PREFATORY NOTE BY THE EDITOR.

I HAVE at length the pleasure of issuing the last volume of the English translation of Dr. Meyer's own part in the great work which bears his name, and of thereby completing an undertaking on which I have expended no small amount of time and labour at intervals for the last eight years. I am aware that I have taxed considerably the patience of the subscribers and of the publishers, but I felt it due to them, as well as to Dr. Meyer who had entrusted me with the charge of seeing his work faithfully reproduced, that the work should be done with care rather than with haste.

The present volume has been translated with skill and judgment by Mr. Evans from the fourth edition of the German—the last form, in which this portion of the Commentary had the advantage of Meyer's own revision. A fifth edition has since appeared (in 1878), under the charge of Professor Woldemar Schmidt of Leipzig, in which he has treated the book in a way similar to that adopted by Dr. Weiss with the Commentary on Mark and Luke, although not altering it to an equal extent. It is difficult to see why he should have followed such a course, for he himself states that he "has never been able to approve the custom of allowing other hands to remodel the works of the departed." I have already expressed, in the prefatory note to the volume on Mark and Luke, the grounds on which I take exception to the plan so pursued, and I content myself with here referring to them as equally applicable in principle to the less important changes made by Dr. Schmidt. I find a striking corroboration of my remark as to the work manipulated by Dr. Weiss being "to a considerable extent a new book by another author, and from a standpoint in various respects different," in the judgment pronounced by Dr. Schürer, in a recent review (Theol. Literaturzeitung, 9th October 1880), on the same editor's treatment of the Commentary on the Gospel of John, when, after mentioning various features of "complete independence" and "thorough remodelling," he states that the result of the whole is "an essentially new work." Dr. Schürer indicates approval of the course pursued; but it seems to me alike unfair to the memory of Meyer, and uncalled for under the circumstances. It is quite open to an editor to write a book of his own on the subject, or to append as much as he deems necessary to his author's text by way of addition and correction; but it is not open to him thus to recast an epoch-making work of exegesis, and to retain for its altered shape the sanction of the author's name. At any rate, I have thought it right, so far as the English reader is concerned, to present, according to my promise, the work of Meyer, without addition or subtraction, in its latest and presumably best form as it left his hands.

I may add, that whatever care may have been bestowed on the revision of the Commentary by Dr. Schmidt has not apparently extended to the correction of the press, for many errors, which have been discovered and corrected by Mr. Evans and myself in preparing the translation, still disfigure the new edition of the German. It is, of course, extremely difficult to avoid such errors in a work of the kind; and I have no doubt that, notwithstanding the care of the printers, to whose excellent arrangements I am much indebted, the reader may light on not a few mistakes, as concerns references, accents, and the like; but, as Dr. Meyer was not a particularly good corrector of the press, I trust that the

English edition may be found in that respect fully more accurate than the original.

In the General Preface prefixed to the first volume issued (Romans), I stated the grounds that had induced me to undertake the superintendence of the work, and the revision of the translation, in the interests of technical accuracy and of uniformity of rendering throughout. And in order that the subscribers may be assured that the promise therein implied has been fulfilled to the best of my ability, I think it right, in conclusion, to state for myself (and I believe that the same may be said for my friends Drs. Crombie and Stewart, who lent me their aid at a time when other work was pressing heavily upon me) that I have carefully read and compared every sentence of the translation in the ten volumes which I edited—collating it for the most part in ms., as well as subsequently on its passage through the press; that I have not hesitated freely to make such changes on the work of the translators as seemed to me needful to meet the requirements which I had in view; and that, under these circumstances, I alone am formally and finally responsible for the shape in which the Commentary appears. All concerned in the enterprise have much reason to be gratified by the favour with which it has been received. I have, indeed, seen some exception taken to the style, and to the frequent use of technical terms such as telic, protasis, and the like; but our object was to translate the book into intelligible English, not to recast its literary form (which, as I have formerly explained, has suffered from the mode in which the author inserted his successive alterations and additions); and it is, from its very nature, destined mainly for ministers and students, who ought to be familiar with the import of those convenient technical terms.

At the close of the article by Dr. Schürer, of which I have spoken before, he asks leave to repeat an urgent wish which he had some years ago expressed, that "there might be appended to the introduction of each volume of the German Commentary a list of the exegetical literature.” He does not seem to be aware that in the English edition this want has been supplied with considerable fulness. I shall be glad to place the lists—all of which were prepared by me, except that prefixed to the Gospel of John, for which I am indebted to Dr. Crombie—at the service (a few errors apart) of any future editors of the original.

In order to complete the present series, a supplementary volume accompanies this one, containing Dr. Gloag’s translation of Lünemann’s Commentary on the Epistles to the Thessalonians. And I learn from Messrs. Clark that they have received encouragement to issue also the remaining volumes, for which Dr. Meyer called in the aid of accomplished scholars. These volumes are of much value in themselves, and as serving to supplement the work of Meyer; but as they proceed from different authors, and my main object was to secure uniformity in the rendering of the several portions that issued from Meyer’s own hand, I have not thought it necessary to undertake any similar revision or editorial responsibility in their case; and I can only express my best wishes for the success of the further enterprise in the hands of the experienced translators.

SINCE the year 1859, when the third edition of this Commentary was issued, there has appeared hardly any contribution of scientific importance to the exposition of the Epistle to the Ephesians. The Commentarius Criticus of the late Dr. Reiche contains, doubtless, many good exegetical remarks; but they are subservient to his main aim which is critical, and elucidate merely detached passages or expressions; while the Lectures of Bleek are very far from having the importance which has been justly recognised as belonging to the previous series of Lectures by him on the Synoptic Gospels.

But while thus, apart from various able discussions of particular passages, I was less directly stimulated by new literary apparatus to subject my work to revision, the labour itself was not thereby rendered the lighter. The dies diem docet could not but, in the case of a task so momentous, have its title fully conceded; and it will be found that I have sought to place much on a better and more complete footing, so as to do fuller justice to the great object of ascertaining thoroughly, clearly, and dispassionately the meaning of the Apostle's discourse. By this I do not understand the discovery of those fanciful illusions [Phantasmagorizeen] that people call profound. For the latter there is assuredly little need in the case of Paul, who, with the true penetration characteristic of his views and ways of unfolding them, knows how to wield his gifts of discourse so that his meaning shall be clear and palpable and apt; and least of all in the case of this very Epistle, where the Christological teaching rises of itself to the utmost height and embraces heaven and earth. This distinctive character cannot be injured by the circumstance that the apostolic writing, as a letter to the Ephesians,—such as, according to the critically-attested address, it is and will remain,—continues to be, at all events, an enigmatical phenomenon, and its historical conceivableness in so far an open question. Its elevation above the changes and controversies of Christological formulae and modes of conception cannot be thereby affected, and its prominent position in the New Testament as at once a testimony and a test of the truth cannot, amid any such change and strife, be prejudicially endangered.

EXEGETICAL LITERATURE OF THE EPISTLES TO THE

EPHESIANS AND PHILEMON.

[For commentaries and collections of notes embracing the whole New Testament, see the list prefixed to the Commentary on the Gospel of Matthew; for those which treat of the Pauline, or Apostolic, Epistles generally, see that which is prefixed to the Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans. The following list includes only those expositions which relate to the Epistle to the Ephesians or to the Epistle to Philemon, or in which one of these Epistles holds the first place on the title-page. Works mainly of a popular and practical character have, with a few exceptions, been excluded, as, however valuable they may be in themselves, they have but little affinity with the strictly exegetical character of the present work. THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

INTRODUCTION.

SEC. 1.—READERS TO WHOM THE EPISTLE IS ADDRESSED.

At Ephesus, the capital of proconsular Asia, a flourishing abode of commerce, arts, and sciences, and the seat of the world-renowned worship of Artemis,—which, formerly one of the principal settlements of the Ionian population, has, since its destruction by the Goths, had its site marked only by gloomy ruins, and now by the small village of Ajasaluk, or, according to Fellows, Asalook (see, generally, Creuzer, Symbol. II. p. 113 ff.; Pococke, Morgenl. III. p. 66 ff.; von Schubert, Reise in das Morgenl. I. p. 284 ff.; Guhl, Ephesica, Berol. 1842; Fellows, Journal written during an Excursion in Asia Minor, London 1838, p. 274 f.).—Paul planted Christianity (Acts xviii. 19, xix. 1, etc.); and his successful labours there, during a period of nearly three years, placed him in the close confidential relations to the church, of which his touching farewell to the elders (Acts xx. 17 ff.) is an imperishable memorial. The church was on its foundation a mixed one, composed of Jewish and Gentile Christians (Acts xix. 1–10, xx. 21); but at the later date, when our Epistle was composed, the Gentile-Christian element, which already appears from Acts xix. 26 extensively diffused, so greatly preponderated, that Paul could address the church a potiori as a Gentile-Christian one; see i. 12 f., ii. 1 ff., 11, 19, iv. 17, iii. 1. Hence it must not be inferred from this, that the Epistle could not have been addressed to the Ephesian church (Reiche, Bleek, and others).

Our Epistle is expressly addressed, in i. 1, to the Christians at Ephesus.¹ For the words εν Ἐφεσῳ are so decisively attested, that they cannot be deprived of their right to a place in the text, either by isolated counter-witnesses, or by the internal grounds of doubt as to the Ephesian destination of the Epistle. Among the manuscripts, N has εν Ἐφεσῷ only from the hand of a later corrector; B has the words only in the margin, and (in opposition to Hug, de antiqu. Cod. Vat. p. 26) not from the first hand (see Tischendorf in the allg. K.-Zeit. 1843, No. 116, and in the Stud. und Krit. 1847, p. 133); while in the Cod. 67, proceeding from the twelfth century,² it was placed certainly in the text by the first hand, but was deleted by a second hand (which betrays generally an affinity with B). The evidence of the versions is unanimous for εν Ἐφεσῷ; but in the Fathers we find undeniable indications that the omission in B καί, and the deletion in Cod. 67, are founded upon older codices, and have arisen out of critical grounds. For Basil the Great, contra Eunom. ii. 19 (Opp. ed. Garnier, I. p. 254), says: τοῖς Ἐφεσίοις ἐπιστέλλαν ὡς γινησίως ἥμων μέν τις ἄνωτε (that is, to Him who is existent, in the absolute sense) δι' ἐπιγνώσεως, δύνας αὐτοῖς ἵδαξόντως ἀφόμασεν εἰπών τοῖς ἀγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν καὶ πιστοῖς εἰν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. Οὕτω γὰρ καὶ οἱ πρὸ ἡμῶν παραδεδώκασι, καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰν τοῖς παλαιοῖς τῶν ἀντιγραφῶν εὐθήκαμεν. From this passage it is clear that Basil considered it indeed certain that the Epistle was written to the Ephesians, but looked upon the words εν Ἐφεσῷ as non-genuine, to which conclusion he had been led not merely by way of tradition, but also through the old mss. existing in his time, which he had himself looked into, and which had not ἐν Ἕφεσι. It has, however, been incorrectly asserted that Jerome also did not find ἐν Ἕφεσι in mss., but knew it merely as a conjecture (Böttger, Beitr. 3, p. 37; Olshausen). He says, namely, on i. 1 (Opp. ed. Vallars. VII. p. 545): Quidam curiosius, quam necesse est, putant ex eo, quod Mosaicum sit [Ex.iii.14]: haec dices filiis Israel: qui est misit me, etiam eos, qui Ephesi sunt sancti et fideles, essentiae vocabulo nuncupatos. Alii vero simpliciter non ad eos, qui sint, sed qui Ephesi sancti et fideles sint, scriptam arbitrantur. But this "scriptam arbitrantur" does not refer to the fact that these "alii" had thought that the readers of the Epistle were the Ephesians; to Jerome, on the contrary, ἐν Ἕφεσι is quite an undoubted part of the text (sanctis omnibus, qui sunt Ephesi, is his reading), and he only adduces two different explanations of τοῖς ὑδίων, by which, however, ἐν Ἕφεσι is not affected. According to the one interpretation, the Christians at Ephesus were designated as existing in the metaphysical sense; accord-

¹ See Lünemann, de ep. ad Eph. authentia, etc., 1842; Anger, über d. Laodicenerbrief (Beitr. z. Einl. in's N. T. I.), 1843. Reiche, in his Comment. crit. in N. T. II. 1859, has the most fully and thoroughly controverted the view of the Epistle being destined for Ephesus, and the genuineness of the words εν Ἐφεσῷ. Comp. also Weiss in Herzog's Encycl. XIX. s. v. "Epheserbrief."

² According to others, including Reiche (Comm. crit. p. 102), even from the ninth or tenth century; but not from the year 1331, as Credner, Einl. I. 2, p. 397, states. This year belongs to the Codex 67, which contains the Acts and Catholic Epistles. See Griesbach, II. p. xv.; Scholz, II. p. x.
INTRODUCTION.

1 We must candidly recognise this as the result of the words of Basil. It is a partisan and mistaken view to assert that, in making the above quotation of the address of our Epistle, he had not included Ἕφεσι, because he had previously said τοῖς Ἕφεσις ἱκανοῖς, and that his appeal to tradition and the old mss. applied only to the article τοῖς before ὑδίων (l'Enfant, Wolf), or to ὑδίων (Wiggers in the Stud. u. Krit. 1841, p. 423 f.). In opposition to l'Enfant, it may be urged that Basil must necessarily have written τοῖς ἱκανοῖς previously, because the genuineness and the stress of the article (which is still wanting in Cod. 46) would have been in question; in opposition to Wiggers, that not the slightest critical trace of a previous omission of ὑδίων is to be found; while, in opposition to both, we may urge the decisive consideration, that it is in the highest degree arbitrary to assume that in the case of a verbal critical citation, such as Basil here gives with so earnest and emphatic a statement of his reason for doing so (ὁ ἔγραψεν τοῖς ἱκανοῖς), words were passed over, because they would be obvious of themselves, and words, too, which were so far from being unimportant, that in fact it was only their absence that could warrant the metaphysical explanation of τοῖς ὑδίων, and did beyond doubt give rise to it. And if Basil were concerned only with τοῖς or ὑδίων, why, then, has he not merely cited the passage as far as ὑδίων, but also added the καὶ παρόδος is X. "Τ., so unimportant for that metaphysical conception of τοῖς ὑδίων, and—strangest of all—omitted just the is Ἕφεσι which stood between! An inconceivable parsimony! No; no reader could understand the ὑδίων ἐγραφαὶ τοῖς ἱκανοῖς otherwise than of the form of address just literally cited in the τοῖς ἐγραφαὶ τοῖς ὑδίων καὶ παρόδος is X. "Τ., from which the recension which was then current differed, in that it contained Ἕφεσι.

2 Probably (see the scholion from Origen in Tischendorf) this explanation proceeded from Origen, since it looks quite like him, and he wrote a commentary on the Epistle, which was used by Jerome.
ing to the other, τοις εδωμ was taken in the usual simple sense, and consequently the Epistle was regarded as directed not to the existent Ephesian Christians, but to the Christians who were to be found at Ephesus. Thus Jerome has not mentioned the omission of ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, and therefore probably was not aware that the opinion of those “quidam” had originated from the very reading without ἐν Ἐφέσῳ; on which account he looked upon this opinion as a curiosity. Hence he furnishes, almost contemporaneously with Basil, an important counter-poise to his testimony. But if Basil in his time stands alone, he has a precursor, whose testimony points back to a considerably greater antiquity, in Tertullian, who says, contra Marc.
v. 11: “Praetereor hic de alia epistola, quam nos ad Ephesios praescriptam habemus, haeretici vero ad Laodicenos;” and at
v. 17: “Ecclesia quidem veritate epistolam istam ad Ephesios habemus emissam, non ad Laodiceos, sed Marcion ei titulum aliquando interpolare (i.e. to make it otherwise, alter it) gestiti, quasi et in isto diligentissimus explorator; nihil autem de titulis interest, cum ad omnes apostolus scripsisset, dum ad quosdam.” According to this, in Tertullian’s time the Epistle was acknowledged by the orthodox church, and by Tertullian himself (comp. cont. Marc. iv. 5, de praescrip. haer. 36), as an Epistle to the Ephesians, and only heretics like Marcion regarded it as addressed to the Laodiceans; but Tertullian cannot have read or known of ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, i. 1, because otherwise he would not have spoken merely of a change in the superscription (praescriptam, titulum; comp. on this last, de pudic. 20, al.), and would not have appealed to the “veritas ecclesiae,” but to the text. It has been objected, indeed (see especially, Harless and Wiggers, and compare also Lünemann), that this is an inference from the critical standpoint of our

1 That is, superscribed. Comp. for example, Gellius, v. 21, “epistola . . . cui titulus praescr iptus est.” The words “ad Ephesius” and “ad Laodiceos” are the “ipsissima verbs” of the titulus praescr iptus. Hence titulus and praescr iptum are not to be referred to the address and salutation, which are, in fact, an integral part of the epistolary text itself (in opposition to Harless, Lünemann, and others, and Laurent in the Jahrb. für Deutsche Theol. 1866, p. 181). See also Reiche, Comment. crit. p. 109. The reading perscriptam in the above passage of Tertullian has evidently arisen from praescr iptum (which is contained in the editions of Pamelaius and Rigaltius) not having been understood.
INTRODUCTION.

time, and that it would have been quite natural in Tertullian summarily to bring in the "veritas ecclesiae." But this would only have been natural for him in the event of the question relating to a falsification of the text by Marcion.
The question here concerns a falsification of the titulus, which, if the words ἐν Ἐφέσῳ had stood in the text, would have been at variance with the text; and what would have been in that case more natural than to appeal to the apostolic ἐν Ἐφέσῳ? The invocation of the "veritas ecclesiae" serves precisely to prove that an apostolic ἐν Ἐφέσῳ was not known to Tertullian. This at the same time applies in opposition to the remark of Wiggers, I. 1, p. 429, that Marcion could not have read anything else than ἐν Ἐφέσῳ in the address, if he had discovered anything to be changed in the super-scription, which was naturally (?) of the same tenor (ἡ πρὸς Ἑφεσίων ἐπιστολή). No, he not merely may, but must have read in the address nothing at all of the place for which the Epistle was destined; otherwise he must have falsified the address also, and not merely the traditional superscription—which is not to be assumed, since Tertullian brings a charge against him merely as concerns the titulus, and, on his own part, betrays no knowledge whatever of an ἐν Ἐφέσῳ in the address. How, then, could Tertullian dismiss the falsification of Marcion with the evasive nihil autem de titulis interest, cum ad omnes, etc., if he had before him in the apostolic text ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, before which the title πρὸς Λαοδίκεας would at once have broken down? Little as it fell in with Tertullian's purpose to assail Marcion at length on account of his falsification of the title, since he was occupied in confuting his dogmatic errors, surely it would have required no more words to dispose of the falsifier of the title by an appeal to the text, than to get rid of the matter with the superficial nihil autem de titulis, etc. And how could Marcion himself (evidently on the ground of Col. iv. 16) have hit upon the idea of changing the title of the Epistle, if he himself had read ἐν Ἐφέσῳ in
i. 1? Dogmatic reasons, which at other times determined the heretic in his critical proceedings, did not exist here at all.
If, in accordance with all this, the testimony of Tertullian, as well as the procedure of Marcion, to which he bears witness, is adverse to the ἐν Ἔφεσῳ; that, on the other hand, of Ignatius, ad Eph. 12, is not to be used either for or against, whether we look at his words in the shorter or the longer recension.

But although, when the matter is thus cleared up, Basil on the ground of older mss. rejected ἐν Ἔφεσῳ, and Marcion and Tertullian did not read the words, they are yet to be most decidedly retained as original, for the following external and internal reasons (in addition to the attestation, upon which we have already remarked, of all other still extant witnesses, and especially of the versions):—(1) The entire ancient church has designated our Epistle expressly as Epistle to the Ephesians (Irenaeus, Haer. v. 23; Clemens Alex. Strom. iv. 8, p. 592, ed. Potter; Tertullian, Origen, and others, even as early as the Canon Murat., and Valentinus in the Philosoph. Or. vi. 34), without even a single voice, with the exception of Marcion's, being raised against this view. But if the words ἐν Ἔφεσῳ had been wanting from the outset, and the Epistle had thus borne on the face of it no place of destination, such a consensus would have been quite as inexplicable in itself as at variance with the analogy of the other Epistles, in which throughout the judgment of the church as to the first readers coincides with the superscription, where there is one, and beyond doubt depends upon it. (2) In all his Epistles Paul

1 According to the longer recension (in Dressel, p. 332): 'Τιμίας ἡ Παύλου συμβάλλει ἐν Ἔφεσον, μημορίους... ἰδίαι διάφοραι αὐτοὺς μημορίους ὠνικ. (vulg. ὠνικ.). Following the reading ὠνικ., Credner here concludes that our Epistle was not directed to the Ephesians alone. But it would apply to "the Pauline Christians in general," so that it would not at all contain a reference to the individual Epistle. According to the shorter recension, the passage runs thus: Παύλος ἀ. τ. λ., ἦς ἐν πάσῃ ἑνεστῇ μημορίους ὠνικ. Here ἐν πάσῃ ἑνεστῇ does not mean, in the whole Epistle,—a linguistically erroneous interpretation which, though still defended by Harless and repeated by Dressel, would yield a quite irrelevant meaning; for how strange to say to A, who has received a letter from B: B makes mention of you in his whole letter! This is surely obvious of itself, and is not at all a point appropriate to be dwelt upon! On the contrary, ἐν πάσῃ ἑνεστῇ means: in every Epistle; so that Ignatius does not mean our Epistle alone, nor yet by ὠνικ. specially the Ephesians as such, but the Ephesians as Pauline Christians generally (as regards category), and hence could say: he makes mention of you in every Epistle. It is not difficult to see how, in the words under consideration, the longer recension is related as explanatory to the shorter.
designates in the address the recipients most definitely, even when he does not write to the Christians of a single town (1 Cor. i. 2; 2 Cor. i. 1), or to a single church (Gal. i. 2). Accordingly our Epistle, if fairly regarded in accordance with the address, should ἐν Ἐφεσῳ not be genuine, would be marked out as a catholic one, without any limitation whatever of locality or nationality of the readers,—a view with which the contents (i. 15, ii. 11, iii. 1, iv. 17, etc.) as well as the mission of Tychicus (vi. 21) would be decidedly at variance. (3) On each occasion, when St. Paul in the address has used τοῖς οὖσιν, it serves to specify the locality of the readers. See Rom. i. 7: τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Ῥώμῃ; Phil. i. 1: τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Φιλίππαις; 1 Cor. i. 2: τῇ οὖσῃ ἐν Κορινθίω, and even so 2 Cor. i. 1. Compare the addresses in the Ignatian Epistles. (4) If Paul had written τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν καὶ πιστοῖς, we should have a form of address, which does not even admit of any tolerable explanation. It would yield the meaning: to the saints, who are also (not merely saints, but also) believing. But what a diffuse and inappropriate severance of the ideas “saints and believing,” which should rather be conjoined into unity (comp. Col. i. 2)! With the apostle there are no saints, who are not also believers. The explanation of Meier is chargeable with the same inappropriateness: to the saints, who are also faithful (since the unfaithful have ceased to be saints); and, moreover, it is to be taken into consideration that πιστοῖς is not defined to have the sense of faithful by the context, but rather, when used in the address, and connected with ἐν Χ. Ἰ., most naturally presents the sense of believing, as in Col. i. 2. Credner, Einl. i. 2, p. 400, translates: to the saints, who are in fact also believers, and this is held to mean: to the saints, who are true believers; in the mouth of Paul equivalent to 1 It is not necessary that in this case οὖσι should stand after ἐν. Comp. John i. 49, iv. 9; Acts vii. 2; Eph. ii. 1, etc.

2 This also holds in opposition to Böttger’s views, Beitrage, 3, p. 29 ff.: to the saints, who there are also faithful, in which the οὖσι presents a contrast to the apostate Jewish-Christians, who had been faithful. Such a contrast would necessarily, from the very nature of the case, have been spoken of in the Epistle itself.—We may add that already the Gothic version has translated οὖσις, faithful (“trigvaim ”).
Pauline Christians. But, in this case, τοῖς ὁσιῶν could not, without risk of being misapprehended, dispense with a defining addition (in fact), or Paul at least must have written τοῖς καὶ ὁσιῶν πιστοῖς, in which case by means of καὶ the special emphasis of ὁσιῶν might be indicated (who are not merely called believers, but also are so). Yet even thus the expression would not be clear, and the meaning: to the Pauline Christians, would be purely imported. In a context, where Pauline and anti-Pauline Christians were spoken of, the reader might without further indication understand under true believers the former; but not in the address, where this reference is not suggested by anything, and the less so, seeing that this contrast does not come once under discussion in the Epistle itself. Schneckenburger and Matthies attach τοῖς ὁσιῶν to τοῖς ἁγίοις. The latter (comp. Bengel) explains: τοῖς ὁσιῶν, who are there (namely, in Asia Minor, whither Tychicus was journeying to visit them), which imputes to Paul a strange clumsiness. But Schneckenburger (Beiträge, p. 133) renders: to the saints, who are in fact such. But even thus Paul, in order to obviate misunderstanding (and in the address of an official writing at any rate people express themselves definitely and clearly), could not have dispensed with some defining adjunct (in fact) to τοῖς ὁσιῶν; and, even apart from this, how unsuitable would the address be, whether we explain the true saints as standing in contrast to the nominal Christians or to the Jews! The former would yield an indefinite designation of the readers, and would contain an exclusion and separation unsuited to the apostolic spirit and working. And the latter would be quite out of place, since the Epistle has nothing at all to do with the contrast to Judaism. All explanations without ἐν Ἔφεσι are fanciful impossibilities, unless we keep to the first-given simple translation of the words. Weiss does this in Herzog's Encycl. XIX. p. 480; rejecting ἐν Ἔφεσι, he makes the saints, who are believers also on Christ,1 to be said of the New Testament saints in contrast with those of the Old Testament. But this contrast would itself be quite without any motive in the contents of the Epistle; indeed, in the καὶ (also) there would be implied a side-glance at the unconverted Jews, which would be out of place and unsuitable.

In view of all that has been said, we must defend ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, i. 1, as decidedly genuine. But wherefore was it omitted at so early a period (Marcion, Tertullian, the old mss. in Basil) in a portion of the codices? Certainly this omission was not a mere transcriber’s error (Lünemann); for not only is such an error in itself improbable at the very main point of the address, but it would not have obtained any considerable diffusion. Further, the possible reason, which may account at Rom. i. 7 for the absence of ἐν Ἐφέσῳ in various mss., namely, though a transcript of the Epistle for public reading in another particular church, is here at any rate improbable, since the manuscripts not containing ἐν Ἐφέσῳ must have been circulated in very different regions (Asia and Africa) and in very considerable number. This latter fact might point to the hypothesis that, by omitting ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, it was sought to give to an Epistle so general in tenor and weighty, the impress of a Catholic one (comp. Wieseler, Chronol. des apost. Zeitalt. p. 438). But, in point of fact, the apostolic Epistles directed ad quosdam were already of themselves regarded as written ad omnes (Jerome, c. Marc. v. 17), and hence there was no need of the procedure indicated. Equally inadmissible, moreover, is the view (see below), that from the very first in a portion of the manuscripts the place for the local name was left vacant, and thereby ἐν Ἐφέσῳ was omitted.¹ Nor yet can we accept the dogmatic reason, that the name of the place was deleted with a view to favour the metaphysical explanation of τοῖς ὅσιν, specified in Basil and Jerome, since the converse alone is natural, namely, that the metaphysical interpretation of τοῖς ὅσιν arose from the fact of the text being already deprived of the ἐν Ἐφέσῳ.

The omission would rather appear due to ancient historical criticism. From the contents of the letter at a very early period

the inference had been drawn, that it was addressed to persons who were as yet personally unknown to the apostle, and still novices in Christianity. And how naturally did this lead to the view that the Ephesians had not been the recipients, and so to the deletion of έν Εφέσῳ! The text written without έν Εφέσῳ was soon laid hold of to support the metaphysical explanation of τοῖς ὁτοιοι, which had arisen out of it; and the favour and diffusion which the latter received from its accordance with the taste of the age necessarily contributed to the spread of the text which was denuded of the έν Εφέσῳ. The omission of these words, thus originated and diffused, could not indeed do away with the correct ecclesiastical tradition of the Epistle being destined for Ephesus, or frustrate the preservation of έν Εφέσῳ and the triumph of that original reading (supported as it was by all the versions), which had been already achieved by the time of Jerome; but it did make it possible for Marcion, seeing that he already found έν Εφέσῳ no longer in the text, to alter, in opposition to tradition, the title πρὸς Εφεσίους into πρὸς Λαοδίκεας, regarding the Epistle on the basis of Col. iv. 16 as addressed to the Laodiceans—in the service of the same criticism, under which, only handled in a negative sense, έν Εφέσῳ had disappeared.

But, it is said, the contents—quite general in tenor, without personal reminiscences and references, without salutations (not even Timotheus and Aristarchus are mentioned, as in Col. i. 1, iv. 10; Philem. 24), without any trace of that close intimacy in which Paul had stood to his Ephesian converts, as a father to his children— are of such a character that the Epistle of itself

1 Historical traces of this ancient view are to be found in Theodoret, Praef., and on i. 15, who relates "that some had asserted that Paul writing wrote Εφεσίους επιστολήν had written this Epistle to them;" and also in Euthalius (ap. Zaccagni in Collect. mon. vet. eccl. p. 524): η γραμματία Εφεσίους . . . ἔστω τοίς ήπρογραμματίσθαι μετάνοιαν, παραλαμβάνοντας τού πρὸς Εφεσίους ἀμφοτέρως ἐν έπιστολήν γνώμην, καὶ ιτικόν ἄνθρωπον πρὸς ἀντιδιασταλείν ἄρχαι παρακαλέων καὶ πεινῶν παρακαλείναι. Comp. also the Synops. script. sacr. in Athanasius, Opp. III. p. 194, ed. Bened.: γὰρ συνεπανταλάλα ἀντὶ Ρώμας, οὕτω μὲ αὐτοῦ έμπαιδεύσας, ἀνάσπειας διέμενος πρὶς αὐτῷ (τοῦ Εφεσίου).

2 It is arbitrary and contrary to the manner of the apostle to assume, with Wurm (in the Tüb. Zeitachr. 1838, l. p. 98), that Paul, because of painful experiences which he had had in Ephesus, avoided mention of previous occurrences. How altogether different is his procedure, especially in the Epistle to the Galatians!
INTRODUCTION.

betrays that it was not directed to the Ephesians; and the passages, i. 15, iii. 1—4, iv. 21, point to readers who had not been in any personal connection with the apostle. Mainly based on this internal character of the Epistle, we find two hypotheses concerning the readers for whom it was destined:—

I. Following Marcion, Grotius, Hammond, Mill, Pierce, du Pin, Wall, the younger Vitringa, Venema, Wetstein, Paley, et al., including, recently, Holzhausen and others (see on Col. iv. 16), as well as Räbiger, Christologia Paul. p. 48, have supposed 1 that the Epistle was addressed to the Laodiceans, as being personally unknown to the apostle (Col. ii. 1). While this hypothesis (to which Baur, p. 457, is also inclined) falls of itself, if the genuineness of ἐν Ἐφέσῳ is established, it may, moreover, be urged in opposition to it—(a) that from Marcion's procedure we may not infer an Asiatic tradition. For the ecclesiastical tradition is quite unanimous in regarding the Ephesians as readers of the Epistle; there is no trace of deviation; the heretic stands alone with his adherents, without any anticipation or echo of his critical paradox. (b) Since, according to Col. iv. 16, the Epistle to the Laodiceans had at the very first become known in two different churches,—in Laodicea and Colossae,—and without doubt was disseminated from both by copies, it is the more incomprehensible how the Ephesians could appropriate to themselves the Laodicean letter, and how universal ecclesiastical tradition could support this view without meeting with opposition in the church itself. The appeal to the earthquake, which, according to Tacitus, Ann. xiv. 27, in the year 60 (according to Eusebius, Chron., and Orosius, Hist. vii. 7, only at a later date; see Wieseler, p. 455) destroyed Laodicea (according to Eusebius and Orosius, Colossae and Hierapolis also), yields no result, since, according to 1 See, in opposition to this assumption, also Satori, über d. Laodicenerbrief, Lübeck 1853, and especially Reiche, p. 131 sqq. Reiche, however, considers our Epistle as identical with that mentioned in Col. iv. 16; in his view it was destined not merely for the Laodiceans, but also for Hierapolis and other churches of that region, and thence had no place specified in the opening address; but Paul had orally imparted to Tychicus more particular directions as to that point. See, in opposition to the alleged encyclical destination of the Epistle, generally what is said below under II. The view of Weiss is essentially similar to that of Reiche.

Tacitus, l.c., Laodicea was soon restored; and the Christian church there cannot have perished (Rev. iii.), still less the knowledge of the Epistle which Paul had written to them. No doubt, in view of Col. iv. 16, there must have been an affinity of contents between the Epistle to the Laodiceans and that to the Colossians, which seems to tell in favour of the identity of our Epistle with the former; but may not Paul, besides our Epistle and that to the Colossians, have written a third kindred in its contents? which has perished, like a letter to the Corinthians (1 Cor. v. 9), one to the Philippians (see on Phil. iii. 1, Remark), and perhaps also others, which have left no traces behind. (a) If our Epistle is the Epistle to the Laodiceans, it must have been written before the Epistle to the Colossians (Col. iv. 16), which, according to § 2, is not to be assumed. Indeed, at Eph. vi. 21 and Col. iv. 7, there might possibly be not even meant one and the same journey of Tychicus (which yet forces itself on us so undeniably in pursuance of the words and the geographical relations), seeing that Paul, in the Epistle to the Colossians (iv. 15), directs the Laodiceans, and an individual among them, to be saluted,—which, from the nature of the case, he would hardly have done, if he had been sending to them at the same time a letter, and that by so trusted a fellow-labourer; who, besides, had to travel by way of Laodicea to Colossae (see on Col. iv. 16, Remark). (d) What Holzhausen says of Col. ii. 2, that it was written with a consciousness of the Epistle to the Ephesians, is purely imaginary. See, in opposition to it, Harless, p. xxxix.—

1 This enigma would only admit of solution from the domain of conjecture. The easiest thing would be to say, that Paul, when he had the Epistle to the Colossians with his salutation to the Laodiceans already completed, had only then resolved to send further with Tychicus a letter to the Laodiceans, in drawing up which he was aware that Tychicus would reach Laodicea before Colossae. But with all hypotheses, which are not made in the consistent following out of an ascertained fact, the ground falls away under our feet. Others have asserted that Paul wished to repeat the salutations, or that he had only, as he was writing to the Colossians, heard about Nymphas through Epaphras; but these, after all, are nothing but suppositions, which, moreover, are invalidated by the fact that our Epistle is to be placed after that to the Colossians (see § 2). Bertholdt considers the salutation in Col. iv. 15 merely as introduction to the subsequent commission ("have the letter brought to the Laodiceans with my salutation"). But how utterly in opposition to the connection!
II. Following Beza,\(^1\) and Ussher in his Annales ad ann. 64, Garnier, ad Basil. l.c., Bengel, Benson, Michaelis, Zachariae, Koppe, Ziegler (in Henke’s Magaz. IV. 2, p. 225 ff.), Justi (vermischte Abhandlungen, II. p. 81 ff.), Stolz, Haenlein, Schmidt, Eichhorn, Bertholdt, Hug, Flatt, Hemsen, Schott, Feilmoser, Schrader, Schneckenburger, Neander, Rückert, Credner, Matthies, Meier, Harless, Böttger, Anger, Olshausen, Thiersch (Kirche im apost. Zeitalt. p. 145 sqq.), Guericke, Lange, Bleek, and others have, though with manifold variations in detail (see Lüneumann, p. 33 sqq.), regarded our Epistle as a circular letter. In that case Ephesus has mostly been included in the circle of churches concerned, but sometimes—as by Koppe, Haenlein (who has even lighted on the Peloponnesus!), Eichhorn, Bertholdt, and Reiche—entirely excluded; while Laodicea and its neighbourhood have been in various ways brought in (according to Credner, e.g., one copy of the letter was sent to Ephesus to be circulated among the churches on the west coast of Asia Minor; and another copy to Laodicea, to be circulated among the churches in the interior), in fact, have even been regarded as the locality for which the Epistle was primarily and specially destined; Bleek being withal of opinion that the Ephesians only got it to read from Tychicus on his journey to Phrygia, and retained for themselves a copy of it. But, in opposition to the view of any sort of encyclical destination, we may decisively again urge—(a) the universal and undivided ecclesiastical tradition, which does not exhibit the very slightest trace of such a destination. Indeed, both the orthodox and Marcion are here at one, since both name only one church as the receiver of the Epistle. And when we remember what a high honour any church could not but consider it to have received an apostolic writing, the utter disappearance of all knowledge that our Epistle had belonged to other churches, or had been claimed by them as their property, would be quite inconceivable. (b) Even apart from the circumstance that Paul does not in the Epistle give the slightest hint of any encyclical destination for it, the words of the address ἐν Ἐφεσῳ, which cannot critically be dislodged, expressly testify against it. Paul could not thus address it, if he had intended it for more extended circulation, or even for other localities. How very differently he knew how to stamp on the face of the Epistles to the Corinthians the body of readers for whom they were intended! But if the ἐν Ἐφεσῳ is held to be spurious (against this view, see above), then the address, which with ἐν Ἐφεσῳ is too limited for a circular letter, would without these words be too wide for the purpose; for then no local definition of the readers whatever would be indicated, and the Epistle would present itself not as an encyclical, but as a catholic Epistle.

\(^1\) Who, on the subscription to the Epistle, expresses the conjecture that it was sent not so much ad Ephesios ipso proprice, as rather to Ephesus, ut ad ceteras Asiaticas ecclesias transmittatur; and that hence, probably, arose the partial omission of Epis.

(c) If, with Rückert and Olshausen, we should assume that Paul, in the several copies which he gave to Tychicus, had

This holds also in opposition to the form which Harless has given to the matter. The readers, in his view, were daughter-churches of Ephesus, or Christians scattered about the country, who had first been made acquainted with the gospel from Ephesus, and of whom Paul had received intelligence through the Ephesians. To these Christians he had forwarded the Epistle through the Ephesian church. But as the Ephesian church itself might also extract benefit and edification from it, the apostle had wished that the Epistle should be publicly read to the principal church and remain with it. Harless conceives of Tychicus as giving the following message to the Ephesians: "I bring to you here a letter which concerns you all, but specially the Gentile Christians, of whom you have spoken to the apostle. Take care that the letter, when it has been read with you, should also come into their hands, ye who know best the ways and means for that end; and bring me to them, in order that, in accordance with the apostle's commission, may tell them what I have told you concerning his condition." Thus the letter would primarily and mainly have applied to readers outside of Ephesus, and Paul would have addressed it ἐν Ἐφεσῳ. He would have suppressed its principal destination, and would have placed as the address only a mediate and subordinate one! No, Paul would have known how really to express in the opening address the relation which Harless has merely presupposed, if he had so conceived of it. See also Reiche, p. 127.

Success cannot attend the attempt mentally to supply the local destination of the letter (that disappears with the rejection of ἐν Ἐφεσῳ) from any other quarter in dealing with so singular and nameless an address. Weiss, l.c. (comp. Reiche), thinks that Paul had given information to Tychicus for what circle of churches in Asia Minor the letter was intended; but that the later tradition had appropriated it to the chief town and chief church, and had completed the address accordingly. But that premise is arbitrarily assumed, and this bold stroke of tradition would hardly have gained universal assent, especially in view of its enigmatic relation to the contents of the Epistle. If Ephesus did not from the first stand in the text, as Marcion did not read it, the latter would have acted with more tact in having recourse to Laodicea.
left blank the name of the place in order that it might be subsequently filled up with the names of the churches concerned (Ussher first suggested this, followed by Garnier, Bengel, Eichhorn, Hug, and others), or that at least in some copies a vacant space was left to be filled up at pleasure (Moldenhauer, Michaelis, Bertholdt, Hemsen, and others), this is (α) altogether an arbitrary transplanting of a modern procedure from the counting-houses of the present day back into the apostolic age, from which we have circular letters indeed, but no trace of such a process of drawing them out, the mechanical nature of which would hardly square with the spirit of the apostolic age. And (β) would not the Epistle, even if every church concerned had received a copy provided with its own name, have yet remained a circular letter? Thus, indeed, in the individual church-names of the different copies there would have been just so many contradictions to the proper destination of the Epistle. Why, then, should not Paul—in case of his giving to Tychicus the alleged circular letter in several copies—have named in every address uniformly the recipient churches as a whole? (γ) It would have been utter folly (comp. Matthaei, ed. min. III. p. 293) if Paul in a portion of the copies had left the name of the place blank to be filled up according to pleasure in a manner which had not already been fixed. Could he write i. 15 ff., vi. 22, without having quite a definite conception what churches he had in view? (δ) If only the name was to be left blank, why was ευ also omitted? why did not the copies run τωσ εδών εύ . . . καὶ πιστοῖς κ.τ.λ. ? (ε) How inexplicable, that only copies with τωσ της Εφέςω, and, in addition, those having no name whatever, should have had the good fortune to be preserved and distributed! Each of the churches in question would have sought to preserve and to multiply the copy addressed to it under its name; and different traditions with regard to the readers would inevitably have been current at a very early date in the church side by side. (ζ) If Laodicea was in the circle of churches in question, Colossae also was so (Col. iv. 16). But Colossae did not get the alleged circular letter through the despatch of a copy intended for the Colossians, and addressed to them, but had to procure for itself the Laodicean Epistle from Laodicea (Col. l.c.). These arguments tell at the same time against Bleek's hesitating conjecture, that Paul in the Epistle, which was primarily intended for Laodicea, Hierapolis, etc., had left a gap after τοῖς ὄντων, because, at the time of writing the letter, he was not yet able to specify all the several churches; as likewise against Anger's view, that the circular letter, primarily destined for Ephesus, had at the same time been destined for the daughter-churches of Asia, and among these, also for Laodicea; that Tychicus had to bring it first to Ephesus, from whence it was to make its way to the other churches, and so to Laodicea, and from thence to Colossae. In opposition to this view, see Zeller, Theol. Jahrb. 1844, I. p. 199 ff.; Wieseler, Chronol. d. ap. Zeitalt. p. 442 sq. Similarly Laurent in the Jahrb. f. Deutsche Theol. 1866, p. 131, who assumes that Paul had intended the Epistle for the two churches, Laodicea and Ephesus, but had only despatched one copy for the two, in which he left the designation of the place open. Thus copies with designations of the place had arisen through transcripts, some with Ἁοδίκείᾳ, some with Ἐφεσος, the latter of which obtained the upper hand. But from the evidence of Tertullian (see above) we cannot gather that he had seen mss. with Ἁοδίκείᾳ. Besides, there would subsist no reason at all why Paul, if he had written to these two churches, should not also have mentioned both of them in the address.

In accordance with the foregoing discussion, no other critical procedure in ascertaining the readers of the Epistle rests on a historical basis but that adopted by most of the later commentators, which arrives at the conclusion that our Epistle was directed to the Ephesians and to no further church, in pursuance of the genuine Ἐφεσος, and in agreement with the primitive and universal tradition of the church. So among the later commentators Whitby, Wolf, Cramer, Morus, and more recently Rinck, Sendschr. der Korinther, p. 31 ff., and in the Stud. u. Krit. 1849, p. 948 ff.; Wurm in the Tüb. Zeitschr. 1833, I. p. 97 f.; Wiggers in the Stud. u. Krit. 1841, p. 412 ff.; Wieseler, Chronol. d. apost. Zeitalt. p. 443.

1 Yet he also takes up the view (already expressed by Beza in his remarks on the subscription), that the apostle has not merely regarded the word spoken to
We must, however, candidly confess that, while the difficulties of the individual passages i. 15, iii. 1–4, iv. 21, may be elucidated by their exegesis, the tone and contents of so general a tenor, the absence of any reminiscences of personal connection with the readers, the want of salutations, etc., in an Epistle to the Ephesians, remain more surprising than would be the case in any other Epistle. The appeal made by Wieseler (p. 449) to the elevated and didactic character of the Epistle is not sufficient to explain this strange phenomenon; we lack the historical information for this purpose, and scientific modesty and prudence prefer to confess in this case the non liquet, rather than to construct hypotheses which, as has been shown, fall to pieces of themselves. There must have existed historical circumstances which occasioned the Epistle to receive the strange form that it undoubtedly has, but we are not acquainted with them. It is very natural, however, to think of the phenomenon in question as, in part at least, causally connected with the mission of Tychicus. In accordance with vi. 21 f., Paul may have reserved all details to be orally communicated by the latter, who seemed specially fitted for this purpose, since he, as an inhabitant of Asia, as the Ephesians as spoken to them, but has desired and designed a diffusion of the Epistle among, and a knowledge of it in, wider circles, so that under the one church he is addressing the whole body of Asiatic Christians, which had Ephesus as their mother-church and centre. But against this view it must be urged—apart from the circumstance that St. Paul says nothing whatever of this supposed design—that in all the other Epistles too he might presuppose their being communicated to wider circles, and yet is not thereby withheld from entering into particulars, sending salutations, and the like.

1 This holds also of those hypotheses, which do not keep to the view of the Christian church at Ephesus as such, regarded as a whole, being the readers of the Epistle. Thus Neudecker (Einl. p. 502) holds that the Epistle is directed to that portion of the church which had been converted by the disciples of the apostle after he had left Ephesus; and Lüsemann conceives that Paul has written to a church which had been founded but a short time before in the immediate neighbourhood of Ephesus, and which was so closely bound up with the Ephesian Church that it might be considered as a part of it. Such hypotheses are strikingly and decisively disposed of by the simple and definite tais idon in Ephes, which does not admit of any more limited interpretation than the addresses tais idon in Ρώμη, Rom. i. 7; tais idon in Θεσσαλονίκης, Phil. i. 1, etc.

2 Perhaps even from Ephesus. In Acts xx. 4, Tychicus and Trophimus are named as "of Asia," but the latter at least is definitely designated in xxi. 29 as an Ephesian.

MEYER.—EPH.
a witness of Paul's farewell to the presbyters (Acts xx. 4), and also named elsewhere as an emissary to Ephesus (2 Tim. iv. 12), was undoubtedly very accurately acquainted with the relations of Paul to the Ephesians; whilst on the part also of the apostle himself there might be special motives (based possibly on the accusation brought against him by the Jews, Acts xxi. 28, 29, and on the covetousness of the venal Felix, Acts xxiv. 26), arising from the conditions of his imprisonment and surveillance, for his deeming it advisable by way of pre-caucion to compose his Epistle to this particular church, with which he was on the most intimate footing, without setting forth personal relations and special circumstances. Nevertheless, this Epistle, as an apostolical letter to the Ephesians, with its so general, and, even in various particulars, surprising contents, remains an enigma awaiting further solution; and we must confess that if Ephesus had not been given as the place of destination, criticism would least of all have been likely to light upon this church among the Asiatic churches known to us.

SEC. 2.—PLACE AND TIME OF COMPOSITION.

St. Paul was a prisoner when he wrote the Epistle, iii. 1, iv. 1, vi. 20. It has always been the prevailing opinion that this imprisonment was the captivity at Rome, narrated in the Krit. 1829, p. 612 ff., and after him Schneckenburger, Beitr. p. 144 f.; Schott; Böttger (in connection, doubtless, with his hypothesis that that Roman imprisonment only lasted a few days); Wiggers in the Stud. u. Krit. 1841, p. 436 ff.; der heil. Schr. N. T. § 114; Schenkel (comp. also Weiss in Herzog's Encykl. XIX. p. 718); and Zöckler in Vilmar's Pastoral-theol. Blätt. 1863, p. 277 f., have decided in favour of the captivity at Caesarea. And rightly so. Not, however, as if the friends of Paul, who are named in the contemporary letters to the Colossians and to Philemon (Col. iv. 9–14; Philem. 10 ff., 23 f.), could not have been with him at Rome,

1 Graul (Lips. 1836) wrote in opposition to Schulz and Schott.
as has been sought to be inferred from the Epistle to the Philippians, which only (i. 1) mentions Timotheus;¹ nor, again, on account of ἐπὶ δόξαν, Philem. 15, which expression as contrasted with αἰῶνιον by no means presupposes merely a quite short separation of the runaway Onesimus from his master; nor yet because Paul at Rome could not have obtained sufficiently accurate information concerning Colossae, for this might, in fact, have been got sufficiently by means of Epaphras (Col. iv. 12);—but, (1) because it is in itself more natural and probable that the slave Onesimus had run away from Colossae as far as Caesarea, than that he should have fled, at the cost of a long journey by sea, to Rome, the more especially as the fugitive was not yet a Christian. The objection (see Wieseler, p. 417), that in the great city of Rome he would have been more secure from being tracked by the fugitivarii, who were everywhere on the look-out for runaway slaves, cannot be maintained, since this police-agency was certainly most to be dreaded in the capital itself and in the company of a state-prisoner. (2) If our Epistle and the Epistle to the Colossians had been sent from Rome, then would its bearer Tychicus, who was accompanied by Onesimus (Col. iv. 8, 9), have arrived at Ephesus first, and then at Colossae; and accordingly we might reasonably expect that Paul would have mentioned to the Ephesians along with Tychicus (Eph. vi. 21, 22) his companion Onesimus (as he does in Col. iv. 8, 9), in order by that means to prepare for his beloved Onesimus a good reception among the Ephesians. If, on the contrary, Tychicus started with Onesimus from Caesarea, he arrived by the most direct road, in keeping with the design of the journey of Onesimus, first at Colossae, where he left the slave with his master, and thence passed on to Ephesus; accordingly Paul had, in the circumstance that Onesimus did not go with Tychicus to Ephesus, a natural reason for not including a mention of Onesimus in the Epistle to the Ephesians. Comp. Wiggers, l.c. p. 440 ff. It is not enough to explain this non-mention from the general absence of individual references in our Epistle (Wieseler), since here the question concerns a single passage, which is really of an individual and personal tenor. (3) In Eph. vi. 21, ἵνα δὲ εἰδήτε καὶ ἱμαῖν, this καὶ indicates the conception that, when Tychicus should come to the Ephesians, he would have already fulfilled the aim here expressed in the case of others. And these others are the Colossians (Col. iv. 8, 9), with regard to whom, therefore, Paul knew that Tychicus would come first to them, which again tells in favour not of Rome, but of Caesarea, as the starting-point. If the messenger had been despatched from Rome, and so had proceeded from Ephesus to Colossae, we should then have expected the καὶ at the corresponding passage in the Epistle to the Colossians.¹

Further, (4) Paul, in Philem. 22, asks Philemon to prepare a lodging for him, and that, too, for speedy use. (See on Philem. l.c.) This, on the one hand, presupposes the fact that his present place of imprisonment was much nearer to Colossae than the far distant Rome, especially considering the slowness of navigation in those days; on the other hand,—and this is withal the main point,—we must assume, in the light of this request, that Paul thought of coming from his place of imprisonment, after the speedy release which he hoped for, direct to Phrygia, and in particular to Colossae unto Philemon, without making any intermediate journeys, since otherwise there would be no motive for the request as to the immediate preparation of a lodging for him at the house of Philemon simultaneously with the taking back of Onesimus. But now it is plain from Phil. ii. 24 that Paul, when he was lying a prisoner at Rome and was there hoping for his liberation, intended to journey to Macedonia...

¹ Wiggers appeals to ver. 22, holding, namely, that Paul could not legitimately have written τῷ ἑνδακτικῷ ἰμαῖν τὸ κυρίον τοῦ Χριστοῦ ι.τ., if Tychicus must, in the very nature of the case from his being destined for Colossae, have come to Ephesus. But wrongly. For even if Tychicus, in virtue of the direction of his journey (from Rome to Colossae), would necessarily have been brought by way of Ephesus, he might nevertheless have merely passed through it, if St. Paul had not expressly given him orders for the definite object of Eph. vi. 22, and entrusted him with commissions to the church. The fact that Tychicus must necessarily have travelled by way of Ephesus would not therefore exclude the truth of the ἑνδακτικῷ ἰμαῖν ι.τ. We may add, that from Rome the travellers might have reached Colossae, without even touching at Ephesus,—by way of Miletus possibly,—so that Paul, if Rome be presupposed as the starting-point, might the more fitly write these words.
INTRODUCTION.

(not to Spain, to which his views had been directed earlier, Rom. xv. 24),—which, after what has been said above, is not in keeping with the bespeaking of a lodging with Phil. mon. This bespeaking, on the other hand, is quite appropriate, if Paul was at Caesarea. From that place, after the speedy release which he hoped for, he intended to journey through Phrygia and Asia generally, and next to carry out his old plan, which was directed to Rome (Rom. i. 10 ff.; Acts xix. 21). Whether at this time he still entertained his earlier plan of a journey to Spain (Rom. xv. 24; at Phil. ii. 24 he had given it up), is a matter of indifference for our question. But it is certain that Paul at Caesarea, considering his gentle treatment and the lax prosecution of his trial under Felix, might hope for speedy liberation (Acts xxiv. 23, 26). It has been maintained (see Wieseler, p. 420, Guericke, and others) that neither the freedom to preach (vi. 19; Col. iv. 3 f. is not here relevant), nor the conversion of Onesimus (Philem. 10), suit his condition at Caesarea, but that they suit only his position at Rome according to Acts xxviii. 30 f.; but this is to assert too much, for the notice at Acts xxiv. 23 leaves sufficient scope for our recognising such activity on the part of the captive Paul even in Caesarea. Comp. Introd. to Col. § 2.

If, accordingly, Paul composed the Epistle in Caesarea, the date of its composition is either A.D. 60 or A.D. 61.

Finally, the question whether this Epistle or that to the Colossians was first written, is not to be answered on a psychological basis by considering their inner relationship and peculiar character, because in that case there is too much scope left for

1 As, e.g., by Credner, § 157, who holds that the Epistle to the Ephesians was written earlier—(1) Because its aim is the more general, and that of the Epistle to the Colossians, as the special, is subordinate. (2) Because the former, as directed (according to Credner's view) to unknown Pauline Christians in Asia, would have required the most mature consideration, whereas the Epistle to the Colossians would be much more easily drawn up, since Paul had Epaphras and Onesimus with him—and so it could not fail but that a portion of the ideas laid down in the former Epistle would be transferred also to the latter, in such wise that what was there general in tenor would assume a special form. (3) Because in our Epistle the expression is more abstract, etc.—It would not be difficult, with equal plausibility, to invert the relation, and to represent the more special, the easier, and more concrete as psychologically antecedent to the more general, more difficult, and more abstract shape.
subjectivity,—as, indeed, on such grounds some have found the Epistle to the Ephesians the earlier (Cornelius a Lapide, Böhmer, Credner, Schneckenburger, Matthies, Anger, Guericke, Reuss), and others that to the Colossians (Schleiermacher, Harless, Neander, Meier, Wiggers, de Wette, Bleek, Weiss); nor yet by inferring, with Hug, from the non-mention of Timothy in the Epistle to the Ephesians, that this Epistle was written earlier than the letters to the Colossians and to Philemon, because in the latter Timothy shares in the salutation, and must thus have joined Paul later. But that the Epistle to the Colossians was written before that to the Ephesians, is to be assumed for the following reasons: (1) As Colossae was the first and nearest goal which Tychicus, in company with the Colossian Onesimus, would reach from Caesarea (see above), it could not but be the most natural and obvious course for the apostle to write the letter to the Colossians sooner than the letter which was to be delivered only at a further stage of his friend's journey; (2) καὶ ὅμεις, vi. 21, refers to the passage Col. iv. 7, and presupposes that Paul had already written and had in his recollection this latter Epistle. If, indeed, the Epistle to the Laodiceans were identical with the Epistle to the Ephesians, then, according to Col. iv. 16, the Epistle to the Colossians would necessarily be the later. But see § 1, and on Col. iv. 16.

SEC. 3.—GENUINENESS OF THE EPISTLE.

After previous expressions of doubt on the part of Schleiermacher (Vorl. üb. Einl. I. N. T. p. 165 f., 194) and Usteri, de Wette has come forward more decidedly than before, assailing the genuineness of the Epistle (exeget. Handbuch, zweite Aufl. 1847, and Einl., fünfte Aufl. 1848); and the critics of Baur's school (Schwegler, krit. Miscellen zum Epheserbr., in Zeller's theol. Jahrb. 1844, 2, p. 378 ff.; nachapostol. Zeitalt.

1 We might, in fact, with equal right infer the converse, viz. that Timothy had, at the writing of the Epistle to the Ephesians, already left Paul again and had journeyed to some other quarter, so that this Epistle would be the later—as Schott really judges it to be.
INTRODUCTION.

II. p. 330 ff., 375 ff.; Baur, Paulus, p. 418 ff., comp. also his Christenth. d. drei ersten Jahrh. p. 104 ff.) relegate the Epistle to the age of Gnosticism and Montanism, whereas de Wette (comp. Schleiermacher) still allows it to belong to the apostolic age, and to a gifted disciple of the apostle as its author. So too Ewald (Sendzchr. d. P. p. xii.; Geschichte d. apost. Zeit. p. 243 ff.); he denies that it was written by Paul, but yet places it much nearer to the great apostle than the Pastoral Epistles; while Weisse (Dogmat. I. p. 146) lightly characterizes it as an unapostolic paraphrase of the Epistle to the Colossians, and Hausrath (d. Ap. Paulus, 1865, p. 2, 138) speaks of it as an Epistle to the Laodiceans retouched by another hand.

De Wette's reasons, in addition to his finding the destination for Ephesus unsuitable, are as follow: that the Epistle, which is devoid of all specially distinctive character in its aim and references, is so dependent on the Epistle to the Colossians, which is almost a mere verbose amplification of it, as to be out of keeping, when divested of the reference to the false teachers. Such a copying from himself is unworthy of the apostle; the style, too, is un-Pauline, overladen as it is with parentheses and accessory clauses, involving a want of connection (ii. 1, 5, iii. 1, 13), copious in words but poor in thoughts; so, too, are the divergences in particular expressions,\(^1\) as well as in the thoughts, doctrinal opinions, and mode of teaching.\(^2\)

\(^1\) "in τοῖς ἰσχυροτέροις, i. 3, 20, ii. 6, iii. 10, vi. 12; τῇ ἰσχυρότερᾳ, vi. 12; διαβλέπει, iv. 27, vi. 11 (elsewhere only in 1 and 2 Tim.); κοιμοπαράγει, vi. 12; εὐπήρει, vi. 16. Words differently used: εἰσαγωγή, i. 10, iii. 2, 9; μονοτρέος, v. 32 (as in Rev. i. 20, xvii. 5, 7); τρίπλωσις, i. 23 (comp. Col. i. 19, ii. 9); ἀληθία, i. 3; αἴων, ii. 2; ψυχοί, i. 14; ἀφαίρεσις, vi. 24; μαθητέας, iv. 20; φυτικός, iii. 9; πληροφορίαν, iv. 18; ἀληθ. τιν. iii. 19; the combinations βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ, v. 5; τῇ μετά τοῦ πάντων, v. 17. Interruption and resumption of the construction, iii. 2-14; the constructions ἐν τούς γυναῖκας, v. 5; ἑαυτοῦ ψάλλει, v. 33; ἑαυτοῦ with the optative, i. 17, iii. 26. Frequent omission of the article before defining additions, i. 3, 15, ii. 7, 11, 15, 21 f., and other passages; diffuseness and pleonasm, i. 19, vi. 10, iii. 18; ii. 6 f., 21 (in Χριστῷ ἑνοῦ), and various other points."

\(^2\) "Unbecoming appeal of the apostle to his insight, iii. 4; putting together of the apostles and prophets, ii. 20, iii. 5; arbitrary use of the passage in the Psalms at iv. 8; quotation of a non-biblical passage, v. 14; the conceptions of demonology, ii. 2, vi. 12; the characteristics of God, i. 17, iii. 9, 15; the laying stress on Old Testament promise, v. 2 f.; the dissuasion from theft, iv. 23; the un-Pauline salutation, vi. 23 f."
But (a) while the absence of any concrete and direct peculiarity of character in its aim and references is surprising, it is altogether unfavourable to any doubts as to its genuineness, partly because the bringing out at all of a writing under an apostle's name and authority makes us presuppose more definite tendencies and more readily recognisable conditions as aimed at in it; partly because, in particular, the circumstances of the Ephesian church, and the close relationship of the apostle to them, must have been so generally known, that a non-apostolic author would either have deliberately taken account of and employed them, or else, if the design of his undertaking permitted it, would have made another and happier selection of an address than this very ἐν Ἐφεσίω. He who could prepare under the name of the apostle an Epistle of so thoroughly Pauline a tenor, must have been quite able to imitate him in the mention and handling of concrete circumstances, and would, by such an omission of those matters as is apparent in our Epistle, neither have satisfied himself nor have answered his design of personating Paul—so much would he have failed in acting his part. The very fact that the Epistle, as an Epistle to the Ephesians, had its genuineness so generally recognised by the ancient church, is, when we consider the general nature of its contents, which always remains mysterious, a doubly valid evidence that this recognition has historically arisen out of immediate and objective certainty. Further, (b) as regards the relation of the Epistle to that to the Colossians, there appear, as is well known, many resemblances in matter and form—some even literal—between the two Epistles. This may, however, be sufficiently explained, in part subjectively from the fact that Paul had just written the Epistle to the Colossians before writing to the Ephesians, so that his mind was still full of and pervaded by the ideas, warnings, and exhortations which he had expressed in the former; in part objectively from the fact that the state of affairs at Ephesus must have been well enough known to the apostle to induce him to repeat various portions of the writing which he had just composed for another Asiatic church, and that to such a degree that he considered it fitting even to reproduce various things word for word from the Epistle to the Colossians, which lay before him. To declare this a course unworthy of the apostle is rash, since we have no other pair of letters from his hand issued so contemporaneously and under the influence of so similar a train of thought. But while certainly several elements from the Epistle to the Colossians have been amplified as to verbal expression in ours, there are also several that are reproduced in a more concise form (e.g. i. 15–17 compared with Col. i. 3, 4; Eph. ii. 16 with Col. i. 20; Eph. iv. 32 with Col. iii. 12 f., and others); and those amplifications admit of natural explanation from renewed dwelling on the same thoughts, in which Paul did not proceed mechanically, and a mind such as his easily had recourse to more words rather than fewer in setting forth the subject afresh. At any rate, de Wette's judgment of it as almost nothing but a verbose amplification, is exaggerated, seeing that the two Epistles present in their course of thought, tenor, and mode of treatment very essential differences (see Harless, p. lxix. ff.; Lünemann, de Ep. ad Eph. authentid, etc., p. 10 ff.), and the conclusion that a pseudo-Paul was at work would, at all events, be too hasty, so long as it was not from other sufficient grounds clear that Paul could not have been himself the amplifier. On the other hand, it is scarcely conceivable of an amplifying imitator, that one so intimately acquainted with the apostle's ideas and diction, should have chosen a single Pauline Epistle for the sole and often literal basis of his work; for thereby he would merely have imposed an unnecessary restriction on himself, and have increased the probability of his fiction, made up though it might be in the best sense, being recognised as such. A man, who could think and write in so Pauline a manner as that wherein the portions not parallel to the Colossian Epistle are thought and written, might with ease have given to his pretended apostolic treatise a shape quite different and not so palpably exhibiting any single source. (c) With respect to the objections taken to the style of the Epistle as too diffuse, loaded with parentheses and accessory clauses, carrying with it a want of connection (ii. 1, 5, iii. 1, 13), verbose, and poor in new ideas, it is to be observed, first, and generally, that this verdict is an unfavourable judgment resting on taste and subjective in character; and, secondly, that in its individual concrete references it relates to a certain peculiarity of the Epistle, which yet is not un-Pauline, seeing that, in fact, the unity of mould and flow, the pectus atque indoles Paulinae mentis (Erasmus), which pervades it from beginning to end,1 leads us more fairly and justly to set down the greater diffuseness, and what is called overloading, to the account of the apostle himself, deeply moved as he was by his subject. There is greater diffuseness certainly, but how natural is this, when we consider the general character of the grand subject-matter and of its evolution, and the absence of casual contents! There are a number of parentheses and accessory clauses certainly, but not after an un-Pauline fashion, and natural enough to a writer so full of the ideas concerned and the collateral thoughts suggested by them. Nowhere is there in reality want of connection, as it is the province of the exposition to show. A poverty of new ideas is merely apparent in proportion to the standard of the expectation cherished a priori; the letter abounds in many-sided modifications and expanded statements of thoughts which were vividly present to the writer's mind, in part from the

Epistle to the Colossians, but a rich accession of new ideas was neither withal intended nor called forth by dialectic controversy (as to the copiousness of diction, see above). As respects (d) the particular divergences of style, ἀπαξ λεγόμενα are found in every Epistle of Paul, as well as other peculiar modes of expression, as may readily be conceived in the case of a letter-writer having so delicate and comprehensive a mastery of the Greek language; but no one of the proofs brought forward by de Wette (which are in part inappropriately selected, and, on the other hand, might have had their number increased) is at variance with the idiosyncrasy of the apostle. And, further, (e) ἀπαξ νοούμενα are not appropriate grounds for doubting the genuineness of a writing in dealing with one whose mind was so inexhaustibly rich, and whose conception moved with such admirable freedom and many-sidedness in the Christian sphere, as was the case with St. Paul. Everything which is adduced as surprising in conception and doctrine may be psychologically and historically explained as standing in full accord with the pure Pauline Gospel (see the exposition), and the objections which are taken to the mode of teaching find analogies in other Pauline Epistles, and rest upon aesthetic presuppositions, which in a historico-critical examination of the New Testament writings supply us with but very uncertain criteria, seeing that in such a case modern taste is much too easily called in as an extraneous ground influencing the judgment. The more candidly de Wette speaks out as to the Epistle not having been composed in the apostolic age, and makes a gifted disciple of Paul to be its author, the more insoluble he makes the riddle, that such an one should have left his treatise without trace of individual historical relations of the apostle to the Ephesians, which it would have been so easy for him to interweave. Lastly, the reasons urged by the school of Baur, according to which this Epistle and the companion Epistle to the Colossians, forming a spurious pair, are held to be a product of Gnosis in opposition to Ebionitism (comp. on Col. Introd. § 3), are disposed of, when the exposition, dealing in a strictly objective manner, demonstrates in the very places which have been called in question simply Pauline contents. See, in opposition to Baur's contrast, specially Klöpper, de orig. epp. ad Eph. et Col., Gryph. 1853; and with regard to the Christology of our letter and that to the Colossians, Rabiger, de Christologia Paulina, p. 42 ff.; Lange, apost. Zeitalt. I. 1, p. 119 ff. 1 The more decisive in that case becomes the weight, which the external attestation by uninterrupted church-tradition throws into the scale. This attestation has been even dated back to the Apostolic Fathers; but in Ignatius, Eph. 12, the Epistle is not at all directly mentioned (see above, § 1), and in Polycarp, Phil. 12, where it is said: "ut in his scripturis dictum est: Irascimini et nolite peccare, et: Sol non occidat super iracundiam vestram," there is no quotation of Eph. iv. 26, but rather, as in his scripturis (comp. immediately before: in sacrís litterís) and the intervening et prove, the citation of two Old Testament sayings, namely, Ps. iv. 5 and Deut. xxiv. 13, 15, though the connecting of these two passages may be based on a reminiscence of our Epistle.2 Apart from the citations in the interpolated Ignatian letters, the undoubted and express ecclesiastical attestation begins with Irenaeus, Haer. v. 2, 3, and v. 14. 3, and is not interrupted by any contradiction (Marcion held it as Pauline, but as addressed to the Laodiceans). Even the Valentinians already in Irenaeus, i. 8. 5, cite Eph. v. 13 expressly as a saying of Paul, and in the Philosoph. of Origen, vi. 34, as ἥραφι.

REMARK. — The apparent resemblances to the first Epistle of Peter of expressions and thoughts in the Epistle to the Ephesians (see Weiss, Petrin. Lehrbegr. p. 426 ff., who has, however, adduced under this head far too much) are too little characteristic adequately to justify us in presupposing a dependence of our Epistle on that of Peter (Weiss, who considers both

1 Lange, however, wrongly defines the Christological distinction of the two Epistles, p. 117, to the effect, that in the Ephesian letter Christ is the Omega, in the Colossian the Alpha, of all things. In both letters He is the Α and the Ω, but in the Colossian letter the Christological theme stands in the foreground, and is treated more sedulously and more comprehensively.

2 The general question, whether at this date Apostolic Fathers adduce New Testament sayings with ἐν γράμματι, γραφή, and the like, does not therefore pertain to us here. Specially important in this relation is the citation in Barnabas 4, in regard to which Credner, Beitr. 1. p. 28, has been mistaken in answering that question in the negative, as the Codex Sinaiticus showed. The citation from Barnabas is certainly not to be referred to a written source generally (Weizsäcker), nor even to 4 Esdr. viii. 3, which passage is held to be confounded with Matt. xix. 30 (Volkmar).
INTRODUCTION.

We should rather assume the converse, when we remember how strictly Paul preserved and acutely vindicated his apostolic independence; but it is quite sufficient to take our stand on the creative power of the church-language formed by Paul, from which Peter was neither able nor willing to hold himself aloof, while it remains an open question whether he had read Epistles of Paul. 2 Pet. (iii. 15 f.) is not genuine.

SEC. 4.—OCCASION, OBJECT, AND CONTENTS.

We are unable to perceive from the letter itself any special occasion given for it on the part of the Ephesians; hence it seems to have been called forth by mere accident through the mission of Tychicus and Onesimus to Colossae—an opportunity, which Paul made use of to send Tychicus also to Ephesus, in order not only to supply the Christians there with (oral) news of him, and to obtain news of them, but also to address to them a written discourse, partly on the glory of redemption and of their state as Christians, partly on the conduct in keeping with it, in order to strengthen and further them in steadfastness and unity of faith and Christian morality; yet not so, that the proper aim of the Epistle (de Wette) is to be discerned in the irenic section iv. 1–16. There are no traces of Ephesian false teachers, similar to those at Colossae (this in opposition to Michaelis, Haenlein, Flatt, Schott, Neudecker, and others), in the Epistle (for iv. 14 f. may be explained from the general experience of the apostle, and v. 6 relates to moral seductions); neither is a precautionary regard to such theosophy and asceticism (see Schneckenburger, Beitr. p. 135 ff.; Olshausen; comp. also Meier and Weiss) at any rate capable of proof, since in the Epistle itself it is not at all hinted at. Bengel well says: "Singulare haec epistola specimen praebet tractationis evangelicae in thesi . . . inde nullum speciatim errorem aut vitium refutat aut redarguit, sed generatim incedit." Paul may, however, have had in the background the thought of the possible approach of that Gnostic danger, though he did not consider it necessary or suitable at this time to furnish an express reference or warning to that effect.
As regards contents, the Epistle divides itself into a predominantly dogmatic and a predominantly hortatory portion. The dogmatic portion is a lofty\(^1\) effusion over the glory and blessedness of the redemption effected through Christ, to which also the readers, formerly Gentiles, had attained, and thereafter over the relation of the apostle to this saving dispensation, and to the share of the readers therein (chap. i.—iii.). The hortatory portion summons them to a conduct worthy of their calling, and, first of all, to Christian unity (iv. 1–16); and then to a moral walk opposed to their previous Gentile life—which is illustrated in detail as concerns very diversified conditions and relations (iv. 17–vi. 20). By way of conclusion, Paul refers, as regards his personal relations, to Tychicus, of whose mission he specifies the object (vi. 21 f.), and ends with a double benediction (vi. 23 f.).—Luther (in his editions of the N. T. down to 1537) reckons the Epistle among “the genuine and noblest books of the New Testament, which show to thee Christ, and teach everything which it is necessary and good for thee to know, even though thou shouldst never see or hear any other book or doctrine.”

CHAPTER I.

— Ver. 3. * before *χριστῷ * is wanting only in some min.,—an omission, which, although followed in the editions of Erasmus, Steph. 3, and Beza, and approved of by Mill, is not at all deserving of notice as a various reading.— Ver. 6. ορ] A B Κ min. Chrys. (alic.) have *η. Recommended by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. and Rück., and rightly so. The attraction was resolved partly by the simple *η (so Theophyl. Ambrosiast.), partly, in keeping with the prevalence of *ορ in the context, by *ορ, which latter is defended by Reiche on insufficient grounds.— Ver. 10. τα *ορ * ούρανοι] The *ορ read in Elz. after τα is, on decisive evidence, deleted by the later editors (except Harless). But in place of ορ, B D E L Κ min. Theodoret, Dam. Oecum. Tert. have *ισι, which Lachm. and Rück. have rightly received. The usual form of conception, *ορ * ούρανοι (comp. iii. 15), superseded the apparently unsuitable *ισι. At Col. i. 20, many min. Chrys. and Theodoret have likewise *ισι * ούρανοι; where *ισι, indeed, is too weakly attested, but has most probably come from our passage.— Ver. 11. *ικάρηθησαν] A D E F G, It. have *ικάρηθησαν. Recommended by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. and Rück. But Matth. Harless, Tisch. Reiche have rightly defended the still more considerably attested *Recepta as the more difficult reading, glossed by *ικάρηθησαν. The gloss is to be derived from Rom. viii. 13: *ου * δι * πρωτοποιησε, τούτος καὶ *ικάρηθησαν. — Ver. 12. *ορ] before *δέ *ξις is, following Griesb., deleted by the more recent editors (except Harless) on preponderating evidence. An addition easily suggested; comp. ver. 14. — Ver. 14. *εί] A B F G L, min. Athan. Cyr. Euthal. Chrys. (in the text) have *εί. So Lachm. and Rück. But *εί was, on account of the preceding οργία, the more easily introduced and retained, since by that means the old opinion, that ἐκ applies to Christ, was met.—
Ver. 15. τίν ἀγάπη συνίστατοι τή ηλίῳ Lachm. has only τίν, following A B K* 17, Cyr. (alic.) Jer. Aug. (alic.). A copyist’s error, and how easily causcd by the repetition of the τίν! If the addition had been made from Col. i. 4, τίν ἀγάπη τίνες would have been inserted instead of the second τίν. — Ver. 16. The second ὑμῶν is wanting in Deleted by Lachm. and Rück. A defining addition, which was first written in the margin, and then inserted, sometimes before, sometimes after πνευματικος. — Ver. 18. παρθενός] Elz. has παρθενος, against decisive testimony. An interpretation. — παρθενός] is wanting in A B D F G K* 59, It. Goth. Ambrosiat. Victorin., and is deleted by Lachm. and Rück, but came to be more readily left out than added, because the concluding παρθενός only comes in after-Procop.; and rightly so. The aorist, in itself more in current use, was suggested by the aorists following. And the attestation is strong enough, since the vs. and Latin Fathers cannot be taken into account. — ἀπέργησαν] Lachm. and Rück. read ἀπέργησαν, following Pel. An attempt to help out the construction. — ἀπέργησαν, instead of ἀπεργησας, though adopted by Lachm., is too feebly attested by B, Victorin. Hilar. — Ver. 23. ἀ'] is wanting in Elz., but has been, upon decisive evidence, restored by Bengel, Griesb. and the later editors; comp. ver. 22.

CONTENTS. — After the usual address and apostolic salutation (vv. 1, 2), St. Paul begins with an ascription of praise to God for the salvation in Christ (ver. 3), which he sets forth (a) as already lovingly predestined by God in eternity to the praise of His grace (vv. 4, 5); (b) as brought about by the death of Christ (vv. 6, 7); then (c) as made known according to the purpose of the divine kindness, to unite all in Christ (vv. 8–10); and lastly, (d) as really appropriated according to the predestination of God (ver. 11); this latter in respect as well to those who had been Jews (ver. 12) as to those who had been Gentiles (vv. 13, 14), both of whom were destined to the praise of the divine glory. — Wherefore, since the Gentiles also had attained to such happiness, he too, after having heard of their faith and love, ceases not to give thanks for his readers, when making mention of them in his prayers, in order that God might enlighten them by His Spirit concerning the hope to which their calling exalted them, concerning the glory of the future salvation, and concerning the greatness of the divine power in the believers (vv. 15–19), which power they were to recognise by what God had wrought in the case of Christ, whom He had raised from the dead and exalted above all, and had given Him as Lord over all to be Head to the church, which is His body—that which is filled by Him, who filleth all with all (vv. 20–23).

Vv. 1, 2. Διὰ τῆς θελήματος τοῦ Θεοῦ] See on 1 Cor. i. 1. — τοῖς ἁγίοις See on Rom. i. 7. — καὶ πιστοῖς ἐν Χ. Ἰ.] furnishes, with τοῖς ἁγίοις, the completeness of the conception, hence it is not exegesis (Beza, Vorstius, Calovius, and others), but an appended element, and καὶ is the closely copulative and. Comp. Col. i. 2. It is not, however, the conception of fidelity and perseverance which is appended (Grotius, Locke, Baumgarten, Rosenmüller, Meier; see, on the other hand, already Calovius), but the notion of faith in Christ, since in the address, where the persons are to be designated very distinctly, τοῖς ἁγίοις alone would not yet characterize the readers expressly as Christians. Comp. Phil. i. 1. — ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ does not belong to ἁγίοις and πιστοῖς, so that it would denote the sphere, within which the Christians are saints and believing (Harless; comp. Boyd, Storr, Opusc. II. p. 121, Meier, Schenkel), for otherwise (comp. on Col. i. 2) καὶ πιστοῖς would be quite superfluous and a tame and heavy addition, inasmuch as the notion of ἁγίοις ἐν Χριστῷ presupposes the notion of πιστοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ; but merely to πιστοῖς: fidem in Christo veronentibus. Comp. i. 15, and see on Mark i. 15; Gal. iii. 26. — Ver. 2. See on Rom. i. 7.

Ver. 3. Εὐλογητός] praised ( إطار), sc. εἰ. Comp. Rom. ix. 5; 2 Cor. i. 3; Luke i. 68; 1 Pet. i. 3; 1 Kings xv. 39. It is prefixed here, since, as in most doxologies (see on Rom. ix. 5), in keeping with the emotion of the heart which breaks forth in songs of praise, the emphasis lies on it. Where the stress in conformity with the context rests upon the person, this is prefixed, as at 1 Kings x. 9; 2 Chron. ix. 8; Job i. 21; Ps. lxviii. 20, cxii. 1, 2; Rom. ix. 5. The second Epistle to the Corinthians begins also with an ascription of praise to God, and the general character of that now before us cannot, in view of the general contents of the Epistle (comp. 1 Pet.
i. 3 ff.), appear un-Pauline (in opposition to de Wette), especially as the thanksgiving which has reference to the readers comes in afterwards in ver. 15 f. — ὁ Θεὸς καὶ πατήρ τοῦ κυρίου κ.τ.λ.] God, who at the same time is the Father of Jesus Christ. See on Rom. xv. 6; 1 Cor. xv. 24; 2 Cor. xi. 31; Theodore of Mopsuestia in Cramer's Catena. Jerome, Theodoret, Theophylact, and others, including Michaelis, Koppe, Rückert, Olshausen, Schenkel, Bleek, have incorrectly attached τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν also to ὁ Θεὸς. It is true, indeed, that there is no objection to the idea "the God of Christ" in itself, and τέ before καὶ would not be at all necessary, as Harless thinks (see iv. 6; 1 Pet. ii. 25, al.); but against it stands the fact that ὁ Θεὸς καὶ πατήρ, even without a genitive, was a stated Christian designation of God (comp. on Rom. xv. 6), in which case πατήρ only, and not Θεὸς, requires a complementary genitive (v. 20; 1 Cor. xv. 24; Jas. i. 27, iii. 9). Moreover, the expression the God of Christ stands so isolated in the N. T. (see on ver. 17), that we may not attribute to it any such currency, as it must have had, if it were contained in the formula ὁ Θεὸς καὶ πατήρ τοῦ κυρίου κ.τ.λ. — ἐν εὐλογησάς ἡμᾶς] Aorist: by the work of redemption. Observe the ingenious correlation of the passive εὐλογητός and the active εὐλογήσας, as well as the διάλογια, by which the former denotes the blessing in word, and the latter the blessing in deed (comp. Rom. xv. 29; 2 Cor. ix. 5 f.; Gal. iii. 8, 9, 14; Acts iii. 26). ἡμᾶς applies to the Christians generally, not to Paul (Koppe), against which view the unsuitableness of such a thanksgiving of the apostle for himself at the head of the Epistle, as well as the actual plurality of persons in the whole context (vv. 4, 11, 12), and κατά, ver. 15, are decisive. — ἐν πάσῃ εὐλογίᾳ πνευματικῇ instrumental: by His imparting to us every spiritual blessing (comp. Test. XII. Patr. p. 722: εὐλογ. ἐν ἀγαθοῖς); none has He withheld from us. This, however, is not to be explained as blessing, which concerns our spirit (Erasmus, Michaelis, Morus, Rosenmüller; Koppe and Rückert are undecided), but: proceeding from the Holy Spirit, because the distinctively Christian benefits are meant, and these are χαράματα. Comp. Rom. i. 11, xv. 29; 1 Cor. xii. 1 ff. This blessing is wrought by God from heaven through the communication of the Spirit (ver. 13;
Gal. iii. 5; 1 Cor. xii. 6, and elsewhere), hence God is praised for it. We may add that a contrast to the earthly benefits promised to the Jews in the Old Testament (Grotius and others, including recently Holzhausen), or to the typical blessings of the Jews and the empty possessions of the Gentiles (Schöttgen), is foreign to the context. Paul denotes the matter in a purely positive form as it is, according to its characteristic nature; hence there is not in πάση any contrast to merely sporadic blessings in the O. T. The εὐλογία consists in the most varied expressions, as in grace, truth, peace, joy, love, hope, consolation, patience, and all Christian virtues as the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. v. 22; Rom. v. 1 ff.). Compare πάντα ἄγαθον τὸ ἐν ἥμα, Philem. 6. — ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις] local: in the heavenly regions, in heaven. Comp. ver. 20, ii. 6, iii. 10, vi. 12. Against the instrumental rendering, according to which it is understood, as a more precise definition of the spiritual blessing, of the heavenly possessions1 (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Luther, Castalio, Piscator, Vorstius, Homberg, Michaelis, Zachariae, Morus, Flatt, Bleek, and others), we may urge, not the article (in opposition to Rückert, Harless, Olshausen), — which would very appropriately denote the category,— but the fact, that Paul has not added ἄγαθος or χαρίσματα, just because in our Epistle ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις is constantly a designation of place.2 The local ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις is referred, either to God, so that heaven appears as the seat where the divine blessing is being prepared (Beza, Boyd), — but how idle and self-evident that would be! or to ἀγαθος, so that heaven, as the seat of our πολίτευμα (Phil. iii. 20), would be the scene of the divine blessing. So Pelagius, Beza (who 1 These would not be possessions, which have reference to the heavenly life, but possessions which are to be found in heaven and are imparted to us. For ἐπουράνιοι always means "to be found in heaven." See Wetstein, I. p. 447; Bleek on Heb. iii. 1, p. 375. Comp. τὰ ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, ver. 10.

2 The expression ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, which occurs five times in this Epistle and nowhere else in the N. T., is surprising. In the case of any writer, no doubt, a phrase not in current use with him at other times may be accidentally and temporarily suggested to him, the use of which he involuntarily appropriates and soon again as involuntarily abandons; yet it remains a surprising fact that the expression ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις is not also used in the Epistle to the Colossians written at the same time, where there was no lack of opportunity (i. 5, 16, 20) for the use of the expression, although the two Epistles exhibit so much verbal affinity. leaves a choice between the two views), Grotius (who says that the blessings place us et spe et jure in coelo), Baumgarten, Koppe, Rückert, and others. The aorist would not be at variety with this view, since the matter might be set forth proleptically in accordance with an ideal mode of looking at it (comp. ii. 6). But the whole explanation is far-fetched and opposed to the context; for πνευμάτικη shows that Paul has not thought of our having received this blessing in the heavenly πολίτευμα, seeing that the Holy Spirit is received on earth as the present earnest of the heavenly heritage (vv. 13, 14). Accordingly, the third reference remains the only correct one, under which ἐν τοῖς ἐποιε-πανίωσις is attached as a local definition to εὐλογημένον πνευμάτικην:
with every spiritual benefit in heaven, so that, because the Holy Spirit is in heaven, as is God Himself ὁ τῆς κατοικίας ἐσπανίωσαν ἐχον (2 Macc. iii. 39), the blessings also of the Spirit are regarded as to be found in heaven and brought down from thence to us. See Heb. vi. 4.— ἐν Χριστῷ] for in Christ lay the ground of that εὐλογημένον accomplished in our case; not out of Christ, but in Him lay the cause that God blessed us with every spiritual blessing, since His act of redemption is the causa meritoria of this divine bestowal of blessing. Comp. ver. 4.

John xiii. 34.— ἔκλεισασα ἡμᾶς] He has chosen us (from the collective mass of men) for Himself (sibi). Comp. 1 Cor. i. 27; Rom. ix. 11, xi. 5, 7, 28; John xv. 19; 1 Pet. ii. 9 f.
Entirely without reason does Hofmann, Schriftenweis, I. p. 223, deny that ἐκλέγεσθαι here has reference to others not chosen, and assert that it applies only to that which we, in the absence of election, should not have become. This is according to the very notion of the word quite impossible. Ἐκλέγεσθαι always has, and must of logical necessity have, a reference to others, to whom the chosen would, without the εὐλογητός, still belong.
Even in Acts vi. 5, xiii. 17; 1 Tim. v. 21; Ex. xviii. 25 ; Deut. iv. 37, it sets forth the distinctive separation from the remaining mass, just as also Christ, as one who is chosen out from all that is man, is called the ἐκλεκτός of God (Luke ix. 35, xxiii. 35).— ἐν αὐτῷ] for in nothing else and in no one else than in Christ, whose future work of redemption God has foreknown and decreed from eternity (Acts xv. 18; Rom. xvi. 25; 2 Tim. i. 9; 1 Pet. i. 20, al.), lay the ground, that the electing grace (Rom. xi. 5) chose us (comp. iii. 11); hence God had, as respected the subjects to be affected by the election, to deal, not in any arbitrary manner, but according to His πρόγνωσις of the same (praecognovit credituros). See on Rom. viii. 29. Christ is not, however, here conceived of as Himself chosen of God, and we as included in Him (ἐν αὐτῷ), as Hofmann, p. 229, thinks; but, as the more precise explanation in ver. 5 shows, the divine act of our election has in Christ its determining ground, so that to us by this act there is assigned and allotted no other than the salvation to be gained through Christ (who in the fulness of the times was out of His pre-existence to be sent as Incarnate and was to accomplish the work of salvation). Apart from this connection of the divine election with Christ we should not be chosen; but in Christ lay for God the causa meritoria of our election. The reference of ἐν αὐτῷ to God (Al. Morus, Holzhausen: with Himself, in His heart) is to be rejected on account of the utter superfluousness of this definition, and on account of the preceding ἐν Χριστῷ.— πρὸ καταβολής κόσμου] thus before all time, already in eternity. Comp. Col. i. 15 ff.; 2 Thess. ii. 13; Matt. xxv. 34; also 1 Cor. ii. 7; 2 Tim. i. 9. The expression is nowhere else found in Paul; but see Matt. xiii. 35; Luke xi. 50; John xvii. 24; Heb. iv. 3; 1 Pet. i. 20; Rev. xiii. 8.— ἐγώ ἡμᾶς ἀγιοὺς κ.τ.λ.] Infinitive of the design: in order that we should be, etc. See Winer, p. 298 f. 1 Beyschlag (Christol. d. N. T. p. 141) finds in ἐν αὐτῷ the thought, "that the divinely conceived prototypes of perfected believers are from eternity posited by God in the One Prototype of humanity acceptable unto Him, as the countless multiplications of the same, to be thereupon brought through the historically realized One Prototype to their realization and perfection." In opposition to this view we may simply urge the context, according to which ἐν αὐτῷ denotes Christ as the personal ground of the ἐλεγέρα made before all time, in so far as He, as Reconciler, is the bearer of the divine grace, vv. 6, 7.
less, Herod. ii. 177; Theoc. xviii. 25) exhaust the conception positively and negatively. Comp. Plut. "Perid. p. 173 D: βίος... καθαρός καὶ ἁμαντός, and see on Col. i. 22; Eph. v. 27. It is not, however, to be explained of the holiness conditioned by morality and virtue (Chrysostom, Theophylact, Calvin, Piscator, Grotius, Calixtus, and many others, including Flatt, Rückert, Matthies, Meier, Schenkel), in which case reservations on account of human imperfection are often arbitrarily inserted, or it is referred, as by Rückert, to the ideal point of view of the apostle; but rather of the holiness and blamelessness brought about through the atoning death of Christ by means of the δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ thereby attained (Rom. iii. 21 ff., v. 1 ff., viii. 1, 33 ff.; 1 Cor. vi. 11; Heb. x. 10, 14, 29), in favour of which the very εἶναι (not γίνεσθαι) and the whole context are decisive (vv. 5, 6, 7). We may add that, if the emphasis with which our Epistle brings into prominence the holiness of the church (comp. v. 27) is to be held as betraying the standpoint of the second century (see Schwegler in Zeller’s Jahrb. 1844, p. 382), for which especial reference is made to iii. 10, 31, with equal reason the like suspicion may be thrown even on the most fully acknowledged Epistles (such as the Epistles to the Corinthians). — κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ] before God’s eyes, judice Deo (Col. ii. 14; Rom. iii. 20, iv. 5). It is God’s judgment, which has posited the reconciled as holy and blameless, and that by imputation of faith (not εὐλογία πνευματική), ver. 3. The reference of αὐτός successively recurring to different subjects cannot surprise us (Winer, p. 135 [E. T. 179]); and so it is not to be written αὐτοῦ (as Harless still does), but αὐτοῦ, from the standpoint of the author (Dissen, ad Dem. de Cor. p. 276; Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 2. 49). — ἐν ἁγάπῃ is attached by many to ver. 4, so that it is connected either with ἔξελέκτω (Oecumenius, Thomas, Flacius, Olearius, Baumgarten, Flatt, and others, but in how isolated and awkward a way! or with εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἁγίους κ.τ.λ. (Vulgate, Ambrosiaster, Erasmus, Luther, Castalio, Beza, Calvin, Piscator, Grotius, Wolf, Wetstein, and others, including Rückert,—but with hesitation,—Matthies, Meier, Baumgarten-Crusius), so that ἐν ἁγάπῃ would be the ground, or rather the element (evangelii τὸ πάν, says Grotius, lies in love), of the holiness and blamelessness. But this is not compatible with the correct explanation of ἀγίους καὶ ἁμώμους, as a state brought about by the ἱλαστήριον of Christ, according to which, not εὖ ἀγάπη, but εὖ πίστει, would have been a definition of the element of holiness in keeping with the context. Hence the connection with προορίσας, ver. 5, remains as the only correct one. So the Peshito, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Augustine, Estius (but with hesitation), Bengel, Michaelis, Zachariae, Koppe, and others, including Lachmann, Harless, Olshausen, de Wette, Tischendorf, Schenkel, Bleek. The only one of the objections made to this view which is plausible is that of Matthies and Meier, that the following κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελημάτος αὐτοῦ would render the preceding εὖ ἀγάπη in this connection superfluous. But see on ver. 5.

Ver. 5. Love was the disposition of God, in which He through this our election predestined us to viotheora. Hence this divine motive, therefore, is prefixed with emphasis, quite in keeping with the character of ascription of praise marking the discourse. Consequently: in that He in love predestined us. Homberg has indeed conceived the relation of the time of προορίσας to ἔξελέξατο as: "postquam nos praedestinavit adoptandos, electit etiam nos, ut simus sancti;" but the usual view correctly conceives προορίσας as coincident in point of time, and accomplished simultaneously with ἔξελέξατο, so that it is regarded as the modus of the latter (see on γνωρίσας, ver. 9). For the praedestination (the προορίζειν) is never elsewhere distinguished from the election as something preceding it; it rather substantially coincides with it (hence at Rom. viii. 29 only the expression πρόωρος is used, while in viii. 33 only ἐκλεκτολ are mentioned), and only the πρόγνωσις is prior, Rom. i.e. Comp. Lampsing, Pauli de praedestinat. decreta, Leovard. 1858, p. 70. See on this use of the aorist participle, Hermann, ad Viger. p. 774; Bernhardy, p. 383; Winer, p. 321 [E. T. 430]. It is, we may add, purely arbitrary to distinguish ἔξελέξατο and προορίσας, so that the former should apply to individuals, the latter to the whole (Schenkel). Both verbs have in fact the same objects (ἡμᾶς, which denotes the persons); see on Rom. viii. 29. — The προ in προορίσας, beforehand, points to the future realization. Certainly the predestination has taken place before the creation of the world (ver. 4); but this is not expressed by προ, which rather looks always towards the future setting in of the thing predestined. See Rom. viii. 29; 1 Cor. ii. 7; Eph. i. 11; Acts iv. 28; Heliod. p. 298, 14, p. 266, 15; Sopater in Walz, Rhet. V. p. 152, 20. — ἐς νικεοςιαν διά Ἰηνου Χριστου ἐς αφτον] are to be taken closely together: unto adoption through Jesus Christ in reference to Him,—that is, He has destined us to stand in the relation of those assumed as children through mediation of Jesus Christ to Him (to God). Comp. Rom. viii. 29. That νικεοςια is nowhere merely childship (as Meier and Bleek still take it here, following Usteri), but adoption, see on Rom. vii. 15; Gal. iv. 5. νικεοςια is never predicated of Christ Himself; for He is the born Son of God (Rom. viii. 3; Gal. iv. 4), who procured for His own the assumption into the place of children (whereby they became de jure His brethren, Rom. viii. 29). The pre-eminence of Christ is therefore essential, not merely prototypal, as of the head of humanity;² He is the μονογενής. Through adoption believers have passed out (comp. Rom. vii. 24 f.) of their natural state, in which they by sin were liable to the wrath of God (ii. 3), and have entered into the state of reconciliation, in which they, through the mediation of the reconciling death of Christ (vv. 6, 7), by means of the faith in it which was counted to them for righteousness (Gal. iii. 26; Rom. iv. 5, 23 f.), have forgiveness of sins, and are heirs of the Messianic blessedness (ver. 14; Gal. iv. 7; Rom. viii. 10, 11, 17), as a guarantee of which the Holy Spirit is given to them (ver. 14; Gal. iv. 6; Rom. viii. 16). — ἐς αφτον] does not apply to Christ (Anselm, Thomas, Castalio, Vorstius, Menochius, Cornelius a Lapide, and others, including de Wette), since Christ is mediator of the adoption, and this is a relation to God. This simple sense of reference toward is to be maintained, and we must not import either ad gloriom gratiae suae (Piscator; comp. Schenkel)

or τὴν εἰς αὐτὸν ἀνάγονσαν τὸ γένος ἡμῶν (Theophylact). At variance with linguistic usage, Beza, Calvin, and Calixtus take it for ἐν ἐαυτῷ, and discover in it the independence of the divine προορισμὸς; and Grotius, Wolf, Baumgarten, Köpper, Holzhausen, Meier hold it as equivalent to sibi, ἡ ("as children, who rightly belong to Him as His own," Meier). Comp. also on Col. i. 20. — We may add that here, too, we must not write (with Beza, Stephanus, Mill, Griesbach, Knapp, Meier, and others) αὐτὸν, but αὐτῷ. Comp. above on κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ. — κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ (not αὐτοῦ): conformably to the pleasure of His will, just as it was the purpose of His will. Comp. Matt. xi. 26; Luke x. 21. So Vulgate, Erasmus, Calvin, Bengel, Flatt, and others, including Rückert, de Wette, Bleek. It may also signify: according to the benevolence of His will (see, generally, Fritzsche, ad Rom. II p. 369 ff.). So Harless, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, following older expositors. But this notion is already and more strongly contained in ἐν ἐγκάτῃ; and the element which is here meant, of free self-determination, independent of all human desert, as regulative of the προοριζέω, is clearly pointed to in the parallel by ἂν προέθετο ἐν αὐτῷ. Comp. also ver. 11; 2 Tim. i. 9.

REMARK. — Predestination is not made dependent on any sort of causa meritoria on the part of man (comp. ver. 11), but is simply an act of free divine kindness, whose determination has its causa impulsiva only in Christ; so that, in the case of the predestined subjects, faith is set forth as the causa apprehendens of the salvation destined for them κατὰ πρόγνωσιν (Rom. viii. 29); and with this Rom. ix., when rightly apprehended, agrees. The conditions mentally supplied by expositors (as e.g. Grotius, who finds in our passage "decretum ejus, quod Deus facere vult, si et homines faciant, quod debent," comp. already Jerome) remove the relation out of the sphere of the divine εὐδοκία τοῦ θελήματος into that of dependence on human self-choice, and consequently into the domain of the accidental. The notion of absolute decree, however, breaks down before the πρόγνωσις as the necessary premiss of the divine ἰνθλογή — a premiss, which doubtless involves the necessity of morally restricting the truncus aut lapis of the Formula Concordiae (comp. Luthardt, Lehre vom freien Willen, p. 272).

Ver. 6. As love was the disposition serving as motive for the divine predestination (ver. 5), so is the glorifying of the divine love (which, however, is here designated in accordance with its distinctive peculiarity, because it refers to sinners, ii. 1 ff., as grace) its divinely conceived ultimate aim, not, as Grotius would have it, consequens aliud. Comp. 2 Cor. i. 20; Phil. i. 11. — eis ἐπανων δόξης τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ (not αὐτοῦ) means neither to the glorious praise of His grace (Grotius, Estius), nor to the praise of His glorious grace (Luther, Castalio, Beza, and most expositors, including Morus, Koppe, Flatt, Holzhausen, Meier), the one of which is just as arbitrary as the other; but: to the praise of the glory of His grace. The quality of the grace, its glory—its greatness laudably evincing itself—is brought into prominence as the object of the praise to be bestowed on it. Comp. Bernhardy, p. 53 f.; Held, ad Timol. p. 368. Bengel already in his day aptly distinguished the notions: "Primum nascitur laus gratiae, ver. 5, inde laus gloriae." — δόξης without the article may not surprise us on account of the genitival definition that follows. See Winer, p. 118 f. [E. T. 155 f.]. — ἡς ἐχάριτωσεν ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ ἡγαπ. ἡς is attracted by the preceding τῆς χάριτος (χάριν χαριτοῦν is conceived of as ἀγάπην ἀγαπάν, ii. 4; John xvii. 26; comp. Dem. 306, 28: χάρινας χαρίζεσθαι) instead of ἡν. Comp. iv. 1; and see on 2 Cor. i. 4; Hom. II. xxii. 649; Arist. Pl. 1044: τῆς ὑβέρεος ἡς ὑβριζομαι. Χαρίτωσιν means: gratia aliquaem afficere; and, according as the χάρις is conceived of subjectively as love-worthiness, or objectively as the divine grace, the sense may either be: to make love-worthy, as Chrysostom¹ and his followers (comp. also Luther), Cornelius a Lapide, and many Roman Catholics (including Bisping), have taken it, understanding thereby not merely the reconciliation, but also the positive sanctifying, the justitia inhaerens; or: to grant grace (as it is taken usually). In the former sense (see Wetstein, I. p. 651), the word occurs, Niceph. Prog. ii. 2; Symm. Ps. xvii. 28; Ecclus. xviii. 17; also Ecclus. ix. 8 in Cod. A; and Clem. Alex. Paed. iii. 11; in the latter sense, in Luke i. 28; Test. XII. Patr. p. 698. The latter is here.

¹ Chrysostom says: just as if one were to make a sick or famished man into a beautiful youth, so has God made our soul beautiful and love-worthy for the angels and all saints and for Himself.
decidedly correct, since the preceding τῆς χάριτος, especially with ἂς as the reading, permits no deviation from that meaning, just as ver. 7 sets forth simply the work of pardoning grace. — ἐν τῷ ὑγατημένῳ] Christ as the νῦν τῆς ἁγίας αὐτοῦ, Col. i. 13 (comp. Matt. iii. 17), is κατ᾽ ἐξοχήν the beloved of God, and in Him has God shown us grace, i.e. in the fact that He gave Him up to death for us (ver. 7), He has brought home to us His grace. Comp. ii. 13; Rom. viii. 39; 2 Cor. v. 19. The designation of Christ by ὁ ὑγατημένος makes us feel the greatness of the divine grace. Comp. Rom. viii. 32, v. 8 ff.; John iii. 16; 1 John iv. 9 f.

Ver. 7. More precise elucidation, on the basis of experience (ἐκείνου), of what had just been said, ἐχαρίτ. ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ ὑγατ. — ἐν φήμαι so that in Him our possession of the redemption has its ground. He it is, without whose person and work we should not have been redeemed; χαρίς Χριστοῦ (ii. 12), no ἀπολύτρωσις. Comp. Rom. iii. 24. The relative has, as is often the case (see, generally, Stallbaum, ad Plat. Phil. p. 195 f.; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 371), argumentative significance. Comp. here especially iii. 12. — τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν] the redemption, namely, from God’s wrath and penalties, which before our entrance into faith we had incurred through sin (Rom. i. 18, iii. 23, v. 5 ff., vii. 7 ff.; Eph. ii. 3, v. 6, al.), as those who were under the dominion of the devil (Col. i. 13; Acts xxvi. 18). The purchase-price (1 Cor. vi. 20, vii. 23; Matt. xx. 28; Mark x. 45) through which Christ, in voluntary obedience towards God’s gracious counsel, accomplished this ἀπολύτρωσις, was His blood, which He shed as an ἱλαστήριον for the benefit of men (Rom. iii. 25, v. 8, 9; 2 Cor. v. 21; Col. i. 21, ii. 13 f.). On ἀπολύτρωσις, as the effect of the atoning death, in which case the blood of Christ is always conceived of as the purchase-price, see Rom. iii. 24. — διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ] by means of His blood, a more precise definition of the preceding ἐν φήμαι. Paul might have written ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ (ii. 13); but he in general prefers an interchange of prepositions (comp. 2 Cor. iii. 11; Rom. iii. 30; Gal. ii. 16; Philem. 5), to which he was here specially led by his epexegetic purpose (comp. iii. 12; 1 Thess. iii. 7). — τὴν ἀφεσίν τῶν παραπτωμάτων] apposition to τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν, the essence of which is the forgiveness of sins obtained on account of the death of Christ. As to the distinction between πάρεσις (Rom. iii. 25) and ἄφεσις (used by Paul also in Col. i. 14), see on Rom. iii. 25. — τῶν παραπτωμάτων denotes always the actual individual sins (ii. 1 ff.; and see on Rom. v. 20); hence Paul has not mentally included a forgiveness of in-born sinfulness (Olshausen). — κατὰ τὸν πλούτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ] is not to be resolved into an adjective ("gratia liberalissima," Koppe); but the riches, i.e. the great fulness (Codex 17 has τὸ πλήθος), of the divine grace is that, in consequence of which we have in Christ the redemption. It is to be noted that here, as well as in ver. 6, the reference to the divine grace serves to wind up one element of the discourse, and (by ἃς) to annex another. As to πλούτος τῆς χάριτος (ii. 7, iii. 16), see on Rom. ii. 4. We may add that Lachmann, Rückert, Tischendorf have the form τὸ πλούτος, following A B D* E (?) n* min., to which also F G fall to be added with the transcriber's error τοῦ πλούτος; and rightly. See on 2 Cor. viii. 2, Renark; and see Winer, p. 64 [E. T. 76].

