 4), namely, here, according to the context, for punishment, and that on the part of God; for in the whole connection the subject spoken of is the divine dealings in consequence of the fall. Hence we are neither to understand ab judice (Fritzsche), nor: by the person sinning; so Augustine, Ambrosiaster, Luther (“then one does not regard the sin”) Melancthon (“non accusatur in nobis ipsis”) Calvin, Beza and others, including Usteri, Rückert, J. Müller, Lipsius, Mangold, and Stößling (“there the sinner recognises not his sin as guilt”), whereby a thought quite irrevelant to the argument is introduced.— ἡ οὖνος νόμου] without the existence of the law; νόμος, as previously ἄχρι νόμου, meaning the Mosaic law, and not any law generally (Theodore of Mopsuestia, and many others, including Hofmann), as άμαρτία already points to the divine law. Comp. iv. 15. The proposition itself: "Sin is not imputed, if the law is absent," is set down as something universally conceded, as an axiom; therefore with repetition of the subject (in opposition to Hofmann, who on account of this repetition separates άμαρτία δέ κ.τ.λ. from the first half of the verse and attaches it to what follows), and with the verb in the present. The proposition itself, inserted as an intervening link in the argument with the metabatic δέ, without requiring a preceding μέν, which Hofmann is wrong in missing (see Dietzsch and Kühner, II. 2, p. 814), has its truth as well as its more precise application in the fact, that in the absence of law the action, which in and by itself is unlawful, is no transgression of the law (iv. 15), and cannot therefore be brought into account as such. That Paul regarded the matter in this light, and had not, as Hofmann thinks, sinning generally, "as it was one and the same thing in the case of all," in view apart from the sins of individuals, is plain also from καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦς μὴ άμαρτ. ἐπὶ τῶ ὁμοιώματι τῆς παραβᾶς. Ἀδάμ, in ver. 14. His thought is: If the death of men after Adam had been caused by their own sin, then in the case of all those, who have died during the period from Adam till the law, the sin which they have committed must have been already reckoned to them as transgression of the law, just as Adam's sin was the transgression of the positive divine command, and as such brought upon him death; but this is inconceivable, because the law was not in existence. In this Paul leaves out of consideration the Noachian commands (Gen. ix.), as well as other declarations of God as to His will given before the law, and likewise individual punitive judgments, such as in the case of Sodom, just because he has only the strict idea of real and formal legislation before his mind, and this suggests to him simply the great epochs of the Paradisaic and Sinaitic legislations. A view, which does not subvert the truth of his demonstration, because mankind in general were without law from Adam until Moses, the natural law, because not given positively, remaining out of the account; it makes the act at variance with it appear as sin (άμαρτία), but not as παράβασις vómu, which as such ἐλλογείται. — Ver. 14. ἀλλ' at, yet, although sin is not put to account in the absence of the law. It introduces an apparently contradictory phenomenon, confronting the ἀματητα oὐκ ἐλλογείται κ.τ.λ.; one, however, which just proves that men have died, not through their own special sin, but through the sin of Adam, which was put to their account.

1 As is well known, Peyrerius (Praeadamitae s. exercitat. excag. in Rom. v. 12-14, Amst. 1655) referred the νόμου here to the law given to Adam in Paradise; and found thus a proof for his Praeadamites.
ἐβασιλεύσεως prefixed with emphasis: death has not perchance been powerless, no, it has reigned, i.e. has exercised its power which deprives of life (comp. vv. 17-21). Hofmann (comp. also Holsten, Aberle, and Dietzsch) finds in the emphatic ἐβαστο the absolute and abiding dominion, which death has exercised independently of the imputation of sins (ἀλλὰ being taken as the simple ἄλλο), "just as a king, one by virtue of his personal position once and for all entitled to do so, exercises dominion over those who, in virtue of their belonging to his domain, are from the outset subject to him." But no reader could educe this qualitative definite sense of the βασιλεύειν, with the highly essential characteristic elements ascribed to it, from the mere verb itself; nor could it be gathered from the position of the word at the head of the sentence; on the contrary, it must unquestionably have been expressed (by ἐτυράννεσεν possibly, or τυραννωκὼς ἐβασιλεύσεως) seeing that the subsequent καὶ (even over those, etc.) does not indicate a mode of the power of the (personified) death, but only appends the fact of its dominion being without exception. — μέχρι Μωϋσ. equivalent to ἀχρι νόμου in ver. 13. A distinction of sense between μέχρι et ἀχρι is (contrary to the opinion of Tittmann, Synon. p. 38 f.)
purely fanciful. See Friztsche, p. 308 ff. and van Hengel in loc.
— καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς μὴ ἀμαρτήσαντας κ.τ.λ.] even over those1 who have not sinned like Adam, that is, have not like him transgressed a positive divine command. Even these it did not spare. It is erroneous with Chrysostom (but not Theodoret and Theophylact) to connect ἐπὶ τῷ ὀμοίωματι κ.τ.λ. with ἐβασιλεύ. So Finckh again does, following Castalio and Bengel:
"quia illorum eadem atque Adami transgredientis ratio fuit . . . .
i.e. propter reatum ab Adamo contractum." Erroneous for this reason, that Paul, apart from the little children or those other-

1 βασιλεύω with ἐπὶ is a Hebraism (יָפ). Compare Luke i. 38, xix. 14; 1
Sam. viii. 9, 11; 1 Macc. i. 16.
wise incapable of having sin imputed, whom however he must have indicated more precisely, could not conceive at all (iii. 23) of persons who had not sinned \( \mu \eta \delta \mu \alpha \tau \rho \theta \sigma \alpha \tau \tau \varepsilon \) without any modal addition more precisely defining it), and a limitation mentally supplied \( \sigma \nu e \lambda e \gamma e \pi e c e r a r n t u n t, \) Bengel) is purely fanciful. The \( \kappa a i, e v e n, \) refers to the fact that in the period extending from Adam till Moses, excluding the latter, positively given divine commands were certainly transgressed by individuals to whom they were given, but it was not \textit{these merely} who died (as must have been the case, had death been brought on by their own particular sins); it was \textit{also those},\footnote{Consequently the two classes, formed by Paul, are not to be so distinguished that the one shall embrace men before Noah, and the other the Noachian race (van Hengel). \textit{Both classes are included in the whole period from Adam till Moses.}} who etc. Their sin was not \( \epsilon \pi i t \tau o \delta \mu \omega i o n o . \) \( \tau \gamma i s \pi a r a B . \) \( \' \Delta \delta \mu \) (\( \epsilon \pi i \) used of the \textit{form}, in which anything occurs, see Bernhardy, p. 250); they did not sin in such a way, that their action was of like shape with the transgression of Adam, "quia non habebant ut ille \textit{revelatam certo oraculo} Dei \textit{voluntatem}," Calvin. For other definitions of the sense see Fritzschke, p. 316, and Reiche, \textit{Commentar. crit.} I. p. 45 ff. Reiche himself explains it of those who have transgressed no command \textit{expressly threatening death}. So also Tholuck. But this peculiar limitation is not suggested by the context, in which, on the contrary, it is merely the previous \( \mu \eta \delta \mu \tau o s \nu o m o n \) which supplies a standard for determining the sense of the similarity. According to Hofmann \( \kappa a i \epsilon \pi i t \tau o \nu e \) down to \( \' \Delta \delta \mu \) is meant to be one and the same with the previous \( \alpha \tau o \Delta \delta \mu \mu e x r i \) \textit{M} \( \nu o s i o s , \) inasmuch as a transgression similar to that of Adam could only then have occurred, "when God placed a people in the same position in which Adam found himself, when he received a divine command on the observance or transgression of which his life or death depended. This misconception, springing from the erroneous interpretation of \( \epsilon \phi i \phi i \pi a \nu e s \) \( \nu i a r t o n , \) is already excluded by \( \kappa a i, \)\footnote{Which necessarily assumes a class of sinners in the pre-legal period, whose sin was homogeneous with that of Adam. This also, in opposition to Mangold, p. 121, and Dietzsch, p. 98 ; according to whose and Hofmann's definition of the sense, Paul ought either to have omitted the \( \kappa a i \) altogether, or to have inserted it before \( \alpha \tau o \) \( \' \Delta \delta \mu \).} as well as, pursuant to the tenor of thought, by the fact that in the \textit{pre-legal} period in question all those, who transgressed a command divinely given to them by way of revelation, sinned like Adam. Their sin had thereby the same moral form as the act of Adam; but not only had they to die, but also (kai) those who had not been in that condition of sinning. Death reigned over the latter also.—The genitive with ὁμοιόμενοι is not that of the subject (Hofmann), but of the object, as in i. 23, vi. 5, viii. 3; the sins meant are not so conceived of, that the παράβασις of Adam is homogeneously repeated in them, but so that they are, as to their specific nature, of similar fashion with it, and consequently belong to the same ethical category. They have morally just the same character. As to ὁμοιόμενα see on i. 23.—οἵς ἐστι τῦτος τοῦ μέλλοντος] who— to educe now from vv. 13, 14 the result introduced in ver. 12, and so to return to the comparison there begun—is type of the future (Adam). Theophylact correctly paraphrases: ὃς γὰρ ὁ παλαιὸς Ἀδὰμ πάντας ὑποδέχεσθαι ἐποίησε τῷ οἰκείῳ πταίσματι (by bringing upon them death), καίτων μὴ πταίσαντας, οὕτως ὁ Χριστὸς ἐδικάιωσε πάντας, καίτων μὴ δικαιώσεως ἡξία ποιήσαντας. Compare 1 Cor. xv. 45. Koppe, following Bengel, takes μέλλων as neuter (of that, which should one day take place), and ὃς for ὁ. This agreement of the relative with the following substantive would perhaps be grammatically tenable (Hermann, ad Viger. p. 708; Heind. ad Phaedr. p. 279), but seeing that Ἀδὰμ immediately precedes it, and that the idea of Christ being ὁ ἐσχάτος Ἀδὰμ is a Pauline idea (1 Cor. 15.), it is quite unjustifiable to depart from the reference of the ὃς to Adam; and equally so to deny to the μέλλων its supplement from the immediately preceding Ἀδὰμ, and to take it as “the man of the future” (Hofmann), which would nevertheless yield in substance the same meaning.—τῦτος] type, so that the παράβασις is the anti-type (1 Pet. iii. 21). The type is always something historical (a person, thing, saying), which is destined, in accordance with the divine plan, to prefigure something corresponding to it in the future,—in the connected scheme of sacred historical teleology, which is to be discerned from the standpoint of the antitype. Typical historical parallels between Adam and the Messiah (so that the latter is even expressly termed the last Adam) are found also in Rabbinical authors (e.g. Neve Schalom f. 160, 2: “Quemadmodum homo primus fuit primus in peccato, sic Messias erit ultimus ad auferendum peccatum penitus;” Neve Schalom 9, 9: Adamus postremus est Messias”), and are based in them on the doctrine of the ἀποκατάστασις πάντων. Compare the passages in Eisenmenger, entdeckt. Judenth. II. p. 819, 823 ff. Paul based this typology of his on the atoning work of Christ and its results, as the whole discussion shows; hence in his present view Christ as the μέλλων Ἀδάμ is not still to come, but is already historical. Comp. Chrysostom; also Theodore of Mopsuestia: ὁσπέρ οἱ ἐκεῖνοι (Adam) τῶν χειρόνων ἡ πάροδος ἐγένετο, κύριῳ διὰ τούτου τῆς τῶν κρειττόνων ἀπολαίεσθαι τῆς ἀφορμῆς ἐδεξάμεθα. For this reason however ὁ μέλλων may not, with Fritzsche and de Wette, be referred to the last coming of Christ; but must be dated from the time of Adam, in so far, namely, as in looking back to the historical appearance of Adam, Christ, as its anti-type, is the future Adam (comp. ὁ ἑρχόμενος).

REMARK 1. Those who refer ἐφ' ὁ πάντες ἡμαρτον to the proper sins of individuals, or even to the principle of the ἡμαρτία dwelling in them, ought not to find, as Baumgarten-Crusius, Umbreit, and Baur still do, the proof for the ἡμαρτίαστιν in ver. 13 f.; for how in the connection of the passage could any proof for the universality of sin be still required? Certainly just as little as in particular for the fact, that, with death already existing in the world (Dietzsch), all individuals have sinned. Consistently with that reference of the ἐφ' ὁ π. ἡμαρτον there must rather have been read from ver. 13 f. the proof for this, that the death of all results from the proper sins of all. But how variously has this demonstration been evolved! Either: although sin has not until Moses been imputable according to positive law, yet each one has brought death upon himself by his sin (ver. 14), which proves the relative imputation thereof. So de Wette. Or: although sin, which even from Adam till Moses was not lacking, be not imputed by a human judge in the absence of positive law, yet the reign of death (ver. 14) shows that God has imputed the pre-Mosaic sins. So Fritzsche. Or: in order to show “in Adamo causam quacrendam esse, cur hominum peccata morte secuta sit,” Paul declares that death has reigned over all from Adam till Moses, whether they sinned like Adam or differently. So van Hengel; comp. also Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 264. Or: not even in the period from Adam till Moses was sin absent; but the clear proof to the contrary is the dominion of death in this period. So Baur, and with a substantially similar view of the mode of inference ab effectu ad causam, Rothe also. But however it may be turned, the probative element has first of all to be read into the passage; and even then the alleged proof (ver. 14) would only be a reasoning backwards from the historical phenomenon in ver. 14 to the cause asserted by ἐφ' ὧν π. ἡμαρτ., and consequently a mere clumsy argument in a circle, which again assumes the assertion to be proved—id quod erat demonstrandum—in the phenomenon brought forward in ver. 14; and moreover utterly breaks down through the proposition that sin is not imputed in the absence of law. Ewald, in his former view (Jahrb. II.) rightly deduces from ver. 14: consequently it only appears the more certain, that death propagated itself to them only by means of Adam's," but attributes to this inference, consistently with his view of ἐφ' ὧν π. ἡμ., the sense: "that they all sinned unto death just in the same way as, and because, Adam had sinned unto it." In his later view (Sendschr. d. Ap. P.) he supposes that in connection with ἐφ' ὧν π. τ. ἡμ. the possible doubt may have arisen, whether it was so certain that death had come upon those oldest men from Adam till Moses in consequence of their sins? which doubt Paul properly answers in ver. 13 f., thereby all the more corroborating the truth. But the emergence of a doubt is indicated by nothing in the text; and that doubt indeed would have been dissipated by the very fact that those men were dead, which does not prove however that they died on account of their sins. Thus also the matter would amount to a reasoning in a circle. According to Tholuck the argument is: that death has passed upon all through the disposition to death (?) introduced in Adam, and not through their own sins, is plain from the fact, that pre-Mosaic sin, though not positively threatened with death, as in the case of Adam and in the law, was nevertheless placed under its dominion." Only thus, he holds, is the logical relation between the clauses apparent. In general this is right; but by this very circumstance Tholuck just attests the correctness of our explanation of ἡμαρτ., namely, that it is not meant of individuals. The caution which he inserts against this inference, namely, that Paul regards the actual sins "only as the relatively free manifestations of the hereditary sinful substance," is of no avail, seeing that they remain always acts of individual freedom, even though the latter be only relative, while the argument in our passage is such that the individual's own sins, as cause of death, are excluded. Ernesti joins ἡμαρτία δὲ κ.τ.λ. with ἐφ' ὧν κ.τ.λ.: "since indeed all have sinned, but sin is not placed to account," etc. The ἄχρι... κόσμῳ, standing in the way, he encloses in a parenthesis. But why this parenthesis? The πάντες ἡμαρτ., in the sense of iii. 23, needed no proof; and it could not occur to any one to date sin only from the epoch of the law. The ἄχρι... κόσμῳ acquires its pertinent significance when, as an essential element in the syllastic deduction, it is closely united with the axiom \( \text{ἀμαρτία} \ δὲ \ οὐκ \ \text{ἔλλογ} \ \kappa.\tau.\lambda. \) attached to it, and is not set aside in a parenthesis as if it might equally well have been omitted. According to Holsten the argument turns on the fact that objective sin entered the world through Adam, and death along with it;

1 According to the correlation of the ideas sín and dæth, comp. Baur, neut. Theol. p. 138.
thus death has passed upon \textit{all} because \textit{all} were sinners (in the objective sense)—a diffusion by means of one over the whole, which is illustrated by the thought that, while sin was in the world until the law, this sin could not, in the absence of law, be imputed as subjective guilt; but death became ruler, in accordance with the objective divine law of the universe, with a tyrannical power not conditioned by the subjects of its rule, even over those who were indeed (objectively) sinners, but not (subjectively) trans-gressors like Adam. Holsten has certainly in this way avoided the error of making universal death conditioned by the subjective sin of the individuals; but he has done so by means of a distinction between objective and subjective sins, which is so far from being suggested by the text, that it was just through Adam that the subjective sin, joined with the consciousness of guilt, entered the world, and therefore the divine action, in decreeing death upon sin, could not be conceived as indifferent to the subjectivity. Hofmann—who sees in \( \text{ἀχρι} \ldots \ \κόσμῳ \ \alpha \) [very unnecessary] ground assigned for the \( \text{ἐφ' οὗ \ \τ. \ ἡμαρτον} \) upon which there follows in \( \text{ἀμαρτία} \ \delta \kappa.\tau.\lambda. \) a declaration regarding death in the pre-legal period, according to which this could not have been caused by the sinning of that period, seeing that on the contrary the latter took place when death was already present—confuses the entire exposition of the passage, and by his artificial rendering of \( \text{ἐφ' οὗ} \ \πάντες \ \ἡμαρτον \) makes the understanding of it impossible. In general the entire history of the interpretation of our passages shows that when once the old ecclesiastical explanation of \( \text{ἐφ' οὗ} \) (this however taken as \textit{propterea quod}) \( \πάντες \ \ἡμαρτον \) is regarded as the Charybdis to be shunned at all hazards, the falling into the Scylla becomes unavoidable. Even Klöpper, in attributing to \( \πάντες \ \ἡμαρτον \) the underlying thought that Adam's sin penetrated to all, and Dietzsch, by his simplifying and modification of Hofmann's exposition, have not escaped this danger.

Remark 2. Since Paul shows from the absence of \textit{imputation} (\textit{ἐλλογεῖται}) in the absence of law, that the death of men after Adam cannot have been occasioned by their own individual sins, but only by Adam's, in which all were partakers in virtue of their connection with him as their progenitor, he must have conceived that Adam's sin brought death not merely to himself but also at the same time to all by way of imputation; and therefore the imputatio peccati Adami in reference to the death, to which all are subjected, certainly results from our passage as a Pauline doctrine. But as to original sin (not however as to its condemnableness in itself), the testimony of our passage is only indirect, in so far, namely, as the εφ' ὃ πάντες ἠμαρτον, according to its proper explanation and confirmation in ver. 13 f., necessarily presupposes in respect to Adam's posterity the habitual want of justitia originalis and the possession of concupiscence.

Ver. 15. But not as is the trespass, so also is the gift of grace. Although Adam and Christ as the heads of the old and new humanity are typical parallels, how different nevertheless are the two facts, by which the former and the latter stand to one another in the relation of type and antitype (on the one side the παράπτωμα, on the other the χάρισμα)—different, namely (εἰ γάρ κ.τ.λ.), by the opposite effects issuing from those two facts, on which that typical character is based. The question is not as to the different measure of efficacious power, for this extends alike in both cases from one to all; but as to the different specific kind of effect; there death, here the rich grace of God—the latter the more undoubted and certain (πολλοῦ μᾶλλον), as coming after that deadly effect, which the παράπτωμα had. “For if (εἰ purely hypothetical) through the trespass of one the many died, much more has the grace of God and the gift by grace of the one man Jesus Christ become abundant to the many.” On τὸ παράπτωμα comp. Wisd. x. 1. The contrast is τὸ χάρισμα, the work of grace, i.e. the atoning and justifying act of the divine grace in Christ, comp. ver. 17 ff. — οἱ πολλοὶ the many,

1 Nor with the N. T. generally, which teaches an extra-temporal mode of existence only in the case of Christ. The extra-temporal condition and fall supposed by Müller are not only outside of Scripture, but at variance with it.

2 This contrast forbids the taking ἅλλ' οὖν... χάρισμα interrogatively (Mehring and earlier expositors), and so getting rid of the negation.

3 The unhappy and happy consequences respectively of the παράπτωμα and the χάρισμα are not included in these conceptions themselves (in opposition to namely, according to ver. 12 (comp. ver. 18), the collective posterity of Adam. It is in substance certainly identical with πάντες, to which Mehring reverts; but the contrast to the εἰς becomes more palpable and stronger by the designation of the collective mass as οἱ πολλοὶ. Grotius erroneously says: "fere omnes, excepto Enocho," which is against vv. 12, 18. Such a unique, miraculous exception is not taken into consideration at all in this mode of looking at humanity as such on a great scale. Erroneous also is the view of Dietzsch, following Beck, that οἱ πολλοὶ and then τοὺς πολλοὺς divide mankind into two classes, of which the one continues in Adamite corruption (!) while the other is in Christ raised above sin and death. This theory breaks down even on the historical aorist ἀπέθανον and its, according to ver. 12, necessary reference to the physical death which was given with Adam's death-bringing fall for all, so that they collectively (including also the subsequent believers) became liable to death through this παράπτωμα. See on ver. 12. It is moreover clear from our passage that for the explanation of the death of men Paul did not regard their individual sin as the causa efficiens, or even as merely medians; and it is a meaning gratuitously introduced, when it is explained: "the many sinned and found death, like the one Adam," (Ewald, Jahrb. II., van Hengel and others). — πολλοὶ μᾶλλον] as in ver. 9, of the logical plus, i.e. of the degree of the evidence as enhanced through the contents of the protasis, multo potius. "If Adam's fall has had so bad an universal consequence, much less can it be doubted that," etc. For God far rather allows His goodness to prevail than His severity; this is the presupposition on which the conclusion rests. Chrysostom has correctly interpreted π. μᾶλλα, in the logical sense (πολλοὶ γὰρ τοῦτο εὐλογοῦτερον), as does also Theodoret, and recently Fritzsche, Philippi, Tholuck (who however takes in the quantitative plus as well), van Hengel, Mangold, and Klöpper. The quantitative view (Theophylact: οὐ τοσοῦτον μόνον, φησίν, ὥφελθεν οὖν Dietzsch). Nor is παράπτωμα to be so distinguished from παράβασις, that the former connotes the unhappy consequences (Grotius, Dietzsch). On the contrary, the expressions are popular synonyms, only according to different figures, like fall (not falling away) and trespass. Comp. on παράπτωμα. Ez. xiv. 13, xv. 8, xviii. 24, 26, iii. 20; Rom. iv. 25, xi. 11; 2 Cor. v. 19; Gal. vi. 1; Eph. ii. 1 et al.
THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

Χριστοῦ, ὑπὸ ἐβλαψεν ὁ Ἀδὰμ; also Erasmus, Calvin, Beza, Calovius and others; and in modern times Rückert, Reiche, Kollner, Rothe, Nielsen, Baumgarten-Crusius, Maier, Hofmann, and Dietzsch is opposed to the analogy of vv. 17, 18; and has also against it the consideration, that the measure of punishment of the παραπτώμα (viz. the death of all) was already quantitatively the greatest possible, was absolute, and therefore the measure of the grace, while just as absolute (εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς), is not greater still than that measure of punishment, but only stands out against the dark background of the latter all the more evidently in its rich fulness. — ἡ χάρις τ. Θεοῦ κ. ἡ δωρεά] the former, the grace of God, richly turned towards the many, is the principle of the latter (ἡ δωρεά = τὸ χάρισμα in ver. 15, the gift of justification). The δωρεά is to be understood κατ' εἰθοκίν, without supplying τοῦ Θεοῦ; but the discourse keeps apart with solemn emphasis what is cause and what is effect. — ἐν χάριτι .... Χριστοῦ is not with many expositors (including Rothe, Tholuck, Baumgarten-Crusius, Philipp, Mehring, Hofmann, and Dietzsch) to be joined with ἡ δωρεά (the gift, which is procured through the grace of Christ), but with Frötsche, Rückert, Ewald, van Hengel, and others, to be connected with ἐπερίσσευς (has become abundant through the grace of Christ)—a construction which is decisively supported, not indeed by the absence of the article, since ἡ δωρεά ἐν χάριτι might be conjoined so as to form one idea, but by the reason, that only with this connection the τῷ .... παραπτώματι in the protasis has its necessary, strictly correspondent, correlative in the apodosis. The divine grace and the gift have abounded to the many through the grace of Christ, just

1 The way would have been logically prepared for the quantitative plus by the hypothetical protasis only in the event of that which was predicated being in the two clauses of a similar (not opposite) kind; in the event therefore of its having been possible to affirm a salutariness of the παραπτώμα in the protasis. Comp. xi. 12; 2 Cor. iii. 9, 11; Heb. ix. 13 f., xii. 9, 25. The main objection which Dietzsch (following Rothe) raises against the interpretation of the logical plus, on the ground that we have here two historical realities before us, is by no means tenable. For even in the case of two facts which have taken place, the one may be corroborated and inferred from the other, namely, as respects its certainty and necessity. If the one has taken place, it is by so much the more evident that the other also has taken place. The historical reality of the one leaves all the less room for doubt as to that of the other. The second does not in this case require to be something still future, especially if it be an occurrence, which does not fall within the range of sensuous perception.
as the many died through the fall of Adam. The χάρις Ἡσυχίου Χριστοῦ is—as the genitive relation naturally suggests of itself, and as is rendered obviously certain by the analogy of ἡ χάρις τ. Θεοῦ—the grace of Jesus Christ, in virtue of which He found Himself moved to accomplish the λαστήριον, in accordance with the Father's decree, and thereby to procure for men the divine grace and the δωρεά. It is not therefore the favour in which Christ stood with God (Luther, 1545); nor the grace of God received in the fellowship of Christ (van Hengel); nor is it the steadily continued, earthly and heavenly, redeeming efficacy of Christ's grace (Rothe, Dietzsch). Comp. Acts xv. 11, 2 Cor. viii. 9; Gal. i. 6; Tit. iii. 6; 2 Cor. xii. 8, xiii. 13. The designation of Christ: τοῦ ἐνὸς ἀνθρώπον Ἐ. Χ., is occasioned by the contrast with the one man Adam. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 21; 1 Tim. ii. 5. To describe the divine glory of this One man (Col. i. 19) did not fall within the Apostle's present purpose; but it was known to the reader, and is presupposed in His χάρις (John i. 64).—τῇ τοῦ] "articuli nerviosissimi," Bengel.—εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς belongs to ἐπερίσσευ. The πολλοί are likewise here, just as previously, all mankind (comp. πάντας ἀνθρώπους, ver. 18). To this multitude has the grace of God, etc., been plentifully imparted (εἰς τ. π. ἐπερίσσευσε, comp. 2 Cor. i. 5), namely, from the objective point of view, in so far as Christ's act of redemption has acquired for all the divine grace and gift, although the subjective reception of it is conditioned by faith. See on ver. 18. The expression ἐπερίσσευσε (he does not say merely ἐγένετο, or some such word) is the echo of his own blessed experience.

Ver. 16. Continuation of the difference between the gift of grace and the consequence of the fall, and that with reference to the causal origination on either side in a numerical aspect. And not as through one, who has sinned, so is the gift, i.e. it is not so in its case—the state of the case there is the very reverse—as if it were occasioned δι' ἐνὸς ἀμαρτήσ. (like death

1 Dietzsch takes it differently, finding the progress of the argument in this, that at the end a state of life adequate to the divine law may be established. This view however rests on an erroneous exposition of διακώπα (see below), and generally on an erroneous mixing up of sanctification with justification—an intermingling to be avoided throughout the entire train of thought in our passage; comp. Pfleiderer in Hilgenfeld's Zeitschr. 1872, p. 167.
through Adam). The δι' ενός ἀμαρτήσ. indicates the unity of the person and of the accomplished sinful act; comp. Stölting. Beyond the simple εστί after δῶρημα nothing is to be supplied (so also Mangold), because the words without supplement are quite in accordance with the Greek use of ὡς (Bernhardy, p. 352, Stallbaum, ad Plat. Sympos. p. 179 E), and yield an appropriate sense, whereas none of the supplements that have been attempted are suggested by the context. It has been proposed, e.g. after ἀμαρτ. to supply θάνατος εἰς ἔλθεν (Grotius, Estius, Koppe), or τὸ κρίμα or κατάκριμα (Bengel, Klee, Reiche, Kollner; or after ὡς: τὸ (Beza), which is indeed impossible, but is nevertheless resorted to even by de Wette: "and not like that which originated through one that sinned, so is the gift," and Tholuck: "the gift has a different character from that which has come through the one man sinning."

Comp. Philippi, who like Rückert and Dietzsch supplies merely ἔγένετο after ἀμαρτ. (and then after δωρ.: εστί),—which however still yields no complete sentence, since the ἔγένετο is without a subject. The correct view in substance is taken by Rothe, Ewald, and van Hengel; while Fritzsch still calls in the aid of a supplement after ἀμαρτ. (τὸ παράπτομα ἔγένετο); and Hofmann even wishes mentally to supply to καὶ ἔτος ὑπὲρ ἐπεισεθευεν as predicate; whereas Mehring puts his rendering, which erroneously makes it a question (comp. on ver. 15), in this form: "And ought not the gift to be, as it was through one that sinned?"—τὸ μὲν γὰρ κρίμα κ.τ.λ.] sc. ἐστί; explanation of the point of difference previously specified: For the judicial sentence redounds from a single one to a sentence of condemnation, but the gift of grace from many trespasses to a sentence of justification.—τὸ κρίμα] quite general: the sentence which God pronounces as judge; comp. 1 Cor. vi. 7. For the kind of sentence, which this shall prove to be in the concrete result, is indicated only by the following εἰς κατάκριμα. The explanation which refers it to the divine

1 It would run thus: "The gift has not so accrued abundantly to the many and passed over to them, as was the case when such a bestowment ensued through one that sinned." This supplement is already guarded against by the fact that κ. ὡς down to δῶρημα is the obvious parallel of ὡς ὡς τ. παραρ. down to χάριμα, and hence, like the latter, may not be supplemented further than by ἐστί. Any other course is arbitrary and artificial.
announcement contained in Gen. ii. 17 (Fritzsche, Dietzsch) is erroneous, because the latter is a threat, and not a κρίμα; and because the act of Adam must have already preceded the κρίμα. Others understand by it the sentence of punishment pronounced against Adam, which has become a sentence of punishment (sentence of death) against his posterity (κατάκριμα) (Reiche, Rückert, Nielsen, Baumgarten-Crusius, Krehl, de Wette, Maier, Hofmann); but wrongly, because they thus neglect the pointed interchange of κρίμα and κατάκριμα, and in εἰς κατάκριμα place the stress on the condemned subject, which however is not even mentioned. Linguistically erroneous is the view of Beza, Calixtus, Wolf, and others, that τ. κρίμα is the guilt. Nor does it mean the state of being finally adjudged (Stölting). Philippi, Tholuck, Ewald, and van Hengel hold the right view; while Rothe, with unnecessary refining and gratuitous importation, takes τὸ μὲν and τὸ δέ by themselves as subject, κρίμα and χάρισμα as predicates ("the one effect is a righteous judgment . . . . the other on the contrary a gift"). Dietzsch still more breaks up the sentence, making κρίμα and χάρισμα appositions, the former to τὸ μὲν, and the latter to τὸ δέ. — εἰς ἐνός] has, like ἐκ τολλῶν παραπτ. afterwards, the chief emphasis; ἐνός is masculine on account of the previous δι' ἐνός ἀμαρτήσεως, not neuter (παραπτώματος), as Rothe, Mehring, Dietzsch, Stölting and others think. This masculine however does not necessitate our taking τολλῶν also as masculine (Hofmann), which would in itself be allowable (comp. on 2 Cor. i. 11), but is here opposed by the consideration that Paul would have expressed the personal contrast to εἰς ἐνός more symmetrically and thoughtfully by the bare ἐκ τολλῶν. The Vulgate gives the right sense: "ex multis delictis." — εἰς] points to the motive cause, producing the event from itself: forth from one; see Kühner, II. 1, p. 399. Just in the same way the second ἐκ. — εἰς κατάκριμα] ec. esti, as in the first half of the verse, "ut una cum praesentibus praeterita tamquam eadem in tabella reprae-

1 In consequence of the way in which Hofmann has supplemented the first half of the verse, we should now take, in the one instance, ἐκ ἐνός εἰς κατάκριμα εἰς τὸν τολλὸν ἐπερεσευεν as predicate to τὸ κρίμα; and in the other instance, ἐκ τολλῶν παραπτωμάτων εἰς δικαίωμα εἰς τὸν τολλὸν ἐπερεσευεν as predicate to τὸ χάρισμα,—notwithstanding that in both cases a definition with εἰς is already given by Paul himself. How enigmatically and misleadingly he would have written!
sentet," van Hengel. One was the cause (moving the divine righteousness) that the judgment of God presents itself in the result as a punitive judgment (namely, that on account of the sin of one all should die, ver. 12); many sins, on the other hand, were the cause (moving the divine compassion) that the gift of grace results in concreto as a judgment of justification. In the one case an unity, in the other a multiplicity, was the occasioning cause. In the second clause also, following the analogy of κρίμα in the first, τὸ χάραιμα is conceived of generally and abstractly; the χάραιμα redounds in the concrete case εἰς δικαίωμα, when God, namely, forgives the many sins and declares their subjects as righteous. δικαίωμα, which is not, with Dietzsch, to be understood in the sense of the right framing of life through sanctification of the Spirit—a view contrary to linguistic usage and the context—is here also (comp. i. 32, ii. 26, viii. 4; Luke i. 6; Heb. ix. 1, 10; Rev. xv. 4; frequently in LXX. and Apocr., see Schleusner, Thes. II. p. 167 f.), according to its literal signification, in itself nothing else than judicial determination, judicial sentence; but it is to be taken here in the Pauline sense of the divine δικαίον, hence: the sentence defining righteousness, the ordinance of God in which He completes the δικαιοσύνη as actus judicialis, the opposite of κατάκριμα. Condition of righteousness (Luther and others), "the actual status of being righteous" (Hofmann), would be represented by δικαιοσύνη; satisfaction of justice, compensation of justice (Rothe, Mehring following Calovius, and Wolf), in accordance with which idea it may even designate punishment in classical usage (Plat. Legg. ix. p. 864 E), it might mean (Aristot. Eth. Nic. v. 7, 17: ἐπανόρθωμα τοῦ ἀδικήματος), but never does so in Biblical usage, to which this special definition of the sense is foreign. Paul could convey the sense declaration as righteous, verdict of justification, the more appropriately by δικαίωμα, since in Bar. ii. 17 the word is also substantially thus used (δώσωνι δόξαν κ. δικαίωμα τῷ κυρίῳ, in Hades they shall not praise God and declare Him righteous). Compare also 2 Sam. xix. 28; Jer. xi. 20; Prov. viii. 20; Rev. xv. 4, and xix. 8.1 The right view is taken by Fritzsche, Baumgarten-

1 Where τὰ δικαιώματα τῶν ἄγιων are the divine verdicts of justification, which the saints have received. The pure byssus is their symbol. Compare Ewald, Joh. Schr. in loc. p. 330. Düsterdieck understands it otherwise (righteous acts).
Crusius, Krehl, Philippi, Tholuck, Ewald, van Hengel, Holsten, Klöpper, and Pfleiderer; Rückert (also Maier) abides by means of justification, following merely the form of the word without empirical proof, while de Wette is undecided, and Stölting, without precedent from linguistic usage (comp. above Luther and Hofmann), understands the state of justification into which the state of grace (the χάρισμα) has passed. These two conceptions however exclude any idea of succession, and are concurrent.— The addition ἐκ τῆς D. Vulg. is a correct gloss; comp. ver. 18.

Ver. 17. The τὸ δὲ χάρισμα ἐκ τολλ. παραπτ. εἰς δικαίωμα, just asserted in contrast to the κατάκριμα proceeding from One, has now the seal of confirmation (γάρ) impressed on it through the triumphant certainty of the reign of life, which must belong to the recipients of the δικαίωμα in the approaching completion of the kingdom through the One Jesus Christ all the more undoubtedly, since the παράπτωμα of the One Adam brought death to reign. The effect of the second One (the Adam μελλόν) in the direction of salvation cannot in fact remain behind the effect which proceeded from the first One in the direction of destruction. On this rests the evidence of the blissful assurance, which with τολλ. μᾶλλον stands forth as it were from the gloom of the death previously described (comp. vv. 15, 9). The view that ver. 17 adduces the proof of the first half of ver. 16 being really proved by its second half (Hofmann), is to be rejected for this very reason, that the demonstration in ver. 16 is so full and clear in itself, especially after ver. 15, that there is no longer any necessity for receiving proof of its probative power, and no reader could expect this. It is quite arbitrary in Rothe, especially looking to the regular continuation by γάρ, to take ver. 16 as a parenthesis, and to attach ver. 17 to ver. 15. For other views of the connection see Dietzsch, who, in accordance with his own unsuitable rendering of δικαίωμα, finds here, the inner righteous condition of life verified by the final reign of life as its outward manifestation. — διὰ τοῦ ἐνὸς through the medium of the One, is added, although εἰς εἰν. παραπτώματι had been already said (see the critical remarks), in order to prepare the way with due emphasis for the διὰ τοῦ ἐνὸς Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ of the apodosis. Comp. on 2 Cor. xii. 7. — τολλ. μᾶλλον] Here also, as in ver. 15, the logical plus, the far greater certainty and evidence. — oi λαμβάνοντες] not those who believingly accept (Bengel, Rothe, van Hengel, and others), but simply the recipients. The present participle denotes the presence of the time of grace introduced by Christ, which stands in the middle between the former reign of death and the reign of life in the blissful future and determines the subjects of the latter; comp. ver. 11. — τίν περισσείαν] the abundant fulness (comp. ii. 4) of grace, referring to επερίσσευσε in ver. 15. — τῆς χάρ. κ. τ. δωρεάς] distinguished, as in ver. 15. But the emphasis of the description, climactic in the enthusiasm of victory, lies in the first instance on χάριτος, and then, as it advances, on δικαιοσύνη, in contrast to the former tragic παρατύπτωμα. — τῆς δικαιος.] is that, in which the δωρεά consists. The whole characteristic description of the subjects by οἱ . . . λαμβάνοντες already implies the certainty with which one may reckon in the case of those, who are honoured to receive such abundance, on the final βασιλεύειν ἐν ξωῇ through Christ. — ἐν ξωῇ βασιλεύσοντες] The word βασιλικ. itself, and more especially the future, renders it certain that the future Messianic ξωή is here meant; in which, as the opposite of the θάνατος, the pardoned and justified shall have the joint-dominion of the new world (viii. 21), the κληρονομία and its δόξα (viii. 17), under Christ the Head (1 Cor. iv. 8, vi. 2; 2 Tim. ii. 12), in whose final manifestation their life shall be gloriously manifested (Col. iii. 3 f.). Observe, further, that in the apodosis Paul does not say ἡ ξωῇ βασιλεύσει ἐπὶ τοὺς . . . λαμβάνοντας in accordance with the protasis, but appropriately, and in harmony with the active nature of the relation, i.e. of the future glorious liberty of the children of God, places the subjects actively in the foreground, and affirms of them the reigning in life.— The Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ is added as if in triumph, in contradistinction to the unnamed but well-known εἷς, who occasioned the dominion of death. Finally, we should not fail to notice how in this passage the glance proceeds from the status gratiae (λαμβάνοντες) backward to the status irae (ἐβασιλεύσει), and forward to the status gloriae (βασιλεύσοντες).

Ver. 18 f. Summary recapitulation of the whole parallel treated of from ver. 12 onwards, so that the elements of likeness and unlikeness contained in it are now comprehended in one utterance. Συναλλογίζεται ἐνταῦθα τὸ τῶν, Theodore of Mopsuestia.
The emergence of the ἄρα ὅν now ushering in the conclusion, as well as the corresponding relation of the contents of ver. 18 f. to the indication given by ὅς ἐστι τύπος τοῦ μελλόντος in ver. 14, carries us back to ver. 12; not merely to ver. 16 f. (de Wette, Fritzsche); or merely to vv. 15-17 (Hofmann, Dietzsch). The right view is taken by Philippi, Ewald, Holsten. — ἄρα ὅν] conclusive: accordingly then,1 in very frequent use by the Apostle (vii. 3, 25, viii. 12, ix. 16, 18, xiv. 12, 19; Gal. vi. 10; Eph. ii. 19 et al.), and that, contrary to the classical usage (Herm. ad Antig. 628, ad Viger. p. 823), at the beginning of the sentence. For the necessary (contrary to Mehring’s view) completion of the two sentences, which are in the sharpest and briefest manner compressed as it were into a mere exclamation (Ewald), it is sufficient simply to supply: res cessit, it has come, ἀπεβη (Winer, p. 546 [E. T. 734]), or ἔγένετο (Grotius). See Buttman’s neut. Gr. p. 338. As it therefore has come to a sentence of condemnation for all men through one trespass, so also it has come to justification of life (which has for its consequence the possession of the future Messianic life, comp. ver. 21; John v. 28, 29) for all men through one justifying judgment. The supplying of τὸ κρίμα ἔγένετο to the first, and τὸ χάρισμα ἔγένετο to the second half (so Fritzsche and Rückert), considering the opposite sense of the two subjects, renders the very compressed discourse somewhat singular. — δι’ ἕνος δικ.] through one judicial verdict (see on vv. 16, 19), namely, which was pronounced by God on account of the obedience of Christ rendered through His death. In strict logic indeed the δικαίωμα, which is properly the antithesis of κατάκριμα (as in ver. 16), should not be opposed to παράττεωμα; but this incongruity of a lively interchange of conceptions is not un-Pauline (comp. ver. 15). And it is thoroughly unwarranted to assign to δικαίωμα here also, as in ver. 16, significations which it has not; such as actual status of being righteous (Hofmann, Stölling), fulfilment of right (Philippi, Mangold), making amends (Rothe), righteous deed (Holsten), righteous life-condition of Christ (Dietzsch), with which a new humanity begins, act of justification (Tholuck), virtuousness (Baumgarten-Crusius), obedience (de Wette), and the like—definitions, in which for the most part regard is had to the act of the death of Jesus partly with and partly without the addition of the obedientia activa (comp. also Klöpper), while Fritzsche explains it of the incarnation and humiliation of Christ (Phil. ii. 5, 8) as His recte factum. Ewald interprets rightly: "through One righteous sentence," so also van Hengel and Umbreit. This alone is permitted by ver. 16. It is the One declaration of what is now of right, that is, the judicial verdict of the being reconciled, which took place on the part of God on the ground of Christ's sacrificial death—the consequence therefore, of His ἑξακοσιοῦ rendered in death—and which so far may appear as the antithesis to the fall of Adam with the same right as in ver. 15 the grace and gift were adduced as the contrast to that fall. To take the ἐνός as masculine (Vulgate, Theodoret, Theophylact, Erasmus, Luther, Calvin, and many others, including Tholuck, Fritzsche, Nielsen, Picard, Klöpper, Philippi, and Hofmann), is, seeing that no article is annexed, unwarranted according to the analogy of the immediate context, vv 17, 19; or Paul would have only expressed himself in a way liable to be misunderstood (how differently in ver 16!). Equally unwarranted is it to conceive the verb to be supplied in the apodosis as in the future (Philippi, Dietzsch). The judicial verdict is given and has redounded once and for ever to justification of eternal life for all; that is the great historical fact of salvation, which Paul has in view and sets forth as a concrete event (not under the point of view of a timeless abstraction, as Rothe thought) without considering how far it is now or in the future appropriated through faith by the subjects.—In both halves of the verse πάντες ἄνθρωποι is simply all men, as in ver. 12. At the same time it must be noted that in the second half the relation is conceived in its objectivity. On the part of God it has come to justification for all; thus the case stands objectively; the subjective attainment of His universal justification, the realisation of it for the individuals, depends upon whether the latter believingly apprehend the δικαιώμα for their own subjective δικαιώματι, or unbelievingly reject it. This dependence on a subjective condition, however, did not belong to the scope of our passage, in which the only object was to set forth the all-embracing blessed objective consequence of the ἐν δικαιώμα, in contrast to the all-destructive objective consequence of the \( \varepsilon n \) \( \pi a r a \pi t t o m a \). Hence just as little can anything be deduced from our passage as from xi. 32 in favour of a final \( \alpha p o k a t a s t a s i s \). The distinction imported by Hofmann and Lechler: that \( \pi a n t e s \) \( \alpha n t h r o p o i \) means all without distinction, and \( \pi a n t e s \) \( o i \) \( \alpha n t h r o p o i \), on the other hand, all without exception, the sum total of mankind, is purely fanciful; \( \pi a n t e s \) means \( o m n e s \), \( n e m i n e e x c e p t o \), alike whether the substantive belonging to it, in accordance with the connection, has or has not the article ("articulus, cum sensus fert additus vel omissus, discrimen sententiae non facit," Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 519). Only when the article stands before \( \pi a n t e s \) (consequently \( o i \) \( \pi a n t e s \) \( \alpha n t h \)) does the distinction emerge, that we have to think of "cunctos sive universos, i. e. singulos in unus corpus colligatos" (Ellendt, p. 521); comp. Krüger, § 50, 11, 12; Kühner, II. I. p. 545.