Ver. 8. Ἡς ἑπερισευσεν εἰς ἡμᾶς] Ἡς stands by attraction (comp. ver. 6), not for ἡ (Camerarius, Calvin, Piscator, Erasmus Schmid), so that ἑπερίσσο. would be intransitive,— for the attraction of the dative, rare even in classic authors (Krüger, Gramm. 51. 10. 3, and Grammat. Unters. III. p. 274 f.), is not found in the N. T., not even in the passages adduced by Buttman, neut. Gr. p. 247 [E. T. 287],— but for ἡν, so that ἑπερίσσο. is transitive (2 Cor. iv. 15, ix. 8; 1 Thess. iii. 12): which He has made abundant, has shown in an exceedingly high degree (ἀφθόνως ἔξεχε, Theophylact), towards us. If, with Calvin and Beza (comp. also Holzhausen), we should not assume any attraction at all, but should take the genitive as at Luke xv. 17, there would result the sense, unsuitable to what follows (γνωρίσας κ.τ.λ.): of which He had superabundance towards us. — ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ φρονήσει is not, with Chrysostom, Jerome, Theodoret, Homberg, Baumgarten, Semler, Michaelis, Griesbach, Koppe, Holzhausen, Scholz, to be attached to γνωρίσας, because it would thus, like ἐν ἀγάπῃ in ver. 5, denote the attribute of God operative in the γνωρίζειν, which, on account of πάσῃ (see below), is not admissible. If, again, we should, with Chrysostom (comp. Michaelis and others), regard it as the state of men brought about by γνωρίσας κ.τ.λ., this would be forced, and, as concerns the sense, there might be urged against it the circumstance that, in the making known of the divine mystery, Paul had to set forth, not the divine display of grace in itself (this was given in the work of redemption, vv. 6, 7), but the display of grace as revealed. Hence it was necessary that there should be added to ἡς ἐπερίσσο. εἰς ἡμ. a definition, and this is ἐν πᾶσῃ σοφ. κ. φρον.: which He has displayed abundantly towards us by every kind of wisdom and discernment (with which He endowed us, comp. Col. i. 9), in that He made known to us, etc. Observe here withal the climax, in which, rising from the simple ἡς ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς, ver. 6, the apostle now, at this further display of grace, says: ἡς ἐπερίσσο- σεν εἰς ἡμᾶς. Rückert (comp. Jerome, Castalio, de Wette, and others), although connecting it with ἡς ἐπερίσσο., incorrectly holds the divine wisdom to be meant, and takes the sense to be, that God has with highest wisdom and discernment dispensed His grace over us. Not only would this introduce here something remote from the point,—since in the whole context Paul is commending only grace as such, and not any other attribute along with it,—but the words themselves are opposed to it, not indeed by πᾶσῃ, which (in opposition to Harless and Schenkel) might be used also of God (1 Kings iii. 28; Prov. iii. 19; Jer. x. 12), but certainly by πᾶσῃ. For πᾶσα σοφία does not mean summa sapientia, but every kind of wisdom, which, according to a popular mode of expression, like our "all possible wisdom." (Theile, ad Jacob. p. 7), can be said only of men. The πολυπολικός σοφία, iii. 10, is not analogous (in opposition to de Wette), but denotes the absolute wisdom according to its manifold modes of manifestation.—καὶ φρονήσει] Comp. 1 Kings iv. 29: ἐδώκεν κύριος φρόνησιν τῷ Σαλαμώνι καὶ σοφίαν πολλήν; Dan. ii. 21: διδοὺς σοφίαν τοῖς σοφοῖς καὶ φρόνησιν τοῖς εἰδόσι σύνεσιν; Joseph. Antt. ii. 5. 7, viii. 7. 5. Φρόνησις is an aptitude, which proceeds from wisdom (ἡ δὲ σοφία ἀνθρώπων τίτει φρόνησιν, Prov. x. 23), in connection with which the distinction is to be noted, that σοφία is the general notion (ἐπιστήμη θείων τε καὶ ἀνθρωπίνων πραγμάτων, Sext. Emp. adv. phys. i. 13), which embraces the collective activity of the mind as directed to divine aims only to be achieved by moral means (comp. on Col. i. 9); whereas φρόνησις denotes the more special notion of the morally determined intelligence, the insight of practical reason regulating the dispositions (ἐπιστήμη ἀγαθών καὶ κακών, Plato, Def. p. 411 D; ἔξω ἄληθῆς μετὰ λόγου πρακτική περὶ τὰ ἀνθρώπω ἀγαθὰ κ. κακά, Arist. Eth. vi. 5. 4). See, especially, also Cic. Off. i. 43. Comp. on φρόνησις, which Paul has not elsewhere, Luke i. 17; Beck, bibl. Seelenl. p. 62.

Ver. 9. In that He has made known to us the mystery of His will. The aorist participle signifies an action coincident and completed at the same time with ἐπερίσσον. See on i. 5. — ἡμῶν] applies, as in the whole connection, to the Christians generally; but in this case the extraordinary kinds of making known, which individuals among them had experienced (such as Paul himself, who was instructed δι’ ἀποκαλύψεως, iii. 3; Gal. i. 12), are left out of account.— τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ] τοῦ θελήματος is genitive object. And the mystery that concerns the divine will is the counsel of redemption accomplished through Christ, not in so far as it is in itself incomprehensible for the understanding, but in so far as, while formed from eternity, it was until the announcement of the gospel hidden in God, and veiled and unknown to men. See Rom. xvi. 25 f.; Eph. iii. 4 f., 9, vi. 19; Col. i. 26. By the prophets the mystery was not unveiled, but the unveiling of it was merely predicted; here at the proclamation of the gospel the prophetic predictions became means of its unveiling, Rom. xvi. 25 f. — κατὰ τὴν εὐθομ. αὐτοῦ] belongs not to τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ (Bleek), in which case it would stand in a tautologic relation to τοῦ θελ. αὐτ., but rather to γνωρίσασ κ. τ. λ., stating that God has accomplished the making known in pursuance of His free self-determination. Comp. on ver. 5. — ἡν πρόθεσεν ἐν αὐτῷ] would be in itself redundant, but serves for the attaching of that which follows; hence no comma is to be placed after αὐτῷ. It is not, however, to be written as αὐτῷ (as by Lachmann, Harless, Tischendorf), since here the αὐτός cannot appear as the third person, as would be the case if the text had run in some such form as κατὰ τὴν πρόθεσιν αὐτοῦ, and as was previously the case with the thrice occurring \( \alpha \nu \tau \omega \). If \( \alpha \nu \tau \omega \) were to be read, a subject different from God would be meant; as, indeed, Chrysostom and his successors, as well as Luther, Calovius, Bengel, and others, in reality understood it of Christ, although the latter only comes in again at ver. 10, and that by name. — \( \pi \rho \omicron \omicron \theta \epsilon \omicron \omicron \omicron \) set before Himself (Rom. i. 13), purpose (namely, to accomplish it) in Himself; i.e. in His heart (anthropopathic designation). This purpose, too (\( \pi \rho \omicron \omicron \theta \epsilon \omicron \omicron \omicron \), ver. 11), is to be conceived as formed before the creation of the world; without this idea, however, being expressed by \( \pi \rho \), which is not even to be taken temporally, but locally (to set before oneself), comp. on \( \pi \rho \chi \epsilon \rho \chi \rho \zeta \omicron \omicron \omicron \). There is incorrectness, for the very reason that \( \epsilon \nu \alpha \nu \tau \omega \) does not apply to Christ, in the translation of Luther (comp. Vulgate): “and has brought forth [herfürgebracht] the same by Him,” though \( \pi \rho \omicron \theta \epsilon \omicron \) in itself might have this meaning. See on Rom. iii. 25.

Ver. 10. \( \epsilon \iota \xi \nu \iota \kappa \iota \omega \nu \omicron \omicron \iota \iota \upsilon \omicron \upsilon \mu \nu \tau \omicron \rho \omega \mu \tau \omicron \kappa \alpha \iota \rho \omicron \] Unto the dispensation of the fulfilling of the times, belongs not to \( \gamma \nu \omega \rho \iota \omicron \sigma \alpha \sigma \) (Bengel), but to the immediately preceding \( \eta \nu \pi \rho \omicron \omicron \theta \epsilon \omicron \omicron \) \( \epsilon \nu \alpha \nu \tau \omega \), which is inserted solely with a view to attach to it \( \epsilon \iota \xi \nu \iota \kappa \iota \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \upsilon \omicron \kappa \alpha \iota \rhop ; \) and \( \epsilon \iota \xi \) does not stand for \( \epsilon \nu \) (Vulgate and several Fathers, also Beza, Piscator, and others), but denotes what God in forming that purpose had in view, and is thus telic: with a design to. With the temporal rendering, usque ad (Erasmus, Calvin, Bucer, Estius, Er. Schmid, Michael, and others), we should have to take \( \pi \rho \omicron \theta \epsilon \omicron \omicron \omicron \) in a pregnant sense, and to supply mentally: “consilio secretum et abditum esse voluit” (Erasmus, Paraphr.), which, however, with the former explanation is superfluous, and hence is arbitrary here, although it would in itself be admissible (Winer, p. 577 [E. T. 776]). — \( \omega \iota \kappa \omicron \nu \omicron \omicron \iota \] house-management (Luke xvi. 2), used also in the ethico-theocratic sense (1 Tim. i. 4), and specially of the functions of the apostolic office (1 Cor. ix. 17; Col. i. 25), here signifies regulation, disposition, arrangement in general, in which case the conception of an \( \omega \iota \kappa \omicron \nu \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \) has receded into the background. Comp. iii. 2; Xen. Cyr. v. 3. 25; Plut. Pomp. 50; frequently in Polyb. (see Schweighaeuser, Lex. Polyb. p. 402); comp. also 2 Macc. iii. 14; 3 Macc. iii. 2; Act. Thom. 57.—The \( \pi \lambda \rho \omicron \omicron \omicron \tau \omicron \nu \kappa \alpha \iota \rho \omicron \nu \], id quo impleta sunt (comp. on iii. 19) tempora, is not in substance different from τὸ πληρωμα τοῦ χρόνον, Gal. iv. 4; nevertheless, in our passage the pre-Messianic period running on from the beginning is conceived of not as unity, as at Gal. i.e., but according to its different sections of time marked off by different epochs, the last of which closes with the setting in of the Messianic work of redemption, and which thus with this setting in become full (like a measure), so that nothing more is lacking to make up the time as a whole, of which they are the parts. This πλήρωμα is consequently not, in general, tempus justum (Morus: at its time), but the fulness of the times, i.e. that point of time, by the setting in of which the pre-Messianic ages are made full,¹ that is, are closed as complete. Comp. Herod. iii. 22: ὁγιώκοντα δ' ἔστα ζῆν πληρωμα ἀνδρί μακρότατον προκείμεναι (implementum vitae longissimum, i.e. longissimum tempus, quo impletur vita), and see on Gal. iv. 4; Wetstein on Mark i. 15. Fritzsche (in Thesauri quo sacrae N. T. glossae illustr. specim.., Rostock 1839, p. 25, and ad Rom. ii. p. 473) conceives it otherwise, holding that τὸ πλήρωμα is plenitas, the abstract of πλήρης, hence πλ. τ. κ. plenum tempus, οἱ πληρεῖς καιροῦ. But while πλήρωμα doubtless signifies impletio, like πλήρως, in Ezek. v. 2; Dan. x. 3; Soph. Trach. 1203; Eurip. Tro. 824, it never denotes the being full. — Now, in what way is the genitive-relatiom oίκονομία τοῦ πληρώματος to be understood? A genitive of the object (Menochius, Storr, Baumgarten-Crusius) τοῦ πληρώμ. cannot be, inasmuch as it may doubtless be said of the πλήρωμα τῶν καιρ. as a point of time fixed by God: it comes (Gal. iv. 4), but not: it is arranged, οίκονομεῖται. Harless takes the genitive as epexegetic. But a point of time (πλήρ. τ. καιρ.) cannot logically be an appositional more precise definition of a fact (οίκονομία). The genitive is rightly taken as expressing the characteristic (temporal) peculiarity, as by Calovius: “dispensatio propria plenitudini temporum.” Comp. Rückert. Just as κρίσις μεγάλης ἡμέρας, Jude 6. Hence: with a view to the dispensation to be established at the setting in of the fulness ¹The apostolic idea of the πλήρωμα τῶν καιρῶν excludes the conception of a series of worlds without beginning or end (Rothe). See Gess, v. d. Pers. Chr. p. 170 ff.
of the times. For, δε ηλπε το πληρωμα του χρόνου, εξαπέ-στειλεν ο Θεος του υιου αυτου, Gal. l.c., and on His emergence πεπληρωται ο καιρος, Mark i. 15. There was no need that the article should stand before εικον, just because of the complete definition contained in the following genitive. Comp. on ver. 6. It would only be required, if we should have mentally to supply to εικονομαλαν a genitival definition, and thus to make it an independent idea, as is done by many (Wolf, Olschauen, and others), who explain it as administrationem gratiae,—a view which is erroneous, just because a genitive already stands beside it, although εικονομα του πληρωματος tων καιρων, taken together, is the Christian dispensation of grace. This genitival definition standing alongside of it also prevents us from taking, with Luther, εις εικονομαν (sc. του μυστηριου) as: "that it should be preached;" or from supplying, with Grotius and Estius (comp. Morus), της ειδοκιας αιτου with εικον., in neither of which cases would there be left any explanation of the genitive sense applicable to του πληρωματος τ. κ. Quite erroneous, lastly, is the view of Storr, Opusc. I. p. 155, who is followed by Meier, that εικονομα του πληρ. τ. κ. is administratio eorum quae restant temporum. For to take τ. πληρ. τ. κ. in the sense of religia tempora, i.e. novi socderis, is in the light of Gal. iv. 4, Mark i. 15, decidedly to misapprehend it.—ἀνακεφαλασσαθαι τα παντα εν το Χριστω] exegeetical infinitive, which gives information as to the actual contents of that εικονομα: (namely) again to gather up together, etc. Therein the arrangement designated by εικονομα
τ. πλ. τ. κ. was to consist. This connection is that which naturally suggests itself, and is more in keeping with the simple mode followed in the context of annexing the new portions of the discourse to what immediately precedes, than the connection with προεθετο (Zachariae, Flatt, and others), or with το μυστηρι. του Θελ. αιτου (Beza: Paul is explaining quid mysterii nomine significare voluerit; also Harless, comp.
Olschauen, Schmid, bibl. Theol. II. p. 347, and others). We may add that Beza, Piscator, and others have taken εις εικον.
τ. πλ. τ. κ. along with ἄνακφαλ. as one idea; but in that case the preceding ην προεθετο εν αιτω must appear quite superfluous and aimless, and εις εικονομ. κ.τ.λ., by being prefixed to ἀνακεφαλικωσαθαι, irrelevantly receives the main emphasis, which is not to be removed from ἀνακεφαλικωσαθαι — ἀνακεφαλικωσαθαι] κεφαλικον in the verb κεφαλικον means, as it does also in classical usage, chief thing, main point (see Wetstein, ad Rom. xiii. 9); hence κεφαλικον: summatim col·ligere, as in Thuc. iii. 67. 5, vi. 91. 6, viii. 53. 1; Quinctil. i. 6. Comp. συγκεφαλικωσαθαι, Xen. Cyr. viii. 1. 15; Polyb. iii. 1, 7, iv. 1. 9. Consequently ἀνακεφαλικον: summatim recol·ligere, which is said in Rom. xiii. 9 of that which has been previously expressed singulatim, in separate parts, but now is again gathered up in one main point, so that at Rom. l.c. ἐν τοιτω τῷ λόγῳ denotes that main point, in which the gathering up is contained. And here this main point of gathering up again, unifying all the parts, lies in Christ; hence the gathering up is not verbal, as in Rom. l.c., but real, as is distinctly apparent from the objects gathered up together, τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς τ.λ. It is to be observed withal, (1) that ἀνακεφαλικον does not designate Christ as κεφαλη—although He really is so (ver. 22)—so that it would be tantamount to ἵπτειν κεφαλη (Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Erasmus, Luther, Piscator, Calovius, Bengel, Michaelis, Zachariae, Koppe, Matthies, Meier, de Wette, and others), but as κεφαλικον, which is evident from the etymology; (2) that we are not to bring in, with Grotius and Hammond, the conception of scattered warriors, or, with Camerarius, that of an arithmetical sum (κεφαλικον, see Wetstein, l.c.), which must have been suggested by the context; (3) that the force of the middle is the less to be overlooked, inasmuch as an act of government on God's part is denoted: sibi summatim recol·ligere; (4) that we may not give up the meaning of ἀνα, iterum (Winer, de verbor. cum præcip. conj. in N. T. usu, III. p. 3 f.), which points back to a state in which no separation as yet existed (in opposition to Chrysostom, Castalio, and many others). This ἀνα has had its just force already recognised by the Peshito and Vulgate (instaurare), as well as by Tertull. de Monog. 5 (ad initium reciprocare), although κεφαλικον is overlooked by the former, and wrongly apprehended by the latter. See the more detailed discussion below.—

τὰ πάντα] is referred by many (see below) merely to intelligent beings, or to men, which, according to a well-known use of the neuter, would be in itself admissible (Gal. iii. 22), but would need to be suggested by the context. It is quite general: all created things and beings. Comp. vv. 22, 23. — τὰ ἐπὶ τοῖς οὐρανοῖς καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς] that which is on the heavens and that which is on the earth. ἐπὶ τοῖς οὐραν. (see the critical remarks) is so conceived of that the heavens are the stations at which the things concerned are to be found. Comp. the well-known ἐπὶ χθονί (Hom. II. iii. 195, al.); ἐπὶ τύλησθι (II. iii. 149); ἐπὶ τύργη (II. vi. 431). Even in the classical writers, we may add, prepositions occurring in close succession often vary their construction without any special design in it. See Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 1. 20. Comp. as to the local ἐπὶ with genitive and dative, e.g. Hom. II. i. 486. As regards the real sense, τὰ ἐπὶ τοῖς οὐραν. is not to be arbitrarily limited either to the spirits in heaven generally (Rückert, Meier), or to the angels (Chrysostom, Calvin, Cameron, Balduin, Grotius, Estius, Calovius, Bengel, Michaelis, Zachariae, Rosenmüller, Baumgarten-Crusius, and others), or to the blessed spirits of the pious men of the O. T. (Beza, Piscator, Boyd, Wolf, Moldenhauer, Flatt, and others), nor must we understand by it the Jews, and by τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς the Gentiles (Locke, Schoettgen, Baumgarten, Teller, Ernesti), as, indeed, Koppe was able to bring out of it all mankind by declaring heaven and earth to be a periphrasis for ἔσωμε γινομαι; but, entirely without restriction, all things and beings existent in the heavens and upon earth are meant, so that the preceding τὰ πάντα is specialized in its two main divisions. Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. iii. 18, quite arbitrarily thought of all events which should have come to pass on earth or in heaven, and which God gathers up, i.e. brings to their complete fulfilment, in Christ as in their goal. Comp. Chrys.: τὰ γὰρ διὰ μακροῦ χρόνου οἰκονομοῦμενα ἀνηκεφαλαίωστο ἐν Χριστῷ, τούτοις συνέτεμε. — But how far has God gathered together again all things, things heavenly and things earthly, in Christ? Before the entrance of sin all created beings and things were undividedly united under God's government; all things in the world were normally combined into organic unity for God's ends and in His service. But through sin this original union and harmony was broken, first of all in heaven, where a part of the angels sinned and fell away from God; 1 these formed, under Satan, the kingdom antagonistic to God, and upon earth brought about the fall of man (2 Cor. xi. 3), extended their sway farther and farther, and were even worshipped in the heathen idols (1 Cor. x. 20 f.). With the fall of man there came to an end also the normal state of the non-intelligent κτίσις (Rom. viii. 19 ff.); heaven and earth, which had become the scene of sin and of the demouiac kingdom (ii. 2, vi. 12), were destined by God to destruction, in order that one day a new heaven and a new earth—in which not sin any more, but moral righteousness shall dwell, and God shall be the all-determining power in all (1 Cor. xv. 28)—shall come imperishable (Rom. viii. 21) in its place (2 Pet. iii. 13). The redeeming work of Jesus Christ (comp. Col. i. 20) was designed to annul again this divided state in the universe, which had arisen through sin in heaven and upon earth, and to re-establish the unity of the kingdom of God in heaven and on earth; so that this gathering together again should rest on, and have its foundations in, Christ as the central point of union and support, without which it could not emerge. Before the Parousia, it is true, this ἀνακεφαλαίωσις is still but in course of development; for the devil is still with his demons ἐν τοῖς ἐποιεινοίς (vi. 12), is still fighting against the kingdom of God and holding sway over many; many men reject Christ, and the κτίσις longs after the renewal. But with the Parousia there sets in the full realization, which is the ἀποκατάστασις πάντων (Matt. xix. 28; Acts iii. 21; 2 Pet. iii. 10 f.); when all antichristian natures and powers shall be discarded out of heaven and earth, so that thereafter nothing in heaven or upon earth shall be excluded from this gathering together again. Comp. Photius in Oecumenius. Finally, the middle voice (sibi recolligere) has its warrant in the fact that God is the Sovereign (the head of Christ, 1 Cor. xi. 4 and iii. 23), who fulfils His will and aim by the gathering up again, etc.; so that, when the οἰκονομία, which is completed by the victory over all antichristian powers, He resumes even the dominion committed to the Son, and then God is the sole ruling principle (1 Cor. xv. 24, 28). Our passage is accordingly so framed as to receive its historically adequate elucidation from the N. T., and especially from Paul himself; and there is no reason for seeking to explain it from a later system of ideas, as Baur does (p. 424), who traces it to the underlying Gnostic idea, that all spiritual life which has issued from the supreme God must return to its original unity, and in that view the "affected" expression εἰς οἰκον. τ. πληρ. τ. καίρ. is held to convey a covert allusion to the Gnostic pleroma of aeons and its economy. See, on the other hand, Räbiger, Christol. Paulina, p. 55. The "genuinely Catholic consciousness" (Baur, Christenth. d. drei erst. Jahrh. p. 109) of the Epistle is just the genuinely apostolic one, necessarily rooted in Christ's own word and work. The person of Christ is not presented "under the point of view of the metaphysical necessity of the process of the self-realizing idea" (Baur, neutest. Theol. p. 264), but under that of its actual history, as this was accomplished, in accordance with the counsel of the Father, by the free obedience of the Lord.

1 For this falling away is the necessary presupposition for the Satanic seduction of our first parents, 1 John iii. 8-10; John viii. 44, where an originally evil nature of the devil (Frommann, Hilgenfeld) is not to be thought of; see Hahn, Theol. d. N. T. I. p. 819 f. On Jude 6 and 1 Tim. iii. 6, in which passages a reference has been wrongly found to the first fall in the angelic world, see Huther.

REMARK 1.—The illustration which Chrysostom has given for τά ἐπὶ τοὺς οἰκονομίας τ. τά ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, from the conception of a house repaired (ὡς ἂν περὶ οἰκίας τις ἔστω τὰ μὲν σαθρά τὰ διὸ ἱσχυρὰ ἱερεύς, ἀνθρώπως τὴν οἰκίαν... οὕτω καὶ ἵπτα αὐτὸν ὡς μίαν ἡγαγε κιριαλῆ), has been again employed by Harless, whose view of the passage (approved by Schenkel) is that the apostle speaks thus, "because the Lord and Creator of the whole body, of which heaven and earth are members, has in the restoration of the one member restored the whole body; and in this consists the greatest significance of the reconciliation, that it is not merely a restoration of the life of earth, but a bringing back of the harmony of the universe." But in this way the words of the apostle are made withal to suggest merely the doing away of the contrast between heaven and earth (or, according to Schenkel's tortuous metaphor, "between the heavenly glorified centre of creation and the earthly, sin-troubled circumference of creation"), and there is conceded to the τὰ ἵνα τοὺς οὐδανοὺς merely an indirect participation in the ἀνακτορεῖα τινί, and the direct de facto operation of the Messianic εἰκόνημα on the heavenly world is set aside—which appears the less admissible, inasmuch as τὰ ἵνα τ. ο. ὑπ. has the precedence. According to Paul, the heavenly world and the earthly world were to be affected, the former as immediately and properly as the latter, by the ἀνακτορεῖα τῶν πάνω τοῦ οὐρανοῦ; for the Satanic kingdom, for the destruction of which Christ came, and whose destruction was the condition of the ἀνακτορεῖα, has its seat in the regions of heaven (vi. 12; comp. Hahn, Theol. d. N. T. I. p. 343 ff.), and works in the ὕποτε τῆς ἀντιδίως (ii. 2) upon earth, so that in heaven and upon earth there exists no unity under God.

Remark 2.—The doctrine of Restoration, according to which those who have continued unbelieving and the demons shall still ultimately attain to salvation, altogether opposed as it is to the N. T., finds no support in our passage, where (in opposition to Origen, Samuel Crell, and others), on the contrary, in the ἀνακτορεῖς, there is obviously implied, from the general point of view occupied by Christian faith, the separation of unbelievers and of the demoniac powers, and their banishment into Gehenna; so that the ἀνακτορεῖα is not meant of every single individual, but of the whole aggregate of heavenly and earthly things, which, after the antichristian individuals have been separated and consigned to hell, shall again in the renewed world be combined into unity under God, as once, before the entrance of sin, all things in heaven and on earth were combined into such unity. Hence Olshausen is wrongly of opinion that our passage (as well as Col. i. 20) is to be brought into harmony with the general type of Scripture doctrine by laying stress in the infinitive ἀποκτεν. upon the design of God “which, in the instituting of a redemption endowed with infinite efficacy, aims at the restoration of universal harmony, at the bringing back of all that is lost.” Apart from the fact that ἀποκτεν. is only an epegegetical infinitive (see above), it is altogether opposed to Scripture to assume that the aim in redemption is the restoration of all that is lost, even of the devils. For those passages as to the universality of redemption, and sayings like 1 Pet. iv. 6, Phil. ii. 10 f., leave the constant teaching of the N. T. concerning everlasting perdition entirely untouched (comp. on Rom. v. 18, xi. 32; Phil. ii. 10); and as regards the devils, the design of God in the economy of redemption was to vanquish them (1 John iii. 8, and elsewhere; 1 Cor. xv. 24 f.), and to deliver them up to the penalties already prepared for them of everlasting pain in hell (Matt. xxv. 41; Jude 6; 2 Pet. ii. 4; Rev. xx. 1 f.; comp. Bertholdt, Christol. p. 223). The restoration of the devils, as an impossibility in the case of spirits radically opposed to God, is not in the whole N. T. so much as thought of. The prince of this world is only judged.

Remark 3.—Those who understand ῥά ἐπὶ τοῖς υἱοῖς especially of the angels (see above) have been driven—inasmuch as these pure spirits have no need of redemption in the proper sense—to unbiblical shifts, such as the view of Calvin (comp. Boyd): that the angels before the redemption were not extra periculum, but had through Christ attained "primum ut perfecte et solide adhaereant Deo, deinde ut perpetuum statum retineant" (of all which the N. T. teaches nothing!); or that of Grotius: "antea inter angelos factiones erant et studia pro populis (Dan. x. 13) . . . ea sustulit Christus, rex factus etiam angelorum, unum ex tot populis sibi populum colligens;" or that of Augustine and Zeger, that the number of the angels, which had been diminished by the fall of some, was completed again by the elect from among men. Baur (comp. Zanchius), out of keeping with the notion of the ἀναξιφαλαίωσις, thought of the knowledge (iii. 10) and bliss (Luke xv. 10) of the angels as heightened by redemption. Others again (Chrysostom on Col. i. 20; Theophylact, Anselm, Cornelius a Lapide, Hunnius, Calovius, Bengel, et al.) have found the ἀναξιφαλαίωσις in the fact that the separation which sin had occasioned between the angels and sinful men was done away.¹ So also in substance Rückert: "Originally and according to the will of God the whole world of spirits was to be one, . . . through like love and obedience towards the one God. . . . Sin did away with this relation, mankind became separated from God; hence also of necessity the bond was broken, which linked them to the higher world of spirits. . . . Christ . . . is to unite mankind to Himself by a sacred bond, and thereby to bring them back to God, and by that very act also . . . to do away with the breach; all is again to become one." Comp. Meier, as also Bähr on Col. i. 20. But the apostle is in fact speaking of the reuniting not of the heavenly with the earthly, but of the heavenly and the earthly (comp. Remark 1); moreover, according to this explanation, the ἀναξιφαλαίωσις of the heavenly spirits with men would be the consequence of the expiation made for men by Christ, and thus Paul must logically have written: ῥά ἐπὶ τοῖς γῆς x. ῥά ἐπὶ τοῖς υἱοῖς.

Ver. 11. Ἔν αὐτῷ] resumes with emphasis the ἐν Χριστῷ

(Herm. ad Vigcr. pp. 734, 735; Bernhardy, p. 289 f.), in order to attach thereto the following relative clause (Kühner, II. § 630, 5); hence before ἐν αὐτῷ a comma is to be placed, and after it not a full stop, but only a comma (so, too, Lachmann, Tischendorf). Comp. on Col. i. 20. — ἐν δὲ καὶ ἐκληρώθημεν] in whom (is the causal basis, that) we have also obtained the inheritance. καὶ, in the sense of also actually introduces the accomplishment corresponding to the preparation (which was expressed by ἥν προέθετο ἐν αὐτῷ εἰς οἰκονομίαν κ.τ.λ.). See Hartung, Partikel. I. p.132; Klotz, ad Devar. 636 f.; Baemlein, Partik. 152. It has reference to the thing, not to the persons, since otherwise it must have run καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐκλήρ., as in ver. 13; hence the translation of the Vulgate: "in quo etiam nos," etc., and others (including Erasmus, Paraphr., and Rosenmüller), is incorrect. The subject is not the Jewish Christians (Grotius, Estius, Wetstein, Rosenmüller, Meier, Harless, Schenkel, and others), because there is no antithesis of ἡμεῖς and ὑμεῖς, ver. 13, but the Christians in general. ἐκληρώθημεν means: we were made partakers of the κλήρος (Acts xxvi. 18 ; Col. i. 12), that is, of the possession of the Messianic kingdom, which before the Parousia is an ideal possession (ver. 14; Rom. viii. 24), and thereafter a real one. The expression itself is to be explained in accordance with the ancient theocratic idea of the ἐκπλήρωσις (Deut. iv. 20, ix. 26, 29), which has been transferred from its original Palestinian reference (Matt. v. 5) to the kingdom of the Messiah, and thus raised to its higher Christian meaning (see on Gal. iii. 18); and the passive form of this word, which is not met with elsewhere in the N. T., is quite like φθονοῦμαι, διακονοῦμαι, πιστεύομαι (see on Gal. iv. 20), since we find κληροῦν τινὶ used (Pind. Ol. viii. 19; Thuc. vi. 42). Others (Vulgate, Ambrosiaster, Chrysostom, Erasmus, Estius, de Wette, and Bleek) have insisted on the significance of being chosen by lot (1 Sam. xiv. 41, 42; Herod. i. 94; Polyb. vi. 38. 2; Eurip. Ion. 416, al.), and have found as the reason for the use of the expression: "quia in ipsis electis nulla est causa, cur eligantur prae aliis" (Estius), in which case, however, the conception of the accidental is held as excluded by the following προορισθ. κ.τ.λ. (see Chrysostom and Estius); but it may be urged against this view that,
CHAP. I. 12.

According to Paul, it is God's gracious will alone that determines the ἐκλογή (ver. 5; Rom. ix. 16 ff.), not a θεία τύχη, which would be implied in the ἐκλήρωσις. Plato, Legg. vi. p. 759 C: κληρονομοῦν οὕτως τῇ θείᾳ τύχῃ ἀποδεδώντα. — προορισθέντες κ.τ.λ.] predestined, namely, to the κλῆρος, according to the purpose of Him, who worketh all things according to the counsel of His will. The words are not to be placed within a parenthesis, and τὰ πάντα is not to be limited to what pertains to the economy of salvation (Piscator, Grotius), but God is designated as the all-working (of whom, consequently, the circumstances of the Messianic salvation can least of all be independent). Comp. πανεργετὴς Ζεύς, Aesch. Ag. 1486. But, as God is the all-working, so is His decree the παιδοκρατορικόν βούλημα, Clem. Cor. I. 8. — As to the distinction between βουλή and θέλημα, comp. on Matt. i. 19. The former is the deliberate self-determination, the latter the activity of the will in general.

Ver. 12. Causa finalis of the predestination to the Messianic κλῆρος:1 in order that we might redound to the praise of His glory (actually, by our Messianic κληρονομία), we who have beforehand placed our hope on Christ,—we Jewish-Christians, to whom Christ even before His appearing was the object of their hope. Only now, namely, from εἰς τὸ οὖν ἡμᾶς onward, does Paul divide the subject of ἐκλογήθη and προορισθέντες, which embraced the Christians generally, into its two constituent parts, the Jewish-Christians, whom he characterizes by ἡμᾶς . . . τούς προσαλισμότας ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, and the Gentile-Christians, whose destination to the same final aim,—namely, εἰς τὸ οὖν εἰς ἐπαινοῦν κ.τ.λ.—he dwells on afterwards in vv. 13, 14 (passing over to them by ἐν φιλόκαι ὑμεῖς), and hence ver. 14 concludes with a repetition of εἰς ἐπαινοῦν τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ.2 — ἡμᾶς] has emphasis, preparing the way for the subsequent introduction of καὶ ὑμεῖς. — τοὺς προσαλισμότας] quippe qui, etc.

1 Many others, including Flatt, Meier, Harless, have attached εἰς τὸ οὖν to προορισθέντες (predestined, to be, etc.); but this is not only not in keeping with the analogous εἰς ἐπαινοῦν κ.τ.λ.; vv. 6 and 14, but also inappropriate, because προορισθέντες did not yet refer specially to the Jewish-Christians.

2 Thus what Paul dwells on in vv. 11–14 may be summarized thus: "In Christ we have really become partakers of the Messianic salvation, to which we were predestined by God, in order that we Jewish-Christians, and also you Gentile-Christians, should redound to the praise of His glory."
58 THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

On προελπίζεων, to hope before, comp. Poseidippus in Athen. ix. p. 377 C. The προ does not transfer the hoping into the praescientia Dei (Jerome), nor has it a reference to the later hoping of the Gentiles (Beza, Piscator, Grotius, Boyd, Estius, Bengel, Michaelis, and others), since the hoping of the Gentiles is not subsequently expressed; nor is προηλπ. equivalent to the simple form (Morus, Bretschneider), which is not the case of any verb with προ; but it applies to the fact that the Jews had the Old Testament prophecies, and hence already before Christ set their hope upon the Messiah (Rom. iii. 2, ix. 4; Acts iii. 25, xxvi. 6 f., 22, xxviii. 20, al.). So, correctly, Zöckler takes it, de vi ac notione vocab. ἔπις, 1856, p. 32 f. But de Wette, who (comp. Rückert, Holzhausen, Matthies, Bleek) denies the division — also unnoticed by Chrysostom and his successors — into Jewish and Gentile Christians (understanding ἡμῶς, generally, of the Christians, and ὑμεῖς, ver. 13, of the readers), takes προ in προηλπ. as: before the Parousia. Comp. Theophylact: πριν ἡ ἐπιστήμη ὁ μέλλων αἰῶν. But in this way the προ would be without significance, while, as taken by us, it is characteristic. It is incorrect, too, that ver. 13 affirms nothing peculiar of the Gentile-Christians. As standing in contrast to the προηλπικότας εἶναι of the Jewish-Christians, what is said in ver. 13 serves precisely to characterize the Gentile-Christians. They, without having entertained that previous hope (ii. 12), have heard, believed, etc. — The usual construction, suggested of itself by the very sequence of the words, has been — after the example of Morus, Koppe, ed. 1, Flatt, and Matthies — departed from by Harless, followed by Olshausen, inasmuch as he regards εἰς ἐπαίνον δόξης αὐτοῦ as an inserted clause [sicismum]: "we who were predestined, etc., to be those — to the praise of His glory — who already before hoped in Christ." In this way Paul would point to the reason, why the κληρος had first been assigned to the Jews. But (1) in that case ἐκληρῶθαι and προορίσθαι must already have applied specially to the Jewish-Christians, which no reader could guess and Paul, in order to his writing intelligibly, must have indicated, by putting it in some such way as: ἐν ὧν ἡμεῖς ἐκληρωθημένεν, οἱ προορισθέντες ... εἰς τὸ εἶναι ... τοὺς προηλπικότας κ.τ.λ. As the passage actually stands, the reader could find the Jewish-Christians designated only at ver. 12, not previously.

(2) εἰς ἡμᾶς εἰς ἡμᾶς δόξας αὐτοῦ has, in accordance with the context (see ver. 14; comp. also ver. 6), by no means the character of an incidental insertion, but the stress of defining the ultimate aim, and that not in respect of a pre-Christian state, but of the Christian one. This, however, only becomes suitably felt, when we read εἰς τὸ εἴλαινα εἰς εἴλαινα δόξας αὐτοῦ together. (3) The predestination of God (προορισθέντες) is in the connection related not to a pre-Christian state, such as, according to Harless, the εἴλαινα προηλπικότας ἐν τ. Χριστῷ would be, but to the realization of the Messianic blessedness (ver. 5). Comp. Rom. viii. 29; 1 Cor. ii. 7; as also Acts iv. 28. Lastly, (4) the objections taken by Harless to the usual connection of the words are not tenable. For (a) the symmetry of the two corresponding sentences in form and thought depends on the fact that in the case of both sections, the Jewish and the Gentile Christians, the glorifying of God is brought into prominence as the final aim of their attaining to salvation, and hence ver. 14 also closes with εἰς ἡμᾶς τ. δόξας αὐτοῦ. (b) The repeated mention of the predestination on God's part to salvation is solemn, not redundant; and the less so, inasmuch as the description of God as τὰ πάντα ἐνεργοῦντος is added. (c) The objection that we cannot tell why the apostle brings in that predestination only with regard to the προηλπικότες, while yet it manifestly applies also to the ἀκούσαντες, is based on the misunderstanding, according to which ἐκληρώθ. and προορισθ. are already restricted to the Jewish-Christians; for the subject of these words is still the Christians without distinction,—Jewish and Gentile Christians,—so that the predestination of those and these is asserted. It is only at ver. 12 that the division of the subject begins, which is continued in

Ver. 13, so that ἐν φ Καὶ ὑμεῖς leads over to the second constituent element (you Gentile-Christians).—As regards the construction, it is regarded by Wolf, Bengel, Morus, and others (comp. already Jerome), including Rückert, Matthies, Holzhausen, de Wette, Bleek, Bisping, as anacolutic; the ἐν φ of the second half of the verse is held to resume the first. Incorrectly, since in the resumption καὶ ὑμεῖς would have been essential. As Paul has written the passage (καὶ πιστεύσατε), there is added to what has previously been affirmed of the ὑμεῖς (ἀκούσαντες), a new affirmation; hence ἐν δὲ κ. πιστ. κ.τ.λ. is the continuation, not the resumption of the discourse. The verb after ἐν δὲ κ. ὑμεῖς is therefore to be supplied; not, however, ἤλπικατε (Erasmus in his version, Beza, Castalio, Calvin, Estius, and others), since in fact the preceding προηλπικότας—which, besides, was only an appositional constituent element of the discourse—would yield προηλπικατε, which is inapplicable to the Gentile-Christians; nor yet ἐκληροδότητε (Erasmus, Paraphr.; Piscator, Zanchius, Cornelius a Lapide, Boyd, Vorstius, Zachariae, Koppe, and others, including Meier, Harless, Olshausen), since ἐκληροδότητε, ver. 11, already embraced the Jewish and Gentile Christians, and with εἰς τὸ εἶναι ἡμᾶς κ.τ.λ. a new portion of the development sets in. The right course is merely to supply mentally the substantive verb, in accordance with the current expression ἐν Χριστῷ εἶναι, to belong to Christ as the element of life, in which one exists. Hence: in whom also ye are. Thus Paul paves the way for his transition to the Gentile-Christians, in order, after first specifying how it was that they had become such (vv. 13, 14), finally to assert of them also the εἰς ἐπανω τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ (ver. 14). — ἀκοῦσαντες τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας] after ye have heard the word (the preaching) of the truth; for after this hearing there set in with them the ἐν Χριστῷ εἶναι. The truth κατ' ἔσοχύν is the contents of the λόγος. But a contrast to the types and shadows of the O. T. (Chrysostom), or to heathen error (Cornelius a Lapide, Baumgarten; Grotius thinks of both), is not implied in the context. Comp. Col. i. 5; 2 Tim. ii. 15. — τὸ εὐαγγ. τ. σωτηρ. ὑμ.] descriptive apposition to λόγος τῆς ἀληθ. The genitive here also denotes the contents; that which is made known in the gospel is the Messianic salvation. Harless takes both genitives as genitives appositionis, inasmuch as the gospel is the truth and the σωτηρία. The gospel, however, is not the salvation, but an exertion of the power of God, which leads to salvation (Rom. i. 16; 1 Cor. i. 18); the analogous combinations, too, of τὸ εὐαγγ. with a genit. abstract., as τὸ εὐαγγ. τῆς χάριτος τ. Θεοῦ (Acts xx. 24), τῆς εἰρήνης (Eph. vi. 15), τῆς βασιλείας, are opposed to the assumption of a genit. apposit. Comp. on Mark i. 1. Finally, the context also, by ἀκούσαντες and πιστεύσαντες, points not to what the doctrine is, but to what it proclaims. Comp. Rom. x. 14. — ἐν φ Καὶ πιστεύσαντες κ.τ.λ.] A further stage of the setting forth how they became what they were, in order to reach its goal εἰς ἑπαύνυν τῆς δόξης αὐτῶν, ver. 14. Precisely with regard to the Gentile-Christians, who had previously been aloof from all theocratic connection (νοὶ προηπικάτοις ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ), the apostle feels himself impelled not to be content with the simple “in whom also ye are, after ye have heard the gospel,” but specially to bring into relief the sealing of the Holy Spirit. — ἐν φ] is referred not merely by those who regard it as resumptive (see above), but also by many others with Luther (including Harless, Meier, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, Schenkell), to Christ; but why should we pass over the nearest antecedent? The καὶ finds its reference, agreeably to the context, in the accession of the faith to the hearing (Rom. x. 14; 1 Cor. xv. 1). Hence ἐν φ is to be referred, with Castalio, Calvin, Beza, Erasmus Schmid, and others (comp. Erasmus, Paraphr.), to τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, and to be joined, with Castalio, to πιστεύσαντες, not to ἐσφαγίοσθ. (as usually), according to which πιστεύσας would be superfluous, and the periodic flow of the discourse would be injuriously affected. Hence: in which ye having become believers, were sealed through the Holy Spirit. As to πιστεύσων ἐν (Mark i. 15), see on Gal. iii. 26. — πιστεύσαντες] is not to be taken, with Harless, as contemporaneous with ἐσφαγίοσθ. (see on vv. 5, 9); but it contains that which was prior to the σφραγίζεσθαι. The order of conversion was: hearing, faith, baptism, reception of the Spirit. See Acts

1 If φ belongs to ἐσφαγίοσθ., we must, in the event of φ applying to the Gospel, explain: “by means of which ye also, after ye became believers (or ye, after ye also became believers), were sealed.” Comp. Beza. But if φ is to apply to Christ, the sense would be: “in whom (being) ye also, after ye became believers (or: ye, after ye also became believers), were sealed.” How utterly superfluous πιστεύσας is in either case, will be at once felt. Harless regards φ as more precisely defined by τῷ πνεύματι, inasmuch as the Spirit of God is also the Spirit of Christ (Rom. viii. 9; 2 Cor. iii. 17; Gal. iv. 6). But even thus πιστεύσας remains unnecessary, since φ surely expresses the already existing spiritual union with Christ.
ii. 37, viii. 12, 17, xix. 5, 6; Rom. vi. 3, 4; Tit. iii. 5 f.; Gal. iii. 2, iv. 6. Certainly even the becoming a believer is not the work of human self-determination (see Acts xvi. 14; Phil. i. 29; Rom. xii. 3 relates to the measure of faith of the baptized); yet this divine operation is only preparatory, and the effusion of the Spirit, properly so called, ensued only after baptism: hence water and Spirit (John iii. 5). — ἐσφαγίσθησαν were sealed, i.e. confirmed, namely, as κληρονόμοι of the Messianic kingdom. See what follows. Comp. iv. 30, and see on 2 Cor. i. 22; John iii. 33. This sealing is the indubitable guarantee of the future Messianic salvation received in one's own consciousness (Rom. viii. 16) through the Holy Spirit, not the attestation before others (δόστε εἶναι δήλον, ὅτι Θεῷ ἔστε λάχος κ. κλήρος, Theophylact; comp. Chrysostom, Cornelius a Lapide, Flatt, Holzhausen, and others). An allusion has been arbitrarily found in ὕπατον to circumcision (Rom. iv. 11), or to the στύματα of heathen ceremonies (Grotius assumes both: "non extra signata catis in cute, quomodo Judaeci circumcisi et Graecorum idolorum punctis notati"), nay, even to the σφαγίς Dianae, with which those initiated into her mysteries were marked (Amelius; comp. note on Gal. vi. 17). — τῷ πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελ. Dativus instrumentalis, and τῆς ἐπαγγελ. is genitivus qualitatis, denoting the promise as characteristic of the Holy Spirit, for He is, in fact, the Spirit promised in the O. T. (Acts ii. 16 ff.; Joel iii. 1-5; Zech. xii. 10; Isa. xxxii. 15, xliv. 3; Ezek. xxxvi. 26 f., xxxix. 29. Comp. Luke xxiv. 49; Acts i. 4; Gal. iii. 14). Others (Calvin, Beza, Castalio, Piscator; and as early as Chrysostom and Theophylact, alongside of the former correct view): the Spirit, who confirms the promise (of salvation). But how wholly imported, since in πνεῦμα itself there is implied nothing at all of the notion of confirmation! No, the Old Testament promise belonged to the Spirit; He is specifically the Spirit of promise, and by that very fact He became for the recipients the sealing of Messianic blessedness. — τῷ ἀγγέλῳ is not added accidentally, nor yet because the sanctification of the Spirit would be the confirmatory element (Pelagius, 1 As to the single instance of the effusion of the Spirit before baptism, see on Acts x. 44.
Lombard), for in τῷ ἁγίῳ there is implied the quality, not the effect of the Spirit; but Paul desires to bring out very emphatically and solemnly that, by which the σφραγίζεσθαι has been accomplished; hence he says, with corresponding pathos: τῷ πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῷ ἁγίῳ. We may add that we are not to think, with Grotius, Estius, and others, of the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, since, in fact, the ὑμεῖς generally are the σφραγισθέντες, but rather of the outpouring of the Spirit, which all experienced after their baptism (Acts ii. 38; Gal. iii. 2 ff.). See also ver. 14.— According to Schwegler in Zeller's Jahrb. 1844, p. 383, the πνεῦμα τῆς ἐπαγγελ. is to be held as pointing to the later period, to which the doctrine of the Paraclete in the (not genuine) Gospel of John belongs. But comp. Gal. iii. 14.

Ver. 14. "Ος ἐστιν ἄῤῥαβὼν τῆς κληρονομίας ἡμ.] stands in significant relation (as affording more precise information) to ἐσφραγίσθητε: who is earnest of our inheritance; for in the reception of the Spirit the recipients have obtained the guarantee—as one receives earnest-money as a guarantee of future payment in full—that they shall become actually partakers of the Messianic blessedness (comp. Rom. viii. 15–17; Gal. iv. 6, 7). ὁ, applying to the πνεῦμα, not to Christ, agrees in gender with ἄῤῥαβὼν. See Herm. ad Viger. p. 708; Heindorf, ad Phaedr. p. 279; Buttm. neut. Gr. p. 241 [E. T. 281]. As to the επεξεργατική relative, see Nägelsb. on Hom. Ilias, ed. 3, p. 3. As to ἄῤῥαβὼν, see on 2 Cor. i. 22.— εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποίησεως unto the redemption, etc., is likewise (comp. also iv. 30) the causa finalis of ἐσφραγίσθητε κ.τ.λ., consequently that, to which the purpose of God was directed, when ye were sealed. Comp. ver. 10. Others connect it with ὃς ἐστιν ... ἡμῶν (Estius, Flatt, Rückert, Schenkel, Bleek, al.), in which case εἰς is taken by some likewise in a telic sense, by others as usque ad (the latter at variance with the parallel εἰς which follows). But the more precise definition thus resulting would in fact be, after τ. κληρον. ἡμ., quite self-evident and unnecessary.—The ἀπολύτρωσις is here—in accordance with the whole connection, and because the περιποίησις (see below) is the subject which experiences the ἀπολύτρωσις—the final consummation of the redemption effected by the λύτρον of Christ.
(ver. 7) at the Parousia (Luke xxi. 28), when suffering, sin, and death are wholly done away, and in the glorifying (resurrection, or relative transformation) of the body there sets in the δόξα of the children of God, and the in all-determining dominion of God (1 Cor. xv. 28). See Rom. viii. 18–23; 1 Cor. xv. 54 ff. Comp. Eph. iv. 30. Beza aptly terms this final definitive redemption ἀπολύτρωσιν ἐλευθερώσεως. — The περιποίησις αὑτοῦ (for αὑτοῦ at the end does not apply, as it is usually referred, merely to τῆς δόξης, but also to τῆς περιποίησις, whereby the latter obtains its definite character, and the discourse gains in vividness and energy) is the acquisition of God, i.e. the people acquired by God for His possession, by which is here meant the whole body of Christians, the true people of God, acquired by God as His property by means of the redeeming work of Christ. Comp. 1 Pet. ii. 9; as also Acts xx. 28, where the Christian community is presented as the acquisition of Christ (comp. Tit. ii. 14). The expression quite corresponds to the Hebrew יְהֹוָֹת, by which the people of Israel is designated as the sacred peculium Dei, and opposed to the Gentiles. See Ex. xix. 5; Deut. vii. 6, xiv. 2, xxvi. 18 f.; Ps. cxxxv. 4. The LXX. too, though usually expressing the notion of ἀναπαύειν by περιποίησις, translate it, Mal. iii. 17, by περιποίησις. Comp. also Isa. xliii. 21: λαὸν μου δὲ περιποιήσαμεν (Ῥωμαϊκ). κ.τ.λ. The objection to this view (which is followed, after the Peshito and Oecumenius, by Erasmus, Calvin, Grotius, and most expositors, including Flatt, Rücker, Meier, Harless, Olshausen, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Schenkel), that περιποίησις never in itself, without defining addition, signifies the people of God (see specially Köppe), entirely disappears when we take in the αἰτοῦ: “unto redemption of His acquired possession, unto the praise of His glory.” Others, retaining likewise the signification of acquired possession, explained it in the neuter sense, like Calovius (comp. already Bugenhagen): “plena fruitio redemptionis haereditatis nobis acquisitae.” Comp. Matthies: “unto the redeeming of the promised glorious possession.” But how can it be said of the salvation acquired for us, that it is redeemed? And the plena fruitio is imported. Beza, wrongly denying the concrete use of περιπόθεσις, insists upon the abstract notion of vindicatio, assertio, and specifies as the meaning: "dum in liberationem vindicemur." But this would need to be expressed by εἰς περιπόθεσιν τῆς ἀπολύτρωσεως (comp. 1 Thess. v. 9; 2 Thess. ii. 14). The word is also taken in the abstract sense by those who understand it as preservation, conservatio (Heb. x. 39; 2 Chron. xiv. 13; Test. XII. Patr. p. 633; Plat. Defìn. p. 415 C; Wetst. II. p. 424), like Bengel, Bos ("redemtio, quae salutem et conservationem afferit"), Bretschneider ("redemtio, qua vitae aeternae servamur"), Holzhausen (who, following Homberg, arbitrarily assumes ἀπολ. τῆς περιπ. to stand for ἀπολ. καὶ περιπ.). But against these explanations it may be decisively urged that in the case of περιπόθεσις the thought: unto everlasting life, or the like, is added arbitrarily, and that the assumed genitive relation does not arise out of the notion of ἀπολύτρωσις, according to which the genitive is either the subject, which is redeemed (Luke xxi. 28; Rom. viii. 23), or expresses that, from which one becomes free (Heb. ix. 15; Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 178). To the erroneous attempts at explanation belongs also that (Vatablus, Koppe) which takes τῆς περιπόθεσεως for τῆν περιποθεύσαν, the redemption acquired for us, or (so Bleek) the redemption, which is to become our possession.¹— εἰς ἐπαινον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ] a climactic parallel to what goes before, containing as it does the final aim of God in the sealing with the Holy Spirit. And thus has Paul accordingly reached what he had in view in the joining on of ἐν δό καὶ ἵμεῖς, ver. 13, namely, the assigning to the Gentile-Christians the same ultimate destination, which he has in ver. 12 predicated of the Jewish-Christians. — The reference of αὐτοῦ to God, as in vv. 12, 6 (not, with Estius and Hofmann, to Christ), flows from ἐσφραγιζ., which is God's act. See van Hengel, Annot. p. 198 ff. The glory of God is the final aim of the whole unfolding of salvation.

Ver. 15.² Only now, after the general ascription of praise to God for the Christian economy of salvation, which had since ver. 3 flowed forth from him in an enraptured stream,

does Paul reach that, with which he is wont on other occasions at once to begin—the thanksgiving to God for the Christian position of the readers, and intercession for them. — διὰ τοῦτο has reference to vv. 13, 14: because this is the case, that ye too are in Christ and have been sealed with the Holy Spirit, etc. See already Theophylact. There is no reason for going farther back and referring it to the whole preceding development from ver. 3 onward (Harless, Winzer, Schenkel, and others, following Oecumenius), since thanksgiving and intercession have reference to the readers, and it is only ver. 13 that has led over to the latter. — κἀγὼ I also; for Paul knows that by his exercise of prayer, ver. 16, he is co-operating with the readers. Comp. on Col. i. 9.— ἀνωτέρας does not serve to prove that the Epistle could not have been written to the Ephesians, or not to them alone (see Introd. § 1); Grotius in fact has already aptly remarked: “Loquitur autem apostolus de profectu evangelii apud Ephesios, ex quo ipse ab illis discesserat.” Comp. Winzer, p. 5; Wiggers in the Stud. u. Krit. 1841, p. 430 f.; Wieseler, p. 445; and already Theodoret in loc. No doubt Olshausen (comp. Bleek) maintains that Paul so expresses himself as to make it apparent that with a great proportion of his readers he was not personally acquainted, appealing to Col. i. 4. But may he not here, as at Philem. 5, have heard respecting those who were known to him, what at Col. i. 4 he has heard respecting those who were previously unknown to him? — τὴν καθ’ ὑμᾶς πίστιν fidem, quae ad vos pertinet, i.e. vestram fidem. The difference between ἡ καθ’ ὑμᾶς πίστις and ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν lies only in the form of conception, not in the thing itself. Yet the mode of expression, not occurring elsewhere in the letters of the apostle, belongs to the peculiar phenomena of our Epistle. The assertion of Harless, that it denotes the faith of the readers objectively, as in itself a thing to be found among them, while ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν denotes it subjectively, according to its individual character in each one (comp. Matthies and Schenkel), is the less capable of proof, in proportion to the prevalent use among the later Greeks of the periphrasis of the genitival relation by

Comp. Rom. i. 9; 1 Thess. i. 2; Phil. i. 3; Philem. 4. What Paul makes mention of is learned from the context, which furnishes not merely ὑμῶν (Elz.; see the critical remarks), but a more precise definition, namely: of what he has heard concerning the faith and love of the readers, and for which he gives thanks on their account. This μυείαν ποιούμενος κ.τ.λ., however, is not superfluous, and after εὐχαριστῶν ὑπὲρ ὑμ. self-evident; but it serves, through the close joining on to it of the following ὅνα κ.τ.λ. (after ver. 16 only a comma is to be placed), as a means of leading over from the thanksgiving to the intercession connected with it, and is thereby accounted for. — ἑνὶ of the prevailing relations and circumstances, in or under which anything takes place. See on Rom. i. 10.
Ver. 17. "Iva ó Θεός κ.τ.λ.] contains the design cherished by Paul in the μνειαν...προσευχή μου: in order that God might give you, etc. In this expressed design is implied the intercessory tenor of the μνειαν τουιχθας; hence Iva is not here to be deprived of its notion of design, nor is it to be explained (Harless; comp. Rückert, Olshausen, Winer, and others) by supplying before it the conception of "praying." The apostle would say that what he has heard of their faith, etc., induces him to unceasing thanksgiving on their behalf, while he makes mention of it in his prayers to the end that God might give them, etc. The telic δοῦνας, Philem. 6, stands in another connection than the Iva in our passage. See on Philem. l.c. The optative δολη (on this form of later Greek instead of δολή, see Butt- mann, I. p. 507; Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 346) is used, because the design is thought of as subjective conception and expectation, the realization of which is dependent entirely upon the will of God, and consequently belongs only to the category of what is wished and possible. On Iva with an optative after the present or future, see, generally, Hermann, ad Soph. El. 57; ad Α. 1217; Reisig, ad Oed. Ch. p. 168 ff.; Bernhardy, p. 407; and especially Klotz, ad Devar. p. 622 ff. — ο Θεός τοῦ κυρίου ἡμ. Ἰ. Χ.] for God has sent Christ—who, having before all time proceeded from His essential nature (Col. i. 15), was the creative organ of the Father—forth in the fulness of the time in pursuance of His decree, to which the Son was obedient (Phil. ii. 8), has given Him up to death, raised and exalted Him, and is continually the Head of Christ (1 Cor. xi. 3), who even as σινθρό νος of the Father is subordinate to the Father (Rom. viii. 34), and finally will give back to God the dominion which God has given to Him (1 Cor. xv. 27, 28). In the consciousness of His relation of dependence on God, Christ Himself calls the Father Θεός μου, John xx. 17; Matt. xxvii. 46. Comp. Col. ii. 2, Lachm. The opinion extorted in the anti-Arian interest from the Fathers (see Suicer, Thes. I. 1 Lachmann and Rückert (as also Fritzche, ad Rom. III. p. 280) write ἦν with an iota subscriptum under η, so that it would thus be the Ionic subjunctive (Od. xii. 216). But often as the aorist subjunctive of ἔμαθε occurs in the N. T., this Homeric form never presents itself. The form ἦν in B is a manifest emendation.
p. 944), that ὁ Θεὸς τοῦ κυρ. applies to Christ's human nature, and ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης to the divine (δόξαν γὰρ τῆν θελαν φύσιν ὀνόμασεν! Theodoret and Oecumenius; comp. even Bengel and Bisping), is to be mentioned only as matter of history, as are also the forced construction, to which Menochius and Vatablus were induced by a like prejudice to resort, that Θεὸς and τῆς δόξης are to be taken together (τοῦ κυρίου . . . πατὴρ being inserted), and the at least more skilful turn of Estius: "Deus, qui est Domini nostri Jesu Christi pater gloriosus." — ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης] the Father (namely, of Christians) to whom the glory (the majesty κατ᾽ ἐξοχήν) belongs. See on Acts vii. 2, and 1 Cor. ii. 8. The resolution into an adjective pater gloriosus (Beza, Calvin, Estius, Michaelis, and others) is in itself arbitrary, does not exhaust the eminent sense of ἡ δόξα, and fails to perceive the oratorical force (Hermann, ad Viger. p. 887) of the substantival designation. Others take πατὴρ in the derived sense of auctor (Erasm. Paraphr.; Bucer, Cornelius a Lapide, Grotius, Wolf, and others, including Holzhausen and Olshausen), so that God is designated as He, from whom the glory of the Christians (according to Grotius: of Christ and the Christians) proceeds. Certainly the idea of auctor may be expressed, specially in the more elevated style, by πατὴρ (Job xxxviii. 28; Jas. i. 17, where the φῶτα are personified; Pind. Pyth. iv. 313, where Orpheus is called ἀοιδᾶν πατὴρ; and see Ast, Lex Plat. III. p. 66; Jacobs, ad Ach. Tat. p. 392 f.; John viii. 44 is not here applicable); but as this is nowhere else done by Paul, so here he has no reason for resorting to such an usage, to which besides the analogous expressions, Θεὸς τῆς δόξης (Ps. xxix. 3; Acts vii. 2), βασιλεύς τῆς δόξης (Ps. xxiv. 7), κύριος τῆς δόξης (1 Cor. ii. 8), Χερουβίμ δόξης (Heb. ix. 5), are opposed. We may add, that the description of God by ὁ Θεὸς . . . δόξης stands in appropriate relation to the design of the intercession; for of the God of Christ and Father of glory it is to be expected that He will do that, which the cause of Christ demands, and which serves to the manifestation of His own glory. Oecumenius rightly remarks: καὶ πρὸς τὸ προκείμενον ὀνομάζει τὸν Θεὸν.—πνεῦμα σοφίας κ. ἀποκαλύψ.] The Holy Spirit, too (for it is not the human spirit that is here meant, as Michaelis, Rückert, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Bleek would take it \(^1\), Paul is wont to characterize \(πρὸς \tauὸ \ προκεῖμενον\), Rom. viii. 2, 15; 2 Cor. iv. 13; Gal. vi. 1. Comp. 2 Tim. i. 7. Here: the Spirit who works wisdom and gives revelation (1 Cor. ii. 10). The latter is a greater result of the work of the Spirit,\(^2\) in accordance with which He not only by His enlightening operation furnishes wisdom (\(γνῶσις \ θείων \ κ. \ ἀνθρωπίνων \ πραγμάτων \ καὶ \ τὸν \ τούτων \ αἰτίῶν\), 4 Macc. i. 16; conceived of, however, by Paul in reference to the Christian economy of salvation, comp. ver. 8), but further, as the organ of God, effects also special revelations of divine saving truths and purposes not otherwise known. Harless regards \(κ. \ ἀποκάλλθέναι\) as the objective medium, which brought about the state of \(σοφία\), so that the character of the \(σοφία\) is more precisely defined by \(κ. \ ἀποκάλλθέναι\). But in passages like Rom. i. 5, \(χάριν \ κ. \ ἀποστολὴν\), xi. 29, \(τὰ \ χαρίσματα \ κ. \ ἡ \ κλησις \ τοῦ \ Θεοῦ\), the discourse advances from the general to the special, not from the thing itself to its objective medium. Logically more natural, besides, would be the advance from the objective medium to the subjective state, according to which Paul would have written: \(ἀποκάλλθέναι \ καὶ \ σοφίαι\). Finally, the climactic relation, which is brought out in the two words under our view, makes the wish of the apostle appear more fervid and full, and so more in keeping with his mood. It is obvious of itself, we may add, that Paul here desires for his readers, to whom in fact the Spirit has been already given from the time of their conversion (ver. 13), a continued

\(^1\) Rückert: "God grant you a heart wise and open for His revelations;" de Wette: "the quality of mind which consists in wisdom (mediate knowledge) and revelation (susceptibility for the immediate knowledge of divine truth)." According to Schenkel, it is the spirit wrought in the regenerate by the Holy Spirit. All this is opposed to the N. T. use of \(σπíμα\) with the genitivus abstracti. And nowhere in the N. T., where the being given is predicated of the \(σπíμα\), is it anything else than the objective \(σπíμα\), whether it be divine or demoniacal (Luke xi. 18; John iii. 84; Acts viii. 18, xv. 8; 1 Thess. iv. 8; 2 Tim. i. 7; 1 John iii. 24; Rom. v. 5, xi. 8). The presence or absence of the article with \(σπíμα\) makes no difference; see on Gal. v. 16. As to the singular expression \(σπíμα \ ἄγνωσίας\), used of the Spirit of Christ, in Rom. i. 4, see on that passage.

\(^2\) But not, as Olshausen (comp. Grotius) maintains, the \(χάριμα\) of prophecy, of which the more detailed exposition, ver. 18 ff., shows no trace. And Paul, in fact, is praying for \textit{all} his readers. See, however, 1 Cor. xii. 29.
bestowal of the same for their ever increasing Christian enlightenment. Comp. Col. i. 9. Baur, p. 437, conjectures here something of a Montanistic element. But it was not by the Montanists that the πνεῦμα was first regarded as the principle of Christian wisdom, etc.; it is so already in the teaching of the whole N. T. — ἐν ἐπιγνώσει αὐτοῦ] That αὐτοῦ does not apply to Christ (Beza, Calvin, Calovius, Baumgarten, Flatt), but to God (although we have not to write αὐτοῦ), is clear from the αὐτοῦ of vv. 18, 19; it is only at ver. 20 that the discourse passes over to Christ. Nor is ἐν ἐπιγν. αὐτοῦ, with Chrysostom, Theophylact, Zachariae, Koppe (with hesitation), Lachmann, Olshausen (who was forced to this by his explaining πνεῦμα σοφ. κ. ἀποκαλ. in the sense of extraordinary charisma), to be attached to what follows, whereby the parallelism (πνεῦμα σοφ. κ. ἀποκ. is parallel with πεφωτ. τ. ὑπ. τ. καρδ. ὑμ., and ἐν ἐπιγν. αὐτ. with εἰς τὸ εἴδέναι κ.τ.λ.) would without reason be destroyed (see Harless); but it denotes the sphere of mental activity, in which they, already at work therein (and that likewise through the Spirit, ver. 13), are to receive the spirit of wisdom and revelation. Comp. 2 Pet. i. 2. Erroneously εἰ is taken for εἰς (Luther, Castalio, Piscator, Cornelius a Lapide, Wolf, Bengel, Moldenhauer, Rosenmüller, and others), or as per (Erasmus, Calovius, and others), which latter would represent the knowledge of God as bringing about the communication of the Spirit, and so invert the state of the case. No doubt Calovius remarks: "quo quis magis agnoscit Christum, eo sapientior fit et revelationem divin verbi magis intelligit;" but the question is one, not of an agnitio, but of a cognitio, and not of understanding the revelation of the word, but of a revelation to be received through the agency of the Holy Spirit. — In ἐπιγνώσει observe the force of the compound, which implies an exact and penetrating γνώσις, as is very evident especially from 1 Cor. xiii. 12, and is wrongly denied by Olshausen. Comp. Col. i. 9.

1 Olshausen appeals to the fact that, just where the most exalted form of knowledge—the charismatic—is spoken of, the word employed is not ἐπιγνώσει, but ὑπο, 1 Cor. xii. 8, xiii. 8. ὑπο, however, in the charismatic sense was the name—as it were, the terminus technicus for the thing—which as such was meant to denote the essence, not the degree.
Ver. 18. Πεφωτισμένοις τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν κ.τ.λ. is usually (as also by Rückert, Matthies, Meier, Holzhausen, Harless, Winzer, Olshausen, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Schenkel, Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 272 [E. T. 317]) taken as appositional, and made dependent on δύνα μέν ὑμῖν; in which case it has been rightly observed that the translation should not be, with Luther: enlightened eyes, but, on account of the article: He may give to you the eyes enlightened, etc. But (1) in general an enlightened understanding is not proper to be set forth as in apposition to the Holy Spirit, but rather as the effect of the same. (2) The conception that God gives to them their eyes (which as such they already have) in the condition of enlightenment, as πεφωτισμένοις, remains in any case an awkward one; inasmuch as we should have to transform the giving, which was still a proper and actual giving in ver. 17, zeugmatically into the notion of making at ver. 18 (Flatt, following Heinsius, quite arbitrarily supplies εἰληφεν), in order to remove the incongruity caused by the presence of the article. Bengel, with his fine insight, aptly remarks: "Quodsi ὀφθαλμῶν esse posset sine articulo, posset in sensu abstracto sumi (enlightened eyes) et cum det construī." Hence, with Beza, Bengel, Koppe, Bleek, πεφωτισμός. is to be taken as the so-called accusative absolute, such as, from a mingling in the conception of two sorts of construction, is to be met with often also in classical writers—and that without repeating the subject (ὑμᾶς) in the accusative (in opposition to Buttmann)—instead of another case which would be required in strict accordance with the construction, particularly instead of the dative (ὑμῖν ὑμῖν ἀναπνοῶν κλίνονσαν ἄρτιος ὑνειράτων, Soph. El. 479 f.; Plat. Lach. p. 186 D; Thuc. v. 79. 1); and thus Beza's proposal to read πεφωτισμένοις was entirely uncalled for. Comp. Acts xxvi. 3. Accordingly, πεφωτισμός. relates to ὑμῖν, and τῶν ὀφθ. is the accusative of more precise definition: enlightened in respect of the eyes of your heart, i.e. so that ye are then enlightened, etc., with which is expressed the result of the communication of the Spirit.

The opposite: Rom. i. 21, xi. 8, 10. The reference of the enlightenment to knowledge is necessarily given by ὀφθαλμοὺς, and should not have been regarded as one-sided (in opposition to Harless); and the power of the new life is not here included under the πεφωτισμόν, since it is not the heart in general, but the eyes of the heart that are set forth as enlightened, consequently the organ of cognition. 1 The observation of the latter, that the cognitive activity of the heart is based on internal experience (which, however, holds good not only as to St. Paul, but also elsewhere in the N. T.), is not refuted by the rejoinder of Delitzsch, p. 177. In this very passage (comp. iii. 18) the cognition is not merely discursive, but the experience, in which it has its root, is that of the divine communication of the Spirit and enlightenment. Analogous is the case with 2 Cor. iv. 6. As to Phil. iv. 7, see on that passage. The heart, as the seat of self-consciousness and of the conscience, is the receptacle of experience and elaborates it. Comp. Beck, bibl. Seelenl. p. 67. If it does not admit the experience, or does not elaborate it unto saving knowledge, it is closed (Acts xiv. 16), hardened (Eph. iv. 18), slothful (Luke xxiv. 25), covered as with a veil (2 Cor. iii. 15), void of understanding, etc. See also Oehler in Herzog's Encycl. VI. p. 17.
may know what (quanta) is the hope of His calling, i.e. what a great and glorious hope is given to the man, whom God has called to the kingdom of the Messiah, by means of that calling (τῆς κλήσεως. is genitive of the efficient cause). ἐπίσης, accordingly, is not here, any more than elsewhere (Rom. viii. 24; Gal. v. 5; Col. i. 5, al.), res sperata, as the majority, including Meier and Olshausen, take it. Observe also here the three main elements in the subjective state of Christians: faith, and love, and hope (vv. 15, 18); in presence of faith and love the enlightenment by the Holy Spirit is to make the glory of hope more and more known; for the πολίτευμα of Christians is in heaven (Phil. iii. 20), whither their whole thoughts and efforts are directed. Faith, with the love which accompanies it, remains the centre of Christianity; but hope withal encourages and animates by holding before them the constant object of their aim. Comp. Rom. v. 2, viii. 18 ff.; 1 Cor. ix. 24 ff.; 2 Cor. iv. 17, xiii. 12 ff.; Gal. vi. 9; Phil. iii. 12 ff.; Col. i. 23, iii. 1 ff. This in opposition to Weiss, who here finds hope brought into prominence, "quite after the Petrine manner," as the centre of Christianity (Petrin. Lehrbegr. p. 427). — καὶ τίς ὁ πλοῦτος κ.τ.λ.] this is now the object of the hope. The repetition of τίς, as well as the καὶ τίς ... καὶ τί, has rhetorical emphasis (comp. Rom. xi. 34 f.); and, in ὁ πλοῦτος τῆς δόξης τῆς κληρονομίας ἀυτοῦ, what a copious and grand accumulation, mirroring, as it were, the weightiness of the thing itself! which is not to be weakened by adjectival resolution of the genitives. Comp. Col. i. 27; 2 Cor. iv. 17. δόξα, glory, is the essential characteristic of the Messianic salvation to be received from God as an inheritance at the Parousia (Rom. viii. 17); and how great the rich fulness of this glory is, the readers are called to realize. ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις does not mean: in the Holiest of all (Heb. ix. 12), as Homberg and Calovius conjectured, for this is not suggested by the context; but: among the saints (Num. xviii. 23; Job xlii. 15; Acts xx. 32, xxvi. 18); for the community of believers (these are the ἁγιοί, i. 1, 4), inasmuch as they are to be the subjects of the Messianic bliss, is the sphere, outside of which this πλοῦτος κ.τ.λ. will not be found. Comp. ὁ κλήρος τῶν ἁγίων, Col. i. 12. It is connected with the ἐστί to be mentally supplied after τίς, so that we have to translate, as is required by the article before πλούτος: what, i.e. how great and exceeding, is the riches, etc., among the saints. Harless objects that Paul must have written ὁ ἐν τοῖς ἄγιοις, and that ἐν τοῖς ἄγιοις receives unduly the main stress. But the construction τίς ἐστιν ὁ πλούτος ἐν τοῖς ἄγιοις is in fact logically quite correct, and ἐν τοῖς ἄγιοις would have of necessity the main emphasis only if it stood after τίς. Usually (as by Rückert, Harless, Winzer, Olshausen, but not by Koppe and de Wette) ἐν τοῖς ἄγιοις is regarded as an appendage to τής κληρονομής. αὐτοῦ: “the inheritance given by God among the saints,” in connection with which Rückert, quite at variance with N. T. usage, explains οἱ ἄγιοι of the “collective body of morally good beings in the other world.” But since ἡ κληρονομία Θεοῦ is completely and formally defined by this very Θεοῦ (αὐτοῦ), and does not first receive its completeness by means of ἐν τοῖς ἄγιοις (see, on the contrary, Rom. viii. 17; Gal. iv. 7), this more precisely defining addition must have been attached by means of τῆς, and passages like Rom. ix. 3; 1 Tim. vi. 17; 1 Cor. x. 18; 2 Cor. vii. 7 (see Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 195 f.), are not analogous. If αὐτοῦ were not in the text, ἐν τοῖς ἄγιοις might be the definition of the κληρονομία here meant, and blended with τῆς κληρονομίας so as to form one idea. We may add, that Harless wrongly refers the riches of the glory, etc., preponderantly to the present earthly βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ. Comp. de Wette. It is only the future kingdom of God, to be set up at the Parousia, that is the object of the κληρονομία (1 Cor. vi. 9, xv. 50; Gal. v. 21; Eph. v. 5; Matt. xxv. 34); and here in particular the context (ἐλπίς, ver. 18; ἐγείρας κ.τ.λ., ver. 20) still points to the future glory, which Paul realizes as already present.

Ver. 19 ff. After the object of the hope, there is now set forth also that by which it is realized, namely, the infinite power of God shown in the resurrection, etc., of Christ: and what (quanta) is the exceeding (surpassing all measure) greatness of His power in relation to us who believe. The construction is as in the preceding portion, and consequently such, that εἰς ἡμᾶς τοῦ πνεύμ. attaches itself not to τῆς δύναμ. αὐτοῦ (Meier, Harless, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Bleek, after many older expositors; comp. 2 Cor. xiii. 4), but to the ἐστὶ to be mentally supplied after τί — From the context preceding (διὰ ποιημάτων κληρονομίας) and following (ver. 20 f.) it is clear that Paul is not here speaking of the power of God already in the earthly life manifesting itself as regards believers in their inward experience (Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Photius, Theophylact, Erasmus, and others, including Flatt, Matthies, Rückert, Meier, Harless), not even of this as included (Schenkel), but only of the power to be shown as regards believers in future at the Parousia, where this mighty working displayed in Christ's resurrection, exaltation, and appointment as Head of the church, must necessarily, in virtue of their fellowship with Christ, redound to the fulfilment of the hope, to the δόξα τῆς κληρονομίας (see vv. 20–23). Hence Paul continues: κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν κ.τ.λ. This is indeed connected by many with τοὺς πιστεύοντας (see Erasmus, Calovius, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Rückert, Matthies, and others), in which case the ἵστορος appeared as consequence of the ἐνέργεια κ.τ.λ., as ἔργον Θεοῦ — a view, which was helped among the older expositors (see, especially, Calovius) by the interest of opposition to Pelagian and Socinian opinions; but in this way the whole course of thought is deranged, and the simple and solemn exposition in ver. 20 is made subservient to an expression quite inmaterial, which Paul might equally well have omitted (τοὺς πιστεύοντας). It is not the design, according to the connection, to prove the origin of faith. Chrysostom, Calvin, Calixtus, Estius, Grotius, and others, including Meier and Winzer, have found in κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργ. κ.τ.λ. an amplification (de Wette: the real ground; comp. also Bleek) of τὸ ἐπεξεργάσθη μέγεθος κ.τ.λ. But in this way all that follows would only be destined to hold the disproportionate place of a description, and would be isolated from εἰς τὸ εἰδέναι ὑμᾶς, which yet was the definite basis of the discourse hitherto; and this isolation there is no reason to assume. Hence we have to take κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργ. κ.τ.λ. as the ground of knowledge of the preceding point. What is the exceeding greatness of the divine power towards believers, the readers are to know in virtue of the operation, etc.; in accordance with this operation they were to measure that exceeding greatness. Harless refers it not merely to the preceding point, but to all the three points adduced after εἰς τὸ eīdēnai òmās. But, as the énereγεια τοῦ κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος corresponds simply to the notion of the δύναμις, we are not entitled to refer farther back than to the point, in which the δύναμις was spoken of. — τὴν ἐνέργ. τοῦ κράτ. τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ] a touching accumulation of terms, presenting the matter in genetic form; for ἰσχύς is strength in itself as inward power, as vīs or virtus (Mark xii. 30; 2 Pet. ii. 11), κράτος, might expressing itself in overcoming resistance, in ruling, etc. (Luke i. 51; Acts xix. 20; Eph. vi. 10; Col. i. 11; Heb. ii. 14; Dan. iv. 27; Isa. xl. 26), and ἐνεργεια, the efficacious working, the active exertion of power. For similar combinations of words having a kindred sense, see Lobeck, Paralip. I. p. 534 f. Comp. Soph. Philoct. 590: πρὸς ἰσχύος κράτους. Job xxi. 23 (LXX.). The Vulgate aptly renders: "secundum operationem potentiae virtutis ejus," and Bengel remarks: "τ. ἐνεργειαν, haec actus est; τοῦ κράτους, hoc in actu est."

For Christ is with glorified body, as σώματος of the Father on the seat where the Divine Majesty is enthroned (see on Matt. vi. 9), exalted above the heavenly angels (ver. 21), in heaven (Phil. iii. 20 f.); so Stephen beheld Him (Acts vii. 55), and the seer of the Apocalypse (Rev. v., al.); and from thence, surrounded by the angels, He will return, even as He has bodily ascended thither (1 Thess. iv. 16; Acts i. 11, iii. 21; 1 Pet. iii. 21 f.; Matt. xxiv. 30, xxv. 31); hence also those who arise and are changed at the Parousia, are caught up εἰς ἀέρα, to meet the Lord coming from heaven (1 Thess. iv. 17). Up to that time He intercedes for us at the right hand of the Father (Rom. viii. 34). The true commentary on ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ αὐτοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ. is accordingly, Mark xvi. 19: ἀνελήφθη εἰς τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐκ δεξιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ. And our passage itself, ver. 20 ff. (comp. iv. 10), is the commentary on ὁ Θεὸς αὐτοῦ ἐπερίψωσε κ.τ.λ., Phil. ii. 9.

Ver. 21 is no parenthesis, since neither the construction nor the logical progress of the thought is interrupted.— ἰπεράνω expresses not the infinite exaltedness (the Greek Fathers, Beza, Estius), nor yet the dominion over (Bengel), although the latter is implied in the nature of the case, but simply: up above (Heb. ix. 5; Ezek. i. 26, viii. 2; Deut. xxviii. 1; Cant. tr. puer. 37; Tob. i. 3; Ael. V. H. ix. 7; Polyb. xii. 24. 1). The opposite is ἵπποκάτω, Mark vi. 11; Heb. ii. 8.— πάνης ἄρχης . . . κυρίότητος is neither to be understood, with Schoettgen, of the Jewish hierarchs, nor, with van Til (in Wolf), of the various grades of Gentile rulers, nor, with Morus, of human powers in general, nor, with Erasmus, Vorstius, Wolf, Zachariae, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Olshausen, and others, of quodcumque gloriae et dignitatis genus (comp. 1 Cor. xv. 24); but, as is shown by the immediate context (ἐκάθισεν . . . ἐν τοῖς ἐπουραν.) and the analogous passages, iii. 10, Col. i. 16, Rom. viii. 38 (comp. also 1 Pet. iii. 22), of the angels, who are designated according to their classes of rank (abstracta pro concretis), and, in fact, of the good angels, since the apostle is not here speaking (as in 1 Cor. xv. 24) of the victory of Christ over opposing powers, but of His exaltation above the existing powers in heaven. See, moreover, on Rom. viii. 38. In opposition to Hofmann, who (Schriftbew. I. p. 347) would find in the different designations not any order of rank, but only various relations to God and the world, see Hahn, Theol. d. N. T. I. p. 291 ff. Comp. also Kahnis, Dogm. I. p. 558 f. Christ Himself already, Matt. xviii. 10, assumes a diversity of rank among the angels; it is thus the more arbitrary, that expressions evidently in stated use, which in the case of two apostles and then in the Test. XII. Patr. correspond to this idea (even apart from the Jewish doctrine of classes of angels) should not be referred to it. More precise information, however, as to the relations and functions of the different grades of angels is not to be given, since Paul does not himself enter into particulars on the point, and the Rabbinical theory of classes of angels, elaborated under the influence of Platonism, yet dissimilar (see Eisenmenger, Entdeckt. Judenth. II. p. 374; Bartolocci, Bibl. Rabb. I. p. 267 ff.; Gfrörer, Jahrh. d. Heils, I. p. 357 ff.), is not in keeping with the designations of the apostle (see Harless in loc.; Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 226), and has evidently been elaborated at a later date. It is nevertheless probable that the order of succession is here arranged according to a descending climax; for (1) the apostle, in looking at the matter, proceeds most naturally from above downward, from the right hand of God to the heavenly beings which hold the next place beneath Him, and so on; (2) the ἄρχαι, ἔφωνιας, and δινάμεις are always mentioned in the same order (iii. 10; Col. i. 16, ii. 10; 1 Pet. iii. 22); the ἔφωνιας, however, with the θρόνοι (Col. i. 16) are, Test. XII. Patr. p. 548, placed in the seventh heaven, and the δινάμεις only in the third (p. 547), as, indeed, in Jamblichus, v. 21, p. 136, the δινάμεις are placed far below the ἄρχαι. According to this, the θρόνοι and κυρίότητες, Col. i. 16, would be placed in juxtaposition as the two extremes of the angelic series. Another view is taken by Hahn, Theol. d. N. T. I. p. 297 f.—That Paul, moreover, sets forth Christ as exalted above the angel-world, with a polemic purpose in opposition to the θρησκεία ἄγγελων of the Gnosis of Asia Minor (comp. Col. ii. 18) (Bucer, Estius, Hug, and others), is not to be assumed, since the form of the representation maintains purely a positive character, and the thing itself was so natural to the Christian consciousness generally (comp. Heb. i. 4), and to the connection in the case of our passage in particular, as to need no polemic occasion in order to its being expressed, and expressed

But if the ἄρχαι e. v. l. are angels, they are also conceived as personal, not as "principles and potencies, powers, forces, ordinances, and laws" (Reyeschlag, Christol. d. N. T. p. 244), consequently in an abstract sense. The abstract designation has its basis in the fact that classes or categories of personal beings are expressed, just as, e. g., ἔφωνια is said of human authorities, which consist of persons. with such solemnity. Even a purpose of guarding against possible infection on the part of such a Gnosis (Schneckenburger, Olshausen) is at least not expressed or more specially indicated; it may, however, have still been partially present to the mind of the apostle from the sphere of thought of the previously composed Epistle to the Colossians. Comp. Introd. § 4. — καὶ παντὸς ὄνοματος κ.τ.λ. and, i.e. and generally (see Fritzche, ad Matth. pp. 786, 870), above every name, which is named. Let any name be uttered, whatever it is, Christ is above it, is more exalted than that which the name so uttered affirms. Comp. Phil. ii. 9. That ὄνομα is here dignitatis potentiae et nomen (Erasmus, Calvin, Grotius, and others), as Hom. Od. xxiv. 93; Strabo, vi. p. 245 (ἐν ὄνοματι εἶναι), and the like (see Wolf, ad Dem. Lept. p. 346; Jacobs, ad Anthol. 1X. p. 226), is not to be supposed on account of ὄνομαξομένου, since this makes the simple literal meaning name the only possible one (comp. Plato, Soph. p. 262 B); and, if Morus and Harless (comp. also Michaelis and Rückert) have supplied the notion underlying the preceding abstract nouns: “above every name, namely, of such character,” they have done so arbitrarily, as iravroistandswithout restrictive addition. πᾶν ὄνομα is quite general: any name whatever; from the heavenly powers, above which Christ is placed, the glance of the apostle stretches to every (created) thing generally, which may anyhow be named. Comp. πάντα, ver. 22. — οὐ μόνον κ.τ.λ.] cannot belong to ἐκάθισεν κ.τ.λ. (Morus, Koppe; comp. already Beza and Zanchius), since ἐκάθισεν is an act, which has taken place in the aiōn αὕτως, but it belongs to ὄνομαξομένου: which is named in the present world-period, before the Parousia, and in the future one, after the Parousia. As to aiōn oü̃tōs and aiōn μέλλων, see on Matt. xii. 32. “Natural and supernatural order of the world” (Schenkel), and similar conceptions, are not to be substituted for the historical idea.

Ver. 22. While Paul has before been setting forth the exaltation of Christ over all things, he now expresses the subjection therewith accomplished of all things under Christ: καὶ πάντα... αὐτοῖ, with which consequently the same thing—the installation into the highest κυριότης (Phil. ii. 10 f.)—is expressed, only from another point of view (from below, from the standpoint of the object subjected; previously from above, from the seat of the exalted Lord), in order to present it in a thoroughly exhaustive manner. Such a representation is not tautological, but emphatic. Theodoret, with whom Harless agrees, makes the purpose: καὶ τὴν προφητικὴν ἐπήγαγε μαρτυρίαν. But the words, while doubtless a reminiscence of Ps. viii. 7 (6), in such wise that Paul makes the expression of the Psalm his own, are not a citation, since he does not in the least indicate this, as he has done at 1 Cor. xv. 27 by the following ἰδίων ἐν ἑαυτῷ. Certainly, however, he recognised that, which is said in Ps. viii. of man as such, as receiving its antitypical fulfilment in the exalted Christ (see on 1 Cor. l.e., comp. also Heb. ii. 8), and thereby it was the more natural for him, when speaking here of the dominion of Christ, to appropriate the words of the Psalm.—πάντα has the emphasis, like πάσης and παντός before. All—all that is created—God has subjected to Christ. If Paul had meant simply all that resists Christ (Grotius, Rosenmüller, Holzhausen, Olshausen), he must have said so, since there is no mention of subjecting what is hostile either before or in the eighth Psalm.—καὶ αὐτὸν κ.τ.λ.] and Him, the One thus exalted and ruling over all, Him even He gave, etc.; observe the emphasis of the αὐτὸν prefixed. What dignity of the church in Him!—ἐδωκε is usually taken in the sense of ἐδοκίμασε (Harless: “and installed Him as Head over all things for the church;” comp. Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 2, p. 117); but here as arbitrarily as at iv. 11. Grotius and Rückert rightly take it as: He gave Him...to the church. If Paul had conceived of ὑπὲρ πάντα, it would be difficult to see why he should not have written τῆς ἐκκλησίας. Comp. Col. i. 18.—ὑπὲρ πάντα] exalted above all things, is neither transposed (Peshito, 1 Hofmann no doubt thinks that, if ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ were to be taken together, Paul would not have inserted καὶ τὸν ἑαυτὸν. But why not? The very position assigned to καὶ τὸν ἑαυτὸν, as placed apart from αὐτὸν, is in keeping with the importance of this definition of quality, which at the same time, so placed, brings together with striking emphasis ὑπὲρ πάντα and τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. Christ has He given as Head over all things to the church. So high and august is His esteem for it!

Meyer—Eph.
Chrysostom, Theophylact, Erasmus, Grotius, Estius, and others): "ipsam super omnia (sc. positum) dedit ecclesia ut caput ejus," Grot.; nor does it signify especially (ἐν τῷ πᾶσιν, vi. 16), as Boyd and Baumgarten would have it; nor is it, in its true connection with κεφαλή, to be taken as summum caput (Beza, Morus, Koppe, Rückert, Holzhausen, Meier, Olshausen, Bleek, comp. Matthies); by which, according to Koppe and Olshausen, it is meant to be indicated that Christ is higher than the apostles, bishops, etc. In opposition to this interpretation, it may be decisively urged that only One Head to the church can at all be thought of, and that πάντα here calls for the same explanation as above in the case of πάντα ἐπίτεταξ. Hence rather: and Him He gave as Head over all things (to which position, as just shown, He had exalted Him) to the church (Christians as a whole). Since He, as Head over all things, was given to the church, it is obvious that He was to belong to her in a very special sense as her own Head; hence it is, in accordance with a well-known breviloquentia (Matthiae, p. 1533; Kühner, II. p. 602), unnecessary to supply κεφαλήν again before τῷ ἐκκλ.

Ver. 23 gives information (ἠτευ, ut quae, denotes the attribute as belonging to the nature of the ἐκκλησία; see Kühner, II. p. 497) as to the relation in which the church stands to this Head given to it. It is the body of the Head. — τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ] namely, in the mystical sense, according to the essential fellowship of spirit and of life, which unites the collective mass of believers with Christ, their Ruler, into an integrant and organic unity, wherein each single individual is a member of Christ in Christ's body. Comp. ii. 16, iv. 4, 12, 16, v. 23, 30; Col. i. 18, 24, ii. 19, iii. 15; Rom. xii. 5; 1 Cor. vi. 15, x. 17, xii. 13, 27. — τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν πληρωμὰ.] a significant explanatory parallel to τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ, which more precisely characterizes the relation of the church to Christ, in so far as the latter, as Head over all, is also its Head; and that in non-figurative language. The church, namely, is the Christ-filled, i.e. that which is filled by Him, in so far, namely, as Christ, by the Holy Spirit, dwells

and rules in the Christians, penetrates the whole Christian mass with His gifts and life-powers, and produces all Christian life (Rom. viii. 9, 10; 2 Cor. iii. 17; John xv. 5; Eph. iii. 17; Col. i. 27). His presence and activity, through the medium of the Spirit, fills the collective Christian body. And Christ, by whom the Christian church is filled, is the same who fills the all (i.e. the rerum universitas, whose Head He is, ver. 22) with all (omnibus rebus); for by Him was the world created, and by Him, as the immanent ground of life (Heb. i. 3), is it maintained and governed (1 Cor. viii. 6; Col. i. 16 ff.; Usteri, Lehrbegr. p. 315 ff.); hence this interpretation of ἐν πᾶσι yields no intolerable sense (Schenkel), but is entirely Pauline. Accordingly, by the fact that the church is named the πληρωμα of Christ, the idea that Christ is the Head of the church, of His body, receives elucidation; and by the characteristic designation τὸ τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρωμα, is elucidated the conception, that He as Head over all is Head of the church, ver. 22.— τὸ πληρωμα is here (comp. generally on ver. 10) equivalent to τὸ πεπληρωμένον. Thus, as is well known, not only are ships' cargoes or crews (Dem. 565, 1), but also the ships themselves—so far as they are freighted or manned—called πληρωματα (Lucian, V. H. ii. 37, 38); thus it is said in Philo, de praem. et poen. p. 920, of the soul: γενομένη δὲ πληρωμα ἄρετῶν; thus among the Gnostics the supersensible world is called τὸ πληρωμα, the filled, in opposition to τὸ κενομα, the empty, the world of the senses (Baur, Gnosis, pp. 157, 462 ff.). See also Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 470. ἐν πᾶσι is not: everywhere (Baumgarten-Crusius), in all modes of manifestation (de Wette, Bleek), in all points (Harless), or the like; but instrumental,¹ as at v. 18: with all; and πληρωμένον is middle, as in Xen. Hell. v. 4. 56, vi. 2. 14; Dem. p. 1208, 14; 1221, 12, in connection with which the medial sense is not to be overlooked: *qui * ibí implet; for Christ is Lord and final aim (ver. 22; Col. i. 16; Heb. ii. 10) of all. Comp. Barnabas, Ep. 12: ἐχεῖς καὶ ἐν τούτῳ τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, διὶ ἐν αὐτῷ πάντα καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν. The ubiquity of the body of Christ, which our text was formerly employed to defend (see especially Calovius), and even now is once more adduced to prove (Philippi, Dogm. IV. 1, p. 434), is the less to be found here, seeing that the ἐν πάσι, to be taken instrumentally, makes us think only of the all-penetrating continuous activity of Christ. The continuity of this activity is implied in the present πληροῦμαι, in which Hofmann, II. 1, p. 539, finds a gradual development, and that of the restoration of the world; of which last there is here no mention at all, but, on the contrary, of the upholding and governing of the world, as Col. i. 17; Heb. i. 3. Comp. Hermas, Past. sim. iii. 9. 14. As regards the explanations that differ from ours, we may remark—(1) Many, who have rightly apprehended τὸ πλήρωμα and πληρομένου, wrongly restrict τὰ πάντα ἐν πάσι to the spiritual operations in the Christians, either, as Grotius: "Christus in omnibus, credentibus sc., implet omnia, mentem luce, voluntatem piis affectibus, corpus ipsum obsequendi facultate, ad quae dona perpetua accedebant primis temporibus etiam χαροματα illa πνευματικα, etc.," or, as Flatt (comp. Zachariea and Morus): "who fills all without distinction of nations, Jews and Gentiles, everywhere, or always [ἐν πάσι], with good." In this view the fact is overlooked that τὰ πάντα, after the preceding κεφαλὴν ὑπὲρ πάντα, admits of no sort of limitation, and that, if τοῦ . . . πληρομένου were designed only to say how far the church is the πλήρωμα of Christ, this whole addition would be quite as superfluous for the Christian consciousness as it would be indistinctly expressed. We have, on the contrary, in τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ κ.τ.λ. a climax of the representation, which advances from that which the church is in relation to Christ (τὸ πλήρωμα αὑτῶν) to His relation towards the universe (hence, too, τὰ πάντα is prefixed).1

1 It is the more mistaken a course, in spite of this advance, yet again to refer ἐν πάσι, to the Christians. This error has misled Schenkel to put into our passage the thought: "in all members of the Christian community [ἐν πάσι] the Divine aim of the Creator, underlying the structure of the universe, receives its accom-
(2) Since αὐτοῦ and τοῦ τὰ π. ἐν π. πληρομ. are significantly parallel, and no change of subject is indicated; and since, on the other hand, the thought, that the church is the πλήρωμα of God, would be inappropriate here, where the idea: Christ is its head, is dwelt on,—all explanations fall to the ground which refer τοῦ πληρομ. to God, such as that of Theodoret: ἐκκλησίαν ... προσηγόρευσε τοῦ μὲν Χριστοῦ σῶμα, τοῦ δὲ πατρὸς πλήρωμα ἐπιλήφθε γὰρ αὐτὴν παντοδαπῶν χαρισμάτων κ.τ.λ., and of Koppe, by whom the sense is alleged to be: "the whole wide realm of the All-Ruler!" Comp. Rosenmüller. Homberg, Parerg. p. 289, Wetstein ("Christus est plenitudo, gloria patris omnia in omnibus implantis"), and Meier refer the genitive to God, but regard τὸ πλήρωμα as apposition to αὐτοῦ; Meier: "Him, the fulness of Him who filleth all in all; for in Christ there dwells the fulness of God (Col. ii. 9), and it is God who filleth the universe" (Jer. xxiii. 24, al.). This explanation is manifestly involved, makes ἄτις ἐστὶ τὸ σῶμα αὐτοῦ an insertion which, if nothing further were to be added to it, would be after ἔδωκε κεφαλὴν ... τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ quite aimless and idle, and leaves τὰ πάντα ἐν πάσι without more precise analysis. The same reasons hold also in opposition to Bengel, who regards τὸ πλήρωμα as accusative absolute (comp. on Rom. xii. 1), as epiphonema of what was said from ver. 20 onwards: "Hoc, quod modo explanavi, inquit apostolus, representat nobis plenitudinem Patris omnia implantis in omnibus, ut mathematici dicunt: id quod erat demonstrandum." (3) Since it is self-evident that Christ, as Head of the church, is not without this His body, and since it could not therefore enter the apostle's mind, at the solemn close, too, of the section, to bring forward the fact that the body belongs to the completeness of the head,—all those explanations fell to the ground as quite inappropriate, which take τὸ πλήρωμα as supplementum (Matt. ix. 16; Mark ii. 21), in which case some were consistentishment through the life of the exalted Redeemer flowing into them." But little skill is attributed to the apostle, when it is supposed that he designed to express this thought by means of the words he has written.

1 So also Schwegler in Zeller’s Jahrb. 1844, p. 387, where, moreover, the comparison of the union of Christ and the church to marriage (v. 25 ff.) is brought in quite unwarrantably. As man and wife supplement each other to form the totality enough to take πληρωμένων likewise in the sense of completing, as Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Menochius, Boyd, Estius, and others; and some inconsistent enough to explain it, incompatibly with the paronomasia, by implere, and thus differently from πλήρωμα, as Beza, Calovius, comp. Calvin, Baldwin, Baumgarten; also Hahn, Theol. d. N. T. p. 219 f.: “His destination, to fill all in all, is completely attained only in the church.” (4) The necessity for taking πλήρωμα in one and the same sense is fatal to the explanation of πλήθος, copia, coetus numerosus (Storr, Morus, Stolz, Koppe, Rosenmüller), or even: full measure (Cameron, of the species (as head and body), so, too, the church (as the body of Christ) is held to be the complementum of Christ (as the head of the church). Baur, too (Paulus, p. 426), takes the union of Christ with the church here as marriage (as a syzygy), and explains πλήρωμα entirely from the Gnostic point of view. By εν κλήρῳ, εν τῷ πάντῃ εἰς ταῖς πληρομαῖς, in his view, nothing else is affirmed than that “Christ is the πλήρωμα (the totality of the aeons) in the highest absolute sense, in so far as it is all in an absolute manner (εν πάντῃ εἰς τόν), which He fills with Himself as the absolute contents thereof.” Accordingly, πλήρωμα is to be taken neither simply in an active nor simply in a passive sense, but in such wise that the two notions pass over the one into the other; because, in fact, that which makes full is in turn that which is made full,—that which is filled with its definite contents. “As πλήρωμα εν πάντῃ εἰς τόν, Christ is the πλήρωμα, filling the πάντῃ εἰς τόν with its definite contents; and this πλήρωμα itself is the absolute totality filled with its absolute contents.” Comp. Baur, d. Christenth. d. drei ersten Jahrh. p. 296, and Neuest. Theol. p. 258. Operations of this sort, which do not exegetically deduce their results, but import them, are too much dominated by the presupposition of post-apostolic relations not to be safely left to their own fate, to which they have already been consigned.

1 “Qui secundum omnia, s. quod omnia in omnibus sui corporis membris adimpletur. Nisi enim essent hic quidem pes ejus, ille vero manus, alius autem aliud membrum ... non periceretur Christus secundum rationem capitis,” Estius. He is followed by Bisping, who here finds the basis and germ of the doctrine of the treasure of the merits of the saints!

2 “Omnino autem hoc addidit apostolus, ut sciamus Christum per se non indigere hoc supplemento, ut qui efficit omnia in omnibus re vera,” Beza.—Calovius: “Tanto in pretio Christus suam habet ecclesiam, tam tenere amat, ut se quodammodo imperfectum et mancum reputet, nisi nobis conjungatur, et nos ipse tanquam corpus capitum uniamur cum πλήρωμα ejus.” Comp. Luther's gloss; also Apol. Conf. A, p. 145. Calvin, moreover, prefers to limit εν πάντῃ to the spiritualis gubernatio ecclesiae.

3 Morus: “Quae proinde est societatis subditorum ejus et hominum magna copia, quae colit hunc (quae subest huic, quae sub hoc regis vivit), qui omnes omnino in hoc coetu omnibus generibus honorum accumulare die in diem solet.” Rosenmüller: “Coetus numerosus illius, qui omnes (hominis) omnibus bonis replet,” by which God is held to be meant.
Further, (5) the passive construction of πηρομένου (Vulg.) leaves absolutely no tolerable explanation of τὰ πάντα ἐν πάσι; for which reason not only the exposition of Chrysostom, Theophylact, Estius, and others (see above, under No. 3), but also the similar one of Jerome1 and that of Holzhausen, are to be rejected. The last-mentioned discovers the meaning: “Christ carries in Himself the fulness of eternal blessings” (τὰ πάντα ἐν πάσι, signifying the eternal!). Yet, again, (6) seeing that τὸ πνήμωμα neither in itself nor in accordance with the context, denotes the Divine δόξα, of which the πνεῦμα was the real presence (Buxtorf, Lex. Talm. p. 2394 ff.), there falls to the ground not only the explanation of those who treat τὸ πνήμωμα as equivalent in meaning to temple, like Michaelis and Bretschneider, but also that of Harless: “the apostle designates the church with the same word, by which he elsewhere [?] designates the abundance of the glory dwelling in Christ and God, and issuing from Him. It, however, is the fulness of Christ, not as though it were the glory which dwelt in Him, but because He causes His glory to dwell, as in all the universe, so also in it. It is the glory, not of one who without it would starve, but of Him who fills the universe in all respects;2 πνήμως πάσα ἡ γῆ δόξης αὐτοῦ (Isa. vi.3); but it is the glory of Christ, because He is united with it alone, as the head with its body.” Lastly, (7) Rückert also proved unsuccessful in his attempt to explain it: the church, in his view, is designated as the means (τὸ πνήμωμα, that whereby

1 “Sicut adimpletur imperator, si quotidie ejus angetur exercitus, . . . ita et Dominus noster Jesus Christus in eo, quod sibi credunt omnia et per dies singulos ad fidem ejus veniunt, ipse adimpletur in omnibus, sic tamen, ut omnia adimpleantur in omnibus, i.e. ut qui in eum credunt, cunctis virtutibus pleni sint.”