Ver. 19. This final sentence, assigning a reason, now formally by the recurrence of the \( \omega n t e r p \) points back to ver. 12, with which the whole chain of discourse that here runs to an end had begun. But that which is to be established by \( \gamma d r p \) is not the how of the parallel comparison, which is set forth repeatedly with clearness (in opposition to Rothe), but the blissful conclusion of that comparison in ver. 18: \( e i s \) \( \delta i k a i o m a n \) \( \xi o m a s \), upon which what is now expressed in ver. 19 impresses the seal of certainty. Dietzsch thinks that the purport, which is kept general, of ver. 18 is now to be established from the personal life. But the right interpretation of \( \delta i k a i o m a \) and of \( \delta i k a i o m i k a t a s t a t h\)-\( \sigma o n t a i \) is opposed to this view. — \( \alpha m a r t w o i \) \( k a t e s t a t h \). \( o i \) \( \pi a l l o i ] \) The many were set down as sinners; for according to ver. 12 ff. they were indeed, through the disobedience of Adam, put actually into the category of sinners, because, namely, they sinned in and with the fall of Adam. Thus through the disobedience of the one man, because all had part in it, has the position of all become that of sinners. The consequence of this, that they were subjected to punishment (Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact and others), were treated as sinners (Grotius, Flatt, Böhme, Krehl and others), and the like, is not here expressly included, but after the foregoing is obvious of itself. Fritzsch (comp. Koppe and Reiche) has: through their death they appeared as sinners. On the one hand this gratuitously imports 1

---

1 So also Julius Müller, v. d. Sünde, II. p. 485, ed. 5, evading the literal sense: "the many have become declared (as it were before the divine judgment-seat) as I. \[\text{8} \] something (through their death), and on the other it does violence to the expression κατεστάθη, which denotes the real putting into the position of sinners, whereby they de facto came to stand as sinners,1 peccatores constituti sunt (James iv. 4; 2 Pet. i. 8; Heb. v. 1, viii. 3; 2 Macc. xv. 2; 3 Macc. i. 7; Plat. Rep. p. 564 A; Conv. p. 222 B; examples from Xenophon in Sturz, II. p. 610), as is required by the ruling normal clause εφ’ ὑμῖν πάντες ἡμαρτον in ver. 12. The Apostle might have written εγενήθησαν (as Dietzsch explains the κατεστ.), but he has already in view the antithesis δίκαιοι καταστ., and expresses himself in conformity to it: hence also he does not put πάντες (which might have stood in the first clause), but οἱ πολλοί.— διὰ ὑπακοῆς] through obedience. The death of Jesus was κατ’ ἐξοχήν His obedience to the will of the Father, Phil. ii. 8; Heb. v. 8. But this designation is selected as the antithesis to the παρακοή of Adam, and all the more certainly therefore it does not here mean “the collective life-obedience” (Lechler, comp. Hofmann, Dietzsch and others), but must be understood as the deed of atonement willed by God (ver. 8 ff), to which we owe justification, and the ethical premiss of which on Christ's side is righteousness of life, although Hofmann improperly rejects this view as a groundless fancy.— δίκαιοι κατασταθήσονται] shall be placed in the category of righteous. The future refers2 to the future revelation of glory after the resurrection (Reiche, Fritzscbe, Klöpper); not to the fact that the multitude of believers is conceived of as not yet completed, and consequently the justifying of them is chiefly regarded as a succession of cases to come (comp. iii 20, 30). The how of the δίκαιοι κατασταθ. cannot be found in an actual becoming righteous, as result of the divine work of grace, at the sinners through the disobedience of the one man (as the determining initial point of sinful development), by the fact, that they have been subjected to death.” See on the other hand Hofmann, who properly urges that they did not become sinners only along with their dying, but immediately through Adam's disobedience. But the how of their doing so is in fact just the ἐφ’ ὑμῖν πάντες ἡμαρτον, according to our conception of these words.

1 Dietzsch should not have raised the objection that it ought to have been εἰς ἡμαρτωλοῖς, or επὶ ἡμαρτωλόις. See generally Kühner, II. 1, p. 274.

2 Corresponding to the βασιλείανσου in ver. 17, and hence not to be explained in a mere general way of the certain expectation or conviction (Mehring), as Hofmann also takes it in the sense of μέλλει λογιζεσθαι, iv. 24. Comp. on the other hand ii. 13, 16; and see on Gal. v. 5.
close of the saving process (Dietzsch), which would offend against the whole context since ver. 12, and anticipate the contents of ch. vi. In truth the mode which Paul had in view is beyond doubt, after the development of the doctrine of justification in chs. iii. iv. God has forgiven believers on account of the death of Christ, and counted their faith as righteousness. Thus the obedience of the One has caused that at the judgment the πολλοί shall by God's sentence enter into the category of the righteous, as the disobedience of the One had caused the πολλοί to enter the opposite. In both cases the causa meritoria is the objective act of the two heads of the race (the sin of Adam—the death of Christ), to whom belong the πολλοί on both sides; while the subjective mediating cause is the individual relation to those acts (communion in Adam's fall—faith). It is a mistake therefore to quote this passage against the Protestant doctrine of justification (Reithmayr and Bisping), as if the making righteous were designated as sanctification. But we are not entitled to carry the comparison between Adam and Christ further than Paul himself has done.

Vv. 20, 21. The comparison between Adam and Christ is closed. But in the middle between the two stood the law! How therefore could Paul leave unnoticed the relation of the law to both, the relation of this essential intervening element in the divine plan of salvation, the continuity of which was not to be hindered by the law, but, on the contrary, advanced to its blissful goal? The mention of it presented itself necessarily to him, especially after the utterance already contained in ver. 13, even without our thinking of an opponent's objection, or, at least, of persons who fancied that they must themselves furnish something in order to secure for themselves eternal life (Hofmann); but it cannot be regarded as the proper goal of the entire discussion (Th. Schott), which would not at all correspond to so succinct an indication. — παρεσχάλθεν there came in alongside (of the ἀμαρτία, which had already come in, ver. 12) into the world. See Vigerus, ed. Herm. p. 651; and van Hengel in loc. Comp. Philo in Loesner, p. 252, especially de temul. p. 263 C, where παρεισέλθειν ἐσώτερα means juxta se intrare sinens. On the idea comp. Gal. iii. 19. The notion of secrecy (Vulgate: subintravit, comp. Erasmus, Annot., Send.) is not implied in παρά in itself, but would require to be suggested by the context, as in Gal. ii. 4; Pol. i. 7, 3; i. 8, 4; ii. 55, 3 (where λάθρα stands along with it); comp. παρεισάγω, παρεισδύω, παρεισφέρω κ.τ.λ., which likewise receive the idea of secrecy only from the context. But this is not at all the case here, because this idea would be at variance with the solemn giving of the law (Gal. iii. 19; Acts vii. 33), and the reverence of the Apostle for it (Rom. vii. 12 ff.) Reiche, Rothe, Tholuck, Rückert, and Philippi import the idea that the law is designated as an accessory institution, or its coming in as of subordinate importance in comparison with that of sin (Hofmann), as an element not making an epoch (Weiss, Dietzsch). It was not such, Gal. iv. 24, nor is this sense implied in the word itself. Linguistically incorrect (for παρεισέρχεται does not mean coming in between, but coming in alongside) is the view of others: that it came in the middle between Adam (according to Theodoret and Reithmayr, Abraham) and Christ (Calvin, Grotius, Estius, Baumgarten-Crusius, Usteri, Ewald, Bisping and others). Nor does παρεισάθηθεν mean: it came in in opposition thereto, i.e. in opposition to sin (Mehring). Such a reference must necessarily have been implied, as in Gal. ii. 4, in the context, but would be out of place here on account of the following ἵνα κ.τ.λ., which Mehring inappropriately takes as painful irony. Finally that παρά means obiter, ad tempus (Chrysostom, Theophylact, Cornelius à Lapide) is a pure fancy. — ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παράπτωμα in order that the transgression might be increased. The παράπτωμα can only be intended in the sense in which the reader must have understood it in virtue of the preceding text, ver. 15 ff., therefore of the Adamite transgression. This was the concrete destructive evil, which existed in the world as the beginning of sin and the cause of universal death. By the law, however, it was not to be abolished or annulled, but on the contrary (observe the prefixing of πλεονάσῃ) it was to be increased, i.e. to obtain accession in more and more παραπτώματι. If therefore τὸ παράπτωμα is not to be taken collectively (Fritzsche, de Wette, van Hengel and others) just as little is ἡ νὰ πλεονάσῃ to be rationalised so that it may be interpreted logice, of greater acknowledgment of sin (Grotius, Wolf, Nielsen, Baur), or of the consciousness of sin (J. Müller), since the corresponding ἀπερίπτερον cannot be so taken; nor so, that ἡ νὰ is to be explained as ecbatic (Chrysostom, and several Fathers quoted by Suicer, Thes. I. p. 1454, Koppe, Reiche), which is never correct, and is not justified by the groundless fear of a blasphemous and unpauline idea (Reiche). Comp. Gal. iii. 19; 1 Cor. xv. 56; and generally on i. 24. Augustine (in Ps. cii. c. 15) rightly says by way of describing the intervening aim referred to: "non crudeliter hoc fecit Deus, sed consilio medicinae; ... augetur morbus, crescit malitia, quaeritur medicus et totum sanatur." — παράπτωμα and ἀμαρτία are not certainly distinguished as Tittmann, Synon. p. 47, defines; nor yet, as Reiche thinks, simply thus, that both words indicate the same idea only under different figures (this would be true of παράπτωμα and ἀμαρτήμα), but in this way, that τὸ παράπτωμα invariably indicates only the concrete sin, the sinful deed; while ἡ ἀμαρτία may have as well the concrete (as always when it stands in the plural, comp. on Eph. ii. 1) as the abstract sense. It has the latter sense in our passage, and it appears purposely chosen. For if the Adamite transgression, which was present in the world of men as a fact and with its baneful effect, received accession through the law, so that this evil actually existing in humanity since the fall increased, the sum total of sin in abstracto, which was among men, was thereby enlarged; the dominion of sin became greater, both extensively and intensively (comp. Lipsius, Rechtfertigungsl. p. 73). Therefore the discourse progresses thus: oὐ ὅτι ἐπλέονασεν ἡ ἀμαρτία, and then ἐβασιλ. ἡ ἀμαρτία. — oὐ] where, local, of the domain, where etc. This field is generally the world of men, in which, however, the increase in sin here meant came from the people of the law, from Israel; but without the sphere of the oὐ being limited to the latter, since immediately, in ver. 21, he brings forward the universal point of view as it prevails throughout the section (in opposition to Hofmann). The temporal rendering: when (Grotius, de Wette, Fritzsche, Stölting) is likewise linguistically correct (time being represented under the aspect of space, comp. ἄφες o' and the like), but less in harmony with the analogous passages, iv. 15; 2 Cor. iii. 17 (οὗ .... ἐκεί). — ἐπερεπερίσσερ] it became over-great, supra modum redundavit. The ἐπελεύνασεν had to be surpassed. Comp. 2 Cor. vii. 4; 1 Tim. i. 14; Mark vii. 37; 2 Thess. i. 3. But that it had surpassed itself (Hofmann), is a definite reference gratuitously introduced. The two correlative verbs are related simply as comparative and superlative. — ἵνα ὅσπερ κ.τ.λ.] in order that, just as (formerly) sin reigned in virtue of death, so also (divine) grace should reign by means of righteousness unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. This is the whole blessed aim of the ἐπερεπερίσσερ. ἡ χάρις. Rothe incorrectly desires to treat oὐ δὲ .... χάρις as a parenthesis. This proposition is in fact so essential, that it is the necessary premiss for the opening up of that most blessed prospect. See moreover Dietzsch. — εἰ τῷ θανάτῳ] not unto death (Luther, Beza, Calvin, and many others), nor yet in death as the sphere of its rule (Tholuck, Philippi), but instrumentally, corresponding to the antithesis διὰ δικαιοσύνης εἰς τοῦ αἰώνον (which belong together). Sin has brought death into the world with it, and subjected all to death (ver. 12), εφ' ὃ πάντες ἡμαρτον; thus sin exercised its dominion in virtue of death. This dominion however has given way to the dominion of grace, whose rule does not indeed abolish death, which having once entered into the world with sin has become the common lot of all, in itself, but accomplishes its object all the more blissfully, in that it confers a righteousness redounding to everlasting life. And grace exercises this bliss-bringing rule through the merit of its personal Mediator (πρὸςεὖν, Chrysostom) Christ, who has earned it for men through His expiatory death. The full triumphant conclusion, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ κυρίου ημῶν (comp. vii. 25; 1 Cor. xv. 57 al.) belongs to the entire thought ἡ χάρις βασιλείας .... ζ. αἰώνον, upon which it impresses the seal. Here, also, the δικαιοσύνη is the righteousness of faith (not of life).

1 The pregnant sense, which Hofmann, on ver. 14, attributes to the βασιλείαν, and seeks to apply analogically here also (comp. Dietzsch), is here least of all appropriate.
CHAPTER VI.

Ver. 1. ἐπιμένομεν] approved by Mill, Griesb. and others; adopted by Lachm. Tisch. and Fritzsche. The Recepta is ἐπιmενοῦμεν, contrary to decisive evidence (A B D E F G, min.); also contrary to K P N, min., which have ἐπιμένομεν. Brought into conformity with ἐροῦμεν. — Ver. 11. After μὲν Elz. has ἐίναι against preponderating evidence. Supplementary addition, which is also variously placed. Notwithstanding Tisch. (8) has adopted it, but before νεκροῦς, following B C N*. — τῶ κυρίῳ ἡμῶν also, which Elz. has after Ἰσσοῦ, is, according to decisive testimony, not genuine (an ascetic addition). — Ver. 12. υπάκ. ταῖς ἐπιθ. αὐτοῦ so also Lachm. and Tisch. following A B C N*, min., and most vss. and Fathers. D E F G Clar. Boern. Iren. Vict. tunun., have υπακουέναι αὐτῷ. Preferred by Rinck, and adopted by Scholz and Fritzsche. The reading of Elz.: υπάκ. αὐτῇ ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθ. αὐτῶ has least evidence. The most strongly attested υπάκ. ταῖς ἐπιθ. αὐτῶ appears to have been the original. From it the υπάκ. αὐτῇ arose through αὐτῇ being marginally annexed to ταῖς ἐπιθ. αὐτῷ as a gloss, to render it apparent, that in the case of the lusts of the body the ἀμαρτία (original sin) was to be understood. This gloss was adopted partly instead of τ. ἐπιθ. αὐτῶ (so υπάκ. αὐτῇ arose); and partly along with τ. ἐπιθ. αὐτῶ, which latter course occasioned a connecting ἐν, and gave rise to the Recepta. — Ver. 15. ἀμαρτίσωμεν] A B C D E K L P N, min. and Clem. have ἀμαρτίσωμεν. Recommended by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. Tisch. and Fritzsche, and rightly on account of the decisive evidence in its favour. — Ver. 21. τὸ γὰρ τέλος] Lachm. reads τὸ μὲν γὰρ τέλος in agreement with B D* E F G N* § 73, Syr. p. Theodoret. Rightly: how easily might the μὲν so-tilarium be lost under the hands of unskilled copyists! Comp. Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 313.

Chs. vi.-viii. Moral results from the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ. Chapter

1 Thus Paul certainly passes over from the field of the gaining salvation to that of its moral preservation; but not, as Th. Schott thinks, with a view to show the non-necessity of the law for the latter and so to justify his acting as Apostle to the Gentiles. In ch. vi. the law in fact is mentioned not as unnecessary,
vi. shows how it, so far from furthering immorality, on the contrary excludes the latter from the Christian state, and for the first time rightly establishes, promotes, and quickens true morality. Chap. vii. shows the same in relation to the law; and ch. viii. sets forth the blessed condition of those who as justified are morally free.

Ch. vi. 1-14. Continuance in sin in order that grace may abound — that is a thing utterly opposed to the fellowship with Christ, into which we are brought by baptism; for we are thereby rendered dead unto sin, and translated into a new moral life. Correspond therefore (vv. 12-14) to this new relation (your ideal, ver. 14) by your conduct.

Ver. 1. ὅτι In consequence of what is contained in v. 20, 21. — With ἐπιμένωμεν κ.τ.λ. Paul proposes to himself, as a possible inference from what he had just said "de pleonasmo gratiae" (Bengel), the problem, whose solution in the negative was now to be his further theme—a theme in itself of so decisive an importance, that it does not require the assumption of a Jewish-Christian church (Mangold) to make it intelligible. On the introduction in interrogative form by τί οὖν ἐρωθύνει, comp. Dissen, ad Dem. de cor. p. 346 (τί οὖν φησί δεῖν;). As however the "what shall we say then?" inquires after a maxim in some sort of way to be inferred, the deliberative "shall we continue, etc.?" could at once follow directly, without any need for supplying before it a repeated ἐρωθύνει, or μη ἐρωθύνει ὅτι, and for taking ἐπιμένωμεν in a hortatory sense (van Hengel, Hofmann). — ἐπιμένωμεν τῇ ἁμαρτ., to continue in sin, not to cease from it. Comp. xi. 22 f.; Col. i. 23; 1 Tim. iv. 16; Acts xiii. 43; Xen. Hell. iii. 4, 6; Oec. 14, 7: ἐπιμένειν τῷ μη ἀδικεῖν.

Ver. 2. Μὴ γένοιτο] Let it not be (see on iii. 4), namely, that we continue in sin. — οὗτως] as those who, contains the reason (of the πῶς ἦτ τ. κ.τ.λ.). See on i. 25. The relative clause is put first with rhetorical emphasis, in order at once to make the absurdity of the maxim plainly apparent. Comp. Kühner, II. 2, p. 1104; Bernhardy, p. 299. — ἀπεθάνευτο τ. ἁμαρτ.] The dying to sin, which took place by baptism (see ver. 3), is the abandonment of all life-communion with it experienced in himself by the but as the contrast to the state of grace (ver. 14 f.); and ch. vii. is occupied with something far loftier than its non-necessity. Of the justification of his apostolic working among the Gentiles, and of its bearing on the law, the Apostle says nothing.
convert (Col. ii. 20; Gal. ii. 19, vi. 14; 1 Pet. ii. 24). Comp. Theodoret: ἡμοῖς, φησὶ, τὴν ἀμαρτίαν καὶ νεκρός αὐτῷ γέγονας. This moral change, which has taken place in him, has put an end to the determining influence of sin over him; in relation to it he has ceased to be still in life. Similar is the Platonic conception in Macrob. Somn. Scip. i. 13: “mori etiam dicitur, cum anima adhuc in corpore constituta corporeas illecebras philosopia docente contemnit et cupiditatum dulces insidias reliquasque omnes exuit passiones.” Michaelis, Cramer, Storr, Flatt, Nitzsch (de discr. revelat. etc. II. p. 233) take the sense to be: who on account of sin have died (with Christ), i.e. who have to regard ourselves as if, on account of sin (or Nitzsch: “ad eripiendam peccati vim mortiferam”), we had ourselves endured what Christ suffered. But in this view the main point “with Christ” is arbitrarily imported; and see ver. 11.— πῶς denotes the possibility which is negated by the question. The having died to sin, and the living in it (as the life-element, comp. Gal. ii. 20), are mutually exclusive. — ἐξομολογοῦμαι purely future. How is it possible that we shall be living in it (in its fellowship) still (ἐρά), namely, at any future time whatever after the occurrence of that ἀπεθάνομεν? The very weakly attested reading preferred by Hofmann, ἐξομολογοῦμαι, is only a case of mechanical conformity with ἐπιμελέομαι in ver. 1.

Ver. 3. *H] or, if this (ver. 2) should still appear doubtful. See Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 61; Baeumlein, Partik. p. 132. Comp. vi. 1.— ἀνωτέρω] presupposes an acquaintance with the moral nature of baptism; it must in fact have been an experimental acquaintance. With this knowledge, how absurd would be that ἐξομολογοῦμαι ἐν αὐτῷ! Comp. 1 Cor. vii. 2.— ἐστάλα] all we who, not stronger than οἴτινες, but put differently; not characterising, but designating the whole collectively. — ἐβάπτισασθημεν eis X. ἐς τὸν Θάν. κ.τ.λ.] we, who were baptized in reference to Christ Jesus¹ (we who through baptism became those specifically belonging to Him), were baptized in reference to His death; i.e. we were brought through our baptism into the fellowship of His death; so that we have a real share ethically in His death, through the cessation of all our life for sin. Theodore of Mopsuestia: τὸ βάπτισμα κοινωνίας ποιεῖ τοῦ θανάτου τοῦ Χριστοῦ. Ambrosiaster: “cum baptizamur, commorimur Christo;” Bengel: “perinde est, ac si eo momento Christus pro tali homine, et talis homo pro Christo pateretur, moreretur, sepeliretur.” This interpretation, namely of the spiritual fellowship produced through baptism (prepared for by the repentance and πίστις that preceded baptism, accomplished by the baptism itself, Gal. iii. 27; Col. ii. 11 f.; Tit. iii. 5), is required by the context in ver. 2 (ἀπεθάνομεν), ver. 4 (συνέκροιμεν), and ver. 5 f. It is therefore not the idea of imitation (Reiche, Köllner, following Grotius and others), but that of the dying along with (ἀνεβαίνομεν, ver. 6; Gal. ii. 20; comp. 2 Cor. v. 14) unto which, i.e. in order to the accomplishment of which in us, we were baptized. The efficient cause of this fellowship of death is the divine grace, which forgives sin and grants the Holy Spirit to him who becomes baptized; the means of this grace is baptism itself; the appropriating cause is faith, and the causa meritoria the death of Christ. 1 Observe here also, however, that the spheres of justification and sanctification are not intermixed. The justified person becomes sanctified, not the converse. In baptism man receives forgiveness of sins through faith (comp. Acts ii. 38; xxii. 16); justified by which he also becomes partaker of the virtue of the Holy Spirit in the sacrament unto new life (Tit. iii. 5). “Liberationem a peccati vel justificationem consequitur liberatio a domino peccati, ut justificati non vivant peccato, sed peccato mortui— which moreover has all the passages against it in which ἀναλίπτω is coupled with δοκεῖ (Matth. xxviii. 19; Acts ii. 38, x. 48, xix. 5; 1 Cor. i. 13)—but is based simply on the ethical consciousness of that intimate appertaining to Christ, into which baptism translates its recipients.

¹ ἐβαπτίζεται εἰς never means anything else than to baptize in reference to, in respect to; and the more special definitions of its import are furnished simply by the context. Comp. on Matth. xxviii. 19; 1 Cor. x. 2; Gal. iii. 27. — On εἰς X. ἐποίησιν comp. Acts ii. 38, viii. 16, xix. 5. Undoubtedly the name “Jesus” was named in baptizing. But the conception of becoming immersed into Christ (in Rückert and others, and again in Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 343) is to be set aside, and is not to be supported by the figurative expression in Gal. iii. 27. The mystic character of our passage is not produced by so vague a sensuous conception,

1 Namely as the atoms death (v. 6, 19, 21), the appropriation of which shall be attended with the saving effect of a new life belonging to Him, 2 Cor. v. 14, 15. If this death thus becomes “the end, once for all existent, of the relation of the world to God as determined by sin” (Hofmann), that is the divinely willed ethical result, which faith obtains from the ἀναλίπτω, inasmuch as the believer realises his being dead to the power of sin with Christ, who in His expiatory death underwent the killing power of sin and therewith died to that power (vv. 9, 10). Comp. ver. 10 f.
Domino,” Calovius. Compare ἀπελούσασθε, ἤγιόσθητε 1 Cor. vi. 11, and the remarks thereon. The latter is the fellowship in dying and living with Christ, which is accomplished in baptism by the operation of the Spirit; see on Gal. iii. 27; 1 Cor. xii. 13; Acts xix. 2f.; Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 345f. But it is of course obvious that the idea of the baptism of children was wholly foreign to this view of the Apostle based on experience.

Ver. 4. An inference from ver. 3, by which the impossibility indicated in ver. 2 is now made completely evident.—Buried with Him therefore (not merely dead with Him, but, as the dead Christ was buried in order to rise again, buried with Him also) were we, in that we were baptized into His death. The recipient of baptism, who by his baptism enters into the fellowship of death with Christ, is necessarily also in the act of baptism ethnically buried with Him (1 Cor. xv. 4), because after baptism he is spiritually risen with Him. In reality this burial with Him is not a moral fact distinct from the having died with Him, as actual burial is distinct from actual dying; but it sets forth the fulness and completeness of the relation, of which the recipient, in accordance with the form of baptism, so far as the latter takes place through κατάθεσις and ἀναθεσις (see Suicer, Thes.), becomes conscious successively. The recipient—thus has Paul figuratively represented the process—is conscious, (a) in the baptism generally: now am I entering into fellowship with the death of Christ, εἰς τοῦ θάνατον αὐτοῦ βαπτίζομαι; (b) in the immersion in particular: now am I becoming buried with Christ; (c) and then, in the emergence: now I rise to the new life with Christ. Comp. on Col. ii. 12.—εἰς τοῦ θάνατον is necessarily, after ver. 3, to be joined with διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσμου, in which case, since one can say βαπτίζομαι εἰς τι, the connecting article was not required (comp. on Gal. iii. 26; Eph. iii. 13); consequently: through baptism unto death. It is not however specially the death of Christ that is again meant, as if αὐτοῦ were again annexed; but the description is generalised, agreeably to the context, in a way that could not be misunderstood. Whosoever, namely, as Paul has just set forth in ver. 3, has been baptized unto the death of Christ, has in fact thereby received baptism unto death; i.e. such a baptism that, taken away by it from his previous vital activity, he has become one belonging to death, one who has fallen under its sway. This however is just that relation of moral death, which, in the concrete, is the fellowship of the death of Christ. The connection with σωματίκαιον, in which εἰς τ. θάνατον is sometimes referred to the death of Christ (Grotius, Baumgarten-Crusius), and sometimes to the death of sin (Calovius, Wolf, Winzer, Progr. 1831), is erroneous, for this reason, that whosoever is buried does not come into death, but is in it already; and hence “the becoming buried into death” would yield quite an incongruous conception. This also applies against the expedient tried by Hofmann of making θάνατος here the death-state of Christ, unto which we were given up. Even in this view that incongruity continues:¹ but after ver. 3 θάνατος can only be again death simply, not state of death (as if Paul could not have conveyed that sense by εἰς τοῦ μυθικοῦ, or εἰς τοῦ νεκροῦ, or in some other suitable way). Observe, moreover, how Paul here also, since he has the bodily resurrection of Christ in view,² mentions specially the correlative of the burial that preceded it. Comp. on 1 Cor. xv. 4.— ἡ ἡμεῖς τάφημεν ἐκανόν, and this statement of purpose has the chief importance, corresponding to the αὐτῶν ἡ ἡμεῖς καταφέρειν in ver. 2.— διὰ τῆς δόξ. τ. πατροῦ] through the majesty of the Father was the resurrection of Christ brought about. The δόξα, ἡ ἡμείς, the glorious collective perfection of God, certainly effected the raising of Jesus chiefly as omnipotence (1 Cor. vi. 14; 2 Cor. xiii. 4; Eph. i. 19 f.); but the comprehensive significance of the word—selected with conscious solemnity, and in highest accordance with the glorious victory of the Son—is not to be curtailed on
284 THE EPISODE OF PAUL TO THE ROMANS.

¹ This cannot be got rid of by any artificial turns (like that of Hofmann: “His burial removed Him from the sphere of sin expiated through His death . . . whereby His existence in the world of sin came to a complete close”). Certainly the θάνατος of the Lord, even regarded as a state, occurred at that great moment when He cries His τελευτάσαι and departs; and in nowise has He been translated into the θάνατος through His burial.

² i.e. His resurrection as respects the buried body; so that the latter no longer remained in the grave, but came forth thence living and immortal. That the body of Christ “vanished” and “made room” for a new pneumatic body (Holsten, z. Ev. d. Paul u. Petr. p. 133), is an unsuitable conception, seeing that the pneumatic body must necessarily have been assumed even in death, and independently of the burial of the old body. Thus the resurrection of Jesus would be nothing else than the change of body that took place in death.
that account (in opposition to Koppe, Baumgarten-Crusius, and earlier expositors). According to the invariable representation of the N. T. God is the raiser of Jesus (iv. 24, viii. 11; Acts ii. 24, 31 ff. et al.; see on John i. 19); but yet the δύνα of God does not in this case any more than elsewhere in the N. T. denote God Himself (Langer, Judenth. in Paläst. p. 210 ff.). Erroneously however Theodoret, Theophylact, and several Fathers explain: διὰ τ. δύνα τ. πατρ. τουτέστι διὰ τῆς οἰκείας θεότητος. Linguistic usage admits as in itself allowable the view of Castalio and Carpzov: "in paterna gloria resurrexit," so that διὰ would be used of the state; to which also van Hengel inclines. But, had Paul desired to express a relation corresponding to the ἐν καυ. σ. in the apodosis, he must have inserted ἐν also; since the conception of the raising of Jesus through the Father was one of so solemn importance, and all the more appropriate here, since believers also owe their moral resurrection-life to the Father of Christ (Eph. ii. 10 al.); it is in fact the life of regeneration. Besides, the paterna gloria was attained by Christ only through His ascension. See on Luke xxiv. 26. — ἐν καυ. τ. ζωῆς] in a new (moral) constitution of life; \(^1\) a stronger way of bringing out the idea of καυ. τ. ζωῆς, than ἐν ζωῇ καυ. would be, for which it does not stand (in opposition to Grotius, Koppe, Reiche, and others).

See Winer, p. 221 [E. T. 309]. Comp. vii. 6. According to van Hengel ζωῆς is the genitive of apposition: "in novo rerum statu, qui vita est." But this qui vita est is self-evident; and therefore the emphasis must remain upon καυ. τ. ζωῆς. This newness is the ethical analogue of the new estate in which Christ was alive from the dead, conceived in contrast to the παλαιότης which prevailed prior to baptism. Comp. ver. 8.

Ver. 5. Confirmatory elucidation (γάρ) of the previous ἵνα ὄσπερ κ.τ.λ.—σύμφωνος, which in classic authors usually means innate, naturally belonging to (see the passages from Plato in Ast, Lex. III. p. 313, Eur. Andr. 955; comp. 2 Macc. iii. 22), is here grown together (Theophr. de caus. plant. v. 5, 2; LXX. Zech. xi. 2; Amos ix. 14). This figurative expression represents the most intimate union of being, like our coalescent with anything (qui or quod coaluit cum aliqua re). Plat. Phaedr. p. 246 A; Aesch.

\(^1\) τὴν καυ. τ. πολεμέων τὴν κατὰ τὸν πάροντα βίον, ἐκ τῆς τῶν τρόπων γυμνότητι.

*Ὅτου γάρ ὁ πέρσιν γένος ἐστιν ἥφθος καὶ ὁ πενεκτής ἐλημων καὶ ὁ πραξις ἤμερος, καὶ ἑνεκαθα άνάστασις γέγονεν, Chrysostom.
Ag. and Klausen in loc. p. 111. In the classics συμφωνία is the more usual form for this idea, especially with γίνεσθαι (Plato, Soph. p. 247 D, Tim. p. 45 D, p. 88 A; Plut. Lycurg. 25). Hence: For, if we have become (through baptism, vv. 3, 4) such as are grown together with that which is the likeness of His death, (comp. on i. 23), i.e. persons, to whose nature it inseparably belongs to present in themselves that which resembles His death, so also shall we be grown together with the likeness of His resurrection. On ὁμοίωμα comp. i. 23, v. 14, viii. 3. The rendering of συμφυτοί by complantati (Vulgate, Luther), in connection with which Chrysostom, Origen, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Theodoret, Theophylact, Beza, and others explain the figure of the plant by the fruits of the ethical burial, is linguistically incorrect, as if the word came not from συμφωνία, but from συμφύτων (comp. φυτευτός, Plat. Rep. p. 510 A, ἀφύτευτος, Xen. Oec. 20, 22). The interpretation engrafted (Erasmus, Calvin, Estius, Cornelius à Lapide, Klee) is likewise without linguistic evidence, and does not suit the abstract τῷ ὁμοίωματι. — τῷ ὁμοίῳ. τοῖς θανάτοις αὐτῶν] i.e. the condition corresponding in similarity of form to His death, which has specifically and indissolubly become ours. This ethical conformity with His death, however, the growing together with which took place through our baptism, is just that moral death to sin, vv. 3, 4, in which the spiritual communion in death with Christ consists. τ. ὁμ. τ. θ. α. is to be joined with συμφυτοί (Vulgate, Chrysostom, Beza, Calvin, Estius, Koppe, Tholuck, Rückert, Reiche. Olshausen, de Wette, Philippi, and others; now including Hofmann). Others however take it as the dative of the instrument, and supply τῷ Χριστῷ to συμφυτοί: "for, if we have entered into close union with Christ through the ὁμοίωμα of His death," etc. So Erasmus, Beza, Grotius, Flatt, Fritzscbe, Krehl, Baumgarten-Crusius, Maier, Baur, van Hengel, and Reithmayr; also Weiss, bibl. Theol. p. 344. Nevertheless it is arbitrary to separate τῷ ὁμ. from συμφ. γεγ., seeing that it stands beside it and in a structural respect presents itself most naturally with it, and also as belonging to it yields a very appropriate sense; and on the other hand to attach to συμφ. a word which Paul has not put in, and which he must have put in, if he would not lead his readers astray. Still more mistaken is the view of Bisping, that συμφ. belongs to tou θανάτ. αὐτοῦ, and that τῷ ὀμοιώμ. comes in between them instrumentally. Hofmann has rightly abandoned this tortuous interpretation, which he formerly followed. Comp. on the right connection Cyril, Catech. iii. 12; and even Martyr. Ignat. 5: ἐμαυτὸν ... σύμφυτον θέσθαι τῷ τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ ὀμοιώματι. — ἀλλὰ καὶ] but also. ἀλλὰ, for the speedy and more emphatic introduction of the contrasted element, as frequently also in the classics, at the head of the apodosis; see on 1 Cor. iv. 15; Col. ii. 5. — τῆς ἀναστάσεως] cannot, in keeping with the protasis, depend directly upon the σύμφυτοι to be again understood (Erasmus, Calvin and others; including Eiickert, Olshausen, de Wette and Krehl), but only upon the τῷ ὀμοιώματι to be supplied (Beza, Grotius, Estius, and many others; including Winzer, Fritzsche, Baumgarten-Crusius, Maier, Philippi, Tholuck, Ewald, van Hengel, and Hofmann), so that when completed it would run: ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ ὀμοιώματι τῆς ἀναστάσεως αὐτοῦ σύμφυτοι εσόμεθα. The former view is indeed likewise unobjectionable grammatically, for αὐτῷ ὀμοιώματι may also stand with the genitive (Plat. Phil. p. 51 D, Def. p. 413 C, Bernhardy, p. 171); but the latter is suggested by the context, and presents itself easily enough and without harshness. Further, it is self-evident, after ver. 4, that in τ. ἀναστ. we are not to think of the resurrection of our body (Tertullian, Chrysostom, Ambrosiaster, Oecumenius, Cornelius à Lapide, and others; comp. also Ewald), or of this as included (Koppe and Klee). — ἐσόμεθα] receives its only correct interpretation from its relation to, and bearing on, the clause expressive of the purpose, ἵνα ... ἐν καύῳ. ζ. περιτ. in ver. 4, according to which it must express the necessarily certain. Matthiae, p. 1122; Kühner, II. 1, p. 148, ed. 2. Compare πως ἤτι ἕσομεν ver. 2. The sense of willing (“ut reviviscamus curabimus,” Fritzsche) is not suggested by the connection; nor is that of a summons (Olshausen, Rückert, and older expositors); but it is rather the expression of what shall certainly be the case, as the consequence of the σύμφυτοι γεγόν. τῷ ὀμοιώμ. τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ assumed as real in the protasis; it cannot be otherwise; with the having become σύμφυτοι this ἐσόμεθα is given; with that fact having begun and taken place is posited this further development, which necessarily attaches itself thereto.

Ver. 6. Τούτῳ γινώσκοντες] Definition to τῆς ἀναστάσ. ἔσο-
μεθα, which objective relation is confirmed by the corresponding experimental conscious knowledge (comp. εἰδότες in ver. 9): since we know this; not a mere continuation of the construction instead of κ. τοῦτο γινώσκομεν (Philippi), as the participle is never so used, not even in ch. ii. 4; nor yet to be conceived as in the train of the εἰσόμεθα (Hofmann), as if Paul had expressed himself by some such word as ἀντε, or with the telic infinitive (γνῶναι). Respecting τοῦτο see on ch. ii. 3. — ὁ παλ. ἦμ. ἀνθρ. i.e. our old ego—our personality in its entire sinful condition before regeneration (John iii. 3; Tit. iii. 5). Comp. Eph. iv. 22; Col. iii. 9. From the standpoint of the καταραγμον πνεύματος, constituting the Christian self-consciousness, the Christian sees his pre-Christian ethical personality as his old self no longer to be found in life, as the person which he had formerly been Comp. on 2 Cor. v. 17; Eph. ii. 10. — συνεσταυρωθη] namely, when we were baptized and thereby transplanted into the fellowship of death. See on vv. 3, 4. This special expression of the being killed with Him is selected simply because Christ was slain on the cross; not as Grotius and others, including Olshausen, hold: "quia sicut per crucem non sine gravi dolore ad exitum pervenitur, ita illa natura (the old man) sine dolore non extinguitur." Compare Umbreit. The simple ἑνα καταραγμ. is not at all in keeping with this far-fetched reference, which is not supported by Gal. ii. 19 f.; but just as little with the reference to the disgrace of crucifixion (Hofmann). — ὑνα καταραγμ.] Design of the ὁ παλ. ἦμ. ἀνθρ. συνεστ. : in order that the body of sin might be destroyed, i.e. the body belonging to the power of sin, ruled by sin.¹ Comp. vii. 24. The old man had such a body; and this σῶμα was to be destroyed, put out of existence by the crucifixion with Christ; consequently not the body in itself, but in so far as it is the sin-body, becoming determined by sin in its expressions of life to sinful πράξεις (viii. 13). The propriety of this interpretation appears from vv. 7, 12, 13, 23. Comp. on Col. ii. 11. If we explain it merely of "the body as seat or organ of sin," the idea would not in itself be un-Pauline, as Reiche thinks; for the σῶμα would in fact appear not as the soliciting

¹ It is self-evident that Paul might have said also τὸ σῶμα τῆς σαρκὸς, as in Col. ii. 11. But his whole theme (ver. 1) suggested his saying τῆς ἀμαρτίας. He might even have written merely ἡ σφιξ, but τὸ σῶμα was given in the immediate context (συνεσταυρωθη).
agent of sin (not as the σάρξ), but as its vehicle, in itself morally indifferent, but serving sin as the organic instrument of its vital activity (see Stirm in the Tübing. Zeitschr. f. Theol. 1834, 3, p. 10 ff.); but καταργηθῇ is decisive against this view. For this could neither mean destroyed, annihilated, because in fact even the body of the regenerate is a σῶμα τ. ἁμάρτιας in the sense assumed (ver. 12); nor even evacuaretur (Tertullian, Augustine), rendered inactive, inoperative, partly because then the idea of σάρξ would be assigned to σῶμα, and partly because it is only the conception of the destruction of the body which corresponds to the conception of crucifixion. Others take the corpus peccati figuratively; either so, that sin is conceived under the figure of a body with significant reference to its being crucified (so Fathers in Suicer, Theis. II. p. 1215, Piscator, Pareus, Castalio, Hammond, Homberg, Calovius, Koppe, Flatt, and Olshausen; also Reiche, conceiving sin as a monster); or, similarly to this mode of apprehending it, in such a way as to find the sense: “the mass of sin,” τῆν ἀπὸ τῶν διαφορῶν μερῶν ποιησάς συγκειμένην .... κακίαν, Chrysostom. So Ambrosiaster, Pseudo-Hieronymus, Theophylact, Erasmus, Cornelius à Lapide, Grotius, Estius, Keimayr and others; so also Calvin, who however takes the corpus peccati as a designation of the natural man itself, which is a massa, ex peccato configlata. Philippi also ultimately comes to the massa peccati, which is conceived as an organism having members, as σῶμα; so likewise Jatho and Julius Müller, v. d. Sünde, I. p. 460, ed. 5; also Baur (“as it were the substance of sin”). But all these interpretations are at variance partly with the Pauline usus locandi in general, and partly with ver. 12 in particular, where ἐν τῷ θνητῷ ὑμ. σῶματι by its reference to our passage confirms our view of the σῶμα. The right view is held substantially by Theodoret, Theophylact 2, Bengel and others, including Tholuck, Kollner, de Wette, Rückert, Fritzsche, Maier, Nielsen, Hofmann and Weiss; whereas Baumgarten-Crusius, and also Ernesti, Urspr. d. Sünde, I. p. 113, convert σῶμα into the idea of state of life. — τοῦ μηκέτι δουλ. κ.τ.λ.] “finem abolitionis notat,” Calvin. The sin, which is committed, is conceived as a ruler to whom service is rendered. See John viii. 34.