2 According to Harless, is σῶς means in every way, and implies that not in one way (only) is the sphere of earth full of the glory of Christ; the glory of the Creator is one, that of the Enlightener before the incarnation (John i.3) another, that of the Redeemer another. But how is the limitation of τὰ σῶς to the earth to be justified? And are, then, these three modes of glory adduced, which after all the reader must have guessed at without any hint, sufficient to exhaust the quite unlimited τὰ σῶς? and is the thought of the glory of the Creator and the Enlightener before the incarnation in keeping with the present participle? The whole explanation pours into the simple words a series of thoughts and reservations, in presence of which the words remain a very riddle of the Sphinx.
the πληρωμα comes about) by which Christ carries out in all (πασιν, masculine) that which is committed to Him for completion (τα παντα), as "the means of His accomplishing the great destination which devolves upon Him, namely, the universal restoration and bringing back to God." Against this may be urged both the language itself, since το πληρωμα never signifies the means of accomplishment, and the context, which neither speaks of a restoration and bringing back to God nor furnishes any limitation of τα παντα to that which is implied in the divine plan.—We may add that there cannot be shown here as regards the use of πληρωμα, any more than previously as regards the classes of angels, any direct or indirect polemic preference to Gnosticism. To the later speculations of Gnosticism, however, the forms of the transcendent doctrines of the apostle could not but be welcome; not as if Gnosticism had thought out its material in accordance with such Scriptural forms (Tertull. de praescr. 38), but it poured it into their mould, and, moreover, further developed and amplified the forms which it found ready to hand.

VER. 1. After ἀμαρτίας, B D E F G, min. Syr. utr. Erp. Copt. Aeth. Arm. Vulg. It. Theodoret, Lucif. Victorin. Ambrosiast. Pel. have ὑπὸ, which Lachm. and Tisch. have rightly received into the text. On account of the redundancy of the pronoun and its absence in ver. 5, the omission of it was easier than its addition from a comparison of Col. ii. 13 (in opposition to Reiche).—VER. 3. τίνα φάσει] Lachm. and Ruck. read φοβεῖ τίνα, following A D E F G L, min. Vulg. It. Or. (once), and other Fathers. But considering how closely τίνα ὁργῆς go together, the transposition φοβεῖ τίνα was so natural, that in opposition to these important witnesses the Recepta, attested by B K, most min. Or. The order σορί ὑμῖν in Lachm. and Tisch. is justified by A B D* E K* codd. of It. and Fathers. More feebly attested is the order ἵνα ἐγγύς, ver. 13, in Lachm., which weakens the antithesis.—VER. 12. ἵνα παρέχω] is wanting in decisive witnesses. Deleted by Lachm. Tisch. and Rück. Explanatory addition.—VER. 15. ἵνα εἰρηνή τοῖς] Lachm.: ἵνα εἰρηνῇ τοῖς, according to decisive testimony. The emphasis of the repetition of εἰρηνή was not duly regarded, and so the apparently redundant word was neglected. For the same reason there was written in ver. 19, instead of the far preponderantly attested ἀλλ᾽ ἵνα, simply ἀλλὰ (Elz. Scholz).—VER. 21. ἡ εἰκόν.] Elz. Scholz, Rück. Reiche read τάσσα ἡ εἰκόν. But the article is wanting in B D E F G K L and many min., also in Clem. Bas. Chrys. (in the commentary) Theodoret, Oec., and was added (A C, Chrys. Theophyl.) because it seemed needed by the sense. See, however, the exegetical remarks.

CONTENTS.—You also, when ye were dead through sins,—as indeed we Jewish-Christians too were in the same condition of sin and liability to the divine wrath,—God has by virtue of His love made us alive with Christ, raised us and transferred us into heaven, in order, in the world-ages to come, to show His grace towards us in Christ (vv. 1–7). For out of grace have ye attained to salvation, not through merit of works (vv. 8–10). Remember, therefore, that ye were formerly as Gentiles unhallowed and unhappy, but now through the death of Christ ye are in quite a different position (vv. 11–13). For Christ has through His death established peace between Jews and Gentiles (vv. 14–18). Ye, consequently, are no longer aliens, but fellow-members of the theocracy, members of the household of God, built up upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, wherein the corner-stone is Christ, in whom every building is built, and ye too, unto a holy temple (vv. 19–22).

Ver. 1. Connection: After Knatchbull and others (mentioned by Wolf, Cur. on i. 19) had attached καὶ υἱᾶς to εἰς ἡμᾶς τοῖς πιστεύοντας, i. 19, and Bengal to ἡν ἐνήργ., i. 20 (both arbitrarily confusing, and the former also mistaken for the reason that ἡμᾶς, ver. 19, already included the readers), Lachmann and Harless have closed i. 23 with only a comma, and annexed καὶ (συνεξώσοντες) υἱᾶς to καὶ αὐτῶν ἔδωκε κ.τ.λ., ver. 22.1 So also de Wette, without, however, approving the mere comma after i. 23. But in this way we should have to expect not υἱᾶς, but ἡμᾶς (comp. i. 19: εἰς ἡμᾶς τοῖς πιστεύοντας), for Paul would attach to what God has done in relation to Christ that, which He has at the same time done in the case of the Christians. And, inasmuch as he has employed the pronoun of the second person, he has thereby indicated the beginning of a new portion. Moreover, i. 23 is so majestic and solemn in import and form, that it is admirably suited for a sonorous conclusion, but hardly for a mere parenthetic insertion. No, after the apostle has previously spoken of the exceeding power of God in the case of believers, which may be recognised by virtue of what He has done in the case of Christ, whom He raised, exalted, etc., he wishes now, in application of this to the readers, to bring the latter to the consciousness that God has made also them (καὶ ὑμᾶς), when they were dead in their sins, to be alive, etc., with Christ, and thus has shown also in their case that exceeding power. — The construction is broken off, even before the subject and the verb are expressed, by the afflux of the thoughts in the relative clauses which begin ver. 2, but is resumed ver. 4 by means of δὲ, so that the subject not yet named in ver. 1 is at length named and characterized in ver. 4; and in ver. 5 the verb (συνεξωσνοίησε) comes in with repetition of the object, which, however,—in accordance with what has been said in the intervening clauses,—had already in ver. 4 passed over into the first person and thus become universal (ἡμᾶς). As to the details, see below. The resumption accordingly begins already, in ver. 4, with ὅ δὲ Θεός (as even Theophylact expressly observes); not first with ver. 5, as Wolf and others, including Griesbach, Koppe, ed. 1, Scholz, Meier, Rückert, Holzhausen, would have it, because otherwise ver. 4 in turn would be anacoluthic, and yet ὅ Θεός is the subject of συνεξωσν. — νεκροῖς τοῖς παραπτ. κ. τ. ἁμαρτ. ὑμῶν] The dative denotes the causa efficiens of the death. The expression with ἐν, Col. ii. 13, is not equivalent. Quite at variance with the context, Cajetanus (not Estius, who rejects this explanation) holds that the dative is as in Rom. vi. 11, in which case the force of δνας as a present participle is urged: since ye are dead for the sins. ὑμῶν also is against this, as well as the plural, since in the being dead for sin the latter appears as principle (Rom. vi. 11).— A real distinction between παρατομάτα and ἁμαρτίαι does not exist, in so far as both expressions denote the same thing (the peccata actualia in thought, word, and deed) in a twofold form of conception as “missing”

1 Augustine, ad Lev. qu. 20, makes the former denote the desertio boni, the latter the perpetratio mali, or the former to be the sin of rashness, the latter that which is deliberate, which last distinction is adopted also by Tittmann, Synon. p. 47. Jerome makes the former delicta cogitatione inchoata, the latter sins of deed; comp. Olshausen. Bengel: ἐνεπικρατ. applies to the Jews, and ἁμαρτ. to the Gentiles. Meier (comp. Baumgarten-Crusius): the two words are distinguished as act and state. Matthies: the former are mental errors and obscurations, the latter moral sins and vices. Harless and de Wette: the former denotes single trespassions, the latter all kinds of sins, including sins in thought. and "fall" (see, generally, Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 324); and the abstract ἀμαρτία cannot mean, like ἡ ἀμαρτία at Rom. v. 20, sin in abstracto as ruling power, but in virtue of the plural can only mean the actual sins (ἀμαρτήματα); comp. on Rom. v. 20. — οὕτως] state, which was present at the time, when God made them alive. — νεκροί] is understood by the expositors (apart from those who, like Koppe and Rosenmüller, substitute for the literal meaning the notion of wretched, miserable) of spiritual death (comp. v. 14), i.e. of the deadness of true moral life through the "alienatio animae a Deo," Calvin; comp. Delitzsch, Psychol. p. 127. But by what, we ask, is this spiritual sense indicated? Must not νεκρ. τοῖς παραπτ. κ. ταῖς ἀμαρτ. have reminded the readers quite naturally and necessarily of the connection, well known to them, between unexpiated sins and the eternal death (the eternal condemnation)—a connection, in which they once as Gentiles shared? See on Rom. vi. 16, 22 f., vii. 9–11, 24, viii. 2, 6. The explanation of physical death is inadmissible, because this is a consequence not of individual sins, but of the sin of Adam; see on Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 22. The expression νεκροί is proleptic: when ye were dead through your sins, i.e. when you had through your sins drawn upon you death, had become liable to eternal death, so that in this way the certo morituri are designated as νεκροί. Comp. Rom. vii. 10, viii. 10, and the well-known ἡν χάριν εὶς ἱστάτων νεκρόν, Epict. Anton. iv. 41. See also on Col. ii. 12. Without Christ the everlasting death, which they had incurred by their sins, would not be annulled and averted from them; but, after that Christ has completed the work of atonement and they have become believers in Him, eternal life has become the portion of those who were by their sins liable to eternal death, and that by means of the fellowship of life, into which they are brought through faith with the Christ who is made alive from the dead, raised, and exalted to heaven, which is more fully expressed, vv. 5, 6, by συνεζωοποιήσε τῷ Χριστῷ κ.τ.λ. Thus the passage certainly treats of the atonement accomplished by Christ, to which believers owe eternal life (see vv. 7, 8). The moral restoration (Hofmann) is the consequence of the atonement (ver. 10), the ethical product of the same through the Spirit. — The relation, we may add, of our passage to Col. ii. 13 and i. 21 is not that of a slavish dependence, but that of a fresh and living remembrance with new and peculiar amplification.

Ver. 2. Shadows before the light which arises in ver. 4. — \( \text{ἐν αἰσ} \) domain, in which, etc. It is the pre-Christian sphere of life, and then follows (\( \text{kατὰ κ.τ.λ.} \)) the normal standard which rules in it. \( \text{αἰσ} \) has shaped itself after the gender of the last substantive, but embraces both. See Matthiae, p. 991. — \( \text{kατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου} \) according to the age of this world, i.e. as was in keeping with the period of time appointed for the present world (subsisting up to the Parousia). For immorality is the characteristic of this world-period (Rom. xii. 2; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Eph. vi. 12) in contrast to the future new world, in which \( \text{δικαιοσύνη} \) bears sway, and the nearer the Parousia, the more the \( \text{αἰῶν} \) is \( \text{πονηρός} \) (see on Gal. i. 4; comp. v. 16, and on vi. 13). Others explain \( \text{αἰῶν} \) as life (so also Harless; comp. H. Stephanus: “secundum eam, quae in hoc mundo est, vivendi rationem,” Castalio, Beza, Grotius, et al.); for which Rückert—who, in a strangely erroneous way, explains it as equivalent to \( \text{kατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τούτου τοῦ κόσμου} \)—and Matthies put: spirit of the time, and Olshausen: tendency of the time; comp. Bleek. But, however current \( \text{αἰῶν} \) in the signification of life may be in classical Greek, especially in Homer, Pindar, Herodotus, and the tragic poets (see Duncan, ed. Rost, p. 47; Blomf. ad Aesch. Prom. 887; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. I. p. 50), yet in the N. T., often as the habitually used word recurs, it is never so employed, but always in the signification of juncture of time, age. The shift to which Koppe has recourse (comp. Estius and Flatt), that \( \text{αἰῶν} \) and \( \text{κόσμος} \) are synonymous—hence Koppe makes \( \text{ὁ αἰῶν τοῦ κόσμου τούτου} \) equivalent to \( \text{ὁ κόσμος οὗτος} \)—stands on a level with the capricious inversion of Bretschneider, who makes it tantamount to \( \text{ὁ κόσμος τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου} \): \text{hominis pravi ut nunc sunt}. No, Paul might have written briefly \( \text{kατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τούτου} \) (comp. i. 21); but, in accordance with the graphic amplification of the passage carrying such terrible emphasis, he has paraphrased this \( \text{τούτου} \) by \( \text{τοῦ κόσμου τούτου} \). According to Beausobre and Michaelis (“the God of this world”), \( \text{αἰῶν τοῦ κόσμου τούτου} \) is meant to denote the devil in polemic reference to the Gnostic doctrine of aeons (see what follows). According to Baur, p. 433 f., the expression itself is a Gnostic one, equivalent to the κοσμοκράτωρ (comp. vi. 12), and denoting the devil. But this is imported, inasmuch as the explanation of αἰὼν in the sense usual in the N. T. yields quite a Pauline thought. The devil appears only in what follows, and would, if he was to be designated already here, and that as Lord of the pre-Messianic period, have been designated, as at 2 Cor. iv. 4, as ὁ θεὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος τοῦτου, or in a like concrete manner. — κατὰ τὸν ἀρχηγόνα τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος climactic parallel to the preceding. “Sic res fit expression,” Bengel. The opposite is κατὰ Θεόν, iv. 24; 2 Cor. vii. 9. Comp. 1 John v. 14: κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ. The devil Paul here represents as the ruler over the might of the air, in which ἐξουσία is collective, denoting the totality of the mighty ones (the demons, Matt. xii. 24) concerned. Comp. Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 469; Bernhardt, p. 47. This ἐξουσία has its seat in the air, which exists between heaven and earth (τοῦ ἀέρος); the atmosphere, pertaining, in contrast to the higher pure αἰθήρ (see Duncan, Lex. Rom., ed. Rost, p. 36), still to the physical realm of earthly things (γῆς ἰσόμοιρος ἀήρ, Soph. El. 87), is the seat, the territory of the might of the demons. This and nothing else Paul expresses in distinct words, the ἐναέριος διατριβή (Oecumenius, comp. Theophylact), the ἵππωράνως τόπος (Chrysostom) of the demons; and neither ought τοῦ ἀέρος to have been taken (Clericus, Heinsius, Michaelis, Storr, Flatt, Matthies, and others) as equivalent to τοῦ σκότους (vi. 12; Col. i. 13), because, though it may, as it often does in Homer, denote misty gloom, clouds, etc., in contrast to the pure αἰθήρ, it never takes the place of the absolute σκότος (comp. Buttmann, Lexilog. I. p. 115), and in the N. T. always means simply air; nor ought it to have been explained by a metonymy as mundus (Thomas, Bullinger, and others). According to Hahn, Theol. d. N. T. I. p. 328 f., τοῦ ἀέρος is designed to express the aeriform nature of the demons; they are not really spiritual, but only spirit-like; aeriformness is their physical constitution. This is already in itself incorrect, since the demons must of necessity have the same physical constitution as the angels (including also their supra-terrestrial corporeity, comp. on Matt. xxii. 30), and hence, although they have become ἀκάθαρτα, they have yet remained πνεύματα, see in this very Epistle, vi. 12 (τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας). Olshausen would remove the demons from the atmosphere by taking ἄηρ as equivalent to οὐρανός, appealing to 1 Thess. iv. 17 (where, however, ἄηρ is nothing else than air), and even giving out this passage as the only one in the N. T. where the word ἄηρ elsewhere occurs (but see Acts xxii. 23; 1 Cor. ix. 26, xiv. 9; Rev. ix. 2, xvi. 17). As an equally exemplary companion-piece of rationalizing artifice may be quoted the interpretation of Stolz, Erläut. p. 175: "We have here to think of the rational beings acting and walking upon the earth, of men, who as sensuous creatures breathe in the air, in the atmosphere surrounding the earth.

Hofmann, who elsewhere took ἄηρ erroneously as equivalent to πνεῦμα, would now (Schriftb. I. p. 457) not less erroneously make τὸν πνευματὸς dependent upon τὸν ἄερ, and by the latter understand the atmosphere formed by the breathing of that πνεῦμα. "So long as they [the disobedient] allow this spirit to be their spirit, they live in the atmosphere thereof, and as it were inhale it—an atmosphere, which is the sphere of dominion [the ἐγκουσία] of Satan." But apart from the clumsy and obscure accumulation of three genitives (at 2 Cor. iv. 4, 7, they flow easily and clearly one out of the other), there may be urged against this view generally the strange awkwardness of the thought ("the air of the spirit which worketh in the disobedient is the atmosphere formed by the breathing of the same spirit"), and more especially the considerations, first, that ἐγκουσία does not mean sphere of dominion; secondly, that

1 He holds that Paul has perhaps employed the expression for the purpose of characterizing the demons as not indeed earthly, but yet also as not heavenly. He has employed the expression, just because he conceived of the demons as making their abode in the atmosphere. And he does not choose a higher expression (as in vi. 12) for this sphere, because he wishes here to make the reader feel the lower domain of the power as opposed to the heavenly domain, and thus also the ignominious character of the same; hence the expression is neither accidental nor strange (in opposition to Hofmann).

2 Not even in Luke xxiii. 7, where it expresses the idea of governing authority, of jurisdiction. So often in Plutarch, Diodorus, etc.
there is nothing to indicate that the ἀὴρ originated through the breathing (or blowing) of the spirit (we should at least expect the essential πνεύματος instead of ἐνεργοῦντος); thirdly, that, if ἐξουσία is to denote the sphere of dominion, τῆς ἐξουσίας would be only an ambiguous pleonasm, and we cannot see why Paul should not have written merely τῶν ἄρχουσα τοῦ ἀέρος κ.τ.λ.—As regards the historic basis of the conception of the apostle, that the demons have their abode in the air, he has carried it over from his pre-Christian, Jewish-Rabbinic circle of ideas into the contents of his Christian belief. It is true that there are found among the Rabbins very diverse, confused, and at times very monstrous assertions concerning the dwelling-place of the demons (see, especially, Eisenmenger, Entdeckt.
Judenth. II. p. 437 ff.), but Harless (followed by Olshausen) far too hastily thence concludes: "in such sloughs as these one seeks in vain for the explanation of the apostle's expression." For while there are found diverse opinions in the Rabbins, and among them also that which assigns to the demons the air as a territory, the expression of the apostle shows us which of the different Rabbinic conceptions he has not followed, and which is accepted by him. Thus doubtless, e.g., the doctrine which R.
Bechaj, in Pentat. f. 90, 1, presents as a well-known one, that only those demons which produce dreams dwell in the air, but those which seduce man to sin in the man himself, and yet others in the depths of the sea, is not the view of the apostle.
But the belief, which Paul here announces as his own and presupposes in his readers, namely, that the demoniac kingdom in general, and not merely a single division of it, is in the air, is to be found very definitely preserved among the Rabbins also. For (1) the very Rabbinical tenet of the winged nature of the demons (Talmud, Chagig. 2; R. Eliezer in Bartoloc. I. p. 320 ff., al.)-manifestly points to the region of the air as their abode, since they are shut out from the communion of God. (2) In particular passages this is expressly stated.
Comment. in libr. Aboth. f. 83, 2: "Sciendum, a terra usque ad expansum omnia plena esse turmis et præfectis, et infra (that is precisely in the ἀὴρ) plurimas esse creaturas laedentes et accusantes, et omnes stare ac volitare in ære," etc. Further, it is said in Tuf haarez, f. 9, 2, that under the sphere of the moon, which is the last under all, is a firmament (قضاء) ... and there are the souls of the devils, etc. See Eisenmenger, II. p. 411. Further, R. Bechai says, in Pentat. f. 139, 4, where he is explaining how it comes about that the demons know what is future: "because they dwell in the air (lanmış), ... they learn future things from the princes of the planets." The same R. Bechai, in Pentat. f. 18, 1, relates, as a Rabbinical tradition, that Noah had in his ark, according to Gen. vi. 19, preserved devils also, and says in confirmation of this exposition: for it would have been impossible for them to remain in their own place, which is the air (قضاء). Comp. Nishmath chasim, f. 115, 2. The assertion, too, of R. Menasseh, in Eisenmenger, II. p. 456 f., that the rising smoke of the incense which was offered to the devils was their food, points to the air as their dwelling-place; as, indeed, according to the Cabbala (Cabb. denud. I. p. 417), the demons dwell "below the upper sanctuary." 1 Thus much, consequently, is clear and transparent enough in the "muddy sloughs" of Rabbinical tradition, that the kingdom of the demons was located in the air; and with this we find the apostle in agreement. Hence we have no right to deny that he has retained this conception from the sphere of his Rabbinical training, but at the same time it would be quite unwarrantable to attribute to him the singularities associated with this tenet by the Rabbins, since, in fact, he asserts nothing more than that the devilish powers are in the air. This is a simple historical statement, in which, we may add, it is quite arbitrary to discern a "profound hint," namely, of their dismal and spectral nature (in opposition to Schenkel). The right explanation is given also by Schmid, Bibl. Theol. § 86, and Bleek. Among the Pythagoreans, too, we meet with an analogous view (Diog. Laert. viii. 32: κατὰ τῶν μὲν Πυθαγόραν εἶναι τῇ πάντα τῶν ἄρα ψυχῶν ἐμπλεον, καὶ τούτων δαίμονας τῇ καὶ ἡρως νομίζονται, and compare the other passages in Wetstein, and the other passages in Wetstein, and

1 With this Rabbinical view agrees also Test. XII. Patr. p. 729: ἰδίας ἐν τῷ ἄειν πνεύματος τῷ Βελίκῳ, where ἰδίας means to be found in the air. See Plat. Epin. p. 948 D: ἰδίαμεθα, ἰδίων ξύνομεν. Comp. Test. XII. Patr. p. 547. If we take ἰδίων in such passages as aeriform (Hahn), we confound it with ἰδίων (Arist. de Anim. iii. 13; Metaph. ix. 7). Comp. rather, Ascens. Isa. 10: "descendit in firmamentum, ubi princeps hujus mundi habitabit." Elsner, p. 206; Doug. Anal. p. 127); but quite unfounded is the assertion of Wetstein: “P. ita loquitur ex principiis philosophiae Pythagoreae, quibus illi, ad quos scribit, imbuti erant.” Paul presupposes in his readers an acquaintance with his expression as the expression of his doctrine, and speaks so emphatically and solemnly that any sort of accommodation is not to be thought of. — τοῦ πνεύματος] is still dependent on τοῦ ἀρχοντα, so that the power over which the devil rules, after being designated as regards its outward existence by the phrase ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος, is now designated as regards its active operation in men’s hearts, namely, as the spirit which is at work in the disobedient. This πνεῦμα, of which Satan is the ruler, is not, however, to be thought of as being the human mind, since, thus understood, it would not suit as apposition to the τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος which is different from the human individuality, as, indeed, τοῦ ἐνεργ. κ.τ.λ. points to an agent different from the human individual; but rather as the principle proceeding from its ἀρχῶν, the devil, and passing over into men to become operative in their hearts—the antithesis of the Holy Spirit which proceeds from God. Comp. on 1 Cor. ii. 12. This πνεῦμα is, in contrast to τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας, the πνεῦμα τῆς πλάνης, 1 John iv. 6. It is not, however, “odd” (de Wette), nor is it “unnatural” (Bleek), to speak of a “ruler of this spirit;” but this is quite analogous to the conception, according to which Christ is spoken of as “Lord of the Holy Spirit” (2 Cor. iii. 18). We have further not to understand τοῦ πνεύματος collectively (Vatablus, Grotius, Estius, Wolf, Michaelis, Holzhausen); for the ἐξουσία τοῦ ἀέρος is, indeed, the sum total of the plurality of the demons, but the spirit, which is brought by its ruler, the devil, into the hearts of men and operates within them, is in all νίν τῆς ἀπειθ. one and the self-same spirit, just as the Holy Spirit is in all individuals who believe one and the same. Others regard τοῦ πνεύματος as opposition to τὸν ἀρχ. τ. ἐξουσι. τ. ἀέρ., in that they either assume the use of an abnormal case occasioned by a deviation from the construction (genitive for accusative), as Piscator, Calovius, Semler, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Rückert, de Wette, Bleek, or look upon the genitive as one of opposition to τὸν ἁρχοντα, as Flatt. But how purely arbitrary is the former!
and how impossible the latter, since τὸν ἀρχοντα in accordance with its significance demands a defining genitive, and already has it in τῆς ἐξουσ. τ. ἄρε., and consequently τοῦ πνεύματος cannot be taken in any other relation! — νῦν] is emphatic,—not, however, as Meier supposes (comp. Zanchius): "even now, when it is so powerfully counteracted by the gospel," which must have been expressed by καὶ νῦν (as Ignat. ad Smyrn. interp. 7); but νῦν stands opposed to the preceding ποτέ, when the diabolic πνεῦμα was active in all, even in the readers. Comp. ver. 3. Rückert (comp. Bengel and Holzhausen) thinks of the extraordinary, especially dangerous power which the Satanic kingdom developed just at the time of the redemption (2 Thess. ii. 2 ff.); so also de Wette. But that could not be understood from the simple ἐνεργ., and would have required the addition of a περισσότερος, ἐπερβαλλόντως, or the like. According to Olshausen, νῦν is to be held as opposed to the future age, and to make the diabolic activity appear as limited, in contrast to the everlasting, divine activity of the Holy Spirit. But a contrast to the αἰών μέλλων is not at all implied in the context; indeed, it was entirely self-evident that the Satanic activity extends only to the time before the Parousia; how then could it occur to a reader to find in the νῦν a negation of the αἰὼν μέλλων? — ἐν τοῖς νοΐς τῆς ἀπειθ.] in their souls. The expression νιὸτ τ. ἀπειθ. is Hebraizing (for among Greek writers are found only such expressions as νεὶς Ἀχαίων, παιδες ξωγράφων, and the like, but not with abstract nouns; see Blomfield, Gloss. Pers. 408, p. 138; Stallb. ad Plat. Phil. p. 107), and denotes the dependence which has its basis in the relation of the person or thing concerned to the genitive-noun, here the genesis of the spiritual condition, so that τοῖς ἐξ ἀπεθελας (comp. Rom. ii. 8) would signify the same thing. Comp. Winer, p. 213 [E. T. 298]. The opposite is τέκνα ὑπακοῆς, 1 Pet. i. 14. By ἀπεθελα, however, is not meant unbelief (Luther, Bengel, Koppe, Harless, and others); for this could only be logically included under the notion of disobedience as refusal of belief, consequently as opposite to the ὑπακοῆ πίστεως (Rom. i. 5; Heb. iv. 6, 11; and see Fritzsche on Rom. xi. 30). And with that sense in the present case the following ἐν αἷς καὶ ἡμεῖς πάντες would be at variance, since not all Jewish-Christians had, like Paul, resisted the faith. Now, as Paul is speaking only of the immorality of the unbelievers (vv. 1, 3), ἀπειθεῖα is here the want of compliance towards God (Rom.
xi. 30), i.e. towards His revealed and natural law respectively (Rom. ii. 8 ff.), displaying itself through their immoral conduct.

Ver. 3. After the apostle has just depicted the pre-Christian corruption of the readers, who were Gentile-Christians, the sinful corruptness of all—this basis for his enthusiastic certainty of the universality of the redemption (Rom. i. 18 . . . ii. 24, iii. 19, 23, xi. 32; Gal. ii. 15, 16, iii. 22, al.)—presents itself at the same time with such vividness before his mind, that he now also includes with the others the whole body of the Jewish-Christians (καὶ ἡμεῖς πάντες) in the same state of cor-rup

ruption, and accordingly, on the resumption of the argument at ver. 4, he cannot again employ the second person introduced in ver. 1, but must change this into ἡμᾶς. Inasmuch as καὶ ἡμεῖς, we also, must necessarily denote the class falling to be added to ἡμᾶς, ver. 1, we cannot understand by it the Christians generally (Estius, Koppe, and others); but, since the ἡμεῖς are Gentile-Christians, we must take it to mean the Jewish-Christians. The general moral description which follows is not opposed to this view (as de Wette objects), since it was the very object of the apostle to delineate the essential equality in the moral condition of both.¹ Comp. Rom. i. 2, 3. De Wette explains it quite arbitrarily: “we also, who have been already a considerable time Christians.” — ἐν οἷς] is not to be referred to τοῖς παραπτώματί, ver. 1 (Peshito, Jerome, Grotius, Estius, Bengel, Baumgarten, Koppe, Rosenmüller), for that reference is not to be supported by Col. iii. 7, but, on the contrary, is impossible with the reading ἡμῶν after ἀμαρτ., ver. 1, and is, moreover, to be rejected, because Paul has not again written ἐν αἷς, and because the reference to the nearest subject is altogether suitable; for the Jewish-Christians also all walked once among the disobedient, as belonging to the ethical category of the same, inasmuch as they likewise before according to Phil. iii. 6, the justitia externa had not been wanting to him.

their conversion were through their immoral walk disobedient towards God (Rom. ii. 17 ff., 25, iii. 9 ff.).—έν ταῖς έπιθυμίαις τῆς σαρκός ἡμ. more precise definition to what has just been said ἐν ὀλί . . . ἀνεπιστάφημεν ποτέ, denoting the immoral domain of the pre-Christian state (2 Cor. i. 12 ; 2 Pet. ii. 18 ; comp. Xen. Ages. ix. 4 ; Plat. Legg. ix. p. 365 E ; Polyb. ix. 21. 5), in which this walk took place, namely, in the desires of our corporeo-psyehical human nature, whose impulses, adverse to God, had not yet experienced the overcom- ing influence of the Holy Spirit (Rom. vii. 14 ff., viii. 7 ; Gal. v. 17 ; Rom. viii. 2, al.), and hence rendered ineffectual the moral volition directed towards the divine law (Rom. vii. 17–20). The opposite is: πνεύματε περιπατεῖν (καὶ ἐπιθυμίαις σαρκός μὴ τελεῖν), Gal. v. 16 ; comp. Rom. viii. 13.—ποιοῦντες κ.τ.λ.] so that we, etc., now specifies the way and manner of this walk, wherein the prefixed ποιοῦντες has the emphasis, in that it predicates what they did, as afterwards ἦμεν, what they were. The θελήματα (comp. on the plural, Acts xiii. 22 ; Jer. xxiii. 26 ; 2 Macc. i. 3) are here in reality not different from the ἐπιθυμίαις, which, however, are conceived of as activities of the will, that take place on the part of the σάρξ and the διάνοια (both conceived of under a personified aspect as the power ruling the ego of the unconverted man). As regards τῶν διανοίων, which stands related to τῆς σαρκός as the special to the general, the bad connotation is not implied in the plural, as Harless conjectures (who finds therein "fluctuating, changing opinions"), but in the context, which makes us think of the unholy thoughts, whose volitions were directed to evil, in the state of disobedience. Comp. Num. xv. 39: μημήθησοσθε πασῶν τῶν ἐντολῶν κυρίου καὶ ποιήσετε αὐτάς καὶ οὐ διαστραφήσεσθε ὁπίσω τῶν διανοιῶν ὑμῶν; also Jer. xxiii. 26 ; Isa. lv. 9 (τὰ διανοήματα), where likewise the prejudicial connotation lies not in the plural, but in the connection.—καὶ ἦμεν τέκνα φύτει δρύγης] Instead of continuing the construction in uniformity with ποιοῦντες by καὶ δυναστε, the apostle passes over, as at i. 20 (see on that passage), emphatically into the oratio finita, depicting, after the immoral mode of action, the unhappy condition in which withal we found ourselves. The fact that on this account ήμεν is prefixed has been left unnoticed, and hence κατ ήμεν has been either tacitly (so usually) or expressly (as by Fritzsche, Conject. p. 45, who takes ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμ. τῆς σαρκὸς ήμὸν ποιούντες κ.τ.λ. together as one clause) connected with ἐν οἷς ... ἀνεστρ. Harless regards the words as only a supplemental and more exact definition and modification of the thought expressed immediately before; but in that case an isolation of the words is needlessly assumed, and likewise the correlation of the prefixed verbs ποιούντες and ήμεν is overlooked. — τέκνα óργης are children of wrath (comp. on ver. 2), that is, however, not merely those worthy of wrath (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Castalio, Calvin, Grotius, and others), which relation of dependence is not in keeping with the context, but, as νεκρώς ταῖς παραπτ. shows, ver. 1, subject to wrath, irae obnoxii, standing under wrath (comp. v. 8; Matt. xxiii. 15; John xvii. 12). So most expositors rightly take it. To whose wrath they were subject, Paul does not indicate (for he does not write τῆς óργης, comp. Rom. xii. 19), but (comp. Rom. iv. 15) he leaves it to the reader to say for himself that it is God’s wrath he has to think of (see ver. 4). As to the wrath of God,— which here, too, is not to be understood merely of that of the future judgment (Ritschl, de ira Dei, p. 17),—the holy emotion of absolute displeasure at evil, which is necessarily posited by absolute love to the good, and is thus the necessary principle of temporal and eternal punishment on the part of God (not the punishment itself), comp. on Rom. i. 18. — φύσει] dative of the more precise mode (κατὰ φύσιν), may either attach itself merely to τέκνα (not to ήμεν), so that the idea expressed is: nature-children, τέκνα φυσικά óργης (see on such datives joined on to nouns, Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 688; Heind. ad Cratyl. p. 131); or it may more precisely define the whole notion τέκνα óργης, thus: wrath-children by nature, τέκνα óργης φυσικά; so that the τέκνα óργ., like νιώτ. ἀπειθείας, ver. 2, forms a single idea. The latter is the correct view, because τέκνα is used figuratively and receives the real contents of the conception only by means of óργης, for which reason it is not to be thought of as separated therefrom. The notion of φύσει must obtain its more precise definition solely from the context, as to whether, namely, it betokens an innate relation (as in Gal. ii. 15; Xen. Mem. i. 4. 14; Dem. 1411 ult.; Soph. Aj. 1280; O. C. 1297; Isoc. Enag. 16: τῷ μὲν γὰρ ἢν φύσει πατρίς, τὸν δὲ ... νόμῳ πολίτην ἐπεποίητο; specially instructive are Plat. Prot. p. 323 C D, Dem. 774, 7)—whether it is consequently equivalent to γενέσει, and the sonship of wrath is ἐμφύτος, a qualitas innata (Wisd. xii. 10, comp. xiii. 1, and thereon Grimm, Handb. p. 233)—or, on the other hand, a relation brought about by development of a nativa indoles, one that has been produced by virtue of natural endowment (as Rom. ii. 14; 1 Cor. xi. 14; Xen. Mem. i. 2. 14, iv. 1. 3; Plat. Legg. vi. p. 777 D; Ael. V. H. ii. 13. 3, xxii. 9. 1; see also Wetstein in loc., and Loesner, p. 340 f.). In the latter sense David is said by Josephus, Antt. vii. 7. 1, to have been φύσει δίκαιος καὶ θεοσέβης; comp. xiii. 10. 6. Philo, de conf. lingu. p. 327 E: ἀντιλογικοὶ φύσει, Xen. Oec. xx. 25: φύσει φιλοσωργάτας, Plut. Artae. 6': φύσει βαρύθυμος οὖσα, Arist. Polit. i. 1. 9: ἀνθρωποι φύσει πολιτικῶν ζῶον, and many others. According to this view, ἧμεν τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς would have to be paraphrased by: ἧμεν, τῇ φύσει χρησάμενοι, τέκνα ὀργῆς. From early times (see, already, Augustine, Retract. i. 10. 15; de verb. ap. 14) the word in our passage has been employed in defence of original sin as an inborn condition of culpability (inborn peccatum vere damnans), as indeed even Rückert, Harless, Olshausen, Usteri, 1 According to this view, there is here in the position of the words a severance (Kühner, II. p. 627) whereby the genitive is separated from its governing word (Buttm. neut. Gr. p. 332 [E. T. 387]). This hyperbaton has for its object the reserving of the whole emphasis for the closing word ἰργῆς, and letting it fall thereon. Comp. Philem. fragm. p. 354, ed. Cleric.: τῆλεν φύσι τοῖς χάριτοι viví kawí.

2 Usteri, Lehrbegr. p. 30, we may add, suspects the genuineness of φύσι, partly on account of its alleged singular position, partly on account of the various readings. But as regards the position, see above. And of various readings there are none at all, since different translations are not various readings. θύρω is omitted only in 109, Aeth. No doubt Clem. Alex. ad Gent. (Opp. ed. Pott, p. 29) is also adduced, where the passage is cited without φύσι. But in Clem. l.c. (comp. p. 560) we have no citation, but merely a free use of the passage, from which the existence of variations cannot be made good. Clement, we may add, singularly explains τίνα ἰργῆς by τριφήμια ἰργῆς, ἰργῆς δόμματα.
Julius Müller, Lechler, Philippi, Thomasius, and others have understood an inborn childship of wrath. "Paulus nos cum peccato gigni testatur, quemadmodum serpentes suum venenum ex utero afferunt," Calvin. "Hoc uno verbo, quasi fulmine, totus homo, quantus quantus est, prostermitur; neque enim naturam dicit laesam, sed mortuam per peccatum ideoque irae obnoxiam," Beza. Comp. Form. Conc. p. 639 f. But (1) the context points, in vv. 1–3, as again also in ver. 5, to an actually produced, not to an inborn state of guilt. Further, (2) if Paul had wished, after touching on the sinful action, to bring into prominence the inborn state of culpability, and so had taken the course ab effectu ad causam, φύσει would have an emphasis, which would make its critically assured position, as it stands in the Recepta, appear simply inappropriate; in fact, not even the position in Lachmann (ἡμεν φύσει τέκνα ὁργῆς) would be sufficiently in keeping, but we should be obliged logically to expect: καὶ φύσει ἡμεν τέκνα ὁργῆς, "and (already) by birth were we children of wrath," in which would lie the source of sinful action. But (3) the ecclesiastical dogma, that man is a born subject of wrath, from birth an object of the divine condemnation, is not at all a doctrine of the apostle, according to whom man by his actual sin falls under the wrath of God (Rom. i. 18, ii. 8, 9, vii. 7 f., al.), inasmuch, namely, as he becomes subject to and follows the inborn principle of sin (Rom. vii. 14 ff.), in opposition to his moral will, which he likewise by nature bears in himself; in connection with which, we may add, bodily death has its causal basis not in the individual sin of the particular persons, but in the connection of the whole race with the fall and death-penalty of its first progenitor (see on Rom. v. 12). And (4) how could Paul, speaking of the Jews, predicate of them an inborn childship of wrath, when he regarded them as κλάδους ἀγίους τῆς πίστες ἀγίας (Rom. xi. 16)! They were in fact οἱ κατὰ φύσιν κλάδοι of the sacred olive-tree of the theocracy (Rom. xi. 21); how could they be at the same time the opposite (observe the κατὰ φύσιν), ἄνρ μνήμα ὀργῆς? See also Gal. ii. 15, where the φύσει Ἰουδαίοι are opposed to the εξ ἐθνῶν ἀμαρτωλοί,1 as well as Rom. ix. 4, where of them is predicated the possession of the νικηφορία, consequently the type of the Christian childship of God, whereof the inborn childship of wrath would be the direct opposite. See, generally, on the sanctity of the people of God, Ewald, Alterth. p. 262 ff. Several have found in φύσει the sense: "apart from the special relation in which they as Israelites stood to God" (Thomasius, I. p. 289); but this is just a mere saving clause obtruded on the text, in connection with which there is nevertheless retained the un-Pauline conception of born liability to wrath, consequently of condemnation from the very first, without any personal participation and contracting of guilt, before one yet knows sin (Rom. vii. 7). This remark also holds in opposition to the essentially similar interpretation in Hofmann, p. 565, comp. Schmid, bibl. Theol. II. p. 274, and Julius Müller, v. d. Sünde, p. 377 f. Further, (5) if Paul had thought of an inborn liability to wrath, he could not have regarded even the children of Christians as holy and pure (1 Cor. vii. 14); and infant baptism must have been already ordained in the N. T., and that, indeed, with the absolute necessity, which had to be subsequently assigned to it in consistency with the elaboration of the dogma of original sin bringing eternal condemnation on every one born by ordinary generation. The explanation of an inborn state of wrath (which also does not tally with the fact that Jesus promises the kingdom of heaven to those who should be like children, Matt. xviii. 2 f., xix. 14 f.) is accordingly to be rejected as opposed to the context and un-Pauline; and φύσει defines the childship of wrath to the effect, that it has arisen in virtue of natural constitution (observe the just-mentioned ἐπιθυμεῖν τῆς σαρκός, comp. the νόμος ἐν τοῖς μέλεσι, which overcomes the moral law in man, Rom. vii. 23, 24). Certainly man is born with this natural, sinful quality, i.e. with the principle of sin, by the awakening and development of which the moral will is vanquished (Rom. vii.; comp. also John iii. 6); it is not, however, the mere fact of this inborn presence having its basis in his σάρξ, that in and of itself\(^1\) makes him the child of wrath (comp. Beyschlag, Christol. d. N. T. p. 207), but he only becomes so, when that constitution of his moral nature, that mingling of two opposite principles in his natural disposition, has—which, however, is the case with every one (Rom. iii. 9, xi. 32; Gal. iii. 22)—brought about the victory of the sin-principle, and thereby the σαρκικὸν and πεπραμένον ἐντὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν εἶναι (Rom. vii. 14).\(^2\) Others, such as Erasmus, Balduin, Bengel, Morus, Koppe, Stolz, Flatt, Matthies, de Wette, Bleek (comp. also Weber, vom Zorn Gottes, p. 88), have explained it of the so-called natural state of man, i.e. of the state of the pre-Christian life, which was as yet aloof from the influence of χάρις (ver. 5 ff.) and of the Holy Spirit; but in this way, properly speaking, nothing is explained; for while the whole description, and not merely φύσις, delineates “the natural state in which the redemptive activity of God found the nations” (de Wette), in connection with φύσις there always remains the special question, whether the “by nature” denotes an inborn relation to wrath or not. Holzhausen would even combine φύσις ὀργής (“wrath which comes from the ungodly nature-life”),—a view from which, even if φύσις meant nature-life,

\(^1\) The objection of Lechler, p. 107 (comp. Philippi, Dogm. III. p. 205 f.)—that my explanation, inasmuch as the sinful disposition is inborn, thereby after all conceives the traditional Church-view—overlooks the essential distinction, that it is only according to the latter that man is born as object of the divine wrath; whereas, according to my view, the natural disposition to sin does not yet in and by itself make him such an object of wrath, but he becomes so only through the setting in of actual sin, which, it is true, does not fail to emerge in any one who lives long enough to be able to sin. According to the traditional view, even the newly-born unconscious child is already guilty and liable to the Divine wrath; so that in this way the imputation attaches itself not merely to the perpetration of sin, but even to the occasion to sin, which every one has by nature. This is, so far as I can see, exegetically incompatible with the anthropological teachings of the apostle elsewhere, especially with his exposition in Rom. vii. 7 f. Only with the actual sin, according to Paul, is the guilt connected, and consequently the wrath of God. An inborn guilt is not taught by the apostle; as is rightly brought out by Ernesti, but is only hesitatingly hinted at by Bleek.

\(^2\) Through Christian regeneration the moral will attains, by virtue of the Spirit (Rom. viii. 2), the ascendency in man, and he becomes therewith qualitatively υἱὸς ζωῆς φύσις, 2 Pet. i. 4, and μεταλλαξάντως τοῦ ἁρίστου τῷ Θεῷ, Heb. xii. 10. Comp. 1 John v. 18.
the very absence of any article ought in itself to have precluded him; τῆς τῇ φύσει ὄργῆς, or τῆς ἐκ τῆς φύσ. ὄργῆς, or the like, must have been used. Moreover, Cyril, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Grotius, erroneously hold φύσει as equivalent to ἄληθῶς (comp. others in Jerome, who take it as prorsus), which it never is, not even in Gal. iv. 8, to which Grotius appeals. Lastly, in a quite peculiar way Ernesti, Urspr. d. Sünde, II. p. 174 ff., obtains the exact opposite of a born liability to wrath by conducting his interpretation so as to enclose τέκνα φύσει within two commas, and to connect ὄργης with ἡμεν: “We were in consequence of our actual sinfulness, although children [of God in the Israelitish sense, Rom. ix. 4] by nature, liable to wrath even as the Gentiles;” according to which, therefore, ἡμεν ὄργης is explained from the well-known usage of εἶναι τῶν in the sense of “belonging to.” But it may be decisively urged against this view, first, that the supplying the thought of Θεοῦ after τέκνα (as Isa. lxiii. 8; Rom. viii. 17; Gal. iv. 6) is not in any way suggested by the context, but is purely arbitrary, and the more so, inasmuch as there is already in the text a genitive which offers itself to complete the notion of τέκνα; and secondly, that there is nothing to indicate the contrast assumed by Ernesti (although, etc.), for in order to write in some measure intelligibly, Paul must at least have said: καὶ ἡμεν τέκνα μὲν φύσει, ὄργης δὲ, although this, too, on account of the absence of a definition to τέκνα, would have been enigmatic enough. Equally to be rejected is the quite similar interpretation of Nickel (in Reuter's Repert. 1860, Oct., p. 16), who explains as though the words ran: καὶ ἡμεν Θεοῦ μὲν τέκνα φύσει, ὄργης δὲ τέκνα.—ὡς καὶ οἱ λοιποί] σι. ἡσαν. The λοιποί are the Gentiles (Rom. iii. 9; 1 Thess. iv. 13), and καὶ is not adhue (Grotius), but the also of comparison.

Ver. 4. Now begins, after the intervening clauses, vv. 2, 3, the resumption, and that with the subject, which Paul already had in mind at ver. 1. See on ver. 1. It is not, however, by οὖν, but by δὲ, that the thought is taken up again, because that which is now to be spoken of (the abundant compassion of God) stands in an adversative relation to what has been said in the relative clauses. See Klotz, ad Devar. p. 377. — πλοῦσιος οὖν ἐν θλίπτει κ.τ.λ.] The connection is: God, however, since He is rich in mercy, has for His much love's sake made us... alive in Christ. As to the distinction between ἐλεος and ὀικτομός, see on Rom. ix. 15. The manifestation of the divine love thereby meant is the atoning death of Christ, in which, in pursuance of the abundance of the divine compassion, the great love of God communicated itself to us. Ver. 5. The καὶ is not to be taken as in ver. 1 ("also us collectively," Meier, Baumgarten-Crusius, and earlier expositors), which, apart from the universal reference of the ἡμᾶς, the order of the words forbids (καὶ ἡμᾶς must have been written), according to which, also, the καὶ of ver. 1 can by no means be here resumed (Rückert, Matthies, Holzhausen, and most of the older expositors); further, καὶ is not, with Koppe, to be taken as although, seeing that, in fact, a making alive cannot take place otherwise than from a state of death, and consequently καὶ cannot convey any climactic stress, on which account Harless explains incorrectly from a logical point of view: "even in the state of death, in which we were" (comp. Calvin and de Wette). Erasmus paraphrases as though καὶ stood before συνεξοφων., and even the shift to which Morus has recourse, that καὶ corresponds to the καὶ of ver. 6 (non modo... verum etiam), would demand this position. Others give other explanations, and many are silent with regard to it. If καὶ were also, it would have to be referred to διὰ τῆς; and

1 The great love of God, who is rich in mercy towards the wretched, was the motive for not leaving them to their misery, but, etc. The ἡμᾶς is thus related to the ἀγάπη as the species to the genus.

2 For, as to the fact that καὶ, also, always lays the stress upon that word, would express the reality of the relation asserted in ver. 1 (Hartung, I. p. 132 f.). But there would be nothing to call for the assurance of this reality. It is rather the simple copula: and, annexing to the διὰ τ. πολλ. ἄγ. ἂν ἂν. ἡμ. a further element. The two elements, side by side, place in the full light what God has done. God has, on account of His much love, and when we were dead in the sins, made us alive with Christ. The καὶ might also be omitted; but the keeping of the points thus apart strengthens the representation. — τῶν παραπτ. The article denotes the sins, which we had committed, with a retrospective glance at ver. 1. — συνέζωοντοις τῶν Χρ.] is by most expositors (including Flatt, Rückert, Meier, Matthies, Harless, Olshausen, de Wette, Baumgarten-Crusius, Schenkel, Hofmann, Bleek) understood of new spiritual quickening (“justificationem et regenerationem nostram complectitur,” Boyd; Rückert would have us think mainly of the justification). But how is this to be justified from the context? If the reader was reminded by νεκρῶν τῶν παραπτ. of the eternal death, to which he had been subjected by his pre-Christian life of sin (see on ver. 1), he would now have to think of the eternal life, which begins with the resurrection, and he could the less think of anything else than of this real resurrection-life, since afterwards there is further expressed the translation together into heaven, and then, in ver. 7, the intention of God is referred to the times after the Parousia. And had not already i. 18 f. pointed definitely to the future κληρονομία? How, in this connection, could a reader light upon the merely ethical, spiritual quickening (Rom. vi. 4 f.; 2 Cor. v. 15; Gal. ii. 19 f.)? No, God has made believers alive with Christ; i.e. in Christ’s revivification, which God has wrought, theirs also is included. By virtue of the dynamic connection in which Christ stands with His believers, as the head with its body (i. 23), their revivification is objectively comprehended in His,—a relation, in fact, of which the Christian is conscious in faith; “quum autem fides suscipitur, ea omnia a Deo appellantur homini, et ab homine rata before which it stands, see Haupt, Obs. Crit. p. 55 ff. Klotz, ad Devar. p. 638.

1 Bleek describes this view of mine as probably the correct one, and follows it.
habentur," Bengel. So the matter stands in the view of the apostle as accomplished, because the making alive of Christ is accomplished; the future actual making alive, or, as the case may be, change at the Parousia (1 Cor. xv. 23), is then the subjective individual participation of that which is already objectively given on the part of God in the resurrection of Christ. Certainly Paul might, in accordance with another mode of looking at it, have expressed himself by the future, as at 1 Cor. xv. 22; cf. Rom. viii. 17; but who does not feel that by means of the aorist ("ponitur autem aoristus de re, quae, quamvis futura sit, tamen pro peracta recte censeatur, cum . . . alia re jam facta continetur," Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 206) the matter stands forth more forcibly and triumphantly out of the believing conviction of the apostle? ὑπό συνέξωσις τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ἐνώπιον τοῦ, Rom. viii. 30. — The σίν in συνεξωσις is by Beza, erroneously referred to the coagamentatio gentium et Judaeorum, a reference which is forbidden by the τῷ Χριστῷ; and by Grotius, Koppe, Rosenmüller, and others, it is explained od exemplum (comp. Anselm: sicut), by which the Pauline idea of fellowship with Christ, which also lay at the bottom of i. 19, is quite arbitrarily explained away. — Comp. on Col. ii. 13; Rom. viii. 17; 2 Tim. ii. 12. — χάριτι εστε σεσωσμεν. by grace (not by merit) are ye partakers of the Messianic salvation! an impassioned (hence expressed in the second person), parenthetic reminding the readers of the divine basis of the salvation which had accrued to them, designated by συνεξωσις; a reminding, which was very natural for the apostle in general (for its tenor was the sum of his doctrine and the constant echo of his own experience, 1 Cor. xv. 10), and more especially here, where he represents the quickening of believers as accomplished with the making alive of Christ, which could not but repel even the most distant thought of personal merit. In connection with συνεξωσις. τ. Χρ. the possession of the Messianic bliss is designated as an already accomplished fact, although it was before the Parousia (Col. iii. 3 f.) merely a possession in hope (Rom. viii. 24), and the final realization was yet future (Rom. v. 10). That the χάριτι emphatically placed at the beginning (for "gratiam esse docet proram et puppim," Bengel) means the grace of God, not of Christ (Beza; comp. the inserted $\Theta$ in D* E F G, Vulg. It. Victorin. Aug. Ambrosiaster), is manifest from the context, in which God is constantly the subject.

Ver. 6. After the making alive of Christ in the grave followed His resurrection, with which Paul regards that of believers as likewise accomplished. Hence: καὶ συνήγειρε, which in like manner is not to be taken in the spiritual sense ("to make them enter upon the new life of grace," Rückert); but see on ver. 5. With strange inconsistency several expositors, such as Menochius, Zanchius, Boyd, Estius, Grotius, although taking σωζοντες metaphorically, nevertheless have taken this συνήγειρε (as well as the element that follows) in a literal sense, and mentally supplied nempe spe, or the like. — καὶ συνεκάθισεν ἐν τοῖς ἑπτούμην] and has given to us joint-seat in the heavenly regions (comp. i. 20), so that we have part (see on 1 Cor. vi. 2) in the dominion of the Exalted One (2 Tim. ii. 12); which Paul likewise sees as already accomplished1 with the installing of Christ at the right hand of God; hence, there was no need at all for supplying the thought jure et virtute spirituali (Bengel), or for a transference of the matter to the praescientia Dei (Jerome), and other such expedients. — ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ belongs to συνήγειρε and συνεκάθισεν ἐν τοῖς ἑπτούμην, so that what was expressed in the case of σωζοντες by (σωζεί) τῷ Χριστῷ, is here expressed, in yet more exact conception of the relation, by (σωζεί) ἐν Χριστῷ (jointly in Christ). Inasmuch, namely, as God raised and exalted Christ (ἐν Χριστῷ), He has raised and exalted us with Him. ἐν Χριστῷ accordingly is by no means intended to denote the συγκαθίζειν as figurative (Olshausen). — On ἐν τοῖς ἐπουραν. (see on i. 3) Bengel, we may add (comp. already Estius), aptly remarks: "non dicit in dextra; Christo sua manet excellentia." The transitive συγκαθίζειν is not elsewhere preserved.

1 Explanations in the spiritual sense. Calixtus: "Ea nobis dedit dona, quae cibus coelorum propria sunt." Rosenmüller: "Summa felicitate nos ornavit, quasi jam in coelo essemus recepti." Rückert and Bleek remind us of the σαλεύμα of Christians, which is in heaven (Phil. iii. 20; comp. Col. iii. 1 ff.). Meier: "Exaltation into a celestially enlightened, pure and holy, state of life." Matthies: "The spiritual kingdom of heaven or of God." Olshausen: "The awakening of the heavenly consciousness." Koppe remarks superficially and with hesitation: "Nobis quidem in omnibus his ζωομίσθαι, ἑσπονθαι, κατανεωσαι, nihil inesse videtur nisi summam et universam felicitatim, qua Christiani vel jam fruuntur, vel olim magis etiam fruitoris sunt, descriptio." According to Baumgarten-Crusius, there is expressed "exaltation into a purely spiritual heavenly-like state." De Wette takes συνήγειρε. of the deliverance out of the misery of sin, σωζοντες of regeneration and, at the same time, of the resurrection of the body guaranteed in the spiritual life, and συνήγειρε. σαλεύμα of the hope of the eternal life. Schenkel interprets it of the presentiment of the future glory.

Ver. 7. Aim of God in connection with what is said, vv. 5, 6. — ἵνα ἐνδείξηται prefixed with emphasis: in order—not to leave concealed and unknown, but—to exhibit and make manifest, etc. Comp. Rom. ix. 23. — ἐν τοῖς αἰῶνι τοῖς ἐπερχ. in the ages coming on, i.e. in the times after the Parousia, as being already on the approach (comp. LXX. Isa. xliv. 7, xlv. 11; Judith ix. 5; 3 Macc. v. 2; Luke xxi. 26; Jas. v. 1; Hom. Od. xxiv. 142; Thuc. i. 126; Plat. Soph. p. 234 D; Aesch. Prom. 98: τὸ παρόν τὸ τ’ ἐπερχόμενον, Pind. Ol. x. 11: ἔκαθεν γὰρ ἐπελθὼν ὁ μέλλων χρόνος). In the times from the Parousia (conceived as near at hand) onward, the manifestation designed by God of His grace towards believers was to take place, because not before, but only after the Parousia, would the making alive of the believers, etc., implicitly contained in the making alive of Christ, be actually accomplished in the subjects. Incorrect, seeing that the apostle was previously speaking, not of the spiritual, but of the real resurrection, etc., is the rendering of Moras: "per omne vestrum tempus reliquum quum in hac vita tum in futura quoque," as well as that of Wolf (comp. Calvin, Piscator, Boyd, Estius, Calixtus, Michaelis, Zachariae, Meier, Matthies, Baumgarten-Crusius, Bleek): "tempora inde ab apostolicis illis ad finem mundi secutura." Koppe brings out, "ut aeternum duraturum argumentum extaret," which is quite mistaken, since, while it is true that the αἰῶνες οἱ ἐπερχόμενοι are eternal times, the words do not signify tempora aeternum futura. Respecting the plural τοῖς αἰῶνι, comp. on iii. 21. To infer from this that the setting in of the Messianic period will not be accomplished suddenly, but by way of successive development (Schenkel), is in variance with the whole N. T. The future αἰῶν sets in through the Parousia very suddenly and in an instant, Matt. xxvii. 27; 1 Cor. xv. 52, al. Hence we have not mentally to supply with ἐνδείξῃ anything like: "ever more completely" (Flatt), or "ever more effectively" (Schenkel), which is sheer caprice. — The form τὸ πλοῦτος is here also decisively attested. See on i. 7. — ἐν χρηστότητι ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ] is to be taken together, and the instrumental ἐν indicates by what God will manifest the exceeding great riches of His grace in the ages to come, by kindness towards us in Christ Jesus, i.e. by means of the fact that He shows Himself gracious towards us, of which the ground lies in Christ (not in us, see ver. 8). The article was not at all requisite before ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, since χρηστότητι is anarthrous, and besides χρηστότης ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, like χρηστόν ἐλατ ἐφ' ἡμᾶς (Luke vi. 35), can be closely joined together in thought. Comp. on i. 15. — The χάρις is the source of the χρηστότης, which latter displays itself in forgiving (comp. Prayer of Manass. 11; Tit. iii. 4; Rom. ii. 4) and in benefiting, and therefore is the evidence of the former, the opposite of ἀποτομα, Rom. xi. 22. Comp. Tittmann, Synon. p. 195; van Hengel, ad Rom. Ver. 8. How entirely was I justified in saying: τὸ ἐπερβάλλων πλοῦτος τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ! for, etc. Thus Paul now expresses himself with more detail as to the great truth, of which his heart was so full that it had already, ver. 5, interrupted the course of his address. — τῇ χάριτι] by the grace. By the article the divine grace just now spoken of is indicated, after it had been meant doubtless by the anarthrous χάρις, ver. 5, but designated by it only as regards the category (by grace). — διὰ τῆς πίστεως] for the faith in the atonement made by Christ (Rom. iii. 25, 30, al.) is, as the causa apprehendens of the Messianic salvation, the necessary mediate instrument on the part of man, while the χάρις is the divine motive, the causa efficiens of the bestowal. The emphasis, however, is retained by τῇ χάριτι alone, and διὰ τῆς πίστεως only the modal definition to σεσωμ. — καὶ τοῦτο οὐκ ἐξ ὑμῶν κ.τ.λ.] Nothing is here to be treated as parenthesis; neither the whole καὶ τοῦτο down to ἥγαν, ver. 9 (Griesbach, Scholz), nor merely Ὑσὺ τὸ δῶρον (Lachmann, Harless, de Wette), since neither the construction nor the course of thought is interrupted. καὶ τοῦτο is referred by the Fathers in Suicer, Thea. comp. Phil. i. 29; 2 Cor. iv. 14. In that case kal touto... δώρον would have to be taken parenthetically. But how violent is this taking to pieces of the text, since οὐκ ἐξ ὑμῶν and οὐκ ἐξ ἐργῶν present themselves in a manner alike natural and weighty as elements belonging to one flow of the discourse! Rightly, therefore, have Calvin, Calovius, Baumgarten, Semler, Zachariae, Morus, and others, including Rückert, Matthies, Holzhausen, Harless, de Wette, Schenkel, Bleek, referred it to the salvation just designated as regards its specific mode. Paul very earnestly and emphatically enters into more detailed explanations as to what he had just said, τῇ γὰρ χάριτι κ.τ.λ., namely to the effect, that he briefly and forcibly places in the light of the respective contrasts, first, that objective element of the saving deliverance which has taken place (τῇ χάριτι) by οὐκ ἐξ ὑμῶν, Θεοῦ τὸ δώρον, and then the subjective element (διὰ τῆς πίστεως), by οὐκ ἐξ ἐργῶν ἵνα μ. τ. καυχ. His thought is: "Through grace you are in possession of salvation by means of faith, and that to the exclusion of your own causation and operative agency." This latter he expresses with the vivacity and force of contrast thus: "and that (kal touto, see on Rom. xiii. 11) not from you, it is God's gift; not from works, in order that no one may boast." The asyndetic juxtaposition takes place with a "propria quadam vi, alacritate, gravitate," Dissen, Exc. II. ad Pind. p. 273. — οὐκ ἐξ ὑμῶν] negatives their own personal authorship of the salvation (Ellendt, Lex. Soph. I. p. 551 f.). — Θεοῦ τὸ δώρον] i.e. Θεοῦ δώρον τὸ δώρον, God's gift is the gift in question (namely, the σωσιμένον εἶναι). Comp. already Bengel. — οὐκ ἐξ ἐργῶν] Parallel of οὐκ ἐξ ὑμῶν, hence to be completed by ἐστὲ σωσιμένοι (not by τὸ δώρον ἐστὶ), not from work-merit does it come that you have the salvation. The ἐργα would exclude the πίστις as the subjective condition of salvation (Rom. iii. 28, iv. 5, ix. 32; Gal. ii. 16, iii. 2), as ἐξ ὑμῶν would exclude the χάρις as the objective cause of salvation, because it presupposes the ἴδια δικαιοσύνη (Rom. x. 3). No doubt ἐξ ἐργῶν excludes also the χάρις, as does likewise ἐξ ὑμῶν exclude the πίστις; but the two elements opposed to the χάρις and the πίστις are, on occasion of the proposition τῇ γὰρ χάριτι... πίστεως, held apart after the manner of a formal parallelism. That, moreover, the notion of the ἐργα is determined not merely by the Jewish law, but—inasmuch as the readers were for the most part Gentile-Christians—also by the natural law (Rom. ii. 14 f.), is self-evident. The proposition in itself, however, οὐκ ἐξ ἐργῶν, is so essential and universally valid a fundamental proposition of the Pauline Gospel, and certainly so often expressed by the apostle among Jews and Gentiles, that the severe judgment as to its having no meaning, when laid down without reference to the Mosaic law, must appear unfounded (in opposition to de Wette). — [ἐνα] design of God in the relation indicated by οὐκ ἐξ ἐργῶν, not ecbatic (Koppe, Flatt, Holzhausen). Comp. 1 Cor. i. 29, 31, and as regards the thing itself, Rom. iii. 27. Grotius aptly says: "quicquid est in flumine, fonti debetur," which, however, is not to be limited merely to the prima gratia. See ver. 10; 2 Cor. x. 17; 1 Cor. xv. 10.

Ver. 10. Reason assigned for the previous οὐκ ἔξ ὑμῶν . . . καὐχήσο. If, namely, we are God's ποίημα, our Messianic salvation cannot be of our own acquiring, but only God's gift; and if we are created in Christ unto good works, how could merit of works (which would need to have been already acquired in the time anterior to this our creation) be the cause of our salvation, and subject of our own boasting? The argumentative stress lies consequently (1) on αὐτοῦ, and (2) on κτισθέντες; and then ἕς προητόμασεν κ.τ.λ. is an elucidation significantly bearing on κτισθέντες ἐν Χ. Ἰ. ἐπὶ ἐργ. ἤγ., which makes the impossibility of pre-Christian merit of works thoroughly palpable.—αὐτοῦ] with emphasis: His, just His work, and no other's, are we. Comp. Hom. Marc. v. 17, Gregory of Nazianzus, Basil, and Photius would have it, to the physical creation (the spiritual being only introduced by κτισθέντες κ.τ.λ.), which is opposed to the context, as is also the combination of the two creations by Pelagius, Erasmus, Matthies, and Rückert: "as Christians we . . . are God's work just as well, as in respect of our being men at all.” Only the form, in which the constituting of the new condition of life is expressed, is derived from the physical creation. — ἐπιστέψεις by God at our conversion.— ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ] for εἴ τις ἐν Χριστῷ, καὶ ἡ κτίσις, 2 Cor. v. 17; Gal. vi. 15. On the thing itself, comp. Rom. viii. That, by which God prepares what is created by Him in Christ for this moral end, is the Holy Spirit, Rom. viii.; Gal. iii. 2; John iii. 5 f. Good works (not ἐργα νῦμον) are fruits of regeneration, different from εργαν, ver. 9.— ὅς προητοιμ. ὁ ὒθεω] ὅς is to be taken, according to the usual attraction (see Winer, p. 147 f. [E. T. 203]), for ὃ (Syriac, Gothic, Vulgate, Castalio, Beza, Calvin, Piscator, Estius, Grotius, and others, including Harless, Matthies, Holzhausen, Olshausen, de Wette, Lamping, p. 87 f.; Bleek): which God hath before (previously to the κτισθέντες) placed in readiness, in order that we might walk in them, that they might be the element in which our life-walk should take place (τὴν ἐπὶ αὐτῶς ἀπαντῶν σχέσιν δηλοί, Oecumenius). The prefixed προητ. has in the circumstances significant emphasis. Paul conceives, namely, of the morally good works in which the walk of the Christian moves, as being already, even before his conversion, placed in readiness (Plut. Mor. p. 230 E; Joseph. Antt. xvii. 5, 6; LXX. Isa. xxviii. 24; Wisd. ix. 8) by God, namely, in His decree. And this could not be the case, if God would create unto good works. For, if the converted man is God’s creature, then the moral activity of life, in which the specific nature of the καὶ ἡ κτίσις is to manifest itself, and without which he would not be God’s ποιήμα and κτίσις, must likewise proceed from God; consequently, when the moral creative act (the regeneration) is accomplished, must already in God’s counsel and will be in such wise prepared and held ready for communication, that it has to receive the new creature from its Creator, and in this way to work the works of God. Thus these good works following regeneration are as it were outflowings from a divine treasure beforehand placed in readiness, from which the regenerate man has received them, when he does them and walks in them.\textsuperscript{1} The sense of the word \textit{προετοιμάζεων} is changed, if it is explained only as \textit{to predestine} (Augustine and others, including Harless, Lamping), which would be expressed by \textit{προορίζεων} (see Fritzche, \textit{ad} Rom. II. p. 339); and it is rationalized away, when Olshausen says that the circumstances and relations, under which it is possible to men to perform good works, are ordained by God. It is not of the circumstances which render the works possible, but of the works themselves, that Paul affirms that God has before placed them in readiness; as accordingly, when they are accomplished, it is God who works the willing and working (Phil. ii. 13).

According to Hofmann, \textit{Schriftbew.} II. 1, p. 365, II. 2, p. 294, the good works are once for all present in Christ, so that they need not to be brought forth first by us the individuals, but are produced beforehand, in order that our fellowship with Christ may be also a fellowship of His conduct—that our walk in \textit{Him} may be a walk in \textit{them}. But in this way Paul would have left the very point of the thought in \textit{προετοιμάζω} (namely, in Christ) unexpressed. Others take \textit{οὐς} as dative of the destination: unto which God hath prepared us (Luther, Clericus, Semler, Michaelis, Zachariae, Morus, Flatt, Meier, Schenkel, and others). In this case, \textit{ίνα εὖ αὐτοῖς περίπτ.} would by no means be a redundant and feeble tautology, as Harless supposes, but an emphatic epexegetis of \textit{οὐς}. But against this view it may be urged that Paul must necessarily, because the verb would be quite objectless, have added \textit{ἡμᾶς};\textsuperscript{2} the omission of which, considering the frequency of the attraction of \textit{οὐς} for \textit{ἡ}, could only have led the reader astray; moreover, \textit{πρὸ} would receive no emphasis accordant with the prefixing of \textit{προετοιμάζω}, inasmuch as the time of the \textit{προετοιμάζεων} would coincide with that of the \textit{κτίσεων}. Valla and Erasmus take \textit{οὐς} as masculine: for whom He hath before appointed, that we, etc., to which also Ruckert, although hesitating between this and the preceding explanation, is

\textsuperscript{2} This also in opposition to Calovius, who takes \textit{οὐς} in the ablative sense: "quidus, sc. hactenus dictis . . . per justificationem et renovationem, prae- paravit vel disposuit (nos), \textit{ut in operibus bonis ambulemus}."

1 The sense of the word \textit{προετοιμάζεων} is changed, if it is explained only as \textit{to predestine} (Augustine and others, including Harless, Lamping), which would be expressed by \textit{προορίζεων} (see Fritzche, \textit{ad} Rom. II. p. 339); and it is rationalized away, when Olshausen says that the circumstances and relations, under which it is possible to men to perform good works, are ordained by God. It is not of the circumstances which render the works possible, but of the works themselves, that Paul affirms that God has before placed them in readiness; as accordingly, when they are accomplished, it is God who works the willing and working (Phil. ii. 13).

According to Hofmann, \textit{Schriftbew.} II. 1, p. 365, II. 2, p. 294, the good works are once for all present in Christ, so that they need not to be brought forth first by us the individuals, but are produced beforehand, in order that our fellowship with Christ may be also a fellowship of His conduct—that our walk in \textit{Him} may be a walk in \textit{them}. Others take \textit{οὐς} as dative of the destination: unto which God hath prepared us (Luther, Clericus, Semler, Michaelis, Zachariae, Morus, Flatt, Meier, Schenkel, and others). In this case, \textit{ίνα εὖ αὐτοῖς περίπτ.} would by no means be a redundant and feeble tautology, as Harless supposes, but an emphatic epexegetis of \textit{οὐς}. But against this view it may be urged that Paul must necessarily, because the verb would be quite objectless, have added \textit{ἡμᾶς};\textsuperscript{2} the omission of which, considering the frequency of the attraction of \textit{οὐς} for \textit{ἡ}, could only have led the reader astray; moreover, \textit{πρὸ} would receive no emphasis accordant with the prefixing of \textit{προετοιμάζω}, inasmuch as the time of the \textit{προετοιμάζεων} would coincide with that of the \textit{κτίσεων}. Valla and Erasmus take \textit{οὐς} as masculine: for whom He hath before appointed, that we, etc., to which also Ruckert, although hesitating between this and the preceding explanation, is inclined. But how arbitrarily in this way is ὁς referred to what is more remote and different from αὐτοῖς! and how changed is the literal sense of προετοιμάζων! Quite arbitrary and erroneous, finally, is the view of Bengel, Koppe, and Rosenmüller, as also of Baumgarten-Crusius, that it is to be explained per Hebraismum (see, on the other hand, Fritzsche, ad Matth. p. 139) for ἐν ὁς ἐνα περιπατήσωμεν προητ. ὁ Θεός, in which case Koppe and Rosenmüller make προετοιμάζων equivalent to velle, jubere!—According to Schwegler, in Zeller's Jahrb. 1844, p. 391; Baur, Paulus, p. 453, and de Wette, there is to be discovered in our passage the post-apostolic tendency to combine the doctrine of Paul (πίστις εὐγενής) with the Jewish-Christian view (that of James) concerning good works. As though the works were not in our passage too, as in all Pauline Epistles, based upon faith (observe, withal, ἐν Χ. Ἰ.)!—The Pauline faith has always moral practice as its necessary vital activity, and this is consequently always the aim (not: ultimate aim) of the new creation wrought through faith by means of the Spirit. We may add that the good works, even at our passage,—where, moreover, they are traced back wholly to God as the author,—are so far from being the condition of justification, that, on the contrary, the dogmatic canon here receives full confirmation: "Bona opera non praecedunt justificandum, sed sequuntur justificatum." Comp. Calovius. Aptly does Bengel remark on περιπατ. : "ambularemus, non salvaremur aut viveremus." The assertion, that here (and in Colossians) much greater importance is ascribed to good works than in the other letters of the apostle (Baur, neut. Theol. p. 270), is, looking even to vv. 7–9, incorrect.

Ver. 11. ἄλλο] Therefore, because such exalted and unmerited benefits have been imparted to us (vv. 4–10). These benefits should move the reader to remember his former miserable heathen state (ποτέ, v. 8; Col. i. 21), in order the more gratefully to appreciate, by contrast with the past, the value of his present state.—ὅτι ποτὲ ὑμεῖς ὑπὲρ ἑθνὸν ἐν σαρκί] Neither ἤτε nor ὃντε is to be supplied, but (observe the order critically vouched for: ποτὲ ὑμεῖς) ὅτι is taken up again by the ὅτι of ver. 12, and ποτέ by τῷ καρπῷ ἔκεινον, ver. 12; while τὰ ἑβυν ἐν σαρκὶ is a descriptive definition to ὑμεῖς, to which it is related by way of apposition, and οἱ λεγόμενοι κ.τ.λ. is attributive definition to ὑμεῖς τὰ ἑβυν ἐν σαρκὶ: that at one time ye, the Gentiles in the flesh, ye who (quippe qui) were named Foreskin...that ye at that time, etc.—τὰ ἑβυν ἐν σαρκὶ] is closely connected as one conception, and hence without the article before ἑβυν. This ἑβυν σαρκὶ is, as to its meaning, necessarily defined by the undoubted meaning of the following ἑν σαρκι; on which account it is neither to be taken, as a contrast to regeneration, of the former unholy life of the readers (Ambrosiaster, Calovius, Wolf, Holzhausen), nor as origine carnali, natalibus (Bucer, Grotius, Estius, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt), nor is it to be generalized into respectu status externi (Morus). It has reference to the foreskin. In the flesh, on account of the non-circumcised foreskin, the character ethnicus was inherent.—The τὰ ἑβυν ἐν σ., with the article, designates the readers as to their category. The contempt, however, incurred in their pre-Christian state lies not in τὰ ἑβυν ἐν σ. (for this they still remained), but in the following οἱ λεγόμενοι κ.τ.λ.; although we may not, by mentally supplying (with Chrysostom and his successors) the contrast οὐκ ἐν πνεύματι, make ἑν σαρκὶ into an element of recommendation.—οἱ λεγόμενοι...χειροπ.] is not to be placed in a parenthesis (Griesbach, Scholz), seeing that it is a continued description of the Gentile state of the readers. As the ἑβυν τῆ σαρκὶ, they were those designated by the name Foreskin! And, then, the delineation of this despised relation is brought to a yet higher climax when it is specified by whom they were thus reproachfully designated, namely, by the so-called Circumcision, which is made in the flesh with the hand. So low was the position you occupied! By those who bear the name of this surgical operation performed on the flesh (counterpart of the ideal circumcision, Rom. ii. 28 f.; Phil. iii. 3; Col. ii. 11; Acts vii. 51), and hence have by it in and of itself no pre-eminence at all, you must allow yourselves to be designated, for want of this external rite, with the reproachful name of Foreskin! ἐν σαρκὶ χειροπ. does not pertain to λεγομ., but is an addition of the apostle himself to περιτ., describing how the matter stands. The abstracta ἀκροβ. and do not here stand pro concretis, but are stated names, by which the concretes were in accordance with their peculiar character designated. Comp. 2 Thess. ii. 4: ἐπὶ πάντα λεγόμενον Θεὸν ἡ σέβασμα. The circumstance that Paul, instead of ἐπὶ τῆς λεγομένης, has not again employed the plural expression ἐπὶ τῶν λεγομένων, is to be explained by the fact that he wishes to indicate the περιτομή as a name, which is not adequate to the idea of it in the case of the subjects so termed: by the so-called circumcision. The expression is depreciatory (comp. 1 Cor. viii. 5) as concerns the people who bore the name περιτομή; whereas οἱ λεγόμενοι ἄκροβυστα would indicate not the conception of “so-called,” but, in a purely objective manner, the mentioned fact: “those called Foreskin” (Heb. ix. 3).

Ver. 12. As regards the construction, see on ver. 11.—τῷ καιρῷ ἐκείνῳ] takes the place of the ποτέ, ver. 11, and means the pre-Christian, heathen period of the readers. On the dative of time without ἐν, see Winer, p. 195 f. [E. T. 273 f.]. —χριστοῦ] aloof from connection with Christ; for “χριστοῦ ad subjectum, quod ab objecto sejunctum est, re-fertur,” Tittmann, Synon. p. 94. It is dependent on ἢ as its first sad predicate, and does not belong, as a more precise definition, to the subject (“when ye were as yet without Christ,” Bleek), in which case it would in fact be entirely self-evident and superfluous. In how far the readers as Gentiles were without Christ, we are told in the sequel. They stood afar off and aloof from the theocratic bond, in which Christ would have been to them, in accordance with the promise, the object of their faith and ground of their salvation. If Paul had wished to express merely the negation of the Christian relation (ye were without knowledge of Christ; comp. Anselm, Calovius, Flatt), how tame and idle would this in itself have been! and, moreover, not in keeping with the connection of that which follows, according to which, as is already clear from ver. 11, Paul wishes to bring out the disadvantage at which the readers, as Gentiles, had been placed in contradistinction to the Jews. Hence Grotius rightly indicates the relation as to contrast of ver. 12 to ver. 13: “Nunc eum (Christum) non minus possidetis vos quam ii, quibus promissus fuerat." Rückert refers χωρίς X. to the activity of Christ under the O. T. previous to His incarnation, with an appeal to 1 Cor. x. 4. Comp. Olshausen ("the immanence of Christ as regards His divinity in Israel"). But τῷ καρπῷ εἴκειν, in fact, applies to the pre-Christian lifetime of the readers, and thus comprises a time which was subsequent to the incarnation. Χριστός means the historical Christ, so far as He was the very promised Messiah. The relation χωρίς Χριστός is described from the standpoint of the apostle, for whom the bond with the Messiah was the bond with Christ.

— The charge that the author here makes an un-Pauline concession to Judaism (Schwegler, l.c. p. 388 f.) is incorrect, since the concession concerns only the pre-Christian relation. Comp. Rom. ix. 4, 5. A superiority of Judaism, in respect of the pre-Christian relation to Christianity, Paul could not but necessarily teach (comp. Acts iii. 25 f.; Rom. i. 16, iii. 1 f.; Gal. iii. 13 f.); but that Christianity as to its essential contents was Judaism itself, merely extended through the death of Christ to the Gentiles also, he has not taught either here or elsewhere; in fact, the doing away of the law taught by him in this very passage is the very opposite thereof (in opposition to Baur, Paulus, p. 545; Christenth. der drei ersten Jahrh. p. 107). — ἀπελλοτριωμένοι κ.τ.λ.] Comp. on αποτριωτος, Dem. 255, 3; Polyb. i. 79, 6, i. 82, 9; often in the LXX. (Schleusner, Thesaur. I. p. 325) and Josephus, Krebs, Obs. p. 326. The notion of alien does not here (comp. also iv. 18; Col. i. 21) presuppose the existence of an earlier fellowship, but it was their status ethnicus itself, by which the readers were at one time placed apart from connection with the πολιτεία τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, i.e. whereby this ἀπολλοτριώτης took place. The opposite: ἰδιος, οἰκείος, συμπολίται (ver. 19). πολιτεία signifies as well political constitution (Thuc. ii. 36; Plato, Polit. vii. p. 520 B; Legg. iv. p. 712 E; Arist. Polit. iii. 4. 1; Isoc. Evag. viii. 10; Xen. Ages. i. 37; 2 Macc. iv. 11, viii. 17) as right of citizenship (Herod. ix. 34; Dem. 161, 11; Thuc. vi. 104. 3; Diod. Sic. xii. 51; 3 Macc.

1 Not, as Grotius would have it (whom Rosenmüller follows): the diversity of political institutions: "In illa republica a Deo instituta non modo honores non poteratis capere, sed nec pro civibus haberi; adeo distabant instituta." iii. 21; Acts xxii. 28; Joseph. Antt. xii. 3. 1). The latter signification is assumed by Erasmus, Luther, Beza, Bullinger, Michaelis, and others. But the idea of right of citizenship was for the apostle, himself a Roman citizen, as well as for the readers, a secular privilege, and one therefore foreign to the connection of our passage, where everything points to the theocracy, and this was the political constitution of the Israelites. — τοῦ Ἱσραήλ] The divine name of Jacob (Gen. xxxii. 28, xxxv. 10) is, according to the traditionally hallowed usage of the O. T., the theocratic name of his posterity, the Jewish people, Rom. ix. 6; 1 Cor. x. 18; Gal. vi. 16, al. The genitive, however, is not to be explained like ἄστυ Ἀθηνῶν (Harless); for ὁ Ἱσραήλ is the people, which has the polity.
— καὶ ξένοι τῶν διαθηκῶν τῆς ἐπαγγ.] and foreign to the covenants of the promise (not belonging thereto); these words are to be taken together (in opposition to Ambrosiaster, Cornelius a Lapide, Morus, Rosenmüller, and others, who attach τῆς ἐπαγγ. to what follows); for only thus do the two elements belonging to each other and connected by καὶ, which serve for the elucidation of χωρὶς Χριστοῦ, stand in harmonious symmetry; only in this way, likewise, is similar justice done do the two last particulars connected by καὶ,—ἐλπίδα μὴ ἐχοντες καὶ ἄθεοι ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ—which in their very generalitv and brevity carry the description of the Gentile misery to the uttermost point; only in this way, lastly, does ξένοι tῶν διαθηκῶν acquire the characteristic colouring which it needs, in order not to appear tame after ἄπειλλοτρ. τ. τολ.
t. Ἱσρ., for precisely in the characteristic τῆς ἐπαγγ. lies the sad significance of the being apart from the πολιτεία τοῦ Ἱσραήλ. The covenants of the promise, i.e. the covenants with which the promise καὶ ἐξοχήν, namely, that of the Messianic salvation (Rom. ix. 4; Gal. iii.), was connected, are the covenants made with Abraham (Gen. xii. 2 f., 7, xiii. 15, xv. 18, xvii.
20, xxii. 16 ff.) and repeated with the other patriarchs (Gen. xxvi. 2 ff., xxviii. 13 ff.), as also the covenant formed with the people through Moses. The latter is here (it is otherwise at Rom. ix. 4, where there specially follows ἡ νομοθεσία) neither excluded (Rückert, Harless, Olshausen, and others), seeing that this covenant also had the promise of Messianic life (ὁ ποιήσας avTà \( \zeta \) σεται \( \varepsilon \) αυτοις, Gal. iii. 12), nor exclusively meant (Elsner and Wolf, as was already suggested by Beza). Either is arbitrary, and against the latter there may be urged specially the plural, as well as the eminent importance which Paul must have attributed to the patriarchal covenants in particular. On \( \xi \epsilon \nu \varsigma \) with a genitive (Kühner, II. p. 163), comp. Xen. Cyr. vii. 2. 1; Soph. Oed. R. 219; Plato, Apol. p. 17 D, al.—\( \epsilon \lambda \pi \delta \alpha \mu \nu \ \epsilon \chi. \ \alpha \theta \varepsilon \omicron \ \varepsilon \nu \ \tau \nu \ \kappa \] consequence of the preceding \( \alpha \pi \eta \lambda \lambda \omega \tau \rho \ldots \) \( \epsilon \sigma \alpha \gamma \gamma \), and in what a tragic climax! The very generality of the expressions, inasmuch as it is not merely a definite hope (Paul did not write \( \tau \nu \ \epsilon \lambda \pi \delta \alpha \) and a definite relation to God that are denied, renders these last traits of the picture so dark! —\( \epsilon \lambda \pi \delta \alpha \) Bengel: “Si promissionem habuissent, spem habuissent illi respondentem.” But in this way Paul must have written \( \tau \nu \ \epsilon \lambda \pi \delta \alpha \). No, those shut out from the promise are for the apostles men without hope at all; they have nothing to hope for, just because they have not to hope for the promised salvation. Comp. 1 Thess. iv. 13. Every explanation of a definite hope (of the resurrection and life everlasting, Bullinger, Grotius, and many; of the promised blessings, Estius; of deliverance, Harless; comp. Erasmus and others) conflicts with the absence of the article, and weakens the force of the picture.—\( \mu \nu \ \epsilon \chi \omicron \nu \tau \varepsilon \) \( \mu \nu \) is not to be explained from the dependence of the thought on what immediately precedes (“foreign to the covenants of the promise, without having hope,” as Harless would take it), by which the independence of the element \( \epsilon \lambda \nu \ \epsilon \chi. \) would be sacrificed to the injury of the symmetry and force of the passage; but the subjectivity of the negation results from \( \mu \nu \nu \mu \nu \varepsilon \nu \tau \varepsilon \) \( \dot{\varepsilon} \tau \ldots \dot{\varepsilon} \tau \), in accordance with which \( \mu \nu \ \epsilon \chi \omicron \nu \tau \varepsilon \) is a fact now conceived in the recollection of the readers (comp. Kühner, II. § 715, 3). The \( \mu \nu \) refers the \( \epsilon \lambda \nu \ \epsilon \chi. \) to the conception of the subject of the governing verbum sentiendi (\( \mu \nu \nu \mu \nu \varepsilon \nu \tau \varepsilon \)). —\( \alpha \theta \varepsilon \omicron \) the lowest stage of Gentile misery. We may explain the word (see, generally, Diog. Laert. vii. 119; Sturz in the Comm. soc. phil. Lips. II. p. 65 ff.; Meier in the Hall. Encykl. I. 24, p. 466 ff.), which occurs only here in the N. T., and not at all in the LXX. or Apocrypha, either: not believing in God, atheists (Plato, Apol. p. 26 C; Lucian, Alex. 25; Aelian, V. H. ii. 31; comp. Ignat. ad Trail. 10: ἀθεοὶ ὄντες, τούτωστι ἀποστολ—but godless, impii, reprobate (Plato, Legg. xii. p. 966 E; Xen. Anab. ii. 5. 39; Pindar, Pyth. iv. 288), or: without God, sine Deo (Vulgate), i.e. without divine help, without the protection and assistance of God (Soph. Oed. R. 633: ἀθεοὶ, ἄφιλος, comp. 254). The last-mentioned sense, as yielding the saddest closing predicate (comp. ἀθεοῦ, Hom. Od. xviii. 352; Mosch. ii. 148), is here to be preferred. The Gentiles had gods, which, however, were no gods (Acts xix. 26, xiv. 15; Gal. iv. 8); but, on the contrary, what they worshipped and honoured as divinities, since the forsaking of the natural knowledge of God (Rom. i. 19 ff.), were demons (1 Cor. x. 20); so that for them with all their Βείαι Βαιοκατίοι (Acts xvii. 22) God was really wanting, and they apart from connection with God’s grace and help lived on in a God-forsaken state. Paul might have written ὅστις ὑμᾶς, as at Rom. i. 30, but he continues in the stream of negative designations, which gives to his picture an elegiac colouring. — ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ is referred by Calovius and Koppe to the preceding elements as a whole. But in this way it would have something of a dragging effect, whereas it attaches itself with force and suggestiveness to the bare ἀθεοὶ, whose tragical effect it serves to deepen. Only it must not be explained, even when so connected, with Koppe: “inter ceteros homines, in his terris,” in which sense it would be devoid of significance. Nay rather, profane humanity (observe the contrast to the πολιτεία τοῦ Ἰσραήλ), the Gentile world, was the unhallowed domain, in which the readers in former time existed without God. It adds to the ungodly How the ungodly Where. Olshausen explains: “in this evil world, in which one has such urgent need of a sure hope, a fast hold to the living God;” but this is imported, since no predicate stands beside κόσμῳ. According to Rückert, it is to form a contrast to ἀθεοὶ, and that in the sense: “in the world, of which the earth is a part, and which stands under God’s government.” But Paul must have said this, if he had meant it (by ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, or something similar).

1 So in substance also Grotius: “per omnes terrarum oras verum Deum, mundi ac. opificem, aut ignorabatis, aut certe non colebatis, sed pro eo Deos ab hominibus fictos.” Oecumenius and Meier: έν τῇ κατὰ τῶν παρόντων βίων τολιtελα, etc. This would be expressed by κατὰ τῶν κόσμων. —
The question, we may add, whether the ὅπισθα...κόσμο applies to all Gentiles, not even a Socrates or a Plato excepted, is, in the view of the apostle, to be answered affirmatively, at all events in general (Rom. iii. 10 ff., xi. 16 ff.; 1 Cor. i. 19 ff.), but has only an indirect application here, since the apostle is speaking of his readers, whom he describes as to their category.
That, if the subject of his discourse had called for it, he would have known how to set limitations to his general judgment, may be assumed of itself, and in accordance with Rom. ii. 14 f.
Comp. Acts xvii. 28.

vi. 22, vii. 6; Col. i. 21, iii. 8. — έν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ not to be supplemented by ἐστέ (Baumgarten-Crusius), nor yet a more precise definition of οὐ (Rückert: “under the new constitution, founded by Christ”), in which case several, proceeding more accurately, supply ἄνες (Calvin: “postquam in Christo estis recepti,” Koppe, Harless, Bleek). But such a more precise definition would be very unnecessary, and would have significant weight only if a special emphasis rested upon ἐν as in contradistinction to χαρῆ, ver. 12, which, however, cannot be the case, since there is not again used merely έν Χριστῷ, but έν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. The έν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, einai of the readers, moreover, was not prior to the ἑγγος ἐγενήθητε, but its immediate consequence; hence we should have at least to explain it, not: postquam in Christo estis recepti, but: cum in Christo sitis recepti, wherewithal there would still remain the very unnecessary character of this more precise definition, or of this conditional accessory clause (de Wette). Accordingly έν Χρ. Ἰ. is to be connected with ἑγγος ἐγενήθη: ye are in Christ Jesus, in whom this has its efficient cause, made nead; and έν τῷ ἀλματι τοῦ Χρ. is then the more precise definition of the mode of έν Χρ. Ἰ. Comp. διὰ as Lachmann and Tischendorf have done, either before or after έν Χρ. Ἰ. — Ἰησοῦ] could not be added at ver. 12, but might be added here, where the Christ who historically appeared in the person of Jesus is intended. — μακράν] figurative description of the same relation as was expressed in ver. 12 by ἀπηλ- λοτριωμένοι τῆς πολιτ. τοῦ Ἰσρ., and ξένοι τῶν διαθηκ. τῆς ἑπαγγ. — ἐγγύς ἐγενήθ. ἐν τῷ αἷμ. τ. Χρ.] For, by the fact that Christ shed His blood, the separation of the Gentiles from the Jews was done away, and consequently the fellowship of the former with the community of God's people (which the true Christian Israel henceforth was) was effected. See ver. 14 ff. The bringing to participation in the blessings of the theocracy is, after the precedent of Isa. xlix. 1, lvii. 19, expressed often also among the Rabbins by the figurative propinquum facere (which with them is, with special frequency, equivalent to proselytum facere), and in that case the subject to whom the approach is made is always to be derived from the context; as e.g. Vayikra R. 14, where God, and Mechilta, f. 38. 12, where, as here, the theocracy is to be thought of. See, in general, the passage in Wetstein and Schöttgen, Horae, p. 761 ff. — ἐγγύς γίνεσθαι, to come near; only here in the N. T., frequent in the classic writers (Xen. Anab. v. 4. 16, iv. 7. 23; Thuc. iii. 40. 6).

See what follows. Observe also the presence of the article in ἡ εἰρήνη, denoting the peace κατ' ἐξοχήν (Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 109 [E. T. 125]); He is for us the peace absolutely, the absolute contrast to the ἔχθρα, ver. 15. The Rabbinical passages, however, in which the Messiah (comp. Isa. ix. 6) is called Ἰςω (Wetstein in loc.; Schöttgen, Horae, II. p. 18), do not bear on this passage, since in them the point spoken of is not, as here,² the peace between Jews and Gentiles. — ὁ ποιήσας κ.τ.λ.] quippe qui fecit, etc., now begins the more precise information, how Christ has become Himself our peace. — τὰ ἰμφοτέρα] the two [Germ. das Beides], i.e. the two existing parts, the Jews and Gentiles. The neuter expression corresponds to the following ἐν. Nothing is to be supplied (Grotius: γένη). — ἐν] not so, that one part assumed the nature of the other, but so that the separation of the two was done away with, and both were raised to a new unity. That was the union of the divine οἰκονομία. See the sequel. Comp. Col. iii. 11; Gal. iii. 28; Rom. x. 12; 1 Cor. xii. 13; John x. 16. — καὶ τὸ μεσότοιχον τοῦ φρ. λύσας] is related to the foregoing as explicative of it (καλ, see Winer, p. 388 [E. T. 546]; Fritzsche, Quaest. Luc. p. 9 f.). τοῦ φραγμοῦ is genitive of apposition: the partition-wall, which consisted in the (well-known) fence. What is meant by this, we are then told by means of the expository τὴν ἔχθραν; hence Paul has not by the figurative τὸ μεσότ. τοῦ φραγμοῦ λύσας merely wished to express the (negative) conception that Christ has done away with the isolation of the O. T. commonwealth, as Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 1, p. 375, holds, refining on τὸ μεσότ. τ. φρ., and connecting τὴν ἔχθραν with καταργῆςας. De Wette censures the "extreme tameness" of the explanation, according to which τὸ μεσότ. κ.τ.λ. is taken not as a designation of the law, but as a preliminary designation of the ἔχθρα. But the twofold designation of the matter, describing it first figuratively and then properly, is in keeping with the importance of the idea, the direct expression of which produces after the previous figure an effect the more striking. — To take the genitive in an adjectival sense, as equivalent to τὸ μεσότοιχον διαφράσσων (Vorstius, Grotius, Morus, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Meier, and others), is wrong, because the characteristic adjectival notion is implied in τὸ μεσότοιχον (parties intergerinus, found elsewhere only in Eratosthenes quoted by Athen. vii. p. 281 D, in Hesychius under κατηλψ; and in the Fathers²), which has been felt also by Castalio and Beza, inasmuch as they erroneously translated it as though τῶν φαραγμῶν τῶν μεσοτοίχων were used. A reference, we may add, to a definite φαραγμός, which underlies the figurative expression, is not to be assumed, since the words furnish nothing of the sort, and any kind of fence serving as a partition-wall illustrates the ἔθρα. Some have thought of the stone screen which in the temple-enclosure marked off the court of the Gentiles, and the inscription of which forbade every Gentile from farther advance (Josephus, Bell. v. 5. 2, vi. 2. 4; Antt. viii. 3. 2 f., xv. 11. 5, al.; Middoth, ii. 3). So Anselm, Ludov. Cappellus, Hammond, Bengel, Wetstein, Krebs, Bretschneider, Holzhausen, and others. But at most this could only be assumed, without arbitrariness, if that screen had statedly borne the name of φαραγμός. Other references, still more foreign to the matter, which have been introduced, such as to the Jewish districts in large towns, which were marked off by a wall or otherwise (Schöttgen and others), may be seen in Wolf. Among the Rabbins, too, the figure of a fence is in very frequent use. See Buxtorf, s.v. ἔθσας] in the sense of throwing down (Wetstein, ad Joh. ii. 19), belongs to the figure, and is not chosen on account of the τῆν ἔθραν which does not come in till afterwards, although it would be chosen suitably thereto (see Wetstein in loc.).— It has been wrongly designated as an un-Pauline idea, that Christ through His death should have united the Jews and Gentiles by means of the abolition of the law (see Schwégler, l.c. p. 389 f.). This union has in fact taken place as a raising of both into a higher unity, vv. 16, 18, 21 f.; hence that doctrinal principle is sufficiently explained from the destination of Paul as the apostle to the Gentiles and his personal experience, and from his own elsewhere attested universalism, and need not have as a presupposition the post-apostolic process of development on the part of the church gradually gathering itself out of heterogeneous elements into a unity, so as to betray a later “catholicizing tendency” (Baur).

Ver. 15. Τῆν ἔθραν] This, still included in dependence upon λύσας, is now the μεσότοίχον broken down by Christ: (namely) the enmity. It is, after the example of Theodoret (comp. τινές in Chrysostom), understood by the majority (including Luther, Calvin, Bucer, Clarus, Grotius, Calovius, Morus, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Meier, Holzhausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette) of the Mosaic law as the cause of the enmity between Jew and Gentile, in which case the moral law is by some included, by others excluded. But, in accordance with ver. 14, the reader is led to nothing else than the opposite of εἰρήνη, i.e. to the abstract enmity; and in the sequel, indeed, the abolition of the law is very definitely distinguished from the destruction of the enmity (as means from end). Hence the only mode of taking it, in harmony with the word itself and with the context, is: the enmity which existed between Jews and Gentiles, comp. ver. 16. So Erasmus, Vatablus, Estius, Cornelius a Lapide, Bengal, and others, including Rückert and Bleek; while Hofmann turns the notion of ἔχθρα into the mere ἀπαλλοτρίωσις of ver. 12, and, referring it to the estrangement on the part of the Gentiles towards the theocracy hated by them, removes the distinctive mark of reciprocalness demanded by the context. Quite erroneously, Chrysostom, Theophylact, Occumenius, and lately Harless, hold that the enmity of the Jews and Gentiles towards God is meant. In accordance with the context, ver. 14, the μεσοτοιχον can, in fact, only be one separating the Jews and Gentiles from each other, and not something which separates both from God; and how mistaken is such a view also on account of what follows! for the Mosaic law might be conceived of as producing enmity towards God so far doubtless as the Jews are concerned (1 Cor. xv. 56; Rom. v. 20, vii. 13; Gal. iii. 19), but never as respects the Gentiles, who stood aloof from all relation to the Mosaic law (Rom. ii. 12).—ἐν τῷ σαρκὶ αὐτοῦ] does not belong (as Lachmann also punctuates it) to τὴν ἔχθραν, so that “the national hatred in His people” would be meant (Chrysostom, Bugenhagen, Schulthess, Engelwelt, p. 193); nor yet to λύσας (Occumenius, Beza, Calvin, Grotius, Rückert, and others), because in that case this mention of the death of Jesus would be irrelevantly disseeded from the modal definition τὸν νόμον καταργήσας, to which, in the nature of the case, it belongs as an essential element; but it stands with an emphasis suitable to the context (comp. αὐτὸς γάρ, ver. 14) at the head of the specification that now follows, in what way Christ has effected what was said in ver. 14 by αὐτὸς γάρ ἐστιν... ἐκθραν: so that He by His flesh has done away with the law, namely, when He allowed His flesh to be crucified (Col. i. 21 f.), dissolved thereby the tie with the law that brought men under curse (see on Gal. iii. 13), and thus opened up the justification through faith (Rom. iii. 21 ff.), whereby the institute of the law was emptied of its binding power (comp. Rom. x. 4 ff., vii. 1 ff.; Col. ii. 14). The moral commands also of the law had thereby, while not ceasing to be valid, ceased to be held as constituent elements of the law-institute as such justifying in the way of compliance with it; and its fulfilment, and that in augmented power, now proceeds from the new vital principle of faith (Rom. viii. 4), on which account Christ, although He is the end of the law (Rom. x. 4; comp. 2 Cor. iii. 11), could nevertheless say that He had come to fulfil the law (Matt v. 17), and Paul could assert: νόμον ἱστῶμεν, Rom. iii. 31. Hofmann imports into the ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ αὐτοῦ the thought: in and with the doing away of His life in the flesh, in respect of which He was an Israelite, Christ has rendered the appertaining to His community independent of the religious-legal status of an Israelite. As though the atoning death of Christ, in the usual dogmatic sense of the apostle, had not been most distinctly indicated already before by the ἐν τῷ αἵματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ver. 13, as afterwards by the ἀποκαταλλάξεις κ.τ.λ., ver. 16, and by the προσαγωγή, ver. 18! This meaning is not here, any more than at Col. i. 21 f., to be exegetically modified or explained away. — τῶν ἐντολῶν ἐν δόγμασι] to be taken together, yet not in such a way that ἐν stands for σὺν (Flatt) or καί (Koppe, Rosenmüller), but as: the law of the commandments consisting in injunctions, whereby the dictatorial character of the legal institute (as a whole, not merely partially, as Schenkel imports) is exhibited. The genitive τῶν ἐντολῶν denotes the contents of the law, and ἐν δόγμασι the essential form in which the ἐντολαί are given. The connecting link of the article (τῶν) before ἐν δόγμασι was not requisite, since we may correctly say: ἐνέπλησθαί τι ἐν δόγματι or ἐντολὴν διδόναι ἐν δόγματι, and therefore ἐντολὴ ἐν δόγματι may be conjoined so as to form one conception. Comp. on iii. 13; Rom. vi. 4; Gal. iv. 14, iii. 26. This view of the connection is adopted, after the precedent of many older expositors, by Rückert, Matthies, Meier, Winer, pp. 123, 197 [E. T. 169, 257], Bisping, Schenkel, Bleek. Comp. also Buttmann, neut. C. p. 80 [E. T. 92]. If one should, with the Syriac, Arabic, Vulgate, Pelagius, Chrysostom and his successors, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Grotius, Estius, Bengel, Holzhausen, and others, including Fritzsche, Diss. in 2 Cor. ii. p. 168 f., refer in δογμα to καταργήσας, there would result—even apart from the fact that with our mode of connecting in τῇ σαρκί αὐτοῦ, this construction is not even possible—the wholly untrue and un-Pauline thought that Christ has through injunctions abolished the law. No doubt some have imputed to in δογμα the sense praecipita stabilendo (Fritzsche), in doing which they had in view the evangelical doctrine of faith and the gratia universalis (see Chrysostom, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Theodoret, Theophylact, Estius, Bengel, and others). But even thus the sense remains untrue and un-Pauline, seeing that the doing away of the law has taken place not at all in a doctrinal way, but by the fact of the death of Christ (Rom. vii. 1 f.; Gal. iii. 13; Col. ii. 14). And what a change would be made in the meaning of the word δογμα, which in the N. T. signifies throughout nothing else than injunction (Col. ii. 4; Luke ii. 1; Acts xvii. 7, xvi. 4; comp. Plat. Legg. i. p. 644 D; Xen. Anab. iii. 3, 5, vi. 6, 8; Dem. 774. 19; Herodian, i. 7. 6; 4 Macc. iv. 23 f.)! The distinction ought not to have been overlooked between in τῷ λόγῳ and δογμα, which latter puts the meaning of the former into the more definite form of the 1 There is consequently no need whatever for the evasive view of Theile (in Winer's Exeg. Stud. I. p. 188 ff.), which is arbitrary and makes the meaning of the expression simply ambiguous, that Paul has not added the article, because in δογμα is to be conceived of in the like relation to in σάρκα as to in ινναύοι.