Ver. 7. Establishment of the τοῦ μηκέτι δουλ. ἡμ. τῇ. ἀμ. by the general proposition: whosoever is dead, is acquitted from sin.
— ὁ ἀποθαν. is explained by many of ethical death. So Erasmus, Calovius, Homberg, Bengal and others, including Koppe, Flatt, Glöckler, Olshausen, Tholuck (who regards sin as creditor), de Wette ("whosoever has died to sin, he—alone—is acquitted from sin"), Rothe, Krehl, Philippi (whosoever is ethically dead, over him has sin lost its right to impeach and to control, just as Bengal explains it), also van Hengel, Jatho, and Märcker. But neither the nature of the general proposition, which forms in fact the major premiss in the argument, and of which only the application is to be made (in the minor proposition) to ethical dying; nor the tautological relation, which would result between subject and predicate, can permit this explanation. The conception of ethical dying recurs only in the sequel, and hence σὺν Χριστῷ is added to ἀποθανομεν in ver. 8, so that Paul in this development of his views draws a sharp distinction between the being dead in the spiritual (vv. 6, 8) and in the ordinary sense. We must therefore explain ver. 7 as a general proposition regarding death in the ordinary sense, and consequently regarding physical death (so rightly Hofmann), but not specially of the death by execution, through which sin is expiated (Alethaeus, Wolf and others; with this view they compare δεδικ., the juristic expression: he is justified; see Michaelis' note); for any such peculiar reference of the still wholly unrestricted ἀποθανόν is forbidden by the very generality of the proposition, although for δεδικαίωμαι passages might be cited like Plat. Legg. II. p. 934 B; Aristot. Eth. v. 9. — δεδικ. ἀπὸ τ. ἀμ.] "The dead person is made just from sin," i.e. he is in point of fact justified and acquitted from sin, he is placed by death in the position of a δικαιος, who is such thenceforth; not as if he were now absolved from and rid of the guilt of his sins committed in life, but in so far as the dead person sins no more, no longer δουλεύει τῆς ἀμαρτίας, from whose power, as from a legal claim urged against him during his life in the body, he has been actually released by death as through a decree of acquittal. Comp. Köstlin in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1856, p. 93 f.; Th. Schott, p. 260, and Hofmann; also Baur, neut. Theol. p. 161 f.; Delitzsch, Illustrations to his Hebrew version, p. 84. Just for this reason has Paul added ἀπὸ τῆς ἀμαρτίας (comp. Acts xiii. 38; Ecclus. xxvi. 29; Test. XII. patr. p. 541), which would have been quite superfluous, had he taken...
δευκαίωται, justus constitutus est, in the dogmatic sense of his doctrine of justification. The proposition itself, moreover, is an axiom of the popular traditional mode of view, which Paul uses for his purpose as admitted. This axiom has also its relative truth, and that partly in so far as the dead person has put off the σῶμα τῆς σαρκός with which he committed his sins (Col. ii. 11), partly in so far as with death the dominion of law over the man ceases (vii. 1), and partly in so far as in death all the relations are dissolved which supplied in life the objects of sinning. 1 For the discussion of the question as to the absolute truth of the proposition, in its connection with Biblical anthropology and eschatology, there was no occasion at all here, 2 where it is only used as an auxiliary clause, and ex concesso. Comp. 1 Pet. iv. 1. Usteri mistakenly explains it: by death man has suffered the punishment, and thus expiated his guilt. For that Paul does not here express the Jewish dogma: "death as the punishment for sin expiates the guilt of sin" (see Eisenmenger, entdeckt. Judenth. II. p. 283 f.) is proved partly by the irrelevancy of such a sense to the context (γὰρ); and partly by its inconsistency with the doctrines of the Apostle as to justification by faith and as to the judgment, according to which death cannot set free from the guilt-obligation of sin. Ewald makes a new idea be brought in at ver. 7: "Even in common life, in the case of one who is dead, the sins of his previous life cannot be further prosecuted and punished, he passes for justified and acquitted of sin . . . ; if in addition sin as a power has been broken by Christ (ver. 9 f.), then we may assuredly believe," etc., ver. 8. But γὰρ in ver. 7 indicates its connection with what goes before, so that it is only with the δὲ in ver. 8 that a new thought is introduced. Besides, we should expect, in the case of the assumed course of thought, an οὖν instead of the δὲ in ver. 8. Finally, it is not clear how that rule of common law was to serve as a joint ground for the faith of becoming alive with Christ.

1 The Greek expositors—who already give substantially our explanation—have confined themselves to this point. Chrysostom: ἀπήλλαται τὸ λοιπὸν τοῦ ἀμαρτάνειν νεκρός κελευέτο. Theodoret: τὸ γὰρ θεόσατο πᾶστε νεκρόν ἣ γάμον ἀλληρωσίαν διαφύτωστα, ἢ μαφωφορία τὰς χεῖρας φωνήσωστα κ.τ.λ. Melanchthon compares the proverb: νεκρὸς οὐ δάκης, Beza the saying of Anacreon: ὁ νεκρὸς οὐκ ἑπινυμένε. Grotius that of Aeschylus: εὖ δέν ἄγιος ἀπτεταύ νεκρῶν. Comp. Soph. O. C. 955.

2 Compare Melanchthon: "Ceterum hoc sciamus, diabolos et omnes damnatos in omni aeternitate horribilia peccata facere, quia sine fine irascuntur Deo," etc.
Ver. 8 f. Carrying onward the discussion by the metabatic δὲ; and thereby passing from the negative side of the having died with Christ as proved in personal consciousness (τὸ πάντοτε γινώσκοντες, ver. 6) in v. 6, 7, to its positive side, which is likewise exhibited as based on the consciousness of faith (πιστεύομεν). "But if we have died (according to vv. 6, 7) with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with Him, since we know," etc. etc. — πιστεύομεν expresses, not confidence in the divine aid (Fritzsche), or in the divine promise (Baumgarten-Crusius), or in God not leaving His work of grace in us unfinished (Philippi); but simply the being convinced of our συζησομεν αὐτῷ; in so far, namely, as the having died with Christ is, seeing that He has risen and dieth no more, in the consciousness of faith the necessary premiss, and thus the ground for belief as to our becoming alive with Him. If the former, the ἀπεθάνωμεν σὺν Χριστῷ, be true, we cannot doubt the latter. — συζησομεν αὐτῷ] must necessarily be understood, in accordance with the preceding and following context (ver. 11), of the ethical participation in the new everlasting life of Christ. Whosoever has died with Christ is now also of the belief that his life, i.e. the positive active side of his moral being and nature, shall be a fellowship of life with the exalted Christ; that is, shall be able to be nothing else than this. This communion of life is the ἐν Χριστῷ and Χριστὸν ἐν ἡμῖν εἶναι. In the full consciousness of it Paul says: ἦν δὲ οὐκέτι ἐγώ, ἦν ἐμοὶ Χριστός (Gal. ii. 20). At the same time it is not to be explained as if an ἂν or the like stood beside συζησομεν (without falling away), as is done by Tholuck; compare Theophylact. Others, in opposition to the context, hold that what is meant is the future participation of Christians in the bliss of the glorified Saviour (Flatt, Reiche, Maier, following Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Grotius, and Heumann); and others still, at variance alike with the definiteness and unity of the sense, interpret it of the earthly moral and the eternal blessed life together (Sebastian Schmid, Böhme, Rosenmuller; and not rejected by de Wette). The reference or joint-reference to the future glory is not required either by the future, which, on the contrary, demands the same rendering exactly as ἐσώμεθα in ver. 5, nor by πιστεύομεν (see above). — εἰδότες, δτι κ.τ.λ.] Since we know, that, etc. Were we, namely, obliged to fear that Christ is still subject to the power of death,¹ that his life is not a perfected life, in that case we should lack the adequate secure ground of faith for that πιστεύομεν κ.τ.λ. The being assured that Christ liveth eternally and dieth no more (Acts xiii. 34), lends to our faith in our own moral communion of life with Him its basis and firm footing; without that knowledge this faith would be wanting in that which gives it legitimacy and guarantee. For who can cherish the conviction that he stands in that holy communion of resurrection-life with Christ, if he should be compelled to doubt whether his Lord, though indeed risen, might not again fall a victim to death? This thought would only keep us aloof from that faith and make it a moral impossibility for us, since it would set before us the prospect of a similar perishing of the new life which we had gained. Hofmann, who makes a new sentence begin with εἰδοῦσές, which is to continue till ver. 11, might have been warned against doing so by the absence of a particle (οὐ); and should have been decisively precluded from it by the tortuous way in which, if ver. 10 is set aside in a parenthesis, it is necessary to obtain a forced regimen for the passage.—θάνατος αὐτοῦ οὐκέτι κυρίευε, no longer dependent on, but an independent and therefore all the more emphatic repetition of the important thought: death is no longer Lord over Him, has no more power over Him, such as it once had at the crucifixion. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 25.

Ver. 10. Proof of the θάνατος αὐτοῦ οὐκέτι κυρίευε.² — ὅ γάρ ἀπέθανε] ὅ is in any case the accusative of the object. But whether Paul conceived it as: for as to what concerns His death (see Vigerus, ed Herm. p. 34; Frotscher and Breitenbach, ad Xen. Hier. 6, 12; Matthiae, p. 1063), or what, i.e. the death which He died (so Rückert, Fritzche, de Wette, Philippi; see Bernhardy, p. 106 f.; comp. on Gal. ii. 20) cannot be determined, since both renderings suit the correct interpretation of what ¹ Death had become lord over Him, because in obedience to God (Phil. ii. 6 ff.) Christ had subjected Himself to its power, so that ἤκταυσώσθη ἐξ ἀδελφείας (2 Cor. xiii. 4). The κυρίευεν of death over Him was therefore a thing willed by God (v. 8-10), and realised through the voluntary obedience of Jesus. See John x. 18; Matth. xx. 28.

² Not a parenthetical intervening clause (Hofmann), which is appropriate neither to the essential importance of the sentence in the train of thought, nor to the application which it receives in ver. 11.
follows. Yet the latter, analogous to the expression \( \theta \delta \alpha \nu \tau \alpha \nu \theta \alpha \nu e i \nu \), is to be preferred as the more simple, and as uniform with Gal. ii. 20. — \( \tau \gamma \delta \mu \alpha \rho \sigma \tau \iota \alpha \dot{\acute{\alpha}} \varepsilon \) \( \dot{\alpha} \tau \varepsilon \theta \) \( . \) the relation of the dative is to be determined from \( \nu e \kappa r o \dot{\iota} \nu \tau \gamma \dot{\alpha} \mu \). in ver. 11; therefore it can be nothing else than what is contained in \( \dot{\alpha} \tau \varepsilon \theta \dot{\alpha} \nu \). \( \tau \gamma \dot{\alpha} \mu \). in ver. 2 (comp. Hofmann), namely: he is dead to sin (dative of reference), i.e. His dying concerned sin; and indeed so that the latter (namely the sin of the world, conceived as power) has now, after He has suffered death on account of it, become without influence upon Him and has no more power over Him; He submitted Himself to its power in His death, but through that death He has died to its power. So also have we (ver. 11) to esteem ourselves as dead to sin (\( \nu e \kappa r o \dot{\iota} \nu \tau \gamma \dot{\alpha} \mu \)), as rescued from its grasp through our ethical death with Christ, in such measure that we are released from and rid of the influence of this power antagonist to God. The close accordance of this view of \( \tau \gamma \dot{\alpha} \mu \). \( \dot{\alpha} \tau \varepsilon \theta \) with the context (according to vv. 11 and 2) is decisive against the explanations of the dative deviating from it, such as: ad expianda peccata (Pareus, Piscator, Grotius, Michaelis, and others including Olshausen); or: ad expianda tollendaque peccata (Koppe, Flatt, Reiche, Fritzscbe, Philippi); or: in order to destroy the power of sin (Chrysostom, Beza, Calvin, Bengel, and others, including Ewald and Umbreit). Rückert, Köllner, and de Wette wish to abide by an indefinite reference of the death of Jesus to sin as the remote object; but this simply explains nothing, and leaves only a formal parallelism remaining.—\( \varepsilon \phi \alpha \tau \alpha \xi \) for once, with emphasis, excluding repetition, once for all. Comp. Heb. vii. 27, ix. 12, x. 10; Lucian, Dem. euc. 21. — \( \xi \gamma \tau \). \( \Theta \varepsilon \bar{\omega} \) vivit Deo, namely so, that now in His estate of exaltation, after He has through His death died to the power of sin, His life belongs to God, i.e. stands to God in the relation of being dependent on, and of being determined by, Him. The contrast to the preceding yields the excluding sense. Christ's earthly life, namely, was also a \( \xi \gamma \tau \). \( \Theta \varepsilon \bar{\omega} \), but was at the same time exposed to the death-power of 1 Rich. Schmidt, Paul. Christol. p. 55, justly insists that Christ for His own person died to sin, but further on (p. 59), ends in finding an ideal, not a real relation. But He died really to sin, inasmuch as He took upon Himself, in the death of the cross, the curse of the law; after which human sin had now no longer any power over Him. Compare on ver. 3.

human sin, which is now no longer the case, inasmuch as His life rescued from death is wholly determined by the fellowship with God. This latter portion of the verse belongs also to the proof of ver. 9, since it is in fact just the (exclusive) belonging to God of Christ’s life, that makes it certain that death reigns no longer over Him; as ξών τῷ Θεῷ he can no longer be παθητός (Acts xxvi. 23), which He previously was, until in obedience to God εἰς ἀθέλειαν He was crucified (2 Cor. xiii. 4).

Ver. 11. Application of ver. 10 to the readers.—Although in ver. 10 there was no mention of a λογίζεσθαι on the part of Christ, we are not, with Griesbach and Koppe, to break up the discourse by the punctuation: οὔτω καὶ ὑμεῖς λογίζεσθε κ.τ.λ. (comp. on the contrary Luke xvii. 10).—Accordingly reckon ye yourselves also (like Christ) as dead, etc. λογίζεσθε, namely, containing the standard by which they are to apprehend their moral life-position in its reality, is not, with Bengel and Hofmann, to be taken as indicative, but rather, seeing that here the discourse passes over to the second person and proceeds in exhortation in ver. 12 ff., with the Vulgate, Chrysostom and Luther, as imperative.—εὖ Χρ. Ι.] These words, which Rückert, Köllner, de Wette, and others quite arbitrarily join merely with ξών τῷ Θεῷ, belong to both portions of the summons; and do not mean per Christum (Grotius and others, including Fritzsche), but denote rather the specific element, in which the being dead and living take place, namely, in the ethical bond of fellowship, which is just the εἶναι εὖ Χριστῷ.

Ver. 12 f. Οὖν] in consequence of this λογίζεσθε, for the proof of it in the practice of life. For this practice the λογίζεσθαι κ.τ.λ. is meant to be the regulative theory. The negative portion of the following exhortation corresponds to the νεκροῦς μὲν τῇ ἀμαρτίᾳ in ver. 11 ; and the positive contrast ἀλλὰ κ.τ.λ. to the ξώντας δὲ τῷ Θεῷ. — μὴ βασιλ. ] With this nothing sinful is admitted (comp. Chrysostom); but on the contrary the influence of the (personified) sin, conquering the moral ego, is entirely forbidden, as the whole connection teaches. — εὖ τῷ Θεῷ ὑπποτάσιμος.] εὖ simply indicates the seat and sphere, in which the for-

1 But Luther’s gloss is good: “Mark, the saints have still evil lusts in the flesh, which they do not follow.” Comp. the carrying out of the idea in Melancthon.
bidden dominion would take place (not by means of, as Th. Schott thinks). As to θνητον, every explanation is to be avoided which takes the word in any other sense than the ordinary one of mortal (comp. viii. 11), because it has no other signification (see all the examples in Wetstein), and because the context contains nothing at all in favour of giving any other turn to the notion of the word. We must reject therefore the opinion that it is equivalent to νεκρον, as taken in the ethical sense: dead for sin (Turrletin, Ch. Schmidt, Ernesti, Schleusner, Schrader, and Stengel). Directly affirmed of the body, the mortality could not but be understood by every reader quite definitely as the physical. The purpose of the epithet however must manifestly result from the relation of motive, in which the mortality of the body stands to the prohibition of the reign of sin in the body. And the more precise definition of this motive is to be derived from the previous νεκρον μεν τη άμαρτια, ξωντας δε το Θεον. If we are convinced, namely, that we are dead for sin and alive for God; if we account ourselves as those who have put off the ethical mortality (ως εκ νεκρον ξωντας, ver. 13), then it is an absurdity to allow sin to reign in the body, which in fact is mortal. This quality stands in a relation of contradiction to our immortal life entered upon in the fellowship of Christ, and thus the dominion, for which we should deliver over our body to sin, would prove that we were not that for which, nevertheless, in genuine moral self-judgment, we have to take ourselves; since in fact the mortal life of the body, if we yield it to the government of sin, excludes the immortal Christian life described in ver. 11. Hofmann imports more into the passage than its connection with ver. 11 suggests; namely the double folly, that such an one should not use the power, which the life of Christ gives him over the mortal body and therewith over sin; and that he should permit himself to be entangled in the death to which his body falls a victim, while he possesses a life of which also his body would become joint-participant. This is a fine-spun application of the true interpretation. Different is the view of Köllner (comp. Calvin: "per contemptum vocat mortale"), that it is here hinted how disgraceful it is to make the spirit subordinate to sin, which only dwells in the perishable body; and of Grotius: "de vita altera cogitandum, nec formidandos labores hand sane diuturnos" (comp. Chrysostom and Theodoret; so also on the whole Reiche). But the context contains neither a contrast between body and spirit, nor between this and the other life. Flatt thinks that Paul wished to remind his readers of the brevity of sensual pleasure; comp. Theophylact. But how little would this be in keeping with the high standpoint of the moral sternness of the Apostle! According to others, Paul desired to remind them warningly of the destructiveness of sin, which had brought death on the body (de Wette, Krehl, Nielsen, Philippi, also Maier). But this point of view as to destructiveness is remote from the connection, in which the pervading theme is rather the unsuitableness of the dominion of sin to the communion of death and life with Christ. Others still explain it variously.1—σώματα body, as in ver. 6; not a symbolic expression for the entire ego (Reiche, following Ambrosiaster and various early expositors); nor yet body and soul, so far as it is not yet the recipient of the Spirit of God (Philippi); for even in all such passages as viii. 10, 13, 23; xii. 1 σῶμα retains purely its signification body. But sin reigns in the body (comp. on ver. 6), so far as its material substratum is the σάρξ (Col. ii. 11), which, with its life-principle the ψυχή, is the seat and agent of sin (vii. 18 ff. al.). Hence the sinful desires are its desires (αὐτῶν), because, excited by the power of sin in the flesh, they are at work in the body and its members (vii. 5, 23; Col. iii. 5). Sin aims at securing obedience to these desires through its dominion in man. Consequently εἰς τὸ ἵππακ. τ. ἐπιθ. αὐτ. implies the—according to ver. 11 absurd—tendency of the allowing sin to reign in the mortal body, which the Apostle forbids. —μηδὲ] also especially not (as e.g. 1 Cor. v. 8). —παραστάνετε] present, i.e. place at the disposal, at the service. Matth. xxvi. 53; Acts xxiii. 24; 2 Tim. ii. 15; Athen. iv. p. 148 B; Lucian, d. Mar. 6, 2; Diod. Sic. xvi. 79; Dem. 597 pen. —τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν] your members, which sin desires to use as executive organs, tongue, hand, foot, eye, etc. The mental

1 Olshausen connects thus: "let not the sin manifesting itself in your mortal body reign in you." In that case Paul must have repeated the article after ἀμ. According to Baur there lies in θηρῶ the idea: "whose mortality can only remind you of that, which it even now is as νεκρὸν τῷ ἄμαρτῳ." But, had Paul desired to set forth the moral death through the adjective by way of motive, he must then have written, after ver 11, τῷ νεκρῷ ὑμῶν σώματι, which after what goes before would not have been liable to any misconception.
powers and activities, feeling, will, understanding, are not included (in opposition to Erasmus, Reiche, Philippi and others); but Paul speaks concretely and graphically of the members, in reference to which the mental activities in question are necessarily presupposed. Comp. Col. iii. 5. — διάλα ἀδικίας] as weapons of immorality, with which the establishment of immorality is achieved. The ἀμαρτία is conceived as a ruler employing the members of man as weapons of warfare, whereby to contend against the government of God and to establish ἀδικία (opposite of the subsequent δικαιοσύνη). It injures the figure, to which ver. 23 glances back, to explain διάλα (comp. ἐκ) instruments, as is done by many (including Rückert, Köllner, Baumgarten-Crusius, Krehl, Fritzsche, de Wette, and Ewald), a meaning which it indeed frequently bears in classic Greek since Homer (see Duncan, Lex. ed. Rost, p. 344), but never in the N. T. Comp. especially 2 Cor. vi. 7, x. 4. — παραστήσατε] the aorist here following the present (comp. Bernhardy, p. 393), marking the immediateness and rapidity of the opposite action which has to set in. It stands to παραστήσατε in a climactic relation. See Winer, p. 294 [E.T. 394], Kühner, II. 1, p. 158. — ἐαυτού· yourselves, your own persons, and specially also your members, etc. — ὡς ἐκ νεκρ. ζων] as those that are alive from the dead (risen), i.e. those who have experienced in themselves the ethical process of having died and attained to the resurrection-life with Christ. Only thus, in the sense of the moral renovation discussed in vv. 2-11—not in the sense of Eph. ii. 1 (Philippi and older expositors)—can it be explained agreeably to the context, especially as ὡς corresponds to the λογίζεσθαι k. t. l. in ver. 11. This ὡς, quippe, with the participle (as in xv. 15, and very frequently), expresses, namely, the relation of the case, in which what is demanded is to appear to the readers as corresponding to their Christian state, which is described as life from the dead.1 — τῷ Θεῷ belonging to God, as in vv. 10, 11.

1 The ὡς is not the "like" of comparison (Hofmann, who, following Lachmann, prefers with A B C N the ὡςει, which does not elsewhere occur in the writings of Paul), but the "as" of the quality, in which the subjects have to conceive themselves. Comp. Wunder, ad Soph. Trach. 394, p. 94; Kühner, II. 2, p. 649. According to Hofmann the comparative ὡςει is only to extend to ἐκ νεκρῶν (and ζων to be predicative): as living persons like as from the dead. But such a mere comparison would be foreign to the whole context, according to which
Ver. 14. Not the ground and warrant for the exhortation (Hofmann), in which case the thought is introduced, that obedience is dependent on the readers; but an encouragement to do what is demanded in vv. 12, 13, through the assurance that therein sin shall not become lord over them, since they are not in fact under the law, but under grace. Comp. the similar encouragement in Phil. ii. 13. In this assurance lies a "dulcis-sima consolatio," Melancthon, comp. Calvin. They have not to dread the danger of failure. Understood as an expression of good confidence, that they would not allow sin to become lord over them (Fritzsche), the sentence would lack an element assigning an objective reason, to which nevertheless the second half points. Heumann, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt, and Umbreit take the future imperatively, which is erroneous for the simple reason that it is not in the second person (Bernhardy, p. 378). — ὦ γὰρ ἑστε ἐντὸ νόμον (Gal. iv. 21), ἀλλα ἐντὸ χάριν: For not the law, but divine grace (revealed in Christ) is the power under which you are placed. This contrast, according to which the norm-giving position of the law is excluded from the Christian state (it is not merely the superfluousness of the law that is announced, as Th. Schott thinks), is the justification of the encouraging assurance previously given. Had they been under the law, Paul would not have been able to give it, because the merely commanding law is the διάμοι ἡ ἁμαρτία (1 Cor. xv. 56), and accumulates sins (v. 20), in which reference he intends to discuss the matter still further in ch. vii. But they stand under a quite different power, under grace; and this relation of dependence is quite calculated to bring to the justified that consecration of moral strength, which they require against sin and for the divine life (v. 21; vi. 1 ff.). "Gratia non solum peccata diluit, sed ut non pecemus facit," Augustine.