2 Several of the older expositors, nevertheless, explained: lege mandatorum in decretis sitam (Erasmus, comp. Castalio, Beza, Calvin, and others), so that they connected in δογμα with in σάρκα. But in that case in must of necessity have stood before in δογμα. And to excuse the absence of the article "ob congeriem articulorum" (Erasmus) is arbitrary. How often have classical writers accumulated articles! Plato, Philol. p. 38 A; Dem. Ol. iii. 11, and many others. They avoid only the coming together of the same article, e. g. in τῇ (Stallbaum, ad Plat. Rep. pp. 332 C, 598 B). enjoining decree. A peculiar view is taken by Harless (followed by Olshausen) likewise connecting ἐν δογμᾷ with καταργήσας, and holding that ἐν denotes the "side on which that efficacy of the death of Christ exerts itself;" Christ did not render the law ineffectual in any such capacity as σκιὰν τῶν μελλόντων, or as παιδαγωγὸν εἰς Χριστὸν, but on the side of the δόγματα ("in reference to the commanding form of its precepts," Olshausen). Incorrectly, because δόγματα must of necessity have had the article, and because it is nowhere taught that the law is done away only in a single respect. The Mosaic legal institute as such, and not merely from a certain side, has in Christ its end (Rom. x. 4); the σκιὰ τῶν μελλόντων in the law has only a transient typical destination (see on Col. ii. 17), and the work of the παιδαγωγὸς is at an end with the attainment of maturity on the part of his pupils (Gal. iii. 24 f.). Incorrect also is the view of Hofmann, p. 377, who, likewise taking ἐν δογματί as modal definition to καταργήσας, and for the expression with ἐν comparing 1 Cor. ii. 7, finds the meaning: by the very fact that Christ has put an end to precepts generally, He has invalidated the O. T. law of commandments. The statement that Christ has put an end to δόγματα generally, i.e. to commanding precepts in general, is at variance with the whole N. T., which contains numberless definite commands, and, in particular, with the teaching of Paul, who even places Christianity as a whole under the point of view, Rom. iii. 27, ix. 31, Gal. vi. 2, 1 Cor. ix. 21, of a νόμος (which, without δόγματα, is not at all conceivable1), and specially with Col. ii. 14. Paul would at least have made a limiting addition to ἐν δογματί, and have written something like ἐν δογματί δούλεια (comp. Rom. viii. 15 ; Gal. iv. 24, v. 1). — ίνα τοῦτο δό... εἰρήνην] a statement of the object aimed at in the just expressed abrogation of the law, which statement of aim corresponds to what has been said concerning Christ in ver. 14, more precisely defining and confirming the same. Harless arbitrarily passes over what immediately precedes, and holds that ίνα... εἰρήνην expresses the design of ὁ ποιήσας τὰ ἀμφότερα ἐν, in which case too, we may add, there would result a tautological relation of the thought. — τῶν δύο] The Jews and Gentiles, who before were designated in accordance with the general category under a neuter form, are here conceived of concretely as the two men under discussion, of whom the one is the totality of the Jews, and the other that of the Gentiles, out of which two men Christ has made a single new man. This is the collective subject of the καὶ ἡ κτίσις, Gal. vi. 15 (the whole body of Christians). — ἐν ἑαυτῷ] is neither, with Grotius, to be taken as: per doctrinam suam, nor, with Chrysostom, Oecumenius, and others, as equivalent to δι' ἑαυτοῦ (Oecumenius: οὐ δι' ἄγγελον ἥ ἄλλων τινῶν δυνάμεων), but it affirms that the unity to be brought about out of the two by the new creation was to be founded in Christ Himself, that is, to have the basis of its existence and continuance in Him, and not in any other unifying principle whatever. In the case, namely, of all individuals, from among the Jews and Gentiles, who form the one new man, the death of Christ is that, wherein this new unity has its causal basis; without the death of the cross it would not exist, but, on the contrary, the two would still be just in the old duality and separation as the Jew and the Greek. Calvin well remarks that in se ipso is added, "ne alibi quam in Christo unitatem quaerant." Comp. Gal. iii. 28. This union, negatively conditioned by the abolition of the law, and having its basis in the self-sacrifice of Christ, is positively accomplished as regards the subjects through the Spirit, 1 Cor. xii. 13. Comp. subsequently ver. 18. But objectively accomplished—namely, as a fact before God and apart from the subjective appropriation by means of the Spirit—it is already by virtue of the death, which Christ has undergone for the reconciliation of both parties, Jews and Gentiles, with God; see ver. 16. — καὶ υἱὸν] For this one is now neither Jew nor Greek, which the two, out of which the one has been made, previously were; but both portions have laid aside their former religious and moral attitude, and without further distinction have obtained the quite new nature conditioned by Christian faith. If υἱὸν had not been added, the εἷς ἄνθρωπος might be incorrectly conceived of as an amalgam of Jew and Gentile. To exclude, we may add, from υἱὸν the moral element (Meier, comp. Rückert) is not merely arbitrary, but, according to the apostolic way of looking at matters, even impossible, 2 Cor. v. 17; Gal. iv. 27, vi. 14 f., v. 6.— πων εἰρήνην] Present participle, because the establishment of peace as what was duly to set in with the designed new creation, was implied in the very scope thereof; it was that which was to be brought about in and with it. Observe that πων εἰρήνην is spoken from the standpoint of the design expressed in ἵνα τοῦ δυν κ.τ.λ., and is included as belonging to what is designed; consequently: so that He (by this new creation) makes peace (not made peace). εἰρήνη is, in accordance with the context, the opposite of εἰκόνα, ver. 15, consequently peace of the two portions with each other, not: with God (Harless), nor: πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν καὶ πρὸς ἀλλήλους (Chrysostom, Oecumenius).

Ver. 16. Continuation of the sentence expressive of the design. Christ has by His death done away with the law, in order to make the Jew and the Gentile into one new man (ver. 15), and (and consequently) so to accomplish the reconciliation of both with God, that they should as one body be reconciled with God through the cross, after He has slain thereon the enmity which hitherto existed between them.— καί is the and of the sequence of thought; from what was before said resulted the way and manner of the reconciliation of the two with God; hence also ἀποκαταλλάσσω is prefixed.— ἀποκαταλλάσσω, only here and Col. i. 20; in the other Greek writings only καταλλάσσω is preserved, which is not distinguished from διαλλάσσω (in opposition to Tittmann, Synon. p. 101; see Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 276 ff.). The composition with διό may, after the analogy of other compounds with διό (comp. ἀποκαθιστήμι, ἀποκαταρθώ, al.), denote again (Calvin: "reducerit in unum gregem," also Harless), but it may also (comp. ἀποθανάμψω, ἀποθεραπεύω, al.) strengthen the notion of the reconciliation. The latter is better adapted to the context (ἐν ἐν σώματι; and see ver. 18). In opposition to Hofmann's conversion of the notion into that of the restoration of fellowship with God, see on Col. i. 20. We may add that ἀποκαταλλάσσω does not apply to the mutual reconciliation of Jews and Gentiles (Grotius, according to whom τῷ Ἐφεσοῦ is then equivalent to ut Deo serviant), but, as the express τῷ Θεῷ says (Rom. v. 10; 2 Cor. v. 18, 20), to the reconciliation of both with God, whose wrath, namely, against sinners Christ has by His Ιησοῦν changed into grace. Comp. on Col. i. 21; 2 Cor. v. 18; Rom. v. 10.— τοῦς ἀμφοτέρους] not again τοῖς δύο, because they are now conceived as united, comp. vv. 14, 18. — ἐν εἷς σώματι is held by Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Beza, Calovius, Calixtus, Wolf, Bengel, Zachariae, Koppe, Flatt, Rückert, Matthies, Harless, Hofmann, Lechler, and others, to be the body of Christ; by the offering up of one body both are reconciled with God. But how superfluous in that case would the διὰ τοῦ σωμάτων be! Moreover, Christ is in fact the subject, and how could it be said of Christ that by a single body He has reconciled both with God, or—as Hofmann gives to the meaning a turn quite departing from the N. T. and especially the Pauline doctrine of atonement—that He has made a single body (His body, namely) to be their unity embracing them in the like fellowship of God, since in fact the case of a plurality of bodies on the part of Christ was not even as an abstraction conceivable? This inappropriateness, hardly excusable by the reference to τοῖς ἀμφοτέρους, and not removed by the pure invention of a contrast to the many bodies offered up under the Ο. T. (Calovius), would only cease to be felt, if God were the subject, so that Paul might say that God had by the surrender of one body reconciled the two (2 Cor. v. 18; Col. i. 21) with Himself. Hence Ambrosiaster, Occumenius, Photius, Anselm, Erasmus, Bucer, Calvin, Piscator, Cornelius a Lapide, Estius, Grotius, Michaelis, Morus, and others, including Meier, Holzhausen, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Winer, Bleek, have rightly found in ἐν σώμα

1 Hofmann, after Tertull. c. Marc. v. 17, attaches it to the following ἀμυν. by which, however, the emphasis that manifestly lies on ἀμυν. is pushed forward to ἐν τῷ σώματι.

2 "In His person subsists the newness of human nature for them, and in His body, wherein [as a bodily living man] He has gone unto God, they have the place where mankind is restored to communion with God," Hofmann, p. 380. With this explaining away of the atonement it was no doubt consistent to connect ἐν τῷ σώματι with ἀμυν., and to refer back ἐν σώμα to the ἀμυν. The simply correct rendering is given, e.g., in the version of Castalio: "ut in esse ex duobus condeteret unum novum hominem faciendo pacem, et ambas uno in corpore reconciliaret Deo per crucem peremtis in ea inimicitiis." the unum corpus, which is formed of the Jews and Gentiles united into a εἰς καὶ πάντα ἀνθρώπως. Comp. on ἐν σώμα, Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. x. 17; Eph. iv. 4; Col. iii. 15. Christ has reconciled the two in one body, i.e. constituting one body without further separation—the two portions of humanity as one whole—unto God. How entirely is this mode of taking it in keeping with the whole context! See especially vv. 15, 14. — ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἐξοθήκην ἐν αὐτῷ] after he shall have slain, etc.; for it is inserted in the second half of the affirmation of design which begins with the ίνα of ver. 15, so that it is correlative to the ποιῶν εἰρήνην of the first half. On ἀποκτ. Grotius correctly observes: "idem hie valet, quod modo ίνα was, sed crucis facta mentione, aptior fuit translatio verbi ἀποκτείνας, quia crux mortem adfert." And the ἐξοθήκη (here personified) is not to be explained otherwise than in ver. 14; hence not the law (Michaelis, Koppe, Holzhausen), nor the hostile relation of the Jews and Gentiles towards God (most expositors, including Rückert, Meier, Harless, Hofmann), but the enmity of the two towards each other. The aim of the apostle was not to explain the nature of the atonement in general as such, but to show how Christ has reconciled with God the Jews and Gentiles combined into unity, and to this end it was pertinent to say that He had cancelled the enmity which had hitherto subsisted between them. The aorist participle, we may add, affirms not something simultaneous with ἀποκαταλάλκην (ita ut interficeret), but something preceding (after that He has slain), so that the relation of time is conceived of otherwise than in the case of the correlative ποιῶν εἰρήνην, ver. 15. Paul, namely, has conceived the matter thus: Christ has desired by His death on the cross to cancel the mutual enmity between Jews and Gentiles (see on ver. 15), and then by means of this death to reconcile both, who should now in this manner be united into one aggregate, ἐν ἑνὶ σῶμα with God. In reality these are indeed only different sides of the effect of the death of Christ on the cross, not separate and successive effects; but in the representation unfolding the subject, in which Paul will here, as in a picture, set the matter before us in its various elements, they appear so, and this is in keeping with the whole solemn pathos which is shed over the passage.— ἐν αὐτῷ i.e. on the cross. The reference to σώματι (Bengel, Semler, Hofmann, following Tertullian) falls with the correct explanation of ἐν ἐνλ σώματι. The reading ἐν οὐτῷ (F G, 115, codd. in Jer. Arab. pol. Vulg. It. Goth. Syr. p. Ambr. Aug.) would yield the same sense as that reference to σώματι, but is a conformation to ver. 15, in accordance with which Luther also translated “through Himself.”

Ver. 17. After Christ has established peace, He has come and has also proclaimed it, to the Gentiles and the Jews. This proclamation, namely, cannot be regarded as preceding the fact by which the peace was established, so that ἐλθὼν would apply to the bodily advent of Christ upon earth (Chrysostom, Anselm, Estius, Holzhausen, Matthies, Harless), and the connection with ver. 14 would be: “Christ is peace in deed (ver. 14) and word (ver. 17); He not only is peace, but He proclaimed it Himself at His appearing on earth,” Harless. For, when it is said in ver. 14, αὐτὸς γὰρ ἐστὶν ἡ εἰρήνη ἡμῶν, the time thought of is, as vv. 14–16 show, the time after the crucifixion of Christ, through which and since which He is our peace, so that καὶ ἐλθὼν κ.τ.λ. does not merely attach itself to αὐτὸς γὰρ ἐστὶν ἡ εἰρήνη ἡμῶν and leave all that intervenes out of view; but, on the contrary, this intervening matter is so essentially bound up with αὐτὸς γ. ἐτ. ἡ εἰρ. ἡμ., that now καὶ ἐλθὼν κ.τ.λ. can introduce not a πρότερον, but only a ὑστερον of the crucifixion, annexing as it does the further course of the matter. Rightly, therefore, most expositors have understood in ἐλθὼν an advent following the crucifixion of Christ, in connection with which either the resurrection of Christ has been thought of (Bengel, Rückert), or His having come in His Spirit (Olshausen), or in the preaching that took place through the apostles (so most), in which latter view ἐλθὼν is wrongly by many, as Raphel, Grotius, Wolf, Zachariae, Koppe, Rosenmüller (comp. Meier), regarded as without significance; it is in truth an “insigne verbum,” Bengel. The correct explanation (comp. ver. 18) is given by Olshausen; comp. Baumgarten-Crusius and de Wette, also Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 1, p. 475, and Bleek. In the Holy Spirit, namely, not only according to John (John xiv. 18, al.), but also according to Paul, Christ Himself has come (in so far as it is Christ's Spirit) from heaven to those who have received the Spirit, and dwells and rules in them (Rom. viii. 9, 10; 2 Cor. iii. 17, xiii. 5; Gal. ii. 20), and this proclamation has taken place at the instance of the Spirit (Rom. viii. 16), and through the Spirit Himself (Rom. xv. 18; comp. 2 Cor. xiii. 3). The point of time expressed by εἰσηγησάτω is the conversion of the persons concerned, at which they received the Spirit (Gal. iii. 2; Eph. i. 13). Accordingly the apostle could, without writing at variance with history, name first the readers as original Gentiles (ὑμῖν τοῖς μακράν), and then the Jews; for when the Ephesians became Christians, there had already long since been converted not merely Jews, but Gentiles and Jews. Had he, on the other hand, meant the actual coming of Christ upon earth and His oral preaching, the historical necessity would have presented itself of mentioning first those that were near and then those that were afar off.—We may add that the concrete and vividly depicting expression ἔλθων εἰσῆγη, can the less occasion surprise, as the whole passage bears the impress of emotion. Comp. also Acts xxvi. 23.—εἰρήνη] has been, from the time of Chrysostom, ordinarily explained of peace with God, while only a few, as Estius and Koppe, suppose peace with each other to be included; but Olshausen rightly understands the latter alone, as does also Bleek. Only this is in keeping with the whole connection (see, moreover, the immediately preceding ἅποκτ. τὴν ἔχθραν, and comp. ver. 19), and, moreover, has ver. 18 not against it, but in its favour (see on ver. 18).—ὑμῖν τοῖς μακράν and τοῖς ἔγγυς] (both to be explained in accordance with ver. 12, and comp. Isa. lvii. 19) are dependent on εἰσηγησάτω,—the view which immediately and most naturally suggests itself. Harless would attach both very closely to εἰρήνη,—a course to which he was impelled by his explanation of ἔλθων εἰσῆγη, in order not to present the apostle as saying what is inconsistent with history (Matt. xv. 24, comp. x. 5 f.; John x. 16; Matt. xxi. 43, al.). But the inconsistency with history would still remain.1—The repetition of εἰρήνη (see the critical remarks)

1 If Paul had understood ἔλθων εἰσῆγη in the sense of Harless, he must at all events have written ἦπ. τοῖς ἔγγυς κ. τ. ἦπ. ὑμῖν τοῖς μακράν. Harless himself has paraphrased (comp. Erasm. Paraphr.): "The contents of his message was a peace has rhetorical emphasis, John xiv. 27; Buttm. neut. Gr. p. 341 [E. T. 398]. This ἐπίμονὴ of the expression, however (Nägelsbach on Ῥωμ. II. i. 436), excludes the view of Wieseler, p. 444, that τοῖς ἐγγὺς also is in apposition to ἵμαν, and means specially the Jewish-Christians in Ephesus.

Ver. 18. Proof from an appeal to fact for what has just been said: ἐνηγγυ. εἰρήνην ἵμαν τ. μακρ. κ. εἰπ. τοῖς ἐγγὺς. In this case the main stress of the proof lies in οἱ ἄμφοτεροι ἐν ἐνὶ πνεύμ. If, namely, through Christ, both in One Spirit have the προσαγωγή to the Father, to both must the same news, that of peace, have been imparted by Him. This is the necessary historic premiss of that happy state of unity now actually subsistent through Christ. He must have proclaimed εἰρήνη to the one as to the other; of this Paul now gives the probatio ab effectu. Others hold that δέ introduces the contents of the message of peace (Baumgarten, Koppe, Morus, Flatt). But the contents is fully expressed in the εἰρήνη itself, agreeably to the context; hence, too, we may not say, with Rückert, that the essence of the εἰρήνη is explained. According to Harless, the truth of that proclamation is shown from the reality of the possession. But in this way a subsidiary thought (namely, that the proclamation was true) is introduced not merely arbitrarily, but also unsuitably (for the truth of that which has been proclaimed was self-evident).—τὴν προσαγωγήν] Christ is not conceived of as door (John x. 7; Beza, Calvin), which is remote from the context, but as bringer; in which case there may be an allusion to the Oriental custom of getting access to the king only through a ἀνεμον (see on Horn, v. 2), but not to sacrificial processions in accordance with Herod. ii. 58 (Meier), which would be an unsuitable comparison. Before Christ had reconciled men with God, communion with God was, on account of the wrath of God (ver. 3; Rom. v. 10), denied to them; Christ by His ἠλεστήριον removed this obstacle, and thus became the προσαγωγεύς, through the mediation of whom (δὲ αὐτοῦ) we now and henceforth have the bringing near (Thuc. i. 82; Polyb. ix. 41. 1, xii. 4. 10; which availed for all, Jews as well as Gentiles." Evidently under an involuntary sense of the historical relation, but in opposition to the words, according to which Harless ought to have paraphrased: "availed for all, Gentiles as well as Jews." Xen. *Cyr. vii. 5. 45) unto God. In substance the having the προσαγωγή to God is not different from the εἰρήνη πρὸς τὸν Θεόν (Rom. v. 1), and from the filial relationship of the reconciled. It is the consequence of the atoning death of Jesus; the peaceful relation of believers towards God, brought about through this death. Comp. 1 Pet. iii. 18. Here, moreover, as at Rom. v. 2, the notion of bringing towards, which the word has, is not to be interchanged with that of approach or access (as still by Rückert, Harless, Bleek), as though πρόσοδον were written in the text. Christ by the continuous power and efficacy of His atoning act is the constant Bringer to the Father. Comp.
iii. 12. — ἐν ἐνὶ πνεύματι] for the Holy Spirit is to both one from which they cannot have the προσαγωγή to God. The referring of it to the human spirit (ὁμοθυμαδόν, Anselm, Hombberg, Zachariae, Koppe, Morus, Rosenmüller) ought to have been precluded by taking note of the Divine Trias in our passage (δι’ αὐτοῦ, ἐν ἐνὶ πνεύματι, πρὸς τὸν πατέρα); or ἀστός (Plat. Pol. viii. p. 563 A, al.). The Gentiles are in the commonwealth of God only inquilini, sojourners, not citizens; they have no πολιτεία therein; although they are ruled by God (Rom. iii. 29) and included in the Messianic promise (Rom. iv. 12 ff.), they are so in the second place (Rom. i. 16), and without participating in the time-hallowed peculiar prerogatives of the Israelites (Rom. iii. 1, ix. 4 ff.). The referring of πάροικοι to the conception of a household (persons pertaining to the house, members of the family) is not to be made good by linguistic usage (not even by Lev. xxii. 10), and is not demanded by the antithesis of οἴκειοι τοῦ Θεοῦ (in opposition to Bengel, Koppe, Flatt, Meier, Harless, Olshausen, Schenkel), inasmuch as οἴκειοι τοῦ Θεοῦ sustains a climactic relation to the preceding συμπόλ. τῶν ἀγίων, and the two together form the contrast to ξένοι and πάροικοι. The reference to the proselytes (Anselm, Whitby, Cornelius a Lapide, Calixtus, Baumgarten) is quite at variance with the context (vv. 11-13). — ἀλλ' ἐστέ] emphatic repetition of the verb after ἀλλά. The Ephesians have thus, by becoming Christians, attained to the fellow-citizenship with the saints,—which saints the Christians were,—so that τῶν ἀγίων does not embrace either the Jews (Vorstius, Hammond, Bengel, Morus) or the patriarchs (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and others; Theodoret: ἀγίους ἐνταύθα οὐ μόνον τοὺς τῆς χάριτος, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἐν νόμῳ καὶ τοὺς πρὸ νόμου λέγει), with whom even the angels have been associated (Calvin, Flatt). — οἴκειοι τοῦ Θεοῦ] members of God's household. Ver. 20. The conception οἶκος Θεοῦ leads the apostle, in keeping with the many-sided versatility of his association of ideas, to make the transition from the figure of a household-fellowship, to the figure of a house-structure, and accordingly to give to οἰκεῖοι τοῦ Θεοῦ a further illustration, which now is no longer appropriate to the former figurative conception, but only to the latter, which, however, was not yet expressed in οἰκεῖοι τοῦ Θεοῦ. Anab. iii. 4. 11), is not here occasioned by the aorist participle (Harless), which would not have hindered the use either of the genitive (Hom. II. xxii. 225; Plato, Legg. v. p. 736 E) or of the accusative (1 Cor. iii. 12; Rom. xv. 20); but the accusative is not employed, because Paul has not in his mind the relation of direction, and it is purely accidental that not the genitive of rest, but the dative of rest is employed. — τῶν ἀποστ. κ. προφ.] is taken by Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Erasmus, Estius, Morus, and others, including Meier, Olahausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, as genitive of apposition; but wrongly, since the apostles and prophets are not the foundation, but have laid it (1 Cor. iii. 10). The foundation laid by the apostles and prophets (as most expositors, including Koppe, Flatt, Rückert, Matthies, Harless, Bleek, correctly take it) is the gospel of Christ, which they have proclaimed, and by which they have established the churches; see on 1 Cor. iii. 10. “Testimonium apost. et proph. substructum est fidei credentium omnium,” Bengel. — προφητῶν] has been understood by Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Jerome, Erasmus, Beza, Calvin, Calovius, Estius, Baumgarten, Michaelis, and others, including Rückert, of the Old Testament prophets. That not these, however, but the New Testament prophets (see on 1 Cor. xii. 10), are intended (Pelagius, Piscator, Grotius, Bengel, Zachariae, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Harless, Meier, Matthies, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Bleek), is clear, not indeed from the non-repetition of the article, since the apostles and prophets might be conceived as one class (Xen. Anab. ii. 2. 5 : "οἱ στρατηγοὶ καὶ λοχαγοὶ;" comp. Saupp. ad Xen. Venat. v. 24; Dissen, ad Dem. de cor. p. 373), but (1) from the very order of the words, ¹ which, especially from the pen of an apostle, would most naturally have been τῶν προφητῶν κ. ἀποστόλων;

(2) from the analogy of iii. 5, iv. 11; and (3) from the fact that the foundation-laying in question can, from the nature of the case, only be the preaching of the Christ who has come, because upon this foundation the establishment of the church took place, and in that preaching the old prophetic predictions were used only as means (Rom. xvi. 26).
Comp. also ver. 21. Harless supposes that the apostles are here called at the same time prophets. ² In this way, no doubt, the objection of Rückert is obviated, that, in fact, the prophets themselves would have come to Christianity only by means of the apostles, and would themselves have stood only on the θεμέλιος τῶν ἀποστόλων; but (a) from the non-repetition of the article there by no means follows the unity of the persons (see above), but only the unity of the category, under which the two are thought of. (b) There may be urged against it the analogy of iv. 11, as well as that in the whole N. T., where the ecclesiastical functions are already distinguished ³ and prophets are mentioned, apostles are not at the same time

¹ This has been very arbitrarily explained by the assertion that the apostles preached the gospel immediately, that they possessed the greater endowment of grace, that the foundation had been no recens posium, and such like. See specially Calovius and Estius.

² So also Rückert on iii. 5, and Hofmann, Schriftdew. II. 2, p. 122. The latter addsuces as a reason, that ἀπ. is no peculiar N. T. designation like ἀπίστευτος. This, however, it surely is, namely, in the N. T. sense, for which the O. T. word was the most suitable vehicle. Philipp also, Glaubenslehre, I.
p. 288, ed. 2, declares himself in favour of Harless.

³ This is not yet the case at Matt. xxiii. 34, where rather the whole category of Christian teachers is still designated by Old Testament names. In the parallel Luke xi. 49, on the other hand, the apostles are already adduced as such by name.
intended. It is true that the apostles had of necessity to possess the gift of prophecy, but this was understood of itself, and they are always called merely apostles, while simply those having received the gift of prophecy, who were not at the same time apostles, are termed prophets; comp. 1 Cor. xii. 28 f. (c) There would be no reason whatever bearing on the matter in hand why the apostles should here be designated specially as prophets; nay, the contrast of Moses and the prophets, arbitrarily assumed by Hofmann, would only tell against the identity (Luke xxiv. 27, 44; Acts xxiv. 14; John i. 46). That objection of Rückert, however, disappears entirely when we contemplate the prophets as the immediate and principal fellow-labourers in connection with the laying of the foundation done primarily by the apostles, in which character they, although themselves resting upon the θεμέλιον of the apostles, yet in turn were associated with them as founders. And the more highly Paul esteems prophecy (1 Cor. xiv. 1), and puts the prophets elsewhere also in the place next to the apostles (iv. 11; 1 Cor. xii. 28 f.), with so much the more justice might he designate the apostles and prophets as laying the foundation of the churches; and the less are we warranted, with de Wette, in finding here traces of a disciple of the apostles, who has had before him the results of the apostolic labours as well as the period of the original prophecy as concluded, or with Schwegler (in Zeller's Jahrb. 1844, p. 379) and Baur (p. 438), in recognising traces of Montanism with its new prophets as the continuers of the apostolate. — δοῦτος άκρογ. αὐτοῦ 'I. X.] wherein Jesus Christ Himself is corner-stone. On this most essential point, without which the building up in question upon the apostolic and prophetic foundation would lack its uniquely distinctive character, hinges the whole completion of the sublime picture, vv. 21, 22. The gospel preached by the apostles and prophets is the foundation, the basis, upon which the Ephesians were built up, i.e. this apostolic and prophetic gospel was preached also at Ephesus, and the readers were thereby converted and formed into a Christian community; but the corner-stone of this building is Christ Himself, inasmuch, namely, as Christ, the historic, living Christ, to whom all Christian belief and life have reference, as necessarily conditions through Himself the existence and endurance of each Christian commonwealth, as the existence and steadiness of a building are dependent on the indispensable corner-stone, which upholds the whole structure (on ἀκρογωνιαῖος, sc. λίθος, which does not occur in Greek writers, comp. LXX. Isa. xxviii. 16; Symm. Ps. cxvii. 22; 1 Pet. ii. 6; on the subject-matter, Matt. xxi. 42).

Only as to the figure, not as to the thing signified, is there a difference when Christ is here designated as the corner-stone, and at 1 Cor. iii. 11 as the foundation. The identity of the matter lies in τὸν κείμενον, 1 Cor. l.c. See on that passage. In the figure of the corner-stone (which "duos parietes ex diverso venientes conjungit et continet," Estius) many have found the union of the Jews and Gentiles set forth (Theodoret, Menochius, Estius, Michaelis, Holzhausen, Bretschneider, and others). But this is at variance with πάσα οἰκος, ver. 21, according to which for every Christian community, and so also for those consisting exclusively of Jewish-Christians or exclusively of Gentile-Christians, Christ is the corner-stone. — aὐτός does not apply to τὸ εἴδα τοῦ (Bengel, Cramer, Koppe, Holzhausen, Hofmann, II. 2, p. 122), for Christ is conceived of as the corner-stone, not of the foundation, but of the building (ver. 21). It belongs to Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which with this aὐτός is placed emphatically at the end, in order then to join on by ἐν τῷ κτ.λ. that which is to be further said of Christ, in so far as He is Himself the corner-stone. The article aὐτός τοῦ Ἰ. Χ. might be used; Christ would then be conceived of as already present in the consciousness of the readers (He Himself, Christ; see Fritzsche, ad Matth. p. 117): it was not necessary, however, to use it (in opposition to Bengel); but the conception is: Christ Himself is corner-stone (Il. vi. 450; Xen. Anab. ii. 1. 5, Apol. 11, al.; see Bornemann, ad Anab. i. 7. 11; Krüger on Thuc. i. 27. 3), so that Christ Himself, as respects His own unique destination in this edifice, is contradistinguished from His labourers, the apostles and prophets. — Whether, it may be asked, is τὸ θεμελιωτόν masculine (see on 1 Cor. iii. 10) or neuter? It tells in favour of the former that, with Paul, it is at 1 Cor. iii. 11 (also 2 Tim. ii. 19) decidedly masculine, but in no passage decidedly neuter

(Rom. xv. 20; 1 Tim. vi. 19). Harless erroneously thinks that the neuter is employed by the apostle only metaphorically.

Ver. 21. An elucidation to δυτος ἀκρομ. αὐτοῦ 'I. X., bearing on the matter in hand, and placing in yet clearer light the thought of ver. 19 f.: in whom each community, in whom also yours (ver. 22), organically develops itself unto its holy destination. — ἐν φ[...]

The admissibility of the anarthrous form τὸν ἀγαθὸν, in the sense of "the whole building," cannot be at all conceded, since συνεκτικὸς is neither a proper name, nor to be regarded as equivalent to such. See Winer, p. 101 [E. T. 140]; Buitmann, neut. Gram. p. 78 [E. T. 86]. In general νᾶς in the sense of whole can only be without an article, when the substantive to which it belongs would not need the article even without νᾶς (Krüger, § 50, 11. 9). Hence νᾶς σιν. can only signify either every building, or else a building utterly. In the latter sense Chrysostom appears, very unsuitably, no doubt (see above), to have taken it. According to Hofmann, II. 2, p. 123, νᾶς σιν. is meant to signify "whatever becomes a constituent part of a building" (thus also the Gentiles who become Christians). As if συνεκτικός could mean constituent part of a building! It signifies, even in Matt. xxiv. 1, Mark xiii. 1 f., edifice. And as if νᾶς, every part of the building, when in fact only two constituent parts, namely Jews and Gentiles, could be thought of, were in harmony with this relation! The rendering is linguistically and logically incorrect.

1 Observe the apostle's view of the church, as a whole and in its single parts, as one living organism. Comp. Thiersch, die Kirche im apost. Zeitalt. p. 154, 162; Ehrenfesch:er, prakt. Theol. I. p. 55 ff.

2 The opposition of which to linguistic usage is rightly urged also by Reiche, is by no means logically necessary, since Paul was not obliged to proceed from the conception of the whole body of Christians to the community of the readers (ver. 22), but might pass equally well from the conception "every community" to the conception "also ye" (ver. 22), and thus subordinate the particular to the general. The objection that there is only one oikodōmu̱ (de Wette) is.baseless, since the collective body of Christians might be just as reasonably, as every community for itself, conceived as a temple-building. The latter conception is found, as in 1 Cor. iii. 16, so also here, where the former is linguistically impossible. Chrysostom, however, is wrong in holding that πᾶσα oikod. is signified every part of the building (wall, roof, etc.), since oikodōmu̱ rather denotes the aggregate of the single parts of the building, the edifice, and since not a wall, a roof, etc., but only the building as a whole which is thought of, can grow unto a temple. — συναρµόται] becoming framed together; for the present participle represents the edifice as still in the process of building, as indeed every community is engaged in the progressive development of its frame of Christian life until the Parousia (comp. on 1 Cor. iii. 15). The participle is closely connected with ἐν Φ: every building, while its framing together, i.e. the harmonious combination of its parts into the corresponding whole, takes place in Christ, grows, etc. The compound συναρµόγειν (with classical writers συναρµόζειν) is met with only here and iv. 16, but ἀρµόγειν in Philipp. Thess. 78. — αὐξέσαι] On this form of the present, read in the N. T. only here and at Col. ii. 19, but genuinely classical, see Matthiae, p. 541. — εἰς ναὸν ἄγνοι] Final result of this growth. It is not, however, to be translated: unto a holy temple, for the conception of several temples was foreign to the apostle with his Jewish nationality, but: unto the holy temple, in which there was no need of the article (see on 1 Cor. iii. 16). To realize the idea of the one temple—that is the goal unto which every community, while its organic development of life has its firm support in Christ, groweth up. — ἐν κυρίῳ] By this not God is meant, as Michaelis, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Holzhausen, and others suppose, but Christ (see the following ἐν Φ). By the majority it is connected with ἄγνοι, in which case it would not have, with Beza, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt, to be taken for the dative, but (so also de Wette, Hofmann, Bleek) would have to be explained of the ἁγιότης of the temple, having its causal ground in Christ, thus specifically Christian. But the holiness of the temple lies in the dwelling of God therein (see ver. 22); it does not, therefore, first come into existence in Christ, but is already existent, and the church becomes in Christ that which the holy temple is, inasmuch as in this church the idea of the holy temple realizes itself. Others have rightly, therefore, connected it with αὐθεν, although ἐν is not, with Grotius, Wolf, et al., to be translated by per. In the case of every building which is framed together in Christ, the growing into the holy temple takes place also in Christ (as the one on whom this further development depends). The being framed together and the growing up of the building to its sacred destination—both not otherwise than in the Lord.

Ver. 22. ἐν σαλῶ applies to ἐν κυρίῳ, and is to be explained quite like ἐν σά in ver. 21. The reference to ναόν (Calixtus, Rosenmüller, Matthæus) appears on account of the immediately preceding ἐν κυρίῳ arbitrary, and, according to the correct apprehension of πᾶσα ὁικοδ., as well as with regard to the following ἐς κατοικητήριον κ.τ.λ., impossible. — συνοικοδομεῖσθαι] is indicative, not imperative (Calvin, Meier), against which vv. 19, 20 are decisive,¹ according to which Paul says not what the readers ought to be, but what they are; hence he, at ver. 22, attaches in symmetrical relative construction the relation of the readers to that which subsists in the case of every Christian community, ver. 21. The compound, however, may mean either: ye are built along with (the others), comp. 3 Esdr. v. 68 (συνοικοδομήσωμεν ἵματι), so that the church of the readers would be placed in the same category with the other churches (so it is ordinarily understood); or: ye are builted together, so that σάν relates to the putting together of the single parts of the building (comp. Philo, de praem. et poen. p. 928 E: οἰκίαν εκ συνοικοδομημένης κ. συνημοσιμένης, comp. Thuc. i. 93. 3; Dio Cass. xxxix. 61). The latter is to be preferred, because the parallelism of vv. 21 and 22

makes the attaching of different senses to the two compounds συναρμολογ. and συνοικοδ. appear groundless. — εἰς κατοικητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ] unto the dwelling of God, quite the same, only with a variation of expression, as before εἰς ναὸς ἁγίου was (comp. Matt. xxiii. 21), and pertaining to συνοικοδ. The supposition of Griesbach and Knapp, that ἐν ᾧ κ. ὑμ. συνοικοδ. is an interpolation, and εἰς κατοικ. κ.τ.λ. still belongs to αἰθεί; as, again, the expedient of Koppe and Rückert, that εἰς κατοικ. τοῦ Θεοῦ means, in order that a dwelling of God may arise; and finally, the assertion of Harless, that κατοικ. τοῦ Θεοῦ is not identical with the ναὸς ἁγίου, but that the individual Christians were so termed because God dwells in them and the whole forms a ναὸς ἁγίου,—are only different forced interpretations, resulting from the linguistically unwarranted explanation of the above πάση σωκοδομή as the whole building. — ἐν πνεύματι] receives from most expositors an adjectival turn: “a spiritual temple, in opposition to the stone one of the Jews,” Rückert. How arbitrary generally in itself! how arbitrary, in particular, not to refer εἰς πνεύματι to the Holy Spirit! since we have here, exactly as in ver. 18, the juxtaposition of the Divine Trias, while the context presents nothing whatever to suggest the contrast with a temple of stone. Harless (comp. Meier and Matthies): “a dwelling, which is in the indwelling of the Spirit;” and this, forsooth! is held to mean: “inasmuch as the Spirit dwells in them, they are a dwelling of God and of Christ.” But, apart from the fact that of this “and of Christ” there is nothing whatever in the text, in this way ἐν πνεύματι, which according to the literal sense could only be the continens, would in fact be made the contentum! From this the very analogies, in themselves inappropriate (because they are abstracta), which Harless employs: χαρὰ ἐν πνεύματι, ἀγάπη ἐν πν., ought to have precluded him. The true view is to connect it not merely with κατοικ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, but with σωκοδομεῖσθε εἰς κατοικ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, and ἐν is instrumental. Ye are being builded together unto the dwelling-place of God by virtue of the Holy Spirit; in so far, namely, as the latter dwells in your Christian community (see on 1 Cor. iii. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 16 f.; comp. Jas. iv. 5), and thereby the relation of being the temple of God is brought about—a relation, which without this indwelling of the Spirit would not occur, and would not be possible. For the Spirit of God is related to the ideal temple as the Shechina to the actual temple, and is the conditio sine qua non of the same. Comp. also Hofmann, who, however, likewise connects ἐν πνεύματι only with κατοικ. τ. Θ. The objections of Harless to the instrumental rendering of ἐν are not valid; for (a) the circumstance that ἐν πνεύματι was placed only at the end not only very naturally resulted from the parallelism with ver. 21, seeing that in ver. 21 there is not contained an element corresponding to the ἐν πνεύματι, and consequently this new element is most naturally appended at the end, but the position at the close imparts also to the ἐν πνεύματι an unusual emphasis (Kühner, II. p. 625), comp. also iii. 5; and (b) the suggestion that πνεῦμα, as the objective medium, must have the article, is incorrect, seeing that πνεῦμα, with or without an article (in accordance with the nature of a proper noun), is the objective Holy Spirit.

Contents.—On this account am I, Paul, the prisoner of God for the sake of you, the Gentiles (ver. 1). Effusion over the nature of his office as apostle of the Gentiles (vv. 2—12), which concludes with the entreaty to the readers not to become discouraged at the sufferings which he is enduring on their behalf (ver. 13). On this account he beseeches God that they might be inwardly strengthened in the Christian character, in order that they may know the whole greatness of the love of Christ, and thereby become filled with all divine gifts of grace (vv. 14—19). Doxology, vv. 20, 21.

Ver. 1. On this account, namely, in order that ye may be built unto the dwelling of God by means of the Spirit (ii. 22), —on this behalf, that your Christian development may advance towards that goal, am I, Paul, the fettered one of Christ Jesus for the sake of you, the Gentiles. The position of Paul in fetters on account of his labours as the apostle of the Gentiles could only exert a beneficial influence upon the development of the Christian life of his churches, as edifying and elevating for them (comp. ver. 13), as, on the other hand, it must have redounded as a scandal to them, if he had withdrawn from the persecutions (Gal. vi. 12; 2 Cor. xi. 23 ff.; Phil. ii. 17 f.). in the consciousness of his personal authority (comp. 2 Cor. x. 1; Gal. v. 2; 1 Thess. ii. 18; Col. i. 23; Phil. 9), which the bonds could not weaken, but only exalt (2 Cor. xi. 23 ff.). — ὁ δέσμος τοῦ Ἱ. Χ. The article denotes the bound one of Christ κατ᾽ ἐξοχήν, such as Paul could not but, in accordance with his special relation to Christ (Gal. i. 1, vi. 17), appear to himself and others. The genitive expresses the author of the being bound. Comp. 2 Tim. i. 8; Phil. 9. See Winer, p. 170 [E. T. 236]. Paul regards himself, in keeping with the consciousness of his entire dependence on Christ (as δούλος Χριστοῦ), as the one whom Christ has put in chains.— As regards the construction, by many the simple εἰμι is rightly supplied after ὁ δέσμος τοῦ Ἱ. (Syriac, Chrysostom, Theophylact, Erasmus, Cajetanus, Beza, Elsner, Calovius, Wolf, Michaelis, Paraphr.; Morus, Koppe, Rosenmüller, and others), so that ὁ δέσμος τοῦ Ἱ. is predicate, in connection with which some have neglected the article, others have rightly had regard to it (see especially Beza). He is, however, the δέσμος of Christ on behalf of the Gentiles; and this thought leads him in the sequel to explain himself more fully regarding his vocation as Apostle of the Gentiles, whereupon he only briefly returns to the point of his imprisonment in ver. 13, after having been led away from it by the detailed exposition of the theme, to which he had been incited by the ἵπτε τῶν ἔθνων. Free movement of thought natural in a letter. Supplementary additions, such as legationes fungor (Ambrosiaster, Castalio, Calvin, Vatablus), or hoc scribo (Camerarius, and the like),¹ are not implied in the context, and are therefore erroneous. Others have regarded the discourse as broken off, and have found the resumption either at ver. 8 (Oecumenius, Grotius), or at ver. 13 (Zanchius, Cramer, Holzhausen), or at ver. 14 (Theodoret, Luther, Piscator, Calixtus, Cornelius a Lapide, Estius, Homberg, Schöttgen, Bengel, Baumgarten, and others, including Flatt, Lachmann, Rückert, Winer, Matthies, Harless, Olshausen, Bisping, Bleek; de Wette, characterizing this construction as “hardly Pauline”), or only at

iv. 1 (Erasmus Schmid, Hammond, Michaelis in note to his translation). But all these hypotheses are—inasmuch as, according to the above explanation, ver. 1 in itself yields with ease and linguistic correctness a complete and suitable sense—unnecessary complications of the discourse. Baumgarten-Crusius regards the discourse as entirely broken off under the pressure of the crowding thoughts, so that it is not at all resumed in the sequel. — After ver. 1 only a comma is to be placed.

Ver. 2. Confirmation of that which has just been said, ἐπετρέπειν τὰν ἐθνῶν, by the recalling of what the readers have heard concerning his vocation. “For you, the Gentiles,” I say, upon the presupposition that, etc. This presupposition he expresses by εἴρη, i.e. tum certe st (Klotz, ad Devar. p. 308), it being implied in the connection (for of his church he could not presuppose anything else), not in the word itself, that he assumes this rightly. He might have written εἴρη, if at all, provided that, or εἴρη γε, provided namely (Xen. Mem. i. 4. 4, Anab. i. 7. 9; often in the tragedians), but he has conceived the presupposition under the form at least εἴρη, if namely, and so denotes it. Comp. on Gal. iii. 4 and 2 Cor. v. 3; wherever εἴρη is used and the assumption is a certain one (as also at iv. 21), the latter is to be gathered from the connection. From whom the readers had heard the matter in question, their own consciousness told them, namely, from Paul himself and other Pauline teachers, so that εἴρη ἡκούσατε κ.τ.λ. is a reminder of his preaching among them. Hence our passage is wrongly regarded as at variance with the superscription πρὸς Ἐφεσίους, and as pointing to readers to whom Paul was not personally known; whilst others, as Grotius (so also Rinck, Sendschr. der Korinth. p. 56, who, however, takes the correct view in the Stud. u. Krit. 1849, p. 954), have, without any ground in the context, assigned to the simple ἀκούειν the signification bene intelligere; Calvin, on the other hand, had recourse to the altogether unnatural hypothesis: “Credibile est, quum ageret Ephesi, eum tacuisse de his rebus;” and Böttger (Beitr. iii. p. 46 ff.) refers it to the hearing of this Epistle read, against which the very ἀναγνώσατες that follows in ver. 3 is decisive. Estius very correctly states that εἴρη is not “dubitans, sed potius affirmantis; neque enim ignorare quod hic
Paul might have expressed himself in the form of an assertion (ὃκούσατε γὰρ, or ἔπει ὡκούσατε), but the hypothetic form of expression constitutes a more delicate and suggestive way of recalling his preaching among them (as also the Attic writers, in place of ἔπει γε, delicately use the hypothetic εἰγε; see Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 5. 1), without, however, containing an obliquam reprehensionem (Vitringa, comp. Holzhausen), of which the context affords no trace. — τὴν οἰκονομίαν τῆς χάρης κ.τ.λ.] the arrangement (see on i. 10) which has been made regarding the grace of God given to me with reference to you (τῆς χάρης is the genitive object). The more precise explanation is then given by οὐ κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν κ.τ.λ. The χάρις is here, in accordance with the context (τῆς δοθ. μοι εἰς ὑμᾶς), the divine bestowal of grace that took place in the entrusting him with the apostolic office. Comp. on Rom. xii. 3, xv. 15. Others, like Pelagius, Anselm, Erasmus, Grotius, Michaelis, Rosenmüller, et al., have explained οἰκον. τ. χάρ. as the office of administering evangelical grace; but against this it may be urged that not τῆς δοθείως, but τὴν δοθείων, must have been afterwards used. This mistake is avoided by Wieseler, p. 446 f., where he takes it as: the office for which I have been qualified by the grace conferred upon me on your behalf. This office the readers had heard, inasmuch as they had heard the preaching of the apostle. But how are we to justify the expression “to hear the office,” instead of “to hear the official preaching”? The words would merely say: if ye have heard of the office, etc., Gal. i. 13; Col. i. 4; Philem. 5.

Ver. 3. In this more detailed specification of the οἰκονομία meant in ver. 2, κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν has the emphasis: by way of revelation, expressing the mode of the making known,

1 De Wette dogmatically lays it down that the readers had no need, if the apostle had already exercised his apostolic calling among them, now first to learn from himself that he had received it. But in so speaking he has not attended to the fact that the object of the ἱερων is not the reception of the apostolic vocation in general, but the mode of this reception (namely, κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, ver. 3). This account of the manner in which he had become their apostle he communicated to them when he was with them, and of this he reminds them now.
in accordance with a well-known adverbial usage (Bernhardy, p. 241). In substance the δι' ἀποκαλύψεως of Gal. i. 12 is not different. According to the history of the conversion in Acts xxvi. (not according to Acts ix. and xxii.), we have here to think not merely of the disclosures that followed the event near Damascus (as Gal. i. 12), but also of the revelation connected with this event itself; for the contents of what is revealed is here the blessing of the Gentiles, and with this comp. Acts xxvi. 17, 18, as also Gal. i. 16; hence from κατὰ ἀποκάλυσθαι we may not infer a post-apostolic time of composition (Schwegler). — ἐγνώρισθη] namely, on the part of God; comp. vv. 2, 5.— τὸ μυστήριον] see on i. 9; it applies here, however, not to the counsel of redemption in general, but to the inclusion of the Gentiles in it. It is not until ver. 6 that the apostle comes to express this special contents which is here meant.— καθὼς down to the end of ver. 4, is not to be treated as a parenthesis, inasmuch as ὁ, ver. 5, attaches itself to the ἐν τῷ μυστ. τ. Χ. immediately preceding.— καθὼς προέγραφα ἐν ὀλγῷ] as I before wrote in brief, refers not to κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, but to ἐγνώρισθη μοι τὸ μυστήριον, as is shown by ver. 4, where Paul characterizes that which was before written as evidence of his knowledge of the mystery, but not as evidence of the revelation by which he has attained to this knowledge. Groundlessly, and at variance with the subsequent present ἀναγινώσκοντες, Calvin, Hunnius, and others have (although it was already rejected by Theodoret) referred προέγραφον to an epistle which has now been lost, in support of which view the passage in Ignatius εἰς ἐπιστολήν (see Introd. § 1) has been made use of. See Fabric. Cod. Apoc. I. p. 916. It applies (not to i. 9, 10, as many would have it, but), as is proved by the here meant special contents of the μυστήριον (ver. 6), to the section last treated of, concerning the Gentiles attaining unto the Messianic economy of salvation, ii. 11-22. Comp. already Oecumenius.— ἐν ὀλγῷ] διὰ βραχέων, Chrysostom: ἐν is instrumental. See Acts xxvi. 28. Comp. the classical διὰ ὀλγῶν, Plat. same is expressed by συντόμως, Acts xxiv. 4, summarily. Wetstein well puts it: “paqua tantum attigi, cum multa dici possent.” Following Theodoret, Beza (with hesitation), Calvin, Grotius, Estius, Erasmus, Schmid, Koppe, and others have taken it as a more precise definition of the πρό: paulo ante. But in a temporal sense ἐν διήγῳ means nothing else than in a short time (see on Acts xxxvi. 28; comp. Plat. Apol. p. 22 B; Dem. xxxiii. 18; Pind. Pyth. viii. 131: ἐν δ’ διήγῳ βροτῶν τὸ τερπνόν αὑτηθαί), which is not suitable here; πρὸ διήγου must have been used (Acts v. 36, xxi. 38; 2 Cor. xii. 2, al.; Plat. Symp. p. 147 E, al.). Comp. διήγου τι πρότερον, Herod. iv. 81.

Ver. 4. In accordance with which ye, while ye read it, are able to discern, etc. — πρός δε applies to that which Paul προέγραψε, and πρός indicates the standard of the judging; in accordance with which. See Bernhardy, p. 205; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 652; Winer, p. 361 [E. T. 505]. The inference: εἰκ ἐγγραψεν διὰ τὴν ἐκφήνην, ἀλλ' ἐκ τῆς ἐκφήνης νοεῖν (Oecumenius, comp. Chrysostom; Bengel compares ex ungue leonem), finds no justification at all in what Paul has previously written. — ἀναγνώσκοντες] not attendentes (Calvin), but, as always in the N. Comp. 3 Esdr. i. 33: τῆς συνεσθεσιν αὐτῶ τοῦ νόμου κυρίων. The genitive τοῦ Χριστοῦ is ordinarily taken as genitivas objecti: the mystery which has reference to Christ. But, even apart from Col. i. 27, the whole subsequent detailed statement as far as ver. 12 suggests the contextually more exact view, according to which Paul means the μυστηρίων contained in Christ. Christ Himself, His person and His whole work, especially His redeeming death, connecting

1 Wiggers (Stud. u. Krit. 1841, p. 438) regards as subject the Ephesians, not as such, but as representatives of the Gentile world: “ye Gentiles.” Arbitrarily imported, and entirely unnecessary. Doubtless the σῶμα of the Ap. is τῆς μυστηρίων τοῦ Χ. must have been entirely beyond doubt for the readers in consequence of their personal connection with him; but thereby his appeal to what he has just written does not become inappropriate, but only the more forcible and effective. There lies a certain μυστήριον in this reference to that which he has just written.
also the Gentiles with the people of God (ver. 6), is the concretum of the Divine mystery.— The assailants of the genuineness of the Epistle find ver. 4 incompatible with the apostolic dignity (de Wette), nay, even "self-complacent and courting favour" (Schwegler). But here precisely the point brought into prominence, that the mystery had become known to him κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, justifies the stress laid upon his σύνεσις in the mystery, so far as he has already manifested the same in his Epistle. The apostle might have appealed in proof of this σύνεσις to his working, but he might also—especially taking into account the change which had meanwhile occurred in the personal composition of the church—adduce for this purpose his writing, in doing which his very apostolic dignity raised him above considerations of the semblance of self-complacency and the like. Hardly would another, who had merely assumed the name of the apostle Paul, have put into his mouth such a self-display of his σύνεσις—which, in order not to fall out of his assumed apostolic part, he would rather have avoided.— As to σύνεσις, see on Col. i. 9.

Ver. 5. Not an explanation, to what extent he was speaking of a mystery (Rückert, Meier): for that the readers knew, and the design of bringing in a mere explanation would not be in keeping with the elevated solemn style of the whole verse; but a triumphant outburst of the conscious exalted happiness of belonging to the number of those who had received the revelation of the mystery—an outburst, which was very naturally called forth by the sublime contents of the μυστήριον. — ἐπεράς γενεάς] may be either a definition of time, like the dative at ii. 12 (so taken usually); in that case γενεάς is not periodis or temporibus in general, but: in other generations (comp. on ver. 21); or it may express the simple dative relation, so that γενεάς is generationibus (Vulgate): which to other generations was not made known, according to which τοῖς νόμοι τῶν ἀνθρ. would form a characteristic epexegetis (Lobeck, ad Aj. 308; Bernhardy, p. 55; Nägelsbach, Anm. z. Ilías, ed. 3, pp. 272, 307). This was my previous view. Yet the former explanation, as being likewise linguistically correct, and withal more simple and more immediately in keeping with the contrast νῦν, is to be preferred. The ἐτέρας γεν. are the generations which have preceded the νῦν; and τοῖς νιόσ τῶν ἄνθρωπ., as Bengel supposed, 1 is wrongly inferred from τοῖς ἁγίοις ἀποστόλοις κ.τ.λ., since the contrast does not lie in the persons, 2 but in the time (ἐτέρας γενεάς ... νῦν). It is true Ezekiel often bears the name Ἰησοῦς (vii. 1, xii. 1, al.), not, however, as prophet, but as man; and thereby likewise his human lowliness and dependence upon God are brought home to him. — ως] By this expression, which (in opposition to Bleek) is to be left as comparative, the disclosure made to Abraham and the ancient prophets of the future participation of the Gentiles in Messiah’s kingdom (Gal. iii. 8; Rom. ix. 24—26, xvi. 9 ff.) remains undisputed; for “fuit illis hoc mysterium quasi procul et cum involucris ostensum,” Beza; hence the prophetic prediction served only as means for the making known of the later complete revelation of the mystery (Rom. xvi. 26). — νῦν] in the Christian period. Comp. 1 Pet. i. 12. — ἀπεκαλύφθη] not a repetition of ἐγνωρίσθη, but the distinguishing mode in which this manifestation took place, is intended to be expressed: κατά ἀποκάλυψιν ἐγνωρίσθη, ver. 3. — τοῖς ἁγίοις ἀποστ. κ.τ.λ.] is not to be divided by a comma after ἁγίοις (Lachmann, Bisping), so that ἀποστ. αὐτ. κ. προφ. would be apposition or more precise definition, whereby the flow of the expression would be only needlessly interrupted. The predicate ἅγιος was already borne by the Old Testament prophets (2 Kings iv. 9; Luke i. 70; 2 Pet. i. 21), and this appellation at our passage by no means exposes the apostolic origin of the Epistle to suspicion (de Wette derives ἁγίους from the passage Col.

1 In quite an opposite way Jerome would exclude the ancient patriarchs and prophets from the νῦν τῶν ἄθρ.; for these were rather sons of God!

2 The ἀνεσταλμ. and ἀποκάλυψιν were also νῦν τῶν ἄθρ., but a sacred λαλής of the same.
i. 26 recast in post-apostolic times; Baur: from the post-apostolic reverential looking back to the apostles; but it is very naturally called forth by the context, in order to distinguish the recipients of the revelation amidst the mass of the ὑιὸν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, in accordance with the connection, as God's special messengers and instruments, as ἀγιοί Θεοῦ ἀνθρώπων (2 Pet. i. 21); whereupon the apostolic consciousness in Paul was great and decided enough not to suppress the predicate suggested by the connection, while he is speaking of the apostles and prophets in general, whereas, immediately afterwards, at ver. 8, in speaking of himself in particular, he gives full play to his individual deep humility. How can we conceive that the author should thus in one breath have fallen out of his assumed part at ver. 5 with τοῖς ἁγίοις, by a "slip" (Baur), and then have resumed it at ver. 8 with ὑμῖν τῷ ἐλαχιστότερῳ! — αὐτοῦ not of Christ (Bleek), but of God, whose action is implied in ἐγνωρισθη and ἄπεκαλύφθη. — καὶ προφήταις] quite as at ii. 20. — ἐν πνεύματι The Holy Spirit is the divine principle, through which the ἄπεκαλύφθη took place. Comp. i. 17; 1 Cor. ii. 10 ff. Rückert wrongly takes it as: in an inspired state, which πνεῦμα never means, but, on the contrary, even without the article is the objective Holy Spirit. Comp. on ii. 22. Koppe and Holzhausen connect ἐν πνεύματι (sc. οὗτω) with προφήταις. In this way it would be an exceedingly superfluous addition, since prophets, who should not be ἐν πν., are inconceivable, whereas a revelation was conceivable even otherwise than through the Spirit (by means of theophany, angel, vision, ecstasy, etc.). Meier connects ἐν πν. even with ἁγίοις, so that the sense would be: in sacred enthusiasm! and Ambrosiaster (comp. Erasmus) with the following εἰναι κ.τ.λ. Baur, p. 440, knows how to explain ἐν πνεύματι from a Montanistic view, and thinks that it is only on account of the prophets that it is applied to the apostles also.

Ver. 6. Ἐπεξεργαστικαλ infinitive, more precisely specifying the contents of the μνητήριον: that the Gentiles are fellow-heirs.

1 A side-glance at the Jews, who would have seen a blasphemy in the apostolic message of the joint-heirsip of the Gentiles (Lange, Apostol. Zeitalt. I. p. 128), is utterly remote from the connection.
etc. This εἶναι (which is not to be changed into should be) is objectively contained in the redeeming work of Christ, and the subjective appropriation takes place by the conversion of the individuals. — συνκληρονόμων denotes the joint possession (with the believing Jews) of eternal Messianic bliss,—a possession now indeed still ideal (Rom. viii. 24), but to be really accomplished at the setting up of the kingdom. See on i. 11, 14, v. 5; Acts xx. 32; Rom. viii. 17; Gal. iii. 28.— σύνσωμα καὶ συμμέτοχα κ.τ.λ.] That which is already sufficiently designated by συνκληρ. is yet again twice expressed, once figuratively and the next time literally;¹ in which no climax is to be found (Jerome, Pelagius, Zanchius, Schenkel), but the great importance of the matter has led the apostle, deeply impressed by it, to accumulated description.² σύνσωμα denotes belonging jointly to the body (i.e. as members to the Messianic community, whose head is Christ, i. 23, ii. 16). The word does not occur elsewhere, except in the Fathers (see Suicer, Thes. II. p. 1191), and was perhaps formed by Paul himself. Comp. however, συσσωματοποιείν, Arist. de mundo, iv. 30. συμμέτοχος, too, occurs only here and v. 7, and besides, in Josephus, Bell. i. 24. 6, and the Fathers. Comp. συμμετέχω, 2 Macc. v. 20; Xen. Anab. vii. 8. 17; Plat. Theaet. p. 181 C. The ἐπαγγέλια is the promise of the Messianic blessedness, which God has given in the O. T., comp. ii. 12. He, however, who has joint share in the promise is he to whom it jointly relates, in order to be jointly realized in his case; hence ἡ ἐπαγγέλια is not to be interpreted as res promissa, which several (Menochius, Grotius, Bengel; comp. Estius) have referred to the Holy Spirit (Gal. iii. 14; Heb. vi. 4; Acts ii. 39), but at variance with the context (συνκληρ.). The thrice occurring σὺς has the πρῶτον of the Jews (Acts iii. 26; Rom. i. 16) as its presupposition.³

³ But the thought that the substantial contents of the gospel are identical with Judaism (Baur, Neuest. Theol. p. 278) is incorrectly imported. See, in opposition to it, especially ii. 15.

Meyer—Eph.
— ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ] dependent on ἐίναι, applies to all three elements, as does also the following διὰ τοῦ εἰαγγ. In Christ, as the Reconciler, the συγκληρονομία κ.τ.λ. of the Gentiles is objectively founded; and through the gospel, which is proclaimed to them, the subjective appropriation in the way of faith is brought about. The annexing, with Vatablus, Koppe, and Holzhausen, ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ to τῆς ἐπαγγ., is not to be approved, just because the reader, as he needed no more precise definition in connection with συγκληρ. and σύσσωμα, understood also of himself what ἐπαγγελία was meant, and the absolute τῆς ἐπαγγ. (see the critical remarks) is more emphatic.

Ver. 7. Διάκονος] Comp. Col. i. 23; 2 Cor. iii. 6; also Luke i. 2. Paul became a servant of the gospel when he was enjoined by God through Christ (Gal. i. 1, 15 ff.; Acts ix. 22, 26) to devote his activity to the proclamation of the gospel. The distinction from ὑπηρέτης (used by Paul only at 1 Cor. iv. 1) is not, as Harless supposes, that διάκονος denotes the servant in his activity for the service, while ὑπηρέτης denotes him in his activity for the Master (see, in opposition to this, 1 Cor. xii. 3; Rom. xiii. 4; 2 Cor. vi. 3; Col. i. 7, iv. 6); but both words indicate without distinction of reference the relation of service, and the difference lies only in this, that the two designations, in accordance with their etymology, are originally borrowed from different concrete relations of service (*διάκ., runner; ὑπηρ., rower; see the Lexicons, and on διάκονος, Buttm. Lexil. I. p. 218 ff.); in the usage, however, of the N. T., both words have retained merely the general notion of servant, as very frequently also with Greek writers. In opposition to Harless it may be also urged that not only is the expression διακονεῖν τῳ τι used, but also in like manner ὑπηρετεῖν τῳ τι (Xen. Anab. vii. 7. 46, Cyr. i. 6. 39; Soph. Phil. 1012). The gift, which was conferred upon Paul by the divine grace, and in consequence of which he became a servant of the gospel, is, agreeably to the context, the apostolic office (comp. vv. 2, 8), not the donum linguarum (Grotius), nor yet the gift of the Holy Spirit (Flatt, after older expositors). — κατὰ τὴν ἔνεργ. τ. διν. αὐτοῦ] belongs to τὴν δοθεισάν μοι. To the efficacious action of the power of God (comp. ver. 20, and on i. 19) the bestowal of the gift of grace leads back the mind of the apostle, in the consciousness of what he had been before, Gal. i. 13 ff. "Haec est potentiae ejus efficacia, ex nihilo grande aliquid efficere," Calvin. By the bestowal, in fact, of that gift of the divine grace Saul had become changed into Paul; hence κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργ. τ. διν. ἀμφότερος.

Ver. 8. The apostle now explains himself more fully on what had been said in ver. 7, and that entirely from the standpoint of the humility, with which, in the deep feeling of his personal unworthiness, he looked forth upon the greatness and glory of his vocation. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 9. — After ver. 7 a full stop is to be placed, and οὖν ἑδνεσθε ἐναργ. is the explanation of the χάρις αὕτη. Harless regards ἐμοι ... αὕτη as a parenthetic exclamation, like ii. 6, and τοῖς ἑθν. ἐναργ. as a more precise definition of what is meant by ἐνεργ. He finds it contrary to nature to meet in the long intercalation (vv. 2–13) a halting-point, and yet not a return to the main subject. But in opposition to the whole view of such an intercalation, see on ver. 1. And hardly could it occur to a reader not to connect οὖν ἑδνεσθε with the immediately preceding ἡ χάρις αὕτη, specially when τὸ ἐλαχιστοτέρο ἑκ. ἑκ. points to the contrast of the greatness of the vocation, which very greatness is depicted, and in how truly grand a style! from τοῖς ἑθνεσθε forward. — On the forms of degree constructed from the superlative (or even the comparative, as 3 John 4), see Sturz, Ad Mait. p. 44; Lobeck, Ad Phryn. p. 135 f.; Winer, p. 65 [E. T. 81]. In the analysis the comparative sense is to be maintained (the least, lesser than all). — The expression of humility πάντων ἄγλων, i.e. than all Christians, is even far stronger than 1 Cor. xv. 9. Οὖν εἰπε τῶν ἀναστόλων, Chrysostom. What was the ground of this self-abasement (which, indeed, Baur, p. 447, enumerates among the "heightening imitations") the reader knew, without the necessity for Paul writing it to him,—

1 The readings ἀνάρξων in 4 and Chrys., ἀναρξιλαοΣ in Archel., and ἀγίων ἀναρξίαν in 46, are attempts at interpretation, of which ἀνάρξων was meant to guard against understanding the ἱματία of the angels; ἀγίων is wanting only in Marcion and 72*, and Semler ought not to have looked upon it as spurious.
namely, not the consciousness of sin in general (Harless), in which respect Paul knew that he stood on the same level with any other (Rom. iii. 22, xi. 32; Gal. iii. 22), as with every believer upon an equal footing of redemption by the death of Christ (Gal. iii. 13, 14; Rom. vii. 25, viii. 2), but the deeply humbling consciousness of having persecuted Christ, which, inextinguishable in him, so often accompanied his recalling of the grace of the apostolic office vouchsafed to him (1 Cor. xv. 9; Phil. iii. 6; comp. 1 Tim. i. 13).— τοῖς ἔθνεσιν] Paul was apostle of the Gentiles. — τὸ ἀνεξίχν. πλαύτος τοῦ Χριστοῦ] By this is meant the whole divine fulness of salvation, of which Christ is the possessor and bestower, and which is of such a nature that the human intellect cannot explore it so as to form an adequate conception of it. This does not hinder the proclamation, which, on the contrary, is rendered possible by revelation, but imposes on the cognition (1 Cor. xiii. 9-12) as on the proclamation their limits. As to ἀνεξίχν., see on Rom. xi. 33.

Ver. 9. Καὶ φωτίσαι πάντας] According to Harless, who is followed by Olshausen, Paul makes a transition to all men: "not, however, to the Gentiles alone, but to all." Wrongly, since Paul must have written καὶ πάντας φωτίσαι, as he had before prefixed τοῖς ἔθνεσιν. πάντας applies to all Gentiles, and the progress of the discourse has regard not to the persons, but to a particular main point (καὶ, and in particular), upon which Paul in his proclamation of the riches of Christ gives information to all Gentiles. — φωτίσαι] collustrare, of the enlightenment of the mind (John i. 9), which is here to be conceived of as brought about by means of the preaching. Comp. Heb. vi. 4 (and Bleek, ad loc.), x. 32; Ps. cxix. 130; Ecclus. xlv. 17. Docere (Grotius, Bengel, Rosenmüller, and others) hits doubtless the real sense, but unwarrantably abandons the figure. The possible difficulty that Christ Himself is in fact the light (John. i. 9, xii. 35) disappears on considering that the apostles are mediately the enlightened ones (2 Cor. iv. 4; Matt. v. 14), the proclaimers and bearers (Acts xxvi. 18) of the divine light and its moral powers (v. 8). — τῆς ἡ οἰκουμείας κ.τ.λ.] i.e. what is the arrangement, which is made with regard to the mystery, etc. As to οἰκουμεία, see on
The mystery is that indicated as to its contents in ver. 6; and what has been adjusted or arranged with regard thereto (ἡ ὁλόκληρα τοῦ ὑστηρίου), consists in the fact that this mystery, hidden in God from the very first, was to be made known in the present time through the church to the heavenly powers. See what follows.— ἀποκεκρυμ., Rom. xvi. 25. Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 7; Col. i. 26.— ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων] from the world-periods, since they have begun to run their course, from the very beginning. The mystery, namely, was decreed already πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, 1 Cor. ii. 7, comp. Eph. i. 4, but is conceived of as hidden only since the beginning of the ages, because there was no one previously for whom it could be hidden. The same thing with ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων here is denoted at Rom. xvi. 25 by the popular expression χρόνων αἰωνίων. We may add that ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων occurs in the N. T. only here and Col. i. 26; elsewhere is found the expression current also in Greek authors, ἀπ' αἰώνων (Luke i. 70; Acts iii. 21), and ἐκ τοῦ αἰώνος (John ix. 32).— τὸ τὰ πάντα κτίσαιντι quippe qui omnia creavit. Herein lies—and this is the significant bearing of this more precise designation of God—a confirmation of what has just been said, τοῦ ἀποκεκρυμ. ἀπὸ τῶν αἰών. εν τῷ Θεῷ. Bengel aptly observes: "rerum omnium creatio fundamentum est omnis reliqua oeconomiae, pro potestate Dei universalis liberrimae dispensatae." He who has created all that exists must already have had implicitly contained in His creative plan the great unfolding of the world, which forms the contents of this mystery, so that thus the latter was ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων hidden in God. Comp. on ὁ ποιῶν τὰῦτα γνωστὰ ἀπ' αἰώνως, Acts xv. 18, and as to the idea which underlies our passage also, that already the creative word contemplated Christ as its aim, Col. i. 16 ff., and the commentary thereon. Rückert thinks that Paul wishes to indicate

1 The totality of that which exists, the whole world. Every limitation of this universal meaning is unwarranted, as when Beza, Piscator, Flatt, and others refer it to mankind. "Unus Deus omnes populos condidit, sic etiam nunc omnes ad se vocat," Beza. Holzhausen, too, arbitrarily limits it to all spiritual beings, called to everlasting life; while Matthies mixes up also in æternae the effecting of the spiritual blessedness.

2 Hence τοις ἱνενὶ Χριστί would have been a more correct gloss than ἰδιὶ ἷνενὶ Χρ., which the Recepta has.
how far it may not surprise us that He, from whom all things are derived, should have concealed a part of His all-embracing plan, in order to bring it to light only at the due time. But, apart from the fact that the creation of all things does not at all involve as a logical inference the concealment of a part of the divine plan, it was not the ἀποκρεφτης, in itself that needed a ground assigned for it, since in fact this predicate is necessarily implied in the notion of μυστήριον, but the ἀποκρεφτης ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων. This ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων is the terminus a quo, which was introduced with the κτίσις τῶν πάντων. At variance with the context, Olshausen holds that Paul wished to call attention to the fact that the establishment of redemption itself [of which the apostle in fact is not speaking] is a creative act of God, which could have proceeded only from Him who created all things. Harless places τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσι. in connection with ἵνα κ.τ.λ., ver. 10. But see on ver. 10.

REMARK.—When διὰ ἵππον Χριστοῦ is recognised as not genuine (see the critical remarks), the possibility is taken away of referring κτίσαιν to the moral creation by Christ, as is done by Calvin, Zanchius, Calixtus, Grotius, Crell, Locke, Semler, Morus, Koppe, Usteri, Meier, Baumgarten-Crusius, and others. But even if those words were genuine, the formal and absolute κτίσαιν, as well as the emphatically prefixed and unlimited τὰ πάντα, would justify only the reference to the physical creation, Gen. i. Comp. Calovius and Reiche.

Ver. 10. ".Include] not ebatic (Thomas, Boyd, Zanchius, Estius, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Meier, Holzhausen), introduces the design, not, however, of τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσαιν, as, in addition to those who understand κτίσιν of the ethical creation, also Harless would take it. The latter sees in τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσαιν ἵνα κ.τ.λ. an explanation "how the plan of redemption had been from all ages hidden in God; inasmuch as it was He who created the world, in order to reveal in the church of Christ the manifoldness of His wisdom." But the very doctrine itself, that the design of God in the creation of the world was directed to the making known of His wisdom to the angels, and by means of the Christian church, has nowhere an analogy in the N. T.; according to Col. I. 16, Christ (the personal Christ Himself) is the aim of the creation of all things, even of the angels, who are here included in τὰ πάντα. But as γνωρισθῇ evidently corresponds to the ἀποκεκρυμμένου, and νῦν to the ἀπὸ τῶν αἰῶνων, we cannot, without arbitrary disturbance of the whole arrangement of this majestic passage, regard ἵνα γνωρισθῇ as other than the design of τοῦ ἀποκεκρ.

ἀπὸ τῶν αἰῶνων ἐν τῷ Θεῷ. This statement of aim stands in exact significant relation to the vocation of the apostle, ver. 8 f., through which this very making known to the heavenly powers was partly effected. The less is there reason for taking ἵνα γνωρ. κ. τ. λ., with de Wette (on ver. 11) and Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 361 (who are followed by Schenkel), after earlier expositors, as defining the aim of the preaching of Paul, ver. 8 f.; in which case, besides, it would be offensive that Paul should ascribe specially to his work in preaching as its destined aim that, in which the other apostles withal (comp. in particular Acts xv. 7), and the many preachers to the Gentiles of that time (such as Barnabas), had a share. The joining on to the adjectival element ἀποκεκρ. κ. τ. λ. produces no syntactical incongruity, but is as much in keeping with the carrying forward of the discourse by way of chain in our Epistle, as in accord with the reference of so significant a bearing to ver. 8 f.—γνωρισθῇ νῦν] The emphasis is not upon νῦν (Rückert and others), but upon γνωρισθῇ, in keeping with the ἀποκεκρ.: in order that it should not remain hidden, but should be made known, etc.—τὰς ἀρχὰς κ. τ. ἐξουσίας] See on i. 21. The angelic powers are to recognise in the case of the Christian church the wisdom of God;—what a church-glorifying design, out of which God kept the μυστήριον from the beginning locked up in Himself! To the heavenly powers (comp. 1 Pet. i. 12), which therefore are certainly not thought of as abstractions, the earthly institute is to show the wisdom of God; an even, however, is quite arbitrarily inserted before τὰς ἀρχ. (Grotius, Meier). The explanation of the diabolic powers (Ambrosiaster, Vatablus, not Estius), which Vorstius, Bengel, Olshausen, Hofmann, Bleek at least understand as included, is entirely foreign to the context (it is otherwise at vi. 12), even though ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις (comp.
THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

i. 3, 20) were not added. Throughout the whole connection the contrast of earth and heaven prevails. Wrongly, too, we may add, secular rulers (Zeger, Knatchbull), Jewish archons (Schöttgen, Locke), heathen priests (van Til), and Christian church-overseers (Zorn), have been understood as here referred to (comp. i. 21); while Koppe would embrace " quicquid est vi, sapientia, dignitate insigne," and would only not exclude the angels on account of ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ. — ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ. is, as always in our Epistle (see on i. 3), definition of place: in heaven, not: in the case of the heavenly things, which are to be perceived in connection with the church (Zeltner, comp. Baumgarten), and such like (see in Wolf). It is most naturally to be combined (comp. vi. 12) with ταῖς ἀρχ. κ. τ. ἐξουσ., in which case it was not needful to place ταῖς before ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίους, seeing that the ἐν τοῖς ἐπουραν., more precisely fixing the definition of the notion of the ἀρχαὶ and ἐξουσίαι (for even upon earth there are ἀρχαὶ and ἐξουσίαι), is blended into a unity of notion with those two words (Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 195), so that there is no linguistic necessity for connecting, as does Matthies, ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρ. with γνώρ. — The question why Paul did not write simply τοῖς ἀγγέλοις is not to be answered, with Hofmann, to the effect, that the spirits ruling in the ethinic world are intended, because such a special reference of the general expression τ. ἀρχ. κ. τ. ἐξουσ. must have been specified (by

1 The whole apprehension of our passage by Matthies is mistaken. He refers ἐν ταῖς πράξεις κ. τ. ἐν εἰκότοις to all that God has either created in the natural reference of the term, or accomplished in a spiritual respect for the salvation of men. According to his view, ἐν applies to ἐν ταῖς πράξεις; the ἀρχαὶ καὶ ἐξουσίαι are "the high and mighty ones who live in the world, or even in an invisible spiritual manner play their part in the same"; τὰ ἰσορροπία is to be taken "as the actually subsisting aggregate of all that is heavenly—as the kingdom of God." In the heavenly kingdom the wisdom of God becomes manifest by means of the church, and particularly to these high and mighty ones, because these are now, in the heavenly kingdom founded by Christ, brought, by means of the church, to the consciousness of their powerlessness. — Thus, in fact, there are, as well in the notion of υἱός in as in that of ἀρχαὶ καὶ ἐξουσίαι, two wholly different conceptions combined, in opposition to the hermeneutic principle of the unity of the sense; τὰ ἰσορροπία is arbitrarily generalized in a spiritualistic way, and the thought that the ἀρχαὶ καὶ ἐξουσίαι are brought to the consciousness of their powerlessness is purely imported, and the more mistakenly, inasmuch as it is God's υἱός, not His ἰσορροπία, of which it is here said that it is made manifest to the ἀρχαὶ καὶ ἐξουσίαι. the addition of τῶν ἐθνῶν, or something of that sort); but to the effect, that the designation of the angels on the side of their power and rank, in contradistinction to the διὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας, serves for the glorifying of the ἐκκλησία. The designation corresponds to the fulness and the lofty pathos by which the whole passage is marked. In i. 21, also, an analogous reason is found, namely, the glorifying of Christ. It is to be observed, in general, that the name ἄγγελος does not occur at all in our Epistle. — διὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας] The Christian church (i.e. the collective body of believers regarded as one community, comp. 1 Cor. xii. 28, x. 32, xv. 9; Gal. i. 11; Phil. iii. 6; Col. i. 18, 24,—hence not betraying the later Catholic notion) is, in its existence and its living development, as composed of Jews and Gentiles combined in a higher unity, the medium de facto for the divine wisdom becoming known, the actual voucher of the same; because it is the actual voucher of the redemption which embraces all mankind and raises it above the hostile contrast of Judaism and heathenism,— this highest manifestation of the divine wisdom (Rom.
xi. 32 f.). To the angels, in accordance with their ministering interest in the work of redemption (Matt. xviii. 10; Luke xv. 7, 10; 1 Cor. xi. 10; Heb. i. 14; 1 Pet. i. 12), the church of the redeemed is therefore, as it were, the mirror, by means of which the wisdom of God exhibits itself to them.
— πολυπολικός] Eur. Iph. T. 1149; Eubul. in Athen. xv.
p. 679 D; Orph. v. 11, lx. 4. It signifies much—manifold, quite corresponding to the Latin multivarius. That it signifies very wise (Wolf, Koppe, Rosenmüller) has been erroneously assumed from Aesch. Prom. 1308, where πολικός means crafty. As πολυ-πολικός, the wisdom of God manifests itself to the angels through the church, inasmuch as the counsel of the redemption of the world is therein presented to them in its universal realization, and they thus behold the manifold ways and measures of God, which He had hitherto taken with reference to the Jews and Gentiles, all now in their connection with the institute of redemption,—all uniting in this as their goal. The church is thus for them, as regards the manifold wisdom of God, the central fact of revelation; for the πολυποικίλος ὁδός Θεοῦ, which they before knew not as to their ultimate end, but only in and by themselves (and how diverse were these ways with the Jews and with the Gentiles!), they now see in point of fact, through the church ("haec enim operum divinorum theatrum est," Bengel), as πολυποικίλος σοφία. Thus by the appearing of the ἐκκλησία as a fact in the history of salvation, the wisdom of the divine government of the world has been on every side unveiled and brought to recognition. Entirely without warrant, Baur assumes, p. 429, that the Gnostico-soφία, with its heterogeneous forms and conditions (comp. Iren. Haer. i. 4. 1), was present to the mind of the writer.

Ver. 11. Κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων] belongs neither to πολυποικίλος (Holzhausen) nor to σοφία (Koppe, Baumgarten-Crusius), nor does it relate to ver. 9 (Michaelis), nor yet to all that precedes from ver. 3 or ver. 5 (Flatt, comp. Zanchius, Morus), but to ἡ αἰωνιομενή κ.τ.λ., giving information important in its bearing on this ἡ αἰ: in accordance with the purpose of the world-periods, i.e. in conformity with the purpose which God had during the world-periods (from the commencement of the ages up to the execution of the purpose); for already πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου it was formed, i. 3, but from the beginning of the world-ages it was hidden in God, ver. 9. On the genitive, comp. Jude 6; Ps. cxxliv. 13; Winer, p. 169 [E. T. 234]. Others, incorrectly, take it as: the purpose concerning the different periods of the world, according to which, namely, God at first chose no people, then chose the Jews, and lastly called Jews and Gentiles to the Messianic kingdom (Schoettgen, comp. Chrysostom, Theophylact, Estius, Cornelius a Lapide, Baumgarten, Semler); for it is only the one purpose, accomplished in Christ, that is spoken of. See what follows. According to Baur, κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰών. means: according to what God ideally proposed to Himself in the aeons (that is, the subjects of the divine ideas, constituting as such the essence of God). According to the Gnostic view, this returns, after it has been accomplished in Christ, as the realized idea back into itself.—ἡν ἐποίησεν ἐν Χ. Ἰ.] applies not to σοφία (Jerome, Luther, Moldenhauer), but to πρόθεσιν, and means: which He has fulfilled in Christ Jesus. So Castalio, Vatablus, Grotius, Zachariae, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Holzhausen, Matthies, Olshausen, de Wette, Bleek, and others. Comp. τὸ θέλημα ποιεῖν (ii. 3; Matt. xxi. 31; John vi. 38), τὴν γνώμην ποιεῖν (Acts xvii. 17). Others: which He has formed in Christ Jesus. So Beza, Calvin, Estius, Michaelis, Morus, et al., including Flatt, Rückert, Meier, Harless, Baumgarten-Crusius; also Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 230. Linguistically admissible. Comp. Mark iii. 6, xv. 1; Isa. xxix. 15; Herod. i. 127. But the context tells in favour of the first-named interpretation, since what follows is the explanation assigning the ground of the purpose not as formed, but as carried into effect; hence not merely ἐν Χριστῷ is said, but ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ (comp. i. 5), since not the forming of that purpose, but its accomplishment, took place in the historically manifested Messiah, Jesus—in Him, in His personal self-sacrifice is the realization of that divine purpose contained.

Ver. 12. Ἐν φιλ. κ.τ.λ.] gives the experimentally (ἐξομέν) confirmatory proof for the just stated ἐν ἐποίησεν ἐν Χ. Ἰ. See on i. 7.— τὴν παρῆσθαι] denotes not the libertatem dicendi, as at vi. 19, since not merely the apostle's (Vatablus) experimental consciousness, but that of the Christian is, in harmony with the context, expressed by ἐξομέν; and the limitation to prayer (Bengel, Holzhausen) is entirely arbitrary. It is rather the free, joyful mood of those reconciled to God, in which they are assured of the divine grace (the opposite: fear of God's wrath). Comp. Heb. iii. 6, iv. 16, x. 19, 35; 1 John ii. 28, iii. 21, iv. 17, v. 14; also Wisd. v. 1, and see Grimm in loc.; Bleek on Heb. II. 1, p. 416 f. This παρῆσθαι κατ' ἐξοχήν is denoted by the article.— καὶ τὴν προσαγωγήν] See on ii. 18. Likewise a formally consecrated notion.— ἐν πεποιθησεί] Fundamental disposition, in which we have, etc. For without confidence (see, as to ἐποιῆς, on 2 Cor. i. 15) the παρῆσθαι and the προσαγωγή are not possible. How gloriously is this πεποιθησθα on the part of the apostle expressed at e.g. Rom. viii. 38 f.!— διὰ τῆς πίστεως αὐτοῦ] Causa medians of the ἐξομέν κ.τ.λ. Christ is the objective ground on which this rests, and faith in Christ is the subjective means for its appropriation and continued possession, Rom. v. 1, 2. In αὐτῷ there is implied nothing more than in εἰς αὐτόν (see on
THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

Rom. iii. 22; Gal. iii. 22), and what Matthies finds in it (the faith having reference to Him alone) is a sheer importation.

Ver. 13. Once more reviewing the whole section concerning the great contents of his office as apostle of the Gentiles (vv. 2–12), he concludes it, in especial retrospective reference to the introduction thereof (ver. 1), with the entreaty to the readers not to become discouraged, etc., in order thereupon yet further to attach to ver. 14 ff. a rich outpouring of intercession for them, which terminates in an enthusiastic doxology (ver. 20 f.). According to this view, διό has its reference not merely in ver. 12, but in the whole of what Paul has said, vv. 2–12, regarding his office, namely: On that account, because so great and blissful a task has by God’s grace been assigned to me in my calling, I entreat you, etc. The greater the office conferred by God, the less does it become those whom it concerns to take offence or become downcast at the sufferings and persecutions of its holder.— μὴ ἐκκακεῖν] applies to the readers: that ye become not disheartened, faint-hearted and cowardly in the confession of the gospel,—not to Paul: that I become not disheartened, as Syriac, Theodoret, Jerome, Bengel, Semler, and others, including Rückert, Harless, Olshausen, Baumgarten - Crusius, take it. In opposition to the latter, it may be urged that the supplying of Θεόν after αἰτοῦμαι, demanded in connection therewith, is in no wise indicated by the context, which rather in the bare αἰτοῦμαι (comp. 2 Cor. v. 20, x. 2) conveys only the idea of a request to the readers (it is otherwise at Col. i. 9; Jas. i. 6). Further, ἥτις εἰστι δόξα ὑμῶν manifestly contains a motive for the readers, to fulfil that which Paul entreats. Only from τοῦτον χάριν, ver. 14, begins an intercession for the readers, that God may strengthen them.¹ The μου, finally, after θλίψει is wholly superfluous, if Paul is imploring constancy for himself; but not, if he is beseeching the readers not to become faint-hearted, while he is suffering for them.— As to the form ἐκκακεῖν in Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Rückert, see on 2 Cor.

iv. 1. — ἐν ταῖς ὑλήσεις μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν. in the tribulations which I endure for your sake (namely, as apostle of the Gentiles). Comp. Paul's own so touching comment upon this ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, in Phil. ii. 17. The ἐν denotes the subsisting relation, in which their courage is not to give way. See Winer, p. 346 [E.T. 483]. To this conception the explanation on account of (Erasmus, Beza, Piscator, Estius, and others) is also to be referred. ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν is rightly attached, without repetition of the article, to ταῖς ὑλήσεις μου, because one may say ὑλήσεως ὑπὲρ τινός (2 Cor. i. 6; comp. Col. i. 24). Comp. on Gal. iv. 14. Harless connects ὑπὲρ ὑμᾶς with αἰτοῦμαι: I pray for your benefit. How violently opposed to the order of the words, and, with the right view of αἰτοῦμαι, impossible! — ἡτίς ἐστι δόξα ὑμῶν] is designed to animate to the fulfilment of the entreaty, so that ἡτίς introduces an explanation serving as a motive thereto (Herm. ad Oed. R. 688; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 385), not equivalent to ἡ, but referring what is predicated "ad ipsam rei naturam" (Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. p. 190), like qui quidem, quippe qui, utpotè qui. ἡτίς may be referred either to the μὴ ἐκκακεῖν (Theodoret, Zanchius, Harless, Olshausen, Schenkel) or to ταῖς ὑλήσεις μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν (so usually). In either case the relative is attracted by the following δόξα, and this not as Hebraizing (Beza, Matthies, and many), but as a Greek usage. Comp. as regards the ordinary exegesis, according to which the number also is attracted, Dem. c. Ἀρήσ. p. 853. 31: ἔχει ... ὄρασαν μὲν μνᾶς, ἢν ἐλαῖσθε προῖκα τῆς μητρός; and see, in general, Winer, p. 150 [E.T. 206]. The usual reference is the right one; the sufferings of the apostle for the readers were a glory of the latter, it redounded to their honour that he suffered for them,¹

and this relation could not but raise them far above the ἐκκακεῖν, else they would not have accorded with the thought brought to their consciousness by the ἡτὶς ἐστι δόξα ὑμῶν. The referring of ἡτὶς to μὴ ἐκκακεῖν is inconsistent with the correct explanation of the latter (see above); for if Paul had said that it was glorious for the readers not to grow faint, he would either have given expression to a very general and commonplace thought, or else to one of which the specific contents must first be mentally supplied (gloria spiritualis); whereas the proposition: "my tribulations are your glory," is in a high degree appropriate alike to the ingenious mode of expression, and to the apostolic sense of personal dignity, in which is implied a holy pride. Comp. Phil. ii. 17.

Less simple and exact, because not rendering justice to the purposely chosen expression employed by Paul only here, is the view of de Wette: "every race, i.e. every class of beings which have arisen (?), bears the name of God as its Creator and Father, just as human races bear the name from their ancestor, e.g. the race of David from David." — ἐξ οὗ] forth from whom; origin of the name, which is derived from God as πατήρ. CHAP. III. 14, 15.

Xen. Mem. iv. 5. 12: ἔφη δὲ καὶ τὸ διαλέγεσθαι ὁνομασθήναι ἐκ τοῦ συνήντας κοινῆ βουλευέσθαι. Soph. Oed. R. 1036. — πᾶσα πατρία] πατρία, with classical writers ordinarily πάτρα, is equivalent to gens, a body belonging to a common stock, whether it be meant in the narrower sense of a family, or in the wider, national sense of a tribe (Acts iii. 25; 1 Chron. xvi. 28; Ps. xxii. 27; Herod. i. 200). In the latter sense here; for every gens in the heavens can only apply to the various classes of angels (which are called paterial, not as though there were propagation among them, Matt. xxii. 30, but because they have God as their Creator and Lord for a Father); as a suitable analogue, however, to the classes of angels, appear on earth not the particular families, but the nationalities. Rightly Chrysostom and his successors explain the word by γενεά or γένη. The Vulgate has paternitas, a sense indicated also by Jerome, Theodoret, and others. Theodoret says: δὲ ἄλλως ὑπάρχει πατήρ, δὲ οὐ παπ' ἄλλου τούτο λαβῶν ἔχει, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς τοῖς ἄλλοις μεταδίδοι τούτο. This view (comp. Goth.: "all fadreinis") is expressed by Luther (approved in the main by Harless): Who is the true Father over all that are called children, etc. But πατρία never means fathership or fatherliness (πατρότης), and what could be the meaning of that fathership in heaven? 3 πᾶσα, every, shows that Paul did not think only of two paterial, the totality of the angels and the totality of men (Calvin, Grotius, Wetstein, Koppe, and others), or of the blessed in heaven and the elect on earth (Calovius, Wolf), but of a plurality, as well of angelic as of human paterial; and to this extent his conception is, as regards the numerical form, though not as regards the idea of paterial, different from that of the Rabbins, according to which the angels (with the Cabballists, the Sephiroth) are designated as familia superior (see Wetstein, p. 247 f.; Buxtorf, Lex. Talm. p. 1753;

1 To this head belongs also the Jewish-genealogical distinction from φυλή, according to which πατρία denotes a branch of one of the twelve tribes (φυλή). See on Luke ii. 4. Similarly in the sense of a family-association often with Pindar. On the relation of the word to the kindred φανερία, see Boeckh, ad Find. Nem. V. L. iv. 47; Dissen, p. 387; Hermann, Staatsalterth. § 6, 4, 10.

Schoettgen, Horae, p. 1237 f.). Some have even explained πάσα πατριά as the whole family, in which case likewise either the angels and men (Michaelis, Zachariae, Morus, Meier, Olshausen, and earlier expositors), or the blessed in heaven and Christians on earth (Beza), have been thought of: but this is on the ground of linguistic usage erroneous. Comp. on ii. 21. — ὄνομαξεταὶ] bears the name, namely, the name πατριά; see above. The text does not yield anything else;¹ and if many (Beza, Piscator, Grotius, Wolf, Bengel, Michaelis, Zachariae, Morus, Koppe, and others, including Flatt and Olshausen) have understood the name children of God, this is purely imported. Others have taken "nomen pro re" (Zanchius, Menochius, Estius, et al.), so that ὄνομαξεται would denote existere. So, too, Rückert, according to whom Paul designs to express the thought that God is called the Father, inasmuch as all that lives in heaven and upon earth has from Him existence and name (i.e. dignity and peculiarity of nature). Contrary to linguistic usage; εἶναι ὄνομαξεται must at least have been used in that case instead of ὄνομαξεται (comp. Isaeus, de Menecl. her. 41: τόν πατέρα, οὗ εἶναι ὄνομαξηθην, Plat. Pol. iv. p. 428 E: ὄνομαξεται τινες εἶναι). Incorrectly also Holzhausen: ὄνομαξεω means to call into existence. Reiche takes ἐξ οὗ ὄνομαξεται (of whom it bears the name) as the expression of the highest dominion and of the befitting reverence due, and refers πάσα πατριά ἐν οὐρ. to the pairings of the Aeons. The former without linguistic evidence: the latter a hysteroproteron.

REMARK 1.—In εἶ οὗ... ὄνομαξεται God is certainly characterized as universal Father, as Father of all angel-classes in heaven and all peoples upon earth. Comp. Luther's gloss: "All angels, all Christians, yea, all men, are God's children, for He created them all." But it is not at all meant by the apostle in the bare sense of creation, nor in the rationalistic conception of the all-fatherhood, when he says that every πατριά derives this name ἵν Θεοῦ, as from its father; but in the higher spiritual sense of the divine Fatherhood and the sonship of God. He thinks, in connection with the ἅγιος, of a higher πατριαί than that of the mere creation. For πατριαί, so termed from God as their πατὴρ, are not merely all the communities of ἄγγελος, since these were indeed ἅγιος Θεοῦ from the beginning, and have not fallen from this ἅγιος; but also all nationalities among ἄνθρωποι, inasmuch as not only the Jews, but also all Gentile nations, have obtained part in the Christian ἀποκάλυψις, and the latter are συνιδρυμένα καὶ ἐσόμωμα καὶ συμμάχοι τῆς ἰσαγωγῆς ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ (ver. 6). If this has not yet become completely realized, it has at any rate already been so partially, while Paul writes; and in God’s counsel it stands ideally as an accomplished fact. On that account Paul says with reason also of every nationality upon earth, that it bears the name πατριαί, because God is its Father. Without cause, therefore, Harless has taken offence at the notion of the All-fatherhood, which is here withal clearly though ideally expressed, and given to the passage a limitation to which the all-embracing mode of expression is entirely opposed: “whose name every child [i.e. every true child] in heaven and upon earth bears.” Consequently, as though Paul had written something like: ἅγιος ὑμῶν ἁληθινή πατριαί κ.τ.λ. With a like imported limitation Erasmus, Paraphr.: “omnis cognatio spiritualis, qua conglutinantur sive angeli in coelis, sive fideles in terris.”

Remark 2.—With the non-genuineness of τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν ἴδιον ἰ. x. (see the critical remarks) falls also the possibility of referring ἅγιος to Christ (Beza, although with hesitation, Calvin, Zanchius, Hammond, Cramer, Reiche, and others). But if those words were genuine (de Wette, among others, defends them), ἅγιος would still apply to God, because ἅγιος κ.τ.λ. characterizes the fatherly relation, and ἵνα δῷ κ.τ.λ. applies to the Father. Lastly, polemic references, whether in opposition to the particularism of the Jews (Chrysostom, Calvin, Zanchius, and others), or even in opposition to “scholam Simonis, qui plura principia velut plurae Deos introducerebat” (Estius), or in opposition to the worship of angels (Michaelis), or in opposition to the Gnostic doctrine of Syzygies (Reiche), are to be utterly dismissed, because arbitrary in themselves and inappropriate to the character and contents of the prayer before us.

Ver. 16. ἰνα δῷ] (see the critical remarks) introduces the design of the κάμπτει κ.τ.λ., and therewith the contents of the prayer. Comp. on i. 17. — κατὰ τὸ πλοῦτος τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ] i.e. in accordance with the fact that His glory is in so great fulness. Comp. on i. 7. It may be referred either to δόξα or to what follows. The former is the most natural; comp. i. 17. According to His rich fulness in glory, God can and will bestow that which is prayed for. The δόξα, namely, embraces the whole glorious perfection of God, and can only with caprice be limited to the power (Grotius, Koppe, and others) or to the grace (Beza, Calvin, Zachariae, and others; comp. Matthies, Holzhausen, Olshausen). — δύναμει καταχωρηθήναι instrumental dative: with power (which is instilled) to be strengthened; opposite of ἐκκακεῖν, ver. 13. That which effects this strengthening is the Holy Spirit (διὰ τοῦ πνεύματος αὐτοῦ). Comp. Rom. xv. 13. According to Harless, it is dative of the form (comp. ἐνέχειν τοῖς σώμασι, Xen. Mem. ii. 7. 7), so that the being strengthened in power is regarded as opposed to the being strengthened in knowledge, or the like. But to what end would Paul have added εἰς τὸν ἑσώ ἀνθρώπων, if he had meant such special strengthening? The strengthening is to concern the whole inner man; hence the reference to a single faculty of the mind (Olshausen refers δύναμει primarily to the will) has no ground in the context. Others have explained it adverbially: in a powerful manner (Beza, Vater, Rückert, Matthies). See Bos, ed. Schaefer, p. 743; Matthiae, p. 897. In this way δύναμις would be power, which is applied on the part of the strengthener. Comp. Xen. Cyr. i. 2. 2. But our interpretation better accords with the contrast of ἐκκακεῖν, which implies a want of power on the part of the readers. — εἰς τὸν ἑσώ ἀνθρώπων εἰς, not for εἰς (Vulgate, Beza, and others), but in reference to the inner man, containing the more precise definition of the relation. See Kühner, II. § 557, note I. The inner man (not to be identified with the καύσος ἀνθρώπων) is the subject of the νοῦς, the rational and moral ego,—the essence of man which is conscious of itself as an ethical personality,—which is in harmony with the divine will (Rom. vii. 16, 25); but in the case of the unregenerate is liable to fall under bondage to the power of sin in the flesh (Rom. vii. 23), and even in the case of the regenerate¹ needs constant renewing (iv. 23; Rom.

xii. 2) and strengthening by the Spirit of God, whose seat of operation it is (δυνάμει κραταωθῆναι διὰ τοῦ πνεύματος), in order not to be overcome by the sinful desire in the σάρξ, of which the ψυχή, the animal soul-nature, is the living principle (Gal. v. 16 f.). The opposite is ὁ ξω άνθρωπος (2 Cor. iv. 16), i.e. the man as an outward phenomenon, constituted by the σώμα τῆς σαρκός (Col. ii. 11), which, by reason of its psychical quality (1 Cor. xv. 44), is the seat of sin and death (Rom. vi. 6, vii. 18, 24). The inner man in and by itself is —by virtue of the moral nature of its νοῦς, as the Ego exerting the moral will, and assenting to the divine law (Rom. vii. 20, 22)—directed to the good, yet without the renewing and strengthening by the Holy Spirit too weak for accomplishing, in opposition to the sinful principle in the σάρξ, the good which is perceived, felt, and willed by it (Rom. vii. 15–23). We may add, it is all the less an "absurd assertion" (Harless), that the conceptions ὁ ξω and ὁ ξω άνθρωπος are derived from Plato's philosophy (see the passages from Plato, Plotinus, and Philo, in Wetstein, and Fritzsche on Rom. vii. 22), inasmuch as for the apostle also the νοῦς in itself is the moral faculty of thinking and willing in man; inasmuch, further, as the Platonic dichotomy of the human soul-life into πνεῦμα (νοῦς) and ψυχή is found also in Paul (1 Thess. v. 23; comp. Heb. iv. 12), and inasmuch as the Platonic expressions had become popular (comp. also 1 Pet. iii. 4), so that with the apostle the Platonicism of that mode of conception and expression by no means needed to be a conscious one, or to imply an acquaintance with the Platonic philosophy as such.

Ver. 17. Κατουχθᾶι κ.τ.λ. Parallel to δυνάμει κραταωθῆναι, etc., which "declarat, quale sit interioris hominis robur," Calvin. According to Rückert, something different from what forms the object of the first petition is here prayed for, and there is a climax. In this way we should have, in the absence of a connecting particle, to take the infinitive, with de Wette, as the infinitive of the aim; but the circumstance that with Christians the being strengthened by the Spirit, who is indeed is intended, or that of the unregenerate (Rom. vii. 22). The man is regenerate, however (in opposition to the evasive view in Delitzsch, Psych. p. 380 f.), only of water and the Spirit (Tit. iii. 5).

the Spirit of Christ, cannot at all be thought of as different from the indwelling of Christ (Rom. viii. 9, 10; 2 Cor. xii. 9; Phil. iv. 13; Rom. xv. 17 f.), and the subsequent ἐφρυζ. κ. τεθεμ., which manifestly further expresses the conception of the καταιωθήναι, decide for the former view. The explanatory element, however, lies in the emphatically prefixed κατοικήσαι: that Christ may take up His abode by means of faith in your hearts. In the Holy Spirit, namely, which is the Spirit of Christ (see on Rom. viii. 9, 10; Gal. ii. 20, iv. 6; 2 Cor. iii. 17), Christ fulfils the promise of His spiritual presence in the hearts (John xiv. 23; comp. above, on ii. 17; 2 Cor. xiii. 5), in which faith is the appropriating instrument on the part of man (hence διὰ τῆς πίστεως). Where thus there is a καταιωθήναι διὰ τοῦ πνεύματος, there is also to be found a κατοικήσαι of Christ; because the former is not possible without a continuous activity of Christ in the hearts. Opposed to the κατοικήσαι of Christ in the hearts is a transitory (πρόσκαρος) reception of the Holy Spirit (Gal. iii. 3). A more precise definition, by virtue of which the clause κατοικήσαι κ.τ.λ. may in reality be an explanatory clause to that which precedes, is thus before us, namely, in the prefixed emphatic κατοικήσαι itself. This in opposition to Harless and Olshausen, who find this more precise definition only in the following ἐν ἀγ. ἐφρυζ. κ. τεθεμ. — On κατοικεῖν in the spiritual sense, comp. Col. i. 19, ii. 9; Jas. iv. 5; 2 Pet. iii. 13; Test. XII. Patr. pp. 652, 734; and the passages in Theile, ad Jac. p. 220. The conception of the temple, however, is not found here; for the temple would be the dwelling of God, and Christ the corner-stone, ii. 20 ff.

Ver. 18. Ἐν ἀγάπῃ ἐφρυζ. κ. τεθεμ.] is not to be separated by interpunction from the following ἵνα, because it belongs to ἵνα κ.τ.λ. (comp. Lachmann): in order that, rooted and grounded in love, ye may be able, etc. Thus the aim of the two preceding parallel infinitive clauses is expressed, and the emphatically prefixed ἐν ἀγ. ἐφρυζ. κ. τεθεμ. is quite in keeping with the Pauline doctrine of the πίστις δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργοῦμένη, Gal. v. 6; 1 Cor. xiii. Through the strengthening of their inner man by means of the Spirit, through the κατοικήσαι of Christ in their hearts, the readers are to become established in love, and, having been established in love, are able to comprehend the greatness of the love of Christ. How often ἐνα and other conjunctions follow a part of the sentence which is with special emphasis prefixed, no matter whether that part of the sentence be subject or object (Rom. xi. 31; 2 Cor. ii. 4; 2 Thess. ii. 7; Acts xix. 4; Gal. ii. 10, al.), may be seen in Fritzsch, ad Rom. II. p. 541; Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 333 [E. T. 389]. Comp. on Gal. ii. 10. This construction is here followed by Beza, Cajetanus, Camerarius, Heinsius, Grotius, Calixtus, Semler, Storr, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Meier, Schenkel, and others, including Winer, ed. 6 [E. T. 715], and Buttmann [E. T. 299]. Comp. already Photius in Oecumenius. ἐν ἀγ. ἐβριζ. κ. τεθεμ. is, on the other hand, connected with what precedes by Chrysostom, Erasmus, Castalio, Luther, Estius, Er. Schmid, Michaelis, Morus, Koppe, and others, including Rückert, Matthies, Harless, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Bleek, holding that it attaches itself, with abnormal employment of case, predicatively to ἐν ταῖς καπὸς ὑμῶν. To the abnormal nominative of the construction continued in participles there would be in itself nothing to object (see already Photius in Oecumenius, ad loc. ; Winer, p. 505 [E. T. 715]; Buttmann, p. 256 [E. T. 299]); but here the perfect participles are opposed to this, since they in fact would express not the state into which the readers are to come ("ita ut in amore sitis stabiles," Morus), but the state in which they already are (so also Rückert), the state which is presupposed as predicate of the readers (so Harless and Olshausen). But to the desire that the readers might be strengthened, and that Christ might make His dwelling in their hearts, the presupposition that they were already ἐν ἀγάπῃ ἐβριζομένοι would stand in quite illogical relation. Present participles would be logically necessary: "inasmuch as ye are being confirmed in love," namely, by the fact that Christ takes up His dwelling in you. De Wette, on the other hand, is wrong in appealing to Col. ii. 7, where, indeed, in the case of ἐβριζομένοι the having received Christ appears as having already preceded. — ἐν ἀγάπῃ is, in accordance with the fol-

1 Harless holds that the changing of the construction is here, as Col. ii. 2, the more natural, inasmuch as the predicate is equally applicable to ἀναπληρ. and ὑμῶν, and as an essential element must stand forth independently.
lowing figures, the soil in which the readers were rooted and grounded, namely, in love, the effect of faith, Christian brotherly for supplying after ἐπ' ἐρημί. κ. τεθεμ. with Holzhausen and Harless, ἐν Ὑπατῷ, which is not even required by the anarthrous ἀγάπη; for without an article (in amando) it has “vim quasi verbi,” Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 1. 9. Such a supplement is, however, the more arbitrary, inasmuch as there is already a definition by ἐν; consequently the reader could not light upon the idea of supplying such in thought. ἐν ἀγ. ἐπ' ἐρημί. κ. τεθεμ. is prefixed with emphasis, because only the loving soul is in a position to recognise the love of Christ (comp. 1 John iv. 7 ff.).

Erroneously Beza says: “charitatem intellige, qua diligimur a Deo” (so also Calovius, Wolf, and others), and Bengel holds that the love of Christ, ver. 19, is meant; against which in the very mention of love along with faith (i. 15; 1 Cor. xiii.)
the absence of a genitival definition is decisive. — ἐπ' ἐρημί. καὶ and enduring. Paul, in the vivacity of his imagination, conceives to himself the congregation of his readers as a plant the same time as a building. Comp. Col. ii. 7; 1 Cor. iii. 9.

knowledge of the ground of salvation, so the attaining of the salvation itself (Acts xx. 32). — ἡ τε πλάτος κ.τ.λ. Sensuous illustration (arbitrarily declared by de Wette to be “hardly” in keeping with the Pauline style) of the idea: how great in every relation. The deeply affected mind with its poetico-imaginative intuition looks upon the metaphysical magnitude as a physical, mathematical one, σωματικός σχήματι (Chrysostom) extending on every side. Comp. Job xi. 7-9. The many modes of interpreting the several dimensions in the older expositors may be seen in Cornelius a Lapide and Calovius. Every special attempt at interpretation is unpsychological, and only gives scope to that caprice which profanes by dissecting the outpouring of enthusiasm. 1 Of what, however, are these dimensions predicated? Not of the Christian church, as the spiritual temple of God, Rev. xxi. 16 (Heinsius, Homberg, Wolf, Michaelis, Cramer, Koppe, and others; comp. Bengel), which is at variance with the context; inasmuch as a temple is not spoken of either before or after (τεθυμληρομένιον... τὸ πληρομα τοῦ Θεοῦ!). Not of the work of redemption (Chrysostom: τὸ μυστήριον τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν οἰκονομηθέν, Theophylact, Oecumenius, Theodoret, Beza, Piscator, Zanchius, Calovius, and others, including Eckert, Meier, Harless, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, Bleek), because, after a new portion of the discourse is commenced with ver. 14, the μυστήριον is not again mentioned; hence also not of the mystery of the cross, in connection with which marvellous allegories are drawn by Augustine and Estius from the figure of the cross. 2 Not of the love of God to us (Chrysostom: τὸ μέγαθες τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Θεοῦ, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Erasmus, Vatablus, Grotius, Baumgarten, Flatt); because previously ἐν ἀγάπῃ does not apply to this love. Not of the "divine gracious nature" (Matthies), which would only be correct if the predicates were exclusive attributes of the divine nature, so that, as a matter of course, the latter would suggest itself as the subject. Not of the wisdom of God, which de Wette quite irrelevantly introduces from Col. ii. 3; Job xi. 8. The love of Christ to men, ver. 19, is the subject (Castalio, Calvin, Calixtus, Zachariae, Morus, Storr, Rosenmüller, Holzhausen), the boundless greatness of which is depicted. Instead, namely, of the apostle adding τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ immediately after ὅψος and thus bringing to a close the majestic flow of his discourse, now, when he has written as far as ὅψος, there first presents itself to his lively conception the— as regards sense, climatically parallel to the just expressed καταλαβέσθαι ... ὅψος— oxymoron γνώναι τὴν ὑπερβάλλουσαν τῆς γνώσεως; he appends this, and can now no longer express the love of Christ in the genitive, so that τὸ πλάτος ... ὅψος remains without a genitive, but lays claim to its genitival definition as self-evident from the ἀγάπην τοῦ Χριστοῦ immediately following.

1 By way of example, we subjoin some of these modes of explanation, e.g. Oecumenius; it is indicated that redemption and the knowledge of Christ were foreordained from eternity (μακρὰ), extend to all (πλατεία), reach even to hell in their efficacy (πλῆκτο), and that Christ has ascended above the heavens (ὑψώ). Erasmus, Paraphr.: “altitudine ad angelos usque se proferens, profunditate ad inferos usque penetrans, longitudine ad omnes hujus mundi plagas se dirigit.” Grotius, “latissimi se effundit in omnibus hominibus, et in longum, i.e. in omnia saecula se extendit, et ex infima depressione hominem liberat, et in loca suprema evexit.” For other instances, see Calovius.

Ver. 19. Ἡνώναι] Parallel to καταλαβέσθαι. — τῇ] and, denotes, in a repetition of words of corresponding signification (καταλαβέσθαι ... γρώναι), the harmony, the symmetrical relation of the elements in question (Hartung, Partikellehre, I. p. 105); hence we have the less to assume a climax in connection with γνώναι τε κ.π.λ., since this must have been hinted at least by γνώναι δὲ, or more clearly by μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ γνώναι, or the like. — τὴν ὑπερβάλλα τῆς γνώσεως] The oxymoron ("suavissima haec quasi correctio est," Bengel) lies in the fact that an adequate knowledge of the love of Christ transcends human capacity, but the relative knowledge of projecting above the cross-beam; the depth, to the portion fixed in the ground. He comprehends the length of the cross, who perceives that from the beginning to the end of time no one is justified save by the cross; the breadth, who reflects that the church in all the earth has come forth from the side of Christ! the height, who ponders the sublimity of the glory in heaven obtained through Christ; the depth, who contemplates the mystery of the divine election of grace, and is thereby led to the utterance, Rom. xi. 32! This as a warning instance how even the better exegetes, when they give the reins to subjectivity, may lose themselves in the most absurd attempts at interpretation.

1 Comp. Luther: "that nothing is so broad, long, deep, high, as to be beyond the power and help of Christ."
the same opens up in a higher degree, the more the heart is filled with the Spirit of Christ, and thereby is itself strengthened in loving (vv. 17, 18),—which knowledge is not of the discursive kind, but that which has its basis in the consciousness of experience. Theodore of Mopsuestia aptly says: τὸ γνῶναι ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀπολαῦσαι λέγει, ἐπὶ πραγμάτων εἰπὼν τὴν γνώσιν, ὡς ἐν ψαλμῷ τὸ ἐγνωρισάς μοι ὁδοὺς τοῦ θεοῦ, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐν ἀπολαῦσαι με τῆς τριῶν κατέστησας. The genitive τῆς γνώσεως is dependent on the comparative ὑπερβάλλουσαν (Hom. II. xxiii. 847; Plat. Gorg. p. 475 C; Bernhardy, p. 170), not upon ἀγάπην, from which construction the reading of Jerome (also A, 74, 115, al., Ar. p.), ἀγάπην τῆς γνώσεως, has arisen, which in any case—even though we should understand, with Grotius, the love (to God and one’s neighbour) which flows from the knowledge of Christ—yields an inappropriate sense, and obliterates the oxymoron. — ἀγάπην τοῦ Χριστοῦ] genitive of the subject. It is the love of Christ to us (Rom. viii. 35), shown in His atoning death (Gal. ii. 20; Rom. v. 6 ff., al.). Incorrect (although still unhappily enough defended by Holzhausen) is the view of Luther, 1545: “that to love Christ is much better than all knowledge.” At variance with the words, since τὴν ὑπερβ. τῆς γνώσεως can only be taken adjectively; and at variance with the context, since love to Christ is not spoken of in the whole connection. Comp. on the other hand, vv. 8, 12. — ἵνα πληρωθήτε κ.τ.λ.] Aim of the ἐξισχύου καταλαβέσθαι ... Χριστοῦ: in order that ye may be filled up to the whole fulness of God. τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ (comp. iv. 13, πλήρωμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ) is, according to the context, which speaks of the operationes gratiae (vv. 16–18, 20), the charismatic fulness, which is bestowed by God. Hence the sense: in order that ye may be filled with divine gifts of grace to such extent, that the whole fulness of them (πᾶν has the emphasis) shall have passed over upon you. πλήρωμα namely, the definite meaning of which is gathered from the context (comp. on i. 10, i. 23), has, by virtue of its first signification: id quod iles impletur, often also the derived general signification of copia, πλούτος, πλῆθος, because that, by which a space is made

1 In the earlier editions he had correctly: the love of Christ, which yet surpasses all knowledge.
full, appears as copiously present. So Song of Sol. v. 12: πληρώματα ὑδάτων, Rom. xv. 29: πλήρωμα εὐλογίας Χριστοῦ, Eph. iv. 13;¹ Eur. Ion. 664: φίλοις πλήρωμα. Comp. Hesychius: πληρώματος πλήθος, Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 471. Quite so the German Fülle. Grotius takes it actively, thus as equivalent to πλήρωμα, making full: "donis, quibus Deus implere solit homines." This is not, indeed, at variance with linguistic usage (see on i. 10), but less simple, inasmuch as the passive πληρωθήτητε most naturally makes us assume for πλήρωμα also the passive notion, namely, that of the experienced divine fulness of gifts. Others, retaining the signification: id quo res impletur, but not the signification copia derived therefrom, have assumed as the meaning: the perfection of God. See Chrysostom: πληροῦσθαι πᾶσιν ἄρετης ἢς πλήρης ἔστιν ὁ Θεὸς. Comp. Oecumenius and others. Recently so Rückert: "in order that you may be continually more filled with all perfection, until you have finally attained to all the fulness of the divine perfection." Comp. Olshausen. But this goal cannot possibly be thought of by Paul as one to be realized in the temporal life (1 Cor. xiii. 10–12). This also in opposition to Matthies, who understands the infinite fulness of the—in grace, truth, etc., inexhaustible—essence of God, which has become manifest in Christ. Harless here, too (but see on i. 23), will have the gracious presence of the divine δόξα, with which God fills His people, to be meant; just as Holzhausen makes us think of the Shechinah filling the temple (comp. Baumgarten, Michaelis). The church, however, is not according to the context here meant by πληρωμα (Koppe, Stolz, and others); and the turgid and involved analysis given by Schenkel in this sense is quite an arbitrary importation of meaning,² since εἰς τ. τ. πληρ. τ. Θ. can only state simply that the πληρωθήμαι is to be a full one, consequently πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα must be the totality of that which is communicated by the πληρωθήμαι. — εἰς does not stand for ἐν (Grotius, ESTIUS, Rosenmüller), and does not signify either: into the very (becoming merged into), as Matthiae, nor up towards, as Schenkel explains it, to which πληρωμα is not suitable; but it indicates the quantitative goal of the fulfilment. Matthiae, p. 1348.

Vv. 20, 21. That which is strictly speaking the prayer, the petition, is at an end; but the confidence in the Almighty, who can still do far more, draws forth from the praying heart a right full and solemn ascription of praise, with the fulness of which that of Rom. xvi. 25–27 is to be compared. — ὑπὲρ πάντα ποιῆσαι] to be taken together. To be able to do beyond all, i.e. more than all, is a popular expression of the very highest active power; so that πάντα is quite unlimited, and it is not, with Grotius, arbitrarily to be limited by qua hactenus visa sunt. This ὑπὲρ πάντα does not belong to δυναμένω (Holzhausen), because otherwise ποιῆσαι would be superfluous; nor does ὑπὲρ stand adverbially (2 Cor. xi. 23), as Bengel would have it, which could not occur to any reader on account of the πάντα standing beside it. There is nothing at which the action of God would have its limit; He can do still more. — ὑπερεκπεμπτοσοῦ δὲ αἰτοῦμ. ἔννοιαμ.] a more precise definition to the universal and indefinite ὑπὲρ πάντα, specializing and at the same time enhancing the notion of ὑπὲρ: above measure more than what we ask or understand. According to Rückert, δὲ αἰτοῦμ. has reference to πάντα: Paul namely, instead of adding δὲ αἰτοῦμ. immediately after πάντα, has first for the strengthening of the ὑπὲρ introduced the additional ὑπερεκπεμπτορ. and now must needs annex in the genitive what ought properly, as construed with πάντα, to follow in the accusative. A course in itself quite unnecessary; and if the apostle had been concerned only about a strengthening of the ὑπὲρ, and he had, in using πάντα, already had δὲ αἰτοῦμ. in his mind, he must have written after ὑπερεκπεμπτορ.: πάντων δὲ αἰτοῦμ.; so that the sense would be: more than all (which we ask, etc.), exceedingly more than all, which we ask, etc. — ὑπερεκπεμπτοροσοῦ] is, with the exception of 1 Thess. iii. 10, v. 13 (Elz.), codd. at Dan. iii. 22, nowhere else preserved. Comp., however, ὑπερεκπεμπτοροσοῦ, 1 Thess. v. 13; Clem. Cor. I. 20; ἡ ἐκ περισσοῦ, Mark vi. 51; ὑπερεκπεμπτοροσοῦ, Mark vii. 37; ὑπερ-περισσεύω, Rom. v. 20; 2 Cor. vii. 4. The frequent, and in part bold, compounds with ἐπέρ used by Paul are at such places in keeping with the intensity of his pious feeling, which struggles after adequate expression.—ἀν, for τοῦτων ἅ, is genitive of comparison. See Bernhardy, p. 139.—hecy Whether our asking or our apprehending be regarded, the one as the other is infinitely surpassed by God’s active power. “Cogitatio latius patet quam preces; gradatio,” Bengel. — τὴν ἐνεργομυ.] not passive (Estius), but middle. See on Gal. v. 6.—ἐν ἡμῖν] in our minds, appeal to the consciousness of experience with regard to the divine power, which is at work in the continued enlightenment and whole Christian endowment of the inner man. Certainly God has the glory (i. 17), from which fact Harless explains the article; but it is not of this that the doxologies speak, not of this fact being testified to God, but of His receiving the human praise, which to Him pertains (Rev. iv. 11). Compare the conception, δοῦναι δόξαν τῷ Θεῷ, Luke xvii. 18; Acts xii. 23; John ix. 24; Rom. iv. 20; Rev. iv. 9.—ἐν τῇ ἐκκλ. ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰ.] not to be taken together (Luther, Michaelis, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Holzhausen, Meier, Olshausen), against which we may decidedly urge, not indeed the want of the article,—since ἡ ἐκκλησία ἐν Χριστῷ, the Christian church, might be combined as one idea in contradistinction from the Jewish, or any other ἐκκλησία whatever,—but the utter superfluousness of this distinguishing designation; for that ἡ ἐκκλησία was the Christian church, the ἐκκλησία κατ’ ἐξουσίαν, was self-evident. Rather is ἐν τῇ ἐκκ. the outward domain in which God is to be praised, and ἐν Χριστῷ the spiritual sphere in which this ascription of praise is to take place; for not outside of Christ, but in Christ—as the specific element of faith, in which the pious life-activity of the Christian moves—does he praise God. Comp. vv. 5, 20. Allied, but not identical (in opposition to Grotius and others), is the conception διὰ Χριστοῦ, Rom. i. 8, viii. 25. Both conceptions: Col. iii. 17.— εἰς πάσας τὰς γενεὰς κ.τ.λ.] unto all generations of the world-age of world-ages.¹ This cumulation of the expressions is solemn. The αἰῶν τῶν αἰώνων denotes the eternal world-period beginning with the Parousia, the αἰῶν μέλλων, conceived of as the superlativum of all world-periods (Winer, p. 220 [E. T. 309]), in so far as it, just as the last and eternal one, transcends all other αἰῶνες since the beginning of the world. Comp. Dan. vii. 18; 3 Esdr. iv. 38. The plural expression οἱ αἰῶνες τῶν αἰώνων (Gal. i. 5; Phil. iv. 20, al.) is not different as to the thing intended, but is so as to the conception; since in it the Messianic period, although equally thought of (comp. also on Luke i. 50) as the superlative of all the αἰῶνες, is not thought of in its unity without distinction, but as a continuous series of several periods: consequently not as a single totality, as in the case of οἱ αἰῶν, but according to the several constituent parts, which collectively form the whole of the Messianic eternity,—in short, not as the time of times, as in our passage, but as the times of times. By εἰς πάσας τὰς γενεὰς κ.τ.λ. the thought is expressed, that the indicated ascription of praise to God will extend to all the generations of the (nigh) Messianic world-period, i.e. that this ascription of praise in the church is to endure not only up to the Parousia, but then also ever onward from generation to generation in the Messianic aeon,—consequently to last not merely ἐς τὸ παρὸν, but also ἐς τὸ ἀιῶν. On γενεὰ, generation (three of which about = 100 years), comp. Acts xiv. 16, and the passages from the LXX. and Apocrypha in Schleusner's Thes.; from Greek writers, in Wessel, ad Diod. i. 24. The designation of the successive time-spaces of the everlasting Messianic αἰῶν by γενεὰ, is derived from the lapse of time in the pre-Messianic world-period—in which with the changing generations one age of man ever succeeds another—by virtue of a certain anthropological mode of regarding eternity. Of the church, however, it is presupposed that she herself (and so, too, will it be with her praising of God) endures on into the everlasting aioν, but not that she has still a very long temporal duration before the Parousia, according to which de Wette has here found a contradiction to the apostle's expectation elsewhere of the nearness of the Parousia. The Parousia brings for the ἐκκλησία not the end, but the consummation. Hofmann, Schrifthev. II. 2, p. 127, retaining καί before ἐν Χρ. 'Ι. (see the critical remarks), would have εἰς πάσας τὰς γενεὰς κ.τ.λ., to belong only to ἐν Χρ. 'Ι., and not to ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ; for only at present and upon earth does the glorification of God take place in the church, but in Christ it takes place eternally. Incorrectly, because even the temporal glorification does not take place otherwise than ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, consequently the καί would have had its logical position only after Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. If καί were genuine, it would not be equivalent to δὲ, as would need to be assumed on Hofmann's view, but it would be et quidem, idque, however superfluous and cumbrous such a stress laid on it might be. According to Baur, p. 433, there meets us again here the Gnostic idea of the aioνες, in accordance with which they, "as the γενεά τοῦ aioνος τῶν aioνον, are the aeons in the sense, in which God Himself, as the extra-temporal unity of time, individualizes Himself in the aeons as the elements of self-unfolding time." In this way one may over-urge Gnosticism.

Chapter IV.

Ver. 6. After ἐγέρ, Elz. has, with min. Chrys. Theodoret, ὡμένα; for which D E F G K L and many min., also several vss. and Fathers, read ἡμένα. So Griesb. and Scholz. But neither pronoun is present in A B C κ and several min. vss. and Fathers. The pronouns are exegetical additions, designed to secure the reference of τῶν κατών τῶν τριῶν to the Christians.—

Ver. 7. The article of χάρις is wanting in B D* F G L, Dammin. Deleted by Lachm. But it was more easily absorbed through the preceding ἡ than brought in through writing it twice; and in its favour tell the readings ἡ χάρις αὐτή in C, 10, 31, Cyr., and ἡ χάρις αὐτοῦ in Aeth., in which the article is glossed.— Ver. 8. Before ἵδωσι Elz. Scholz, and Tisch. have καί, which has against it A C D* E F G κ* 17, Copt. Slav. ant. Vulg. It. and several Latin Fathers, and hence is suspected by Griesb., and deleted by Lachm. But considerable witnesses still remain in favour of καί; and since the LXX. does not have it at Ps. lxviii. 19, the omission seems to have taken place in accordance with the LXX. — Ver. 9. After αριθμόν Elz. has τριῶν, in opposition to decisive witnesses, although defended by Reiche. A more precisely defining addition, as is also μέρη in Elz. after αριθμόν. Less weighty authority, it is true, testifies against this μέρη (hence it is retained not only by Reiche, but also by Lachm. Scholz, and Rück.), but it betrays itself as a glossing product of the very old explanation of the descent into hell, in order to designate the place whither Christ descended as subterranean. — Ver. 15. Instead of στριοφέα, A B C κ* min. Fathers have merely στριοφέα. So Lachm. and Tisch. To be preferred, on account of the oldest ms. attestation.—Ver. 16. μίτρους] A C, 14, 66 (on margin), Syr. Arr. Copt. Arm. Vulg. and several Fathers have μίλιους, which, after Grot. Mill, and Bengel, is recommended by Griesb. and adopted by Rück. (not Lachm.). An interpretation in accordance with the context. G has μίτρων, which likewise testifies in favour of μίτρους. — Ver. 17. λοιπά] is wanting with A B D* F G κ, min. Copt. Sahid. Aeth. Vulg. It. Clem. Cyr. and Lat. Fathers. Suspected by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. and Rück. But how naturally might it be omitted, since Paul was speaking to Gentiles who were now Christians, and upon a comparison with 1 Thess. iv. 5!— Ver. 18. ixoumioi] Lachm. Tisch. read ixoumaioun, following A B k, Ath. Rightly; the current form was brought in.— Ver. 26. The article before παρηγγ. deleted by Lachm., is wanting in A B k*, and is more likely to have been added on account of the definite reference in the text, than to have been omitted.— Ver. 27. μηρε] All uncials have μηρε. On that account, even apart from the greater linguistic probability, rightly approved by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. Tisch. Scholz, Rück. and Harless.— Ver. 28. ἅγαθον ταῖς χερεὶ] Many variations, among which ταῖς ἱδίαις χερεῖ τῷ ἅγαθῳ (so Lachm. and Rück.) is by far the best attested reading (A D E F G k* min. A r. pol. Sahid. Aeth. Arm. Vulg. Lat. Basil. Epiph. Naz. Jer. Aug. Pel.). The shortest readings are: merely τῷ ἅγαθῳ with Clem., and merely ταῖς χερεῖ with Tertull. Harless (comp. Mill) conjectures that the latter is the original form, and that 1 Cor. iv. 12, Gal. v. 10 gave occasion to glosses. But only 1 Cor. iv. 12 is here parallel, because Gal. vi. 10 does not speak of literal labour. There would hence be more warrant for regarding the simple τῷ ἅγαθῳ in Clement as original. But in opposition to this, it may be urged that ταῖς χερεῖ is wanting in no other witness, and is in the highest degree appropriate to the connection; whereas τῷ ἅγαθῳ, since the mention is of manual labour, might easily appear inappropriate. The true reading accordingly I hold to be ταῖς χερεῖ τῷ ἅγαθῳ, which remains, if we delete ἱδίαις in Lachm., as an addition from 1 Cor. iv. 12. And with this agree also B k Amiat. Ambrosiast, which actually read ταῖς χερεῖ τῷ ἅγαθῳ.— Ver. 29. τις] D* E* F G, 46, Arm. in several codd. of Vulg., codd. of It., Lat. codd. in Jer. and several Fathers: πιστιμ. An interpretation.— Ver. 32. δὲ is wanting, no doubt, in B and min. Clar. Germ. Clem. Dam. Occ., and is deleted by Lachm., but was easily dropped out through the last syllable of γίνεσθαι. Omitted, it was then in accordance with v. 1 made up for, in many witnesses, by δὲ (D* F G, lect. 6, 14, codd. of It.).— ἡμᾶ] Lachm.: ἡμᾶ, after B D E K L, min. Syr. utr. Ar. pol. Sahid. Arm. Chrys. in comm., Theodoret, Theophylact. But ἡμᾶ appears an alteration in accordance with v. 2; where, no doubt, the variations ἡμᾶ and ἡμῶν are found, but in opposition to so decisive a preponderance of witnesses reading ἡμᾶ and ἡμῶν, that ἡμᾶ and ἡμῶν only become an evidence for the originality of our ἡμᾶ.

CONTENTS.—The paraenetic portion of the Epistle begins with the general exhortation to the readers to live worthily of their vocation, whereupon, especially, mutual loving forbearance and the preservation of Christian unity are brought prominently forward (vv. 1–3). Thereon follows, vv. 4–16, a detailed exhibition of those relations, which render the preservation of Christian unity a duty, namely—(a) that there is one body, one Spirit, etc., vv. 4–6. Further, (b) that to every individual is grace given in the measure in which Christ apportions His gift, vv. 7–10. And (c) that Christ has given the different teachers, until all should have attained to unity of the faith and of knowledge, in order that dependence on false teaching may cease, and, on the other hand, the truth may be acknowledged in love, and thus all may grow in relation to Christ the head, from whom the whole church, the body, accomplishes in love its organic development to perfection, vv. 11–16. Hereupon the discourse returns to the form of exhortation, namely, that they no longer walk after a Gentile manner (vv. 17–19). They had, indeed, been quite otherwise taught, namely so, as it is truth in Jesus, that they should lay aside the old man, and, on the other hand, should be renewed in their mind and should put on the new man (vv. 20–24). Lastly, thus grounded, there follow the special exhortations no longer to lie, but to speak the truth; not to sin in anger, etc.; no longer to steal, but to work, etc.; to hold no bad discourse, but, etc.; not to be bitter, passionate, etc., but kind, compassionate, forgiving (vv. 25–32).

Ver. 1. See on vv. 1–6, Winzer, Commentat., Lips. 1839. — παρακαλέω] “Parte doctrinae absoluta venit, ut solet, ad adhortationes,” Grotius. No doubt, there presently begins again at ver. 4 a doctrinal exposition as far as ver. 16, but it is subservient to the paraenesis, and is itself pervaded by the paraenetic element (vv. 14, 15). — οὖν] deduces the exhortation from the immediately preceding iii. 21. For a walk in keeping with the vocation, through which one belongs to the church, is what is practically in keeping with the praise of God in the church. The suitableness of this nearest reference gives it the preference over the more vague ordinary view, that οὖν draws its inference from the whole contents of the first three chapters. Comp. on Rom. xii 1. — ἐγὼ οὐ δέσμως ἐν κυρ.] gives to the παρακάλω οὖν a touching force “ad excitandum affectum, quo sit efficacior exhortatio,” Estius; comp.
Calvin. Similarly Ignat. Trall. 12: παρακαλῇ ὑμᾶς τὰ δεαμά μου, ἄ ἔνεκεν Ἠσυὸν Χριστοῦ περιφέρω. But all that has been said about exciting sympathetic feeling (Koppe and older expositors), cheering obedience,⁠¹ and the like, is quite inappropriate, since it was just in his sufferings that Paul was conscious of all his dignity with holy pride (comp. iii. 13 and on Gal. vi. 17). So here, too, in the παρακαλῶ, the reader was to be affected by the consciousness of the dignity and greatness of the martyr who utters it.⁠² According to others, Paul wishes to present himself as an example (Harless, Olshausen; comp. also Koppe). In that case he must at least have written: παρακαλῶ οὖν ἐγώ ὁ δεσμ. ἐν κυρ. καὶ ὑμᾶς ἄξιος περιπτ. κ.τ.λ. — ἐν κυρίῳ] does not belong to παρακαλῶ (Semler, Koppe with hesitation; Zanchius already suggested, but did not approve it), but to ὁ δεσμὸς, beside which it stands, and which alone needs its significant reference; comp. iii. 1; Phil. i. 13. Paul was the prisoner in the Lord (the article as iii. 1), for he did not endure a captivity having its ground apart from Christ,—such as one suffers who for any other reason is placed in bonds,—but in Christ his being bound had its causal basis, just because he was bearing the chains for Christ's sake; without, however, ἐν κυρίῳ signifying "for Christ's sake" (comp. on Gal. i. 24), as Chrysostom, Theophylact, and many would have it. Comp. rather, συνεργός ἐν Χριστῷ, ἀγαπητὸς ἐν κυρίῳ, δόκιμος ἐν Χριστῷ, ἐκλεκτὸς ἐν κυρίῳ, Rom. xvi. 3, 8, 9, 10, 13, al. It gives to the δεσμὸς its specific character, by which therefore the captivity was essentially distinguished from any other. — ἐν κυρίῳ] is annexed without an article, because it is blended with ὁ δεσμὸς into a unity of conception. The genitive designation, iii. 1, expresses the same thing, but otherwise conceived of. — ἄξιος περιπατῆσαι κ.τ.λ.] i.e. to lead such a life-walk as is appropriate to the call to the Messianic kingdom issued to you (at your conversion), "ne sint tanta gratia indigni," Calvin. possession of the kingdom, forsooth, is destined only for those whose ethical frame is renewed and sanctified by the Holy Spirit. Ver. 2. Metὰ πάσα ταπεινόφρ. κ. πραοτ.] the characteristic dispositions accompanying this περιπατήσαι; see Winer, p. 337 [E. T. 471], and with regard to πάσης, on i. 8; it belongs to both substantives. On the subject-matter, comp. Matt. xi. 29; Col. iii. 12. The opposite of humility: τὰ ὑψηλὰ φρονεῖν, Rom. xii. 16, xi. 20; 1 Tim. vi. 17; δοκεῖν eivai τι, Gal. vi. 3. On the notion of πραοτης, gentleness, see Tittmann, Synon. p. 140. — metὰ μακροθ.] is attached by Calvin, Estius, Zeltner, Calixtus, Baumgarten, Michaelis, Zachariae, Rückert, Holzhausen, Harless, Olshausen, to the following ἀνεχόμενοι. But the very repetition of the preposition, to which appeal is made, most naturally points backwards, so that metὰ μακροθ. appears as parallel to metὰ τ. ταπεινοφρ. κ. πραοτ., inasmuch, namely, as Paul makes the general be followed by the special, and then gives to the latter the elucidation ἀνεχόμενοι κ.τ.λ. Besides, metὰ μακροθ., if it belonged to ἀνεχόμ., would have an undue emphasis, since without long-suffering the ἀνέχεσθαι ἀλλήλων would not exist at all; Col. iii. 12 f. Bengel and Matthies, following Theodoret and Oecumenius, have attached the whole μετὰ τ. ταπ. κ. πραοτ., μετὰ μακροθ. to ἀνεχόμενοι. But in this way we lose the gradual transition from the general ἀξίως περιπατ. τ. κλ. to the special ἀνεχόμ. ἀλλήλ., which under our construction is very naturally brought about. — ἀνεχόμ. ἀλλήλ. ἐν ἀγάπῃ. The reciprocal forbearance in (ethical habit) love (comp. Rom. xv. 1; Gal. vi. 2) is the practical expression of the μακροθυμία. Comp. Col. iii. 13. It consists in the fact that we “aliorum infirmitates acquo animo ferimus, nec ob ea, quae nobis in proximo displicent, ab ejus amicitia recedimus, sed persona constanter amamus, etsi vitia in odio habeamus,” Calovius. The nominative of the participle (comp. Col. i. 10) is put κατὰ τὸ νοούμενον, because the logical subject of ἄξιως περιπατ., ver. 1, is ὑμεῖς. See on iii. 18; comp. on 2 Cor.
i. 7, and Pflugk, ad Eur. Hec. 970. Ignoring this familiar construction, Heinsius, Knatchbull, and Homberg have placed a full stop after ver. 1, and then supplied estote to the participles—a course, which would only be admissible if, as in Rom. xii. 9, this concise, pregnant mode of expression were implied in the context. — ἐν ἁγάπῃ belongs to the preceding. On the thing itself, comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 4. Lachmann, Holzhausen, and Olshausen attach it to σπουδάζοντες. The reason given by Olshausen, that, as the μακροθ, is only a form of expression of love, ἐν ἁγάπῃ could not belong to what precedes, would be set aside, even if it were in itself valid, by the correct separation of μετὰ μακροθ from ἀνεχόμενοι. And ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλληλοπ., taken alone, renders the discourse simply abrupt. How harmonious is the structure, when both participial clauses begin with the participle and close with the definitions attached by ἐν, in which definitions there is opened up the whole ethical domain (love and peace) to which the before-named special virtues belong (1 Cor. xiii.1)!

Ver. 3. Parallel of ἀνεχόμενοι κ.τ.λ., which is characterized as respects the effort by which it must be upheld. — τὴν ἐνότητα τοῦ πνεύματος] The πνεῦμα is not the human spirit, so that in general animi studiorumque consensus is meant (Ambrosiaster, Anselm, Erasmus, Calvin, Piscator, Estius, Wolf, Koppe, and many, including Meier, Baumgarten-Crusius, and Rückert, according to whom Paul did not write τοῦ νοὸς, because he derives the unity of the spirit from the Divine Spirit), but, as is shown from ver. 4, and is in itself clear from the exhortation to the Christian life (ver. 1), the Holy Spirit, instead of which we have not, with de Wette and Schenkel, to understand the Christian spirit of the community; the N. T. knows not this modern notion, but knows only the Holy Spirit of God, as that which rules in the church (ii. 22), and upholds and develops its specific life, so that the latter has precisely in the κοινωνία τοῦ πνεύματος (Phil. ii. 1; 2 Cor. xiii. 13) its common source and support. Rightly already Chrysostom (τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ γένεσι καὶ τρόπους διαφόρους διεστηκότας ἐνοὶ) and his successors, Beza, Calovius, Bengel, and others, including Harless, Winzer, Bleek, and Ch. F. Phil. i. 27; 1 Cor. xii. 13; John xvii. 21. And this unity is the identity of faith, of love, of sentiment, of hope, etc., in the different subjects who are moved by the Spirit. — ἐν τῷ συνδέσμῳ τῆς εἰρήνης] is attached by Lachmann to what follows, whereby the parallelism with the preceding participial clause is destroyed. And after the definition by ἐν τῷ συνδέσμῳ τῆς εἰρ. being prefixed, several of the following elements of unity would not be appropriate, since even without the bond of peace there is one Lord, one baptism, one God and Father. — ἐν is ordinarily taken as instrumental: through the bond of peace. In opposition to the parallelism with ἐν ἀγάπῃ; and through the unity of the Spirit the bond of peace is preserved, not the converse.

Hence: in the bond of peace, by which is denoted the ethical relation, in which they are to preserve the unity of the Spirit, namely, while peace one towards another must be the bond, which is to envelope them. τῆς εἰρήνης, accordingly, is genitive of opposition. Comp. συνδεόμενος εὐνοιας καὶ φιλιας, Plut. Num. 6; Acts viii. 23; Isa. lviii. 6. Others: "vinculum, quo pax retinetur" (Bengel; so Theophylact, Calovius, and others, including Rückert, Meier, Harless, Winzer), and this is held to be love. Appeal is made to Col. iii. 14, and to the parallel with ἐν ἀγάπῃ. But, in Col. l.c., love in fact is expressly named, and designated as συνδεόμενος τῆς τελειωτης; while justice is done to the parallel with ἐν ἀγάπῃ by our interpretation also, and it was at any rate most natural for the reader to understand under the bond of peace peace itself, conceived of as a bond. Expositors would not have sought for another explanation, had they not taken ἐν as instrumental, in which case the difficulty obtruded itself, that the unity of the Spirit is not preserved by means of peace, but peace by means of the unity of the Spirit. — That, moreover, no inference may be drawn from ver. 3 as to divisions prevailing in the church, Bengel has already rightly observed: "etiam ubi nulla fissura

1 What de Wette observes in opposition to this view—that the peacefulness, to which the readers are exhorted, is to preserve the unity of the Spirit by the fact that it holds all enveloped with the bond of peace—is not sufficient; since this peacefulness, which encircles all with the bond of peace, at any rate presupposes the unity of the Spirit. Where there is dispeace, this unity is already wanting.
est, monitis opus est.” And particularly was such exhortation natural for the apostle, even in the absence of special occasion, considering the many saddening experiences which he had met with elsewhere on this point!

Ver. 4, on to ver. 6. Objective relations of unity, to which the non-compliance with what is demanded in ver. 3 would be contradictory,¹ and which are consequently meant to incite towards compliance,— but without γάρ (comp. Dissen, ad Pind. Exc. II. p. 277), which gives greater animation to the discourse. The simple ἐστὶ is to be supplied (comp. 1 Cor. x. 17); for the discourse is not hortatory, as it is taken to be by Pelagius, Theophylact, Oecumenius, Calvin, Camerarius, Estius, Zachariae, Morus, Koppe, and others, including Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 2, p. 128, with which vv. 5 and 6 would not be in accord; for the same reason also the words are not to be attached appositionally to συνδάσκοντες (Bleek), but they are independent and purely assertive: there is one body and one Spirit. On ἡ σώμα, by which the totality of Christians as corpus (Christi) mysticum is meant, comp. ii. 16; Rom. xii. 5; 1 Cor. x. 17, xii. 13; on ἡ πνεῦμα, which is the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of that corpus mysticum, ii. 18; 1 Cor. xii. 13. The explanation: “one body and one soul” (“quasi diceret, nos penitus corpore et anima, non ex parte duntaxat, debere esse unitos,” Calvin), is excluded, as at variance with the context, by the specifically Christian character of the other elements, and rendered impossible by the correct supplying of ἐστὶ (not esse debetis). — καθὼς καὶ ἐκλήθη. κ.τ.λ.] with which unity (ἐν σ. κ. ἐν πν.) the relation also of your calling is in keeping (comp. Col. iii. 15), which took place by the fact that (ἐν instrumental, see on Gal. i. 6) one hope (namely, that of the eternal Messianic bliss) was communicated to you; for all in fact were called by God to this very Messianic σωτηρία (Phil. iii. 14). — τῆς κλῆσ. ὑμῶν] genitive, as at i. 18. Bengel, we may add, aptly remarks: “Spiritus est

Ver. 5. Continuation. There are not several Lords, but One, who is Lord of all believers, even Christ; not several kinds of faith, but one faith, inasmuch as all place their confidence upon the atoning death of Christ, on account of which they are justified and obtain salvation (Rom. iii. 23 ff.); not several kinds of baptism, but one baptism, namely, into Christ (Rom. vi. 3; Gal. iii. 27; Acts x. 48, xix. 5). — εἷς κύριος at the head; because μία πίστις and the ἐν βάπτισμα accomplished in the case of those who have become believers are consequentia of εἷς κύριος. — To make of πίστις the doctrine of the faith (Grotius, Zachariae, and others), is at variance with linguistic usage; comp. on Gal. i. 23; Rom. i. 5. The ἐνότης τῆς πίστεως is here represented as present, but in ver. 13 as future. Both with justice; inasmuch as here the Christian faith in the narrower sense is intended, the fides salvifica, which in all Christians was essentially the same, while at ver. 13 it is the Christian faith in the wider sense, within the compass of which there was diversity of convictions (as respects the validity of the law, the resurrection, veneration of angels, asceticism, partaking of flesh offered to idols, and other matters). — Of the Lord's Supper, the unity of which might likewise appear as a suitable element in the connection (1 Cor. x. 17), Paul does not make mention: according to Calovius, because it was comprehended “uno baptismatis sacramento ex paritatis ratione;” according to Harless, because Paul was mentioning only the fundamental conditions of the Christian fellowship, as they exist from the outset, at the first entrance upon it; according to Olshausen, because the specific act of the Supper, the partaking (rather, the communion, 1 Cor. x. 16) of Christ, is included in εἷς κύριος, μία πίστις; according to de Wette, because it was less a something conditioning the unity, than something representing this unity itself. But, in opposition to Calovius and Olshausen,

1 Most mistakenly of all, Schenkel holds that Paul did not regard a uniform observance of the Supper as necessary, and would not stand in the way of the varied development of a rite. In that case, doubtless, Paul would have done well not to mention baptism either.
it may be urged that, if Paul had adopted the synecdochic point of view in the selection, he would not have needed to mention πίστις, since baptism presupposes faith; in opposition to Harless, that the fundamental conditions of the Christian communion which Paul mentions are such, not specially for the beginning of it, but for its whole duration; in opposition to de Wette, finally, that the Lord’s Supper is, precisely as a representation of the unity, at the same time a powerful ethical incitement thereto, and hence would have been admirably appropriate in the series of points adduced. The ground of its not being mentioned is rather to be sought in the fact that the adducing of the Lord’s Supper would have disturbed the threefold triad of the elements adduced, and have broken through the whole rhythm of the passage. And the holy meal might the more easily remain unmentioned, because it was at that time not yet an observance subsisting by itself, but was combined with the common meals; hence, doubtless, in a context where the Lord’s Supper is spoken of, the εἰς ἄρτος (1 Cor. x. 17) is brought forward as a symbol of the unity of Christians, but in another context the thought ἐν δεύτερον κυρίου or μια τρέπει κυρίου—because the Supper was not something subsisting alone like baptism, which as the constituent element of Christian standing could not remain unmentioned—did not so necessarily suggest itself.

Ver. 6. Observe the climactic advance in vv. 4–6: the Church, Christ, God;—and at the same time the climax in the divine Triad: Spirit, Lord, Father. Only the dominion of the Father is the absolute one, that of the Son is the derived, conferred, obtained (Phil. ii. 9; 1 Cor. xv. 24 ff., iii. 23, al.; comp. Ernesti, Ursprung d. Sünde, I. p. 194 ff.), in which He also disposes of the Spirit (2 Cor. iii. 18). See also Gess, von der Person Christi, p. 158 ff. — πάντωσιν] i.e. of all believers, as those who have the νίκη εἰς τὸν κόσμον (iii. 5; Rom. vii. 15; Gal. iii. 26, iv. 5), so that God is their God and Father. Holzhausen erroneously (seeing that the context treats of the Christian εἰς τὸν κόσμον) thinks that all men are intended. Not even the spiritually dead members of the church are included (in opposition to Münchmeyer), as results from the sequel indicated by διὰ and ἐν, since they have not the Spirit and belong not to Christ (Rom. viii. 9), but are aloof from connection with Him and stand outside of grace (Gal. v. 22 f.; John xv. 2, 6), consequently have no share in the body of Christ (i. 23) and in the living temple of God (ii. 22 f.). — ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων κ.τ.λ. The relation of the ὅσος καὶ παρέχω πάντων to the πᾶσι in threefold manner. Comp. Rom. xi. 36, where, however, the prepositions define the subject, not, as here, the object. πάντων, πάντων, and πᾶσι are equally to be taken as masculine, because the preceding πάντων was masculine, and because the discourse continues in ver. 7 with ἐν δὲ ἐκάστῳ ἡμῶν, wherein the πᾶσι are individualized. Wrongly, therefore, many (including Erasmus, Michaelis, Morus, Rückert, Baumgarten-Crusius) have taken the first two as neuter, while the Vulgate, Zachariae, Koppe, et al., give the second point alone as neuter, and Matthies, on the other hand, explains all three elements of the relation of God to the world and mankind, consequently as neuter. — ἐπὶ πάντων ὁ πάνω πάντων, Chrysostom; τὴν ἰδεῖσσαν σημαίνει, Theodoret. Comp. Rom. ix. 5. See Wessel, ad Diodor. xiii. 14; Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 474; Winer, p. 335. After this relation of transcendence there follows, in διὰ . . . πᾶσιν, that of immanence. — διὰ πάντων] διὰνω πάντων, Chrysostom; τὴν διαποτελεῖσα σημαίνει, Theodoret. Comp. Rom. ix. 5. See Wessel, ad Diodor. xiii. 14; Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 474; Winer, p. 335 [E. T. 521]. After this relation of transcendence there follows, in διὰ . . . πᾶσιν, that of immanence. — διὰ πάντων] cannot, since the πᾶσι are the Christians and the relation of God to what is Christian is characterized, apply either to the creation (Estius, Wolf, and others), so that we should have to think of the all-penetrating creative power of God, or to providence (Chrysostom and his successors; Beza, Grotius: "per omnes diffundit providam suam gubernationem"); but the charismatic presence of God by means of the Holy Spirit, pervading and ruling all Christians, is meant. See also ver. 7, and comp. 1 Cor. xii. 6. The distinction from the following ἐν πᾶσι lies not in the thing itself, since both elements denote the immanent ruling of God by virtue of His Spirit, but in the form of conception, since with ἐν the relation is conceived of as operative indwelling, and with διὰ as operative movement throughout all Christian hearts ("Deus enim Spiritu sanctificationis diffusus est per omnia ecclesiae membra," Calvin). According to Harless, the thought expressed in διὰ πάντων is, that God as head works through the members. But of the conception of the head and the members there is absolutely nothing in the context; further, though mention is made of God as Father, it is not the Father, but Christ, that is Head of the members; lastly, in place of the simple ἐν, which is to be mentally supplied, there would be insensibly introduced a wholly different supplement, namely, ἐνεργῶ, or a similar verb. At the bottom of this explanation there lies, indeed, the presupposition, that the relation of the Trinity is expressed in the three prepositions, as Jerome, Thomas, and many of the older expositors would have it. Against this altogether arbitrary supposition, however, Theophylact already rightly declared himself. See also Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 201. Olshausen, too, finds here, as at Rom. xi. 36, the Trinity; holding that God is described in His various relations to the creature [rather to the Christians] as Lord over all things, as instrument by which they are (this being held to apply to the Son), and as the element in which they are. Thus, moreover, the prepositional relation of the last two clauses is exactly reversed, inasmuch as not διὰ πάντων κ.τ.λ. is explained, but δι’ οὗ πάντες κ.τ.λ. ! According to Beyschlag, Christol. d. N. T. p. 250, there is expressed, at least in the form of hint, the threefold mode of existence of God ("self-preservation, self-disclosure, self-communication"). But apart from the fact that such a threefold form of existence is not the expression of the New Testament triad, the self-communication, in fact, is implied not only in ἐν πάσι, but necessarily already in διὰ πάντων. Lastly, Koppe is wrong in an opposite way: "Sententia videtur una, tantum variis formulis synonymis (!) expressa haec: cui vos omnes debetis omnia." — Observe, further, that the great fundamental elements of unity, vv. 4–6, are matters of fact, historically given with Christianity itself, and as such are not affected by differences of doctrine; hence without reason there have been found here traces of the later age, when "upon the basis of the Pauline thought a Catholic church was built," of which the centralization in doctrine and constitution was not derived from the adherents of Paul, but was a Petrine thought (Schwegler). The Catholic idea in our passage is just the Pauline one (1 Cor. xii.), cherished by Christ Himself (John xvii. 20 f.).

Ver. 7. Δὲ] forms the transition from the summary πάντων, πάντων, πᾶσιν, ver. 6, to each individual among the Christians. No single one, however,—in order to adduce this also as motive to the preservation of the ἐνότης τοῦ πνεύματος, was overlooked in the endowing with grace; on every individual was it conferred, the grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ, so that each individual on his part can and ought to contribute to the preservation of that unity.—ἡ χάρις] i.e. according to the context, the grace of God at work among the Christians, the communication of which is manifested in the diverse χαράσματα; hence our passage is in harmony with the representation given, Rom. xii. 6.—ἐδόθη] by Christ. —κατὰ τὸ μέτρον κ.τ.λ.] τῆς δωρεᾶς is genitive subjecti (Rom. xii. 3, 6; Eph. iv. 13). Hence: in the proportion in which the gift of Christ is meted out, according as Christ apportions to the one a larger, to the other a smaller measure of His gift (i.e. the gift of the divine χάρις). —The scope atow Xpiarov isthe gift which Christ gives (2 Cor. ix. 15), not: which Christ has received (Oeder, in Wolf; see in opposition to this view, already Calvin), in opposition to which ver. 8, ἐδώκες δόματά τ. ἁνθρ., is decisive.

Ver. 8. If it had just been said that by Christ the endowment of grace was distributed in varied measure to each individual, this is now confirmed by a testimony of the Scripture. Nothing is to be treated as a parenthesis, inasmuch as neither course of thought nor construction is interrupted. —διὸ λέγει] wherefore, because the case stands, as has been said, ver. 7, He saith. Who says it (comp. v. 14), is obvious of itself, namely, God, whose word the Scripture is. See on 1 Cor. vi. 16; Gal. iii. 16; the supplying ἡ γραφή or τὸ πνεῦμα must have been suggested by the context (Rom. xv. 10). The manner of citation with the simple λέγει, obviously meant of God, has as its necessary presupposition, in the mind of the writer and readers, the Theopneustia of the

O. T. The citation that follows is not "ex carmine, quod ab Ephesiis cantitari sciret," and in which Ps. lxviii. 18 had partly furnished the words (Storr, Opusc. III. p. 309 ; Flatt),—which is quite an arbitrary way of avoiding the difficulty, and at variance with the divine Αλήνε,—but is the passage of Scripture Ps. lxviii. 18 itself according to the LXX. with free alteration. This psalm, in its historical sense a song of triumph upon the solemn entry of God into Zion,¹ is here understood according to its Messianic significance—an understanding, which has its warrant, not indeed in the much too general and vague proposition, that one and the same God is the Revealer of the Old and of the New Covenant (Harless), but in the circumstance that the triumphal procession of Jehovah, celebrated in the psalm, represents the victory of the Theocracy; and that, as every victory of the Theocracy is of a typical and in so far prophetic Messianic character, the return of Christ into heaven appears as the Messianic actual consummation of the divine triumph. The free deviation from the original text and the LXX. consists partly in the immaterial circumstance that Paul transfers into the third person that which is said in the second, and adds to ἀνθρώπως the article wanting in the LXX.; partly in the essential point, that instead of the original sense: "Thou receivedst gifts (namely, gifts of homage) among νεανίσκας, LXX.: *Yet Νεανίσκα might also denote that men themselves are the gifts. So Ewald takes it, i.e. (and comp. his Ausführ. Lehrb. der Hebr. Sprache, § 287 h), εἶλαθε θοματα ἐν ἄνθρωποι, or according to another reading: ἐν ἄνθρωποι οὐ, he expresses the sense: He gave gifts to men, while in other respects reproducing the transition of the LXX. Consequently Paul has, as regards the ἔδωκε, given a sense opposite to the original one—a degree of variation such as, with all freedom in the employment of Old Testament passages, is nowhere else met with in the writings of the apostle, on which account the book Chissuk Emuna accused him of falsifying the words of the psalm, while Whiston looked upon the Hebrew text and the LXX. in Ps. lxviii. 18 as corrupt. This difference is not to be explained, with Rückert, by lightly asserting: "Paul did not even perhaps know exactly how the words ran," etc.; for in this way he would be chargeable with a shallow caprice, for which there is no warrant; moreover, the agreement, in other respects, of the citation with the original text and the LXX. leads us to infer too exact an acquaintance with the passage adduced, to allow us to assume that Paul adduced the words in the full belief that ἃν was read in the Hebrew, and ἔδωκε in the LXX. Rather must he have in reality understood the passage of the psalm, as to its main substance, just as he gives it. Inasmuch, namely, as he had recognised the words in their bearing upon the antitypical Messianic fulfilment, and that as a confirmation of what had been said of Christ in ver. 7, this latter special application must either have been suggested to him by another reading, which he followed (ἀνθρωποι instead of ἄνθρωποι), or else—with the freedom of a Messianic interpretation of the words—by an exposition of the Hebrew words, which yielded essentially the sense expressed by him. If the latter is the case (for in favour of the referring it specially to the humbler servants of the temple, whom David and Solomon, e.g., gathered from among the subjugated peoples and settled around the temple, whom thus God, as if in a triumphal procession from Sinai to Zion, Himself brought in as captives, and then caused to be devoted by men to Him as offerings, in order that they, who were once so turbulent, might dwell peacefully in His service ("even rebellious ones must dwell with Jah God," as Ewald renders the closing words of the passage). The sense: "through men," which Hoelemann, on account of ver. 11, finds as a "secondary" meaning in ἄνθρωποι, is not to be thought of, not even according to the apostle, who has expressed his view with such simple definiteness by ἔδωκε.

former there is no trace of critical support), he took ἐκέρδησεν, etc., in the sense: thou didst take away gifts, to distribute them among men (on the ἐκ... see Ewald, Ausfuhrl. Lehrb. der Heb. Spr. § 217 f. 1), and translated this in an explanatory way: ἐδώκες δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις; in connection with which the transposing into the third person is to be regarded as an unintentional variation in citing from memory. ἐκέρδησεν, namely, has often the proleptic sense to fetch [Germ. holen], i.e. to take anything for a person and to give it to him. See Gen. xviii. 5, xxvii. 13, xlii. 16, xlviii. 9; Job xxxviii. 20 (and Hirzel in loc.); 2 Sam. iv. 6, al.; see Gesen. Thee. II. p. 760, and Hoehlenmann, p. 97 f. Comp. Bengel: "accepit dona, quae statim daret.

The utterance, however, as thus understood, Paul has reproduced, interpreting it as he has done, in order to place beyond doubt the sense which he attached to it, for the reader who might have otherwise understood the words of the LXX. The Chaldee Paraphrasist likewise understood ἐκέρδησεν in such wise, that, while interpreting the passage of Moses, he could expound: מְלֹא כָּלַם, dedisti dona filiis hominum. It is evident from this, since there is good reason for presupposing in the Targum—the more so, as in our passage the Peshito agrees therewith (which likewise, Ps. lxviii. l.c., has dedisti dona filiis hominum)—older exegetical traditions, that Paul himself may have followed such a tradition (Holzhausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, Credner, Beiträge, II. p. 121 f.). To assume that he actually did so, is in itself, and in reference to the previous Rabbinical training of the apostle, free from objection, and has sufficient warrant in that old and peculiar agreement, even though we should explain the agreement between the same citation in Justin, c. Tryph. 39, 87, and the quotation of the apostle, by a dependence upon the latter (Credner, Beitr. II. p. 120). On the other hand, it is not to be said, with Beza, Calovius, and most older expositors, that the explanation given by Paul really corresponds with the historic sense of the

1 The phrase formerly so often compared, נַחֲלָה נָעַם נָעַם (Ex. xxii. 10, xxxiv. 18), is not in place here, since נָעַם, in that phrase, signifies nothing else than the simple take.

2 Chrysostom, without, however, entering into any particulars, says merely: the prophet says thou hast received, but Paul: he has given; and the two are passage in the Psalm (see especially, Geier, ad Ps. l. c. p. 1181; comp. also Hoelemann, p. 98 f.), which, judging by the context, is decidedly incorrect. Even Calvin says: "nonnihil a genuino sensu hoc testimonium detorsit Paulus;" and already Theodore of Mopsuestia aptly remarks: ἵππαλλάξας δὲ τὸ ἐλαβεν δόματα αὐτὸς ἐν τῷ ψαλμῷ κεῖμενον, ἐδωκε δόματα ἑπε, τῇ ἵππαλαγῇ περὶ τὴν οἰκείαν χρησάμενος ἀκολουθίαν ἐκεῖ μὲν γὰρ (in the psalm) πρὸς τὴν ὑπόθεσιν τὸ ἐλαβεν ἣμοττεν, ἐνταῦθα δὲ (in our passage) τῷ προκειμένῳ τὸ ἐδωκεν ἀκόλουθον ἦν. The deviation from the historic sense cannot be set aside with fairness and without arbitrary presuppositions. This holds not only of the opinions of Jerome and Erasmus (that in the psalm πὴ is used, because the giving has not yet taken place, but is promised as future) and of Calvin ("quum de Christi exaltatione paucavera Psalmi citasset, de suo adjectit, eum dedisse dona, ut sit minoris et majoris comparatio, qua ostendere vult Paulus, quanto praestantior sit ista Dei ascensio in Christi persona, quam fuerit in veteribus ecclesiis triumphis"), but also of the expedients to which Harless and Olshausen have recourse. According to Harless, namely, Paul wishes to express the identity of God, whose deeds at that time the word of Scripture represents in a form which, as identical with the form of Christ's action, makes us recognise the word of the O. T. as pointing forward to what was to come, and the Christ of the N. T. as the God who already revealed Himself under the O. T.; in the words of the psalm the captives themselves are described as sacrificial gifts, which the victor as God takes to Himself among men; the apostle changes merely the form of the words, so far as the context makes it necessary, inasmuch as he wishes to make out that those vanquished ones—who have not made themselves what they are, but have been made so of God—are those, of whom he had said that on every one according to the measure of the gift of Christ the grace had been bestowed which was already pointed to in the psalm. "There is no other there," says the apostle, "than He who had descended one and the same. Theodoret more precisely explains himself: ἀμφίτερα ἢ (the taking and giving) γείτιναι: λαμβάνει γὰρ τὴν πίστιν ἀποδίδων τῷ ἕλεμ. Comp. Oecumenius.
to earth, to gain for Himself His own; not that they would have presented themselves to Him, but He takes them as it pleases Him, and makes them what it pleases Him." But (1) Paul does not wish to express the identity of God, etc., but to show that what is said of Christ in ver. 7 was also already prophesied Ps. lxviii. 18; it was a question of the identity of the thing, as to which it was self-evident that the triumph celebrated in Ps. lxviii. is in the N. T. fulfilment celebrated by Christ, who had come in the name of the Lord. (2) In the Ps. l.e.,عدد והנה "applies to the gifts of homage which the triumphing Jehovah has received among (from) men. Certainly, according to another explanation (see above, Ewald's view, and comp. also Bleek), the men themselves, namely, the vanquished, may be regarded as the gifts or offerings which God has received; but who could withal read between the lines in the apostle's citation what, according to Harless, one ought to read between them, in order in the end to find only the form of the words changed? Olshausen, who, we may mention, quite erroneously (see vv. 9, 10) specifies τῶν ἀνθρώπων as the point of the citation, agrees with Harless in so far as he is of opinion that the thought of the psalmist: "Thou hast taken to Thyself gifts among men," affirms nothing else than: "Thou hast chosen to Thyself the redeemed as offerings;" but further adds: "But the man whom God chooses as an offering for Himself, i.e. as an instrument for His aims, He furnishes with 1 "Paul does not wish by the quotation primarily to represent Christ as the dispenser of the gifts, but to prove from the O. T. itself the universality of the gifts of Christ, consequently the equal title of the Gentiles; He has by His redemption conferred gifts not merely on this one or that one, not upon the Jews alone, but upon men as such, upon mankind." What Olshausen has further advanced respecting the dative expression with the article (instead of which the Hebrew text has among men, while no article is used in the LXX.)—to wit, that by אִם רְאוּ אָדָם, which applies to all men, it is not intended to say: all men must be redeemed, and as redeemed receive gifts; but: all men may be redeemed, and as redeemed obtain gifts of grace; and in so far this deviation from the original was altogether immaterial—is pure invention. The difference certainly does not lie in the fact that אִם רְאוּ points only to some, and the expression of Paul to all men, as Olshausen supposes, but solely in the הָרָעַל of the original text and the דָּמָם of Paul. As well דָּמָם as τῶν ἀνθρώπων designates men according to the category; but according to the original text it is men who are the givers, so that the Triumphator takes them; whereas, according to Paul, the men are the recipients, to whom He gives.

the gifts necessary to the attainment of the same; and this side (?) the apostle, in accordance with his tendency, here brings into special prominence." Similarly also Hofmann, Schriftenw. II. 1, p. 484 f., who is of opinion that here, in the N. T. application of the passage from the psalm, it is one and the same thing whether one say: that Christ has, for the accomplishment of the work of His honour, caused to be given to Himself by His vanquished that which they possessed, or: that He has given them gifts to this end; "for He takes that which is theirs into His service, when He gives to them what is His, to make them capable of service." Essentially so also Delitzsch on the Psalm, Lc. Such subtleties, by means of which any quid pro quo at pleasure may easily enough be got out of the alleged light and significance of the "history of the fulfilment" (Delitzsch), may be conveniently foisted upon the words of the apostle, but with what right? — áναβας εἰς τὸν ἀρχήν Whether we understand the DiiB?TO in the original text of the ascending of the victorious God into heaven (Hengstenberg, Lengerke, Hitzig, Harless, Hoelemann, and others) or to Zion (Ewald, Bleek), or leave it without more precise definition of place (Hofmann); according to the Messianic accomplishment of the divine triumphal procession, which takes place through Christ, the words apply to Christ ascended (comp. ὑψωθέν, Acts ii. 33) to heaven (Ps. cii. 20, al.; Ecclus. xiii. 8; Luke i. 78), who has brought in as captives enemies that have been vanquished by Him upon this triumphal march. — αἰχμαλωσία, namely, is the abstract collective for αἰχμαλωτοί (Judith ii. 9; Ezr. vi. 5; Rev. xiii. 10; Diod. Sic. xvii. 70), like ξύμαχια for ξύμαχοι, etc. See on ii. 2. On the connection with the kindred verb (to take captive, to lead, to bring in as such), comp. 2 Chron. xxviii. 5; 1 Macc. ix. 72; and see, in general, Winer, p. 201 [E. T. 282]; Lobeck, Paral. p. 501. The character of αἰχμαλωτευό as Greek is even worse than that of αἰχμαλωτίζω. See Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 442. But what subjects are meant by αἰχμαλωσία? Not the redeemed, as already Justin, c. Tryph. 36; further, Theodoret (οὐ γὰρ ἔλευθεροι δυτας ἡμᾶς ἡχμαλωτευσαν, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου γεγενεμένοις ἀντιχμαλωτευσαν, και τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἡμᾶς ἐδωρήσατο), Oecumenius, Thomas, Erasmus ("capti-vorum gregem e peccati diabolique tyrannide liberatum”), and others, including Meier, Harless, Olshausen (“men upon earth, so far as they are held captive by sin and in the ultimate ground by the prince of this world, and among these, in particular, the Gentile world”), Baumgarten-Crusius (“those gained for the kingdom of Christ”), have interpreted it; seeing that the captives, both according to the original text and according to our citation, are different from the ἀνθρώποι who are subsequently mentioned, namely, such vanquished ones as are visited by the victor with the hard penal fate of captives in war. Hence also it cannot be the souls delivered by Christ from Hades (Lyra, Estius, and many Catholic expositors; König, von Christi Höllenfahrt, p. 26; Delitzsch, Psychol. p. 414; and Baur) that are spoken of. It is the enemies of Christ and His kingdom, the antichristian powers, including those of hell (but not these alone); their power is broken by the completed redeeming work of the Lord. By His resurrection and exaltation they have been rendered powerless, and subjected to His victorious might; consequently they appear, in accordance with the poetical mould of our passage, as those whom He has vanquished and carries with Him on His procession from Hades into heaven (see ver. 9), so that He, having gone up on high, brings them in as prisoners of war. Not as if He has really brought them in captivity to heaven, but under the figure of the triumphator, as which the ascended Christ appears in accordance with the prophetic view given in Ps. lxviii., the matter thus presents itself, namely, the overcoming of His foes displaying itself through His ascension. This vanquishing, we may add, in its actual execution still continues even after the entering upon the kingly office which took place with the exaltation of Christ; δεὶ γὰρ αὐτῷ βασιλεύειν ἀρχη γοὶ θη πάντας τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ἐν τῷ τοὺς πόδας αὐτῷ, 1 Cor. xv. 25. Not the final overcoming of the foes of Christ is thus meant, but the actual αἰχμαλωτευέται αἰχμα. oftentimes recurs until the final consummation, until at length ἔσχατος ἐχθρός καταργεῖται ὁ θάνατος, 1 Cor. xv. 26, namely, at the resurrection on the last day. In this case, however, there is the more reason for leaving the matter without more precise definition of the hostile powers vanquished (Satanic and human), as the context suggests nothing more special, and as, speaking generally, the ἡχυμαλῶν. αἰχμα. does not form for the aim and connection of our passage the essential point of the psalmist’s saying, but the latter would have been quite as fully in its place here, even though that ἡχυμαλῶν. αἰχμ. had not been inserted, since the element confirmatory of ver. 7 lies simply in the ἀναβάς εἰς ὅφος ἔδωκε δόματα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. Yet we have not, with Morus (comp. Flatt), to rationalize the conception of the apostle: “removit omnia, quae religionis suae propagationi et felicitati hominum ostentare impedimenta,” by which the sense is altered, and vanquished foes become obstacles taken out of the way.—δόματα] according to Paul, gifts in which εὐαφία in the sense of gift of the Spirit as current among the disciples of the apostles (de Wette), is the more arbitrary, inasmuch as de Wette himself finds it probable that some apostle has allegorized the passage of the psalm.

Ver. 9 is not a (Rabbinical) argument to show that the subject of the passage in the psalm is no other than Christ, in so far as of Him alone could be predicated that descending which, in speaking of ascending, must be presumed to have gone before (Michaelis, Koppe; Güder, von der Erschein. Christi unter den Todten, p. 83; also my own earlier view). Such an argument would have been aimless, since the subject of the passage of the psalm in its Messianic fulfilment was self-evident; it would, moreover, not have even logical

Luther’s gloss: “that is sin, death, and conscience, that they may not seize or keep us.” Grotius rationalizes: “per apostolorum doctrinam vicit et velut captivam egit idololatriam et vitia alia.” Most comprehensively, but with an admixture of heterogeneous elements, Calvin says: “Neque enim Satanam modo et peccatum et mortem totosque inferos prostravit, sed ex rebellibus quotidie facit sibi obsequentem populum, quum verbo suo carnis nostrae lasciviam domat; rursum hostes suos, i.e. impios omnes quasi ferreis catenis continet constrictos, dum illorum furor cum cohibet sua virtute, ne plus valeat, quam illis concedit.” correctness, since, in fact, God Himself, as often in the O. T., might be thought of as the καταβάς who ἀνέβην. Paul rather brings out in ver. 9 what the ascension of Christ prophetically meant in Ps. lxviii. contains as its presupposition; and this for the end of showing1 how the matter affirmed and supported by the passage of the psalm in ver. 7, namely, Christ's bestowment of grace on all individuals respectively, stands in necessary connection with His general position of filling the whole universe; a function upon which He must have entered by His very descending into the depths of the earth and His ascending above all heavens (ver. 10).— ἄμ] carrying forward the argument: “but the ἀνέβην, in order now to show you what is therewith said,” etc.— τὸ ἀνέβην] not: the word ἀνέβην, for this does not occur in the passage of the psalm, but the predicate ἀνέβην, which was contained in καταβάς. — τί ἐστιν] not: what of an extraordinary nature (Hoelemann), but simply: what is said therewith, what is implied in it? Comp. Matt. ix. 13; John xvi. 17 f., x. 6, al.— ἄρα καὶ κατέβην] that He also (not merely ascended, but also) descended. The having ascended presupposes the having descended. The correctness of this conclusion rests upon the admitted fact that the risen Christ had His original dwelling not upon earth, as Elijah had, but in the heaven, whither He went up; consequently He could not but have descended from this, if He has ascended. Comp. John iii. 13. — The depth, however, into which He descended—whether, namely, merely to the earth, or deeper still into the subterranean world—is not to be inferred from the ἀνέβην itself, but was fixed with historic certainty in the believing consciousness of the readers; hence Paul could with good reason write not merely ἄρα καὶ κατέβην, but ἄρα καὶ κατ. εἰς τὰ κατώτερα τῆς γῆς, i.e. into that which is deeper down than the earth, into Hades (κατέβην δόμον Ἀιδός ἐσω, Hom. Od. xxiii. 252; Ἀιδοὶ δόμοι ὑπὸ κεύθεσι γαῖς ἑρχει, II. xxii. 482; comp. Od. xxiv. 204;

1 The view of Chrysostom, Theophylact, Erasmus, Cornelius a Lapide, and others, again taken up by Olshausen (comp. also Hofmann, I.e. 343), that Paul would by the example of Christ exhort to humility, is quite at variance with the context. And Rückert also is wrong in holding that ver. 9 contains only an incidental remark, which might equally well have been wanting.
Soph. Ant. 816, Trach. 1088). He might also have designated Hades by τὰ κατώτατα τῆς γῆς, the lowest depth of the earth ( yap θητεία, LXX. Ps. lxiii. 10; Prayer of Azar. 13; not Ps. cxxxix. 15, where “in the depths of the earth” is only a sensuous form of the conception “in secret”); but has purposely chosen that comparative expression—in which the genitive is that of comparison, not the partitive genitive—in order to impart as strong a colouring as possible to the depth of Hades, in contradiction to that heaven from which Christ descended; He descended deeper than the earth is (the earth being conceived of as a plane), in that He descended even into the subterranean region beyond, into Hades. The goal of the humiliation Paul here designates locally, whereas at Phil. ii. 8 he specifies it as respects the degree, namely, by μέχρι θανάτου κ.τ.λ., which, however, is as to substance in agreement with our passage, since the death of Christ had as its immediate consequence His descent into Hades (Luke xxiii. 43; Matt. xii. 40; Acts ii. 27; 1 Pet. iii. 19), as, indeed, also at Phil. ii. 10 (κατάχθονίων) this descent is presupposed as having taken place in death. The explanation of the so-called descent into hell (Irenaeus in Pitra, Spicileg. Solesmense, I. p. 7; Tertullian, Jerome, Pelagius, Ambrosiaster, Erasmus, Estius, Calovius, Bengel, and many others, including Rückert, Olshausen, Delitzsch, Lechler, Ewald, Hoelemann, Bleek; Baur scenting Gnosticism) is therefore the right one, because the object was to present Christ as the One who fills the whole universe, so that, with a view to His entering upon this His all-filling activity, He has previously with His victorious presence passed through the whole world, having descended from heaven into the utmost depth, and ascended from this depth to the utmost height—a view, which of necessity had to extend not merely to the earth, but even into the nether world, just because Christ, as was historically certain for every believer, had been in the nether world, and consequently, by virtue of His exaltation to the right hand of God, really had the two utmost limits of the universe, from below upwards, as the terminos a quo and ad quern of His triumphal progress. Further, had Paul intended only the descent to earth (Thomas, Beza, Calvin, Grotius, Hammond, Michaelis, Fischer, de vitiis Lex. N. T., and many, including Winer, p. 470 [E. T. 666], Holzhausen, Meier, Matthies, Harless, Raebiger, p. 68 ff., Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Hofmann, p. 345, Bisping, Schenkel, Schmid, Bibl. Theol. II. p. 291, Reiche, Comm. crit. p. 174 f., Beyschlag, Christol. d. N. T. p. 228), it would not be easy to see why he should not have written merely κατέβη, or at any rate simply κατέβη εἰς τὴν γῆν or κατέβη εἰς τὴν γῆν κάτω (Acts ii. 19), instead of employing the circumstantial and affected, but yet only feebly paraphrasing expression: into the lower regions, which are the earth (for so we should have to explain εἰς τὰ κατώτερα τῆς γῆς, understood only of the earth; see Winer, l.c. [E. T. 666]). This expression is only accounted for, sharp and telling, when it points the reader to a region lower than the earth, to that Hades, whither every reader knew that Christ had descended. Doubtless the apostle might have written simply εἰς ἀνου (Acts ii. 27) or ἐν ἀνου (Matt. xi. 23), or also εἰς τὴν ἀβυσσον (Rom. x. 7) or εἰς τὴν καρδίαν τῆς γῆς (Matt. xii. 40); but the whole pathos of the passage, with its contrast of the extremes of depth and height, very naturally suggested the purposely chosen designation εἰς τὰ κατώτερα τῆς γῆς. The ordinary objection, that, in fact, Christ did not ascend from Hades, but from earth to heaven, is of no effect, because He has in reality returned, arisen and ascended from Hades, consequently Hades was the deepest terminus a quo of His ascension, as it had previously been the deepest terminus ad quem of His descent, and on this deepest turning-point all here depended, even apart from the fact that the long interval of forty days between resurrection and ascension is historically very problematic (see Remark subjoined to Luke xxiv. 51). Nearest to our view come Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Bullinger, Drusius, Zachariae, and others, who, however, refer the passage only to the death and the burial (comp. also Erlang. Zeitschr. 1856, p. 284); whereas Calomesius, Witsius, Calixtus, and others (already Beza, by way of suggestion), appealing to Ps. cxxxix. 15, strangely enough interpret it of the descent into the womb.

Ver. 10. Result from ver. 9, without οὖν, but thereby coming in the more vividly and with a certain triumph; “alio gravi dicto antecedentia complectitur aut absolvit” (Dissen, ad Pind. Exc. II. p. 278). — The prefixed ὁ καταβάς has the emphasis, which is further augmented by αὐτός: 1 The one who descended, just He, He precisely (identity of the person), is also the one who ascended on high above all heavens. — ὁ ἀναβάς ὑπεράνω πάντων τῶν οὐρανῶν] points back to that ἀναβάς εἰς ὕψος, ver. 8, more precisely defining this εἰς ὕψος as the region highest of all. The expression “above all heavens” has its basis in the conception of seven heavens, which number is not to be diminished to three (Harless: ἄνω, αἰθήρ, τρίτος οὐρανὸς; comp. Grotius, Meier, and others). See on 2 Cor. xii. 2. The ὑπεράνω (in the N. T. only here and i. 21; Heb. ix. 5) describes the exaltation of Christ—clearly to be maintained as local—as the highest of all (comp. ὑπερύψωσε, Phil. ii. 9), in such wise that He, having ascended through all heavens (δεξιηλθότα τοὺς οὐρανοὺς, Heb. iv. 14), has seated Himself above in the highest heaven, as the σύνθρονος of the Father, at the right hand of God. Comp. Heb. vii 26: ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν γενόμενος. The spiritualistic impoverishing of this concrete conception to a mere denial of all “enclosure within the world” (Hofmann, II. 1, p. 535) is nothing but a rationalistic invention. Comp. Acts vii. 56, iii. 21, i. 9–11. — ἵνα πληρώσῃ τὰ πάντα] points back to the bestowal of grace expressed in ver. 7, and prophetically confirmed in ver. 8, and that as expressing the universal relation into which Christ has entered towards the whole world by His exaltation from the lowest depth to the loftiest height; in which universal relation is also of necessity contained, as a special point, that bestowal of grace on all individuals. As intended aim, however (ἵνα), this πληρῶν τὰ πάντα stands related to the previous ascension of Christ from the uttermost depth, into which He had descended, to the uttermost height of heaven; because He had first, like a triumphing conqueror (see ver. 8), to take possession of His whole domain, i.e. the whole world from Hades to the highest heaven, in order now to wield His kingly sway over this domain, by virtue of which He was to fill the universe with His activity of sustaining and governing, and especially of providing all bestowal of grace. This was to be the all-embracing task of His kingly office, until the consummation indicated at 1 Cor. xv. 28. It is according to this view, and from i. 23, self-evident that we have to explain πληρ. τα πάντα, neither with Koppe (following Anselm and others), de vaticiniorum complemento, nor with Rückert and Matthies, of the completion of the redeeming work; nor yet possibly to limit τα πάντα to the whole Christian community (Beza, Grotius, Morus, Flatt, Schenkel, and others). Comp. rather on i. 23, and observe that in our passage that ἐν δὲ εἰκάσεω ήμῶν ἐστὶν κ.τ.λ. of ver. 7 stands to this ἂν πληρώσῃ τα πάντα in the same relation of the species to the genus, as in i. 23 τα πληρῶμα (Χριστοῦ) does to τού τα πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρομένου. The ubiquity of the body of Christ (Faber Stappulensis, Hunnius, and others; specially contended for by Calovius) is not here, any more than at i. 23 or elsewhere, spoken of; ¹ although, with Philippi, Hoelemann has still found it here, holding the conception of the purely dynamic πληροῦν τα πάντα as unrealizable, because Christ is in a glorified body. If this reason were valid, an absolute bodily omnipresence would result: it proves too much, and leads to a contradictio in adjecto, which could only receive a Docetic solution.

Ver. 11. And he has, etc. From the general πληροῦν τα πάντα, ver. 10, there is now brought into prominence in reference to the church, with a retrospective glance at ver. 7, the special point with which the apostle was here concerned, in order to give the clinching argument to his exhortation as to the keeping of the unity of the Spirit. Christ, who has ascended from the lowest depth to the loftiest height, in order to fill all things, precisely He, has—such is His autonomy in His church—given the different teachers and leaders of the church, until we all shall have attained to the unity of the faith, etc. — We are not to treat as a parenthesis either vv. 8-10 (Griesbach and others) or vv. 9, 10 (Koppe), since the continuation of the discourse with καὶ αὐτός emphatically attaches itself to the preceding αὐτός. — ἔδωκε] is not, any more than at i. 22, equivalent to ἔθετο (Theophylact and many, including Meier, Harless, Baumgarten-Crusius), seeing that, in fact, the giving in the proper sense, to which Paul here looks back, has preceded, and Christ has in reality given the apostles, etc., to the church, namely, through the specific charismatic endowment and, respectively also, by His own immediate calling (ἀποστέλλων) of the persons in question. Calvin rightly remarks on ἔδωκε: "quia nisi excitet, nulli erunt." This raising up and granting of the appropriate persons for the perfecting of the church as His body, not the institution of a spiritual office in itself, which as such has exclusively to administer His means of grace, is here ascribed to Christ. Comp. (in opposition to Münchmeyer) Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 2, p. 283 ff.; Müller in the Deutsche Zeitschr. 1852, No. 21. The appointing to the service of the individual congregations (as ποιμένας καὶ διδάσκαλον.) of such persons given by Christ lay in the choice of the congregations themselves, which choice, conducted by apostles or apostolic men, Acts xiv. 23, took place under the influence of the Holy Spirit, Acts xx. 28. Thus Christ gave the persons, and the community gave to them the service. As regards the time of the ἔδωκε, it is to be observed that this was indeed a potiori the time after the ascension (among the apostles in the narrower sense, also as respects Matthias and Paul), but that, as was obvious for the readers, the earlier appointment of the original apostles was not thereby excluded. The latter, namely, are not alone meant by ἀποστόλοις, but (comp. on 1 Cor. xv. 7) also men like Barnabas and James the Lord's brother must be reckoned among them. — The order in which they are brought up is such, that those not assigned to a single church precede (ἀποστ., προφ., εὐαγγ.), and these are arranged in the order of rank. Hence the ποιμένες, because belonging to particular churches, had to follow, and it is without reason that a Montanistic depreciation of the bishops (Baur) is found here. — τοὺς μὲν ἀποστόλοις] some as apostles. Their characteristics are their immediate calling by Christ, and their destination for all nations. Comp. on 1 Cor. xii. 28. — προφήτας] As to these speakers, who, on the receipt of revelation and through the Holy Spirit, wrought with highly beneficial effect, yet without ecstasy, who likewise in iii. 5 are mentioned after the apostles, see on 1 Cor. xii. 10; Acts xi. 27.— εὐαγγελισταῖς] who περιέρχεται ἐκήρυκτον, Theodoret (see Nösselt, ad Theodoret. p. 424); missionary assistants to the apostles. See on Acts xxii. 8. Oecumenius would, at variance with the context (for Paul is speaking only of the exercise of teaching in the church), and probably also at variance with history (at least as regards our canonical gospels), understand the authors of the Gospels, which is adduced as possible also by Chrysostom. — τοῦ δὲ ποιμένας καὶ διαδάσκ.] denotes not the presbyters and deacons (Theophylact), nor the presbyters and exorcists (Ambrosiaster), nor yet the presbyters and teachers as two separate offices (Beza, Calvin, Zanchius, Grotius, Calixtus, and others, including de Wette), the latter in the sense of 1 Cor. xii. 28; but, as the non-repetition of τοῦ δὲ shows, the presbyters and teachers as the same persons, so that the presbyters are designated by ποιμένας in stated figurative appellation (1 Pet. v. 2; Acts xx. 28; John xxi. 15 ff.) with reference to their function of guiding oversight over doctrine, life, and order in the church, consequently as ἐπίσκοποι (see on Acts xx. 28, and Ch. F. Fritzsche, in Fritzscheor. Opusc. p. 42 ff.); and by διαδασκάλους, with reference to their function of teaching.

1 Observe the importance, for the continued appointment of the ministers in the church, of the conception of the matter implied in ἔδωκε. Christ gives the ministers of the church; the church takes those given, and places them in the service of the church. Thus the church (or whoever has to represent the rights and duties of the church) has not in any way arbitrarily to choose the subjects, but to discern those endowed by Christ as those thereby given to it by Him, to acknowledge and to induct them into the ministry; hence the highest idea of the ecclesiastical scrutiny is, to test whether the persons in question have been given by Christ, without prejudice, we may add, to the other existing requirements of ecclesiastical law.
We may add, that the διδάσκαλοι were not, as such, at the same time presbyters, for the διαχή was imparted by a special χάρισμα, which even ordinary members of the church might possess (1 Cor. xiv. 26); but every presbyter was at the same time διδάσκαλος, and had to be endowed with this χάρισμα; hence Paul here puts together πομένας καὶ διδασκά- λους, and, 1 Tim. iii. 2, it is laid down as the requirement of an ἐπίσκοπος that he should be διδακτικός. — Comp. Ver. 12. Behoof, for which Christ has given, etc. "Non potuit honorificentius verbi ministerium commendare, quam dum hunc illi effectum tribuit," Calvin. — The three clauses are not co-ordinate (Chrysostom, Wolf, Bengel, Semler, Holzhausen, and others). Against the co-ordination may be decisively urged not the varying of the prepositions, for Paul is fond of interchanging them (comp. Rom. iii. 30, v. 10, xv. 2; 2 Cor. iii. 11), but the circumstance that εἰς ἐργον διακονίας in its position between the first and third points would be unsuitable.¹ Rather are εἰς ἐργ. διακ. and εἰς οἰκόδ. τοῦ σῶμ. τοῦ Χρ. two definitions to ἐδωκε, not parallel to τρός τοῦ καταρτ. τῶν ἄγιων, but parallel to each other; so that we have thus, with Lachmann, Harless, Tischendorf, Bleek, to delete the comma after διωτἀ. τρός τοῦ καταρτ. τῶν ἄγιων contains, namely, the aim for which Christ has given those designated in ver. 11 εἰς ἐργον διακονίας, εἰς οἰκοδομὴν τοῦ σῶματος τοῦ Χρ. He has, on behalf of the full furnishing of the saints, given those teachers for the work of the ministry, for the edification of the body of Christ. The objection that the οἰκόδ. τοῦ σῶμ. is a yet higher aim than that of the καταρτ. τῶν ἄγιων (de Wette) is incorrect; since, on the contrary, the καταρτ. τ. ἄγ. is the higher point, which is to be attained by the edification of the body of Christ, and consequently might be conceived of as aimed at therein. Comp. also Hofmann, Schriftbeweis, II. 2, p. 128. Observe, withal, the expression of perfection:

κατάρτ., and the expression of development: οἰκοδομή. Many others, including de Wette, have made the two clauses with eἰς dependent on καταρτισμὸν, so that the sense would be: “for the qualifying of believers that they may in each and every way themselves labour for the advancement and edification of the church,” Meier; comp. Flatt, Schott, Rückert, Schenkel, and others, as already Erasmus. But (a) διακονία, where the context is speaking of those engaged in the service of the church, always denotes the official service (Rom. xi. 13; 2 Cor. iv. 1, vi. 3; comp. Acts vi. 4; 2 Cor. iii. 7 ff., ix. 12, al.), and hence may not here be transmuted into the general notion of rendering service to, furthering (see especially 1 Pet. iv. 10). And if we should in that connection retain the official notion of διακονία (Flatt, Schott; comp. also Zachariae), the training of the ἀγων to be teachers would be the thought resulting; which would be inappropriate, because Paul regarded the Παρούσα as so near, and conceived of the χαρίσματα as continuing till then (see 1 Cor. xiii. 8), and therefore the thought that teachers had to be trained was remote from his mind. (b) But if he had merely meant to say: “to make the individual Christians jointly and severally meet for co-operating to the furtherance of the church” (Rückert), then πάντων would have been to τῶν ἁγίων an essential element, which could not have been left out. Olshausen regards the two clauses introduced by eἰς as a partition of the καταρτισμὸς τῶν ἁγίων: “for the perfecting of the saints, and that, on the one hand, of those furnished with gifts of teaching for the fulfilment of the teacher’s office; on the other hand, as regards the hearers, for the edifying of the church.” Incorrectly, seeing that οἱ ἁγίοι are the objects of the teaching labours mentioned in ver. 11 and consequently cannot include the teachers themselves, and seeing, moreover, that the οἰκοδομή τοῦ σῶμ. τοῦ Χρ. most appropriately describes the working of the teacher, so that no reader could, especially after eἰς ἐργ. διακ., conjecture that eἰς οἰκοδ. κ.τ.λ. was to apply to the hearers, inasmuch as no one could read the “on the one hand” and the “on the other” between the lines. Lastly, in quite an arbitrary and erroneous way, Grotius, Michaelis, Koppe have even assumed a trajectσώμ. τοῦ Χρ., in connection with which there have been very various explanations. — καταρτισμός, not elsewhere found in the N. T. (in Galen used of the adjustment of a dislocated limb), means, like κατάρτισις, 2 Cor. xiii. 9, the putting of a person or thing into its perfect state, so that it is as it should be (ἀρτιος). Vulgate: ad consummationem. Comp. Morus, and see καταρτίζω, Luke vi. 40; 1 Cor. i. 10; 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Heb. xiii. 21; 1 Pet. v. 10. Translations like ad coagmentationem (Beza) and ad instaurationem (Erasmus) would need to be suggested by the context. — ἔργον διακονίας] does not stand for the simple διακονία (Koppe; see, on the other hand, Winer, p. 541 f. [E. T. 768]; Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 117), but means the work of the διακονία, i.e. the labour which is performed in the ministerial office of the church.— εἰς οἰκοδομήν τοῦ σώμ. τοῦ Χρ.] for the upbuilding (= εἰς τὸ οἰκοδομεῖν τὸ σώμ. τοῦ Χρ., comp. 1 Cor. xiv. 12; Eph. iv. 29) of the body of Christ. This is that ἔργον; and so an appositional more precise definition of that which precedes. But on that account to take ἔργον as a building (Schellhorn in Wolf, Holzhausen) is an undue anticipation. The expression οἰκοδομή τοῦ σώματος is a blending of two figures, both of which were, from what precedes, present in the conception of the apostle (i. 23, ii. 20 ff., iii. 6),—the church as the body of Christ and as an edifice. (Grotius), but is that which is to be attained with the καταντ. The article is put with ἐνώτ., because not any kind of unity is meant, but the definite unity, the future realization of which was the task of the teachers' activity, the definite ideal which was to be realized by it. — τοῦ νιόν τοῦ Θεοῦ is the object — accordant with their specific confession¹—not only of the ἐπιγνωσις, but also of the πίστις (see on Rom. iii. 22; Gal. ii. 16). The goal then in question, to which the whole body of believers are to attain, is, that the πίστις in the Son of God and the full knowledge (more than γνῶσις; see Valckenaer in Luc. p. 14 f., and comp. on i. 17) of the Son of God may be in all one and the same; no longer—as before the attainment of this goal—varying in the individuals in proportion to the influences of different teaching (ver. 14). καὶ τῆς ἐπιγν., however, is not to be taken as exegesis of τῆς πίστ. (Calvin, Calovius, and others), which is precluded not by καὶ (see on Gal. vi. 16), but by the circumstance that there is no ground at all for the expository view, and that πίστις and ἐπιγνωσις are different notions, although the two are mutually related, the former as the necessary condition of the latter (Phil. iii. 9, 10; 1 John iv. 16). Peculiar, but erroneous, is the view of Olshausen (whom Bisping has followed), that the unity between faith and knowledge is to be understood, and that the development, of which Paul speaks, consists in faith and knowledge becoming one, i.e. in the faith, with which the Christian life begins, becoming truly raised to knowledge. At variance with the context, since the connection speaks of the unity which is to combine the different individuals (ver. 3 ff.); and also opposed to the whole tenor of the apostle's teaching elsewhere, inasmuch as faith itself after the Parousia is not to cease as such (be merged in knowledge), but is to abide (1 Cor. xiii. 13). — εἰς ἀνθρώπων τέλειον] concrete figurative apposition to what precedes: unto a full-grown man, sc. shall have attained, i.e. shall have at length grown up, become ultimately developed into such an one.¹ The state of the unity of the faith, etc., is thought of as the full maturity of manhood; to which the more imperfect state, wherein the εὐνοία is not yet attained (ver. 14), is opposed as a yet immature age of childhood. Comp. Hom. II. xi. 225: ἐπὶ ὑπὸ ἡλικίας epikvdeos icteto metron, Od. xi. 317: ei hetai metron, xviii. 217.

Hlolia, however, is not statura (Luke xix. 3), as is supposed by Erasmus, Beza, Homberg, Grotius, Calixtus, Erasmus Schmid, Wolf, Bengel, Zachariae, Rückert, and others, which would be suitable only if the anyp telesos always had a definite measure of bodily size; but it is equivalent to aetas (Matt. vi. 27), and that not, as it might in itself imply (Dem. 17. 11; 1352. 11; Xen. Mem. iv. 2. 3), specially aetas virilis (so Morus, Koppe, Storr, Matthies, Holzhausen, Harless, and others), since, on the contrary, the more precise definition of the aetas in itself indefinite is only given by την πληροτ. τ. Χρ., which belongs to it (Winer, p. 172 [E. T. 238]); so that hleia την πληροτ. τ. Χρ. taken together characterizes the adult age of the Christians.—την πληροματος τ. Χρ.] defines the age which is meant, as that to which the fulness of Christ is peculiar, i.e. in which one receives the fulness of Christ. Before the attainment thereof, i.e. before one has attained to this degree of Christian perfection, one has received, indeed, individual and partial charismatic endowment from Christ, but not yet the fulness, the whole largas copias of gifts of grace, which Christ communicates.

πληρομα is here, just as at iii. 19, not the church of Christ (Storr, Koppe, Stolz, Flatt, Baumgarten-Crusius), which in i. 23 is doubtless so characterized, but not so named. This also in opposition to Baur, p. 438, according to whom την πληροτ. τ. Χρ. means: "Christ's being filled, or the contents with which Christ fills Himself, thus the church." All explanations, moreover, which resolve πληρομα into an adjectival notion (πληροθεις) are arbitrary changes of the meaning of the word and of its expressive representation, whether this adjectival notion be connected with hleias or with την Χριστου. Grotius, doubtless, leaves πληρο as a 1 So Luther: "of the perfect age of Christ." Comp. Castalio, Calvin ("plena aetas"), Estius, Michaelis, and others; in which case την Χριστου has by some been taken sensum mystico of the church, by others (see Morus and Rosenmüller) ad quam Chr. nos ducit, or the like, has been inserted.

2 So most expositors, who take hleia as stature. It is explained: stature of the full-grown Christ, as to which Beza says, "Dicitur ... Christus non in sese, sed in nobis adolescere;" Wolf, on the other hand: "Christus ... in eodem proponitur corpori suo mystico, ... ut, quemadmodum ipse qua homo se ostendit sapientia crescentem, prout annis et statura auctus fuit, its fideles substantive; but, at variance with linguistic usage, makes of it the being full, and of τ. Χρ. (so already Oecumenius), the knowledge of Christ ("ad eum staturae modum, qui est plenus Christi, i.e. cognitionis de Christo"). Rückert takes πληρώμα as perfection, and τοῦ Χριστοῦ as genitive of the possessor. The meaning of the word he takes to be: "We are to become just as perfect a man as Christ is." Christ stands before us as the ideal of manly greatness and beauty, the church not yet grown to maturity, but destined to be like Him, as perfect as He is,—which is a figure of spiritual perfection and completion. But πληρώμα nowhere signifies perfection (τελειότης), and nowhere is Christ set forth, even in a merely figurative way, as an ideal of manly greatness and beauty. He stands there as Head of His body (vv. 12, 15, 16). As little, finally, as at iii. 19, does πληρώμα τοῦ Χρ. here signify the full gracious presence of Christ (Harless; comp. Holzhausen). So also Matthies: "the fulness of the Divinity manifest in Christ and through Him also embodied in the church." Where the πληρώμα τοῦ Χρ. is communicated, there the full gracious presence of Christ is in man's heart (Rom. viii. 10; Gal. iii. 20), but τοῦ πλήρη τοῦ Χρ. does not mean this.

Remark 1.—The question whether the goal to be attained, indicated by Paul in ver. 13, is thought of by him as occurring in the temporal life, or only in the αἰών μιᾶς, is answered in the former sense by Chrysostom, Theophylact, Oecumenius, Jerome, Ambrosiaster, Thomas, Luther, Cameron, Estius, Calovius, Michaelis, Morus, and others, including Flatt (who thinks of the last times of the church on earth), Rückert, Meier, de Wette, Schenkel; in the latter sense, by Theodoret (ὥς ὁ τελειότητος ἐν τῷ μῖᾶς ζωῇ οἶκος τοῦ Χριστοῦ), Calvin, Zanchius, Koppe, and others, including Holzhausen; while Harless judges that Paul sets forth the goal as the goal of the life of Christian fellow-

1 In fact, Fathers of the church (Augustine, de Civ. ii. 15; and see also Jerome, Epit. P. 12) and scholastic writers (Anselm, Thomas) have referred our passage to the resurrection of the dead, of whom it is held to be here said, that they would all be raised in full manly age like Christ. Several (already Origen, as is asserted by Jerome, ad Pammach. Ep. 61, and afterwards Scotus) have even inferred that all women (with the exception of Mary) would arise of the male sex!
ship here upon earth, but says nothing on the question as to whether it is to be attained here or in the life to come; as also Olshausen is of opinion that Paul had not even thought of the contrast between here below and there. But vv. 14, 15 show most distinctly that Paul thought of the goal in ver. 13 as setting in even before the Parousia; and to this points also the comparison of iii. 19, where, in substance, the same thing as is said at our passage by ἵπτα μέτρον ἡμείς κ.τ.λ., is expressed by ἵπτα ἀποκάθευθη ἵπτα πάν το πλήρωμα τοῦ θεοῦ. The development of the whole Christian community to the goal here described Paul has thus thought of as near at hand, beyond doubt setting in (ver. 14) after the working of the antichristian principle preceding the Parousia (see on vi. 11; Usteri, Lehrbegr. p. 348 f.), as a consequence of this purifying process, and then the Parousia itself. We have consequently here a pointing to the state of unity of faith and knowledge, which sets in after the last storms (Gal. i. 4), and then is at once followed by the consummation of the kingdom of Christ by the Parousia. With this view 1 Cor. xiii. 11 is not at variance, where the time after is compared with the age of manhood; the same figure is rather employed by Paul to describe different future conditions, according as the course of the discussion demanded. Comp. 1 Cor. xiv. 20, iii. 1. On the other hand, the reason adduced for the reference to an earthly goal (Calovius and Estius), namely, that after the Parousia there is not faith, but sight, is invalid; for see on 1 Cor. xiii. 13.

Remark 2.—μίσχοι κατανάθωσιν κ.τ.λ. is not to be interpreted to the effect, that with the setting in of the unity, etc., the functions thought of in ver. 11 would cease,—which rather will be the case only at the Parousia (1 Cor. xiii. 8–10, iii. 13 ff.),—but the time of the unity, etc., is itself included in the (last) period of the duration of those churchly ministrations, so that only the Parousia is their terminus. The distinction made by Titmenn, Synon. p. 33 f., between ἁγιος and μίσχοι—which in fact receive merely from the connection the determination of the point, whether the “until” is to be taken inclusively or exclusively

1 This ἑσπερινός is consequently not yet the perfect one, which occurs after the Parousia, as it is described 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

* According to Schwegler, l.c. p. 881, our passage betrays the later author, who, taking a retrospective view from the Montanistic standpoint, could conceive the thought of such a division into epochs. As though Paul himself, looking forward from his view, as he expresses it, e.g., 1 Cor. xii. 4 ff., could not also have hoped for a speedy development unto unity of the faith, etc.! The hypothesis of a “certain time-interest” (Baur) was not needed for this purpose.
—is invented. See Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 308 f. The distinction of the two words lies not in the signification, but in the original sensuous mode of conception which was associated with the until: "quum altera particula spatium illud, quoad aliquid pertinere dicetur, metiretur ex altitudine, altera vero ex longitudine," Klotz, ad Devar. p. 225.

Ver. 14. "Iva] cannot, at all events, introduce the design of the attained goal in ver. 13, in opposition to which αιτήσωμεν, ver. 15, clearly testifies; since, in the case of him who has already become the ἀνήρ τέλειος, the αἰτήσωμεν no longer has place. But it is also arbitrary to refer the affirmation of aim to vv. 11, 12 (Koppe, Flatt; comp. Michaelis and Zanchius), as Harless would do (comp. Bleek), who holds ver. 13 and ver. 14 ff. as co-ordinate, so that ver. 13 describes the final goal up to which the arrangement endures, and ver. 14 ff. the design of this same. That ver. 14 stands in a subordinate relation to ver. 13, is shown by the retaining of the same figure, as by Iva itself, which is not preceded by another Iva, or something similar, to which it would be parallel. If Paul had referred Iva to vv. 11, 12, it would have been logically the most natural course to arrange the verses thus: vv. 11, 12, 14, 15, 13, 16. The relation of our sentence expressive of aim to the preceding is rather as follows: while in ver. 13 there was expressed the terminus ad quem, which is appointed to the labour-task, contained in ver. 12, of the teachers given according to ver. 11 by Christ, there is now adduced that which is aimed at in the case with a view to the ultimate attainment of that terminus ad quem, namely, the change, which meanwhile, in accordance with that final aim, is to take place in the—till then still current—condition of the church. This change, divinely aimed at, is characterized ver. 14 in its negative nature (μηκέτι κ.τ.λ.), and ver. 15 in its positive nature (ἀληθέωντες δὲ κ.τ.λ.). — μηκέτι no longer, as this is still at present the case. It points to the influence, which had at that time not yet ceased, of false teachers in the Christian church at large (see ver. 13). Of false teachers in Ephesus itself there is in our Epistle still no trace, although in Acts xx. 29 f. Paul had already expressed their future emergence. — νίπτοι] for, in order to attain to full maturity, one must first emerge out of the state of childhood. What Paul here represents as νηπιότης, namely, the dependence on false teachers, in connection with which the ἐνίτης described in ver. 13 cannot set in, he himself expresses by κυβέσαντες, becoming tossed by σκονές (Isa. lviii. 20) and driven to and fro (as a ship abandoned to the breakers), on which figurative representation of restless passive subjection to influences, comp. Heb. xiii. 9; Jas. i. 6; Jude 12 f.; Josephus, Antt. ix. 11. 3; Aristaen. i. 27; Dio Chrys. Orat. 32.—παντὶ ἀνέμῳ τῆς διδασκαλίας] τῇ τροπῇ δὲ ἐμμένων καὶ ἀνέμων ἐκάλεσε τὰς διαφόρους διδασκαλίας, Theophylact. Comp. Plut. de aud. poet. p. 28 D: μὴ παντὶ λόγῳ πλάγιον, ὁστερ πνεύματι, παραδίδον ἐαυτόν. The use of the article with διδασκαλία denotes the doctrine in abstracto. In the fact that now this, now that, is taught according to varying tendencies, there blows now this, now that, wind of doctrine. That Paul has false teachers before his mind, is evident from the context.—ἐν τῇ κυβείᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων] instrumental: becoming tossed and driven to and fro by every wind of doctrine in virtue of the deceit of men. After διδασκαλία, no comma is to be placed (comp. Lachmann and Tischendorf). κυβέλα, from κύβος (cubus), a die, means properly dice-play (Plato, Phaedr. p. 274 D; Xen. Mem. i. 3. 2; Athen. x. p. 445 A); then in a derived signification fraudulentia (Arrian. Epict. ii. 19, iii. 21, and see Oecumenius). Comp. the German Spiel. In this signification the word has also passed over to the language of the Rabbins קִבּ֣בּ. See Schoettgen, Horae, p. 775; Buxtorf, Lex. Talm. p. 1984. Others have explained it as: levitas, temeritas (Beza, Salmasius, Morus, Flatt, and others),—which notion (like the German auf's Spiel setzen: to put at stake) κυβεῖν really expresses in Plat. Prot. p. 314 A; Meleag. 73 (see Jacobs, ad Anthol. VI. p. 89),—but this is opposed to the context, which represents the false teachers as deceivers.—τῶν ἀνθρώπων] Instead of being under the gracious influence of Christ (ver. 13), and thereby becoming strong and firm (comp. iii. 16 ff.), one is given up to the deceptive play of men!—ἐν πανοργία πρὸς τὴν μεθοδείαν τῆς πλάνης] more precisely defining parallel to the preceding: by means of cunning, which is effectual for the machination of error. On πανουργία, comp. 1 Cor. iii. 19; 2 Cor. iv. 2, xi. 3; Plat. Menex. p. 247 A. μεθοδεία is preserved only here and vi. 11, but from the use of μέθοδος (2 Macc. xiii. 18; Esth. xvi. 13; Plut. Mor. p. 176 A; Artem. iii. 25; Aristaeus i. 17) and μεθοδεύω (2 Sam. xix. 27; Aquila, Ex. xxi. 13; Diod. Sic. vii. 16; Charitei. vii. 6) is not doubtful as to its signification. πλάνη means error, also at Matt. xxvii. 64; Rom. i. 27; 2 Pet. iii. 17, ii. 18; Jas. v. 20. Whether this has been brought about through the fault of lying and immorality (Harless) must be decided by the context, as this must in reality be assumed to be the thought of the apostle in the present case, both from the connection and from the view which Paul had formed on the basis of experience (not, as Rückert pronounces, from a certain dogmatical defiance, which had remained with him as his weak side; comp. on the other hand, on 2 Cor. xi. 12) with regard to the false teachers of his time (2 Cor. ii. 17, xi. 13 f.; Gal. ii. 4, vi. 12; Phil. ii. 21), although it is not involved in the word in itself. To take πλάνη as seduction (Luther, Beza, and others, including Rückert, Matthies, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette) is not to be justified by linguistic usage, since it always (also 2 Thess. ii. 11) means error, delusion, going astray; as with the Greek writers also it never has that active meaning. — πλάνης is genitivus subjecti; the πλάνη, which μεθοδεύει, is personified, in which case, however, it would be quite arbitrary to say, with Bengel: erroris, i.e. Satanae. Compare rather the frequent personifications of ἁμαρτία, δικαιοσύνη (Rom. vi. 16 ff., al.), and the like. The article is not necessary before πρὸς τ. μεθοδ. (in opposition to Rückert), since πανουργ. has no article; hence no reason whatever exists for attaching πρὸς τ. μεθοδ. κ.τ.λ., with Rückert, to the participle ("driven about . . . according to the several arts of seduction"), by which ἐν πανουργ. is singularly isolated. — We may add that, when it is said that the fluctuation between different doctrinal opinions, here presupposed as a matter of fact, is not suitable to the apostolic age (Baur, p. 448), too much is asserted. Paul had experienced enough of this sort of wavering: all his Epistles testify of it.