Vv. 15-23. This ὦκ εἶναι ἐντὸ νόμον, ἀλλα ἐντὸ χάριν does not therefore give us freedom to sin. From the ὦ γὰρ ... χάριν, Christians are really alive (with Christ) from the dead, and paralysing the pith of the view, which does not lie in a quasi, but in a tanquam. The Vulgate renders correctly: "tanquam ex mortuis viventes." He who participates ethically in the resurrection-life of the Lord is alive from death, but not alive as if from death; just as little is he as if alive from death. Theodore of Mopanestia rendered the ὦκε, which he read, in the latter sense; referring it to ἐκ ἐκρως τοῦτον μὴ poyte, together, and explaining the meaning to be that, previous to the actual resurrection, only ἡ κατὰ τὸ ὑπαρκτόν μὴ poyte is required.
nearly, the inference of freedom to sin might very easily be drawn by immoral Christians (comp. ver. 1), which would be exactly the reverse of what the Apostle wished to establish by that proposition (ἀμαρτήσομεν ὑμ. οὐ κυρ. ver. 14). Paul therefore proposes to himself this possible inference and negatives it (ver.
15), and then gives in ver. 16 ff. its refutation. Accordingly vv.
15-23 form only an ethico-polemical preliminary to the positive illustration of the proposition, “ye are not under the law, but under grace,” which begins in ch. vii.

Ver. 15. Τί οὖν], sc. ἐστί; what is then the state of the case?
Comp. iii. 9. Shall this Christian position of ours be misused for sinning?—With the reading ἀμαρτήσομεν the sense would be purely future: shall we sin? will this case occur with us? But with the proper reading ἀμαρτήσομεν Paul asks: Are we to sin?
deliberative subjunctive as in ver. 1. To the ἐπιμένωμεν τ. ἀμαρτ.
in ver. 1 our ἀμαρτήσομεν stands related as a climax; not merely the state of perseverance in sin, but every sinful action is to be abhorred; the former from the pre-Christian time, the latter in the Christian state of grace.—οὐκ ἐσμὲν ὑπὸ νόμου κ.τ.λ.] emphatic repetition. Bornemann, ad Xen. Mem. iv. 3, 17, Schol. in Luc. p. xxxix.

Ver. 16. Paul begins the detailed illustration of the μὴ γένωτο with an appeal to the consciousness of his readers, the tenor of which corresponds to the saying of Christ: “No man can serve two masters.” This appeal forms the propositio major; the minor then follows in ver. 17 f., after which the conclusion is obvious of itself.—“Know ye not, that, to whom ye yield yourselves as slaves for obedience, ye are slaves of him whom ye obey?” Here the emphasis is not on εστε (slaves ye are in reality, as de Wette and others think), or even on the relative clause ὃ ὑπακοῦετε (Hofmann), but, as is required by the order of the words, and the correlation with παριστάτων, on δοῦλοι.
Whosoever places himself at the disposal of another for obedience as a slave, is no longer free and independent, but is just the slave of him whom he obeys. —παριστάτων] The present, as expressing the general proposition which continues to hold good.
See Kühner, II. 1, p. 115. —ὁ ὑπακοῦετε] whom ye obey (erroneously rendered by Reiche and Baumgarten-Crusius: have to obey).
By this, instead of the simple αὐτοῦ or τοῦτον, the relation of subjection, which was already expressed in the protasis, is once more vividly brought into view: that ye are slaves of him, whom ye, in consequence of that παριστάνειν ἑαυτούς δοῦλον to him, obey. The circumstantiality has a certain earnestness and solemnity. If ye yield yourselves as slaves for obedience, then ye are nothing else than slaves in the service of him whom ye obey. The less reason is there for attaching εἰς υπακ. to the apodosis (Th. Schott, Hofmann). — ἡτοι ἀμαρτίας] sc. δοῦλοι. 1 Respecting the disjunctive ἡτοι, aut sane, found nowhere else in N. T., see especially Klotz, ad Devar. p. 609, Baemlein, Partik. p. 244. It lays strong emphasis on the first alternative. Very frequently thus used in Greek authors. Comp. Wisd. xi. 18. — εἰς θάνατον] result, to which this relation of slavery leads. The θάνατος cannot be physical death (Reiche, Fritzsche, van Hengel), since that is not the consequence of individual 2 sin (see on v. 12), and is not averted from the δοῦλος υπακοής; nor is it, either generally, the misery of sin (de Wette), or specially spiritual death, alienation from the true ζωή, an idea which Paul never conveys by θάνατος; but rather, seeing that θάνατος, as is more precisely indicated in ver. 21, and is placed beyond doubt by the contrast of ζωή αἰώνιος, must be conceived as the τέλος of the bondage of sin; eternal death (Chrysostom, Theophylact, and others, including Rückert, Reithmayr, and Tholuck). Comp. i. 32. This is not at variance with the antithesis εἰς δικαιοσύνην, which is not to be taken (as in ver. 13) in the sense of moral righteousness (Philippi and others); for this is not the result, but is itself the essence of the δοῦλον εἶναι υπακοής (comp. v. 19), since υπακοή, in contradistinction to the ἀμαρτία, is obedience to

1 Consequently servants of sin, who are serviceable to that which is sin; and then: servants of obedience, who are in the service of the opposite of ἀμαρτία, in the service of 'divine obedience. Hofmann erroneously takes the genitives as genitives of quality (servants who sin and who obey); see Winer, p. 222 [E. T. 297]. What reader could, after δοῦλος (comp. John viii. 34), have stumbled on this singular relation of quality; the assumption of which ought to have been precluded by vv. 17, 20. Comp. 2 Pet. ii. 19.

2 Philippi here observes, with the view of including bodily death also in the idea, that it "is personally appropriated and merited by the individual through his own act." This is not Pauline, and is at variance with the true interpretation of the εἰς τὰς ἡμερὰς ἀμαρτίας in v. 12. It is not with death as it is with the atonement, which is objectively there for all, but must be appropriated by something subjective. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 22. Moreover, such personal appropriation would be inconceivable in the case of all children dying without actual sin.
the divine will. On the contrary δικαιοσύνη, antithetically correlative with the θάνατος, must be conceived as the final result of that δουλον εἶναι υπάκοις, and apply to the time of final perfection in the αἰών μέλλων, when the faithful, who have not relapsed into the service of sin, but in their faith have been servants of obedience, on account of the death of Christ δικαιοι κατασταθήσονται, ver. 19. It is therefore the righteousness which is awarded to them in the judgment. If it were the righteousness of faith even now attained (Th. Schott), υπάκοις would need to be taken, with Schott, of becoming a believer (i. 5), which is contextually inadmissible, since what is spoken of is the state of grace already existing (ver. 15), in which service is rendered to the obedience of God only, and not to sin. In accordance with the misconceptions of Hofmann, already noticed in detail (see above), there results as his sense of the whole: "To whom ye place yourselves as servants at his disposal, ye are servants for the purpose of obedience; ye are so to him whom ye obey, servants either—for there is no third alternative—who act contrary to their master's will and thereby merit death, or such as live in obedience and are therefore righteous in the presence of their master." What kind of a θάνατος, and in what sense δικαιοσύνη is meant, is supposed accordingly to be self-evident. And by the following thanksgiving, ver. 17, the Apostle is alleged "as it were half to take back" his question, Whether they do not know e., so that the medium of transition to ver. 17 is "why yet still the question?" A series of gratuitously imported fancies.

Ver. 17. Propositio minor.—χάρις δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, δετι.] animated expression of piety; "ardor pectoris apostolici," Bengel. Comp.
vii. 25. — ἢτε δουλοι τ. ἀμ., υπηκ. κ.τ.λ.] ἢτε has emphasis:
that ye were slaves of sin (that this condition of bondage is past) etc. Comp. Eph. v. 8. The prefixing of ἢτε, and the non-insertion of a μὲν, clearly prove that this is the true interpretation, and not that, by which the main idea is discovered in the second half: "non Deo gratias agit, quod servierint peccato, sed quod, qui servierint peccato, postea obedierunt evangelio," Grotius. In that case μὲν at least would be indispensable in the first clause. The mode of expression is purposely chosen, in order

1 Köstlin has also justly directed attention in the Jahrb. f. deutsche Theol.
1856, p. 127, to the sensus forensis of δικαιοσύνη in our passage.
to render more forcibly apparent their earlier dangerous condition (whose further delineation in ver. 19, moreover, points to the former heathenism of the readers). — ἐκ καρδίας] οὖν ὡς γὰρ ἣναγκάσθη, οὖν ἐβιασθη, ἀλλ' ἐκόντες μετὰ προθυμίας ἀπέστησε, Chrysostom. Comp. Job viii. 10; Mark xii. 30; Wisd. viii. 21 al.; Theocr. xxix. 4; also ἐκ θυμοῦ, ἐς εὐμενῶν στέρνον, and similar phrases in Greek writers. The opposite: ἐκ βίας.— εἰς δὲ παρεῖδ. τῷ π. διδ.] may either be resolved: τῷ τίπωρ τῆς διδ., εἰς δὲ παρεῖδ., with Chrysostom and others, including Rückert, Reiche, Köllner, Tholuck, de Wette, Fritzsche, Winer, and Philippi (see Fritzsche, Diss. II. p. 133, Conject. p. 34; Bornemann, Schol. in Luc. p. 177); or: εἰς τ. τύπ. τῆς διδ., εἰς δὲ παρεῖδ. (as in iv. 17); or: εἰς τ. τύπ. τῆς διδ., δὲ παρεῖδ. ἀ. ὁ παρεῖδ. ὑμῖν (see Castalio and Grotius on the passage, Kypke, II. p. 167, Ewald and Hofmann). It is decisive in favour of the first mode of resolution that ὑπακούειν εἰς τι is never equivalent to ὑπακούειν τινί;1 while to take ὑπηκούσατε absolutely either in the sense of the obedience of faith, i.5 (Ewald), or in that of absolute obedience ("as obedient servants in contrast to sinful ones," Hofmann), is inadmissible, because ὑπηκούσατε in its antithetical correlation with δοῦλοι τῆς ἀμαρτίας needs a more precise definition. And this it has precisely in εἰς δὲ παρεῖδ. κ.τ.λ., which cannot therefore indicate whereunto (Ewald and Hofmann) the ὑπακούειν has taken place,— an artificial far-fetched expedient, which is wrung from them, in order to get instead of obedience towards the doctrine obedience as effect of the doctrine (comp. Matth. xii. 41, where however μετενοιῶσαν stands by its side, which is in fact of itself a complete conception). The τύτος διδαχῆς, εἰς δὲ παρεῖδ. is usually (and still by Hofmann) understood of Christian doctrine generally, so far as it is a definite, express form of teaching. But since the singular expression τύτος does not thus appear accounted for, and since the Roman church was undoubtedly planted through the preaching of Pauline Christianity, which is certainly a particular type, different from Judaistic forms of Christian teaching and in various points even contrasting with these, it is preferable to understand by it the distinct expression which the Gospel

1 In the passages quoted by Kypke from Greek authors ὑπακούειν εἰς τι means to obey in reference to something, to be obedient in a matter. Reiche's judgment of these passages is erroneous. See on 2 Cor. ii. 9.
had received through Paul, consequently the doctrinal form of his Gospel (ii. 16, xvi. 25), in opposition to anti-Paulinism (Rückert, ed. 1, de Wette, comp. Philippi). This eis ὑπὸ παρέδει is decisive in favour of the interpretation "form of doctrine" in an objective sense, and against the subjective explanation: image of the doctrine, which is impressed on the heart (Kypke). Following Theodore of Mopsuestia, Oecumenius, Calvin, Grotius, Calovius, and many others, Eeiche (as also Olshausen, Reithmayr and Krehl) take τὸποσ in the sense of exemplar, ideal which the doctrine holds up, consequently in that of the ethical rule, which as model of life is contained in the Gospel (διδακτικός). This is in harmony neither with the ὑπακοὐε nor with the eis ὑπὸ παρέδει. Unsuitable to the former is also the interpretation of Beza and others, to which Tholuck inclines, that the evangelical doctrine is "quasi instar typi cujusdam, cui veluti immittamur, ut ejus figurae conformemur." Van Hengel understands ὑπηκούσατε in the sense of obedience toward God, and eis as quod attinet at; Paul in his view says: "obedivistis Deo ad sequendam quam profiteri edocti estis doctrinae formam." This form of doctrine, to which the Romans were directed at the founding of their church, had been, he conceives, probably more Judaistic than purely Pauline. But against the absolute interpretation of ὑπηκούσατε see above; while the assumption of a τὸποσ διδακτική not truly Pauline is irreconcilable with the expression of thanksgiving, and is not supported by Phil. i. 15, a passage which is to be explained from the peculiar situation of the Apostle. We may add that Paul aptly specialises the ὑπακοη—which was set forth in the major, in ver. 16, quite generally (as obedience to God in general)—at the subsumption in the minor, ver. 17, as obedience to his Gospel. *παρέδει] τῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ βοηθείαν αἰνίττεται, *Chrysostom. The reference to God, which is also to be observed for the passives in ver. 18, is plain from *χαρὶς τῷ Ἐριφ. That it is not to be taken as middle (to yield themselves, so Fritzsche) is shown by the same passives in ver. 18. Παραδιδόμου either with the dative or with eis, in the sense of delivering over to the disposal and power of another, is very current everywhere in Greek literature (Judith x. 15; Rom. i. 26; Xen. Hell. 1, 7, 3; Dem.

1 So probably Chrysostom took it, who explains ὁ τῶν σ. διδακτικής by ὅρθως ἢ ἡ καὶ μετὰ πολλεῖς ἄφινες. So also Theophylact.
515, 6, 1187, 5); but whether in a hostile sense or not, is conveyed not by the expression itself, but simply by the context. To the expression itself the abolition of one's own self-determination is essential. So also here. The Christian has at his conversion ceased to be sui juris, and has been given over to the morally regulative power of the Gospel. On τύπος διδαχής comp. Jamblichus, de Pythag. vit. 16: τῆς παιδείας ὑπὸ τύπος, Plat. Rep. p. 412 B: οἱ τύποι τῆς παιδείας, p. 397 C: τύπῳ τῆς λέξεως, Jamblichus l.c. 23: τὸν τύπον τῆς διδασκαλίας, Isoc. Antid. 186: ὁ τύπος τῆς φιλοσοφίας.

Ver. 18. “But, freed from sin, ye have become servants of righteousness.” This is not to be regarded as the conclusion from the two premisses, vv. 16, 17 (Rückert, Reiche), because ὁδὲ is not used, and because substantially the same thought was already contained in ver. 17. Paul rather expresses once more the happy change in his readers just described; and does so in a thoughtfully chosen antithetical form, no longer however dependent on ὅτι, but independent and thus more emphatic (hence a colon is, with Lachmann, to be inserted before ἐλευθ.). But he leaves the reader to draw for himself the conclusion, namely: this μη γένοιτο is therefore fully justified.— The ὅτι is the autem of continuation; the transition, however, is not from activity (ὑπηκοονσατε) to passiveness (Hofmann, comp. Th. Schott), for the latter is already given in παρεδόθητε, but from the state of the case expressed in ver. 17 to a striking specification, in a more precise form, of the revolution in the relation of service, which was accomplished in them.— ἀπὸ τ. ἁμαρτ. that is, from the relation of slavery to it.— ἐδοκ. τῆς δικαιοσ. ye have been placed in the slave-relation to righteousness; a representation of the complete dependence on the moral necessity of being righteous, implied in conversion. On the dative comp. 1 Cor. ix. 19; Tit. ii. 3; 2 Pet. ii. 19. This slavery, where the δικαιοσύνη is the mistress, is consequently the true moral freedom (ἐλευθεροποιεῖς δὲ ἢ ἁρετῆ, Plat. Alc. I. p. 135 C.). Comp. the similar paradox in 1 Cor. vii. 22.

Ver. 19. Paul had, in vv. 16-18, represented the idea of the highest moral freedom—in a form corresponding indeed with its nature as a moral necessity (“Deo servire vera libertas est,” Augustine), but still borrowed from human relations—as δουλεία. He now therefore, not to justify himself, but to induce his readers to separate the idea from the form, announces the fact that, and the reason why, he thus expresses himself regarding the loftiest moral idea in this concrete fashion, derived from an ordinary human relation. I speak (in here making mention of slavery, vv. 16-18) what is human (belonging to the relations of the natural human life) on account of the (intellectual) weakness of your flesh, i.e. in order thereby to come to the help of this your weakness. For the setting forth of the idea in some such sensuous form is the appropriate means of stimulating and procuring its apprehension in the case of one, whose knowledge has not yet been elevated by divine enlightenment to a higher platform of strength and clearness released from such human forms. Respecting ἀνθρώπινον see the examples in Wetstein. It is the antithesis of θείον, Plat. Rep. p. 497 C. The expression κατὰ ἀνθρώπινον λέγω in ch. iii. 5 is in substance equivalent, since ἀνθρώπινον also necessarily indicates the form and dress employed for the idea, for whose representation the Apostle has uttered what is human. The σάρξ, however, i.e. the material human nature in its psychical determination, as contrasted with the divine pneumatic influence (comp. on iv. 1), is weak for religious and moral discernment, as well as for good (Matth. xxvi. 41); hence the σαφία σαρκική (2 Cor. i. 12) is foolishness with God (1 Cor. iii. 19). Others, taking it not of intellectual weakness, but of moral weakness, refer it to what follows (Origen, Chrysostom, Theophylact, Erasmus, Calvin, Estius, Hammond, Wetstein, and others, including Klee, Reithmayr, and Bisping), in the sense: “I do not demand what is too hard (ἀνθρώπ.., comp. 1 Cor. x. 13); for although I might require a far higher degree of the new obedience, yet I require only the same as ye have formerly rendered to sin.”¹ But the following ὅσπερ... οὕτω introduces not the equality of the degree, but, as is plain from ver. 20, only the comparison in general between the former and the present state. Besides, the demand itself, which by this interpretation would only concern a lower stage of Christian life, would be inappropriate to the morally ideal character of the whole hortatory discourse, which is not injured by the concrete figurative form. This remark also applies to the dismembering explanation

¹ So also probably Theodoret: τῷ φῶςει μετρῶ τῷ παράλειπον· ὅτα γὰρ τὰ ἐν τῷ θνητῷ σώματι κυνόμενα πάθη.
of Hofmann (comp. Th. Schott), who makes ἀνθρώπινον λέγω form a parenthesis, and then connects διὰ τὴν ἀσθένειαν τ. σάρκος υμῶν with ἐδοικεθηστε τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ, so that the thought would be: the weakness of our inborn nature gives occasion that our translation into the life of righteousness is dealt with as an enslavement thereto, while otherwise it would be simply restoration to the freedom of doing our own will; according to this weakness what is right is not done freely of itself, but in the shape of a service. But how could Paul have so degraded the moral loftiness of the position of the δουλωθέντες τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ! To him they were indeed the δουλῳδεῖς τῷ Θεῷ (ver. 22), and in his estimation there was nothing morally more exalted than to be δουλὸς Θεοῦ, as Christ Himself was. The Christian has put on Christ in this respect also (Gal. iii. 27), and lives in the spirit of the holiest freedom (2 Cor. iii. 17 f.); his subjection to the service of δικαιοσύνη has not taken place on account of his inborn nature incapacitating him for moral freedom (as though it were a measure of compulsion); but on the contrary he has put off the morally weak old man, and so he lives as a new creature—by means of the newness of the spirit, and in virtue of his communion in the resurrection-life of Christ—in the condition of righteousness, which Paul has here under the designation of bondage, accommodating himself by the ordinary human expression to the natural weakness of the understanding, brought into contrast with the having been freed from sin.—ὁστερ γάρ κ.τ.λ.] Practical assigning of a reason for the proposition just affirmed ἀνθρωπίνος in ver. 18, in the form of a concrete demand. In opposition to Hofmann, who (at variance with his own interpretation of xiii. 6!) declares it impossible to clothe the assigning of a reason in the dress of an exhortation, see Baeumlein, Partik. p. 86. Heb. xii. 3 (see Delitzsch) is to be taken in the same way; comp. James i. 7; and see on 1 Cor. i. 26. Hence: for, as ye have placed your members at the disposal, etc., so now place, etc. Since the discourse proceeds indeed in the same figurative manner, but yet so that it now assumes the hortatory form, ἀνθρώπινος . . . σάρκος υμῶν is not to be put in a parenthesis, but with Fritzsche, Lachmann, and Tischendorf, to be separated from όστερ by a period.—τῇ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ κ. τῇ ἀνομίᾳ] The two exhaust the notion of ἀμαρτία (ver. 13), so that ἀκαθ. characterises sin as morally defiling the man (see on i. 24), and ἀνομ. (1 John iii. 4) as a violation of the divine law (see Tittmann, Synon. p. 48). — εἰς τὴν ἀνομ. on behalf of antagonism to law, in order that it may be established (in fact). The interpretation εἰς τὸ ἐπιτέλεον ἀνομεῖν, Theophylact (so also Oecumenius, Erasmus, Luther, Grotius, Köllner, Ewald, and others), is, in its practical bearing, erroneous, since it is only the yielding of the members to the principle of ἀνομία that actually brings the latter into a concrete reality.— εἰς ἀγιασμὸν] in order to attain holiness (1 Cor. i. 30; 1 Thess. iv. 3 ff. 7; 2 Thess. ii. 13), moral purity and consecration to God. To be an ἁγιός in mind and walk—that goal of Christian development—is the aim of the man, who places his members at the disposal of δικαιοσύνη as ruler over him. The word ἁγιασμός is found only in the LXX., Apocr. and in the N. T. (in the latter it is always holiness, not sanctification, even in 1 Tim. ii. 15; Heb. xii. 14; 1 Pet. i. 2), but not Greek writers. In Dion. Hal. i. 21, it is a false reading, as also in Diod. iv. 39. 'Αγιασμὸν stands without the article, because this highest moral goal is conceived of qualitatively.