Ver. 15. Still connected with ἢνα, ver. 14. — δὲ] after the negative protasis: on the other hand, yet doubtless. See
In order that we ... on the other hand, confessing the truth, may grow in love, etc. ἀληθεύειν means nothing else than in Gal. iv. 6, verum dicere, opposite of ἀφεύδεσθαι (comp. Xen.
Anab. i. 7. 18, iv. 4. 15; Mem. i. 15; Plat. Demod. p. 383 C; Phil. Leg. Alloc. II. p. 84 A; de resp. Noe, p. 280 E), which here, as contrast to the περιφέρεσθαι παντὶ ἄνεμῳ τῆς διδασκαλίας, is the confession of the evangelic ἄληθεια. ἐν ἀγάπῃ belongs to αὐξήσο. (comp. already Lucifer: “crescamus in caritate”), the ethical element of which it denotes; for love (to the brethren) is the sphere, apart from which the growth of the mystic body, whose members are held together by love (comp. Chrysostom), does not take place, iii. 18; 1 Cor. xii.
12 ff., comp. xiii. 1. With how great weight is this element here placed at the beginning and ver. 16 at the end; and how definitely is the hint already thereby given to take ἐν ἀγάπῃ together with αὐξήσο., in keeping with its connection in
ver. 16! Others, nevertheless, connect it with ἀληθεύοντες, in doing which some explain, yet not without diversities in specifying the sense,1 veritatem sectantes cum caritate (Valla, Erasmus, Calvin, Bullinger, Calovius, Wolf, Michaelis, Zachariae, Koppe, Stolz, Flatt, Rückert, Bleek, de Wette ? et al.), others: sincere diligentes (Luther, Bucer, Grotius, Loesner, Morus, et al.; comp. also Beza and Matthies). But neither of these interpretrations is to be linguistically justified, since ἀληθεύειν never means to strive after truth, or to hold fast the truth, to possess the truth, or the like, but always to speak the truth (comp. also Prov. xxi. 3; Ecclus. xxxi. 4), to which, likewise, the sense of to verify, to prove as true, found e.g. in Xen. Anab.
vii. 7. 25, Isa. xliv. 26, may be traced back. Against the second of these interpretations (Luther, etc.) there is also in particular the context, seeing that sincere love would be a quite unsuitable contrast to the spiritual immaturity given up to the false teachers, which is described ver. 14. If, however, we should seek to connect ἀληθεύειν in the correct munications studium, ut placide simul proficiant.” Castalio, Bullinger, sense of verum dicere with ἐν ἀγάπῃ (confessing the truth in love), then only the love not towards others in general (this in opposition to Hofmann), but towards those of another confession, could be meant; and this too, would here, where the latter are described as deceptive teachers of error, be at variance with the context. Harless, it is true, rightly connects ἐν ἀγάπῃ with αὐξήσα, but explains ἀληθευόντες: being true in evangelical disposition, and then brings ἐν ἀγάπῃ εἰς αὐτῶν together. Against this may be urged, not indeed the hyperbaton (Bernhardt, p. 460; Kühner, II. p. 627 f.), but the fact that ἀληθ. is not taken in accordance with correct linguistic usage, and that the definition “in evangelical disposition” is imported at variance with the context (since we have here a contrast not to the πανουργία of the false teachers, but to the childish περιφέρεσθαι παντὶ ἀνίμῳ κ.τ.λ.); as also that the corresponding ἐν ἀγάπῃ of ver. 16 shows that ἐν ἀγάπῃ in ver. 15 does not mean love to Christ. Wrongly also Baumgarten-Crusius, although connecting with αὐξ., renders: possessing the truth.— αὐξήσωμεν] dependent on ἰνα, ver. 14, is not to be taken, according to classic usage, transitively (1 Cor. iii. 6 f.; 2 Cor. ix. 10), as Valla, Moldenhauer, and others held, but intransitively (comp. ii. 21, and see Wetstein, I. p. 335), to grow; for, in keeping with the figure ἰνα μηκέτι ὅμεν νήπιον, it represents the progressive development of the Christian life. Comp. ver. 16. Bengel aptly observes: “haec αὐξήσας . . . media est inter infantes et virum.”— εἰς αὐτῶν] in reference to Him. Christ is indeed the Head of the body, the growth of the members of which thus stands in constant relation to Christ, can never take place apart from relation to Him as determining and regulating it, to whom the course of the development must harmoniously correspond. The commentary to εἰς αὐτῶν is furnished by the following ἐξ οὗ πᾶν τὸ σῶμα κ.τ.λ.; the relation of the growth to the head, which is expressed in an ascending direction by εἰς αὐτῶν, is expressed in a descending direction by ἐξ οὗ. The

1 This treating of εἰς αὐτῶν and (ver. 16) ἐξ οὐ as parallel is not “paradoxical” (de Wette), but represents the relation as it is.—Christ the goal and source of the development of life in the church, i.e. to Christ wishes directed the whole aim which determines this development, and from Christ proceeds all endow-sense: into the resemblance of Christ (Zanchius and others), is opposed to the context (since Christ is thought of as head); as also the explanation of Koppe and Holzhausen (comp. de Wette and Bleek): “to grow up in Him,” is inappropriate, since the body as little grows up to the head, or reaches forth to the head (Hofmann), as it grows into the head (in opposition to Matthies: “to grow into Him, i.e. . . . ever more deeply to become absorbed into His infinitely true and holy nature”). Others have taken elis for ev, but this was a mistaken make-shift, whether it was explained with Cornelius a Lapide: “Christi capitis virtute et influxu,” or even with Grotius: “ipsis cognitione.” — τά πάντα] is rightly explained: in all points, in every respect (comp. 1 Cor. ix. 25, x. 33, xi. 2, and see on Acts xx. 35), in which case, however, the article has not generally been attended to (so still Meier and Matthies). Harless refers it to the previously mentioned ἐνώρις in its contrast to the wavering of unsettled knowledge. But since the ἐνώρις of ver. 12 appears as the goal to be attained by the growth, and since, moreover, not several things (a plurality) are thereby denoted, to which the plural τα πάντα might relate, this view cannot appear in keeping with the context. The explanation which most naturally suggests itself is: in all the points of our growth, wherein the emphasis remains upon elis aιντόν. Our growth shall, in all points in which we grow, proceed in relation to Him, who is the Head, etc. Koppe, Wahl, and Holzhausen regard τα πάντα as nominative, explaining it of all the members. But in that case οἱ πάντες must have been written. Comp. ver. 13. — δὴ ἐστὶν ἢ κεφαλὴ Χριστός] significant more precise definition and very emphatic naming of the subject intended by elis aιντόν, although this subject was self-evident. Paul did not write τῶν Χριστόν (as apposition to aιντόν), but in accordance with the usual Greek construction he drew the apposition into the accessory clause. See Stallbaum, ad Plat. Apol. p. 41 A: εἰρήσει τούς ὅς ἀληθῶς δικαιοσύνη, ὁπερ καὶ λέγονται εκεῖ

Ver. 16. Harmony of what is said, ver. 15, for all individuals, with the objective relation of Christ to the whole as the organism growing by way of unity out of Christ. Comp. Col. ii. 19.—From whom the whole body, becoming fully framed together and compacted (becomes compacted and), by means of each sensation of the supply (of Christ), according to an operation proportionate to the measure of each several part, bringeth about the growth of the body, to the edifying of itself in love.—ἐξ ὅθεν is equivalent neither to εἰς ὅν (Koppe), nor to per quem (Morus, Flatt, Holzhausen), but denotes the causal going forth, as Col. i.c.; 1 Cor. viii. 6; 2 Cor. v. 1, xiii. 4; and frequently. See Bernhardy, p. 225.—πᾶν τὸ σῶμα] πᾶν has the emphasis: the whole body, thus no member being excepted; it glances back to οἷς πάντες, ver. 13.—συναρμολογ. κ. συμβιβάζω.] Present participle, expressing what was continuously in actu. As to συναρμολογ., comp. on ii. 21; συμβιβάζω is employed by classical writers of men or of single parts of things, which one brings together into an alliance, to reconciliation, to a unity (Herod. i. 74; Thuc. ii. 29. 5; Plato, Rep. p. 504 A; comp. Col. ii. 2), and might be employed here the more aptly, inasmuch as the single parts of which the collective mass designated by πᾶν τὸ σῶμα consists, are the different Christian individuals. A distinction in the notion of the two words, such as is asserted by Bengel (συναρμολ. denotes the fitting together, and συμβιβάζω the fastening together) and Grotius (the latter denotes a closer union than the former), is arbitrarily assumed. The distinction consists only in this, that συναρμολ. corresponds to the figure, and συμβιβάζω to the thing figuratively represented. With regard to the former, observe that ἄρμονια also, with the Greeks often denotes the harmonious relation of unity between the body and its parts. See Jacobs, Delect. epigr. vii. 39.—
The verb έξο παν το σώμα συναρμ. κ. συμβιβασ. is ην απεξην του σώμ. ποιεται, in which the repetition of του σώματος is neither negligence (Rückert) nor a Hebraism (Grotius), but is introduced for the sake of perspicuity on account of the intervening definitions, as is often the case with classical writers (see Bornemann, Schol. in Luc. p. xxxv.; Krüger, AnaB. p. 27; Ellendt, ad Arrian. Exp. Al. i. 55). — διὰ πάσης ἄφης τῆς ἐπιχορηγη[.] belongs not to συμβιβας (so ordinarily), to which connection the erroneous interpretation of ἄφη as hand (see below) led, but to την ἀπεξην ποιεται (Zanchius, Bengel, and others). It is not the union that is brought about by the ἄφη τῆς ἐπιχορηγη, but the growth, inasmuch as Christ, from whom as Head the union proceeds, bestows the ἐπιχορηγη for the growth. ἄφη is usually explained junctura (Vulgate), commissura, means of connection, joint, and the like. But without any support from linguistic usage. It may signify, as in Lucian, de lectu 9, and often in Plutarch, contact, also holding fast, adhesion, and the like (comp. Augustine, de civ. Dei, xxii. 18: "tactum subministrationis," and see Oecumenius: ἡ ἀπό τοῦ Χριστοῦ κατοικία συναρμ. δύναμις ἐνος ἐκάστου μέλους αὐτοῦ ἀποτελομένη), but it never means vinculum (συμβιβα). Rightly Chrysostom and Theodoret have already explained it by αἰσθησις, feeling, perception. See Plato, Locr. p. 100 D, E; Pol. vii. p. 523 E; and the passages in Wetstein. So also Col. ii. 19. Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 2, p. 132, prefers the signification: contact, and understands the connection of the several parts of the body, whereby the one supplies to the other that which is necessary to growth, which supply in the case of the recipient takes place by means of contact with it. In this way πάσα ἄφη τῆς ἐπιχορηγη would be every contact which serves for supplying, and the ἐπιχορηγη would be the communication of the requisites for growth by one part of the body to the other. But the former Paul would have very indistinctly expressed by the mere

1 In virtue of this signification there was denoted by ἄφη also the fine sand with which the oiled athletes sprinkled each other, in order to be able to take a firm grasp (see Steph. Theaur. s.v.). Thence Bengel derives the interpretation: ansae ad mutum auxilium. An arbitrary abstraction from a conception entirely foreign to the context.
genitive (instead of τῆς ἐπιχορ. he might have written τῆς πρὸς τὴν ἐπιχορηγίαν), and the latter is imported, since the reader after εἴς οὗ could only understand the ἐπιχορηγία proceeding from Christ. If we were to take ἄφη in the sense of contact, the above explanation of Oecumenius would be the simplest (every contact, which the body experiences through the ἐπιχορηγία of Christ); but there may be urged against it, that the expression instead of the mere διὰ πάσης ἐπιχορηγίας would be only diffuse and circumstantial without special reason, while the expression: "sensation of the ἐπιχορηγία," very appropriately points to the growth through the influence of Christ from within outward.—τῆς ἐπιχορηγ. Genit. objecti: every feeling in which the supply is perceived, experienced. What supply is meant by the ἐπιχορηγία with the article becomes certain from the context, namely, that which is afforded by Christ (through the Holy Spirit), i.e. the influence of Christ, by which He supplies to His body the powers of life and development necessary to a growth in keeping with its destiny (ἐπιχορηγεῖ, 2 Cor. ix. 10; Gal. iii. 5, exhibet; the substantive occurs only further at Phil. i. 19, not in Greek writers). Those who understand ἄφη as bond, take τῆς ἐπιχορηγ., partly correctly in this same sense (Rückert, Harless, Olshausen), save that they explain the genitive as a genitive of opposition, partly (so Luther and most expositors, including Matthies, Meier, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette) of the reciprocal service-rendering of the members,—an explanation which, originating in the erroneous interpretation of ἄφη, introduces into the context something heterogeneous. Beza transmutes τῆς ἐπιχορηγ. into an unmeaning participle: "per omnes suppeditätas commissuras." — κατ’ ἐνέργ. ἐν μέτρῳ ἐνὸς ἐκ. μέρ.] belongs neither to τῆς ἐπιχορηγ. (Koppe, Meier, de Wette, and many), in which case, it is true, the non-repetition of the article might be justified on the ground of a blending of ἡ ἐπιχορηγία κατ’ ἐνέργειαν κ.τ.λ. into one conception, but on the other hand may be urged the fact that ἐν μέτρῳ κ.τ.λ., as a specification of measure, points of itself to the growth, not to the ἐπιχορήγησις; nor to συμβιβαζόμενον (Harless), to which even what precedes did not belong, but: after Paul has stated whereby the body grows (διὰ τοῦτο ἄφησι τῆς ἐπιχορήγησις), he now also adds the relation in which it brings about its growth, namely, according to an efficacy in keeping with the measure of each several part, i.e. so that the growing body in its growth follows an activity of development in keeping with the measure peculiar to each several part of the body,—consequently no disproportioned monstrous growth results, but one which is pursuant to proportion, adapted to the varied measure of the several parts (so that, e.g., the hand does not grow disproportionately larger than the foot, etc.). Without figure: From Christ the church accomplishes its progressive development according to an efficacy, which is not equal in all individuals, but appropriate to the degree of development appointed for each several individual. Rückert and Bretschneider take κατὰ ἐνέργειαν adverbia: after a powerful manner. But ἐνέργεια in itself does not denote powerful working, but efficacy, activity in general, so that it would need a more precise definition for the sense supposed (i. 19, iii. 7; Phil. iii. 21; Col. i. 20, ii. 12; 2 Thess. ii. 9, 11). — ἐν μέτρῳ] according to measure, pro mensura; see Bernhardy, p. 211; Winer, p. 345 [E. T. 483]. — μέτρου] is held by Harless to denote the several parts, which again in their turn appear as having the control of the other members (pastors, etc., ver. 11). Against this is ἐντὸς ἑαυτοῦ. It denotes, according to the context, in contradistinction to the whole of the body each part of the body, whether this part may be a whole member or in turn only a portion of a member (comp. Luke xi. 36), and is hence of wider meaning than μέλους. — αὐξησι] in the N. part of the whole body proceeds—outside of which this cannot take place. Comp. ver. 15. On account of ver. 15, the connection with τῷ αἵματι πουείται εἰς οἰκοδ. ἐκτός is more in keeping with the context than the usual one with the mere εἰς οἰκοδ. ἐκτός. — We may add, that the mode of regarding the church in our passage is not "genuinely Gnostic," as Baur pronounces, but genuinely Pauline. Comp. especially 1 Cor. xii. 14–27.

Ver. 17. That οὖν, like the Latin ergo, here resumes ver. 1 (Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 22 f.; Klotz, ad Devar. p. 718), is rightly assumed; since the exhortation begun vv. 1–3 is really interrupted by the digression, vv. 4–16, and the duty now following μικρείτε περιπατέων κ.τ.λ., is but the negative side of the ἄξιος περιπατήσας κ.τ.λ. of ver. 1. Theodoret aptly observes: πάλιν ἀνέλαβε τῆς παρανύσεως τὸ προαίρετον. — τούτο] to be referred forwards: What follows then (now to return to my exhortations) I say and asseverate, etc. — μαρτύρομαι does not signify obsecro, but I testify, i.e. I asseverate, aver. See on Gal. v. 3. Since, however, there lies in this expression and in λέγω the notion of exhortation and precept, there is no need of supplying δείν to the following infinitive. See Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. ii. 21; Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 235 [E. T. 273]; also Heind. ad Plat. Prot. p. 346 B. — ἐν κυρίῳ not per Dominum (Theodoret: ὑπὸ μαρτυρίῳ γὰρ φησι τῷ κυρίῳ ταῦτα λέγω, so already Chrysostom and most expositors, including Koppe, Flatt, Holzhausen), which would be πρὸς κυρίον (comp. on Rom. ix. 1), and with μαρτύρομαι would have to be denoted by τὸν κύριον (I call the Lord to witness, Plat. Phil. p. 12 B; Eur. Phoen. 629; Soph. Oed. Col. 817); but rather, as at Rom. ix. 1, 1 Thess. iv. 1: in the Lord, so that Paul expresses that not in respect of his own individuality does he speak and aver, but that Christ withal is the element, in which his thinking and willing moves,—through which, therefore, the λέγω and μαρτύρω has its distinctively Christian character. — μικρείτε] after that ye, from being Gentiles, have become Christians. — καθὼς καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ ἔθνη κ.τ.λ.] The καὶ has its reference in the former walk of the readers. These are no longer to have such a walk, as was, like their previous walk, that also of the other, i.e. the still unconverted (comp. ii. 3; 1 Thess. iv. 13) Gentiles.—τὰ λαοῖνδα] for the readers, although Christians, belonged nationally to the category of Gentiles. —ἐν ματαιότητι τοῦ νοῦς αὐτῶν] (not αὐτῶν) is the subjective sphere, in which the walk of the other Gentiles takes place, namely, in nothingness (truthlessness) of their thinking and willing (νοῶ), which, however, neither denotes, after the Hebrew יִבְיָא, idol-worship (see, in opposition to this, Fritzschel, ad Rom. i. 21), nor is it to be referred, with Grotius, especially to the philosophers (comp. 1 Cor. iii. 20), but is to be understood of the whole intellectual and moral character (comp. 2 Pet. ii. 18) of heathenism, in which the rational and moral principle (the νοῦς) is theoretically and practically estranged from the truth (ver. 18), and subject to error and the service of sin (ver. 19). We may add, that the ματαιότης is not an inborn one (Zanchius, Calovius, and others; comp. Calvin), but (Rom. vii. 7 ff.) one that has come to pass, although it has come to pass φύσεi (ii. 3). Comp. Rom. i. 21, ii. 15.

Ver. 18 exhibits the ground of the fact, that the Gentiles walk ἐν ματαιότητι τοῦ νοῶς αὐτῶν, which ground is twofold according to the twofold power belonging to the νοῦς, the intelligent and the practical. To the former ἐσκοτωμένοι relates (see the critical remarks), to the latter ἄπνιοι τ. ζωῆς τ. Ἰησοῦ: since they are darkened (comp. Joseph. Antt. ix. 4. 3; the opposite: φωτίζων τὴν διάνοιαν, viii. 5. 3) in respect of their exercise of thinking and willing (διανοια, comp. Luke i. 51; Col. i. 21; 1 Pet. i. 13; 1 John v. 20); estranged from the life of God. —ἐσκοτ. . . . δυνεῖς is to be taken together (Clem. Al. Protrep. ix. p. 69, Potter; Theodoret, Bengel, Knapp, Lachmann, Harless, de Wette), since, if δυνεῖς ἄπνιοιτοπ. are joined (Beza and many, including Rückert, Meier, Matthies, Scholz), the logical and formal parallelism is disturbed, inasmuch as then ἐσκοτ. τῇ διανοιαί would be merely predicate and δυνεῖς ἄπνιοιτοπ. specifying the reason (subordinate to the former), and the emphatic prefixing of the two perfect participles, as brought into prominence by our punctuation, would go for nothing. And that the second clause does not specify the reason, why the darkening has come over the minds of the Gentiles (in opposition to Rückert), is clear from the following διὰ τὴν ἄγνωσθα κ.τ.λ., wherein, conversely, the ignorance is indicated as the cause of the estrangement from God. Rückert, moreover, thinks that, according to our punctuation, ὑπὸς would stand before τῇ διανοίᾳ; but this is groundless, since ἐσκότ. τῇ διανοίᾳ is conceived of together. Comp. Herod. i. 35: οὔ καθάρος χείρας ἐών, Xen. Ages. xi. 10: πραότατος φίλους ἄν. — ἀπηλλατρ.] See on ii. 12, and, concerning the constructio κατὰ σύνεσιν, Buttman, neut. Gram. pp. 114, 242 [E. T. 281]. — τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ] from the life of God, does not admit of any explanation, according to which ζωή would be life-walk, which it never means in the N. T., not even in 2 Pet. i. 3. Hence not: the life pleasing to God (Michaelis, Zachariae, Koppe, Morus, and others; comp. Theodore, Theophylact, Grotius, and Flatt), but, as Luther aptly renders: "the life, which is from God." The genitive is genitive originis (comp. δικαίωσόν Θεοῦ, Rom. i. 17, and see Winer, p. 167 f. [E. T. 233]), and ζωή is the counterpart of ἰδανατος, so that it is to be understood as: "tota vita spiritualis, quae in hoc seculo per fidem et justitiam inchoatur et in futura beatitudine perfectur, quae tota peculiariter vita Dei est, quatenus a Deo per gratiam datur," Estius. Comp. Calvin and Cajetanus. It is at all events the life of Christian regeneration, which is wrought by God in believers through the Spirit (Rom. viii. 2); while the Gentiles are by their heathen nature alien to this divine life. This in opposition to Harless, who understands it as the estrangement from the life and light of the ὄς in the world (John i. 3). Paul in fact is speaking of the Gentiles of that time (not of those who have lived in the time before Christ), in their contrast to the Christians (ver. 17) as persons who were partakers of divine life through the παλιγγενεσία (comp. ii. 5; Rom. vi. 4). Various elements are mixed up by Beza: "vitam illam, qua Deus vivit in suis quamque praecepit et approbat;" and Olshausen: "the life, which God Himself is and has, and which pertains to the creature so long as it remains in fellowship with God." — διὰ τῆς ἀγνωσίας . . .

on account of; the cause of this estrangement of the Gentiles from the divine life is the ignorance which is in them through hardening of heart, consequently due to their own fault. Usually διὰ τὸ πέρα τ. κ. attaches itself to τὴν οὐδεν ἐν αὐτῶι, and is consequently subordinated to the preceding διὰ τ. ἄγνωσιν τ. ὀφθ. ἐν αὐτ. Usually διὰ . . διὰ are regarded as co-ordinate elements; and indeed, according to Harless and Olshausen, who are followed by de Wette, this twofold specification of reason has reference not merely to ἀπηλλατσφ. τ. ζ. τ. Θ., but also to ἐσκοτ. τῇ διανοίᾳ ὁπετε, in which case Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Schenkel (comp. Grotius and Bengel) assume that διὰ τὴν ἄγνωσιν κ.τ.λ. corresponds to ἐσκοτ. κ.τ.λ., and then διὰ τὴν πέρωσιν κ.τ.λ. to ἀπηλλατσφ. τ. ζ. τ. Θ. The ἄγνωσι, however, cannot be the cause, but only the consequence of ἐσκοτ. τῇ διανοίᾳ, since ἄγνωσι (used by Paul only here, but ἄγνωστον occurs frequently) is not dulness of the higher faculty of cognition (Rückert), but nothing else than ignorance (Acts iii. 17, xvii. 30; 1 Pet. i. 14). The Gentiles were not darkened on account of their ignorance, seeing that in fact ignorance is not inaccessibl to the light, as the example of all converted Gentiles shows; but their being estranged from the life of God was occasioned by their ignorance, and, indeed, by their ignorance for which they were to blame on account of hardening of heart. Accordingly, the commas after Θεοῦ and αὐτοῖς are to be deleted. Meier is quite wrong in holding that the ignorant are the Gentiles, and the hardened the Jews. Paul speaks only of the Gentiles. — τὴν ἄγνωσιν ἐν αὐτοῖς] not: quae iis innata est, nor yet said in contrast to external occasions (Harless), which is not at all implied in the context, but: because Paul wished to annex the cause of the ἄγνωσι, he has not put διὰ τὴν ἄγνωσιν αὐτῶν, but, in order to procure the means of annexation, has employed the participial expression paraphrasing the αὐτῶν: τὴν ἄγνωσιν ἐν αὐτοῖς. This expression confirms the view that the second διὰ is subordinate to the first.

Ver. 19. The estrangement of the Gentiles from the divine life, indicated in ver. 18, is now more precisely proved in conformity with experience: οὐτ͂ιν, quippe qui, etc.: being such as, void of feeling, have given themselves over to lasciviousness. — ἀπηλπηκότες] ἀναίσθητοι γενόμενοι, Hesychius. The "verbum significantissimum" (Bengel), from ἄλγειν and ἀπό, is equivalent to dedolere, to cease to feel pain, then to be void of feeling, whether there be meant by it the apathy of intelligence, or the state of despair, or, as here, the moral indolence, in which one has ceased to feel reproaches of conscience, consequently the securitas carnalis; see Wetstein, and also Matthaei, ed. min. in loc. The explanation having despaired (comp. Polyb. ix. 40. 4: ἀπαληγοῦντες ταῖς ἐλπίσι) imports a special definition of the meaning without warrant from the context, but is found already in Syr. Arm. Vulg. It. Ambrosiaster, and from it has arisen the reading ἀπηλπικότες (D E F G have ἀφηλπικ.), which probably already those vss. followed. — εἀντοῦς] with deterrent emphasis. To bring into prominence what was done on the part of their own freedom, was here in accordance with the paraenetic aim. It is otherwise put at Rom. i. 24: παρέδωκεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεός. The two modes of regarding the matter are not contrary to one another, but go side by side (see on Rom. i. 24); and according to the respective aims and connection of the discourse, both have their warrant and their full truth. — τῇ ἁσέλεγείᾳ] personified: It is to be understood of sensual lasciviousness (comp. on Rom. xiii. 13; 2 Cor. xii. 21; Gal. v. 19), as, subsequently, ἀκαθαρσίας of sensual filthiness (comp. Rom. i. 24; 2 Cor. xii. 21; Gal. v. 19), not of ethical wantonness and impurity generally (Harless, Matthies, Meier, and others), since the πλεονεξία connected with it is likewise a special vice, as indeed, on the other hand (Rom. i. 24; comp. ver. 29 and Col. iii. 5), un chastity appears as the first and chief vice of the Gentiles. — εἰς ἑργασίαν ἀκαθαρσίας πάσης] aim of this self-surrender to the ἁσέλεγείᾳ (comp. Rom. vi. 19): for the prosecution of every uncleanness, in order to practise every sort of uncleanness. On ἑργασία, comp. LXX. Ex. xxvi. 1; 2 Chron. xv. 7; Isa. i. 31, al.; Plat. xxiv. 29). But could the trade of prostitution (Dem. 270. 15, Reiske, and thereon Dissen, de Cor. p. 301) be thus generally predicated with truth of the Gentiles? This at the same time tells in opposition to the explanation followed by Grotius, Bengel, Stolz, Koppe, Flatt, and Meier, of the \( \text{\cyrillic epsilon} \text{\cyrillic epsilon} \) that follows as quaestus ex impudicitia (on the thing itself, see Aristaen. i. 14). In fact, \( \text{\cyrillic epsilon} \text{\cyrillic epsilon} \) adds to the vice of sensuality the other chief vice of the heathen, and signifies: with covetousness. The explanations: with unsatiability (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Erasmus, Calvin, Estius, and others, including Matthies), or certatim ("quasi agatur de lucro, ita ut alius alium superare contendat," Beza), or with haughtiness (Holzhausen), or in gluttony (Harless\(^1\)), are all of them at variance with linguistic usage, partly in general, partly of the N. T. in particular, in which \( \text{\cyrillic epsilon} \text{\cyrillic epsilon} \) never means anything else than covetousness. Sensuality and covetousness are the two cardinal vices of the heathen, which are to be avoided by the Christians. See v. 3; 1 Cor. v. 10 f.; Col. iii. 5. Comp. 2 Pet. ii. 2, iii. 14.

Ver. 20. 'Τε αἱ δὲ ἐκ τῆς ἁπάντως ἀσθενείας — οἱ ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων εἰμιθέτες τοῦ Χριστοῦ] but ye have not in such manner (so that this instruction would have directed you to that Gentile conduct of life, ver. 17 ff.) learned Christ. Observe the litotes in οἱ ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων (quite otherwise, comp. Deut. xviii. 14). The proposal of Beza: "Quid si post ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων distinctionem adscribas?" is, although adopted by Gataker and Colomesius, quite mistaken, since ver. 21 contains the confirmation not of the mere fact ἐμαθέτει τῶν Ἰουδαίων, but of the mode in which the readers have learned Christ, hence οἱ ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων must necessarily belong to ἐμαθέτει τῶν Ἰουδαίων. — ὁ Χριστός does not mean the doctrine of Christ or concerning Christ (so most expositors before Rückert; but see Bengel and Flatt), nor does μαθήματι τινά mean to learn to know any one, as it has usually in recent times been explained (by Rückert, Holzhausen, Meier, Matthies, Harless), wherefore Raphael wrongly appeals to Xen. Hellen. ii. 1. 1 (τινα ἄλληλον

Ver. 21. Et iei [tum certe si], as to which, however, there is no doubt (for Paul himself had preached to them Christ, and instructed them in Christ), introduces, as in iii. 2, in a delicate way the confirmation of the on oivostos emathete ton Xriston : assuming, at least, that ye have heard him and have received instruction in him, as it is truth in Jesus, that ye lay aside, etc., that is: if, namely, the preaching, in which ye became aware of Christ, and the instruction, which was imparted to you as Christians, have been in accordance with the fact that true fellowship with Christ consists in your laying aside, etc.— avton hexousate] to be explained after the analogy of the emathete ton Xriston, ver. 20; but avton, like en avtov subsequently, is prefixed with emphasis.— en avto] is neither ab eo (Castalio, Gataker, Flatt), nor de eo (Piscator), nor per eum (Beza), nor “illius nomine, quod ad illum attinet” (Bengel); but it is to be explained from the conception en Xristof eivas: in Him, in the fellowship of Christ, that is, as Christians. Observe the progress of the discourse, which passes over from the first proclamation of the gospel (yv avtov hexousate) to the further instruction which they have thereupon received as already converted to Christ (*en avtov edidaxh.)— two elements, which were previously comprehended in emathete ton Xriston.— kathos] in the manner how, introduces the mode of the having heard and having been instructed, so that this *hexousate kal edidakhete kathos k.t.l. corresponds to the previous ouk oivostos emathete ton Xriston, affirmatively stating what ouk oivostos had indicated negatively.— *estin aleitheia en to Ihsou] Truth it is in Jesus, that ye lay aside, etc., in so far as without this laying aside of your old man there would be no true, but only an apparent fellowship with Jesus.— *en to Ihsou] Paul passes from the official name Xristos to the personal name Ihsous, because he, after having previously recalled the preaching made to the Ephesians and instruction concerning the Messiah, now brings into prominence the moral character of this preaching and instruction, and the moral life of true Christianity is contained in believing fellowship with the historical person of the Messiah, with Jesus (comp. 2 Cor. iv. 10 ff.: for "Christi ideam perfectissime et fulgidissime explevit Jesus," Bengel), whose death has procured for believers their justification, and by virtue of their fellowship with Him the new life (Rom. vi. 2, 3), so that to be \( \epsilon\nu \; \tau\varphi \; \iota\gamma\sigma\omicron\omicron \) with a retention of the old man, would be a contra"dictio in adjecto—would be untruth, and not \( \alpha\lambda\heta\omicron\omicron \; \epsilon\nu \; \tau\varphi \; \iota\gamma\sigma\omicron\omicron \). We may add that this transition, unforced also at i. 15, from \( \chi\rho\iota\omicron\omicron\varsigma \) to \( \iota\gamma\sigma\omicron\omicron \) was not necessary; for, had Paul again written \( \epsilon\nu \; \tau\varphi \; \chi\rho\iota\omicron\omicron\varsigma \), there would therewith, as before, have been presented to the moral consciousness just the historical Christ Jesus. Comp. Gal. v. 24; Col. iii. 10 f. The accusative with the infinitive \( \alpha\rho\omicron\omicron\delta\epsilon\alpha\omicron\vartheta\alpha\iota \) depends on \( \epsilon\sigma\tau\nu \; \alpha\lambda\heta\omicron\omicron \) so that it appears as subject of the sentence (Kühner, II. p. 347 f.). Usually \( \alpha\rho\omicron\omicron\delta\epsilon\alpha\omicron\vartheta\alpha\iota \) is made to depend on \( \epsilon\delta\delta\acute{\iota} \chi\omicron\beta\omicron\theta\eta\), in which case \( \kappa\alpha\beta\omega\varsigma \; \epsilon\sigma\tau\nu \; \alpha\lambda\heta\omicron\omicron \) is very differently explained. Either it is regarded as a parenthesis (Beza, Er. Schmid, Michaelis), as by Ruckert, who takes \( \kappa\alpha\beta\omega\varsigma \) augmentatively, so that the sense is: "If ye are rightly instructed concerning Christ, ye have not so learned Him, for that would be false; with Him (there where Christ is, lives and rules) there is, in fact, only truth (moral, religious truth) to be met with." Or \( \kappa\alpha\beta\omega\varsigma \; \epsilon\sigma\tau\nu \; \kappa.\tau.\lambda. \) is attached to \( \epsilon\delta\delta\acute{\iota} \chi\omicron\beta\omicron\theta\eta\), and then \( \alpha\rho\omicron\omicron\delta\epsilon\alpha\omicron\vartheta\alpha\iota \) is taken as exegesis of \( \kappa\alpha\beta\omega\varsigma \; \epsilon\sigma\tau\nu \; \kappa.\tau.\lambda. \), in which case \( \alpha\lambda\heta\omicron\omicron \) in turn is differently explained. Or the connection is so conceived of, that a \( \sigma\omicron\upsilon\omicron\omicron \) is supplied before \( \alpha\rho\omicron\omicron\delta\epsilon\alpha\omicron\vartheta\alpha\iota \), in which case Jesus appears as model. So also Harless (followed by Olshausen), who, taking \( \alpha\lambda\heta\omicron\omicron \) as moral truth (holiness),

1 Camerarius, Raphael, Wolf: "edocti estia ... quae sit vera disciplina Christi, nimirum ut deponatis." Comp. Piscator: "quenam sit vera ratio vivendi in Jesu tanquam in capite ... nempes deponere." Grotius: "si ita edocti estia evangelium, quomodo illud reversae se habet." so also Calixtus, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Morus, and others.

2 Jerome led the way with this explanation: "quomodo est veritas in Jesu, sic erit et in vobis qui didicistis Christum." Subsequently it was followed by Erasmus, Estius ("sicut in Christo Jesu nulla est ignorantia, nullus error, justifies \( \upmu \alpha \varsigma \) from the comparison of Jesus with the readers ("as truth is in Jesus, so to lay aside on your part"), in which case \( \Upsilon \sigma \omicron \upsilon \), not \( \chi \rho \iota \sigma \tau \omicron \varsigma \), is held to be used, because the man Jesus is set forth as pattern. Matthies likewise makes \( \alpha \pi \nu \theta \varepsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota \) depend on \( \varepsilon \delta \iota \delta \acute{\alpha} \chi \theta \eta \tau \eta \)e, but annexes \( \kappa \alpha \theta \varsigma \varsigma \kappa . \tau . \lambda \) as more precise definition to \( \varepsilon \nu \alpha \upsilon \gamma \phi \) : "in Him, as or in as far as the truth is in Jesus, as He is the truth." So Castalio appears already to have taken it. But all these explanations break down in presence of the \( \upmu \alpha \varsigma \), which, if \( \alpha \pi \nu \theta \varepsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota \) \( \upmu \alpha \varsigma \) belonged to \( \varepsilon \delta \iota \delta \acute{\alpha} \chi \theta \eta \tau \eta \)e, would be quite inappropriate. In particular, it may be further urged (a) in opposition to Rückert, that according to his explanation the parenthesis \( \kappa \alpha \theta \varsigma \varsigma \varepsilon \tau \iota \varepsilon \nu \alpha \upsilon \gamma \phi \alpha \varepsilon \nu \) \( \Upsilon \sigma \omicron \upsilon \) must logically have had its place already after \( \tau \omicron \nu \chi \rho \iota \sigma \tau \omicron \varsigma \); (b) in opposition to Harless, that the alleged comparison of Jesus with the readers is at variance with the order of the words, since Paul must have written: \( \kappa \alpha \theta \varsigma \varsigma \varepsilon \tau \iota \varepsilon \nu \alpha \upsilon \gamma \phi \alpha \nu \alpha \theta \varepsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota \nu \) \( \Upsilon \sigma \omicron \upsilon \) \( \alpha \lambda \iota \theta \varepsilon \varepsilon \iota \alpha \) \( \varepsilon \tau \iota \varepsilon \nu \alpha \upsilon \gamma \phi \); (c) in opposition to Matthies, that \( \kappa \alpha \theta \varsigma \varsigma \kappa . \tau . \lambda \) does not stand beside \( \varepsilon \nu \alpha \upsilon \gamma \phi \), and that \( \alpha \lambda \iota \theta \varepsilon \varepsilon \iota \alpha \) must have had the article. De Wette explains it to this effect: In Jesus there is (as inherent quality, comp. John viii. 44) truth (especially in a practical respect), consequently there is implied in the instructions concerning Him the principle and the necessity of moral change. But even thus we may expect, instead of \( \alpha \pi \nu \theta \varepsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota \), merely the simple \( \alpha \pi \nu \theta \varepsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota \). Others have attached \( \alpha \pi \nu \theta \varepsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota \) \( \upmu \alpha \varsigma \) to ver. 17, as continuation of the \( \mu \kappa \epsilon \tau \iota \) \( \upmu \alpha \varsigma \) \( \pi \epsilon \rho \pi \alpha \pi \tau \alpha \epsilon \iota \nu \kappa . \tau . \lambda \). (Cornelius a Lapide, Bengel, Zachariae; not Wetstein, who at ver. 22 merely says "respicit comma 17"), in which case \( \kappa \alpha \theta \varsigma \varsigma \varepsilon \tau \iota \varepsilon \nu \alpha \upsilon \gamma \phi \varepsilon \nu \) \( \Upsilon \sigma \omicron \upsilon \) \( \alpha \lambda \iota \theta \varepsilon \varepsilon \iota \alpha \) is likewise differently understood.\(^1\)But after the new commencement of the discourse \( \upmu \epsilon \iota \varsigma \) \( \delta \epsilon \nu \chi \omicron \omicron \omicron \omicron \), ver. 21, this is simply arbitrary and forced. Credner takes a peculiar view (Einl. II. p. 398 f.):

including Storr, Flatt ("as He Himself is holy"), Holzhausen, Meier (\( \alpha \lambda \iota \theta \varepsilon \varepsilon \iota \alpha \) is Christian virtue, "that ye, as truth in Jesus is, should lay aside").

\(^1\) Bengel: "ita uti veritas (vera agnition Dei veri) reaspe est in Jesu; qui credunt in Jesum, verant." Zachariae: "For in what Jesus teaches to us is alone to be found the truth by the heathen... despised." Both thus explain it, as if \( \alpha \lambda \iota \theta \varepsilon \varepsilon \iota \alpha \) had the article.
Ye have not thus learned to know the Messiah, provided that ye (as I am warranted in presupposing, for it is only to such that I write) have heard Him and have been instructed in Him, as He as truth (truly, really) is in Jesus." Thus Paul is held to distinguish his readers from such Gentiles as, won over to faith in the near advent of the world's Redeemer, had reckoned themselves as Christians, but without believing in Jesus as that Redeemer. But of such Gentiles there is not found any trace in the N. T. (the disciples of John, Acts xix. 1 ff., are as such to be reckoned among the Jews); besides, there would lack any attachment for the following ἀποθέσαν υμᾶς, and in using ἂληθεία (instead of ἐν ἂλθ. or ἂλθῶν) Paul would have expressed himself as enigmatically as possible. Lastly, Hofmann (Schriften II. 2, p. 291), without reason, wishes to attach εἰς to Καθὼς ἐστιν ἂλθ., but to what follows; the in itself quite general Καθὼς ἐστιν ἂληθεία stood in need of being characterized definitely as Christian, not the ἀποθέσαν κ.τ.λ., as to which it was already implied in the nature of the case and was self-evident.

Ver. 22. Ἀποθέσαν υμᾶς dependent on καθὼς ἐστιν ἂληθεία ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ. See on ver. 21. What is truth in Jesus, Paul states, not in general (to lay aside, etc.), but individualizingly in relation to the readers; that ye lay aside Michaelis and Flatt give the strangely erroneous rendering: to lay aside yourselves! In that case there would be wanting the main matter, the reflexive εαυτοῦς; and how alien to the N. T. such a form of conceiving self-denial! Luther and others are also incorrect in rendering: lay aside. It is not till ver. 25 that the direct summons comes in, and that in the usual form of the imperative, instead of which the infinitive (Winer, p. 282 f. [E. T. 397]), and with the accusative υμᾶς in addition (Matthiae, p. 1267), would be inappropriate. The figurative expression of laying aside is borrowed from the 1 Not: that ye have laid aside, as Hofmann wishes to take it, who explains as if Paul had written: ἀποθέσαν υμᾶς . . . ἐκποιηθήκεν τῷ στιγματ. . . ἐκποιήθηκεν κ.τ.λ. Starting from the aorist infinitive thus taken at variance with linguistic usage (comp. on Rcm. xv. 9; 2 Cor. vi. 1), Hofmann has incorrectly understood the whole passage. According to his interpretation, the perfect infinitive must have been used. The Vulgate already has correctly not deponisse, but deponere.

putting off clothing (comp. ἐνδύωσαςθαί, ver. 24), and in current use, as with Paul (Rom. xiii. 12, 14; Col. iii. 8 ff.; Gal. iii. 27), so also with Greek writers (see Wetstein in loc.); hence there was the less reason for forcing on the context any more special reference, such as to the custom (at any rate, certainly later) of changing clothes at baptism (so Grotius). — κατὰ τὴν προτέραν ἀναστροφὴν is not to be explained, as if the words stood: τὸν παλ. ἄνθρ. τὸν κατὰ τὴν προτέραν ἀναστρ. (Jerome, Oecumenius, Vorstius, Grotius, Raphael, Estius, Semler, Koppe, Rosenmüller, and others), but: that ye lay aside in respect of your former life-walk the old man, so that it expresses, in what respect, in reference to what the laying aside of the old man is spoken of. "Declarat vim verbi relationem habentis deponere," Bengel. The Pauline παλ. ἄνθρ., ideally conceived of, is not injuriously affected, as de Wette thinks, in its internal truth by this recalling of the pre-Christian walk (as if the author had conceived of it empirically). The προτέρα ἀναστρ., in fact, concerns the whole moral nature of man before his conversion, and the ἀποθέσθαι τὸν παλ. ἄνθρ. affirms that the converted man is to retain nothing of his pre-Christian moral personality, but, as concerns the pre-Christian conduct of life, is utterly to do away with the old ethical individuality and to become the new man. Such a contrast, however, as Cornelius a Lapide (comp. Anselm) found: "non quoad naturam et substantiam," would be in itself singular and foreign to the context.—As to ἀναστροφή, see on Gal. i. 13.—τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρ. ] The pre-Christian moral frame 1 is represented as a person. See on Rom. vi. 6.—τὸν φθειρόμενον κ.τ.λ.] an attribute of the old man serving as a motive for that ἀποθέσθαι κ.τ.λ.: which is being destroyed according to the lusts of deception. φθειρόμενον is not to be explained of putrefaction (Michaelis), seeing that ὁ παλαιὸς ἄνθρ. is not equivalent to τὸ σῶμα, nor yet of inward moral corruption (Koppe, Flatt, Holzhausen, Meier, Harless, and older expositors), or self-corruption (Schenkel), seeing that the moral corruption of the old man is obvious of itself and is already present, not merely coming into existence (present participle, which is not to be taken, with Bengel, as imperfect), but of eternal destruction (Gal. vi. 8), in which case the present participle: which goes to ruin (comp. on 1 Cor. i. 18), is to be taken either of the certain future realized as present, or of the destruction in the course of development (so Grotius: "qui tendit ad exitium"). The latter appears more appropriate to the contrast of τὸν κατὰ Θεὸν κτισθέντα, ver. 24. — κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας τῆς ἀπάτης τῆς ἀπάτης is genitive subject, and ἡ ἀπάτη is personified (comp. Hesiod. Theog. 224). Hence: in accordance with the lusts of deception, with which it has had designs on the corruption of the old man. What ἀπάτη is meant, cannot be doubtful according to the context, and according to the doctrine of the apostle as to the principle of sin in man, namely, the power of sin deceiving man (Rom. vii. 11). Comp. Heb. iii. 13, also 2 Cor. xi. 3. The adjectival resolution into cupiditates seducentes (Grotius), followed by many, is in itself arbitrary and not in keeping with the contrast in ver. 24 (τῆς ἀληθελας).

Ver. 23. Positive side of that which is truth in Jesus: that ye, on the other hand, become renewed in the spirit of your reason. — ἀνανεωσθαι] passive, not middle (renew yourselves, Luther), since the middle has an active sense (1 Macc. xii. 1; Thuc. v. 18, 43; Polyb. vii. 3. 1, and often). The renewal is God's work through the Holy Spirit (Rom. viii. 1 f.; Tit. iii. 5), and without it one is no true Christian (Rom. viii. 9; Gal. v. 15), consequently there can be no mention of ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ. Respecting the distinction between ἀνανεώω (only here in the N. T.) and ἀνακαίνω, recentare and renovare, as also respecting ἄνα, which does not refer to the restitution of human nature, as it was before the fall, but denotes the recentare in reference to the previous (corrupt) state, see on Col. iii. 10. — τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν] The genitive is at any rate that of the subject; for instead of simply saying τῷ πνεύματι ὑμῶν, Paul makes use of the more precise designation in the text. But the τῷ πνεύματι may be either instrumental

or dative of reference. In the former case, however, we should, with Oecumenius, Castalio, and others, including Ch. F. Fritzsche in his Nov. Opusc. p. 244 f., and Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 28, have to understand the Holy Spirit, who has His seat in the νοῦς of the man on whom He is bestowed, and through whom (dative) the ἀνακαίνωσις τοῦ νοῦς, Rom. xii. 2, is effected, so that now the old ματαιότης of the νοῦς (iv. 17) no longer occurs, and the καινότης, which, on the other hand, has set in (Rom. vi. 4), is a καινότης τοῦ πνεύματος. Comp. Tit. iii. 5. But, in opposition to this view, we may urge, first, that the Holy Spirit bestowed on man is never in the N. T. designated in such a way that man appears as the subject of the Spirit (thus never: τὸ πνεῦμα ὑμῶν and the like, or as here: τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ νοῦς ὑμῶν); and secondly, that it was the object of the apostle to put forward the aspect of the moral self-activity of the Christian life, and hence he had no occasion expressly to introduce the point, which, moreover, was obvious of itself: through the Holy Spirit. Accordingly, there remains as the right explanation only the usual one (dative of reference), according to which the πνεῦμα is the human spirit, different from the divine (Rom. viii. 16). Consequently: in respect of the spirit of your νοῦς, that is, of the spirit by which your νοῦς is governed. The πνεῦμα, namely, is the higher life-principle in man, the moral power akin to God in him, the seat of moral self-consciousness and of moral self-determination. This πνεῦμα, which forms the moral personality of man, the Ego of his higher ζωή turned towards God, has as the organ of its vital exercise—as the faculty of its moral operation—the νοῦς, that is, the reason in its ethical quality and activity (comp. on Rom. vii. 23), and puts the νοῦς¹ at the service of the divine will (Rom. vii. 25), in an assent to the moral practice of this divine will revealed in the law and a hatred of the contrary (Rom. vii. 14 ff.). But, since this Ego of the higher life, the substratum of the inward man—the πνεῦμα, in which the νοῦς has its support and its determining agent—is under the preponderant strength of the power of sin in the flesh non-free, bound, and weak, so that man under the fleshly-psychical influence of the natural character drawing him to sin becomes liable to the slavery of immoral habit, the πνεῦμα τοῦ νόσα needed renewal unto moral freedom and might, which consecration of power it receives in regeneration by means of the Holy Spirit, in which case, however, even the regenerate has always to contend against the σάρξ still remaining in him, but contends victoriously under the guidance of the divine πνεῦμα (Gal. v. 16-18).

Ver. 24. Observe the change of tenses. The laying aside of the old man is the negative commencement of the change, and hence is represented as a momentary act; the becoming renewed is an enduring process, the finishing act of which is the putting on of the new man, correlative to the ἀποθέσθαι. Hence ἀποθέσθαι, aorist; ἀνανεώσθαι, present; ἐνδύσασθαι, aorist. — τὸν καὶὸν ἄνθρωπον] As previously the old immoral state is objectivized, and objectivized indeed as a person, so is it also here with the new Christian moral state. Thus this new habitus appears as the new man, which God has created (κτίσθέντα), but man appropriates for himself (ἐνδύσασθαι), so that thus moral freedom is not annull ed by God's ethical creative action. — κτίσθέντα] not present, but the new moral habitus of the Christian is set forth as the person created by God, which in the individual cases is not first constituted by growth, but is received, and then exhibits itself experimentally in the case of those who, according to the figurative expression of the passage, have put it on. — κατὰ Θεὸν] Comp. Col. iii. 10; not merely divinely, and that in contrast to human propagation (Hofmann, Schriftbew. I. p. 289), but: according to God, i.e. ad exemplum Dei (Gal. iv. 28). Thereby the creation of the new man is placed upon a parallel with that of our first parents (Gen. i. 27), who were created after God's image (κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος, Col. iii. 10); they, too, until through Adam sin came into existence, were as sinless ἐν δικαίωσύνῃ καὶ ὁσιότητι τῆς ἁληθείας. — ἐν δικαίωσύνῃ κ.τ.λ.] belongs to τὸν κατὰ Θεὸν κτισθέντα, expressing the constitution of the new man created after God; furnished, provided with rectitude and holiness of the truth (on ἐν, see Matthiae, p. 1340). The truth is the opposite of the ἀπάτη, ver. 22, and like this personified. As in the old man the Ἀπάτη pursues its work, so in the new man the Ἀλήθεια, i.e. the Truth κατ' ἐξοχήν, the divine evangelical truth, bears sway, and the moral effects of the truth, righteousness and holiness, appear here, where the truth is personified, as its attributes, which now show themselves in the new man who has been created. The resolving it into an adjective: true, not merely apparent, righteousness and holiness (Chrysostom, Luther, Castalio, Beza, Calvin, Grotius, and most expositors), is arbitrary and tame. And to take ἐν instrumentally (Morus, Flatt) is erroneous, for the reason that righteousness and holiness form the ethical result of the creation of the new man; hence Beza, Koppe, and others thought that ἐν must be taken for εἰς. δικαιοσύνη and ὁσιότης (comp. Luke i. 75; 1 Thess. ii. 10; Tit. i. 8) are distinguished so, that the latter places rectitude in itself (δικαιοσύνη), in relation to God (sanctitas); τὸ μὲν τοῖς θεοῖς προσφιλές δόσιν, Plat. Euth. p. 6 E. See Tittmann, Synon. p. 25, and the passages in Wetstein. With special frequency the two notions are associated in Plato.

Ver. 25. On the ground of what was previously said (διό), as application of ἕστιν ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ Ἱεροῦ ἀποθέσθαι ὕμᾶς κ.τ.λ. on to ver. 24, there now follow various special (not systematically arranged) exhortations as far as ver. 32. — That the encouragement to lay aside lying and to speak the truth stands at the head, appears to be occasioned simply by the last uttered τῷ Ἀλήθειᾳ; and the figurative form of the precept (ἀποθέωμενοι) is an echo from what precedes. It is possible also, however, that the prohibitions of lying, wrath, stealing, as they are here given, had their concrete occasion with which we are not acquainted. The reasons which Zanchius, e.g., has discovered, are arbitrary. And Grotius says incorrectly: "Hoc adversus eos dicit, qui, ut gratias captarent aut Judaeorum aut gentium, alia dicebant, quam sentirent." The subsequent οthren ἐσμέν ἀλήθῃ, μέλη shows, in fact, that Paul has thought merely of the relation of fellowship of Christians one with another, and has meant μετ' tov πλησίου αὐτοῦ of the fellow-Christian, not of the fellow-man generally (Jerome, Estius, Grotius, Michaelis, and others). — λαλείτε . . . αὐτοῦ is a reminiscence from Zech. viii. 16. — ὅτι ἵκεμεν κ.τ.λ.] Motive (reminding them of vv. 12-16). Members one of another, and to lie one to another, how contradictory! Reciprocal membership is, in fact, a connection so intimate and vital, subsisting in constant mutual furtherance and rendering of service! "est enim monstrum, si membra inter se non consentiant, imo si fraudulenter inter se agant," Calvin. Chrysostom shows at great length how the several members of the real body do not deceive one another, and Michaelis repeats it; but Paul says nothing of this. — ἀλλήλα μελῃ] members of each other, mutually the one of the other. The same conception is met with Rom. xii. 5, and is not inaccurate (Rückert), since, indeed, in the body of Christ, even as in the physical body, no member exists for itself, but each belonging to each, in mutual union with the other members, 1 Cor. xii. 15 ff.

Vv. 26, 27. See Zyro in the Stud. u. Krit. 1841, p. 681 ff. — ὁργίζεσθε καὶ μη ἁμαρτάνετε] a precept expressed literally after the LXX. Ps. iv. 5, as to which it must be left undetermined whether Paul understood the original text1 as the LXX. did, or chose this form only in recollection of the LXX., without attending to the original text. To the right understanding of the sense (which Paul would have expressed by ὁργίζομενοι μη ἁμαρτάνετε, or something similar, if that definite form of expression in the LXX. had not presented itself to him) the observation of Bengel guides us: "Saepe vis modi cadit super partem duntaxat sermonis, Jer. x. 24" (comp. also Isa. xii. 1; Matt. xi. 25; and see Buttmann, neut. Gr. p. 249 f. [E. T. 290]). Here, namely, the vis modi lies upon the second imperative (comp. passages like John i. 47, vii. 52): be angry and sin not, i.e. in anger do not fall into transgression; so that Paul forbids the combination of

1 The words of the original, άφθαρτος θάνατος, mean: tremble, and err not (Ewald), with which David calls upon his enemies to tremble on account of their iniquities towards him, the favourite of God, and not further to sin. Comp. also Hupfeld in loc. Yet other recent scholars, including Hitzig, have translated, in harmony with the LXX.: Be angry, but offend not.
the ἀμαρτάνειν with the ὑποικεῖσθαι. Comp. Matthies: "In the being angry let it not come to sin;" Harless: "Be angry in the right way, without your sinning." 1 Paul, therefore, does not forbid the ὑποικεῖσθαι in itself, and could not forbid it, because there is (see Wuttke, Sittenl. II. § 243) a holy anger, 2 which is "calcari virtutis" (Seneca, de ira, iii. 3), as there is also a divine anger; the ὑποικεῖσθαι καὶ ἀμαρτάνειν, however, is not to take place, but, on the contrary, the ὑποικεῖσθαι is to be without sin, consequently an ὑποικεῖσθαι καὶ μὴ ἀμαρτάνειν. As regards the substantial sense, the same result is brought out with the usual explanation, but it is usually believed (and already in the Constitutt. Apost. ii. 53. 2, the passage of the Psalm is so taken) that the imperative may be resolved conditionaliter in accordance with Hebrew usage: if ye are angry, do not sin (Isa. viii. 9 f.; Amos v. 4, 6, al.). So also Koppe, Flatt, Rückert, Holzhausen, Meier, Olshausen, Zyro, Baumgarten-Crusius, Bleek. But the combination of two imperatives connected by and, like: do this, and live, Gen. xlii. 18, comp. Isa. viii. 9, and similar passages,—a combination, moreover, which is not a Hebraism, but a general idiom of language (comp. divide et impera),—is not at all in point here, because it would lead to the in this case absurd analysis: "if ye are angry, ye shall not sin." Winer, p. 279 [E. T. 391 f.], allows the taking of the first imperative in a permissive sense; comp. Krüger, § 54, 4. 2. In this way we should obtain as result: "be angry (I cannot hinder it), but only do not sin." So also de Wette. No doubt a permission of anger, because subsequently καὶ μὴ ἀμαρτ. follows, would not be in conflict with ver. 31, where manifestly all hostile anger is forbidden; but the mere καὶ is only logically correct when both imperatives are thought of in the same sense, not the former as permitting and the latter as enjoining, in which case the combination becomes exceptive ("only, however"), which would be expressed by ἀλλά, πλην,

1 When, however, Harless would assign to our passage a place "not under the head of anger, but under that of placability," he overlooks the fact that in anger one may commit sin otherwise than by implacability; and that the following ἡ πράξεσ τ. π. brings into prominence only a single precept falling under the μὴ ἀμαρτ.

2 That this, however, is not meant in ver. 31, see on that verse.
254 THE EPISTLE TO THE EPSHEIANS.

or μόνον.1 Beza, Piscator, Grotius, and others take ὄργις interrogatively: "irascimini? et ne peccate." Against this we cannot urge—the objection usually taken since the time of Wolf—the καί, which often in rapid emotion strikes in with some summons (Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 148); but we may urge the fact that Paul reproduces a passage of the LXX. (which, it is true, is quite arbitrarily denied by Beza and Koppe) in which ὄργις. is imperative, and that such an abrupt and impassioned question and answer would not be in keeping with the whole calm and sober tone of the discourse.

— μὴ ἀμαρτάνετε] forbids every kind of sinning, to which anger may lead. Zyro, after Neander, would limit it to the hostile relation towards others, which, however, is purely a supplied thought (εἰς τὸν πλησιον, or the like).— ὅ ἡμιος . . . διαβόλωρ] not included as belonging to the words of the Psalm, states in what way the given precept is to be carried out; namely, (1) the irritation must be laid aside on the same day, and (2) no scope may therein be given to the devil. — ὅ ἡμιος μὴ επιδεύτω κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Deut. xxiv. 13, 15; Jer. xv. 9; Philo, de Legg. Spec. II. p. 324. On the citation of these words in Polyc. Phil. 12, see Introd. § 3. The επιδεύτω is to be taken: go down over your irritation. Comp. also Hom. II. ii. 413, and Faesi in loc. (Nägelsbach in loc. takes another view). That the night is here conceived of as the nurse of wrath (Fathers in Suicer, I. p. 1323; Bengel, and others), or that the eventide of prayer is thought of (Baumgarten), is arbitrarily assumed. Jerome and Augustine interpreted it even of Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, and Lombard of the sun of reason! The meaning of these words, to be taken quite literally (comp. the custom of the Pythagoreans: εἶποτε προαχθείειν εἰς λοιδορίας ὑπ' ὄργης, πρὶν ἡ τὸν ἡλιον δύναι τὰς δεξιὰς ἐμβαλλοντες ἀλλήλους καὶ ἀπασάμενοι διελίνοντο, Plut. de am. frat. p. 488 B), is no other than: before evening let your irritation be over, by which the very speedy, undelayed

1 This is no "philological theorizing," but is based on logical necessity. No instance can be adduced in which, of two imperatives coupled by καί, the former is to be taken as concessive and the second as preceptive, in contrast to the former. To refer to Jer. x. 24 as a parallel, as Winer does, is erroneous, for the very reason that in that passage—which, however, in general is very different from ours—σαλίν, not καί, is used.
abandoning of anger is concretely represented. — παρορμησμός is the arousing of wrath, exacerbatio, from which ὀργή, as a lasting mood, is different. Comp. LXX. 1 Kings xv. 30, al. In the Greek writers the word does not occur. We may add that Zanchius and Holzhausen are mistaken in holding the παρά in the word to indicate unrighteous irritation. See, on the other hand, e.g. Rom. x. 19; Ezek. xxxii. 9. It denotes the excitement brought upon us.—μηδέ] nor yet, for the annexation of a new clause falling to be added. See Hartung, Partikell. I. p. 210. The Recepta μητε would so place the two prohibitions side by side, that they ought properly to be connected by neither . . . nor (μητε . . . μητε), but that Paul had not yet thought of this in the first clause, but had written the simple μή, and had only at the second clause changed the conception into such a form as if he had previously written μητε (comp. our: not . . . nor). This usage is met with (in opposition to Elmsley) also in classical writers, although more rarely (see Klotz, ad Devar. p. 709; Bornemann, ad Xen. Anab. iv. 8. 3, p. 303, Lips.; Maetz. ad Antiph. p. 195 f.), but not elsewhere in Paul, and hence is not probable here.—διὸτοις τόπον] i.e. give scope, opportunity for being active. See on Horn, xii 19.—τῷ διάβολῳ to the devil; for he is denoted by διάβολος in all passages of the N. T., where it is not an adjective (1 Tim. iii. 11, 12; 2 Tim. iii. 3; Tit. ii. 3), even in 1 Tim. iii. 6; John vi. 70. Hence Erasmus (not in the Paraphr.), Luther, Erasmus Schmid, Michaelis, Zachariae, Morus, Stolz, Flatt, and others (Koppe is undecided) are in error in holding that διάβολος is here equivalent to calumniator; in which view Erasmus thought of the heathen slandering the Christians, to whom they were to furnish no material; and most expositors thought of the tale-bearers nursing disputes, to whom they were not to lend an ear. In an irritated frame of mind passion easily gains the ascendency over sobriety and watchfulness, and that physical condition is favourable to the devil for his work of seducing into everything that is opposed to God. Comp. 1 Pet. v. 8; 2 Cor. ii. 11; Eph. vi. 11 ff. Harless refers the danger on the part of the devil to the corruption of the church-life (comp. Erasmus, Paraphr.), the fellowship of which, in the absence of placability, is rent by the devil. But this, as not implied in the context, must have been said by an addition (ἐν τῷ ἐκκλησίᾳ, or the like, after τόνον). — The name διάβολος does not occur elsewhere in the undoubtedly genuine Epistles of the apostle; but this, considering the equally general currency of the two names devil and Satan, may be accidental. Comp. also Acts xiii. 10. We may add that the citation of the Clementines (Hom. xix. 2): μη δότε πρόφασιν τῷ ποιητῷ, has nothing to do with our passage (in opposition to Schwegler, l.c. p. 394 f.).

Ver. 28. The stealer is no more to steal. The present participle does not stand pro praeterito (Luther, Erasmus, Grotius, and most of the older expositors, following the Vulgate), but: he who occupies himself with stealing. The right view is already taken by Zanchius; see also Winer, p. 316 [E. T. 444]. As there were in the apostolic church fornicators (1 Cor. v. 1), so were there also stealers, and the attempts to tone down the notion are just as arbitrary as they are superfluous. The question why Paul does not mention restitution (Luke xix. 8; Ex. xxii.; Lev. vi.; Isa. lvii. 6; Ezek. xxxiii. 15; Plato, Legg. ix. p. 864 D f.) is not, with Estius, to be answered to the effect, that it is contained in μηκέτι κληρικίῳ; but to the effect, that Paul's design was not to give any complete instruction on the point of stealing, but only to inculcate the prohibition of the same and the obligation of the opposite (which, moreover, has restitution for its self-evident moral presupposition). The whole exhortation in this form has, indeed, been regarded as inappropriate, because not in keeping with the apostolic strictness (see de Wette), but we have to observe, on the other hand, that Paul elsewhere too contents himself with simple prohibitions and commands (see e.g. Rom. xiii. 13 f.), and that the apostolic strictness follows in the sequel (v. 5). — μᾶλλον δὲ] rather on the other hand, imo vero, enhancing in a corrective sense the merely negative μηκέτι κλεπτ. See on Gal. iv. 9: — κοπιάτω κ.τ.λ.] let him labour, in that he works with his hands that which is good; in that, by the activity of his hands (instead of his thievish practices), he brings about that which belongs to the category of the morally good. Bengel well says: "τὸ ἀγαθὸν antitheton ad furtum prius manu piceata male commissum." — ἵνα ἔχει τ. κ.τ.λ.] The view of Schoettgen, that this applies to the Jewish opinion of the allowableness of theft serving for the support of the poor (Jalk. Rubeni, f. 110, 4; Vajikira rabba, f. 147, 1), is indeed repeated by Koppe (comp. Stolz) and Holzhausen, but is—considering the general nature of the ὁ κλέπττ. μηκέτι κλέπττ., addressed, moreover, to readers mostly Gentile-Christian—not expressed in the words, which rather quite simply oppose to the forbidden taking the giving according to duty. — τῷ κρείαν ἔχοντι] to the one having need, namely, that there may be imparted to him. Ver. 29. After the three definite exhortations, vv. 25, 26, 28, now follow more general and comprehensive ones. — Ἡδὸς λόγος . . . μὴ ἔκπορον.] The negation is not to be separated from the verb. With regard to every evil discourse, it is enjoined that it shall not go forth, etc. See Fritzschhe, Diss. See, in general, Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 377 f.; Kypke, II. p. 297 f. — ἀλλ' εἰ τὶς ἀγαθὸς πρὸς οἰκ. τ. χρ.] but if there is any (discourse) good for the edification of the need, sc., let it proceed from your mouth. On ἀγαθὸς with εἰς, πρὸς (Plat. Rep. vii. p. 522 A, and Stallbaum in loc.), or infinitive, denoting aptitude or serviceableness for anything, see Kypke, II. p. 298. — πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν τῆς χρείας does not stand by hypallage for εἰς χρείαν τῆς οἰκοδομῆς (Besa), but τῆς χρείας is genitive object: it is the need just present, upon which the edifying (Christianly helpful) influence of the discourse is to act. Rückert and Olshausen take ἡ χρεία for οἱ χρείαις ἔχοντες. Arbitrarily and to the disturbance of the sense, since in fact every one has need of edification, consequently τὰς χρείας would convey nothing at all characteristic, no modal definition of ἀγαθός πρὸς οἰκοδομ. — ινα δὲ ἔρων τοῖς ἀκούουσιν] aim of the the hearers, may bring blessing for them. Opposite of such Koppe, Rosenmüller, and others, including Rückert, Meier, Matthies, Baumgarten-Crusius: in order that it may afford pleasure, be agreeable, to the hearers. Comp. also Chrysostom, who compares the discourse to a fragrant ointment. But, apart from the fact that discourses, which are good πρὸς οἰκοδομήν τὰς χρείας, cannot always be agreeable (1 Cor. vii. 8 ff.), this interpretation is opposed to linguistic usage, according to which ἔρων διδωμι always signifies gratificari, to confer a kindness, to show a service of love, or the like (Jas. iv. 6; 1 Pet. v. 5; Ex. iii. 21; Ps. lxxxiv. 12 [11]; Tob. i. 13; Soph. Aj. 1333; Plat. Legg. iii. p. 702 C; also in the passages adduced by Wetstein and Kypke).

1 In connection with which the appeal to the permission of stealing among various heathen nations, as among the Egyptians and Lacedaemonians (see Wolf, Chr.; Muller, Dorier, II. p. 810 f.), is entirely unsuitable in an apostolic epistle with its high moral earnestness. Against such a prejudice Paul would have written otherwise.

2 See, e.g., Jerome: "furtum nominans omne, quod alterius damno queritur." He approves, moreover, the interpreting it of the furtum spirituale of the false prophets. Estius: "generaliter positum videtur pro fraudare, subtrahere, etc." Comp. Calvin and many, as also still Holzhausen.

3 "Nam qui non restituit cum possit, adhuc in furo... perseverat." This is in itself true, but no reader could light upon such a pregnant meaning of the μὴ πληρώνω.

Meyer—Eph.

Ver. 30. Connected by καλ with what precedes; hence not, with Lachmann and Tischendorf, to be separated by a full stop from ver. 29, by which there would result an exhortation too indefinite in the connection.—And grieve not (which would take place by means of λόγοι σαπροί) the Holy Spirit of God. Evil discourses are so opposed to the holy nature and aim of the Divine Spirit, who dwells in the Christians, that He cannot fail to be grieved thereat. Comp. Hermas,

An anthropopathic conception of the consciousness, with which the Spirit of God is holily affected, of the incongruity of human action with His holiness; but how truly and touchingly in keeping with the idea of the love of God, which bears sway in His Spirit (Rom. v. 5)! The man becomes conscious of this grieving of the divine πνεῦμα, when he, who has become through the atonement and sanctification the dwelling-place of the Spirit, no longer receives from this Spirit the testimony that he is the child of God (Rom. viii. 16). The chosen expression, "the Holy Spirit of God," renders the enormity of such action most palpable. An allusion, we may add, to Isa. lxiii. 10 is not to be assumed, since in that passage the Παροενειον of the Spirit is characteristic. — έν ός ἔσφαγος. εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολύτρω.] furnishes motive for the exhortation: for if ye have received so great a benefit through the Holy Spirit, how wrong (ungrateful) is it when you grieve Him! Harless, following older expositors, finds the possibility of losing the seal here hinted at. But to this μη would point to it. — ἔσφαγος.] quite as at i. 13. — εἰς ἡμέρ.

Ver. 2. ἡμᾶς ... ἡμῶν] Tisch.: ὑμᾶς ... ὑμῶν. But the witnesses for this are of unequal value and not strong enough, specially as the pronoun of the second person naturally presented itself from the context. — Ver. 4. καὶ αἴσχρ. καὶ] A D E* F G, min. Sahid. Vulg. It. and Fathers of some importance: ἦ αἰσχρ. ἦ. Approved by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. and Rück, and rightly so; the Recepta appears to be an old alteration in accordance with ver. 3, where also it is only at the third vice that ἦ comes in. κ* has καὶ αἴσχρ. ἦ, as also Syr. p. — τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα] A B κ, 31, 67, 73, Clem. Antioch. Ephr. Cyr.: οὐκ ἀνήκεν. So Lachm. and Rück. commended also by Griesb. An interpretation, probably occasioned by the fact that the following ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εἴκαρ. was regarded as the contrast to τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα. — Ver. 5. ἦσιν] Elz.: ἦσι, in opposition to far preponderant evidence. Defended, it is true, by Matth. ("pluribus Graecis in mentem venire poterat ἦσιν"), but evidently a mechanical miswriting or alteration; rejected also by Reiche. — ὃς ἦσιν εἴδωλολάτρης Lachm., following only B κ, 67 lect. 40, Cyr. Jer., has ὃ ἦσιν εἴδωλο- λάτρης, which Mill and Griesb. recommended. F G, Vulg. It. Goth. Victorinus, Cyprian, Ambrosiaster have ὃ ἦσιν εἴδωλο- λάτρης. By the latter the original ὃς ἦσιν εἴδωλολάτρης, which seemed to require an explanation, that it might not be misunderstood, was explained, and subsequently εἴδωλολάτρης was restored, whereby the reading of Lachm. arose. — Ver. 9. φησὶν] Elz. Matth.: φησίματος, in opposition to decisive witnesses. Gloss from Gal. v. 25. — Ver. 17. οὐνίντης] A B κ, min. Chrys. ms. Damasc. Jer.: οὐνίστη. So Lachm. and Rück. Harless, however, has οὐνινίτης, after D* F G. The latter, though doubtless to be accented οὐνινίτης (see on Rom. iii. 11), is as the less common form to be preferred; the imperative is a gloss from the context, supported by no version. — Ver. 19. συμματικαῖς] is wanting only in B, Clar. Germ. Ambrosiast., and is bracketed by Lachm. It might have been introduced from Col. iii. 16; but the evidence for its omission is too weak, and the omission might easily be occasioned by the homoeoteleuton. — ἵ παρδίᾳ] Lachm. and Rück.: ἵ ταῖς καρδίαις, after important witnesses (not B). But the plural would in itself very naturally occur to the copyists, and still more from the comparison of Col. iii. 16. — Ver. 21.

Elz.: Θεωτ, in opposition to decisive witnesses, among which D E F G, codd. of It. add ινσού, some before, some after the χρ. Mill already rightly judges that φίδος Θεωτ was the more current conception, whereby Θεωτ (K: χριστίων) was brought in; φίδος Χριστίων does not occur elsewhere. — Ver. 22. After άνδρας, Elz. Scholz have ἰστοκατάσεις, and Lachm. ἰστοκατάσειςδοτοι. The latter in accordance with A N, min. Copt. Vulg. Goth. Clem. (once) Basil, Damasc. Ambrosiast. Pelag. D E F G, lect. 19, It. Syr. have the Recepta, but before ρεῖς ιδίως. These diversities only confirm the probability that the verb was originally wanting, as also B, codd. Gr. in Jer. Clem. (once) have no verb. The verb, deleted by Tisch. and rejected by Reiche, is an expedient to help the construction. — Ver. 23. άνήρ (Elz.: ή άνήρ) and αὐτός (Elz.: καὶ αὐτός istringstream) rest on decisive critical evidence; although Reiche again defends the Recepta, which is a smoothing of the text. — Ver. 24. ιδίως] is, following B D* E* F G Ν, min. codd. It., with Lachm. Tisch., to be deleted as an addition from ver. 22. — Ver. 25. ιαυρών] is wanting in A B Ν, min. Clem. Orig. Cyr., Chrys. Deleted by Lachm. Tisch. and Rück. But if anything were added to γυναῖκας, it would be most natural to add ιδίως from ver. 22. The ύμων read in F G (Vulg. It. etc.: vestrAs) is an explanation of ιαυρών, and tells in favour of this, the dropping out of which is to be explained from its superfluousness. — Ver. 27. αὐτός] Elz.: αὐτής, in opposition to far preponderating testimony; altered from a failure to understand the emphatic αὐτός. — Ver. 28. Lachm. has rightly adopted, on decisive authority, οὖν καὶ οἱ άνδρες ὁμολογοῦν. B has the order οὖν ὁμολογεῖ καὶ οἱ άνδρες. — Ver. 29. Instead of Χριστός, Elz. has χίρος, in opposition to decisive evidence. — Ver. 30. έκ τῆς σακχάς αὐτοῦ καὶ έκ τῶν ἄνω αὐτοῦ] is wanting in A B Ν, 17, 67* al., Copt. Aeth. Method. and perhaps Ambrosiast. Deleted by Lachm., suspected also by Mill and Griesb., defended by Reiche. The omission has arisen either from mere accident, by passing in the process of copying from the first αὐτοῦ immediately to the third, or more probably through design, from want of perceiving the suitableness of the words in the context, and judging their meaning inappropriate. If they had been added from the LXX. Gen. ii. 23, we should have found written έκ τῶν δούλων αὐτοῦ καὶ έκ τῆς σακχάς αὐτοῦ. — Ver. 31. τῶν πατ. αὐτοῦ και τ. μητρ.] Lachm. and Tisch. on preponderant testimony have merely πατέρα καὶ μητέρα. Rightly; the Recepta is from the LXX. — τῆς τῶν γυν.] Lachm. and Rück.: τῆς γυναικί, in accordance doubtless with many and considerable witnesses (not B), but an alteration in conformity with the LXX. (according to A, Ald.) and Matt. xix. 5.
CHAP. V. 1, 2. 263

CONTENTS.—Exhortation to the imitation of God, to love, as Christ through His sacrificial death has loved us (vv. 1, 2). Warning against unchastity, avarice, and other vices, inasmuch as they exclude from the Messianic kingdom (vv. 3—5). The readers are not to let themselves be deceived by empty words, and not to hold fellowship with the vicious; for, as those who from being dark have become Christianly enlightened, they are under obligation to walk accordingly, and to have no fellowship with the works of darkness, but rather to rebuke them, which is a course as necessary as it is salutary (vv. 6-14). They are therefore to be careful in their walk as wise (vv. 15—17), and not to become drunken, but to become full of the Holy Spirit, which fulness must express itself by alternate utterance in psalms and hymns, by singing praise in the silence of the heart, and by continual Christian thanksgiving towards God (vv. 18-20). Subject the one to the other in the fear of Christ, the wives are to render to their husbands true Christian subjection (vv. 21—24), and the men to their wives true Christian love (vv. 25—33), in connection with which, however, the wife owes reverence to the husband (ver. 33).

Vv. 1, 2. If Paul has just said καθώς καὶ ὁ Θεός ἐκατάστησεν ἡμᾶς, he now, on the ground of these words (οὐ), sums up under one head the duty of love expressed in detail, iv. 32, and that as imitation of God by a loving walk, such as stands in appropriate relation to the love shown to us by Christ, which serves as pattern for our conduct. With this is expressed the specific character and degree of the love required as an imitation of God (John xiii. 34, xv. 13). Accordingly, ver. 1 corresponds to the καθώς καὶ ὁ Θεός ἐν Ἰν. ἐκατάστησεν as a whole, and ver. 2 to the ἐν Χριστῷ in particular; γίνεσθε οὖν at the same time corresponds emphatically to the γίνεσθε δέ of iv. 32, introducing in another form—flowing from the last words of ver. 32—the same thing as was introduced by γίνεσθε δέ.—ὡς τέκνα ἄγαπη; in accordance with your relation to God as His beloved children. ἀγαπητά denotes neither amabiles (Zanchius), nor good, excellent children, nor is it to be said with Vater: "ut solent liberi, qui tunc diliguntur;" but, what a love has God shown to us by the νίκθεσια (1 John iii. 1; Rom. v. 8, 5, al.)! Now, to be God's beloved child, and not to become like the loving Father, how contradictory were this! See Rom. vi. 1 ff.; 1 John iv. 7 ff.; Matt. v. 45. Yet the expression "imitators of God" is found with Paul only here.— καὶ annexes wherein this imitation of God must consist, namely, therein, that love is the element in which their life-walk takes place—love, such as also Christ has displayed towards us.— καὶ παρείδωκεν κ.τ.λ.] Practical proof of the ἡγάπησεν. Comp. ver. 25; Rom. v. 8 f.; Gal. ii. 20. Paul might have written παρεστησεν, but wrote παρείδωκεν, because he thought of the matter as a self-surrender. The notion of sacrifice does not lie in the verb, but in the attributes (in opposition to Hofmann's objection). We may add that with παρείδωκεν we have not to supply εἰς θάνατον (Grotilus, Harless, and others), but τῷ Θεῷ (which Bengel, Hofmann, and others with less simplicity attach to προσφ. κ. θυσίαν) belongs to it, to the connecting of which with εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας (Luther, Koppe, Meier, Harless) the order of the words is opposed (comp. Ex. xxix. 18; Lev. i. 9, 13, 17, xxiii. 13, 18; Gen. viii. 21), since the emphatic prefixing of τῷ Θεῷ, if it belonged to εἰς ὀσμ. εὐωδ., would be quite without reason, inasmuch as there is not any kind of contrast (for instance, to human satisfaction) in the case.— ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν] for our behalf, in order to reconcile us to God. The idea of substitution is not expressed in the preposition,¹ but lies in the conception of a sacrifice, under which the N. T. represents the death of Christ,² and that, indeed, as expiatory sacrifice. See on Rom. v. 6; Gal. iii. 13.— προσφοράν κ. θυσίαν] as an offering and a sacrifice. The latter (ἡμῖν) is a more precise definition of the former; for προσφορά is everything in general which is brought as an offering, whether it be bloody or unbloody ( yynp). Comp. Ecclus. xiv. 11. Of the sacrifice of Christ, also Heb. x. 10, 14. Harless explains the joining of the two substantives to the effect that Christ, as He was a sacrifice for others (θυσίαν), also presented himself as an offering (προσφοράν). But, apart from the fact that thus Paul must logically have written ὑπολαβὼν κ. προσφοράν (as in Ps. xl. 7; Heb. x. 5), both words, in fact, state in what character Christ presented Himself to God, both express the objective relation, while the subjective relation of Christ is conveyed in παρέδωκεν ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν. Comp. 1 Pet. i. 18. — εἰς ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας] so that it became for Him an odour of fragrance, figurative designation of its acceptableness to God (Phil. iv. 18), after the Hebrew ניחבע (Lev. i. 9, 13, 17, ii. 12, iii. 5), which was the original real, anthropopathic basis of the idea of the acceptableness of a sacrifice to God. See Gen. viii. 21; Ewald, Alterth. p. 31. The underlying notion of the burning of that which was offered did not of course come into account in the case of the ἀὐτοῦ of Jesus, but the thought of the expression is in the sacrificial designation of the atoning deed independent of its origin. Comp. on the expression itself the Homeric κυλίσσεις ἕδωκεν ἄυτοι, Od. xii. 369. — The question whether Christ is here in reality presented as an expiatory sacrifice, or merely as one who in His self-surrender well-pleasing to God has left us a pattern (so Usteri, Lehrbegr. p. 113; Rückert), has been raised by the Socinians (see Catech. Racov. 484, ed. Oeder, p. 1006), who denied the former (see also Calovius, Bibl. ill. p. 716 f.), is decided not merely by ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, but by the view prevailing throughout the N. T., and specially with Paul, of the death of Jesus as the ἱλαστήριον, Rom. iii. 25 (comp. also Matt. xx. 28, xxvi. 28; 1 Pet. i. 18; 1 Tim. ii. 6), which also is contained here in ἔλαφι (comp. Lechler, apost. und nachapost. Zeitalter, p. 77; Ebrard, Lehre von der stellvertret. Genugth. p. 68 ff.; Philippi, Dogm. IV. 2, p. 294 ff.). Certainly the main point in the connection of our passage is the love displayed by Christ, but the practical proof of this love is represented as that which it just really was, namely, as expiatory sacrifice; in opposition to which the addition εἰς ὁσμ. εὐωδ., which in the O. T., save in Lev. iv. 31 (see, with regard to this passage, Oehler in Herzog’s Enzykl. X. p. 648), is not used of expiatory sacrifices, is not to be urged, inasmuch as—even apart from Lev. i.c.—Christ offered up Himself, consequently His expiatory sacrifice was at the same time a voluntary offering.

1 Without that which is symbolized in ὑπὸ σώματι, the sacrifice of Christ would not have been propitiatory.
Ver. 3. Δε [leading over to another portion of the exhortation.— ἀκαθαρσία and πλεονεξία, quite as at iv. 19, the two main vices of heathendom. The latter thus is here neither insatiability in lust, as Heinsius (controverted by Salmasius, de foen. Trap. p. 121 ff.), Estius, Locke, Baumgarten, Michaelis, Zachariae, and others would take it, nor "imprimis de prostibulis, quae sunt vulgato corpore, ut quaeustum lucentur," Koppe, Stolz, but: avarice. — ἦ] is not equivalent to καὶ (Salmasius, Schleusner), nor yet explicative (Heinsius), but disjunctive, separating another vice from the correlative πορνεία καὶ πάσα ἀκαθαρσία (comp. Fritzsche, ad Marc. p. 275 f.); neither fornication and every kind of uncleanness, nor avarice, nor shamelessness (ver. 4), etc.— μηδὲ ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν] not once be named, etc.; ἵκανος τὸ μυσαρόν τῶν εἰρημένων ἵππεις, καὶ αὐτὰς αὐτῶν προσηγορίας τῆς μυήμης ἐξορίσαι κελεύσας, Theodoret. Dem. 1259, 17: ἐ καὶ ὀνομάζειν ὀνόμασιν ἄν. — καθὼς πρέπει ἄγλως] namely, that these vices should not once be mentioned among them. So αἰσχρὰ ὀνόματα (Plat. Rep. p. 344 B, and Stallbaum in loc.) are they!

Ver. 4. Αἰσχρότης] abomination, disgraceful conduct, Plat. Gorg. p. 525 A. Most expositors, including Rückert, Meier, Holzhausen, Olshausen (not Matthies and Harless), limit it to disgraceful utterances, but without warrant of linguistic usage (this would be αἰσχρολογία, see Col. iii. 8; Xen. de rep. Lac. v. 6; Aristot. de rep. vii. 17; Polyb. viii. 13. 8, xii. 13. 3); or in the context, in which it is only the following elements that contain the unchristianspeaking.— μωρολογία] is the carrying on of insipid, foolish talk. Antig. de Mirab. 126: μωρολογίας καὶ ἀδολεσχίας, Arist. H. A. p. 11; Plut. Mor. 504 A.— εὐτραπελία] signifies properly ready versatility (from τρέπο and εὖ), urbanity; then specially a witty, jesting manner; and in a bad sense, as here, the witticism of frivolity, scurrilitas. See in general, Wetstein ad loc.; Dissen, ad Pind. p. 180; Krüger on Thuc. ii. 41. 1. — τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα] as that which is unseemly. Comp. Winer, pp. 221, 338 f. [E. T. 610]. It refers only to μωρολογία and εὐτραπελία, since for αἰσχρότης such a characteristic description would be entirely superfluous, and ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εὐχαριστία points back merely to those peccata oris. — ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εὐχαριστία] From the preceding μηδὲ ὄνομαξέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν we have here to supply ἔστω or ἡμέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν, which is contained therein, in accordance with a well-known brachylogy, Kühner, II. p. 604. εὐχαριστία is, according to standing usage (comp. also Loesner, Obs. p. 345 f.), not gracefulness of speech, as Jerome, Calvin,\textsuperscript{1} Salmasius; Cajetanus, Hammond, Semler, Michaelis, Wahl, Meier, and others would take it, which would be εὐχαρις, but giving of thanks, in which case there results a contrast far more in keeping with the Christian character and the profoundly vivid piety of the apostle (comp. Col. ii. 7, iii. 15, 17; 1 Thess. v. 18). Gratitude towards God (for the salvation in Christ), expressing itself in their discourse, is to supersede among Christians the two faults before mentioned, and to sanctify their oral intercourse. "Linguae abusui opponitur sanctus et tamen laetus usus," Bengel. Morus erroneously refers it to thanksgiving towards others; "the language of courtesy."

Ver. 5. Paul returns to the vices mentioned ver. 3, and assigns the reason for their prohibition. — ἵστε γνώσκοντες] indicative; Paul appeals to the consciousness of the readers, which, considering their familiarity with the principle laid down, was at all events more natural to him, and more in keeping with the destination as a motive (γὰρ), than the imperative sense (Vulgate, Valla, Castalio, Vatablus, Erasmus Schmid, Estius, Grotius, Wolf, Bengel, Koppe, Rückert, Matthies, Olshausen, Bleek, and others). The participle, however, is not here to be explained from the well-known Hebrew and Greek mode of connecting the finite verb with its participle (Winer, p. 317 f. [E. T. 446]), inasmuch as γνώσκε is another verb; but it denotes the way and manner of the knowing.\textsuperscript{2} — πᾶς . . . οὐκ ἔχεις] See on iv. 29, and Winer, p. 155 [E. T. 209].

Τὰῦτα thus applies to the following ἦτα, not to ver. 3 f., as Winer maintains. See Kühner, II. § 631. 2.
— ὃς ἐστιν εἰδωλολατρὴς] applies to the covetous man, whom Paul declares in a metaphorical sense to be an idolater, inasmuch as such an one has made money and property his god, and has fallen away from the service of the true God (comp. Matt. vi. 24). Comp. Doubtless πορνεία and ἀκαθάρσια are also subtle idolatry; but only with regard to avarice does Paul, here and at Col. iii. 5, bring it into special relief, in order with thoroughly deterrent force to make this felt κατ' ἑξοχὴν as antichristian (comp. 1 Tim. vi. 10). For Paul, in particular, whose all-sacrificing self-denial (2 Cor. vi. 10, xi. 27) stood so sharply contrasted with that self-seeking passion, such a peculiar branding of πλεονεξία was very natural. Zachariae, Koppe, Meier, Harless, as also Fritzsche (de conformat. N. T. critica Lachm. I. 1841, p. 46), refer ὃς ἐστιν εἰδωλ. to all three subjects. Unnecessary deviation from that which after the singular of the relative must most naturally suggest itself to the reader, and opposed to the parallel Col. iii. 5, where ἡτὶς ἐστὶν εἰδωλολατρεία has its reference merely to the πλεονεξία assured by the use of the article τὴν πλεονεξίαν, and it is only afterwards that the comprehension of the before-named vices by means of the neuter plural δι' αὐτοῖς comes in. — οὐκ ἔχει κληρονομίαν] Comp. on i. 11. Christ opens it at His Parousia, and rules it under the supreme dominion of God (1 Cor. xv. 27) until the final consummation, whereupon He yields it up to God as the sole ruler (1 Cor. xv. 24, 28). But, after Beza, Zanchius, Glass, Bengel (comp. also Calovius), Rückert and Harless have explained it, on the ground of the non-repetition of the article: "of Him, who is Christ and God," so that Christ is here spoken of as

See on Rom. ix. 5; Col. ii. 2. Comp. Beyschlag, Christol. d. N. T. p. 203 f. The designation of the kingdom as basileia of Christ and of God is climactic (comp. on Gal. i. 1), and renders the warning element more solemn and more powerful to deter, through the contrast with the supreme holiness of the kingdom.—On the proposition itself, comp. Ver. 6. Let no one deceive you with empty words! In those against whom the warning is here given, Grotius sees partly heathen philosophers, partly Jews, which last “omnibus Judaeantibus, quomodocunque vixissent, partem fore dicebant in seculo altero;” Olshausen (comp. Bleek) thinks of frivolous Christians of antinomian sentiments, who would in future emerge; Meier, of teachers of Gentile tendencies. In accordance with the context (ἐπὶ τοὺς νίόν τής ἀπειθείας, συμμέτοχοι αὐτῶν, ήτε γάρ ποτε σκότος) we have to understand Gentiles who have remained unbelieving, who in their intercourse with the Christians sought to palliate those Gentile vices, to give them out as matters of indifference, to represent abstaining from the same as groundless rigour, and thereby to entice back the Christians to the Gentile life. Their discourses were κένοι, inasmuch as the corresponding contents, i.e. the truth, was wanting to them. Comp. Col. ii. 8; LXX. Ex. v. 9, al.; Plat. Lach. p. 196 B; Dem. 821, 11; Hom. To refer ταῦτα to the deceiving with empty words (Chrysostom places both explanations side by side; comp. Theophylact and Oecumenius), has against it not so much the plural—since ταῦτα often also in classical writers denotes (see Winer, p. 146 [E. T. 201]) one notion or thought (according to the aggregate of its several marks)—as rather the unsuitability of the sense in itself and to the following μη ὁδῷ γίνεσθε κ.τ.λ. as well as to the parallel Col. iii. 6.— ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ] Not the punishment of the present life is meant (Calvin, Meier, and others; Matthies combines present and future), since the ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ is the opposite of the βασιλεία, ver. 5; but the wrath of God in the day of judgment, which future, as in ver. 5, is realized as present. More special references, such as to the horrible excesses in connection with the heathen mysteries (Elsner, Wolf, Michaelis, Holzhausen), or even to the "familiam Simonis Magi, quae erat infandarum libido magistra" (Estius), have just as little warrant in the context as the weakening of the meaning of the word by Morus, who understands thereby the mores domesticos of the Gentiles. According to Koppe (flagitia qimevis), Meier, Harless, and Olshausen, the κρυφῇ γυνίμενα are not meant to be specially the secret deeds of vice, but the ἔργα τοῦ σκότους in general, which are so designated in accordance with the view conditioned by σκότους (see Harless). But against this may be urged, first, the fact that σκότους (here in the ethical sense) and κρυφῇ are quite different notions, inasmuch as manifest vice also is an ἔργον τοῦ σκότους, whereas only the peccata occulta take place κρυφῇ; secondly, the emphasis, which the prefixing of κρυφῇ demands for this word, and which, if κρυφῇ denoted nothing special, would be entirely lost, so that Paul might have written merely τὰ γὰρ γυνίμενα ὑπ’ αὑτῶν; thirdly, the contrast of the following φανεροῦται, which presupposes in the ἐλέγχεω something which had been done secretly (comp. REMARK.—The relation, by way of ground, of ver. 12 to what precedes has been very variously apprehended, and with various definitions of the sense itself. Calvin, anticipating, holds that the intention is to state what is accomplished by the ἰδιγξίς; thereby light is brought into their secret things, "ut sua turpitudine pudeant," comparing 1 Cor. xiv. 24. Of this there is mention only in the sequel. Entirely at variance with the words is the view of Grotius (comp. Calovius)ː “nam nisi id fiat, audebunt etiam clam turpiora.” Bengel (comp. already in Oecumenius) finds in ver. 12 the cause added, "cur indefinite loquatur ver. 11 de operibus tenebrarum, cum fructum lucis ver. 9 definite descripsit.” Imported, and opposed to the emphatic χρυφῆ. While, moreover, Koppe translates γὰρ by doubtless [zwar], Rückert wishes at least to supply a doubtless. “Doubtless their secret sins are not of such kind that they can be mentioned with honour, yet it belongs to you, as children of the light, to convince them of the wickedness of their actings.” But the supplying of μίν is pure invention. See on ver. 8. Quite mistaken also is the explanation of Meier: “Yes, reprove them severely and openly to the face; for the merely unconcerned speaking and telling of such deeds of shame secretly committed is likewise disgraceful, unworthy, and mean.” This Paul would at least have expressed thus: τὰ γὰρ λέγειν μόνον (antithesis to τὸ ἰδιγξίς) τὰ χρυφῆ ὅτ' αὐτῶν γίνεται μακάρια ἀθερετ. ἱστ. Impossible, likewise, is Holzhausen’s interpretation: “The sins committed in the darkness of the heathen mysteries the Christians are not to disclose; they are not even to utter the names thereof, they are too abominable.” Apart from the consideration how singular such a precept must appear face to face with the decidedly moral character of the apostle, apart also from the fact that the mysteries are purely imported (see above), such a view should have been precluded as well by the γὰρ in itself (since, in fact, no counterpart of χρυφῆ precedes), as by the succeeding τοί δε ταύτα, which, according to Holzhausen, is meant to signify the vices, "which can endure your light." Following Anselm, Piscator, Vorstius, Zanchius, Flatt, Harless finally discovers in ver. 12 the assigning of a reason not for the ἐλίγχεσι, which is held to follow only with ver. 13, but for μὴ συγκατανώσας τοῖς ἔργοις τοῖς ἀνάρτους τοῦ σκέτους: "for even but to mention their secret deeds is a shame, to say nothing of doing them." But against this the right apprehension of the emphatic προφητικ (see above) is decisive; moreover, the exhortation μὴ συγκατανώσας κ.α., has already, in what precedes, such repeated and such specifically Christian grounds assigned for it (vv. 3, 4, 5, 8, as also further τοῖς ἀνάρτους, ver. 11), that the reader, after a new thought has been introduced with μάλλων, could not at all expect a second ground to be assigned for the previous one, least of all such a general one—containing no essentially Christian ground—as would be afforded by ver. 12, but rather would expect a ground to be assigned for the new thought μάλλων δε καὶ ἐλίγχεσι which had just been introduced.

Ver. 13. The assigning of grounds for that precept, μάλλων δὲ καὶ ἐλίγχεσι, is continued,—being attached by means of the contradistinguishing δὲ,—inasmuch as there is pointed out the salutary action of the Christian light which is brought to bear by means of the required ἐλίγχεσι upon all those secret deeds of shame: But everything (all those secret sins), when it is reproved, when you carry that ἐλίγχεσι into effect upon it, is by the light (ὑπὸ τοῦ φωτός has the emphasis) made manifest, is laid bare in its real moral character, unveiled and brought into distinctness before the moral consciousness by the light of Christian truth which is at work in your ἐλίγχεσι; by the light, I say, it is made manifest, for—in order to prove by a general proposition that this cannot come otherwise than from the light—all that which is made manifest, which is brought forth from concealment and is laid open in its true nature, is light, has ceased thereby to have the nature of darkness, and is now of the essence of light. This demonstrative proposition is based upon the inference: "Quod est in effectu (φῶς ἐστι), id debet esse in causa (ὑπὸ τοῦ φωτὸς)." If thus there is warrant for the general πῶς τὸ φανεροῦμ. φῶς ἐστι, so must there also be warrant for what was previously said in the Christian sense, ὑπὸ τοῦ φωτὸς φανεροῦται. From this simple explanation of the words it becomes at once clear that we have not, with most expositors (including Baumgarten-Crusius and de Wette), to attach ὑπὸ τοῦ φ. to ἐλεγχόμενα, but to φανεροῦται (Castalio, Zanchius, Zeger, Erasmus Schmid, Estius, Bengel, Meier, Harless, Olshausen, Schenkel, Bleek), to which it is emphatically prefixed; and further, that φανεροῦμεν is not to be taken as middle, in which case again various explanations have been brought out, namely, either:

"Lux enim illud est, quod omnia facit manifesta" (Beza; so Calvin, Grotius, Calovius, and others, as also Bleek, who in place of φανεροῦμεν conjectures: φανεροῦν τό), or: "Omne enim illud, quod manifesta facit alia, lux est" (Erasmus Schmid; so also Cajetanus, Estius, Michaelis, and others), or: "Quilibet autem [γάρ !], qui alios docet, est lux, . . . eo ipso declarat, se esse verum Christianum," Kuinoel in Velthusen, etc., Commentarii. III. p. 173 ff., or: "he who does not refuse to be made manifest, becomes an enlightened one," Bengel,—against which interpretations not only the immediately preceding passive φανεροῦται is decisive, but also linguistic usage, in accordance with which φανεροῦμαι is always passive.¹ And if we adhere to the view of φανεροῦμι as passive, we must exclude every explanation, in which a quid pro quo is perpetrated or something is imported, or γάρ is either neglected or incorrectly taken. We have therefore to set aside—(1) the explanation given by Eisner and Wolf, that Paul says: "hominum sceleræ in tenebris patrata, a fidelibus, qui lux sunt, improbata, non modo protrahi in lucem, verum etiam homines, illis sceleribus inquinatos, rubores suffundis increpitos convictosque, et ipsos quoque φῶς fieri hac ratione, emendatis vitiiis tenebrisque in novae vitæ lucem conversis;" (2) that of Zacharias: "Everything which is sharply tested according to the light of the doctrine of Christ and holds its ground, one has no need to keep secret; . . . all, however, which one can perform openly and before every one's eyes . . . is itself light, and strikes every one as good and praiseworthy;" (3) that of Storr:

¹ The article before φῶς might (this we remark in opposition to Olshausen) be dispensed with even in Beza's explanation, so that φῶς ισός would have to be translated: is light-essence, has the nature of light. If, however,—which is not the case,—φανεροῦμι were really to be translated as active, the simplest rendering, and the one most in keeping with the context, would be: for it is the light making everything manifest.
"Quisquis ea, quae monitus est a luce, audit, is patefit, emergit e tenebris; quisquis autem patefactus est, is luce collustratus est;" (4) that of Koppe (comp. Cramer): "for what is itself enlightened, must be also a light for others;" (5) that of Rückert, who would refer γάρ to a conclusion tacitly drawn from what precedes ("ye are light, consequently it is also your business ἔλεγχεν τὰ ἑκείνου ἔργα"): "for all that is made manifest, that is, or by that very fact becomes, light," from which again the suppressed conclusion is to be drawn: consequently it may be hoped that those also will become light, when they are convinced of the reprobate character of their action; (6) that of Meier and Olshausen: "for all that is enlightened by the light, is itself light" (Olshausen), which according to Meier is equivalent to: "becomes itself transparent and pure as light," according to Olshausen: "becomes changed into the nature of light." (7) Nearest to our interpretation comes that of Harless, followed in part by Schenkel. Harless, however, finds expressed from τὰ δὲ πάντα onward the necessity of the ἔλεγχεν, which is rather implied in ver. 12, to which in ver. 13 the salutariness of the ἔλεγχεν attaches itself; he explains φανεροῦμαι, moreover, as if it were praeterite, and does not retain πᾶν γὰρ τὸ φανεροῦμαι κ.τ.λ. in its generality as locus communis, inasmuch as he takes φῶς ἐστὶ: is no longer a secret work of darkness, but is light. — According to Baur, p. 435, the proposition πᾶν τὸ φανερ. φῶς ἐστὶ belongs to the Gnostic theory of light ("all development takes place only through that which in itself already exists becoming manifest for the consciousness"), and has been introduced into its present connection out of this quite different sphere of ideas. But the state of the case is exactly the converse; the Valentinians laid hold of this utterance of the apostle as supporting their doctrine, and expressly cited it (τοῦτο δὲ ὁ Παῦλος λέγει κ.τ.λ., in Iren. i. 8. 5), and consequently took it away from the connection in which he used it so as to favour their own theory.