Vv. 20-22. With γὰρ Paul does not introduce an illustration to ver. 19 (Fritzsche), but rather—seeing that ver. 20 through ὅν in ver. 21, as well as through the correlative antithesis in ver. 22, must necessarily form a connected whole in thought with what follows till the end of ver. 22—the motive for complying with what is enjoined in ver. 19; and that in such a way, that he first of all prepares the way for it by ver. 20, and then in ver. 21 f., leading on by ὅν, actually expresses it, equally impressively and touchingly, as respects its deterrent (ver. 21) and inviting (ver. 22) aspects. The fact that he first sets down ver. 20 for itself, makes the recollection which he thus calls up more forcible, more tragic. Observe also the emphasis and the symmetrical separation of the several words in ver. 20.— ἐλεύθ. ἦτε τῇ δικαιοσ. Ye were free in relation to righteousness, in point of fact independent of its demands, since ye were serving the opposite ruler (the ἀμαρτία). ὡς γὰρ διενέμετε τῆς δαυλείας τὸν τρόπον τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ καὶ τῇ ἀμαρτίᾳ, ἀλλ' ὅλως ἐκατοντος ἐξε-
CHAP. VI. 20-22. 309

διὸ ὅτε τῇ ποιήσῃ, Chrysostom. A sad truth based on experience! not a flight of irony (Koppe, Reiche, Philippi, and others), but full of deep moral pain. — Ver. 21. οὖν] in consequence of this freedom. — τίνα . . . ἐπαισχύνεσθε is with Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Castalio, Beza, Calvin, Grotius, Estius, Wetstein, Bengel, and others, including Winer, Reiche (but see below), Fritzsche, Jatho, and Hofmann (but see below)—in harmony with the punctuation of the text. rec.—to be regarded as one connected question, so that the reason to be given for replying in the negative sense to this question is then contained in τὸ γὰρ τέλος ἐκείνων θάνατος; namely, thus: what fruit, now, had ye then (when ye were still in the service of sin, etc., ver. 20) of things, on account of which ye are now ashamed? i.e. ye had then no fruit, no moral gain, etc., and the proof thereof is: for the final result of them (those things) is death. What leads at last to death, could bring you no moral gain. For the grammatical explanation ἐκείνων is to be supplied before ἕφις οὖς (which in fact is perfectly regular, Winer, p. 149 [E. T. 203]), and to this the ἐκείνων in the probative clause refers. Regarding ἐπαισχύνεσθε. ἐπὶ τίνι, to be ashamed over anything (not merely of the being put to shame by the fact of something not proving to be what we thought it, as Th. Schott weakens the sense) comp. Xen. Hell. v. 4, 33: ἐπὶ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ φίλιᾳ αἰσχυνθήσεται ἐπὶ τῇ τοιαύτῃ μιμήσει, LXX., Is. xx. 5, i. 29; 1 Macc. iv. 31; also Dem. 426, 10. Reiche makes the double mistake of very arbitrarily referring ἕφις οὖς to καρπὸν, which is to be taken collectively; and of explaining καρπὸν ἔχειν as meaning to bring forth fruit (which would be κ. ποιεῖν, φέρειν), so that the sense would be: “what deeds, on account of which ye are now ashamed, proceeded from your service of sin?” Hofmann, resolving the expression into ἐπὶ τούτοις ἀ νῦν ἐπαισχύνεσθε, wishes to take ἐπὶ in the well-known sense of addition to, so that Paul asks: “what fruit had ye then over and above those things of which ye are now ashamed?” those things being the former disgraceful enjoyments, with which they now desired to have nothing further to do. But how could the reader think of such enjoyments without any hint being given by the text? And how arbitrary in this particular place is that interpretation of ἐπὶ, especially when the verb itself is compounded with ἐπὶ, and that in the sense: to be ashamed thereupon, and accordingly indicates how ἐφ’ οἷς is to be resolved and properly understood! See generally on ἐπὶ with the dative, as specifying the ground with verbs of emotion, Kühner, II. 1, p. 436, and with αἰσχύν. II. 2, p. 381, rem. 6. Many others (Syriac, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Theodoret, Theophylact, Erasmus, Luther, Melancthon, Erasmus Schmid, Heumann, Carpzov, Koppe, Tholuck undecidedly, Rückert, Köllner, de Wette, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Philippi, Reithmayr, Ewold, van Hengel, and Th. Schott) end the question with τότε, so that ἐφ’ οἷς νῦν ἐπαισχ. becomes the answer, of which again τὸ γὰρ τέλ. ἐκ θαν. is the proof: “what sort of fruit had ye then? Things (ye had as fruit) of which ye are now ashamed; for the end of them is death.” Καρπὸς is likewise regarded as a figurative description either of gain or reward (“ignoble and pernicious joys and pleasures,” Ewald), or of actions, which are the penal consequence of reprobate sentiments. But fatal to all this explanation, which breaks up the passage, is the antithesis in ver. 22, where the having of fruit, not its quality, is opposed to the preceding; if Paul had inquired in ver. 21 regarding the quality of the fruit, he must have used in ver. 22 some such expression as νῦν δὲ ἡμὲν ἄγιασμὸν ἐχετε τὸν καρπὸν ὑμῶν. Besides, we cannot well see why he should not have written either τίνας καρποὺς or ἐφ’ ὁ and ἐκεῖνον; he would by annexing the plurals, though these were in themselves admissible on account of the collective nature of καρποῦς, have only expressed himself in a fashion obscure and misleading. Finally, it is to be observed that he never attributes καρπὸν or καρποὺς to immorality; he attributes to it ἔργα (Gal. v. 19), but uses καρπὸς only of the good; he speaks of the καρπὸς τοῦ πνεύματος, Gal. v. 22; of the καρπὸς τοῦ φῶτος, Eph. v. 9; of the καρπὸς δικαιοσύνης, Phil. i. 11; of the καρπ. ἔργου, Phil. i. 22; comp. Rom. i. 13; in fact he negates the idea of καρπὸς in reference to evil, when he describes the ἔργα τοῦ σκότους as ἀκαρπα, Eph. v. 11; comp. Tit. iii. 14. With this type of conception our interpretation alone accords, by which in the question τίνα καρπὸν κ.τ.λ. (comp. 1 Cor. ix. 18) there is contained the negation of καρπὸς in the service of sin, the ἀκαρποῦν εἶναι. The most plausible objection to our explanation is this, that in accordance with it ἐφ’ οἷς νῦν ἐπαισχ. becomes merely an incidental observation. But an incidental observation may be of great weight in its bearing on the matter in hand. It is so here, where it contains a trenchant argumentative point in favour of replying in a negative sense to the question. Calvin aptly says:
“non poterat gravius exprimere quod volebat, quam appellando eorum conscientiam et quasi in eorum persona pudorem confitendo.” Compare also Chrysostom.— ἐκεῖνων neuter: those things, on account of which ye are now ashamed, the pre-Christian sins and vices. Bengel well remarks: “remote spectat praeterita.” — θανατός death, i.e. the eternal death, whose antithesis is the ζωή αἰώνιος, ver. 23; not the physical (Fritzsche), comp. on ver. 16.— The μέν before γάρ (see the crit. remarks) does not correspond to the following δέ; on the contrary, we must translate: for the end indeed (which however excludes every fruit) is death. See Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 414, Winer, p. 534 f. [E. T. 719 f.]. — Ver. 22. νῦν δέ κ.τ.λ. But now (ye are. no longer without fruit, as formerly; no, now) ye possess your fruit unto holiness, so that its possession has as its consequence holiness for you (εἰς consecutive). The ἄγιασμός is consequently not the fruit (the moral gain) itself, which they already have (that would also be at variance with οὐδώ νῦν παραστ. . . . . εἰς ἄγιασμόν in ver. 19), but the state, which the εἴρην of their fruit shall in future bring about. The fruit itself—and καρπός is to be taken, quite as in ver. 21, as ethical product—is consequently the new, Christian morality (comp. the κανώτης ζωῆς in ver. 4), the Christian virtuous nature which belongs to them (ἡμῶν), and the possession of which leads by the way of progressive development to holiness.— τῷ δὲ τέλος ζωῆς αἰών.] as the final result however (of this your fruit) eternal life in the kingdom of Messiah. This possession is now as yet an ideal one (viii. 24). Hofmann erroneously takes τῷ δὲ τέλος adverbially
(1 Pet. iii. 8; comp. on 1 Cor. xv. 24), which is impossible after ver. 21, in accordance with which the word must here also be the emphatic substantive, the finale of the καρπός; hence also ζωῆς αἰώνιον is dependent not on εἰς (Hofmann), but on εἴρην.
— The circumstance, moreover, that Paul in ver. 22 says δοῦλοι θεοῦ.
τῷ Θεῷ, while in ver. 18 he has said ἐδούλησα, τῷ δικαιοσύνῃ, is rightly illustrated by Grotius: “qui bonitati rebusque honestis servit, et Deo servit, quia Deus hoc semper amavit et in evangelio apertissime praecepit." Comp. xii. 2. And precisely therein lies the true freedom, 1 Pet. ii. 16; John viii. 36.

Ver. 23. Τὰ ὀψόνια] the wages. Comp. 1 Cor. ix. 7; Luke iii. 14. Ὀψόνιον κυρίως λέγεται τὸ τοῖς στρατιώταις παρὰ τοῦ βασιλέως δεδομένου σιτηρέσιον, Theophylact. Comp. Photius, 367. See Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 420. The plural, more usual than the singular, is explained by the various elements that constituted the original natural payments, and by the coins used in the later money wages. — The wages which sin gives stands in reference to ver. 13, where the ἀμαρτία is presented as a ruler, to whom the subjects tender their members as weapons, for which they receive their allowance! — θάνατος] as in ver. 22. — τὸ δὲ χάρισμα τ. Θεού] Paul does not say τὰ ὀψόνια here also ("vile verbum," Erasmus), but characterizes what God gives for wages as what it is in its specific nature—a gift of grace, which is no ἀντιπαλαντεύεσθαι (Theodoret). To the Apostle, in the connection of his system of faith and doctrine, this was very natural, even without the supposition of any special design (in order— it has been suggested—to afford no encouragement to pride of virtue or to confiding in one's own merit). — ἐν Χριστῷ κ.τ.λ.] In Christ is the causal basis, that the χάρισμα τ. Θεοῦ is eternal life; a triumphant conclusion as in v. 21; comp. viii. 39.
CHAPTER VII.

Ver. 6. ἀποθανόντες[ Elz. reads ἀποθανόντος, which was introduced as a conjecture by Beza, without critical evidence, solely on account of some misunderstood words of Chrysostom (see Mill, Bengel, Appar., and especially Reiche, Comment. crit. i. p. 50 ff.). The ἀποθανόντες, adopted by Griesb. Matth. Lachm. Scholz, and Tisch., following Erasmus and Mill, is the reading in A B C K L P N, min., and most vss. and Fathers. DEF G Vulg. It. codd. in Ruf. and Latin Fathers read τοῦ θανάτου. Preferred by Reiche. But especially when we consider its merely one-sided attestation (the Oriental witnesses are wanting), it seems to be a gloss having a practical bearing (see ver. 5) on τοῦ νόμου, which has dispossessed the participle regarded as disturbing the construction. — Ver. 13. γένονε[ Lachm. and Tisch. (8), following A B C D E P N, 47, 73, 80, Method. Damasc. read ἐγένετο. Some Latin codd. have est. FG have no verb at all. With the preponderance, thus all the more decisive, of the witnesses which favour ἐγένετο, it is to be preferred. — Ver. 14. σάρκινος[ The σάρκινος adopted by Griesb. Lachm. Scholz, and Tisch. is attested by A B C D E F G N*, min., and several Fathers. For this reason, and because the ending κὸς was easily suggested by the preceding πνευματικός, as in general σάρκινος was more familiar to the copyists (xx. 27; 1 Cor. ix. 11; 2 Cor. x. 4; 1 Pet. ii. 11) than σάρκινος (2 Cor. iii. 3), the latter is to be assumed as the original reading. — Ver. 17. οἰκούσα[ Tisch. (8) reads ένοικοῦσα, which would have to be received, if it were attested in more quarters than by BN. — Ver. 18. οὐχ εὕρισκο] A B C N, 47, 67, 80, Copt. Arm. Procl. in Epiph. Method. Cyr. codd. Gr. ap. Aug. have merely οὐ. Approved by Griesb.; adopted by Lachm. and Tisch. But if there had been a gloss, the supplement would have been παράκειται. The omission on the other hand is explained by the copyist’s hurrying on from ΟΥΧ to the ΟΥ at the beginning of ver. 19. — Ver. 20. τῇ άλω ἐγώ[ Since ἐγώ is wanting in B C D E F G, min., Arm. Vulg. It. and several Fathers, but is found in 219, Clem. after τοῦτο, in Chrys. before οὐ; and since it is, according to the sense and the analogy of vv. 15, 19, inappropriate, it has rightly been deleted by Lachm. and Fritzsche, and is to be regarded as a mechanical addition from what immediately follows. If ἐγὼ were original (and had been omitted in accordance with vv. 15, 19), it must have had the emphasis of the contrast, which however it has not. — Ver. 25. εἰκαριστῶ] Lachm. and Tisch. read χάρις, which Griesb. also approved of, following B and several min., vss. and Fathers. Fritzsche reads χάρις δὲ in accordance with C, N, min., Copt. Arm. and Fathers. Both are taken from the near, and, in the connection of ideas, analogous vi. 17 (not εἰκαρπ. from i. 8). The reading ἦ χάρις Ἰ. Θεοῦ (D E and some Fathers), or ἦ χ. τ. κυρίου (F G), is manifestly an alteration, in order to make the answer follow the preceding question.

Vv. 1-6. The Christian is not under the Mosaic law; but through his fellowship in the death of Christ he has died to the law, in order to belong to the Risen One and in this new union to lead a life consecrated to God.

Ver. 1. ᾿Η ἀγνοεῖτε] Paul certainly begins now the detailed illustration, still left over, of ὦ γὰρ εἶτε, vi. 14; but he connects his transition to it with what immediately precedes, as is clear from the nature of ᾿Η (comp. vi. 3). Nevertheless the logical reference of ᾿Η ἀγνοεῖτε is not to be sought possibly in the previous τῷ κυρίῳ ἡμῶν, with which the following κυρίες is here correlative (Reiche), since that κυρίες has in fact no essential importance at all and is for the progress of the thought in material; but rather in the leading idea last expressed (ver. 22), and established (ver. 23), namely, that the Christian, freed from the service of sin and become the servant of God, has his fruit to holiness, and, as the final result, eternal life. This proposition could not be truth, if the Christian were not free from the law and did not belong to the Risen Christ instead, etc., vv. 1-6. — ᾧδελφοί[ address to the readers collectively (comp. i. 13), not merely to the Jewish Christians (Toletus, Grotius, Estius, Ch. Schmidt, and others, including Tholuck and Philippi), because in that case an addition must have been made excluding Gentile Christians, which however is so far from being contained in γινώσκουσι, especially when it is without the article, that in the case of Christians generally the knowledge of the O. T. was of necessity to be presupposed; see below. This applies also against Hofmann's view, that Paul, although avoiding a specific express designation, has in view that portion of his readers, which had not been capable of the misconception indicated in ver. 15. This limitation also—and how easily could the adroit author of the Epistle have indicated it in a delicate way!—cannot be deduced either from ἀδελφοὶ or from γινώσκων κτ.λ. — γινώσκ. γὰρ νόμ. λ.] justifies the appeal to the readers' own insight: for I speak to such as know the law. We may not infer from these parenthetical words, or from vv. 4-6, that the majority of the Roman congregation was composed of Jewish-Christians;¹ for, looking to the close connection subsisting between the Jewish and Gentile-Christian portions of the Church, to the custom borrowed from the synagogue of reading from the Old Testament in public, and to the necessary and essential relations which evangelical instruction and preaching sustained to the Old Testament so that the latter was the basis from which they started, the Apostle might designate his readers generally as γινώσκοντες τῶν νόμων, and predicate of them an acquaintance with the law. Comp. on Gal. iv. 21. The less need is there for the assumption of a previous proselytism (de Wette, Beyschlag, and many others), with which moreover the ἀδελφὸς addressing the readers in common is at variance; comp. i. 13, viii. 12, x. 1, xi. 23, xii. 1, xv. 14, 30, xvi. 17. — ὁ νόμος not every law (Koppe, van Hengel); nor the moral law (Glöckler); but the Mosaic, and that in the usual sense comprehending the whole; not merely of the law of marriage (Besa, Toletus, Bengel, Carpzov, Chr. Schmidt; comp. Olshausen). This is required by the theme of the discussion generally, and by the foregoing γινώσκ. γ. νόμ. λαλῶ in particular. — τοῦ ἀνθρώπου is not to be connected with ὁ νόμος (Hammond, Clericus, Elsner, and Mosheim), but belongs, as the order of the words demands, to κυριεύειν. — εἴ πάσαν χρ. ἐν. For so long time as he liveth (ἐπὶ as in Gal. iv. 1 in the sense of stretching over a period of time, see Bernhardy, p. 252; comp. Nägelsbach, z. Ilias, ii. 299, ed. 3, Ast. Lex. Plat. I. p. 768), the (personified) law is lord over the man who is subjected to it (τοῦ ἄνθρωπ.). That ὁ ἀνθρώπος is the subject to ἐν, is decided by vv. 2, 3, 4. By the assumption of ὁ νόμος as subject

1 On the entire chapter, see Achélis in the Stud. u. Krit. 1863, p. 670 ff.

¹ On the contrary, the inference would be: If the Church had been a Jewish-Christian one, the γινώσκων νόμων would in its case have been so entirely self-evident, that we should not be able at all to see why Paul should have specially noticed it. But as converted Gentiles the readers had become acquainted with the law. This also applies against Holtmann, Judenth. u. Christenth, p. 783.
(Origen, Ambrosiaster, Erasmus, Vatablus, Grotius, Estius, Bengel, Koppe, and Flatt), in which case ζηγ is supposed to signify viget or valet (in spite of vv. 2, 3), the discourse is quite disarranged; for Paul is not discussing the abrogation of the law, but the fact that the Christian as such is no longer under it. Nor do vv. 2, 3 require ὅ νόμος as subject, because the point there illustrated is, that the death of the man (not of the law) dissolves the binding power of the law over him. Comp. Schabb. f. 151, 2: "postquam mortuus est homo, liber est a praeceptis;" Targ. Ps. lxxxviii. 6 in Wetstein on ver. 3. The proposition in vi. 7 is similar, and presupposes this thought. To take ζηγ as equivalent to ζηγ ἐν σαρκί (“so long as the man continues to lead his old natural life, he is a servant of the law,” Philippi, also Umbreit), is quite opposed to the context: see ζωτικος and ζωντος in vv. 2, 3, with their antitheses. The emphasis, moreover, is not on ζηγ (Hofmann), but, as is shown by the very expression סדוא, on ἐφ' ἵσον χρόνον, for the entire time, that he lives; it does not lose its power over him sooner than when he dies; so long as he is in life, he remains subject to it. If this is attended to and there is not introduced a wholly irrelevant "only so long as he liveth," the thought appears neither trivial nor disproportionate to the appeal to the legal knowledge of his readers. For there is a peculiarity of the νόμος in the fact, that it cannot have, like human laws, merely temporary force, that it cannot be altered or suspended, nor can one for a time be exempted from its control, etc. No, so long as man's life endures, the dominion of the νόμος over him continues. Nor is the proposition incorrect (because that dominion ceases in the case of the believer, Philippi); for it simply contains a general rule of law, which, it is self-evident, refers to the αὐθερματος ἐννομος as such. If the Jew becomes a Christian, he dies as a Jew (ver. 4), and the rule in question is not invalidated.

Ver. 2. Concrete illustration of the proposition in ver. 1, derived from the relation of the law to marriage and its dissolution, which in the woman's case can only take place through the death of the husband, so that it is only after that death has occurred that she may marry another. This example, as the tenor of the following text shows (in opposition to Hofmann), is selected, not because the legal ordinance in question was in its nature the only one that Paul could have employed, but because he has it in view to bring forward the union with Christ, which takes place after the release from the law, as analogous to a new marriage, and does so in ver. 4. The illustration is only apparently (not really; Usteri, Rückert, and even Umbreit in the Stud. u. Krit. 1851, p. 643) awkward, in so far namely as the deceased and the person released from the law through the event of death are represented in it as different. This appearance drove Chrysostom and his followers to adopt the hypothesis of an inversion of the comparison; thus holding that the law is properly the deceased party, but that Paul expressed himself as he has done out of consideration for the Jews (comp. Calvin and others), whereas Tholuck contents himself with the assumption of a (strange) pregnancy of expression which would include in the one side the other also; and Umbreit regards “the irregularity in the change of person” as unavoidable. But the semblance of inappropriateness vanishes on considering καὶ ἡμεῖς in ver. 4 (see on that passage), from which it is plain that Paul in his illustration, ver. 2 f., follows the view, that the death of the husband implies (in a metaphorical sense by virtue of the union of the two spouses in one person, Eph. v. 28 ff.) the death of the woman also as respected her married relation, and consequently her release from the law, so far as it had bound her as a ἵππος γυνὴ to her husband, so that she may now marry another, which previously she could not do, because the law does not cease to be lord over the man before he is dead. So in substance also Achelis l.c. Consequently ver. 2 f. is not to be taken allegorically, but properly and concretely; and it is only in ver. 4 that the allegorical application occurs. It has been allegorically explained, either so, that the wife signifies the soul and the husband the sin that has died with Christ (Augustine, comp. Olshausen); or, that the wife represents humanity (or the church) and the husband the law, to which the former had been spiritually married (Ori- gen, Chrysostom, Calvin, and others, including Klee, Reiche, and Philippi). But the former is utterly foreign to the theme of the text; and the latter would anticipate the application in ver. 4. — ὁ παντρευμένος] viro subjecta, married; also current in later Greek authors, as in Polyb. x. 26, 3, Athen. ix. p. 388 C; in the N. T. only here. See Wetstein and Jacobs, ad Ael. N. A. iii. 42. — τὰ δόματα τὰν ἀνδρί] to her (τῷ) living husband. δόματα has the emphasis, correlative to the ἐφ δοσον χρόνου ζυγον in ver. 1. On δεδομένα comp. 1 Cor. vii. 27. — νόμῳ] by the law. For by the law of Moses the right of dismissing the husband was not given to the wife (Michaelis, Mos. R. § 120; Saalschütz, p. 806 f.). Paul however leaves unnoticed the case of the woman through divorce ceasing to be bound to her husband (Deut. xxiv. 2; Kiddusch. f. 2, 1: “Mulier possidet se ipsam per libellum repudii et per mortem mariti”), regarding the matter, in accordance with his scope, only in such a way as not merely seemed to be the rule in the majority of cases, but also harmonized with the original ordinance of the Creator (Matth. xix. 8). — κατηγορηται ἀπὸ τ. νόμου τ. ἀνδρ.] that is, with respect to her hitherto subsisting subordination under the law binding her to her husband she is absolved, free and rid of it. See on Gal. v. 4. The Apostle thus gives expression to the thought lying at the basis of his argument, that with the decease of the husband the wife also has ceased to exist as respects her legal connection with him; in this legal relation, from which she is fully released, she is no longer existent. Comp. on ὁ τοῦ νόμου τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ ἡγουμένου; see on GaL v. 4. She is still there, but no longer as bound to that law, to which she died with the death of her husband; comp. ver. 6. The joining of ὁ νόμος with the genitive of the subject concerned (frequent in the LXX.) is very common also in classic authors. Th. Schott, following Bengel, erroneously takes τ. ἀνδρ. as genitive of apposition; the law being for the wife embodied in the husband. The law that determines the relation of the wife to the husband is what is intended, like ὁ νόμος ὁ περὶ τοῦ ἀνδρος; see Kühner, II. 1, p. 287.

1 Comp. Th Schott, p. 267; Hofmann formerly held the right view (Schriftbew. II. 1, p. 352).

Ver. 3. Ἀπα δοῦμαι See on v. 18. — χρηματίσει] she shall (formally) bear the name. See Acts xi. 26; Plut. Mor. 148 D; Polyb. v. 27, 2, 5, xxx. 2, 4. The future corresponds to the following: εἶναι γένοστα ἀνδρὶ ἐτέρω] if she shall have become joined to another husband (as wife). Comp. Deut. xxiv. 2; Ruth i. 12; Judg. xiv. 20; Ez. xvi. 7, xxiii. 4. It is not a Hebraism; see Kypke, II. p. 170; Kühner, II. 1, p. 384. — ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου] from the law, so far, that is, as it binds the wife to the husband. From that bond she is now released, ver. 2. — τοῦ μὴ εἶναι κτλ. Not a more precise definition (Th. Schott); nor yet a consequence (as usually rendered), which is never correct, not even in Acts vii. 19 (see Fritzsche, ad Matth. p. 845 ff.); but rather: in order that she be not an adulteress. That is the purpose, involved in the divine legal ordinance, of her freedom from the law.

Ver. 4. "Ωστέτε] does not express the "agreement" or the "harmony" with which what follows connects itself with the preceding (Hofmann), as if Paul had written ὅστατοι or ὅμοιοι. It is rather the common itaque (Vulgate), accordingly, therefore, consequently, which, heading an independent sentence, draws an inference from the preceding, and introduces the actual relation which results from vv. 1-3 with respect to Christians, who through the death of Christ are in a position corresponding with that of the wife. This inference lays down that legal marriage relation as type. — καὶ ἵμείς] ye also, like the wife in that illustration quoted in vv. 2, 3, who through the death of her husband is dead to the dominion of the law. In this, in the first instance (for the main stress falls on eἰς τὸ γενέσθαι κ.τ.λ.), lies the point of the inference; analogously with the case of that wife Christians also are dead to the law through the death of Christ, because, in their spiritual union with Him, they have suffered death along with Him. Van Hengel takes καὶ ἵμείς in the sense: ye also, like other Christians, which, however, since ver. 4 begins the application of what had previously been said of the woman, is neither in harmony with the text nor rendered necessary by the first person καρποφορ. — ἐθανάτ. τῷ νόμῳ] ye were rendered dead to the law,1 so that over you as dead persons it rules no longer (ver. 1). The dative as in vi. 2, 10. The passive (not ye died) is selected, because this (ethical) death of Christians is fellowship with the death of Christ, which was a violent one. Therefore: διὰ τοῦ σώματος X.] by the fact, that the body of Christ was put to death. The conception of the participation of believers (as respects their

1 This is expressed from the Jewish-Christian consciousness, nevertheless it includes indirectly the Gentile-Christians also; for without perfect obedience to the law no man could have attained to salvation, wherefore also obedience to the law was expected on the part of Judaists from the converted Gentiles (Acts xv.). As the argument advances, the language of the Apostle becomes communicative, so that he includes himself with his readers, among whom he makes no distinction. Compare viii. 15; Gal. iii. 14, iv. 6. By our passage therefore the readers are not indicated as having been, as respects the majority, Jews or at least proselytes.
inner life and its moral self-consciousness) in the death of their Lord, according to which the putting to death of their Master included their own putting to death, is justly assumed by Paul, after ch. vi., as something present to the consciousness of his readers, and therefore views deviating from this (e.g. that διὰ τ. σώμ. τ. Χ. applies to the atoning sacrificial death, which did away the dominion of the law) are to be rejected as here irrelevant, and not in keeping with the proper sense of εἴδανατ. For that εἴδανατ. τ. νόμῳ is meant to be a mild expression for δόνομος εἴδανατόθη, ἀπέθανεν ύμῖν (Koppe and Klee, following Calvin, Grotius, and others, also several Fathers; comp. on ver. 2), is an assumption as gratuitous, as is a “contraction of the thought and expression,” which Philippi finds, when he at the same time introduces the conception of the putting to death of the law through the body of Christ, which is here alien. — εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι ύμᾶς ἐτέρω[ν] in order to become joined to another (than the law)—this is the object which the εἴδανατ. τ. νόμῳ κ.τ.λ. had, and thereby the main point in the declaration introduced by ἔστε, parallel to the τοῦ μὴ εἶναι κ.τ.λ. in ver. 3. Paul apprehends the relation of fellowship and dependence of the Christian’s life to Christ—as he had prepared the way for doing so in vv. 2, 3, and as was in keeping with his mode of view elsewhere (2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 25 ff.)—under the image of a marriage connection, in which the exalted Christ is the husband of His Church that has become independent of the law by dying with Him. — τῷ ἐκ νεκρ. ἐγέρθη] apposition to ἐτέρω, in significant historical reference to διὰ τ. σώμ. τ. Χ. For if Christ became through His bodily death our deliverer from the law, we cannot now belong to Him otherwise than as the Risen One for a new and indissoluble union. The importance of this addition in its bearing on the matter in hand lies in the καυνότης ζωῆς (vi. 3, 11, 13, 22) which, on the very ground of the ethical communion with the Risen One, issues from the new relation. Certainly the death of Christ appears here “as the end of a sin-conditioned state of the humanity to be united in Him” (Hofmann, Schriftbew. II 1, p. 354); but this great moral epoch has as its necessary presupposition just the vicarious atoning power of the λαστήριον which was rendered in the death of Jesus; it could not take place without this and without the faith appropriating it, iii. 21 ff.; v. 1 ff. — ἵνα καρποφ. τ. Θεο[\]
The aim not of ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγερθέντι (Koppe, Th. Schott, Hofmann), but rather—because the belonging to is that which conditions the fruit-bearing—of the γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς ἐτέρῳ, τῷ ἐκ νεκρ. ἐγ. consequently the final aim of the ἐθανάτ. τῷ νόμῳ. There is here (though van Hengel and others call it in question, contrary to the clear connection) a continuation of the figure of marriage with respect to its fruitfulness (Luke i. 42; Ps. cxxvii. 3, Symm. and Theod. Ps. xci. 15). The morally holy walk, namely, in its consecration to God is, as it were, the fruit which issues from our fellowship of life with Christ risen from the dead as from a new marriage-union, and which belongs in property to God as the lord-paramount of that union (the supreme ruler of the Messianic theocracy); the bringing forth of fruit takes place for God. The opinion of Reiche and Fritzsché that καρποφ. taken in the sense of the fruit of marriage yields an undignified allegory (the figure therefore is to be taken as borrowed from a field or a tree, which Philippi, Tholuck, and Reithmayr also prefer) is untenable, seeing that the union with Christ, if regarded as a marriage at all, must also necessarily, in accordance with its moral design, be conceived of as a fruitful marriage.\(^1\)

Ver. 5. Confirmation of the ἵνα καρποφ. τ. Θεοφ. That we should bring forth fruit to God, I say with justice; for formerly under the law we bore fruit to death, but now (ver. 6) our position is quite different from what it was before. — ὅτε ἦμεν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ. This is the positive and characteristic expression for the negative: when we were not yet made dead to the law. Then the σάρξ—the materially human element in us, in its psychically determined antagonism to the Divine Spirit and will—was the life-element in which we moved. Comp. viii. 8 f.; 2 Cor. x. 3. We are ἐν τ. σώματι, 1 Cor. v. 3 (2 Cor. xii. 2), even after we have died with Christ, because that is an ethical death; but for that very reason we are now, according to the holy self-consciousness of the new life of communion with the Risen One, no longer ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ; and our body, although we still as respects its material

---

\(^1\) This view is the one perfectly consistent with the context, and should not be superseded by the prudery of modern canons of taste (Fritzsché terms it jejunam et obsceneam). Theodoret already has the right view: καὶ ἑκατὸν συνεδριάς κ. γάμων τὴν εἰς τῶν κόρων προσηγόρευε πιστῶς, εἰδὼς δεικνύει καὶ τῶν τού γάμων καρπῶν. Comp. Theophylact.
substance live in the flesh (Gal. ii. 20), is ethically not a σῶμα τῆς σαρκὸς any more, Col. ii. 11. The interpretation of Theodore: τῇ κατὰ νόμον πολιτείᾳ (so also Oecumenius), though hitting the approximate meaning of the matter, has its inaccurate arbitrariness exposed by the reason assigned for it: σάρκα γὰρ τῇ τῆς σαρκί δεδομένας νομοθεσίας ὄνομασε, τῶς περὶ βρο- σεως κ. τόσεως. The description ἐν τῇ σαρκί must supply the ethical conception which corresponds with the contents of the apodosis. Therefore we may not render with Theodore of Mopsuestia: when we were mortal (the believer being no longer reckoned as mortal); but the moral reference of the expression requires at least a more precise definition of the contents than that the existence of the Christian had ceased to be an existence locked up in his inborn nature (Hofmann). — τὰ παθ. τῶν ἁμαρτ.] the passions through which sins are brought about, of which the sins are the actual consequence. On παθήματα compare Gal. v. 24, and παθητ. i. 26. They are the passive excitations (often used by Plato in contrast to ποιήματα), which one experiences (πάρεξει). Comp. esp. Plat. Phil. p. 47 C.— τὰ διὰ τ. νόμου] sc. οὖν, which are occasioned by the law; How? see vv. 7, 8. It is erroneous in Chrysostom and Grotius to supply φανώμενα. Comp. rather 1 Cor. xv. 56. — ἐννηγεῖτο] were active, middle, not passive (Estius, Glöckler) which would be contrary to Pauline usage. See 2 Cor. i. 6, iv. 12; Eph. iii. 20; Gal. v. 6; Col. i. 29; 1 Thess. ii. 13; 2 Thess. ii. 7. The Greeks have not this use of the middle. — ἐν τ. μέλην.] in our members (as in ver. 23 and vi. 13) they were the active agent. — εἰς τὸ καρποφ. τ. θανάτῳ This is the tendency (the parallel ἦν καρποφ. τ. θερ. in ver. 4 is decisive here against the interpretation, everywhere erroneous, of the consequence) which the passions of sin, in their operation in our members, had with us: that we should bring forth fruit unto death, that is, divested of figure: that we should lead a life falling under the power of death. The subject ἢμας is supplied, as often along with the infinitive (comp. Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. iii. 6, 10; Anab. ii. 1, 12), naturally and easily from the immediately preceding ἢμαν (comp. 1 Cor. viii. 10; 2 Thess. iii. 9; Heb. ix. 14). There is therefore the less reason to depart from the mode of conception prevailing in ver. 4, and to understand the παθήματα as the fruit-bearing subjects (Hofmannot; comp. Vulgate, Luther, Calvin, and others), in which case there is imported the conception that the occurrence is something foreign to the man himself (Hofmann). The θανάτος, personified as the lord-paramount opposed to τῷ Θεῷ in ver. 4, is not physical (Fritzsche) but eternal death, vi. 21, 23, which is incurred through sinful life. The καρπόφ. however retains here the figure of the fruit of marriage, namely, according to the context, of the marriage with the law (ver. 4), which is now dissolved since we have died with Christ. Comp. Erasmus, Paraph.: "ex infelicematrimonio infelices foetus sustulimus, quicquid nasceretur morti exitioque gignentes." In Matth. xii. 39 the conception is different. But comp. James i. 15.

Ver. 6. καταφγ.] See on ver. 2. — ἀποθανόντες ἐν ἀταθείς dead (see ver. 4) to that (neuter) wherein we were held fast. So also Fritzsche and Reiche in his Comm. crit. The construction is consistent and regular, so that τοῦτῳ is to be understood before ἐν ἀταθείς (Winer, p. 149 f. [E. T. 203 f.]). That wherein we were held fast (as in a prison), is self-evident according to the text; not as the government of sin (van Hengel, Th. Schott), or as the ὁδός (Hofmann), but as the law, in whose grasp we were. Comp. Gal. ii. 28. Were we with the majority (including Rückert, de Wette, Köllner, Krehl, Philippi, Maier, Winer, Ewald, Bisping, and Reithmayr) to take in as masculine (and how unnecessarily!), the ἀποθανόντες as modal definition of καταφγ. would have an isolated and forlorn position; we should have expected it behind νῦν ἔν — ὅστε δουλείαις κ.τ.λ.] actual result, which has occurred through our emancipation from the law: so that we (as Christians) are serviceable in newness of spirit, and not in oldness of letter; that is, so that our relation of service is in a new definite character regulated by spirit, and not in the old constitution which was regulated by literal form. That the δουλείαις in καυστής πνεύμ. was a service of God, was just as obvious of itself to the consciousness of the readers, as that in παλαιστής γράμμ. it had been a service of sin (vi. 20). On account of this self-evident diversity of reference no definition at all is added. On the οὗ in the contrast (not μη) see Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 300. — ἐν indicates the sphere of activity of the δουλείαις, and is to be understood again along with παλ.; comp. ii. 29. The qualitatively expressed πνεύματος, meaning in concrete application the Holy Spirit as the efficient principle of the Christian life, and the qualitative γράμματος, characterising the law according to its nature and character as non-living and drawn up in letters, are the specifically heterogeneous factors on which the two contrasted states are dependent. The παλαιότης —in accordance with the nature of the relation in which the law, presenting its demands in the letter but not inwardly operative, stands to the principle of sin in man—was necessarily sinful (not merely in actual abnormality, as Rothe thinks; see ver. 7 ff., and comp. on vi. 14); just as on the other hand the καινότης, on account of the vitally active πνεῦμα, must also necessarily be moral. Where this is contradicted by experience and the behaviour of the Christian is immoral, there the πνεῦμα has ceased to operate, and a καινότης πνεύματος is in fact not present at all. Paul however, disregarding such abnormal phenomena, contemplates the Christian life as it is constituted in accordance with its new, holy, and lofty nature. If it is otherwise, it has fallen away from its specific nature and is a Christian life no longer.

END OF VOLUME FIRST.
WORKS PUBLISHED BY MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK,
38 GEORGE STREET, EDINBURGH.

(TEMPORARY) CHEAP RE-ISSUE OF STIER'S WORDS OF THE LORD JESUS.

To meet a very general desire that the now well-known Work of Dr. Stier,
THE WORDS OF THE LORD JESUS,
should be brought more within the reach of all classes, both Clergy and Laity, Messrs. Clark have resolved to issue the Eight Volumes, handsomely bound in Four, for TWO GUINEAS.

This can be only offered for a limited period; and as the allowance to the trade must necessarily be small, orders sent either direct, or through booksellers, must in every case be accompanied with a Post Office Order for the above amount.

'The whole work is a treasury of thoughtful exposition. Its measure of practical and spiritual application, with exegetical criticism, commends it to the use of those whose duty it is to preach as well as to understand the Gospel of Christ.'—Guardian.

'Every page is fretted and studded with lines and forms of the most alluring beauty. At every step the reader is constrained to pause and ponder, lest he should overlook one or other of the many precious blossoms that, in the most dazzling profusion, are scattered around his path. We venture to predict that his Words of Jesus are destined to produce a great and happy revolution in the interpretation of the New Testament in this country.'—British and Foreign Evangelical Review.
T. and T. Clark's Publications.

LANGÉ'S
COMMENTARIES ON THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

Messrs. Clark have now pleasure in intimating their arrangements, under the Editorship of Dr. Philip Schaff, for the Publication of Translations of the Commentaries of Dr. Lange and his Collaborateurs on the Old and New Testaments.

There are now ready (in imperial 8vo, double columns), price 21s. per Volume,

OLD TESTAMENT, Six Volumes:
COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF GENESIS, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON JOSHUA, JUDGES, AND RUTH, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE BOOKS OF KINGS, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE PSALMS, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON PROVERBS, ECCLESIASTES, AND THE SONG OF SOLOMON, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON JEREMIAH AND LAMENTATIONS, in One Volume.

The other Books of the Old Testament are in active preparation, and will be announced as soon as ready.

NEW TESTAMENT, Ten Volumes:
COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. MATTHEW, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPELS OF ST. MARK and ST. LUKE, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL TO THE ROMANS, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL TO THE CORINTHIANS, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL TO THE GALATIANS, EPHESIANS, PHILIPPIANS, and COLOSSIANS, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLES TO THE THESSALONIANS, TIMOTHY, TITUS, PHILEMON, and HEBREWS, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLES OF JAMES, PETER, JOHN, and JUDE, in One Volume.
COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF REVELATION, in One Volume (in the press).

The price to Subscribers to the Foreign Theological Library, St. Augustine's Works, and Ante-Nicene Library, or to Purchasers of Complete Sets of the Commentary (so far as published), will be

FIFTEEN SHILLINGS PER VOLUME.

Dr. Lange's Commentary on the Gospels and Acts (without Dr. Schaff's Notes) is also published in the FOREIGN THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, in Nine Volumes demy 8vo, and may be had in that form if desired. (For particulars, see List of Foreign Theological Library.)
This day, in Two Volumes crown 8vo, price 12s. 6d.,

Christian Ethics. Translated from the German of Dr. ADOLF WUTTKE, late Professor of Theology in Halle.
Vol. I. History of Ethics; Vol. II. Pure Ethics.

This work, so well known in Germany, has been translated at the recommendation of Dr. Tholuck; and all critics accord in testifying that the author was a man singularly endowed with keenness of philosophic insight and with devoutness of Christian faith.

"Wuttke's Ethics should have a place in every pastor's library."—Dr. Hengstenberg.

WORKS BY DR. C. E. LUTHARDT.

In One Volume crown 8vo (in the Press),

Apologetic Lectures on the Morality of Christianity.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I. The Nature of Christian Morality.
I. Man.
II. The Christian and the Christian Virtues.

CHAPTER V. Christian Marriage.
VI. The Christian Home.
VII. The State and Christianity.
VIII. The Life of the Christians in the State.
IX. Culture and Christianity.
X. Humanity and Christianity.

In One Volume crown 8vo, price 6s.,

"An eloquent and powerful exposition of the truth. . . . Whilst the author walks in the old trodden paths, there is, along with a remarkable clearness of apprehension and accuracy of judgment, a freshness and originality of thought and a singular beauty of language, under the spell of which we read these lectures with unflagging interest. . . . They traverse a wide field of theological inquiry."—British and Foreign Evangelical Review.

"We commend his lectures as very able. His scholarship is adequate, his spirit evangelical and devout, and he speaks lucidly, pointedly, and tersely."—British Quarterly Review.

In One Volume crown 8vo, Third Edition (in the Press),

Apologetic Lectures on the Fundamental Truths of Christianity.

"We have never met with a volume better adapted to set forth the evidences of Christianity in a form suited to the wants of our day. The whole of the vast argument is illustrated by various and profound learning; there is no obscurity in the thoughts or in the style; the language is simple, the ideas clear, and the argument logical, and generally, to our mind, conclusive."—Guardian.

"Luthardt is the very man to help those entangled in the thicketts of modern rationalism; we do not know just such another book as this; it is devout, scholarly, clear, forcible, penetrating, comprehensive, satisfactory, admirable."—Evangelical Magazine.
Just Published, in Crown 8vo, Price 4s. 6d.,

THE WORDS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT,

AS ALTERED BY TRANSMISSION, AND ASCERTAINED BY MODERN CRITICISM.

FOR POPULAR USE.

BY REV. WILLIAM MILLIGAN, D.D., PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY AND BIBLICAL CRITICISM, ABERDEEN,

AND

REV. ALEXANDER ROBERTS, D.D.,
PROFESSOR OF HUMANITY, ST. ANDREWS.

In Two Handsome Volumes, Demy 8vo, Price 17s.,

COMMENTARY ON THE PROPHECIES OF ISAIAH.

BY JOSEPH ADDISON ALEXANDER, D.D., PRINCETON, AUTHOR OF COMMENTARIES ON THE PSALMS, MARK, ACTS, ETC.

New and Revised Edition.

EDITED, WITH A PREFACE, BY JOHN EADIE, D.D., LL.D.

'I regard Dr. Joseph Addison Alexander as incomparably the greatest man I ever knew,—as incomparably the greatest man our Church has ever produced.'—Dr. Hodge.
2. Concerning the genuineness of 2 Tim. 6:15.
3. Christ the Son of God, in what sense.
4. Paul's new supposition a miraculous conception.
5. Paul's notion of faith.
6. The Holy Spirit.
7. Righteousness, justification.
8. Sin, death, election.
9. The primeval religion.
10. Redemption.
THE BORROWER WILL BE CHARGED THE COST OF OVERDUE NOTIFICATION IF THIS BOOK IS NOT RETURNED TO THE LIBRARY ON OR BEFORE THE LAST DATE STAMPED BELOW.