Ver. 14. This necessity and salutariness of the ἔλεγχες, which Paul has just set forth in vv. 12, 13 (not of the mere subsidiary thought, πᾶν γὰρ κ.τ.λ.), he now further confirms by a word of God out of the Scripture. — διό] wherefore,— because the ἐλέγχειν is so highly necessary as I have shown in ver. 12, and of such salutary effect as is seen from ver. 13,—wherefore he saith: Up, thou sleeper, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee. This call of God to the νομ ης ἀπεθανάς to awake out of the sleep and death of sin confirms the necessity of the ἐλέγχειν, and this promise: "Christ shall shine upon thee," confirms the salutary influence of the light, under which they are placed by the ἐλέγχειν. Beza refers back διό to ver. 8, which is erroneous for this reason, if there were no other, that the citation addresses the as yet unconverted. According to Rückert (comp. Erasmus, Paraphr.), the design is to give support to the hope expressed in ver. 13, namely, that the sinner, earnestly reproved and convicted, may possibly be brought over from darkness into light. But see on ver. 13. With the correct interpretation of τὰν γὰρ κ.τ.λ., the expositions are untenable, which are given by Meier: "on that account, because only what is enlightened by the light of truth can be improved;" and by Olshausen: "because the action of the light upon the darkness cannot fail of its effect." Harless indicates the connection only with the words of Plutarch (tom. xiv. p. 364, ed. Hutt.): χαϊρεν χρῆ τοῖς ἐλέγχουσιν . . . ἡμᾶς γὰρ λυποῦντες διεγείροντωσ. Inexact, and—inasmuch as with Plutarch χαϊρειν and λυποῦντες stand in emphatic correlation, and λυποῦντες thus is essential—inappropriate. —λέγει introduces, with the supplying of ὁ Θεός (as iv. 8), a passage of Scripture, of which the Hebrew words would run: יִצְרַיִת יִצְרַיִת יִצְרַיִת יִצְרַיִת. But what passage is that? Already Jerome says: "Nunquam hoc scriptum reperi." Most expositors answer: Isa. lx. 1. So Thomas, Cajetanus, Calvin, Piscator, Estius, Calovius, Surenhusius, Wolf, Wetstein, Bengel, and others, including Harless and Olshausen; while others at the same time bring in Isa. xxvi. 19 (Beza, Calixtus, Clericus, Meier, Baumgarten-Crusius, and others), as also Isa. lii. 1 (Schenkel) and Isa. ix. 1 (Baumgarten, Holzhausen). But all these passages are so essentially different from ours, that we cannot with unbiased judgment discover the latter in any of them, and should have to hold our citation—if it is assumed to contain Old Testament words—as a mingling of Old Testament reminiscences, nothing similar to which is met with, even apart from the fact that this citation bears in itself the living impress of unity and originality; hence the less is there room to get out of the difficulty by means of Bengel's expedient: "apostolus expressius loquitur ex luce N. T." Doubtless Harless says that the apostle was here concerned not about the word, but about the matter in general, and that he cites the word of pre-announcement with the modification which it has itself undergone through fulfilment, and adduces by way of analogy Rom. x. 6 ff. But in opposition to this may be urged, first generally, that such a modification of Isa. lx. 1 would have been not a mere modification, but would have quite done away with the identity of the passage; secondly, in particular, that the passage Isa. lx. 1, specially according to the LXX. (ϕωτίζον, ϕωτίζον Ἰηρονοσαλήμ, ἦκει γὰρ σου τὸ φῶς, καὶ ἡ δόξα κυρίου ἐπὶ σὲ ἀνατέταλκεν), needed no change whatever in order to serve for the intended Scriptural confirmation, for which, moreover, various other passages from the O. T. would have stood at the command of the apostle, without needing any change; and lastly, that Rom. x. 6 is not analogous, because there the identity with Deut. xxx. 12–14 is unmistakeably evident in the words themselves, and the additions concerning Christ are not there given as constituent parts of the Scripture utterance, but expressly indicated as elucidations of the apostle (by means of τοῦτος ἐστὶ). Quite baseless is the view of de Wette, that the author is quoting, as at iv. 8 (where, indeed, the citation is quite undoubted), an O. T. passage in an application which, by frequency of use, has become so familiar to him that he is no longer precisely conscious of the distinction between text and application. Others, including Morus, have discovered here a quotation from an apocryphal book, under which character Epiphanius names the prophecy of Elias, Georgius Syncellus an apocryphal authority of Jeremiah, and Codex G on the margin, the book ("Secretum") of Enoch. See, in general, Fabricius, Cod.

Pseudepigr. V. T. pp. 1074, 1105; Apocr. N. T. I. p. 524. That, however, Paul unwittingly cited an apocryphal book, is to be decisively rejected, inasmuch as this is never done by him, but, on the contrary, the formula of citation always means canonical passages. Hence, also, we have not, with Heumann (Poicile, II. p. 390), Michaelis, Storr, Stolz, Flatt, to guess at an early hymn of the Church as the source. Others have found therein a saying of Christ, like Oeder in Syntagm. Obs. sacr. p. 697 ff., in opposition to which may be urged, not indeed the following ο Χριστός, which Jesus might doubtless have said of Himself, but rather the fact that the subject Χριστός to λέγει could not be at all divined, as indeed Paul has never adduced sayings of Christ in his Epistles. This also in opposition to the opinion mentioned in Jerome (comp. also Bugenhagen and Calixtus), that Paul here, after the manner of the prophets (comp. the prophetic: thus saith the Lord), "προσωποποίηται Σπíitus sancti figuraverit." Grotius (comp. Koppe) regards even τό φως as subject: "Lux illa, i.e. homo luce perfusus, dicit alteri." As if previously the φως were homo luce perfusus! and as if every reader could not but have recognised a citation as well in διὸ λέγει as in the character of the saying itself! Erroneously Bornemann also, Schol. in Luc. p. xlviii. f., holds that λέγει is to be taken impersonaliter; in this respect it is said, one may say, so that no passage of Scripture is cited, but perhaps allusion is made to Mark v. 41. This impersonal use is found only with φορέ. See the instances cited by Bornemann, and Bernhardy, p. 419. In view of all these opinions, my conclusion, as at 1 Cor. ii. 9, is to this effect: From διὸ λέγει it is evident that Paul desired to adduce a passage of canonical Scripture, but—as the passage is not canonical—in virtue of a lapus memoriae he adduces an apocryphal saying, which, citing from memory, he

1 According to Jerome, he is held not to have done it, "quod apocrypha com-probatet, sed quod et Arati et Epimenidis et Menandri versibus sit abusus ad ea, quae voluerat, in tempore comprobanda."

2 This opinion is already mentioned by Theodoret: οὐδὲ τις ἐν ἡμιμακραῖαι ἐπικατειστάς χάρις άξιον ἑξεικόνισε τῶν ψαλμῶν συγγράψαι, in connection with which they had appealed to 1 Cor. xiv. 26. Bleek, too, ad loc., and already in the Stud. u. Krit. 1858, p. 381, finds it probable that the saying is taken from a writing composed by a Christian poet of that early age.

τοῦ Ἱ. are ancient (see Chrysostom and Jerome ad loc.), and are not to be explained merely from an accidental interchange in copying, but are connected with the preposterous fiction that the words were addressed to Adam buried under the cross of Christ, whom Christ would touch with His body and blood, thereby causing him to become alive and to rise. See Jerome. The words themselves: Christ shall shine upon thee, signify not: He will be gracious to thee (so, at variance with the context, Bretschneider), but: He will by the gracious operation of His Spirit annul in thee the ethical darkness (ἀλών τὴν νύκτα τῆς ἀμαρτίας, Gregory of Nazianzus), and impair to thee the divine ἀλήθεια, of which He is the possessor and bearer (Christ, the light of the world). Observe, moreover, that the arising is not an act of one's own, inde-dependent of God and anticipating His gracious operation, but that it takes place just through God's effectual awakening call.
On this effectual calling then ensues the Christian enlightening.

Ver. 15. Ὑδὲ is, after the digression begun with μᾶλλον dὲ καὶ ἐλέγχετε of ver. 11, resumptive, as at iv. 17. Look then to it—now to return to my exhortations with regard to the Christian walk, vv. 8–10—how ye, etc. Calvin, whom Harless follows, states the connection thus: "Si aliorum discutere tenebras fideles debent fulgure suo, quanto minus caecutire debent in propri vita instituto." This would be correct, if Paul had written $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\epsilon\tau\epsilon\sigma\omega\nu\;\alpha\iota\tau\omicron\omicron\iota\lambda$, or $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\epsilon\tau\epsilon\sigma\omega\nu\;\pi\omega\varsigma\;\alpha\iota\tau\omicron\omicron\iota\lambda$. — $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\epsilon\tau\epsilon\sigma\omega\nu$ is the simple: look to, take heed to (1 Cor. xvi. 10; Phil. iii. 2; Col. iv. 17), not: "utimini luce vestra ad videndum," Estius (comp. Erasmus), which is forbidden by $\pi\omega\varsigma$. — $\pi\omega\varsigma\;\acute{a}kri\beta\dot{b}\omega\varsigma\;\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\pi\rho\alpha\tau\epsilon\iota\epsilon\iota\tau\epsilon\iota\nu\epsilon\iota\nu\iota\epsilon\iota$ not equivalent to $\iota\nu\alpha$ (Koppe), and $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\pi\rho\alpha\tau\epsilon\iota\epsilon\iota\tau\epsilon\iota\nu\epsilon\iota\nu\iota$ not for the subjunctive (Grotius), but: look to it, in what manner ye carry out the observance of an exact walk in strict accord with duty (comp. $\acute{a}kri\beta\dot{b}\dot{d}\dot{i}k\omega\varsigma$, Arist. Eth. Nic. v. 10. 8). Comp. C. F. A. Fritzsch, in Fritschior. Opusc. p. 208 f.; Winer, p. 269 [E. T. 376]. — $\mu\eta\;\acute{a}\sigma\sigma\phi\omicron\omicron\iota\varsigma$, κ.τ.λ. Epexegesis of the $\acute{a}kri\beta\dot{b}\dot{b}\varsigma$ just mentioned, negative and positive: presenting yourselves in your walk not as unwise, but as wise. We have thus to supply neither $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\pi\rho\alpha\tau\epsilon\iota\epsilon\iota\tau\epsilon\iota\nu\epsilon\iota\nu\iota$ (Harless) nor anything else; but, like $\acute{a}kri\beta\dot{b}\dot{b}\varsigma$, its more precise definition $\mu\eta\;\acute{a}\sigma\sigma\phi\omicron\omicron\iota\varsigma$ κ.τ.λ. is dependent on $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\pi\rho\alpha\tau\epsilon\iota\epsilon\iota\tau\epsilon\iota\nu\epsilon\iota\nu\iota$. With regard to $\mu\eta$, referring to $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\epsilon\tau\epsilon\sigma\omega\nu$, see Winer, p. 421 [E. T. 595]; and for the emphatic parallelismus antitheticus, comp. Ver. 16. Accompanying modal definition to the preceding $\acute{a}\sigma\phi\omicron\omicron\iota\varsigma$: ementes vobis (middle) opportunitatem, i.e. in that you make your own the right point of time for such walk, do not let it pass by unused. In this figurative conception the doing of that for which the point of time is fitted, is thought of as the purchase-price, by which the $\kappa\alpha\rho\omega\varsigma$ becomes ours. Comp. Col. iv. 5; LXX. Dan. ii. 8; Antonin. vi. 26: $\kappa\epsilon\rho\delta\alpha\nu\tau\epsilon\omicron\nu\tau\omicron\nu\nu\;\tau\omicron\pi\rho\omicron\nu$, Plut. Philop. 15: $\kappa\alpha\rho\omega\varsigma\;\alpha\rho\pi\acute{a}\tau\acute{e}i\nu$. The opposite is $\kappa\alpha\rho\omega\varsigma\;\pi\alpha\rho\iota\nu\alpha\iota\nu\iota\nu\iota$, Thucyd. iv. 27. Gal. vi. 10 is parallel as to substance. Classical writers say $\kappa\alpha\rho\rho.\;\tau\rho\iota\alpha\sigma\tau\omicrontai$, Dem. 120. 26, 187. 22, but in the proper sense of buying for money. Others have thought of the sacrifice of all earthly things and of all lusts as the purchase-price (Chrysostom, Theophylact, Oecumenius; comp. also Augustine, Flacius, Zanchius, Estius, Rückert, and others); but this is imported, since the context yields nothing else than the fulfilment of duty meant by the ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖν; hence we have not, with Harless, to interpret it of the right moment “for letting the light of correction break in upon the darkness of sin” (comp. Michaelis and Rosenmüller), which would be to revert, at variance with the context, to the topic of the ἐλεγξιος already ended. Luther¹ incorrectly renders: “Suit yourselves to the time.” That would be δουλεύειν τῷ καιρῷ, Rom. xii. 11. Similarly also Grotius (comp. Hammond): “quovis labore ac verborum honestis obsequis vitate pericula et diem de die ducite.” Comp. Bengel, who compares Amos v. 13, and understands the prudent letting the evil day pass over “quiescendo vel certe modice agendo,” whereby the better time is purchased, in order to make the more use thereof. In opposition to Grotius and Bengel, it may be urged that this alleged mode of the ἐξαγοράζειν τὸν καιρὸν is not mentioned by Paul, but imported by the expositor, and that the counsel of such a trimming behaviour is hardly compatible with the moral decision of the apostle, and with his expectation of the approaching end of the aἰῶν οὗτος. We may add that the compound ἐξαγορ. is not here to be understood as redeem (Gal. iii. 13, iv. 5), as e.g. Bengel would take it (from the power of evil men), and Calvin (from the devil), seeing that the context does not suggest such reference; but the ἐκ in the composition is intensive, and denotes what is entire, utter, as also in Plut. Crass. 2; Polyb. iii. 42. 2; Dan. ii. 8. — ὅτι αἱ ἡμέραι παραιτεῖσθαι supplies a motive for the ἐξαγ. τ. καιρ., for the days, the present times, are evil, for moral corruption is now in vogue. So much the more must it intimately concern you as Christians (for how exalted is their task above the wickedness of the present time! Phil. ii. 15, iii. 20) τὸν καιρὸν ἐξαγοράζεσθαι. Beza, Flacius, Grotius, Hammond, Rosenmüller, and others refer παραιτή to the misfortune of the time (Gen. xlvii. 9; Ps. xlix. 6 [5]); but the context opposes the moral bearing of the Christian to the immoral condition of the time. According to de Wette’s here very unfounded scepticism, the writer is indistinct and hesitating, because he is bringing Col. iv. 5 into another connection.

Ver. 17. Αἱ ὑπὸ τοῦ] Because ye ought so to walk as is said in vv. 15, 16, of which ye as ἄφρονες (whose walk, in fact, cannot be wise) would be incapable. Others: because the times are evil (Menochius, Zanchius, Estius, et al., including Rückert, Matthies, and de Wette). But the ἐὰν αἱ ἡμ. πον. εἰσι; was only a subsidiary thought subservient to the ἀγοράς. τ. καὶρ., and affords no suitable reason for the following exhortations.—μὴ γινεσθε] not: be not, but become not. — ἄφρονες] devoid of intelligence, imprudentes, i.e. "qui mente non recte utuntur" (Tittmann, Synon. p. 143), namely, for the moral understanding of the will of Christ, as here the contrast teaches. Comp. on φρονείς, i. 8. The ἄσοφος of ver. 15 is a higher notion than ἄφρονες, which latter denotes the want of practical understanding, the opposite of φρόνιμος (Plat. Gorg. p. 498 B; Xen. Mem. ii. 3. 1; comp. Rom. ii. 20; 1 Cor. xv. 36; Luke xi. 40, xii. 20). Every ἄφρον is also ἄσοφος, but the ἄσοφος may yet be φρόνιμος (Luke xvi. 8), namely, for immoral ends and means, which here the context excludes. See also the following contrast.—συνιόντες] understanding, more than γινώσκοντες. Comp. Grotius, and see on Col. i. 9.—τὸ θέλ. τοῦ κυρ. of Christ. Comp. Acts xxi. 14; 1 Cor. iv. 19.

Ver. 18. Καὶ] and in particular, to mention a single vice, which would belong to άφροσύνη. —μὴ μεθύσε. οἶνῳ] become not drunken through wine, which stands opposed to the allowable use of wine, without our having on that account to seek here a reference to Montanism (Schwegler). To conclude, however, from ver. 19 that excess at the Αγαπαί is meant (1 Cor. xi. 21), as Koppe and Holzhausen maintain (comp. also de Wette), is quite arbitrary; inasmuch as neither in the preceding nor following context is there any mention made of the Αγαπαί, and this special abuse, the traces of which in the N. T. are, moreover, only to be found in Corinth, would have called for a special censure.—ἐν φ. ἐστὶν ἁσωτία] deterring remark. ἐν φ. does not apply to οἶνῳ alone, as Schoettgen holds (whose Rabbinical passages therefore, as Bammidb. rabba, f. 206, 3: "ubicunque est vinum, ibi est immunditia," are not to the point here), but to the μεθυ-σκεύασθαι οἶνῳ: wherein is contained debauchery, dissolute behaviour. A vivid description of the grosser and more refined ἀσωτία may be seen in Cicero, de Fin. ii. 8. On the word itself (in its literal sense unsavableness), see Tittmann, Synon. p. 152; Lobeck, Paralip. i. p. 559. A more precise limitation of the sense (Jerome understands lascivious excess, as also Hammond, who thinks of the Bacchanalia) is without warrant in the text.— ἀλλὰ πληροῦσθε ἐν πνεύματι] but become full by the Spirit. The imperative passive finds its explanation in the possibility of resistance to the Holy Spirit and of the opposite fleshly endeavour; and ἐν is instrumental, as at i. 23; Phil. iv. 19. The contrast lies not in οἶνος and πνεῦμα (Grotius, Harless, Olshausen, and others), because otherwise the text must have run μὴ οἶνος μεθύσκοι, ἀλλ' ἐν πνεύματι πληρ., but in the two states—that of intoxication and that of inspiration. This opposition is only in appearance strange (in opposition to de Wette), and has its sufficient ground in the excitement of the person inspired and its utterances (comp. Acts ii. 13).

Ver. 19. Accompanying definition to the just required "being filled by the Spirit," as that with which this λαλεῖν ἑαυτῶις φαλαμίωις κ.τ.λ. is to be simultaneously combined as its immediate expression: so that ye speak to one another through psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. What a contrast with the preceding ἐν τῷ ἑστῶ ἀσωτία! Comp. Col. iii. 16.— λαλοῦντες ἑαυτῶις] not meditantes vobiscum (Morus, Michaelis), but it denotes the reciprocal speaking (ἑαυτῶις, in the sense of ἄλληλοις, as iv. 32, to each other), the oral interchange of thoughts and feelings, which—just because the condition is that of being filled by the Spirit—does not make use of the conversational language of ordinary life, or even of drunken passion, but of psalms, etc., as the means of mutual communication (dativus instrumentalis; Luther incorrectly renders: about psalms). That, however, the apostle is here speaking of actual worship in the narrower sense (Olshausen), is assumed in opposition to the context, since the contrast μὴ μεθύσκει. οἶνος, ἀλλὰ πληρ. ἐν πν. does not characterize the λαλεῖν ἑαυτῶις as taking place in worship, although in itself it is not denied that in worship too the inspired antiphonal singing took place. See 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 26; Niceph. Call. xiii. 8: τὴν τῶν ἀντιφώνων συνήθειαν ἀνωθεν ἀποστόλων ἡ ἐκκλησία παρέδωκε. The distinction between ψαλμός and ὄμνος consists in this, that by ψαλμός Paul denotes a religious song in general bearing the character of the O. T. psalms, but by ὄμνος specially a song of praise (Plat. Legg. iii. p. 700 B, opposed to θρησκεία), and that, in accordance with the context, addressed to Christ (ver. 19) and God (ver. 20). Properly ψαλμός (which originally means the making the cithara sound) is a song in general, and that indeed as sung to a stringed instrument (see Spanheim, ad Callim. p. 55); but in the N. T. the character of the psalm is determined by the psalms of the O. T., so called καὶ ἐξοχή (1 Cor. xiv. 15, 26; Jas. v. 13). According to Harless, the two words are not different as regards their contents, but ψαλμός is the expression of the spiritual song for the Jewish-Christians, ὄμνος for the Gentile-Christians. An external distinction in itself improbable, and very arbitrary, since the special signification of ὄμνος, song of praise, is thoroughly established, and ψαλμός also was a word very current in Greek, which—as well in itself as more especially with regard to its sense established in Christian usage in accordance with the conception of the O. T. psalms—could not but be equally intelligible for the Gentile-Christians as for the Jewish-Christians. See also Paidelb. in the Zeitschr. f. Luth. Theol. 1855, 4, p. 634 f. According to Olshausen, ψαλμοὶ are here the psalms of the O. T., which had passed over from the synagogue into the use of the church. But worship is not spoken of here; and that the Christians, filled by the Spirit, improvised psalms, is clear from 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 26. Such Christian psalms and hymns are meant, as the Spirit gave them to be uttered (Acts ii. 4, x. 46, xix. 6),—phenomena doubtless, which, like the operations of the Spirit generally in the first age of the church, are withdrawn from our special cognizance.— καὶ χαίδαις πνευμ. Inasmuch as φίλη may be any song, even secular, πνευματικαῖς is here added, so that by

A collection of church-hymns is of course not even remotely to be thought of in our passage; and it is to go in quest of a reason for suspecting our Epistle, when, with Schwegler, the mention of ψαλμοὶ n. c. l. is designated as surprising.
CIUR.V.20. 287

Φδαίς πνεύμα is denoted the whole genus, of which the ψαλμοὶ and ὑμοὶ were species. πνευματικαίς defines the songs as proceeding from the Holy Spirit, as θεοπνεύστοις. Pind. Ol. iii. 18: θεομοροι νισσοντ' ἐπ' ἀνθρώπος ἀοίδαι. It is to be observed, moreover, that Paul does not require a constant λαλεῖν εαυτοῖς ψαλμοῖς κ.τ.λ. on the part of his readers, but, in contradistinction to the heathen ἁσωτία in drunkenness, as that which is to take place among the Christians instead of drunken revelry with its dissolve doings.—The accumulation ψαλμ. κ. ὑμ. κ. φιλ. πν. belongs to the animated and urgent style of discourse. See Bornemann, Schol. in Luc. p. xxviii. f. Comp. also Lobeck, Paralip. I. p. 60 f. — ἄδοντες καὶ ψάλλοντες ἐν τῇ καρδ. ὑμ. τῷ κυρίῳ] co-ordinate with the preceding λαλοῦντες κ.τ.λ., containing another singing of praise, namely, that which goes on in the silence of the heart. The point of difference lies in ἐν ταῖς καρδ. ὑμ., as contradistinguished from the preceding εαυτοῖς. Usually this second participial clause is regarded as subordinate to the previous one; it is held to affirm that that reciprocal singing of praise must take place not merely with the mouth, but also in the heart (τῇ καρδίᾳ ψάλει ὁ μὴ μόνον τὴν γλώτταν κινῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν νοῦν εἰς τὴν τῶν λεγομένων κατανόησιν διεγείρων, Theodoret). But how could it have occurred to Paul here to enter such a protest against mere lip-praise, when he, in fact, represents the psalm-singing, etc., as the utterance of the being filled by the Spirit, and makes express mention of πνευματικάς φδαίς, in which case, at any rate, the thought of a mere singing with the mouth was of itself excluded. The right view is found substantially in Eickert (who, nevertheless, already here imports an "always"), Harless, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, Schenkel.—τῷ κυρίῳ] to Christ, ver. 20.

Ver. 20. A third modal definition to the πληροῦσθε ἐν πνεύματι, likewise co-ordinate with the two preceding ones, bringing into prominence—after the general singing of praise, etc., of ver. 19, which is to take place as well audibly as in the heart—further, and in particular, the thanksgiving, which the readers have always for all things to render to God. — πάντοτε] This always is not to be pressed; see on 1 Cor. i. 4; in accordance with Col. iii. 17, at all action in word and work.
Observe, however, that πάντως is only introduced at this point; for not the ἄδειαν and υἱὸν τοῦ θεοῦ, but certainly, amidst the constant consciousness of the divine manifestations of grace, thanksgiving also, like prayer in general, may and ought to belong to the constant activity of the Christian life. Comp. vi. 18; Rom. xii. 12; Col. iv. 2; 1 Thess. v. 17. For the emphatic juxtaposition πάντως ὑπὲρ πάντων, comp. 2 Cor. ix. 8, and see Lobeck, Paralip. I. p. 56. This πάντως is not masculine (Theodoret), but neuter, and relates, in accordance with the context, to all Christian blessings. To understand it of all that happens to us, even including sufferings, as is done by Chrysostom, Jerome, Erasmus, and many, including Meier, Olshausen, Baumgarten-Crusius, and de Wette, is foreign to the connection, yet doubtless the Christian παράκλησις and joy in suffering belong thereto.—ἐν ὄνομ. τοῦ κυρίου κ.τ.λ. not ad honorem Christi (Flatt), but: so that what is embraced in the name Jesus Christ ("per quem omnia nobis obtingunt," Bengel) is the element, in which your grateful consciousness moves in the act of thanksgiving. Comp. Col. iii. 17; John xiv. 13. As regards subject matter, ἐν Χριστῷ (iii. 21) would be different, and διὰ Χριστοῦ (Rom. vii. 25) similar.—τῷ Θεῷ καὶ πατρὶ See on i. 3; 2 Cor. i. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 24. The referring of πατρὶ to Christ, the Son (Erasmus, Estius, Harless, Baumgarten-Crusius, and others), is more in keeping with the connection (ἐν ὄνοματι κ.τ.λ.) than the rendering: our Father (Zanchius, Rückert, Matthies, and others).

Ver. 21 f. The words ἱπποτασσ. ἀλλήλων ἐν φόβῳ Χρ. still belong to ver. 20 (so Lachmann, Tischendorf, Bleek), parallel to the εὐχαριστοῦντες κ.τ.λ., adding to this relation towards God the mutual relation towards one another. Then begins with αἱ γυναῖκες a new section, into the first precept of which we have to take over the verb from the ἱπποτασσόμενοι just used, namely, ἱπποτάσσεσθε (Elzevir) or ἱπποτασσόμενοι (Lachmann). Calvin, Zanchius, Koppe, Flatt, Meier, Matthies, and

1 Chrysostom, in fact, includes even hell therein, the contemplation of which is for us a check of fear and thus very salutary.

2 A more sublime, more ideal regulation of the married state is not conceivable than that which is here set forth by the apostle, vv. 21–33, and yet it is one which has flowed from the living depth of the Christian consciousness, and hence is practically applicable to all concrete relations.
others (comp. also Reiche, Comm. crit. p. 183), incorrectly hold that the participle is to be taken imperatively; in that case an εὑρετε to be supplied in thought must, as in Rom. xii. 9, have been suggested by the context. Olshausen quite arbitrarily proposes that we supply mentally: "are all believers." If the new section was to begin with ὑποτασσομενοι, then ὑποτασσομενοι, ἀλλά, εν μοι. would have to be regarded as an absolutely prefixed general attribute, to which the special one afterwards to be added would be subordinate ("inasmuch as ye subject yourselves in the fear of Christ, the wives ought," etc.). It would not militate against this view, that in the sequel only the ὑποτάξεις of the wives follows, while the ἱπακοὴ of the children and servants, in chap. vi., can no longer be brought into connection with our ὑποτασσομενοι. For often with the classical writers also, after the prefixing of such absolute nominatives, which have reference to the whole collectively, the discourse passes only over to one part (not to several); see particularly Nägelsbach, x. Ἰλιασ, ed. 3, p. 385 f. But against it may be urged the consideration that αἱ γυναῖκες has no special verb; such a verb, and one correlative as to notion with ὑποτασσομενοι, could not but be associated with it. — On the thought ὑποτάσσεσθαι ἄλληλοις, comp. 1 Pet. v. 5; Clem. Cor. i. 38. — εἵνεκα Χριστοῦ] is the fundamental disposition, in which the ὑποτάσσεσθαι ἄλληλοις is to take place. And Christ is to be feared as the judge. Comp. 2 Cor. v. 11; 1 Cor. x. 22. — τοις ἱδιοῖς ἀνδράσιν] to their own husbands. Without being misunderstood, Paul might have written merely τοῖς ἀνδράσιν, but ἱδιοὶ serves to make the obligation of the ὑποτάσσεσθαι τοῖς ἀνδράσιν palpable in its natural necessity; for what a wife is she, who refuses obedience to her own husband! So also Stobaeus, S. 22: Ἀθέανω ... ἐρωτηθεῖσα, τι πρῶτον εἶν γυναικι, τὸ τῷ ἱδιῷ, ἐφι, ἄρεισκεν ἀνδρὶ. Throughout the N. T. ἱδιος never stands in place of the mere possessive pronoun, but has always, as also with the Greeks, an emphasis to be derived from the connection, even at Matt. xxii. 5, xxv. 14 (see in loc.); 1 Pet. iii. 1; and Tit. ii. 5 (where the relation is as in our passage). This in opposition to Winer, p. 139 [E. T. 192], and at the same time in opposition to Harless and Olshausen, who (comp. also Dorville, ad Charit. p. 452) see in ὁ ἔδοξος ἄνὴρ nothing more than a designation which has become usual for the husband. From the very context, in itself ὁ ἄνὴρ is husband (Hom. Od. xix. 294; Matt. i. 16). That which, on the other hand, Bengel finds in ἔδοξος: “etiam si alibi meliora viderentur habere consilia,” is imported. — ὁ κύριος] By this is not meant the husbands (Thomas Aquinas, Semler), which must have been τοῖς κύριοις, but Christ, and ὁ expresses the mode of view in which the wives are to regard their obedience towards the husbands, namely, as rendered to the Lord; comp. vi. 6, 7. For the husband (see what follows) stands in relation to the wife not otherwise than as Christ to the church; in the conjugal relation the husband is the one who represents Christ to the wife, in so far as he is head of the wife, as Christ is the Head of the church. To find in ὁ the mere relation of resemblance (“uxoris erga maritum officia similia quodammodo sunt officiis Christianorum erga Christum,” Koppe) is erroneous on account of what follows; the passage must have run in the form ὁ ἡ ἐκκλησία τῷ κυρίῳ, which Erasmus has imported into his paraphrase: “non aliter, quam ecclesia subdita est Domino Jesu.” We may add that the view of Michaelis—that here and Col. iii. 18 the teachings as to marriage are directed against errors of the Essenes (comp. 1 Tim. iv. 3)—is the more to be regarded as a fiction, inasmuch as Paul is speaking not of the propriety of marriage, but of the duties of the married life.

Vv. 23, 24. "Ὅτι ἄνὴρ . . . ἐκκλησιαστήρας" Reason assigned for the ὁ τῷ κυρίῳ just demanded. For the husband is in the marriage relation the same as Christ is in relation to the church; the former, like the latter, is the head. — ἄνὴρ] a husband is head of his wife; hence ἄνὴρ is without, and γυναικὸς with the article. — ὁ καὶ as also with Christ the relation of being Head exists, namely, in regard to the church. — αὐτὸς ὁ σωτὴρ τοῦ σώματος] is usually taken as apposition to ὁ Χριστός, according to which αὐτὸς would take up the subject again with special emphasis (Schaefer, Melet. p. 84; Bernhardy, p. 283): “He, the Saviour of the body,” He who makes

1 Holzhausen (comp. already Chrysostom) has again referred αὐτός to the husband, who is called σωτὴρ τοῦ σώματος in comparison with Christ, inasmuch as the being of the wife is conditioned by the husband. Incorrectly, since no
His body, i.e. the church, of which He is the Head, partaker of the Messianic σωτηρία ("merito et efficacia," Calovius). But while there is not here apparent from the connection any purpose, bearing on the matter in hand, for such an emphatic description, there may be urged against it the following ἄλλα, which, if it is not placed in combination with αὐτὸς ὁ σωτ. τ. σώμ., admits of no logical explanation. Usually, it is true, this ἄλλα is taken syllogistically (so Beza, Grotius, and others, including Matthies, Olshausen, de Wette). But the syllogistic ἄλλα, and that in the Greek writers combined with μὴν, is employed for the introduction of the propositio minor (Apollon. Alex. in Beck, Anecd. II. p. 518, 839; Hartung, Partikell. II. p. 384; Fritzsche, ad Rom. v. 14; Klotz, ad Devar. p. 63); whereas here we should have the conclusio, and we should thus have to take ἄλλα, in accordance with its usage as breaking off ("argumentorum enarrationem aut aliam cogitationem abrumpit et ad rem ipsam, quae sit agenda, vocat," Klotz, l.c. p. 5; comp. Hermann, ad Viger. p. 312; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. I. p. 78), for ὀστε, against which, however, militates the fact that the sentence assigning a reason, δὲ ἀνὴρ κ.τ.λ., has already fulfilled its destined object (ver. 22), so that it could not occur to any reader to seek in the adversative ἄλλα an inference from this reason-assigning clause. If Paul had reader could refer αἰτία to any other subject than to the one immediately preceding, ἕξομεν, and since it was intelligible to describe the church doubtless, but not the wife, as ἡ σώμα (without further addition). Nor is σωτήρ ever employed in the N. T. otherwise than of Christ or God.

1 For the view, that hereby a reminder is given to husbands of the fact, which is often forgotten by them, that they (see ver. 29) ought to make their wives truly happy (Erasm., Beza, Grotius, Estius, and others, including Rückert, Meier, Matthies, Baumgarten-Crusius; comp. also Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 2, p. 184 f.), is inadmissible, since the instructions for husbands begin only with ver. 25. Harless remarks: "Inasmuch as the apostle finds the obedience of marriage, realized in it by the wife, also in the relation of the church to Christ, he shows immediately the ground of this peculiar relation in the manifestation of the gracious power of the Lord by redemption." But in this way the question as to the reason determining this addition is not answered, and the gracious power of the Lord is, in fact, not denoted by the simple σωτήρ. Olshausen (so already Piscator) thought that αἰτία ὁ σωτήρ τῷ σώμ. had merely the design of setting forth Christ more distinctly in the character of άρχαῖ, inasmuch as it designates the church as the σώμα which He rules. But it is not τῷ σώματι that has the emphasis; and άρχαῖ τῷ Ἰσσα., spoken of Christ, needed no elucidation, least of all in this Epistle.
wished again to infer, from ver. 23, that which is proved by this verse, he would have written ὁδή or the metatelic δέ. Besides this, however, ver. 24, as an inference from ver. 23, would contain a very superfluous prolixity of the discourse, inasmuch as the contents of ver. 24 was already so fully given by the thought of ver. 23 attached to what precedes by means of δὲ, that we could not but see here a real logical pleonasm, such as we are not accustomed to meet with in the writings of the concise and sententious Paul. According to Winer, p. 400 [E. T. 565], ver. 24 is meant to continue and conclude the argument, so that ver. 23 proves the ὁδή κυρίως from the position of Christ and the husband, while ver. 24 proves it from the demand implied in this position, and hence ἀλλά amounts ultimately to the sense: "but then, which is the main thing." But even in this way only a continuing δέ, autem, and not the adversative ἀλλά, at, would be quite in accordance with the thought. When, moreover, it is assumed, with Rückert, Harless, Bleek, that ἀλλά, after the intermediate thought αὐτὸς ὁ σωτ. τ. σ., is used as breaking off and leading back to the theme (see Hartung, l.c. II. p. 37), it is self-evident that the brief clause αὐτὸς ὁ σωτ. τ. σ.—introduced, moreover, only as apposition—has not at all interrupted the development, and consequently has not given occasion for such a leading back to the theme.¹ Hofmann finally takes ἀλλά as repelling a possible objection, and to this effect: "But even where the husband is not this (namely, one who makes happy, as like Christ he ought to be) to his wife, that subordination nevertheless remains," etc. But in this way the very thought, upon which everything is held to turn, is purely read into the passage. In view of all that has been said, I (and Schenkel agrees with me in this) cannot take αὐτὸς ὁ σωτ. τ. σ. as apposition, but only as an independent proposition, and I understand ἀλλά in its ordinary adversative sense, namely, thus: "He for His person, He and no other, is the Saviour of the body; but this relation, which belongs exclusively to Himself, does not take away the obligation of obedience on the part ¹ And how would Paul have returned to his theme? He would have said again, in another form, in ver. 24, that which he had just said in ver. 23! After so short a clause as αὐτὸς ὁ σωτ. τ. σ., what an un-Pauline diffuseness!

cf. the wives towards their husbands, nay, rather, as the church obeys Christ, so must also the wives obey their husbands in every respect." The right view was already perceived by Calvin, when on account of the adversative διαδιε he proposed the explanation:1 "Habet quidem id peculiare Christus, quod est servator ecclesiae, nihilominus sciatur mulieres, sibi maritos praesset, Christi exemplo, utcunque pari gratia non polleant." Comp. also Bengel, who aptly remarks: "Vir autem non est servator uxoris; in eo Christus excellit; hinc sed sequitur.... What Hofmann objects is quite irrelevant; for the thought, that Christ is Saviour of the body, is not superfluous, but has its significant bearing in the contrast which follows; and Paul had not to write ἡμῶν instead of τοῦ σώματος with a view to clearness, since Christ was, in fact, just designated as κεφαλή; consequently nothing was now more natural and clear than the designation of believers by τοῦ σώματος, the correlative of κεφαλή. The objection of Reiche, that αὑτός comes in asyndetically, can have no weight in the case of Paul especially, and of his brief and terse moral precepts (see immediately ver. 28, and comp. in particular Rom. xii. 9 ff.). — αἱ γυναῖκες] sc. ὑποτασσόμενων. If the duty of the wives was ὑποτασσόμεναι των ἀνδρών ὡς τῷ κυρίῳ, that of the husband is: ἀγαπάτε τὰς γυναῖκας, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς τῇ λ., a love, therefore, which is ready to undergo even death out of affection for the wife. pattern of love given by Him. — ἵνα αὐτῷ ἀγαθ. κ.τ.λ. [“in order to sanctify it, after having cleansed it through the bath of water, by means of the word.”] In His sacrificial death, namely, Christ's intention with regard to His future church had this aim, that, after having by baptism brought about for its members the forgiveness of their pre-Christian sins, He would make it partaker of Christian-moral holiness by means of the gospel. That cleansing is the negative side of that, which Christ contemplated with regard to His church in His death, and this sanctification by means of the gospel constantly influencing the baptized is the positive side; the former the antecedens, the latter the consequens; and both are caused by the atoning death, which is the causa meritoria of the forgiveness of sins brought about by means of baptism, and the contents of the gospel as the word of the cross. The sanctifying influence of the latter is the efficacy of the Holy Spirit, who works by means of the gospel (vi. 17); but the Holy Spirit is subject to Christ (2 Cor. iii. 18), and Christ also communicates Himself in the Spirit to men's hearts (Rom. viii. 9 f.); hence it is said with justice that Christ sanctifies the church through the word (comp. also ii. 21), in which case it is self-evident to the Christian consciousness that the operative principle therein is the Spirit operating by means of the word. The Vulgate translates καθαρ. mundans, and Zanchius says: “modum exprimit, quo eam sanctificet.” So, too, Harless, who holds ἀγιάσῃ and καθαρισάω not to be different notions, but the latter to be a more precise definition of the former, which signifies purum reddere a culpa peccati. The aorist participle would not be opposed to this view, because it could express that which is coincident in point of time with ἁγιάσῃ (see on i. 9); but it is opposed by the fact that ἐν ῥήματι cannot be joined to καθαρισάω (see below), but sanctification by the word must of necessity be something other than the cleansing by baptism, as also at 1 Cor. vi. 11 (comp. Acts ii. 38, xxii. 16), the cleansing by means of baptism (ἀπελοίκωσα) precedes the sanctification (γίνομαι).¹ Comp. Tit. iii. 5–7. Hofmann, II. 2, p. 135, would,

in opposition to the simple and clear course of the representation, combine καθαρίσας κ.τ.λ. with the following ἕνα παραστήσῃ, but for the invalid reason that afterwards τὴν ἐκκαθολίαν is repeated, and not the mere αὐτήν used. As if Paul might not have used the mere αὐτήν even with this combination! And how often do all writers repeat the noun with emphasis (so here), or for the sake of perspicuity, instead of using the pronoun! Comp. on iv. 16.— τῷ λοιπῷ τοῦ ὕδατος] (genitive materiae) denotes the well-known bath of water κατ' ἐξοχήν, which is administered by baptism. We have thus here not simply an allusion to baptism (Grotius, Homberg), but a designation of the same (comp. Tit. iii. 5; 1 Cor. vi. 11), and an allusion to the bath of the bride before the wedding day; see on ver. 27.— ἐν ῥήματι belongs to ἀγιάσῃ (comp. John xvii. 17), but is not placed immediately after it, because the two verbal definitions ἀγιάσῃ and καθαρίσας, and again the two instrumental definitions τῷ λοιπῷ τοῦ ὕδατος and ἐν ῥήματι, are intended to stand together, whereby the structure of the discourse is arranged of set purpose conformably to the sense and with emphatic distinctness. ῥήμα is the gospel, τὸ ῥήμα τῆς πίστεως, Rom. x. 8, comp. 17, Eph. vi. 17, Heb. vi. 5, and here stands without an article, because it, denoting the word κατ' ἐξοχήν, could be treated like a proper noun, such as νόμος, χάρις, and the like. The connecting of ἐν ῥήμ. with ἀγιάσῃ is followed also by Jerome, Castalio, Calovius, Morus, Rosenmüller, Winer, p. 125 [E. T. 172], Rückert, Bisping, Bleek.1 Others, however, join it to τῷ λοιπῷ τοῦ ὕδατος (Luther: "by the water-bath in the word"), in which case they understand by ῥήμα conceived of as immediately subsequent to the act of the καθαρίσας κ.τ.λ. The Fathers, too, separate the cleansing and the sanctifying of the person who receives baptism. So e.g. Justin Martyr, de resurrect. in Grabe, Spicil. II. p. 189. Tertull. de resurrect. 3: "Caro abluitur, ut anima emaculetur; caro ungitur, ut anima consecreetur." Cypr. ad Donat. de gratia, p. 3: "Undae genitalis auxilio superioris aevi labo deterrea in expiatum pectus serenum desuper so lumen infudit," etc.

1 Against de Wette's objections is to be observed, (1) that, according to Rom. x. 8, 17, ῥήμα can certainly be taken as the gospel; (2) that sanctification is wrought indeed through the Spirit, but the Spirit is mediated through the gospel, Gal. iii. 5; (3) that the order of the words is not forced, but purposely chosen.
either the baptismal formula (Chrysostom: ἐν ρήματι πόλω; ἐν ὠνόματι τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ νίου καὶ τοῦ ἀγίου πνεύματος; comp. Theodoret, Theophylact, Occumenius, Ambrosiaster, Menochius, Calovius, Flatt, de Wette, and others), or the divine precept (“lavationem ... nitentem divino mandato,” Storr), or the divine promise (“qua vis et usus signi explicatur,” Calvin; comp. Michaelis, Knapp, Tychsen), or “lavacro invocatione divini nominis efficaci” (Erasmus), or the gospel (Augustine, Estius, Flatt, Holzhausen, and others), or the divine power and efficacy in the word of truth, so that ἐν ρήματι is equivalent to ἐν πνεύματι (! Olshausen). But all these explanations break down in presence of the fact, that we should need to read τῷ λαυτρῷ τοῦ ἔθατος τῷ, or τοῦ ἐν ρήμα, since neither τῷ λαυτρῷ nor τῷ ὁδῷ admits of being joined into unity of idea with ἐν ρήματι (such as αἱ ἑνολαι ἐν δόγμασι, ii. 15, or ἡ πλοΐς ἐν Χρ., or the like); as well as of the fact, that the special interpretations of ρήμα, except that of gospel, are purely invented. Others have combined ἐν ρήμα with καθαρίσας (Syriac, which inserts καὶ before ἐν ρήμ.; Bengel, Baumgarten, Matthies, Harless, Baumgarten-Crusius, Hofmann; perhaps also Beza and Calvin; Meier is quite indistinct), in which case likewise ἐν ρήμ. has been explained by some of the words of the institution and their promise (Baumgarten), by others of the gospel (Syriac, Bengel: “in verbo est vis mundifica, et haec exseritur per lavacrum,” comp. Matthies and Baumgarten-Crusius, as also Schenkel), while Harless translates: “by way of utterance, by way of promise,” which can refer only to the promise given with the institution; and Hofmann: with a word, which is alleged to mean: so that He uttered His effective will, that it should become clean. But it is altogether arbitrary, since καθαρίσας already has a modal definition, to attach ἐν ρήματι thereto in addition, and on the other hand to leave ἁγιάζῃ isolated, although ἐν ρήμ. can very suitably as regards sense be attached to ἁγιάζῃ; further, that which cleanses, i.e. that which not merely symbolically represents the cleansing (Schenkel), but does away with the pre-Christian guilt of sin, is baptism, comp.

also 1 Pet. iii. 21, Acts ii. 38, xxii. 16, and not the πήμα, whether we understand thereby the gospel or the words of the institution; lastly, the sense by "way of promise" Paul would have known how to express otherwise than in so indefinite and enigmatic a manner, such as, possibly, by κατ’ ἐπαγγελίαν, Gal. iii. 29; as, indeed, also the sense understood by Hofmann could not have been more indistinctly conveyed than by the bare ἐν πήματι.1 Grotius combines ἐν πήματι with καθάρσ, but supplies ὡς before ἐν τῷ λουτρῷ: "verbo suo quasi balneo." As if one could simply thus supply ὡς! Lastly, Koppe is quite wrong in holding that ἐν πήματι ἦν is in accordance with the Hebrew ברי יבש没有什么 more than the bare ἦν. Not even the LXX. have translated thus barbarously!

Ver. 27. Aim of the ἀγιάση ἐν πήματι, and so final aim of the εἰναι παρέδωκεν ἵπτερ αὐτῆς, to be realized at the Parousia. Comp. on 2 Cor. xi. 2. παραστήσει is already rightly referred to the time of the consummatio saeculi by Augustine, Jerome, Primasius, Thomas, Beza, Estius, Calovius, and others, including Flatt, Rückert, de Wette, Schenkel, Bleek; while the Greek Fathers, Lyra, Cajetanus, Bucer, Wolf, Bengel, and others, including Harless and Hofmann, p. 136, think of an act of Christ in the αἰών οὖν, and many others do not at all declare their views with regard to the time. But if ἦν παραστ. κ.τ.λ. is not to apply to the time of the Parousia, it must either be taken as the design of the καθάρσις (Bengel), or as a parallel to ἦν αὐτὴν ἁγιάση (Harless). The former is not admissible, because ἐν πήματι, which itself belongs to ἀγιάση (see on ver. 26), stands between; nor yet is the latter, because ἁγιάση does not denote the same thing with καθάρσις (see on ver. 26), but the making holy through the word; and this making holy cannot from its nature be parallel to the momentary act of presenting of the church as a glorious and spotless one, but can only be ante-

1 What Hofmann, II. 2, p. 191, oddly enough adduces by way of elucidation: "As the husband by the word, which expresses his will to make a woman his wife, takes away from her the reproach of her virgin state (comp. Isa. iv. 1; 1 Cor. vii. 36), so has Christ done for the church," drags in something entirely foreign to the matter, and, indeed, something very unsuitable, as though the church were thought of as πυρπλινοί ὄψιν ἄραμοι. cedent, so that this presentation must be the final result of the sanctifying which has already taken place through the word. — παραστήσασθαι] might set forth, present, coram sisteret, namely, as His bride. Comp. 2 Cor. xi. 2. The view of Harless, that the church is conceived of not as bride, but as spotless offering (on παραστ. comp. Rom. xii. 1), is opposed to the context, and incorrect also on account of ἐαυτή, by which, in fact, there would result the conception that Christ presents the offering to Himself. No, the union of Christ with His church at the Parousia, in order to confer upon it Messianic blessedness, is conceived of by Paul (as also by Christ Himself, Matt. xxv. 1 ff., comp. Rev. xix. 7 ff.; see also John iii. 29) under the figure of the bringing home of a bride, wherein Christ appears as the bridegroom and sets forth the bride, i.e. His church, as a spotless virgin (the bodily purity is a representa-of the ethical) before Himself, after He has already in the aiōn oistros cleansed it by the bath of baptism (i.e. blotted out the pre-Christian guilt of the church) and sanctified it through His word. To deny the reference of καθαρίσασκητὰ and of ver. 27 to the circumstances of a wedding, and particularly the allusion to the bath to be taken by the bride before the wedding-day (Harless, Baumgarten - Crusius, Hofmann, and others), is an over-refinement of taste at variance with the context. — The presentation in our passage was referred by Kahnis (Abendm. p. 144) to the Lord's Supper, an application which is warranted neither by the context nor by the analogy of 2 Cor. xi. 2 and Matt. xxv. — aíōn ἐαυτή] so that what takes place is not therefore as in the case of the bringing home of actual brides by others, but Christ Himself, as He gave

1 It is certainly obvious that this bathing in the case of an actual bride was not the business of the bridegroom (as Hofmann objects); but in the case of the church conceived as the bride the cleansing by the bath of baptism is the act of the bridegroom (who in fact does not cause the bride, cleansed and sanctified by him, to be presented by others, but presents her to himself), and thus Paul has drawn the figure itself in accordance with the state of matters in the reality delineated, as indeed formerly figures are modified in accordance with the thing to be represented (comp. on Matt. xxv. 1; Gal. iv. 19). If we press the figures beyond the tertium comparationis, no one is any longer appropriate.—On the λαμβάνειν ἁρπαίαν (at which καθαρίζω λαμβάνῃ τὸ ἄνω here glances), comp. specially Bos, Exercit. p. 185 f.; Hermann, Privataalterth. § 81, 6; Becker, Charicles, ii. p. 460 ff.; as also Buxtorf, Synag. p. 625.
Himself to sanctify it, etc., presents the church as bride to Himself at His Parousia, and indeed as ἐνδοξοῦν, in glorious beauty (Luke vii. 25; Isa. xxii. 18, al.), which is with emphasis placed before τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, and subsequently receives by means of μὴ ἔχουσαν κ.τ.λ. a detached, more precise negative definition specially to be brought into prominence. With regard to αὐτὸς ἐαυτῷ, comp. 2 Cor. i. 9; Xen. In the figure is meant a corporeal blemish, but in the reality a moral defilement. The same is the case with προδία, rugam, which occurs only here in the N. T., but often in the classical writers, not in the LXX. or Apocrypha. Special distinctions as to what is intended by the two figures are arbitrary. So e.g. Estius (after Augustine): σπίλα. signifies deformitas operis, and προδια duplicitas intentionis; Grotius: the former applies to the carere vitiiis, the latter to the vegetos semper esse for good (because wrinkles are characteristic of age). — ἡ τι τῶν τοιοῦτων] which belongs to the category of such things, of that which disfigures, like spots and wrinkles. — ἀλλὰ ἵνα ἡ κ.τ.λ.] change of the construction, instead of ἀλλ' ὧν κτλα. as if ἵνα μὴ ἔχῃ κ.τ.λ. had been said before. Ver. 28. οὕτως] To refer this, with Meier and Baumgarten-Crusius, as also de Wette is disposed to do, to the following ὅς (Estius likewise would have it so understood, unless οὕτως καὶ οἱ ἄνδρες ὀφειλοῦσιν be read; which, however, is really to be read, see the critical remarks), might, doubtless, be admissible in itself (see on 1 Cor. iv. 1), but is here quite out of place; because οὕτως would then have an undue emphasis, and the declaration would stand without any inner connection with that which precedes. It relates to what is said from καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς, ver. 25 onwards to ver. 27, and is equivalent to: in accordance with this relation, in keeping with this holy love of Christ for the church. Comp. Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 39; Herm. ad Viger. p. 793. We may add that Zanchius, who is followed by Estius and Harless,1 is in error in saying, "digressus non nihil ad mysteriurn, nunc ad institutum reedit." There was no digression in what precedes, but a delineation of the love of Christ serving as an example for the husbands.— ὁς τὰ ἐαυτῶν σῶματα] not: like their own bodies,2 but: as their own bodies. For Christ loved the church not like His body, but as His body, which the church is and He its head, ver. 23. So is also the husband head of the wife, and he is to love the wife as his body—which conception, however, does not present the Gnostic notion of the πνεύμα (Baur), but, on the contrary, comp. 1 Cor. xi. 3. Schoettgen, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Meier, and others make ὁς τὰ ἐαυτ. σῶματα mean nothing more than: like themselves; but this is in itself quite arbitrary and without support from linguistic usage, and also utterly inappropriate to the example of Christ, since we certainly cannot say of Christ that He loved the church like Himself! In the Rabbinical passages, too, as Sanhedr. f. 76, 2: "qui uxorern amat ut corpus suum," etc., this ut corpus suum is to be taken literally, and that in accordance with the mode of regarding man and wife as one flesh. We may add that Paul does not by means of ὁς τ. ἐαυτ. σῶμ. pass over into another figure, or even to another view of the subject (Rückert), but already, in the preceding description of the love of Christ to the church, his conception has been that Christ loves the church, His bride, as His body, which conception he now first, in the application, definitely indicates, and in vv. 29–31 more particularly elucidates.— ὅ ἀγαπῶν τὴν ἐαυτοῦ γυναῖκα ἐαυτὸν ἀγαφῇ] From the duty of loving their own wives ὡς τὰ ἐαυτῶν σώµατα, results—inasmuch as in fact according to this the wife belongs essentially to the proper self of the husband as such—the proposition of conjugal ethics, that the love of one's own wife is love of oneself. This proposition Paul lays down, in order to treat it more in detail, vv. 29–32, and finally repeat it in the form of a direct precept in ver. 33.

Ver. 29. Τάπ] assigns the reason of what immediately precedes, and that so, that this statement of the reason is intended to impel to the exercise of the self-love involved in the love to the wife. The connection of the thoughts, namely, is this: "He who loves his own wife, loves himself; for, if he did not love her, he would hate his own flesh, which is so repugnant to nature that no one has ever yet done it, but rather everyone does the opposite, as also Christ—and that gives to this natural relation the highest consecration—acts with regard to the church, because this constitutes the members of His body.” — ποτέ] ever, not, as Mayerhoff would take it (Koloss. p. 144): formerly, in the heathen state, the contrast to which is supposed to be: but possibly now, under the influence of an asceticism directed against marriage—a view, which the present tenses that follow ought to have precluded.— τὴν ἐαυτοῦ σάρκα] σάρξ is here indifferent (comp. Hahn, Theol. d. N. T. I. p. 425) without the conception of what is sinful. Paul might have written σῶμα instead (Curtius, vii. 1: "corporibus nostris, quae utique non odimus;” Seneca, Ep. 14: "fateor insitam nobis esse corporis nostri caritatem”), but chose σάρκα, because the idea of the μία σάρξ, which is realized in the married state, is already (see ver. 21) present to his mind. — ἀλλ’] sc. ἐκαυστός. pretation is: "he fosters it," Luther. Without support from linguistic usage.— It is, we may add, self-evident that οὐδεὶς... αὐτὴν expresses a proposition of experience, the correctness of which holds as a general rule, and is not set aside by exceptional cases. The crucifying of the flesh, however, in Gal. v. 24, has regard to the sinful σάρξ. — καὶ τὸν ἐκκλησίαν... ἐκτρέφει καὶ θάλπει, which is here, of course, to be interpreted metaphorically of the loving operation of Christ for the salvation of His church, whose collective prosperity He carefully promotes. To bring out by interpretation specially two elements (Grotius: "nutrit eam verbo et Spiritu, vestiti virtutibus") is arbitrary. According to Kahnis (Abendm. p. 143 f.), Christ nourishes the church as His body by the communication of His body in the Supper. But apart from the fact that θάλπει does not suit this, there is no mention at all of the Lord's Supper in the whole connection. Comp. on παραστ., ver. 27, and see on ver. 30 ff. The καθὼς καὶ τὸν ἐκκλησίαν is the sacred refrain of the whole Christian ethics of marriage; comp. vv. 23, 25.

Ver. 30. Reason why Christ ἐκτρέφει καὶ θάλπει the church: because we are members of His body. μέλη is prefixed with emphasis; for we are not an accident, but integral parts of His body. Comp. 1 Cor. xii. 27.— ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ κ. ἐκ τῶν ὀστῶν αὐτοῦ] More precise definition of the μέλη τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ just said, in order to express this relation as strongly as possible: (proceeding) from His flesh and from His bones. This form of expression is a reminiscence of Gen. ii. 23,1 where Adam expresses the origin of Eve out of his bones and out of his flesh,—to which origin the derivative relation of Christians to Christ is analogous, of course not physically, but in the spiritual, mystical sense, inasmuch as the Christian existence as such—the specific being and spiritual nature of Christians—proceeds from Christ, has in Christ its principle of origination,

1 This reminiscence the more readily suggested itself to the apostle, not only in general, because he was wont to think of Christ as the second Adam (Rom. v. 12 ff.), but also specially because he was just treating of the subject of marriage.

2 That Paul should not prefix is τῷ ἐκκλησίᾳ, as in Gen. ii. 23, but is τῷ ἐκκλησίᾳ, was quite naturally suggested to him by ver. 29. The explanation of Bengel is arbitrary and far-fetched.
as in a physical manner Eve proceeded from Adam. The at any rate non-literalexpressions are not intended to bear minuter interpretation. They do not affirm that believers are produced and taken out of Christ's glorified body (Gess, Person Christi, p. 274 ff.; comp. Bisping), which is already forbidden by the expression “flesh and bones.” Rather is the same thing intended—only brought, in accordance with the connection, into the definite sensuously genetic form of presentation suggested by Gen. l.c.—which elsewhere is denoted by κατ' κτίσις (2 Cor. v. 17; Gal. vi. 15), as well as by ζω δὲ οὐκέτι ἐγώ, ζῷ δὲ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστὸς (Gal. ii. 20), by Χριστὸν ἐνεδύσασθε (Gal. iii. 27), by the relation of the ἐν πνεύμα εἶναι to Christ (1 Cor. vi. 17), and in general by the expressions setting forth the Christian παλαγγελσία.¹ Comp. the κοινονὸν γίνεσθαι θείας φύσεως, 2 Pet. i. 4. With various modifications it has been explained of the spiritual origination from Christ already by Chrysostom (who understood the regeneration by baptism), Ambrosiaster, Theodoret, Oecumenius (ἐὰν αὐτὸς δὲ, καθὼς ἄπαρχε ἡμῶν ἐστι τῆς δεύτερας πλάσεως, ὥσπερ ἐκ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ διὰ τὴν πρώτην), Theophylact, Erasmus, Beza, Vorstius (spirituali tantum ratione ex ipso Christo quasi procreatos esse”), Calvin (“qui spiritus sui virtute nos in corpus suum inserit, ut vitam ex eo hauriamus”), Calovius, Bengel, Matthies, de Wette (who, however, in the second edition, regards the words as spurious), Hofmann, Reiche, and others; while, withal, Koppe (so also Meier) thought only arctissimam quamlibet conjunctionem to be denoted, whereby justice is not done to the genetic signification of the ἐκ. Others explained it: in so far as we have the same human nature as ἡ. So Irenaeus, Jerome, Augustine, Thomas, Michaelis; comp. also Stolz and Rosenmüller. Decidedly erroneous, partly because Paul could not in this sense say: "we are of Christ's flesh and bone," but only the converse: "Christ is of our flesh and bone" (Rom. i. 3, ix. 5; John i. 14); partly because the element of having like nature with Christ would apply not merely to Christians,

but to men as such generally. Others refer it to the crucifixion of Christ: “ex carne ejus et ossibus crucifixis, i.e. ex passione ejus predicata et credita ortum habuit ecclesia,” Grotius. Comp. already Cajetanus, as also Zanchius, Zacharie, Schenkel, having reference to John vi. 51 f., xiv. 18 ff. But the crucifixis is purely imported, and could the less be guessed here, inasmuch as from the words the history of Adam and Eve inevitably came to be recalled; and there is nothing to remind us (in opposition to Schenkel) of the “martyr-stake of the cross,” upon which Christ “gave up” His flesh and bones “and suffered them to be broken” (? see John xix. 33, 36). Others, finally, have explained it of the real communion with the body of Christ in the Lord’s Supper. So recently,¹ in addition to Kahnis and Thomasius, III. 2, p. 73, also Harless and Olshausen, the latter of whom says: “it is the self-communication of His divine-human nature, by which Christ makes us to be His flesh and bone; He gives His people His flesh to eat and His blood to drink.” But not even the semblance of a plea for explaining it of the Supper lies in the words; since Paul has not written καὶ ἐκ τῶν άματων αὐτοῦ, which would have been specific in the case of the Supper, but καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὄστεων αὐτοῦ! Rückert has renounced any attempt at explanation, and doubts whether Paul himself thought of anything definite in the words. A very needless despair of exegesis!

Ver. 31. Not a citation from Gen. ii. 24, but (comp. vi. 2) Paul makes these words of Scripture, which as such were well known to the readers, his own, while the deviations from the LXX. are unimportant and make no difference to the sense. What, however, is spoken, Gen. l.c., of the union of husband and wife, Paul applies by typical interpretation to the coming (future: καταλείψει κ.τ.λ.) union of Christ with the church (see ver. 32), a union which shall take place at the Parousia, up to which time the church is the bride of Christ, and at which it is then nuptially joined with Him (see on

ver. 27)—and so the apostle expresses this antitype of the conjugal union in the hallowed words of Scripture, in which the type, the marriage union in the proper sense, is expressed. We have accordingly to explain it thus: For this reason, because we are Christ’s members, of His flesh and of His bone, shall a man (i.e. antitypically, Christ, at the Parousia) leave father and mother (i.e., according to the mystic interpretation of the apostle: He will leave His seat at the right hand of God) and be united with his wife (with the church), and (and then) the two (the man and the wife, i.e. Christ who has descended and the church) shall be one flesh (form one ethical person, as married persons by virtue of bodily union become a physical unity). Those expositors who, in keeping with the original sense of Gen. i.e., take the words of actual marriage (so most expositors, including Matthies, Meier, Schenkel, Bleek, Rückert1), have against them as well the ἄνθρωπος, which cannot be referred without arbitrariness to anything else than what immediately precedes, as also the future expression, which (as also in Gen. i.e.) must denote something yet to come; and not less the statement of Paul himself, ver. 32, according to which ἄνθρωπος must be interpreted of Christ, and τὴν γυναῖκα of the church, not merely perhaps (Reiche) is to be so interpreted. Hofmann likewise, II. 2, p. 139, understands it of real marriage, and sees all difficulties vanish if we more closely connect ver. 32 with ver. 31, so that τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο sums up the Old Testament passage itself and makes this the subject, and then the sense is: “That, as the passage affirms, the marriage communion is the most intimate of all communions for this reason, because the wife proceeds from the husband—this mystery, which was foreign to the Gentiles, is great. It is a highly significant mystery of the order laid down by the creation, a most important revelation of the divine counsel in this domain, which the apostle interprets as applying to Christ and the church, because marriage in this respect has its higher counterpart in the domain of redemption, but without excluding its validity also for the

married as regards their relation regulated by the creation.” This view is incorrect, for the very reason that to make τὸ μορφὴν be said in reference to the Ἑπεσίαν is quite foreign to, and remote from, the connection; because, further, Paul must have written ἐγὼ δὲ νῦν λέγω; because λέγω does not mean “I say of it,” but “I say it,” i.e. I interpret it; because ἀντὶ τοῦτο would remain entirely out of connection with that which precedes, and thus the passage of Scripture would make its appearance quite abruptly; because, if the reader was to understand the whole passage of Scripture as the subject, summed up in τὸ μορφὴν τοῦτο, of what follows, the apostle must have indicated this, in order to be intelligible, by something like τὸ δὲ ἀντὶ τοῦτον κ.τ.λ., μορφὴν μέγα ἐστίν; and because, finally, the validity of the fundamental law of marriage, ver. 31, for married persons is so entirely self-evident, that a quite unsuitable thought (“but without excluding,” etc.) is attributed to the πλὴν of ver. 33.— Those, further, who explain it of Christ and the church, as Hunnius, Balduin, Grotius, Bengel, Michaelis, and others, are mistaken in believing the connection with Christ already existing in the present αὐτῶν as that which is meant; inasmuch as in the καταλείψει τὸν πατ. κ. τ. μητ. they think of the incarnation (“etiam Christus patrem quasi reliquit,” Bengel), or generally of the fact that “Christus nihil tam carum habuit, quod non nostri causa abdicaverit” (Grotius), or even of the separation of Christ from His nation (Michaelis) or from the synagogue (Bisping); while Harless and Olshausen pass over καταλείψει τὸν πατέρα κ.τ.λ. without more precise explanation, as unessential to the connection and aim, and regard only καὶ ἐσονταὶ οἱ δ. εἰς σ. μ. as the main point, explaining it of the Lord’s Supper. But the whole reference to the already present connection with Christ is incorrect, because this connection

1 What in marriage the fleshly union is, that in the connection of the church with Christ the substantial union by means of the Supper is alleged to be! “As man and wife are indeed always one in love, but in the elements of conjugal union, in which the specific nature of marriage consists, become in a special sense one flesh; so is also the church as a whole, and each congregation, like each soul in it, always one spirit with Christ, the Head of the body; but in the elements of the sacred Supper the believing soul celebrates in a very special sense the union with its Saviour, in that it takes up into itself His flesh and blood, and therewith the was just before expressed in the present form by μέλη ἐσμέν κ.τ.λ., but now upon this present relation is based the setting in of a future one (καταλείψει κ.τ.λ.; observe the future forms), and that by ἀντὶ τοῦτον, quite as in Gen. ii. 24 by means of ἐνεκέν τοῦτον the future relation of marriage is deduced from the then existing relation of Adam and Eve.
These expositors, besides, overlook the fact that in the αἰῶν οὗτος Christ is not yet husband, but until the Parousia still bridegroom of the church (ver. 27), which He only at the Parousia presents to Himself as a purified and sanctified bride for nuptial union. Moreover, the setting aside of the whole portion καταλείψει ἀνθρώπος τοῦ πατ. κ.τ.λ., on the part of Harless and Olshausen, is a purely arbitrary proceeding.— ἀνθρώπος. See Winer, p. 326 [E. T. 456]. It is distinguished from the ἐνεκέν τοῦτον in the LXX. only by its placing the cause and the fact thereby conditioned in comparison with each other according to the conception of requital (for this). Comp. ἄνθρωπος, and see Matthiae, p. 1327; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. I. p. 170. The reference of ἀντὶ τοῦτον, with regard to which many are entirely silent, can be found only in ver. 30: because our relation to Christ is this. See above. Other references, as those of Estius:
"quia mulier formata est ex ossibus et carne viri," and Holzhausen: "because the man, in loving his wife, loves himself" (comp. Meier and Matthies), are forced just because of their taking ver. 31 not according to its mystic reference, but of germ of the immortal body." This fanciful view of Olshausen is without any warrant in the context, and at variance with the future μακαλισμῖν, which must —and that indeed according to Gen. ii.—express something not yet accomplished, but only to be expected in the future. Moreover, the "leaving," etc., does not at all suit the conception of the communion of Christ with believers in the Supper, and least of all the orthodox Lutheran conception of ubiquity.

Nevertheless Kahnis (Abendm. p. 144) has entirely acceded to the view of Olshausen. He objects to the explanation of the union of Christ with the church at the Parousia, that this union cannot possibly be thought of as "a sacrificial renunciation, on the part of Christ, of His heavenly glory." But the matter is neither so thought of nor so represented. That which is meant by μακαλισμῖν, the coming again of Christ from heaven, will—and this was well known to the believing consciousness of every reader—take place not without His heavenly glory, but with that glory; and by the union, which is expressed in the typical representation συμπληρώσεσιν κ.τ.λ., the εὐλαβέσθαι of the believers will then be accomplished. Comp. Col. iii. 4. real marriage. — ἀνθρωπός] a human being, i.e. according to the context, a man (without on that account ἀνθρωπός standing for ἄνηρ, see Fritzsche, ad Matt. p. 593), by which, however, according to the mystical interpretation of the apostle, Christ is antitypically to be understood. — καὶ τὴν μητέρα] is doubtless taken up along with the rest as a constituent part of the words of Adam, but is not destined for a special exposition in the typical reference of the passage to Christ, since καταλείψει τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ can, in accordance with that typical reference, only apply to the descending of Christ from the right hand of God, which will ensue at the Parousia. Then the σύνθρονος of the Father comes down to earth, to wed Himself (Matt. xxv. 1) to the church, the bride, 2 Cor. xi. 2.

Ver. 32. For the understanding of ver. 31 in the sense of the apostle an exegetical gloss was necessary, which is here given: This mystery is great, is important and exalted in its contents, but I say it, adduce it (namely, this mystery, by which is meant just the declaration of Gen. ii. 24), in reference to Christ and the church. — τὸ μνητήριον τοῦτο] So Paul terms those Old Testament words just employed by him, in so far as they have a hidden meaning not recognised without divine enlightenment. With the Rabbins, too, the formula mysterium magnum (Jalkut. Bud. f. 59, 4: קְרִיָּיו מְצוֹרִי) is very common. See Schoettgen, Horae, p. 783 f. — ἐγὼ δέ] ἐγώ, which Holzhausen even declares to be superfluous, has emphasis: I, however (δὲ metabatic), opposed to the possible interpretations which might be given to the mysterious utterance.1 — εἰς Χριστὸν καὶ εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν] so that we have thus under ἀνθρωπός to understand Christ, and under ἡ γυνὴ αὐτοῦ the church. This has been rightly discerned already by the Fathers (see Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Jerome), only they should not have thought of the coming of Christ in the flesh (in connection with which Jerome interpreted τὴν μητέρα of the heavenly Jerusalem; comp. Estius), but of the Parousia. See on ver. 31. Lastly, it is worthy of notice simply under a historical point of view, that Roman Catholics (but not Erasmus, Cajetanus, or Estius), on the ground of the Vulgate, which translates μυστήριον by sacramentum, proved from our passage\(^1\) that marriage is a sacrament. It is not this that is conveyed in the passage, as indeed in general marriage “non habet a Christo institutionem sacramentalem, non formam, non materiam, non finem sacramentalem” (Calovius, and see the Apol. Conf. Aug. p. 202), but it is rather the sacredly ideal and deeply moral character, which is for ever assured to marriage by this typical significance in the Christian view. We may add that monogamy is presupposed as self-evident, but does not form the set purpose of the passage, which would be purely imported (in opposition to Schwegler, p. 387).

Ver. 33. \(Πλην\) is usually explained to the effect, that it leads back to the proper theme after the digression of vv. 30–32, or merely ver. 32 (Olshausen). “Paulus prae nobilitate digressionis quasi oblitus propositae rei nunc ad rem revertitur,” Bengel. A digression, however, has certainly not taken place, but vv. 30, 31 essentially belong to the description of the love of Christ to the church, and ver. 32 was a brief gloss pertaining to the right understanding of ver. 31, and not a digression. And πλην is used by way doubtless of breaking off (Luke xix. 27, al.), but not of resuming. So also here: Yet—not further to enter upon the subject of this μυστήριον—ye also ought (as Christ the church), each one individually, in such manner (οὕτως, i.e. in keeping with the ideal of Christ contained in this μυστήριον) to love his own wife as himself. With καὶ the persons appealed to, and with οὕτως the mode of what they are to do, are placed in a parallel with Christ. — \(οἱ καθ’ ἐνα \) ye one by one, vos singuli, man by man. See Matthiae, p. 1357. The following verb, however, has taken its regimen from οὕτως, not from the proper subject ἡμεῖς, as often also in classical writers. See Matthiae, p. 765; Stallbaum, ad Gorg. p. 503 E; Bornemann, ad Cyrop. iii. 1. 8. — The twofold designation \(οἱ καθ’ ἐνα έκαστος\) strengthens the conception, that each one without exception, etc.— \(ὅσ εαυτόν\) as himself, so that the love issues from, and is determined by, the point of view: \(ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὴν εαυτοῦ γυναῖκα εαυτόν\) ἀγαπᾷ, ver. 28. — ἡ δὲ γυνὴ ἵνα φοβηται τὸν ἀνδρα] ἡ δὲ γυνὴ is with emphasis absolutely (Winer, p. 506 [E. T. 722]) prefixed, not yet dependent on the notion of volo (see on 2 Cor. vili. 7) to be supplied in thought before ἵνα. Hence: but the wife—she ought to fear her husband. In this brief stern closing utterance, the apostle, while stating the obligation of the husband to love the wife ὡς ἐαυτῶν, yet secures as concerns the wife the relation of subordination, namely, the duty of reverence for the husband—a duty, which is not done away with by that obligation on the part of the husband. "Optime cohaeret concordia, si utrimque constabunt officia," Erasmus, Paraphr. Rightly, we may add, in accordance with the context Oecumenius defines the notion of φοβηται: ὡς πρέπει γυναῖκα φοβεῖσθαι, μὴ δουλοπρεπῶς. See vv. 22-24.

Ver. 1. After ἓμαν Elz. Scholz, Tisch. have ἐν περίπτωσιν, in opposition to B D* F G, It. Marcion, Cyril, Cypr. Ambrosiast. Rejected by Mill, suspected by Griesb., deleted by Lachm. and Rück., but defended (on the ground of Col. iii. 20) by Harless and Reiche. The latter with justice; since the witnesses who omit do not preponderate, and since for the purpose of a gloss not ἐν περίπτωσιν but ὡς τῷ περίπτωσιν (v. 22) would have suggested itself. If, however, ἐν περίπτωσιν had been added from Col. 1c, it would have been brought in after δικαίων. — Ver. 5. τοῖς περίπτωσιν κατὰ σάρκας Lachm. and Rück. : τοῖς κατὰ σάρκας περίπτωσιν, following A B N, min. Clem. Dam. Theophyl. From Col. iii. 22. — Ver. 6. The article before Χριστῷ is, with Lachm. and Tisch., in accordance with preponderating testimony, to be deleted. — Ver. 7. ὡς, which is wanting with Elz., is decidedly attested. — Ver. 8. ὅτι τί ἱκανός] Lachm. and Rück. have ἱκανός τί ἱάν, which was also recommended by Griesb., following A D E F G, min. Vulg. It. Bas. Dam. Other variations are, ἱκανός τί ἱάν (B), ἵνα τοῦ ἱκανοῦ (,), ἵνα τί τοῦ ί. ί. (N), τί ἱάν τις ἱκανός (1, 27, 32, al.), ἵνα τί ἱκανός. (46, 115, al., Theoph. ms.), ἵνα τις ἱκανός. (62, 197, al.), ἵνα τις (οὐ τί) ἄνθρωπος (Chrys. in Comment.). The best attested reading is accordingly ἱκανός τί ἱάν. But if this had been the original one, it would not be at all easy to see how it could have given rise to variations, and specially to the introducing of the τί. The Recepta, on the other hand (again adopted by Tisch.), became very easily the source of the other readings, if the copyist passed over from ὁτί at once to the subsequent τί. Thus arose the corruption ὅτι ἱκανός σώφρον ἀγ. λ., and thence, by means of different ways of restoring what had been omitted, were formed the variations, in which case ἄνθρωπος came in instead of ἱκανός as a gloss, designed to indicate the general sense of ἱκανός. — κομίσται A B D* F G N* Petr. alex.: κομίσται.1 So Lachm. Tisch. Rück. In Col. iii. 25, likewise, these two forms are found side by side in the critical witnesses. Nevertheless here, as there, κομίσται is more strongly attested, and hence to be preferred. κομίσται may have originated in a reminiscence of 1 Pet. v. 4. — Ver. 9.

many variations, among which aυτων x. ιμων (so Lachm. Tisch. Rück. and Harless; recommended also by Griesb.) is that most strongly attested, namely, by A B D* min. Arm. Vulg. Goth. Copt. Clem. Pet. Chrys. (alicubi) Damasc. Jer. Aug. Pel. Rightly. The mention of the slaves (aυτων) appeared here partly in itself, partly from a comparison with Col. iv. 1, not relevant; hence the Recepta (anew defended by Reiche) ιμων aυτων, in which case aυτων applies to the masters, just as aυτων ιμων in E F G, and merely ιμων in 17. Others, leaving the xai standing, at least prefixed ιμων (L, min. Syr. p. Fathers: ιμων xai aυτων). Nevertheless testifies in favour of Lachmann’s reading by iαυτων xai ιμων, whereasϋ like the others, has regarded the prefixing of ιμων (thus υμ. και iαυτ.) as necessary. — Ver. 10. το λοιτων] Lachm. and Rück. read τοι λοιτων, following A B N* 17, 73, 118, Cyril, Procop. Dam. Thus at least not preponderantly supported. In favour, however, of το λοιτων, testifies also the reading δυναμουσθε, which is found in B 17, instead of the following δυναμουσθε, and probably has arisen from the confounding on the part of the copyist of the N in λοιτων with the N in Ενδυναμουσθε. Since, moreover, το λοιτων better accords with the sense than τοι λοιτων (see on Gal. vi. 17), I hold the latter to be a mechanical repetition from Gal. l.c. — The following αδιλφοι μου is wanting in B D E N* Aeth. Arm. Clar. Germ. Goth. Cyril, Damasc. Lucifer, Ambrosiast. Jerome; while in A F G, codd. Ital. Syr. p. Vulg. Theodoret, only μου is wanting, αδελφοι μου, which Griesb. also holds suspected, and Lachm. Tisch. Rück. have deleted, is an addition from Phil. iii. 1, iv. 8; 2 Thess. iii. 1; 2 Cor. xiii. 11. And this addition, too, tells in favour of the originality of το λοιτων. — Ver. 12. ημα] B D* F G, 52, 115, Syr. Ar. pol. Slav. ant. It. Goth. Lucif. Ambrosiast.: ιμα. Recommended by Griesb., adopted by Lachm. and Rück. But how naturally would ιμα suggest itself to the copyists, inasmuch as the whole context speaks in the second person! — του ςκωνος τουν] Elz. has του αυτου τουν, in opposition to decisive witnesses. Expansion by way of gloss. — Ver. 16. εις σαν] Lachm. reads εις ταν, for which more current expression, however, only B N, min. Vulg. It. and some Fathers testify, and several vss. are doubtful. — τα before πεπρ. is wanting, indeed, in B D* F G, and is deleted by Lachm., but was easily regarded as superfluous and thus passed over. — Ver. 17. δεικασθη is wanting in D* F G, codd. It. and various Fathers, while A D K L and min. read δεικασθη (so Matth.), and Arm. places δεικασθη before την πεμφ. Suspected by Griesb. But if no verb had stood, and a gloss had been supplied, we should most naturally expect ἀναλάβετε to be added. In consideration, however, of the seeming redundancy, it is much more likely that the omission was made. The infinitive has come in after the preceding ὁμισθή. — Ver. 18. άπρατο τῷῳτο] A B K, min. Basil, Chrys. (in commentary) Damasc. have only άπρατο; D* F G have άπρατο, and Latins in illum or in illo s. ipso, which readings likewise tell in favour of the simple άπρατο. With reason (in opposition to Reiche) τῷῳτο is disapproved by Griesb., and rejected by Lachm. Tisch. Rück. An exegetical, more precise definition in accordance with Paul’s practice elsewhere. — Ver. 19. δοσὶ] Elz. has δοσὶ, in opposition to decisive testimony. Perhaps occasioned by a mere repetition of the ά in copying. — Ver. 21. σίδηρα καὶ έμπας Lachm. and Rück. read καὶ έμπας σίδηρα. So A D E F G ά, min. Vulg. It. Theodoret, Lat. Fathers. In what follows Lachm. and Rück. place γυμνίου before άφα, following B D E F G ά, min. It. Goth. Ambrosiast. The latter from Col. iv. 7. And the former is to be explained from the circumstance that καὶ έμπας was, through inattention to the reference of the καὶ, omitted as superfluous (so still in cod. 17), and was thereupon reintroduced according to the order of the words which primarily suggested itself, by which means it came before σίδηρα.

Contents.—How the children (vv. 1–3), the fathers (ver. 4), the slaves (vv. 5–8), and the masters (ver. 9) are to demean themselves. Concluding exhortation to the acquiring of Christian strength, for which purpose the readers are to put on the whole armour of God, and thus armed to stand forth, in order victoriously to sustain the conflict with the diabolic powers (vv. 10–17); in connection with which they are ever to apply themselves to prayer, and to make intercession for all Christians, and, in particular, for the apostle (vv. 18–20). Sending of Tychicus (vv. 21, 22). Concluding wishes (vv. 23, 24).

Ver. 1. 'Εν κυρίῳ] characterizes the obedience as Christian, the activity of which moves in Christ, with whom the Christian withal stands in communion of life. The reference to God (“praeter naturae legem . . . Dei quoque auctoritate sanctum docent,” Calvin; comp. Wolf) is already refuted by the very εν φόβῳ Χριστοῦ, iv. 21, placed at the head of all these precepts, as also by the standing formula itself (comp. Col. iii. 20). — δικαιοῦ] right, i.e. κατὰ τὸν Θεοῦ νόμον, Theodoret. Comp. Col. iv. 1; Phil. i. 7, iv. 8; 2 Thess. i. 6; Luke xii. 57. — In favour of infant baptism, i.e. in favour of the view that the children of Christians were as early as that time baptized, nothing at all follows from the exhortation of the apostle to the children (in opposition to Hofmann, Schriftbew. II. 2, p. 192). The children of Christians were, through their fellowship of life with their Christian parents, even without baptism ἄγιοι (see on 1 Cor. vii. 14; Acts xvi. 15), and had to render to their parents obedience ἐν κυρίῳ.

Ver. 2. The frame of mind towards the parents, from which the ὅπακονεῖν just demanded of the children must proceed, is the τιμάν. Hence Paul continues, and that in the express hallowed words of the fourth commandment: τίμα τῶν πατέρα σου κ.τ.λ. (Ex. xx. 12; Deut. v. 16). And as he had before subjoined the general motive of morality τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι δίκαιον, so he now subjoins the particular incitement ἡτίς ἐστιν ἐντολή πρότη ἐν ἐπαγγελ., so that the relation as well of the two precepts themselves, as of their motives, nn. 1, 2, is climactic, and ἡτίς . . . ἐπαγγελία can by no means be a parenthesis (Griesbach, Rückert, and others). — ἡτίς utpote quae, specifies a reason. See on iii. 13.— ἐντολή πρότη ἐν ἐπαγγελ.] The article is not necessary with the πρότη, which is in itself defining, or with the ordinal numbers generally (Kühner, ad Xen. Anab. vii. 7. 35). Comp. Acts xvi. 12; Phil.
i. 12, al. And the statement that the commandment first as to number in the Decalogue has a promise, is not inconsistent with the facts, since the promise, Ex. xx. 6, Deut. v. 10, is a general one, having reference to the commandments as a whole. Just as little is it to be objected that no further commandment with a promise follows in the Decalogue; for Paul says πρότη, having before his mind not only the Decalogue, but also the entire series of all the divine precepts, which begins with the Decalogue.
Among the commandments, which God has given at the time of the Mosaic legislation and in all the subsequent period, the commandment: “Honour father and mother,” is the first which is given with a promise. The apparent objection is thus removed in a simple manner by our taking ἐντολή as divine commandment in general, and not restricting it to the sense “commandment in the Decalogue.” If Paul had had merely the Decalogue in mind, he must have written: the only commandment.\footnote{According to Bleek, Paul had not at the moment the form of the following commandments of the Decalogue definitely before his mind. But with such inadvertence no one is less to be charged than Paul.} For the assumption that "it is the first, not with regard to those which follow, but to those which have preceded" (Harless), would not even be necessarily resorted to, if it were really established—which, however, is assumed entirely without proof—that Paul had taken into account merely the ten commandments, seeing that he and every one of his readers knew that no other commandment of the ten had a promise. From the arbitrary presupposition, that merely the Decalogue was taken into account, it followed of necessity in the case of other expositors, either that they restricted \( \epsilon ντολή \) simply to the commandments of the second table\footnote{In opposition to this, Erasmus aptly remarks: "Hæc distinctio non est fundata in a. literis, sed est commentum recentiorum theologorum." In general it is to be observed that, according to Philo and Josephus, each of the two tables contained free commandments, not, as Augustine (whom Luther followed) supposed, the first three, and the second seven,—and thus two sacred numbers, in which case, moreover, there was found in the first table a reference to the Trinity.} (Ambrosiaster, Zachariae, Michaelis, the latter misconstruing the absence of the article before \( \epsilon ντολή \ \pi ρωτη \) as favouring his view), in connection with which Holzhausen even maintained that \( \epsilon ντολή \) never denotes a commandment in reference to God (see Matt. xxii. 36, 38; Mark xii. 28); or else that they tampered with the numerical sense of \( \pi ρωτη \), and made out of it a very important, a chief commandment (Koppe, Morus, Flatt, Matthies, Meier). What a feeble motive would thus result! and \( \pi ρωτη \) would in fact mean the most important, which, however, the fifth commandment is not (Matt. xxii. 38; Rom. xiii. 9, 10; Gal. v. 14). Further, the proposal of Erasmus, that \( \pi ρωτη \ \epsilon ν \ \epsilon παραγελά \) should be held to apply to the definite promise of ver. 3, mention of which first occurs in the fifth commandment, is not worthy of attention (Harless), but erroneous; because the same promise occurs after the fifth commandment only with a general reference to the commandments as a whole (Deut. v. 33, vi. 2), as it has also occurred even before the fifth commandment in such a general form (Deut. iv. 40); and because, besides, \( \epsilon παραγελά \) could not but have the article. — ἐν ἐπιστευεῖν. is to be closely attached to πρῶτη, as expressing that, wherein this commandment is the first, the point in which the predicate pertains to it. Comp. Diodor. xiii. 37: ἐν δὲ εὐγενεῖα καὶ πλούσῳ πρῶτος, Soph. O. R. 33: πρῶτος ἐν συμφοραῖς. In point of promise it is the first (οὗ τῇ τάξει, Chrysostom).

Ver. 3. After Paul has just said: "the first commandment with promise," he now adduces the definite promise, on account of which this predicate pertains to that commandment, and that according to the LXX. of Ex. xx. 12, Deut. v. 16, with immaterial variation (LXX.: καὶ ἐν μακροχρ. γένη ἐπὶ τ. γ.), and with omission of the more precise designation of Palestine, which in the LXX. follows after γῆς. This omission, however, was not occasioned by the circumstance that the promise was to bear upon long life in general (Calvin, Koppe, Rückert, Matthies, Schenkel, and many), in which case, indeed, ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς might also have been left out; but Paul could so fully presuppose acquaintance with the complete words of the promise, that with the mere ἐπὶ γῆς enough was said to preclude any misunderstanding which should depart from the original sense: in the land, i.e. Palestine. So, namely, in accordance with the sense of the original text well known to the readers, is ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς to be understood, not as "upon earth;" for the promise is here adduced historically. Hence its original sense is not at all to be altered or spiritualized, or to be taken conditionally, as e.g. was done by Zanchius: if the promise is not fulfilled simpliciter, yet it is fulfilled commutationes in majus; or by Calovius: "Promissiones temporales cum conditione intelligendae, quantum sc. temporalia illa nobis salutaria fore Deus censuerit;" comp. also Estius, who at the same time remarks (so again typically Olshausen, comp. Baumgarten-Crusius) that the land of Canaan prefigures the kingdom of heaven (comp. Matt. v. 5), and the long life everlasting blessedness. Nor is it to be said, with Bengel, Morus, Stolz, Rosenmüller, Flatt, and Harless, that the earthly blessing is promised not to the individual, but to the people. For in the summons "thou shalt" in the Decalogue, although the latter on the whole (as a whole) is directed to the people, the individual is withal addressed, as is evident from the very commandments in which the neighbour is mentioned, and as is the view underlying all the N. T. citations from the Decalogue-law, Matt. xv. 4, v. 21, 27; Rom. vii. 7, xiii. 9. — ευ σου γένηται] Comp. Gen. xii. 13; Deut. iv. 40; Ecclus. i. 13. A Greek would employ ευ πᾶσχεν, ευ πράττεν, or the like, or even ἀγαθά σου γένηται. — καὶ ἔσῃ κ.τ.λ. is regarded by Winer, p. 258 [E. T. 361], and de Wette (comp. already Erasmus), not as dependent upon ἵνα, but as a direct continuation of the discourse. But this expedient is unnecessary, inasmuch as ἵνα with the future actually occurs in the case of Paul (see on 1 Cor. ix. 18; Gal. ii. 4); and is, moreover, here out of place, since there is not any direct continuation of the discourse in those passages of the O. T., the sense of which Paul reproduces. At Rev. xxii. 14 also the future and subjunctive are interchanged after ἵνα, as also in classical writers the same variation after ἐπιφ οις is well known (see on the erroneous canon Davianus, Bremi, in Schaeff. Appar. ad Dem. I. p. 277; Ellendt, Lex. Soph. II. p. 335 f.; Buttmann, Neutest. Gramm. p. 184 [E. T. 213]). And how aptly do the two modes of construction here suit the sense, so that ἔσῃ expresses the pure becoming realized, and ἔσῃ μακροχρόνον the certain emergence and continued subsistence (Kühner, II. p. 491). The change is a logical climax.

Ver. 4. The duty of fathers, negative and positive. — καὶ οἱ πατέρες and ἔσῃ fathers, so that καὶ quickly subjoins. Comp. ver. 9. Paul does not address the mothers, not because he is thinking of the training of grown-up children (so quite arbitrarily Olshausen), nor on account of an Oriental depreciation of the mothers (Rückert), in opposition to which view—even apart from passages like Prov. xiv. 1, xxxi. 10 ff. — the whole teaching of the apostle concerning the relation of husband and wife in marriage (v. 25 ff.) is decisive; but because the husband, as the head of the wife, has, even in the bringing up of children the rule, and the wives join in prosecuting the work of training ὑποτασσόμεναι τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν (v. 22 ff.). — μὴ παραργίζετε] by injustice, harshness, hastiness of temper, undue severity, and the like, whereby the children are irritated against the fathers; at Col. iii. 21
there is subjoined as motive ἵνα μὴ ἀθυμώσωι. — ἐκπρέφετε] not as at v. 29, but of the bringing up, and that on its moral side. Prov. xxiii. 24; 1 Macc. vi. 15, 55; Plato, Gorg. p. 471 C; Polyb. vi. 6. 2. See Wytenbach, ad Plut. de educ. p. 66; Lennep. ad Phalar. p. 350 b. — ἐν παιδείᾳ καὶ νοθεσίᾳ κυρίων] ἐν denotes the regulative element, in which the training is to take place. Comp. Polyb. i. 65. 7: τὸν ἐν παιδείᾳ κ. νόμοις κ. πολιτικοῖς ἐθέσων ἐκτεθραμμένων. Hence: in the Lord's training and correction. παιδεία is the general term, the training of children as a whole, and νοθεσία is the special one, the reproof aiming at amendment, whether this admonition take place by means of words (νοθετικοὶ λόγοι, Xen. Mem. i. 2. 21) or of actual punishments (οἱ μὲν ράβδου νοθετοῦσι κ.τ.λ., Plut. Quaest. Rom. p. 283). See Gellius, vi. 14; Kypke, Obs. ad 1 Thess. v. 14. With regard to the form, in place of which the better Greek has νοθέτησι, see Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 512. κυρίων means neither to the Lord (Luther), nor according to the doctrine of Christ (Erasmus, Beza, Vatablus, Menochius, Estius, Zachariae, Koppe, Morus, Rosenmüller, Bisping, and others, including Holzhausen, who, however, takes κυρ. of God), nor worthily of the Lord (Matthies), or the like; but it is the genitive subjecti, so that the Lord Himself is conceived as exercising the training and reproof, in so far, namely, as Christ by His Spirit impels and governs the fathers therein. Comp. Soph. Electr. 335: ἀπελευθερωθεὶς ταῦτα κυρίων κελεύσαι διδάκται, κοῦδὲν ἐκ σαρκὸς λέγει. Rückert is unable to come to a decision, and doubts whether Paul himself had a distinct idea before his mind.

Ver. 5. On vv. 5—9, comp. Col. iii. 22—iv. 1. — Here, too, there is doubtless no approval, but at the same time no disapproval of the existing slavery in itself, which—in accordance with the apostolic view of a Christian's position (Gal. iii. 28; 1 Cor. vii. 22; comp. Tit. ii. 9 f.; 1 Pet. ii. 18)—like every other outward relation of life, ought not to affect spiritual freedom and Christian unity; hence at 1 Cor. vii. 21 it is expressly prescribed that the slave is to remain in his position (comp. Ignat. ad Polyc. 4; Constit. Apost. iv. 12, vii. 13; viii. 32, 2 f.), as, indeed, Paul even sent back Onesimus after his conversion to his master, without requiring of the latter his manumission.\footnote{The reforming efficacy of the gospel addresses itself to knowledge and feeling, out of which, and so out of the inner life of faith, the alterations of the outward forms and relations of life gradually take shape with moral necessity by way of consequent; as history, too, has shown, which, when it has developed itself in a revolutionary manner, has either violently precipitated, or forsaken, or inverted that course, or else in its necessary development has encountered such hindrances as disowned the influence of this necessary development, and yet could not arrest it. "Civitates malis studiis malisque doctrinis repente evertuntur," Cic. Leg. ii. 15. 89. It is not, however, to be overlooked that by the apostle’s mode of regarding the relation of freedom and slavery which he found existing, the slavery introduced by Christians, the enslaving of free men, the slave trade, etc., are by no means justified—rather are these things impossible, where the knowledge and feeling, that spring from evangelical faith, are the principles which shape the life and the forms assumed by it.} — τοῦς κυρίους κατὰ σάρκα] to those, who in a merely human relation are your rulers, i.e. your human masters, whose slaves you are as regards outward temporal position in life, by way of distinction from the higher divine master, Christ; hence also τοὺς κυρίους κ. σ. stands without repetition of the article, combined into one idea; comp. on ii. 11. As Paul immediately after makes mention of the higher master Christ (ὡς τὸν Χριστόν), it was very natural for him, in view of the twofold and very diverse relation of masters which was now present to his mind, to add κατὰ σάρκα, in the use of which any special set purpose cannot be made good. This in opposition to Chrysostom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, who find in it a consolatory allusion to the δεσποτεία πρόσκαιρος; in opposition to Calvin, who supposes a softening of the relation to be conveyed in this expression, as being one that leaves the spiritual freedom untouched (comp. Beza, Zanchius, Grotius, Flatt, and others); and in opposition to Harless, who finds in the predicate the thought that, although in another domain they are free, yet in earthly relations they had masters. — μετὰ φόβου κ. τρομ. i.e. with that zeal, which is ever keenly apprehensive of not doing enough. Comp. on 1 Cor. ii. 3; 2 Cor. vii. 15; Phil. ii. 12. — εν ἀπλότητι τῆς καρδ. ὑµ. ] State of heart, in which the obedience with fear and trembling is to take place; it is to be no hypocritical one, in which we are otherwise minded than we outwardly seem, but an upright, inwardly true one, without duplicity of disposition. and act. Comp. Rom. xii. 8; 2 Cor. viii. 2, ix. 11; Jas. i. 5. In Philo joined with ἀκακία. See Loesner, Obs. p. 262. Oecumenius well observes: ἐν γὰρ καὶ μετὰ φόβον κ. τρόμου δουλεύειν, ἄλλ' οὐκ ἐξ εὐνοίας ἄλλα κακούργως. — ὡς τῷ Χριστῷ] as to Christ, so that you regard your obedience to your masters as rendered to Christ (comp. v. 22). See ver. 6. An allusion to reward (Theodoret) is imported.

Vv. 6, 7. The ἐν ἀπλοτητί . . . Χριστῷ just spoken of is now more precisely described. — μὴ κατ' ὑπάρχον ὡς ἀνθρ. not after an eye-serving manner as men-pleasers. The word ὑπάρχον δουλεῖα occurs nowhere else than here and Col. iii. 3, but its meaning is, from its composition, clear. Comp. ὑπάρχον μέσον in the Constitt. Apost. iv. 12. 2. It is the service which is rendered to the eyes of the master, but in which the aim is merely to acquire the semblance of fidelity, inasmuch as one makes himself thus noticeable when seen by the master, but is in reality not such, acting, on the contrary, otherwise when his back is turned. Theodoret: τὴν οὖν ἐξ εἰλικρινοῦς καρδίας προσφερομένην θεραπεύειν, ἄλλ' τῷ σχήματι εὐχρησμένην. — ἀνθρωπώπωσιν] Comp. Ps. liii. 5; Psalt. Sal. iv. 8. 10, in Fabric. Cod. Pseud. i. p. 929; and see Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 621. The men whom such slaves endeavour to please are just their masters, and the fault of this behaviour lies in the fact that such endeavour is not conditioned by the higher point of view of serving Christ and doing the will of God, but has as its aim simply human approbation. Even of slaves Matt vi. 24 holds good. Comp. Gal. i. 10. — ἄλλ' ὡς δοῦλοι Χριστοῦ, ποιοῦντες τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκ φυσικῆς] but as slaves of Christ, in that ye do the will of God from the heart. The contrast lies in δοῦλοι Χριστοῦ (comp. ver. 7), and ποιοῦντες κ.τ.λ. is a modal definition of this their service, whereupon there follows in ver. 7 yet a second modal definition. Now to be a slave of Christ and not to do the will of God, and that indeed ex animo (from a genuine impulse of the soul), would be a contradiction, seeing that God is the Father of Christ, has sent Christ, and is the Head of Christ (1 Cor. xi. 3, iii. 23). According to Rückert, ὡς δοῦλοι Χριστοῦ is subordinate, and ποιοῦντες τ. θελ. τ. Θεοῦ ἐκ φυσικῆς forms the contrast: "but doing as Christ's servants the will of God from the heart." But after ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι, comp. with ver. 5, this subordination of ὁς δοῦλοι Χρ. is altogether arbitrary and opposed to the context. ἐκ ψυχῆς is no doubt attached to what follows by Syriac, Chrysostom, Jerome, Bengel, Koppe, Knapp, Lachmann, Harless, de Wette; but μετ' εἰνοιας (comp. Xen. Oec. xii. 5. 7), since it expresses the well-meaning disposition, already in fact includes in itself the sense of ἐκ ψυχῆς (ἐκ ἀντικειμένων, Col. iii. 23; Mark xii. 30, 33; Luke x. 27; Joseph. Antt. xvii. 6. 3; Xen. Anab. vii. 43; Nicarch. epigr. 2; Theocr. Idyll. iii. 35); and it is arbitrary to assume, with Harless, that ἐκ ψ. expresses the relation of the true servant to his service, and μετ' εἰνοιας his relation to his master.— ὀς τῷ κυρίῳ sc. δουλεύοντες, as to the Lord, the true mode of regarding his service as rendered to Christ.— καὶ οὐκ ἂνθρ.; Comp. on Gal. i. 1.

Ver. 8. Εἰδότες Incitement to the mode of service demanded, vv. 5–7: since ye know that whatever good thing each one shall have done, he shall bear off this (the good done) from the Lord, whether he be slave or free.— ὅ εἶν τι ἐκαστος] εἶν in the relative clause with the subjunctive instead of ἐν (Buttmann, neut. Gramm. p. 63 [E. T. 72]), and τι separated from ὅ, as in Plato, Legg. ix. p. 864 Ε: ἢν ἂν τινα καταβλάψῃ, Lys. p. 160: δή ἂν τίς ὑμᾶς εὕ τοι; — τοῦτο κομ.] Expression of entirely adequate recompense. See on 2 Cor. v. 10.— παρὰ κυρίον from Christ, at the judgment. — εἶτε δοῦλος, εἶτε δεσπότ.] ἐδοκεὶ τῷ παρόντι διὸ πεποιημένη τὴν δουλείαν καὶ δεσποτείαν, μετὰ δὲ γε τὴν ἐντυθένθην ἐκδημίαν οὖν ἐτὶ δουλείας καὶ δεσποτείας, ἀλλ' ἄρετής καὶ κακίας ἐσομένης διαφοράν, Theodoret. It is evident, we may add, from our passage that Paul did not think of a ceasing of slavery among Christians before the Parousia,—a view which was very naturally connected with the conception of the nearness of the latter, which did not admit of his looking forth upon the development of centuries.

Ver. 9. Καὶ οἱ κύριοι like καὶ οἱ πατέρες, ver. 4.— τὰ αὐτὰ] the same. The master, namely, who treats his servants μετ' εἰνοιας, does essentially (measured by the disposition as the inner essence of the act) the same thing towards the slaves as the slave serving μετ' εἰνοιας does towards his master. —
Negative modal definition of the τὰ αὐτὰ ποιέτε πρὸς αὐτοὺς, especially to be laid to heart in the circumstances by the masters. By ἀνείντες may be denoted either the abating, or the entire leaving off, giving up, of the threatening. In the former sense (Wisd. xvi. 24) it has been taken by Erasmus ("minus feroces minusque minabundi"), Vatablus, Zeger; but certainly the latter sense alone (comp. Thucyd. iii. 10. 2: ἔξθραν ἀνείντας) is appropriate to the τὰ αὐτὰ ποιέτε; especially as τὴν ἀπειλήν (with the article) denotes not threatening in general, but the threatening, namely, "quemadmodum vulgus dominorum solet" (Erasmus, Paraphr.). — εἰδότες] specifying a motive, as in ver. 8. Comp. Col. iv. 1; Barnab. 19; Constit. ap. vii. 13. Inasmuch, namely, as they know that He, who is Lord as well of the slaves as of the masters (καὶ αὐτὸν καὶ ὑμᾶν, see the critical remarks), is in heaven (the exalted Christ), and with Him is no partiality, so that He gives to the master as such no preference over the slave as such: how should they not cease to comport themselves with their threatening, as though Christ were not the Lord of both in heaven—in heaven, whence at the judgment He will, without partiality, alike sustain the injured rights of the slaves, and punish the unchristian threatening of the masters, which, instead of operating by moral means, only terrifies by rude authority. Comp. Seneca, Thyest. 607:

"Vos, quibus rector maris atque terrae Jus delit magnum necis atque vitae Ponite inflatos tumidosque vultus.
Quicquid a vobis minor extimescit,
Major hoc vobis dominus minatur ;
Omne sub regno graviore regnum est."

As to the notion of προσωποληψία, see on Gal. ii. 6.

Ver. 10.1 After this special table of domestic duties laid down since v. 21, now follows, in a full energetic effusion down to ver. 20, a general final exhortation, winding up the whole paraenetic portion of the Epistle (iv. 1 ff.). — τὸ λοιπὸν as concerns the rest, namely, what you have still to do in addition to what has been hitherto mentioned. Comp. 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Phil. iii. 1, iv. 8; 1 Thess. iv. 1; 2 Thess. iii. 1. — chap. vi. 11. What they are to do in order to become thus strong, in connection with which the figurative discourse represents the readers as warriors (comp. 2 Cor. x. 4; 1 Thess. v. 8; Rom. vi. 13, 23, xiii. 12; 1 Tim. i. 18, vi. 12; 2 Tim. iv. 7). The more familiar, however, this figure was to the apostle, the more freely and independently is it here carried out, although (comp. on τοῦ σωτηρίου, ver. 17) a reminiscence of Is. lix. 17 (comp. Wisd. v. 17 ff., and thereon Grimm, Handb. p. 119 f.) underlies it. The very fact that not merely single pieces of the armour (Luther: harness), but the whole armour of God is put on ("ne quid nobis desit," Calvin), resides the capacity of resistance to the devil. If τοῦ Θεοῦ had the emphasis (Harless), there must have been a contrast to other spiritual weapons (for that no material, actual weapons were meant, was self-evident). Rightly, therefore, have most expositors kept by the literal meaning of πανοπλία, complete suit of armour of the heavy-armed soldier, ὀπλίτης (see Herod. i. 60; Plato, Legg. vii. p. 796 B; Bos, Exercit. p. 192; Ottii Spicileg. p. 409); and the assertion (recently by Harless) that it here is equivalent generally to armatura (Vulgate, which was justly censured by Beza), is arbitrary and contrary to linguistic usage; even in Judith xiv. 3, 2 Macc. iii. 25, the notion of the complete equipment is to be adhered to. According to Polybius, vi. 23. 2 ff., there belong to the Roman πανοπλία shield, sword, greaves, spear, breastplate, helmet. But the circumstance that in the detailed carrying out of the figure, ver. 13 ff., not all these parts are mentioned (the spear is wanting), and withal some portions are brought in (girdle, military sandals) which did not belong exclusively to the equipment of the heavy-armed soldier, but to military equipment in general, can, least of all in the case of Paul, occasion surprise or betray a special set purpose. Whether, we may add, the apostle thought of a Jewish or a Roman warrior is, doubtless, substantially in itself a matter of indifference, since the kinds of armour in the two cases were in general the same (see Keil, Arch. § 158); but the latter supposition is the most natural, inasmuch as the Roman soldiery wielded the power in all the provinces, Paul himself was surrounded by Roman soldiery, and for most Gentile readers in a non-Jewish province the term πανοπλία could not but call up the thought of the Roman soldier. Even though Paul had, as we must suppose, the recollection of Isa. lix. 17 when he was employing such figurative language, this did not prevent his transferring the prophetic reminiscence to the conception of a Roman warrior (in opposition to Harless).

1 According to de Wette, we have here "a playful imitation in detail of 1 Thess. v. 8, in which use is made of Is. lix. 17 (perhaps also of Wisd. v. 17 ff.)." An unwarranted judgment, inasmuch as Paul himself could here carry out more comprehensively his figure elsewhere thrown out in only a few outlines, and this he has done worthily and without attempt at play. An imitator, on the other hand, would here have assigned no other signification to the pieces of armour mentioned 1 Thess. v. 8 than they bear in that place.

— τοῦ Θεοῦ] genitivus auctoris: the πανοπλία, which comes from God, which God furnishes. Sense without the figure: "appropriate to yourselves all the means of defence and offence which God bestows, in order to be in a position to withstand the machinations of the devil." — στήναι πρός] stand one's ground against; a military expression in keeping with the figure. See Kypke, II. p. 301. Comp. Thucyd. v. 104, and Poppo's note thereon. The same thing is implied by στήναι with the dative, Hom. II. xxi. 600. Comp. ἀντίστητε τῷ διαβόλῳ, Jas. iv. 7. — τὰς μεθοδ. See on iv. 14. The plural denotes the concrete manifestations, Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 1. 11.

1 Of the manner in which Paul himself wore and wielded the πανοπλία τοῦ Θεοῦ, his whole labours and each one of his Epistles afford the most brilliant evidence; the latter especially in such outbursts as Rom. viii. 31 ff.; 2 Cor. vi. 4 ff., 11, 23 ff. Comp. also 2 Cor. x. 4 f.
Luther aptly renders: the wily assaults.— τοῦ διαβόλου] "principis hostium, qui ver. 12 ostenduntur," Bengel.

Ver. 12. I am warranted in saying πρὸς τὰς μεθόδ. τοῦ διαβόλου; for we have not the wrestling with feeble men, but we have to contend with the diabolic powers. This contrast Paul expresses descriptively, and with what rhetorical power and swelling fulness! Observe, moreover, that the conflict to which Paul here refers is, according to ver. 13, still future; but it is by ἐστιν realized as present.— οὐκ... ἀλλὰ] The negation is not non tam, or non tantum (Cajetanus, Vataablus, Grotius, and others), but absolute (Winer, p. 439 ff. [E. T. 622]); since the conflict on the part of our opponents is one excited and waged not by men, but by the devilish powers (though these make use of men too as organs of their hostility to the kingdom of God).1 — ἡ πάλη] The article denotes generically the kind of conflict, which does not take place in the case of the Christians (ἡμῖν); they have not the wrestling with blood and flesh. Nothing else, namely, than lucta, a wrestling, is the meaning of the πάλη (Hom. Η. xxiii. 635, 700 ff.; Xen. Mem. iv. 8. 27; Plat. Legg. vii. 795 D; and Ast. ad Legg. p. 378), a word occurring only here in the N. T., and evidently one specially chosen by the apostle (who elsewhere employs ἄγων or μάχη), with the view of bringing out the more strongly in connection with πρὸς ἀλμα καὶ σάρκ. the contrast between this less perilous form of contest and that which follows. Now, as the notion of the πάλη is not appropriate to the actual conflict of the Christians πρὸς τὰς ἄρχας κ.τ.λ., because it is not in keeping either with the πανοπλία in general or with its several constituent parts afterwards mentioned ver. 14 ff., but serves only to express what the Christian conflict is not; after ἀλλὰ we have not mentally to supply again ἡ πάλη, but rather the general notion of kindred signification ἡ μάχη, or μαχετέον,2 as frequently with Greek writers (see Döderlein, de brachyl. in his Reden u. Aufs. ii. p. 269 ff. Krüger, Regist. zu Thucyd., p. 318), and in the

N. T. (Buttmann, Newtest. Gramm. p. 336 [E. T. 392]) we have to derive from a preceding special notion an analogous more general one. What we have to sustain, Paul would say, is not the (less perilous) wrestling contest with blood and flesh, but we have to contend with the powers and authorities, etc. We have accordingly neither to say that with πάλη Paul only lighted in passing on another metaphor (my own former view), nor to suppose (the usual opinion) that he employed πάλη in the general sense of certamen, which, however, is only done in isolated poetic passages (Lycophr. 124, 1358), and hence we have the less reason to overlook the designed choice of the expression in our passage, or to depart from its proper signification. — ἐν τῶι ἀλμα καὶ σάρκα i.e. against feeble men, just as Gal i.16. Only here and Heb. ii. 14 (Lachmann, Tischendorf) does ἀλμα stand first, which, however, is to be regarded as accidental. Matthies (so already Prudentius, Jerome, Cajetanus) understands the lusts and desires having their root in one's own sensuous individuality; but this idea must have been expressed by πρὸς τὴν σάρκα alone without ἀλμα (Gal. v. 17, 24, al.), and is, moreover, at variance with the context, since the contrast is not with enemies outside of us, but with superhuman and superterrestrial enemies.— πρὸς τὰς ἀρχὰς This, as well as the following πρὸς τὰς ἐξουσίας, designates the demons, and that according to their classes (analogous to the classes of angels),¹ of which the ἀρχαί seem to be of higher rank than the ἐξουσίαι (see on i. 21), in which designation there is at the same time given the token of their power, and this their power is then in the two following clauses (πρὸς τοῖς . . . ἐπομενοίς) characterized with regard to its sphere and to its ethical quality.² The exploded views, according to which human potentates of different kinds were supposed to be denoted by ἀρχ., ἐξουσ. κ.τ.λ., may

N. be sc. in Wolf.—πρὸς τῶν κοσμοκράτων τῶν σκότων τοῦτον] i.e. against the rulers of the world, whose domain is the present darkness. The σκότος τοῦτο is the existing, present darkness, which, namely, is characteristic of the αἰῶν τοῦτος, and from which only believers are delivered, inasmuch as they have become φῶς ἐν κυρίῳ, τέκνα τοῦ φωτός (iv. 8, 9), being translated out of the domain opposed to divine truth into the possession of the same, and thus becoming themselves ὡς φωστήρες ἐν κόσμῳ (Phil. ii. 15). The reading τοῦ σκότους τοῦ αἰῶνος τοῦτον is a correct gloss. This pre-Messianic darkness is the element adverse to God, in which the sway of the world-ruling demons has its essence and operation, and without which their dominion would not take place. The devils are called κοσμοκράτορες (comp. Orph. H. viii. 11, xi. 11), because their dominion extends over the whole world, inasmuch as all men (the believers alone excepted, ii. 2) are subject to them. Thus Satan is called ὁ θεὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος τοῦτον, 2 Cor. iv. 4, ὁ ἄρχων τοῦ κόσμου τοῦτον, John xii. 31, xvi. 11 (comp. John xiv. 30), and of the world it is said that ὁ κόσμος δολὸς ἐν τῷ Πονηρῷ κεῖται, 1 John v. 19. The Rabbins, too, adopted the word רַעֵם רֵאָם, and employed it sometimes of kings, while they also say of the angel of death that God has made him κοσμοκράτωρ. See Schottgen, Horae, p. 790; Buxtorf, Lex. Talmud. p. 2006 f.; Wetstein, p. 259. Later also the Gnostics called the devil by this name (Iren. i. 1), and in the Testamentum Salomonis (Fabricius, Pseudepigr. i. p. 1047) the demons say to Solomon: ἡμεῖς ἐσμένα τὰ λεγόμενα στοιχεῖα, οἱ κοσμοκράτορες τοῦ κόσμου τοῦτον. The opinion that the compound has been weakened into the general signification rulers (Harless) is not susceptible of proof, and not to be supported by such Rabbinical passages as Bresh. rabba, sect. 58 f., 57. 1: "Abrahamus persecutus quatuor κοσμοκράτωρας," where κοσμοκράτας denotes the category of the kings, and this chosen designation has the aim of glorifying. See also, in opposition to this alleged weakening, Shir. R. 3, 4: "Tres reges κοσμοκράτωρες: dominantes ab extremitate mundi ad extremitatem ejus, Nebucadnezar, Evilmerodach, Belsazar." —πρὸς τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας] against the spirit-hosts of wickedness. The adjective neuter, singular or plural, is collective, compe-hending the beings in question according to their qualitative category as a corporate body, like τὸ πολιτικὸν, the burgess-body (Herod. vii. 103); τὸ ἰππικὸν, the cavalry (Rev. ix. 16); τὰ ληστρικὰ, the robbers (Polyaen. v. 14, 141), τὰ δοῦλα, τὰ

Moral wickedness is their essential quality; hence the devil is pre-eminently ὁ πονηρός. The explanation spirituals nequitias (Erasmus, Beza, Castalio, Clarius, Zeger, Cornelius a Lapide, Wolf, and others) is impossible, since, if τὰ πνευματικα expressed the quality substantively and raised it to the position of subject (see Matthiae, p. 994; Kühner, II. p. 122), we should have to analyse it as: the spiritual nature, or the spiritual part, the spiritual side of wickedness, all of which are unsuitable to the context.— ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις] Chrysostom, Theod-

Heinsius, Clarius, Calovius, Glass, Witsius, Wolf, Morus, Flatt, and others incorrectly render: for the heavenly possessions, so that it would indicate the object of the conflict, and ἐν would stand for ἐντέρο or διά. Against this view we may urge not the order of the words, since in fact this element pushed on to the end would be brought out with emphasis (Kühner, II.
p. 625), but certainly the ἐν, which does not mean on account of,¹ and τὰ ἐπουράνια, which in our Epistle is always meant in a local sense (see on i. 3). The view of Matthies is also incorrect, that it denotes the place where of the conflict: "in the kingdom of heaven, in which the Christians, as received into that kingdom, are also constantly contending against the enemies of God." τὰ ἐπουράνια does not signify the kingdom of heaven in the sense of Matthies, but the heavenly regions, heaven. Rückert, too, is incorrect, who likewise understands the place where of the conflict, holding that the contest is to be sustained, as not with flesh and blood, so also follows another course. See on Matt. vi. 7; John xvi. 30; Acts vii. 29; not upon the same solid ground, but away in the air, and is thus most strictly mars iniquus. Apart from the oddness of this thought, according to it the contrast would in fact be one not of terrestrial and superterrestrial locality, but of solid ground and baseless air, so that Paul in employing ϵν τοις ἐπουραν. would have selected a quite inappropriate designation, and must have said ϵν τῶν ἄν. Baumgarten-Crusius gives us the choice between two incorrect interpretations: the kingdom of spirits, to which the kingdom of Christ too belongs, or the affairs of that kingdom. The correct connection is with τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πομπίας, so that it expresses the seat of the evil spirits. So Jerome, Ambrosiaster, Luther, Beza, Calvin, Vatablus, Estius, Grotius, Erasmus Schmid, Bengel, Koppe, and many, including Usteri, Meier, Holzhausen, Harless, Olshausen, de Wette, Bleek. This “in the heavenly regions” is not, however, in accordance with the context, to be understood of the abode of God, of Christ, and of the angels (iii. 10); but, according to the popular view (comp. Matt. vi. 26)—in virtue of the flexible character of the conception “heaven,” which embraces very different degrees of height (compare the conception of the seven heavens, 2 Cor. xii. 2)—of the superterrestrial regions, which, although still pertaining to the domain of the earth’s atmosphere, yet relatively appear as heaven, so that in substance τὰ ἐπουράνια here denotes the same as ὅ ἄν, by which at ii. 2 the domain of the Satanic kingdom is accurately and properly designated. This passage serves as a guide to the import of ours, which is wrongly denied by

Hahn (Theol. d. N. T. I. p. 336 f.) on the basis of an erroneous interpretation of ἀνεπ, ii. 2. According to the Rabbins, too, the lower of the seven heavens still fall within the region of the atmosphere. See Wetstein, ad 2 Cor. xii. 2. And the reason why Paul does not here say ἐν τῷ ἀέρι is, that he wishes to bring out as strongly as possible the superhuman and superterrestrial nature of the hostile spirits, for which purpose to name the air as the place of their dwelling might be less appropriate than to speak of the heavenly regions, an expression which entirely accords with the lively colouring of his picture.1 Semler and Storr, ignoring this significant bearing and suitability of the expression, have arbitrarily imported a formerly, as though the previous abode of the demons had any connection with the matter! Schenkel has even imported the irony of a paradox, which has the design of making the assumption of divine power and glory on the part of the demons ridiculous, as though anything of the sort were at all in keeping with the whole profound seriousness of our passage, or could have been recognised by any reader whatever! Hofmann finally (Schriftbeweis, I. p. 455) has, after a rationalizing fashion, transformed the simple direct statement of place into the thought: “not limited to this or that locality of the earthly world, but overruling the same, as the heavens encircle the earth.” The thought of this turn so easily made Paul would have known how to express—even though he had but said: τὰ δύνα ἡ ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, or more clearly: τὰ δύνα πανταχόν ὑπὸ τῶν ὀυρανῶν. The absence of a connective article is not at all opposed to our interpretation, since τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πωμῆς ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις might the more be combined into one idea, as it was the counterpart of such spirits upon earth. Comp. τοῖς πνευμαίοις ἐν τῷ νότι αἰών, 1 Tim. vi. 17, and see on ii. 11, iii. 10.— The πρὸς, four times occurring after ἀλλά,

1 Entirely uncalled for, therefore, and less in keeping with the colouring of the passage, would be the alteration already discussed in Photius, Quaest. Amphiloche. 94, whereby, namely, τίς had changed the ἐποιμαίοις into ἐπουρανιοῖς—a conjecture approved by Erasmus, Beza, and Grundling (in Wolf). Luther, who translates “under the heaven,” probably did so, not as taking ἵ for ἔ,—like Alting subsequently (in Wolf),—but by way of explanation. Already in Homer ἰσμοῖς is, as is well known, employed of the higher region of air (under the firmament). See Nägelsbach, Hom. Theol. p. 19.

T. 398].—As at ii. 2, so here also, Gnosticism is found by Baur in expression and conception, because, forsooth, Marcion and the Valentinians designated the devil as the κοσμοκράτωρ, and the demoniac powers as τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρᾶς (Iren. i. 5. 4, i. 28. 2). This is the inverting method of critical procedure.

Ver. 13. Ἀδὰ τοῦτο] because we have to fight against these powers.—ἀναλάβετε] the usual word for the taking up of armour. See Kypke and Wetstein. The opposite: κατατίθημι. —ἀντιστήναι] namely, the assaults of the demons.—ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πονηρᾷ] The evil day means here, according to the context, neither the present life (Chrysostom, Oecumenius, who at the same time believed βραχὺν τὸν τῷ πολεμοῦ καιρὸν to be hinted at), nor the day of death (Erasmus Schmid), nor the day of judgment (Jerome); nor yet, as most expositors suppose, in general the day of conflict and of peril, which the devil prepares for us (so also Rückert, Harless, Matthies, Meier, Winzer, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Bleek), for every day was such, whereas the evil day here manifestly appears as a peculiar and still future day, for the conflict of which the readers were to arm themselves. Hence also not: every day, on which the devil has special power (Bengel, Zachariae, Olshausen); but the emphatic designation ἡ ἡμέρα ἡ πονηρά could suggest to the reader only a single, κατ’ ἥχον morally evil, day well known to him, and that is the day in which the Satanic power (ὁ Πονηρὸς) puts forth its last and greatest outbreak, which last outbreak of the anti-Christian kingdom Paul expected shortly before the Parousia (see Usteri, Lehrbegriff, p. 348 ff.). Comp. also the ἐνεστῶς αἰῶν πονηρός, Gal. i. 4, and the remark thereon.—καὶ ἀπαντᾷ κατεργασάμενοι στῆναι] This στῆναι corresponds to the preceding ἀντιστήναι, of which it is the result; and in the midst, between ἀντιστήναι and στῆναι, lies ἀπαντᾷ κατεργασ.: “to withstand in the evil day, and, after you shall have accomplished all things, to stand.” The latter expression is the designation of the victor, who, after the fight is finished, is not laid prostrate, or put to flight, but stands. Comp. Xen. Anab. i. 10. 1. What is meant by ἄπαυτα, is necessarily yielded by the connection, namely, everything which belongs to the conflict in question, the whole work of the combat in all its parts and actions. The κατεργάζεσθαι retains its ordinary signification περαγεῖν, consecere, consummare (comp. van Hengel, ad Rom. I. p. 205), and is not, with Oecumenius, Theophylact, Camerarius, Beza, Grotius, Calovius, Kypke, Koppe, Flatt, Holzhausen, Harless, Olshausen, de Wette, Bleek, and others, to be taken in the sense of debellare, overpower, in which sense it is, like the German abthun and niedermachen and the Latin consecere, usual enough (see Kypke, II. p. 301), but is never so employed by Paul—frequently as the word occurs with him—or elsewhere in the N. T., and here would only be required by the text, if ἄπαυτα were the reading. ¹ De Wette objects to our interpretation as being tame. This, however, it is not, and the less so, because κατεργάζεσθαι is the characteristic word for a great and difficult work (Herod. v. 24; Plato, Legg. iii. p. 686 E, al.; and see Fritzsche, ad Rom. I. p. 107), and ἄπαύτα also is purposely chosen (all without exception; see Valckenaer, Schol. I. p. 339). To be rejected also is the construction of Erasmus, Beza (who proposes this explanation alongside of the rendering prostratis, and is inclined to regard it as the better one), Calixtus, Morus, Rosenmüller, and others: “omnibus rebus proba comparatis ad pugnam” (Bengel). This would be παρασκευασάμενοι (1 Cor. xiv. 8), and what a redundant thought would thus result, especially since στήναι would then be not at all different from ἄντιστήνας! Lastly, the translation of the Vulgate, which is best attested critically: in omnibus perfecti (comp. Lucifer, Ambrosiaster, Pelagius), is not to be regarded, with Estius, as the sense of our reading, but expresses the reading καταεργασμένοι, which is, moreover, to be found in a vitiated form (καταεργασμένοι) in codex A. Erasmus conjectured a corruption of the Latin codices.

Ver. 14. In what manner they accordingly, clad conformatly to the preceding requirement in the παυσάλια τοῦ Θεοῦ, are to stand forth. — στήριγμα is not again, like the preceding στήριγμα, the standing of the victor, but the standing forth of the man ready for the combat. Besides Isa. lix. 17, Wisd. v. 17 ff., see also Rabbinical passages for the figurative reference of particular weapons to the means of spiritual conflict, in Schoettgen, Horae, p. 791 f. — περιζωσάμενοι τὴν ὀσφών] having your loins girt about. Comp. Isa. xi. 5. For the singular τ. ὀσφ., comp. Eur. Electr. 454: ταχυτόρος πόδα, and see Elmsley, ad Eur. Med. 1077. The girdle or belt (ξυστήρ, covering the loins and the part of the body below the breastplate, also called ζώνη, Jacobs, ad Anthol. VIII. p. 177, not to be confounded with ξώμα, the lower part of the coat of mail) is first mentioned by the apostle, because to have put on this was the first and most essential requirement of the warrior standing armed ready for the fight; to speak of a well-equipped warrior without a girdle is a contradiction in adjecto, for it was just the girdle which produced the free bearing and movement and the necessary attitude of the warrior. Hence it is not to be assumed, with Harless, that Paul thought of the girdle as an ornament. Comp. 1 Pet. i. 13. — ἐν ἀληθείᾳ] instrumental. With truth they are to be girt about, i.e. truth is to be their girdle. Comp. Isa. xi. 5. As for the actual warrior the whole aptus habitus for the combat (this is the tertium comparationis) would be wanting in the absence of the girdle; so also for the spiritual warrior, if he is not furnished with truth. From this it is at once clear that ἀληθεία is not to be taken objectively, of the gospel, which, on the contrary, is only designated later, ver. 17, by ἡμα Θεοῦ; but subjectively, of truth as inward property, i.e. harmony of knowledge with the objective truth given in the gospel. The explanation sincerity (Calvin, Boyd, Estius, Olshausen, Bisping, and others) is, as expressive only of a single virtue, according to the context too narrow (compare the following δικαιοσύνη, πίστις κ.τ.λ.), and the notion, moreover, would merge into that of the following δικαιοσύνη, an objection which applies likewise to the explanation Christian integrity (Morus, Winzer). — τὴν θώρακα

II. iii. 332), so with you δικαιοσύνη is to be that, which renders your breast (heart and will) inaccessible to the hostile influences of the demons. δικαιοσύνη is here Christian moral rectitude (Rom. vi. 13), inasmuch as, justified through faith, we are dead to sin and live ἐν καινότητι ζωῆς (Rom. vi. 4). Harless and Winzer understand the righteousness by faith, by which, however, inasmuch as this righteousness is given with faith, the θυρεός τῆς πίστεως, subsequently singled out quite specially, is anticipated. As previously the intellectual rectitude of the Christian was denoted by ἀλήθεια, so here his moral rectitude by δικαιοσύνη.

Ver. 15. And the service which the ἐντομομάτα, the military sandals, Xen. Anab. iv. 5. 14 [Josephus, B. J. vi. 1. 8] (caligae, compare the Heb. יֵקָד, Isa. ix. 4; see Gesenius, Thes. II. 932; Bynaeus, de calce. Hebr. p. 83 f.), render to the actual warrior, enabling him, namely, to advance against the enemy with agile and sure step, the ἑτομασία τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τῆς εἰρήνης is to render to you spiritual warriors, inasmuch as by virtue of it you march briskly and firmly against the Satanic powers.—ὑποδησάμενοι κ.τ.λ.] having your feet underbound with the preparedness of the gospel of peace. ἐν does not stand for et? (Vulgate, Erasmus, Vatablus, and others), but is instrumental, as in ver. 14, so that the ἑτομασία is conceived of as the foot-clothing itself. Beza well remarks: "non enim vult nos docere dumtaxat, oportenros esse calceatos, sed calceos etiam, ut ita loquar, nobis praebet." — ἑτομασία (with classical writers ἑτομότης, Dem. 1268, 7, but see also Hippocr. p. 24, 47) is preparedness,1 whether it be an outward standing ready (Josephus, Antt. x. 1. 2: δισχίλιοις ἐκ τῆς ἐμὸν παρούσῃ ἱπποῦς εἰς ἑτομασιὰν ὑμῖν παρέχειν ἑτομος εἴμα), or an inward being ready, promptitudo animi. So LXX. Ps. x. 17, comp. ἑτομή ἢ καρδία, Ps. lvii. 7, cxii. 7, where the LXX. indicate the notion of a prepared mind, which is expressed in Hebrew by forms of the stem נ, by the use of ἐπομαῖα and ἐπομος, following the signification of making ready, adjusting, which נ has in all the conjugations of it which occur (Deut. xxxii. 6; Ps. viii. 4; Gen. xliii. 16; Prov. xix. 29; Neh. viii. 10; Ps. lix. 5), alongside of the signification of laying down, establishing, from which the former one is derived. Hence the LXX. translate ἡ βασίλεια (foundation, as Ps. lxxxix, 15) by ἐπομαῖα; not as though in their usage ἐπομαῖα signified foundation, which it never does, but because they understood ἡ βασίλεια in the sense of ἐπομαῖα. So Ezra ii. 68, where the house of God is to be erected upon ἡ βασίλεια, upon the preparation thereof, i.e. upon the foundation already lying prepared. So also Ezra iii. 3; Ps. lxxxix. 15; Dan. xi. 20, 21. Wrongly, therefore, have Wolf (after the older expositors), Bengel, Zachariae, Morus, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Bleek, and others, explained ἐπομαῖα by fundamentum or firmitas; so that Paul is supposed to indicate “vel constantiam in tuenda religione Christi, vel religionem adeo ipsam, certam illam quidem et fundamentum, cui insistere possis, similem,” Koppe. This is not only contrary to linguistic usage (see above), but also opposed to the context, since the notion does not suit the figurative conception of putting on shoes (ἐνδυόντες δέ). It is the readiness, the ready mind; not, however, for the proclamation of the gospel (so, in some instances with a reference to Isa. lxi. 7, Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Pelagius, Erasmus, Luther, Vatablus, Clarinus, Cornelius a Lapide, Erasmus Schmid, Estius, Grotius, Calovius, Calixtus, Michaelis, and others, including Rückert, Meier, Baumgarten-Crusius),—since, in fact, Paul is speaking to fellow-Christians, not to fellow-teachers,—but the promptitudo—and that for the conflict in question—which the gospel bestows, which is produced by means of it. So Oecumenius (who has this interpretation alongside the former one), Calvin, Castalio, and others, including Matthies, Holzhausen, Harless, Olshausen, Winzer, de Wette, Schenkel. The explanation of Schleusner: “instar pedum armaturae sit vobis doctrina salutaris ... quae vobis semper in promptu sit,” is to be rejected on account of ver. 17, according to which the gospel is the sword.

Subject-matter of the gospel, and that purposely designated in harmony with the context. For the gospel proclaims peace καὶ ἐξοχή, i.e. peace with God, Rom. v. 1, Phil. i. 20, and produces precisely thereby the inner consecration of courageous readiness for the conflict in question (Rom. viii. 31, 38, 39). At variance with the context, Erasmus, Paraphr., makes it: "evangelium, quod non tumultu, sed *tolerantia tranquillitateque defenditur;" and Michaelis holds: the peace between Jews and Gentiles is meant. If, however, it is taken, with Koppe and Morus, in accordance with the more extended sense of διήκον (comp. Rom. x. 15), the salvation-bringing (rather: the salvation-proclaiming, comp. i. 13) gospel, this is done without any justification from the text, and to the injury of the special colouring of the several particulars. Winzer, finally, contrary to the unity of the sense, combines peace with God and everlasting salvation.

By the three pieces previously mentioned, vv. 14, 15 (which were all made fast to the body), the body is clothed upon for warlike purposes; what is still wanting, and must be added to all that has preceded, is shield, helmet, sword, vv. 16, 17. — τὸν θυρεόν] θυρεός, which Polybius mentions and more fully describes as the first part of the Roman πανοιχιά (vi. 23. 2 ff.), is, with Homer, that which is placed in front of the doorway and blocks the entrance (Od. ix. 240, 313); and only with later writers (Plutarch, Strabo, etc.) is the shield (see Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 336, and Wetstein, ad loc.), and that the scutum, the large shield, 4 feet in length and 2½ feet in width, as distinguished from the small round buckler, clypeus, ἀσπίς. Paul does not say ἀσπίς, because he is representing the Christian warrior as heavy-armed. — τῆς πιστεως] Genitivus appositionis, as τῆς δικαιοσύνης, ver. 14. The faith, however, is not the faith of miracles (Chrysostom), but the fides salvifica (ii. 8), by which the Christian is assured of the forgiveness of his sins on account of the sacrificial death of Christ, and at the same time is assured of the Messianic blessedness (i. 7, ii. 5 ff., iii. 12), has the Holy Spirit as the earnest of everlasting life (i. 13, 14), and consequently has Christ in the heart (ii. 17; Gal. ii. 20), and as child of God (i. 5; Rom. viii. 15 f.; Gal. iv. 5 ff.) under the government of grace (Rom. viii. 14) belongs so wholly to God (Rom. vi. 11; comp. 1 John iii. 7 ff.), that he cannot be separated by anything from the love of God towards him (Rom. viii. 38); and on his part is consecrated only to the service of God (i. 4; Rom. vii. 4, 6, vi. 22), and hence through God carries off the victory over the power of Satan opposed to God (Rom. xvi. 20; 2 Thess. iii. 3). Only wavering faith is accessible to the devil (2 Cor. xi. 3; comp. 1 Pet. v. 8, 9).

— ἐν φόρτιον] by means of which, i.e. by holding it in front. — δινομοσθὲν] for the conflict in question is future. See on vv. 12, 13. — τοῦ πονηροῦ] of the morally evil one κατ’ ἠξοχήν, i.e. the devil; 2 Thess. iii. 3; Matt. v. 37, vi. 13, xiii. 19, 38; John xvii. 15; 1 John v. 19.— τὰ πυρπομένα] those set on fire, the burning ones. Comp. Apollod. Bibl. ii. 5. 2; Leo, Tact. xv. 27, ed. Heyn.; also πυρφόροι διατηνιθίηα in Thucyd. ii. 75. 4; βῆλη πυρφόρα, Diod. xx. 96; Zosim. Hist. p. 256, 2. The malleoli are meant, i.e. arrows tipped with inflammable material (tow, pitch) and shot off after being kindled, which, known also to the Hebrews (see expositors on Ps. vii. 14), were in use among the Greeks and Romans, and are to be distinguished from the javelins of the same kind (falaricæ, see Vegetius, iv. 8). For the description of the malleoli, see Ammian. Marcell. xxiii. 4; and see, in general, Lydus, Agonist. p. 45, de re mil. p. 119, 315; Spanheim, ad Julian. Orat. p. 193. Poisoned arrows (Od. i. 260 f.; Virg. Aen. ix. 773; Ps. xxxviii. 3; Job vi. 4; and see Lyd. de re mil. p. 118) are not meant (as supposed by Boyd, Hammond, Bochart), since these are not on fire (πυρπομένα), but excite a fire (inflammation). The aim of the predicate, we may add, is to present in strong colours the hostile and destructive character of the Satanic assaults; but more special explanations of its import, such as of the burning desires excited by Satan (Chrysostom, Theophylact; comp. Oecumenius), or of doubts and of the anguish of despair (Boyd), are inappropriate; and the more so, inasmuch as in the whole context the apostle is speaking of diabolic assaults in general, not of particular kinds thereof. — αφέσωμεν] The shields of the Greeks and Romans were as a rule of wood, with a thick coating of leather (Hom. Il. v. 452; Herod. vii. 91; Polyb. i.e.; Plin. viii. 39; and see, in general, Lipsius, de milit. Rom. iii. 2, p. 109 ff.). So Paul conceives of faith under the figure of such a shield, which not only prevents the missiles from injuring the warrior, but also by reason of its coating brings it about that these do not set on fire the wood of the shield, but must needs be themselves extinguished, so that thus the warrior, by holding the shield in front of him, can quench the fiery arrows.

Ver. 17. We have to prefix not a full stop, as is done by Lachmann and Tischendorf, seeing that ver. 18 has reference to the whole from στήρες onward, vv. 14—17 (see on ver. 18), but only a comma. Paul, namely, passes over from the participial construction into that of the verbum finitum, as at i. 20, —a change to which he was drawn by the increasing vivacity of his figurative conception, which, moreover, induced him now to prefix the object (περίκεφαλαίαν and μάχαιραν, ver. 17).

— In natural sequence he brings forward first the taking of the helmet, and then that of the sword; because the left hand already grasps the shield (ver. 16), and thus after the taking of the sword there is no hand free. — τοῦ σωτηρίου] again genitive of apposition. The salvation, i.e. the salvation κατ’ ἐξοχήν, the salvation of the Messianic kingdom, of which the Christian is partaker (before the Parousia, as an ideal possession, Rom. viii. 24 1), serves, appropriated in his consciousness, to protect him against the assaults of the devil aimed at his everlasting life, like the helmet, which defends the warrior.

1 Hence Paul in 1 Thess. v. 8 says: περίκεφαλαίαν καὶ μάχαιραν, which, however, does not justify in our passage the explanation hope of salvation, given to it by Cajetanus, Calvin, Zanchius, Boyd, Estius, Grotius, Calixtus, Michaelis, Rosenmüller, Meier, Winzer, and others. from deadly wounds on the head. As to the Roman helmets, see Lipsius, de milit. Rom. iii. 5, p. 122 ff. For the use of σωτήριον as a substantive, comp. Luke ii. 20, iii. 6; Acts xxviii. 28; frequently met with in the classics and the LXX.; see Schleusner, Thea. sub voce. Neither Christ Himself (Theodore, Bengel) nor the gospel (Holzhausen) is meant. It is true that the word σωτήριον is not elsewhere used by Paul; but here it is explained as a reminiscence from the LXX. Isa. lxxv. 17. — δέξασθε receive, namely, from God (ver. 13), who offers you this helmet.— τὴν μάχαιραν τοῦ πνεύματος] The genitive cannot here be appositional (in opposition to Harless, Olshausen, Schenkel, and older expositors), since there follows the explanation δ' ἐστιν ῥῆμα Θεοῦ, from which it is clear that the sword of the Spirit is not the Spirit itself, but something distinct therefrom, namely, the word of God (comp. Heb. iv. 12). Comp. also Bleek. If Paul had wished to designate the Spirit itself as sword, the explanation δ' ἐστιν ῥῆμα Θεοῦ would have been inappropriate, inasmuch as the word of God and the Holy Spirit are different things;¹ in Romans, too, πνεῦμα means nothing else than the Holy Spirit. The μάχαιρα τοῦ πνεύμ. is the sword, which the Holy Spirit furnishes (comp. τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, vv. 11, 13), and this sword is the word of God, the gospel (comp. on v. 26), the contents of which the Spirit brings vividly to the consciousness of the Christian, in order that he may defend himself by the divine power of the gospel (Rom. i. 16) against the assaults of the diabolic powers, and may vanquish them, as the warrior wards off and vanquishes the enemy with the sword. Limitations of the ῥῆμα Θεοῦ, either to the commandments of God (Flatt), or to the divine threatenings against the enemies of the Christians (Koppe), are as arbitrary and inappropriate as is the explaining τοῦ πνεύματος of the human spirit (Morus, Rosenmüller), or by πνευματικήν (Grotius, Michaelis, and others; comp. already Chrysostom and Erasmus),

which, according to Grotius, is to serve "mollies dis translationibus," but yet would have again to be explained by τοῦ πνεύματος in the sense of the Holy Spirit. — δ ἐστι applying, according to the ordinary attraction, to τὴν μάχαιραν. Olshausen, in accordance with his erroneous conception of τοῦ πνεύματος, refers it to the latter. So already Basil, contr. Eunom. 11, who proves from our passage that not only the Son, but also the Spirit is the Word!

Remark on vv. 14–17.—In the exposition of these several portions of the armour of the spiritual warrior, it is just as unwarrantable to press the comparisons, by pursuing the points of comparison into such particular details as it may please us to select from the various uses of the pieces of armour in question (an error which several of the older expositors committed),—whereby free room is given for the play of subjectivity, and the vivid objective delineation of the apostle's figure is arbitrarily broken up,—as it is, on the other hand, arbitrary to disregard the differences in the figures derived from military equipment, and to say: "universa potius armorum notio tenenda est." (Winzer, l.c. p. 14; comp. Morus, Rosenmüller, and others).
The essential characteristic—the specific main point—whereby the pieces named are distinguished from each other in respect of that for which they serve, must be furnished by the nature of the comparison with the respective means of spiritual conflict; so that Paul must have been conscious why he here designated, e.g., δικάσωμι as the breastplate, faith as the shield, etc., namely, inasmuch as he looked at the former really from the point of view of the essential destination of the breastplate, the latter from that of the essential destination of the shield, etc. Otherwise his representation would be a play of figures, of which the separate images, so different in themselves, would have no basis in the conception of what is represented. To this there is nothing opposed in the fact that here δικάσωμι appears as the breastplate, while at 1 Thess. v. 8 it is faith and love which so appear; for the figurative mode of regarding the subject can by no means, with a mind so many-sided, rich, and versatile as that of St. Paul, be so stereotyped that the very same thing which he has here viewed under the figure of the protecting breastplate, must have presented itself another time under this very same figure. Thus, e.g., there appears to him, as an offering well-pleasing to God, at one time Christ (Eph. v. 2), at another the gifts of love received (Phil. iv. 18), at another time the bodies of Christians (Rom. xii. 1); under the figure of the seed-corn, at one time the body becoming buried (1 Cor. xv. 36 f.), at another time the moral conduct (Gal. vi. 7); under the figure of the leaven, once moral corruption (1 Cor. v. 6), another time doctrinal corruption (Gal. v. 9); under the figure of clothing which is put on, once the new man (iv. 24), another time Christ (Gal. iii. 27), at another time the body (2 Cor. v. 3), and other similar instances.

Ver. 18. After Paul has, vv. 14—17, placed before his readers in what armour they are to stand forth, he shows yet further how this standing ready for the combat must be combined with prayer: "with prayer and entreaty of every kind, praying at each moment in virtue of the Spirit." These are two parallel specifications of mode, whereof the second more precisely defines the first, and which stand in grammatical and logical connection with ἐν τῇ ὑποτασεί, ver. 14; not with the intervening ἐξασθε, ver. 17, which rather is itself subordinate to the τῇ ὑποτ., and only by a deviation from the construction has come to be expressed in the imperative instead of the participle, wherefore ἐν τῇ ὑποτ. remains the precept ruling the whole description, vv. 14—17. Should we join them to ἐξασθε, neither πάσης nor ἐν πάντι καίρῳ would be appropriate to this momentary act; for we would, in fact, be told not how the sword of the Spirit should be handled (Olshausen; comp. Harless: "the temper in which they are to wield such weapons"), but how it should be taken! An imperative specification (Bleek) the participle has not. — διὰ πάσης προσευχῆς κ. ἐν πάντι καίρῳ] is to be taken by itself, not to be joined to the following προσευχήμα. (so usually, as also by Rückert, Matthies, Harless, Bleek; not Meier and Baumgarten-Crusius), since otherwise a tautological redundancy of expression would arise (not to be confounded with the mode of expression προσευχὴς προσεύχεσθαι, Jas. v. 17), arbitrarily conjectured by de Wette to have been occasioned by Phil. iv. 6,—and because it is an impossibility to pray διὰ πάσης προσευχῆς ἐν πάντι καίρῳ.1

ἀπὸ ὑποτασεί is to be taken by itself, not to be joined to the following προσευχήμα. I. p. 138; Winer, p. 339 [E. T. 453], i.e. while ye employ every kind of prayer and

entreaty, omit no sort of prayer and entreaty. Those who join with προσευχής. The expression παρακλησία receive its elucidation from the following εν παντὶ καρπῷ, inasmuch as to different circumstances of the time different kinds of prayer, as respects contents and form, are appropriate. προσευχή and δέησις are distinguished not so, that the former applies to the obtaining of a blessing, the latter to the averting of an evil (Grotius and many)—a meaning which, quite without proof from the linguistic usage of the single words, is derived merely from the combination of the two; but rather as prayer and entreaty, of which only the former has the sacred character and may be of any tenor; the latter, on the other hand, may be addressed not merely to God, as here, but also to men, and is supplicatory in tenor. See Harless on the passage, and Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 372 f.—εν παντὶ καρπῷ] at every season, not merely under special circumstances and on particular occasions. Comp. Luke xxii. 36. It is the ἀδιαλείπτως προσεύχεσθαι, 1 Thess. v. 17, ii. 13, i. 3; Rom. i. 9.—εν πνεύματι] understood of the human spirit (Rom. viii. 10), would denote the heartfelt prayer in contrast to the mere utterance of the lips (Castalio, Zanchius, Erasmus Schmid, Grotius, Morus, Koppe, Rosenmüller, and others). But this contrast was so obvious of itself, that such a description of prayer would be quite out of place in the flow of the passage before us, accumulating, as it does, simply elements that are specifically Christian. The Holy Spirit is meant (ver. 17), by virtue of whom the Christian is to pray. See Rom. viii. 15, 26; Gal. iv. 6.—καὶ εἰς αὐτὸ ἄγγελον κ.τ.λ.] attaches to the general προσευχόμενοι εν π. κ. εν πν. something special, namely, intercession, and that for all Christians, and in particular for the apostle himself: and in that ye on this behalf are watchful in every kind of perseverance and entreaty for all saints and for me, etc. According to de Wette, εἰς αὐτὸ ἄγ. is to be held as still belonging to the general exhortation to prayer, and εν π. προσεχρ. κ.τ.λ. to be the addition of a special element, like εν εὐχαρ., Col. iv. 2. But how idly would κ. εἰς αὐτὸ ἄγ. then be used, seeing that the continual praying is already before so urgently expressed! Moreover, καὶ betrays the transition to a new element of Prayer. — eis aivtô in reference thereto, on behalf of this, namely, of the ἐν τῷ πληρωθῆναι αὐτῷ ὁ πληρώματι just required. By aivtô, namely, is denoted that which is just being spoken of, and it is distinguished from aivtô touc (the Recepta) only in this respect, that the latter (comp. on Rom. ix. 17) designates the subject in question at the same time demonstratively, and so still more definitely; see on ver. 22; Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. iii. 10. 14; Stallb. ad Plat. Rep. ii. p. 362 D. According to Holzhausen (comp. Köppel), it has reference to ἡμεῖς μοι ἀξίωτα. But in that case eis touc must have been written; and, moreover, περὶ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων would be from a logical point of view opposed to it. — ἐν πάσῃ προσκαρτ. κ. ἐνεκές περὶ π. τ. ἁγ.] denotes the domain, wherein, etc. On behalf of the required ἐν παρεκπεσθαι they are to be watchful in every kind of perseverance and entreaty for all saints. The προσκαρτέρησις is, according to the context (and comp. Col. iv. 2), the perseverance in prayer, so that ἐν π. προσκ. corresponds to the διὰ πάσης προσευχῆς at the beginning of the verse, and then with καί (ἐν πάσῃ) ἐνεκές, as there, the entreaty attaches itself, but now with the more precise definition: περὶ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων, which hence belongs not to προσκαρτ., but only to ἐνεκές, as, indeed, accordingly the latter may not be amalgamated with προσκαρτ. into a ἐν διὰ δυν. According to Rückert, ἐν πάσῃ προσκαρτ. κ. ἐνεκές is added, in order to be able to annex περὶ πάντων τ. ἁγ. But in that case could not Paul have written merely eis aivtô ἁρπαν. περὶ πάντων τ. ἁγ., and that without risk of being misunderstood? No, the ἐν πάσῃ προσκ. κ. ἐνεκές, in itself not essential, gives to his discourse the emphasis of earnestness and solemnity. Comp. Bornemann, Schol. in Luc. p. xxxviii. f.—πάσης as previously πάσης.

Ver. 19. Καὶ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ καὶ: and in particular. See Fritzsche, ad Marc. p. 11, 713. The special point which, in connection with the intercession embracing all Christians, he would have to be made matter of supplication for himself, is stated in what follows. ὑπὲρ expresses, as previously the περὶ in current use, the sense in commodum (see Schaefer, App. ad Dem. 1. p. 190; Buttmann, Ind. ad Mid. p. 188); and only the form of sensuous perception, which underlies the two prepositions, is different, as in the case of the Germ. über and um; comp. 1 Pet. iii. 18. It is wrongly assumed by Harless that only ὑπὲρ expresses in itself the relation of care for, and not περὶ. The notion of the latter—that of encircling—in fact sensuously embodies such care; hence with classical writers too, especially with Demosthenes, περὶ and ὑπὲρ are interchanged without any difference of sense, e.g. Phil. ii. p. 74, 35: μὴ περὶ τῶν δικαίων μηδ' ὑπὲρ τῶν ἄξων πραγμάτων εἶναι τὴν βουλήν, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ, 10. 16: οὐ περὶ δόξης οὐδ' ὑπὲρ μέρους χώρας πολεμοῦσι, Xen. Mem. i. 1. 17: ὑπὲρ τοῦτων περὶ αὐτοῦ παραγνώναι. Thucyd. vi. 78. 1: ὑπὲρ γε τῆς ἐμῆς κυνωνείν, ἐνυμηθήτω οὐ περὶ τῆς ἐμῆς μάλλον. — ἦν μοι δοθῇ κ.τ.λ.] Aim of the καὶ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, and consequently contents of the intercession for the apostle (comp. on iii. 16): in order that utterance may be given to me on the opening of my mouth, i.e. that there may not be withheld from me by God, but may on the contrary be conferred, that which I ought to speak when I open my mouth. That Paul means the speaking with a view to the proclamation of the gospel, is from the context (see ἐν παράθεσι. γνωρ. κ.τ.λ.) clear. The emphasis, however, is upon δοθῇ, to which, in the sequel, ἐν παράθεσιά significantly corresponds; for this freedom of speech is the consequence wished for by Paul from that bestowal. Comp. Luke xxi. 15. As to ἄνοιγεν τὸ στόμα, which in itself represents nothing else than the opening of the mouth to speak, comp. on Matt. v. 2; 2 Cor. vi. 11; on the substantive ἄνοιξις, comp. Thuc. iv. 67. 3. The expression is graphic, and has here something of a pathetic nature, without, however, containing a qualitative feature of the discourse itself, not even the character of unpremeditated utterance (Oecumenius: ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ ἄνοιξαί ὁ λόγος προφῆτης), which would have been expressed by ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ ἄνοιξε τοῦ στ., or in a similar significant way. This at the same time in opposition to Calvin, Boyd, Zanchius, Michaelis, Zachariae, and others, including Koppe, Rückert, Matthies, Meier, Baumgarten-Crusius, de Wette, Bleek, Schenkel, who explain: unreservedly, frankly, which would have to be attached not to what follows (see below), but closely to λόγος, and thereby, again, the ἐν παράθεσιά γνωρ. would be unwarrantably anticipated. Following Bullinger, Calovius, Cornelius a Lapide, and others,¹ Harless and Olshausen understand the ἀνοιξις τοῦ στόματος as the act of God (comp. Ezek. iii. 27, xxix. 31, xxxii. 22; Ps. li. 17), holding it to denote: the bestowed capacity of speaking in contrast to an earlier bound state of the tongue. Paul would thus have said: “in order that utterance may be given unto me through my mouth being opened.” But what needless diffuseness of expression, since δοθῇ λόγος and ἀνοιξις τοῦ στόματος would be just the same thing! Kypke and Koppe attach ἐν ἀνοιξει τοῦ στ. μ. to what follows; in which case Kypke regards ἐν παρφησία as epegeesis of ἀνοιξει τ. στ. μ., and Koppe, following Grotius,² refers ἐν παρφ. to the outward freedom: “non vinculis constrictus in carcere latens.” The latter explanation is logically erroneous, since, thus understood, ἐν παρφησ. would be something quite other than the ἀνοιξις τοῦ στόματος, and thus could not be added by way of apposition, without καί; and linguistically erroneous, since παρφησία never denotes outward freedom, and here especially its signification of boldness is rendered clear by the παρφησίασώμας of ver. 20. Comp. Fritzsche, Diss. II. in 2 Cor. p. 99 f. In opposition to Kypke, it may be urged that an addition of so purely exegetical a character, as ἐν παρφ. would be to ἐν ἀνοιξει τ. στ. μ., would not be in keeping with the elevated style of the discourse, which is not couched in anything like a didactic tone. Köster (in the Stud. u. Krit. 1854, p. 317), with whom, in the main, Bleek agrees, attaches ἐν ἀνοιξει τ. στ. μ. to what follows, and takes δοθῇ λόγος in the well-known classical sense: to allow one to come to speech, to let him speak (Dem. 26, 18; 27, 9; 508, 16; 1220, 20; comp. λόγου τυχεῖν, 229, 13); so that Paul is supposed to say: “that opportunity to speak may be given to me, namely, at the opening of my mouth (that is, when I wish to speak)

frankly to proclaim," etc. But even in this way ἐν ἀνοίξει τοῦ στού. μου. would be only a needless and cumbrous addition. — ἐν παρθησίᾳ γνωρισαί κ.τ.λ.] with frankness to make known the mystery of the gospel, i.e. the mystery (see on i. 9) which forms the contents of the gospel. The opportunity of preaching was not taken from the apostle in his captivity at Caesarea (Acts xxiv. 23), nor yet afterwards at Rome (Acts xxviii. 30 f.). Should we attach ἐν παρθ. to what precedes (Vatablus: "ut detur mihi aperto ore loqui libere, ut notum faciam," etc.), γνωρίσαι would be without a necessary modal definition.

Remark.—If the Recepta ἰδιί were genuine, the statement of aim, introduced by ἵνα, would be adduced from the mind of the persons praying, thus in the character of the oratio obliqua. See on i. 17.

Ver. 20. For which (to conduct its cause) I discharge the office of ambassador in a chain. Comp. on 2 Cor. v. 20. It is to be explained neither as though ἵπτερον ὅδε πρεσβεύων ἐν ἀλοιποι εἰμὶ (Zachariae, Rückert, Matthies) were written, nor as though ἵπτερον ὅδε καὶ ἐν ἀλοιποι πρεσβεύω were the reading (Grotius: "nunc quoque non desino legationem," etc.); nor is ὅδε to be referred, as is usually the case, merely to τοῦ εὐαγγελ., but to τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ εὐαγγ., seeing that this was the object of γνωρίσαι, and to this γνωρίσαι the πρεσβεύω significantly corresponds. Comp. The opinion of Michaelis, that Paul designates himself as delegate of Christ to the Roman court, would, even if he had written the Epistle in Rome, be imported, since no reader could find anything else than the apostle denoted by πρεσβεύω without more precise definition. — ἐν ἀλοιποὶ] On ἐν, comp. phrases like εἰς τὴν ἀλοιπὸν ἑμπτετευ, Polyb. xxii. 3. 3. Wetstein, we may add, aptly observes: "alias legati, jure gentium sancti et inviolables, in vinculis haberi non poterant." To infer, however, from the use of the singular (Baumgarten, Paley, Flatt, Steiger) the custodia militaris, in which Paul was at Rome (Acts xxviii. 20;
2 Tim. i. 16), is too hasty; partly for the general reason that the singular must by no means be urged, but may be taken collectively (Bernhardy, p. 58 f.), and partly for the special reason that we have to think of Paul at Caesarea too, and that from the very beginning of his captivity there (see on Acts xxiv. 23), as in the custodia militaris; Acts xxvii, xxvi. 29.¹ The significant bearing of the addition ἐν ἀλώσει is to make palpable the so much greater need of the παρῆσια, and so the more fully to justify the longing for the intercessory prayer of the readers. — ἵνα ἐν αὑτῷ παρῆσι. ὡς δὲι με λαλήσαι, more precisely defining the thought already expressed. As similar parallels by means of a second ἵνα, comp. Rom. vii. 13; Gal. iii. 14; 1 Cor. xii. 20; 2 Cor. ix. 3. Harless regards this second ἵνα as subordinate to the first. Thus the words would express not the aim on account of which Paul summons his readers to prayer, as stated by Harless, but the aim of the BodfjX070 k.t.X. But this would be inappropriate, since δοθῇ λόγος k.t.l. has already the definition of aim appropriate to it, namely, in ἐν παρῇ γνωρ. k.t.l. Bengel and Meier make ἵνα dependent on πρεσβεῖον ἐν ἀλώσει (in which case Meier imports the sense, as if the words were ἵνα καλ ἐν αὑτῷ παρῇ); but the clause expressive of the aim: “in order that I may therein speak as boldly as I am bound to speak,” does not logically correspond to the πρεσβεῖον ἐν ἀλώσει, because without any reference to ἐν ἀλώσει. Had Paul merely written: ἵνα παρῆσιάσωμαι ἐν αὑτῷ (without ὡς δὲι με λαλήσαι), by which the παρῆσι would have become emphatic,² or: ἵνα πολλῷ μάλλον παρῆσι. ἐν αὑτῷ, the logical relation would be satisfied. — ἐν αὐτῷ] namely, in the mystery of the gospel, i.e. occupied therewith, in the proclamation thereof (Matthiaei, p. 1342). ¹ In the latter passage the plural τῶν δειμ. τῶν is not at variance with this view, as it is rather the categoric plural, and leaves the question entirely undecided, whether Paul was bound with one or more chains.

in the message itself [rather: in the mystery of the gospel; see on ἐν ἑαυτῷ]. But the context represents the μυστήριον τοῦ εἰαργ., as the object of the bold discourse (ver. 19); and the source of the παραφθένσαι is in God (see 1 Thess. ii. 2), which is not indeed here expressed, but is implied in the fact that it is to be obtained for the apostle by prayer on the part of the readers. — ὁ δὲ ἡμᾶς οἴκλησαι] to be taken together (comp. Col. iv. 4); and after ἡμᾶς there is not to be put any comma, by which ἡμᾶς would be connected with παραφθένσα (Koppe), — a course, which is impossible just because παραφθένσα already expresses the bold speaking; and thus ἡμᾶς, if it were to be more precisely defining, could not but of necessity have with it a modal definition (comp. 1 Thess. ii. 2). See Fritzsche, Diss. II. in 2 Cor. p. 100 f.

While most of the older expositors pass over this καὶ in silence (rightly, however, explained in a general sense by Bengel: “perinde ut alii”), Rückert and Matthies strangely enough think that it stands in contradiction to the apostle himself. From this there would in fact result the absurd thought: “in order that not only I, but also ye may know how it fares with me.” — τὰ κατ᾿ ἑμᾶς] my circumstances, my position, Phil. i. 22; Col. iv. 7. ² The assumption of a more special design as regards ὑμεῖς, namely, that it is meant to represent Tychicus as a trustworthy reporter (Grotius), is inadmissible, because Tychicus without doubt was known to the readers (Acts xx. 4). It was otherwise in relation to the Colossians. See on Col. iv. 7.

Mark likewise, according to 2 Tim. iv. 11, receives from the apostle the testimony that he is for him εἰχρηστός εἰς διάκονιαν. Others, like Grotius (comp. Calvin), do not refer διάκονος to the relation to the apostle, but explain it: servant of the gospel [minister evangelii], while Estius and many understand specially the ecclesiastical office of the deacon. But Col. iv. 7, where διάκονος καὶ σύνδουλος are united (the latter word softening the relation of service towards the apostle expressed by διάκονος), speaks in favour of our view. — εἰν κυρίῳ belongs only to διάκονος, not to ἀδελφός as well (in opposition to Meier and Harless), since only the former had need of a specific definition (comp. on Phil. i. 14), in order to be brought out in its true relation (and not to bear the semblance of harshness). Not beyond the pale of Christian relations was Tychicus servant of the apostle, but in Christ his service was carried on, Christ was the sphere of the same, inasmuch as Tychicus was official διάκονος of the apostle. εἰν κυρίῳ is attached without an article, because combined with διάκονος so as to form one idea.

Ver. 23 f. Twofold wish of blessing at the close, in which, however, Paul does not, as in the closing formulae of the other Epistles, directly address the readers (μεθ’ ὑμῶν, μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν, μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν). This variation is to be regarded as merely accidental, and the more so, seeing that he has in fact been just addressing his readers directly, and seeing that a μεθ’ ὑμῶν or the like would simply address the readers, as has so often been done in the Epistle itself, leaving, we may add, the question, who these readers are, in itself wholly undetermined. For what is asserted by Grotius on ver. 24: "Non Ephesios tantum salutat, sed et omnes in Asia Christianos," is not implied in τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς—which, on the contrary, represents quite the simple ὑμῖν, inasmuch as Paul conceives of the recipients of the Epistle in the third person. According to Wieseler, p. 444 f., the apostle in ver. 23 salutes the Jewish Christians (ἀδελφ.), and in ver. 24 the Gentile Christians (πάντων) in Ephesus. Improbable in itself, more particularly in this Epistle, which so carefully brings into prominence the unity of the two; and the alleged distinguishing reference would neither be recognisable, nor in keeping with the apostolic wisdom.— εἰρήνη] not concordia, as recommended by Calvin ("quia mox fit dilectionis mentio;" comp. also Theodoret and Oecumenius), but, as Calvin himself explains: welfare, blessing, ἀγάπης, without more precise definition, because it takes the place of the valetu (ἵππος, Acts xvi. 29) at the close of our Epistle,1 and because that special sense is not at all suggested from the contents of the Epistle (comp. on the other hand, 2 Cor. xiii. 11). — ἀγάπη μετὰ πίστεως] is one object of the wish for blessing, not two. After the general fare well! namely, Paul singles out further the highest moral element, which he wishes for his readers. He does not, however, write καὶ ἀγάπη καὶ πίστει, because with good reason he presupposes faith (in the atonement achieved by Christ) as already present, but has doubtless to wish for them that which,

as the constant life of faith, is to be combined with it (1 Cor. xiii.; Gal. v. 6), Christian brotherly love, consequently love with faith (ἀγάπη has the emphasis, not μετὰ πίστιν). Comp. Plato, Phaed. p. 253 E: καλλος μετὰ ἵμηλας λαμβάνειν. Bengel and Meier understand the divine love, to which, however, μετὰ πίστιν is unsuitable, although Meier explains it: in conformity with their own faith, partly at variance with linguistic usage, partly importing a thought (their own). The reading ἐλεος (instead of ἀγάπη) is to be regarded simply as a glossmatic consequence of the explaining it of the divine love, and yet, though found only in codex A, it is held by Rückert to be the true one (comp. Gal. vi. 16); Paul, he says, wishes to the readers εἰρήνη κ. ἐλεος for the reward (?) of faith.— ἀντὶ Θεοῦ πατρός κ. κυρ. 'I. X.] See on Rom. i. 7. Grotius, we may add, rightly observes: "conjungit causam principem cum causa secunda." For Christ is exalted on the part of God to the government of the world, and particularly to the Lordship of the church (i. 22; Phil. ii. 9); and His dominion has in God, the Head of Christ (1 Cor. xi. 3), not merely its ground (comp. also Eph. i. 17), but also its goal (1 Cor. iii. 23, xv. 28).

Ver. 24. While Paul has in ver. 23 expressed his wish of blessing for the readers (τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς), he now annexes thereto a further such general wish, namely, for all who love Christ imperishably, just as at 1 Cor. xvi. 22 he takes up into the closing wish an ἀνάθεμα upon all those who do not love Christ.— ἡ χάρις] the grace καὶ ἐξουσία, i.e. the grace of God in Christ. Comp. also Thucyd. iii. 82. 5, and Krüger in loc. See in general, Bernhardy, p. 255.

(Wetstein: "Christum immortalem et gloriosum, non humil-lem," etc.; see also Reiners in Wolf and Semler), nor to ἥ χάρις ("favor immortalis," Castalio, Drusius; comp. Piscator and Michaelis, who take ἐν as equivalent to σίν, while the latter supposes a reference to deniers of the resurrection!), nor yet to the sit to be supplied after ἥ χάρις, as is held, after Beza (who, however, took ἐν for εἰς) and Bengel, recently by Matthies ("that grace with all ... may be in eternity;" comp. Baumgarten-Crusius), Harless (according to whom ἐν denotes the element in which the χάρις manifests itself, and ἀφθαρσία is all imperishable being, whether appearing in this life or in eternity), Bleek, and Olshausen, which last supposes a breviloquìntia for ἵνα ζωὴν ἐκώσαν ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ, i.e. ζωὴν αἰώνιαν. But, in opposition to Matthies, it may be urged that the purely temporal notion eternity (εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα) is foisted upon the word imperishableness; and in opposition to Harless, that the abstract notion imperishableness is transmuted into the concrete notion of imperishable being, which is not the meaning of ἀφθαρσία, even in 2 Tim. i. 10 (but imperishableness in abstracto), and that ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ, instead of adding, in accordance with its emphatic position, a very weighty and important element, would express something which is self-evident, namely, that according to the wish of the apostle the grace might display itself not ἐν ὑποτεθείσι (1 Pet. i. 18), but ἐν ἀφθάρτωσι; the breviloquìntia, lastly, assumed by Olshausen is, although ἀφθαρσία in itself might be equivalent to ζωὴν αἰώνιον (see Grimm, Handb. p. 60), a pure invention, the sense of which Paul would have expressed by εἰς ἀφθάρτωσιν. The right connection is the usual one, namely, with ἀγαπῶντων. And in accordance with this, we have to explain it: who love the Lord in imperishableness, i.e. so that their love does not pass away, in which case ἐν expresses the manner. Comp. the concluding wish Tit. iii. 15, where ἐν πίστει is in like manner to be combined with πιστεύσας. Others, following the same connection, have understood the sinceritas either of the love itself (Pelagius, Anselm, Calvin, Calovius, and others) or of the disposition and the life in general (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Erasmus, Flacius, Estius, Zeger, Grotius: "significatur is, qui nulla vi, nullis precibus, nullis illecebris se corrumpi, i.e. a recto abduci, patitur," and others, including Wieseler), but against this Beza has already with reason urged the linguistic usage; for uncorrupedness is not ἀφθαρσία (not even in Wisd. vi. 18, 19), but ἀφθορία (Tit. ii. 7) and ἄθανατορία (Wetstein, II. p. 373). On ἀφθαρσία, imperishableness (at 1 Cor. xv. 42, 52, it is in accordance with the context specially incorruptibility), comp. THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

INTRODUCTION.

PHILEMON, who had been converted to Christianity by Paul himself perhaps during his sojourn at Ephesus (ver. 19), was a member of the Christian community, not at Laodicea (Wieseler, Laurent), but—like Archippus, ver. 2 (see on Col. iv. 17)—at Colossae (Col. iv. 9), wherein, by his zealous Christian activity, and more especially by the holding of an έκκλησία in his house (vv. 1-7), he had gained deserved esteem, being described by Chrysostom as τις τῶν θαυμαστῶν καὶ γενναιῶν. Nothing is known as to his more definite vocation, although tradition has made him bishop in Colossae (Constit. apost. vii. 46. 2) or in Gaza (Pseudo-Dorotheus), as it has likewise placed him among the martyrs (under Nero). It is possible, however, that he was one of the presbyters of the church (συνεργης, ver. 1). Of the house where he dwelt Theodoret relates (τὸν ἀλέων): μέχρι τοῦ παρόντος μεμένυκε.

His slave ONESIMUS had, on account of a misdemeanour (vv. 11, 18), fled from him through fear of punishment (ver. 15), and had come, certainly of set purpose and not by

1 Tradition in one form of it makes him subsequently bishop of Beroea in Macedonia (Constit. apost. vii. 46. 2), and in another identifies him with the Bishop Onesimus in Ephesus (Ignat. ad Eph. 1 and 6), and makes him die as a martyr in Rome.

2 In this way the circumstances of the case find their simplest and most natural explanation. Comp. Bengel on ver. 11: Onesimus etiam antequam ad frugem veram pervenisset, tamen bene de Paulo eximimarat, et ipseus magistri sui occasione ad illum confugit. And this serves to dispose of the curious question of Hofmann (p. 217): "What should induce Onesimus to flee to Caesarea in particular?" We answer: He fled to the place, where Paul was. And the reason of this may be the more readily understood, if he had been possibly already in Philemon's service, when the latter was converted by the apostle.
mere accident, to the apostle, then a captive at Caesarea, who converted him to Christ (ver. 10), and conceived a most cordial affection for him (vv. 12, 13, 16 f.). When, therefore, Paul was despatching Tychicus to Colossae (Col. iv. 7), he made use of this opportunity to send Onesimus—whom he at the same time commended to the church there (Col. iv. 9)—back to his master, and to procure for him at the hands of the latter forgiveness, welcome, and love by means of this letter—an aim, which is pursued in it with so much Christian love and wisdom, with so great psychological tact, and, without sacrifice of the apostolic authority, in a manner so thoughtfully condescending, adroit, delicate, and irresistible, that the brief letter—which is in the finest sense a λόγος ἡμείως (Col. iv. 6), as a most precious and characteristic relic of the great apostle—belongs, even as regards its Attic refinement and gracefulness, to the epistolary masterpieces of antiquity.

The Epistle bears so directly and vividly the stamp of genuineness, that the doubts of Baur (Paulus, II. p. 88 ff.) would appear a whim hardly meant in earnest, were they not in strict consistency with the assumption that we should not have any letters of the apostle at all from the period of his captivity. Baur, who, we may add, acknowledges the author as profoundly pervaded by Christian consciousness, places the contents of the Epistle upon a parallel with those of the Clementine Homilies, and finds in it the “embryo of a Christian fiction,” by which the idea was to be brought home to men’s minds, that what we lose temporarily in the world, we regain eternally in Christianity (according to ver. 15). With equal caprice Baur propounds the view, that even should the writing be Pauline, what actually took place is set forth

1 Comp. Luther’s preface: “This Epistle presents a masterly and charming example of Christian love,” etc. Ewald: “Nowhere can the sensibility and warmth of tender friendship blend more beautifully with the higher feeling of a superior mind, nay, of a teacher and apostle, than in this brief and yet so eminently significant letter.”

2 The letters of Pliny (Epp. 9, 21, and 24) have often been compared with ours; but how greatly it excels them in point of thoughtfulness, delicacy of plan, and depth of affection! “Quid festivius etiam dici poterat vel ab ipso Tullio in hujusmodi argomento?” Erasmua.
under the point of view of that definite idea, and the bringing of this latter into prominence is its proper aim and import.
The genuineness is externally attested—and that the more adequately, when we consider that from its brevity and the personal, not directly didactic, nature of its contents there was little occasion for citations—by the Canon Muratorianus, Marcion (see Tertullian, c. Marc. v. 42;Epiph. Haer. xlii. 9), Tertullian, Origen, Eusebius, Jerome, etc., though the passages of Ignatius, ad Eph. 2, ad Magnes. 12, ad Polyca. 6, do not serve to prove a reference to ver. 20. Nevertheless, Jerome had already to controvert those, who wished to infer from the non-dogmatic character of the contents “aut epistolam non esse Pauli ... aut etiam, si Pauli sit, nihil habere, quod aedificare nos possit.”

Place and time are the same as with the Epistles written from the captivity in Caesarea (not, as is usually supposed, at Rome) to the Ephesians and Colossians, and with the lost Epistle to the Laodiceans, which, however, is not to be found in the one now before us; see on Col. iv. 16. Whether Paul wrote our Epistle before that to the Colossians (Otto), or the converse, remains an undetermined question.

Ver. 2. Instead of ò so yap, Elz. Scholz, Tisch. have ò γαπηρη. But the former, which is approved by Griessb. and Reiche, is attestated by A D* E* F G K, and some min. vss. Hesych. Jerome, and was easily supplanted by the ò γανε, written on the margin in conformity with ver. 1 (vss. Ambrosiast. and Pelag. have ò δηλ.φη

The latter reading is to be traced to the mechanical copyists, who, as in the opening of the Epistle, had in view Philemon and those around him (ver. 3). The preceding τη is deleted by Lachm. on too weak counter-evidence (A C, 17); how easily might it be passed over after the final syllable of ò γανει—Ver. 7. Instead of χαράι, Elz. Tisch. have χάριν, in opposition to decisive evidence; the latter found its way into the text through reference to ιχαριστοι, ver. 4. Comp. Reiche.
—ιχαμι[ Lachm. has ισχιν, which was also recommended by Griesb., in accordance with A C F G ε, min. vss. Fathers. The other witnesses are divided between ἵχομαι and ἵχομοι, but remain too weak to warrant either of these two readings. The plural appears an inappropriate following up of ἵν ημῖν in ver. 6, and ἵχομοι also tells indirectly in favour of Lachm. The position after πολλ. is decidedly attested (Lachm.). — Ver. 10. Before ἵνιν ος Lachm. ed. min. had ἵγ, following A, min. Syr. p. Slav. ms. Chrys. After αὐτομ-κα we have, with Lachm., on preponderating evidence (A C D* E* N* 57), to take in σοι, the omission of which is to be explained from the following σο. — Ver. 12. οὐ δι] is wanting in A C N* 17. Lachm., who, like Tisch., has deleted also προσλαβοῦ after συλάγχα. This προσλαβοῦ is wanting in A F G ε 17, while some min. place it immediately after οὐ δι; Arm. Boern. Theodoret, on the other hand, after αὐτόν. It is, though a fresh defended by Reiche, to be looked upon as a supplement from ver. 17; the absence of the verb, however, involved, by way of redressing the construction, the omission of σο δι, so that αὐτόν was regarded as governed by αὐτομ-κα (comp. Lachm.: ἐν αὐτομ-κα σοι, αὐτόν, τουσίστην τα ἵμα συλάγχα). — Ver. 13. The position of μοι before διασ. (Elz. in reverse order) is decisively attested. — Ver. 18. The form iλλάγα is to be adopted, with Lachm. and Tisch., in conformity with A C D* (ιλλα.) F G ε, 17, 31; iλλάγα was imported from the familiar passage, Rom. v. 13. — Ver. 20. Instead of Χριστῷ, Elz. has Χριστῷ. Repetition from what precedes, in opposition to decisive evidence. — Ver. 21. ὅτι δ] Lachm.: ὅτι α, in accordance with A C ε, Copt. We have no means of deciding the point. — Ver. 23. Instead of ἄσπαξετα, Elz. has ἄσπαξετα, which has decisive witnesses against it. An emendation.

Contents. — After the address and apostolic greeting (vv. 1–3), there follows a glorious testimony to the Christian character of Philemon (vv. 4–7); then the proper object of the Epistle, intercession for Onesimus (vv. 8–21); and finally, the bespeaking of a lodging, in the hope of being liberated (ver. 22). Salutations and concluding wish, vv. 23–25.

Ver. 1. Δέσμους Χρ. 'I.] i.e. whom Christ has placed in bonds. See on Eph. iii. 1. This self-designation (not ἀμο-στολος, or the like) at the head of the letter is in keeping with its confidential tone and its purpose of moving and winning the heart, ἵπερ τοῦ τὴν χάριν ἐτοιμότερον λαβεῖν, Chrysostom. — κ. Τιμόθ.] See on Phil. i. 1; Col. i. 1. — συνεργῆ.] The particular historic relations, on which this predicate is based, are unknown to us; yet comp. ver. 2: τῇ κατ’ οἰκόν σου ἐκκλησίᾳ; perhaps he was an elder of the church. — ἡμῶν] namely, of Paul and Timothy. It belongs to ἄγαπη, and συνεργῆ. Although, we may add, the Epistle is, as to its design and contents, a private letter, yet the associating of Timothy with it, and especially the addressing it to more than one (ver. 2), are suitably calculated with a view to the greater certainty of a successful result (comp. already Chrysostom). Hofmann incorrectly holds that in the directing of the letter also to the relatives and to the church in the house the design was, that they should, by the communication of the letter to them, become aware of what had induced Philemon to do that which was asked of him. This they would in fact have learned otherwise from Philemon, and would have believed his account of the matter.

Ver. 2. That Appia was the wife of Philemon (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, and many) does not indeed admit of proof, but is the more probable, in proportion as the intercession for the slave was a matter of household concern, in which case the mistress of the house came into view. On the form of the name with πφ instead of ππ (Acts xxviii. 15), comp. Ἀπφιανός in Mionnet, Description des médailles, III. 179, IV. 65, 67, and the forms ἀπφία and ἀπφά. See also Lobeck, Paral. p. 33. — τῇ ἀδελφῇ] in the sense of Christian sisterhood, like ἀδελφός, ver. 1. — Archippus, too (see on Col. iv. 17), must have belonged to the family circle of Philemon. But whether he was precisely son of Philemon (Michaelis, Eichhorn, Rosenmüller, Olshausen, Hofmann, and already Theodore of Mopsuestia) we cannot determine. Chrysostom and Theophylact take him to be a friend of the household; Theodoret, to be the teacher to the household. — τῷ συντραπ. ἡμ. As in Phil. ii. 25. The relation cannot be more precisely ascertained. He may have been deacon (according to Ambroseiaster and Jerome, he was even bishop), but must have endured conflict and trouble for the gospel. Comp. likewise 2 Tim. ii. 3.—καὶ τ. κατ’ ὅλ. σ. ἐκκλ. not to be understood of the family of Philemon (Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact: πάντας τοὺς ἐν τῇ οἰκ. πιστ. λέγει, σωμ. παραλαβῶν καὶ δούλων, comp. Calvin and Storr), but of the section of the Christians at Colossae, which met in his house. See on Col. iv. 15. Wisely (see on ver. 1) does Paul—although otherwise in vv. 4–24 he only speaks to Philemon—enlist the interest not merely of Appia and Archippus, but also of the church in the house, and therewith embrace the whole circle, in which there was to be prepared for the converted fugitive a sanctuary of pardon and affection. But farther than this he does not go; not beyond the limits of the house, since the matter, as a household-affair, was not one suited to be laid before the Christian community collectively. To the latter, however, he at the same time (Col. iv. 9) commended his protégé, though without touching upon the particular circumstances of his case. Correct tact on the part of the apostle.

Ver. 4 f. Comp. Rom. i. 8; 1 Cor. i. 4; Phil. i. 3; Col. i. 3; Eph. i. 16.—πάντοτε belongs not to μελιν. κ.τ.λ. (Chrysostom, Theophylact, Luther, Calvin, Beza, Estius, and many others), but to εὐχαριστ. κ.τ.λ. (comp. on Col. i. 3; 1 Thess. i. 2), as the main element, for the completeness and emphasis of which it serves. The participial definition μελιν. κ.τ.λ. specifies whereupon Paul sees himself always moved to give thanks to God, namely, when he makes mention of Philemon in his prayers; and the following ἄκουσιν κ.τ.λ. is likewise an accompanying definition to εὐχαριστ. κ.τ.λ., stating whereby he finds himself induced to such thanksgiving, namely, because he hears, etc. It is not the intercession that has its motive explained by ἄκουσιν (de Wette, Koch), otherwise the logically necessary statement, for what Paul gives thanks to God, would be entirely wanting, whereas the mention of Philemon in the prayer had no need of a motive assigned for it, and would have taken place even without the ἄκουσιν κ.τ.λ.

1 Perhaps it is to this part of the address, which directed the letter to a congregational circle, that we are indebted for the preservation of the document—the only one of the certainly very numerous private letters, which the apostle wrote in the prosecution of his many-sided labours.
Moreover, Paul does not by μνείαν κ.τ.λ. express the intercession, but in general the mention in prayer, which is a much wider notion and also may be other than intercessory (in opposition to Hofmann). — ἀκοινον] continually, though Onesimus in particular. It is otherwise with ἀκοινοναῖς, Col. i. 4. — τὴν ἀγάπην] the standing notion of Christian love to the brethren, as in Col. iii. 14. — κ. τὴν πίστιν] is more precisely defined by the following ἡν ἔχεις . . . ἁγίους, and hence is not specially to be understood of faith in the dogmatic sense, to which εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους would not be suitable. It is faithfulness; comp. Gal. v. 22; Rom. iii. 3; 1 Thess. i. 8; Matt. xxiii. 23; Tit. ii. 10; often in the LXX., Apocrypha, and Greek authors. So Michaelis and Hagenbach (Flatt with hesitation), also Winer, p. 383 [E. T. 511 f.]. But usually (see already Theodoret, and especially Grotius) expositors assume a chiasmus, so that πρὸς τ. κύριον ἢ is to be referred to τ. πίστιν, and εἰς π. τ. ἁγίους to τὴν ἁγάπην. (de Wette, Wilke, Rhetor. p. 372; Demme, Koch, Wiesinger, Ewald), to which also Bleek and Hofmann come in the end. Against this may be decisively urged ἡν ἔχεις, whereby πρὸς τ. κύριον . . . ἁγίους is attached as one whole to τὴν πίστιν. With τὴν ἁγάπην the ἡν ἔχεις has nothing whatever to do; the former has, on the contrary, its own definition of subject by means of σου, which again does not stand in any connection with τὴν πίστιν. Comp. Col. i. 4. The usual objection to the interpretation faithfulness, namely, that the dogmatic sense of πίστις is the stated one when it goes along with ἁγάπη, does not hold good, inasmuch as ἁγάπη stands first (comp. also Gal. v. 22); in the stated combination of faith and love the faith precedes (in accordance with the inner genetic relation, Gal. v. 6), as 1 Cor. xiii. 13; Eph. i. 15; Col. i. 4; 1 Thess. i. 3, iii. 6; 1 Tim. i. 14; 2 Tim. i. 13, al.; hence the transposition τ. πίστιν κ. τ. ἁγάπην is found here too in D E, min. vss. and Ambrosiaster. The interchange of πρός and εἰς can occasion no surprise, inasmuch as Paul is fond of varying the prepositions (see on Rom. iii. 20; Gal. ii. 16; Eph. i. 7), as this is also of frequent occurrence with classical writers, without the design of expressing a different relation. On πρός, comp. 1 Thess. i. 8; 4 Macc. xv. 21, xvi. 22; Dem. 656, 19; Lucian, Tox. 41. It is to be observed withal, that the stated notion: faith in Christ, is never indicated by πρός, a fact which likewise tells against the ordinary interpretation.

Ver. 6. "Οπως κ.τ.λ.] cannot, as is usually held (also by Winer, de Wette, Demme, Koch, Ellicott, Bleek, and Hofmann), introduce the aim of the intercession, ver. 4, since μείναν σου πουούμ. κ.τ.λ. was only an accompanying definition, and άκούον κ.τ.λ. already pointed back to εἰςχαριστῶ κ.τ.λ. (see on ver. 5). It attaches itself (so rightly, Grotius, Bengel, Wiesinger, Ewald) in its telic sense (not in the sense of so that, as Flatt and older expositors would have it taken) to ver. 5, specifying the tendency of ἡν ἐκείς. For the sake of making this attachment Paul has put the ἡν ἐκείς, which would be otherwise superfluous. — ἡ κοινωνία τῆς πλατέως σου] is by no means to be explained as if ἡ κοινωνία σου τῆς πλατέως (or σου εἰς τὴν πλατεία) stood in the text, which would have to be the case, if we take the rendering of Hofmann ("the fellowship of faith, in which Philemon stands with his fellow-believers"). In order to the right interpretation observe further, on the one hand, that κοινωνία is with Paul, as mostly also with classical writers, when it is not accompanied by the genitive of the personal pronoun (Phil. i. 5), always so employed, that the genitive therewith connected denotes that with which the fellowship, or in which the participation, takes place (1 Cor. i. 9, x. 16; 2 Cor. viii. 4, xiii. 13; Phil. ii. 1, iii. 10; Eph. iii. 9, Elz.), consequently is the genitive not subjecti, but objecti; and, on the other hand, that κοινωνία signifies not communicatio, but communio, consortium. Accordingly there is at once set aside—(1) the traditional interpretation since the time of Chrysostom and Theophylact: "fides tua, quam communem nobiscum habes," Bengel, comp. Luther, Wetstein, and many; in which case the genitive has been taken subjectively, as by Wiesinger: thy faith-fellowship with all saints; and by Ewald: "that thou believest in Christ not merely for thyself." And there fall also (2) all interpretations, which transform the notion of κοινωνία into communicatio, such as that of Beza (comp. Castalio, Cornelius a Lapide, Estius, Hammond, Heinrichs): "officia benignitatis in sanctos pramanantia ex fide efficaci." Similarly also Calvin: "fidei communicationem appellat, quum intus non latet otiosa, sed per veros effectus se profert ad homines;" he is followed substantially by de Wette (and Koch): "the communion of thy faith (genitivus subjecti), as well in the display of love towards individuals as in the advancement of the gospel," which latter element cannot be brought hither from συνεργ., ver. 1, and is out of place (comp. ver. 7). As the correct interpretation there remains only this, keeping the notion of πίστις in consistency with ver. 5 : the fellowship entered into with thy Christian fidelity. So faithful a Christian as Philemon draws all other saints (ver. 5), who come into relations of experience with him, sympathetically to himself, so that they form with him the bond of association unto like effort, and therewith become κοινωνία of his πίστις. — ἐνεργής γένηται κ.τ.λ.] This fellowship with his fidelity is not to be an idle sympathy, but to become effective,\(^1\) to express itself in vigorous action—this is what Philemon wishes and aims at—and that by virtue of the knowledge of every Christian saving-blessing,\(^2\) a knowledge which, in such pious fellowship, unfolds itself ever more fully and vividly, and which must be the means of powerfully prompting all Christian activity (Eph. i. 17 f.; Col. ii. 2, iii. 10). And the final aim of this activity? Toward Christ Jesus it is to take place, i.e. εἰς Χρ. 'Ι., which is neither, with Calvin, Estius, and others, to be annexed to τοι ἐν ἑμῖν, nor, with Hofmann, to ἀγαθῶν, nor even, with Grotius, to πίστεως, but to ἐνεργ. γένηται, in which case alone it has the significance: Christ Jesus' will, work, kingdom, honour, and so forth, are to be their holy destination and relative aim. Consequently the whole passage might be paraphrased something in this way: And with this thy Christian fidelity thou hast the sacred goal of fellowship in view, that whoever enters into the participation of the same, may make this partaking through knowledge of every Christian blessing effective for Christ Jesus. An appeal to the profound Christian consciousness of Philemon, by way of

\(^1\) The translation of the Vulgate, evidens, is based upon the reading ἐνεργεία; so codd. Lat. in Jerome, Pelagius (Clar. Germ.: manifesta).

\(^2\) Such blessings, by which Christ has enriched us (comp. on 2 Cor. viii. 9), are faith, hope, love, patience, peace, joy in the Holy Spirit, etc. In devout fellowship these become ever more fully, vividly, and experimentally known as regards their nature and value.
preparation for the designed intercession on behalf of Onesimus, whom Paul in fact was now on the point of introducing to that 科oωνωία τῆς πιστείς of his friend! Respecting the manifold other explanations of ἐνεργησις γένηται κ.τ.λ., it is to be observed, on the one hand, that we have not, with many (including Wiesinger and Hofmann), arbitrarily to restrict the notion of ἐνεργησις to the exercise of love, but to extend it to the collective activity of the Christian life; and, on the other hand, that as the subject of the 科oωνωία is not Philemon, but others (comp. also Bleek), the latter, namely the 科oωνωλ τῆς πιστείς σου, must also be the subject of ἐνεργησις; by which all expositions, according to which Philemon is held to be this knowing subject, are set aside, whether πάντος ἄγαθον be taken in the moral sense, of every virtue (Chrysostom), of good works and the like, or (although in itself correctly) of the Christian blessings of salvation, which are to be known. Hence we have to reject the interpretation of Oecumenius: διὰ τοῦ ἐνεργήνωναν καὶ πράττειν πᾶν ἄγαθον, in which case the doing is arbitrarily imported, as is also done by Theophylact, according to whom ἐνεργήνωσκεῖν is held to be equivalent to ἄγαθον καὶ μεταχειρίζεσθαι. So likewise in substance de Wette, who mixes up moral action as keeping equal pace with moral knowledge, and takes τὸ ἐν ἡμῖν as: the good which is as to principle and spirit in us Christians; he is followed by Demme and Koch. We have further to reject the explanation of Flatt (so in substance also Osiander, Calovius, Bengel): "thy faith shows itself active through love, by means of a grateful recognition of all the benefits," etc., or (as Wiesinger puts it): "inasmuch as it (namely, thy fellowship of faith) recognises—which is possible only for love—in the other the good which is in him." We have to set aside, lastly, the explanation of Hofmann, who, after the example of Michaelis,¹ retaining the reading ἐν ὑμῖν, and taking πάντος ἄγαθον as masculine, finds in ἐν ἐνεργήσει κ.τ.λ. the meaning, that every one in the Christian sense good, every true Christian among the Colossians,² Philemon should know as being that which he is; only by virtue of such knowing would his fellowship of faith show itself effectively operative through the exercise of Christian love—which would not be the case with those "whose Christian virtuousness he failed to know." Erasmus, Castalio, Beza, Calvin, Grotius, Præaeus, Estius, Cornelius a Lapide, and others, have done rightly in not referring the ἐπίγνωσις to Philemon as the knowing subject, but wrongly in understanding ἐπίγνωσις of becoming known, as e.g. Erasmus, Paraphr.: "adeo ut nullum sit officium Christianae caritatis, in quo non sis et notus et probatus." Beza: "ut hoc ratione omnes agnoscant et experiantur, quam divites sitis in Christo," etc. — ἀγαθοῦ] Comp. Rom. xiv. 16; Gal. vi. 6; Luke i. 53, xii. 18, 19; Heb. ix. 11, x. 1; Ecclus. xii. 1, xiv. 25, al.; τὰν ἀγαθὸν τὸ ἐν ἡμῖν really expresses quite the same thing as is expressed at Eph. i. 3 by τὰσα εὐλογία πνευματική. — τοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν] applies to the Christians generally, these being regarded as a whole. The blessings are in the Christian community.

² If the reading ἐν ὑμῖν were genuine, it could only, in accordance with the

Ver. 7. Not the assigning of a reason for the intercession (de Wette and others; see in opposition thereto, on ver. 6), but a statement of the subjective ground (the objective one was contained in ver. 5 f.) of the thanksgiving, ver. 4. Jerome already aptly remarks: "plenius inculcat et edoct, quare dixerit: gratias ago," etc. — χαράν emphatically prefixed. The aorist ἐσχόν (see the critical remarks) relates to the point of time, at which the ἀκοίνων, ver. 5, had hitherto taken place. — πολλὴν] applies to both substantives. — παράκλησις] for Paul is δέσμως, vv. 1, 9. Comp. παρηγορία, Col. iv. 11. — διὰ τὰ σπλ. κτ.λ.] More precise explanation to ἐπὶ τῇ ἀγάπῃ σου: because, namely, the hearts (comp. ver. 20, as also 2 Cor. vi. 12, vii. 15; Phil. i. 8, al.) of the saints are refreshed by thee. There is no more particular information as to the work of love referred to; and it is quite arbitrary to refer τῶν ἄγγ. specially to the poor Christians (Grotius, Rosenmüller, and others), or even still more specially to "the mother-church of Christendom." (Hofmann), which is not to be made good either by 1 Cor. xvi. 1 or by Rom. context, be referred to Philemon himself and to those adduced along with him in ver. 2. The Colossian church is brought in after a purely arbitrary way by Michaelis and Hofmann.

Ver. 8. Διό] explains the ground for the following διὰ τ. ἀγάπης μᾶλλον παρακαλῶ: Wherefore (because I have so much joy and solace from thee), although I am by no means wanting in great boldness (1 Tim. iii. 13; 2 Cor. iii. 12; Phil. i. 20) to enjoin upon thee what is becoming, I will rather for love's sake exhort, will make exhortation take the place of injunction. Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact (comp. also Theodoret), Erasmus, Michaelis, Zachariae, and others attach διό to the participial assertion. This is un-psychological; what Paul has said in ver. 5 accords not with commanding, but with entreaty. — ἐν Χριστῷ] In Christ, as the element of his inner life, Paul knows that his great confidence has its basis. But this fellowship of his with Christ is not merely the general Christian, but the apostolic, fellowship. — τὸ ἀνήκου] that which is fitting, that is, the ethically suitable; Suidas: τὸ πρέπον; not used in this sense by Greek writers. Comp. however, Eph. v. 4; Col. iii. 18; 1 Macc. x. 40, 42, xi. 35; 2 Macc. xiv. 8. Thus Paul makes that, which he desires to obtain from Philemon, already to be felt as his duty. — διὰ τὴν ἀγάπην] is understood by some of the love of Philemon (Calvin and others, Cornelius a Lapide: "ut scilicet solitam tuam caritatem in servum tuum posentem ostendas"); by others, of the love of the apostle to Philemon (Estius and others); by others again, ἦν καὶ ὡς ἔχω πρὸς σε, καὶ σὺ πρὸς ἐμέ (Theophylact; comp. Oecumenius and others; Grotius: "per necessitatem amicitiae nostrae"). But all these limitations not expressed in the text are arbitrary; it is to be left general: on account of love, in order not to check the influence of the same (which, experience shows, is so great also over thee), but to allow it free course. It is the Christian brotherly love in abstracto, conceived of as a power; 1 Cor. xiii.

Ver. 9 f. Before τοὐοῦτος we have to place a full stop; the participial predication τοῦοῦτος ὑπὲρ sums up the quality which was expressed in ver. 8 by πολλὴν ... μᾶλλον παρακαλῶ; and lastly, ὡς Παῦλος ... Χριστοῦ supports the παρακαλῶ σε κ.τ.λ. of ver. 10, from a consideration of the personal position of the apostle in such a way, that the granting of the request could not but appear to Philemon as a matter of dutiful affection. Consequently: Seeing that I am so constituted, since such is my manner of thinking and dealing, that, namely, in place of commanding thee, I rather for love's sake betake myself to the παρακαλεῖν, I exhort thee as Paul, etc. A very mistaken objection to this view of τοιοῦτος ὦν is that Paul would not have said at all that he was so constituted, but only that he did so in the given case (Hofmann, following Wiesinger). He, in fact, says even now with τοιοῦτος ὦν itself that such is his nature. Observe, moreover, that the supporting elements, ὡς Παῦλος κ.τ.λ., are prefixed with all the emphasis of urgency to the παρακαλῶ, since in them lies the progress of the representation, namely, that which comes in as additional to the παρακαλῶ, already said before. Usually τοιοῦτος is taken as preparative, so that ὡς Παῦλος κ.τ.λ. is the more precise explanation of it; in which case some (as Luther, Calvin, and others, including Flatt, de Wette, Wiesinger, Ewald) find only two elements, taking ὡς Π. πρεσβύτης together; others (most expositors since the time of Chrysostom, including Bleek and Hofmann), three elements — Παῦλος, πρεσβύτης, δέσμιος. Expositors have differed in defining the significance of the particulars in their bearing on the matter in hand, while recognising on the whole the "pondus ad movendum Philemonis animum" (Estius). According to de Wette (comp. Wetstein), τοιοῦτος ὦν κ.τ.λ. is to be held parallel to the participial clause of ver. 8, in accordance with which the participle would thus have to be resolved by although. But the whole mode of interpreta-

2 So e.g. Erasmus, Paraphr.: "Quid enim neges roganti primum Paulo: cum Paulum dico non paulum rerum tibi signifacio; deinde seni: nonnihil tribui solat et aetati . . . nunc etiam vincit: in precibus nonnihil ponderis habet et calamitas obtestantis; postremo vincit Jesu Christi: sic vincit favere debent, qui profestatur Christi doctrinam." Similarly Grotius and others; while, according to Heinrichs, by Paulus there was to be awakened gratitude; by γεραθῆς, the readiness to oblige, natural towards the aged; and by λέγειν τί. Χρ. compassion. Hofmann holds that "the name Paul puts Philemon in mind of all that makes it a historical one," and that the impression of this becomes thereupon confirmed by the other two elements.
tion, which takes τοιούτος as preparative, is untenable. It must of necessity point back, summing up under the notion of personal quality what was said by πολλὴν...παρακαλῶ in ver. 8; for if τοιούτος is not already defined (as is here the case by reference to ver. 8), it may, doubtless, become defined either by an adjective immediately following, or by a following ὁλος (Plato, Conv. p. 199 D; Dem. 41, 3), or ὃς (Xen. Anab.
iv. 4. 2; Plat. Phaed. p. 92 B; Heb. viii. 1), or ὃς (Isocr.
Paneg. 21), or by ὃστε with the infinitive (Plato, Conv. p.
175 D, al.), but never by ὃς, which neither actually occurs (the usually cited passage from Andocides in Wetstein, de Wette has rightly described as not here relevant 1) nor can take place logically, since ὃς, that is, as (not like, which it means after τοιώνδε in Aesch. Pers. 180), already presupposes the definiteness of τοιούτος. This more precise definiteness is not, however, to be relegated to the mere conception or mode of view of the writer (Wiesinger: "I, in my circumstances"), according to which ὃς is then held to introduce an appositional definition, to which also Bleek and Hofmann ultimately come; but it is to be taken from what Paul has previously said, because it results from that quite simply and suitably. Comp.
on τοιούτος ὃν, which always in classical writers also— where it is not followed by a corresponding ὁλος, ὃς, ὃς, or ὃστε

Xen. Anab. iii. 1. 30; Hellen. iv. 1. 38; Cyrop. i. 5, 8; Soph.
Aj. 1277 (1298); Lucian, Cont. 20, and many other places.
It is further to be noted, (1) that the true explanation of τοιούτος ὃν κ.τ.λ. of itself imperatively requires that we connect these words with the following παρακαλῶ (Flatt, Lachmann, who, however, parentheticals ὃς Παῦλος, de Wette,

1 The passage runs: Ἰ δὲ πάντως διηνέκεισθαι ήτοι τοιούτως ὃν ὃς εἶπον τῷ ἀνάφο τοιούτως ὃν, but to what follows, and τοιούτως ὃν sums up what had been said before. — The comparison of τοιώδεις, Hom. Od. xvi. 205 (Hofmann), where besides no ὃς follows, is unsuitable, partly on the general ground of the well-known diversity of meaning of the two words (comp. Kühner, ad Xen.

Mem. i. 7. 5), which is not to be abandoned without special reason, partly because in that passage ἵνα τοιώδει stands absolutely and διατιθῶς (hicce ego Wiesinger, Ewald, Bleek, Hofmann), not with that which precedes (as formerly was usual), in which case the second \( \piα\varepsilon\beta\varepsilon\nu\tau\varsigma \) is understood as resumptive, an \( \omega \) (Theophylact), \( \text{inquam} \), or the like, being supplied in thought (so Castalio, Beza, Hagenbach, and many). (2) The elements expressed by \( \omega \) \( \Piα\varepsilon\o\ldots \ Χριστού \) stand—seeing that \( \piα\varepsilon\beta\varepsilon\nu\tau\varsigma \) is a substantive and has not the article—in such relation to each other, that \( \piα\varepsilon\beta\varepsilon\nu\tau\varsigma \) and \( \nu\nu\nu \) δε και \( \delta\varepsilon\mu\o\varsigma \) κ.τ.λ. are two attributive statements attaching themselves to \( \Piα\varepsilon\o\ldots \); consequently: as Paul, who is an old man, and now also a prisoner, etc. (3) The (flexible) notion of \( \piα\varepsilon\beta\varepsilon\nu\tau\varsigma \) must by no means have its meaning altered, as is done e.g. by Calvin, who makes it denote "non aetatem, sed officium;" but, at the same time, may not be rigidly pressed in so confidential a private writing, in which "lepos mixtus gravitate" (Bengel) prevails, especially if Philemon was much younger than Paul. Observe, withal, that the apostle does not use some such expression as \( γε\,ρων \), but the more relative term \( \piα\varepsilon\beta\varepsilon\nu\tau\varsigma \); comp. Tit. ii. 2 with the contrast \( τούς \ νε\,ρε\,ραν ος \) in ver. 6. He sets himself down as a veteran in contradistinction to the younger friend, who was once his disciple. At the stoning of Stephen, and so some twenty-six or twenty-seven years earlier, Paul was still \( \nu\varepsilon\,ρα\,\,\iota\varsigma\varsigma \) (Acts vii. 58); he might thus be now somewhere about fifty years of age.—\( \delta\varepsilon\mu\o\varsigma \) [I. X.] as in ver. 1.—\( τέκνου \) tenderly affectionate designation of his convert (comp. 1 Cor. iv. 14 f.; Gal. iv. 19; 1 Pet. v. 13), in connection with which the conception of his own child is brought more vividly into prominence by the prefixed \( \delta\mu\o\varsigma \) and by \( \δ\gamma\o \) (see the critical remarks), and \( \nu \ τοίς \ δε\,\,ρο\,\,ις \) makes the recommendation yet more affecting and urgent.—"\( \Oν\,\,\iota\,\,\iota\,\,\iota\,\,\iota\,\,\iota\)" Accusative, in accordance with a well-known attraction; see Winer, p. 155 [E. T. 205]; Buttmann, p. 68 [E. T. 78].

Ver. 11. Ingenious allusion to the literal signification of the name (current also among the Greeks) "\( \Oν\,\,\,\iota\,\,\iota\,\,\iota\,\,\iota\)" useful. The objection of Estius, that Paul expresses himself in words

1 That the expression: in the bonds, was suitable only to Rome and not to Caesarea, is incorrectly inferred by Wieseler, p. 420, from Acts xxiv. 23. See on that passage. It was likewise incorrect to assign the Epistle, on account of \( \piα\varepsilon\beta\varepsilon\nu\tau\varsigma \), to the alleged second imprisonment at Rome (Calovius).
derived from another stem (not from ὄνυμι), presupposes a mechanical procedure, with which Paul is least of all to be charged. We may add that, while there were not such forms as ἀνονήσιμος and εὐνήσιμος, doubtless he might, had he wished to retain the stem of the name, have employed ἀνόνητος and ὄνητος (Suidas), or ὄνητωρ (Pindar), or ὄνησι-φόρος (Plutarch, Lucian). An allusion, however, at the same time to the name of Christian, as sometimes in the Fathers Χριστιανός is brought into relation with χρηστός, is arbitrarily assumed by Cornelius a Lapide, Koch, and others, and the more so, as the expressions have already their occasion in the name Onesimus, and, moreover, by means of σοὶ and ἕμοι an individually definite reference.— ἄχρηστον] unserviceable, only here in the N. A definition, wherein the uselessness of Onesimus in his service consisted (the usual view from the time of Chrysostom: that he had robbed his master) does not appear more precisely than in the hint ver. 18 f.— νῦν δὲ ... ἐχρηστόν] Comp. 2 Tim. ii. 21, iv. 11; Plato, Pol. iii. p. 411 B: χρήσιμον ἐξ ἄχρηστον ἐπολήσεν. The usefulness, which now belongs to Onesimus, is based simply on his conversion which had taken place, ver. 10, and consequently consists for Philemon in the fact, that his slave now will render his service in a far other way than before, namely, in a distinctively Christian frame of mind and activity (consequently without eye-service and man-pleasing, οὐ τῷ κυρίῳ κ.τ.λ., as it is expressed at Col. iii. 29 ff.), and for Paul himself in the fact that, because the conversion of Onesimus is his work (ver. 10), in that transformation of the previously useless slave there has accrued to the apostle, as the latter's spiritual father, gain and recompense of his labour (Phil. i. 22), the joy and honour of not having striven in vain (Phil. ii. 16). Thus the benefits, which Philemon and Paul have respectively to enjoy from Onesimus as now constituted, are brought into contact and union. Comp. Theodore of Mopsuestia: σοὶ κατὰ τὴν ὑπηρεσίαν, ἕμοι κατὰ τὴν βελτίωσιν τοῦ τρόπου. What a weighty and persuasive appeal was urged in the ingenious καὶ ἕμοι (comp. Rom. xvi. 13; 1 Cor. xvi. 18) is at once felt.
Ver. 12. The rectified text¹ is: δυ ἀνέπεμψα σοι σὺ δὲ αὐτῶν, τούτῳ τὸ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα (without προσλαβοῦ).— On ἀνέπεμψα, remissi, comp. Luke xxiii. 11. — τούτῳ τὰ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα] that is, my heart, by which Onesimus is designated as an object of the most cordial affection. So Oecumenius, Theophylact, and many. ἐμὰ has an ingeniously-turned emphasis, in contrast to αὐτῶν. According to others, the thought would be: ἐμὸς ἐστὶν νῖός, ἐκ τῶν ἐμῶν γεγένενηται σπλάγχνων, Theodoret (comp. also Chrysostom); so too Beza, Cornelius a Lapide, Heinrichs, and others, following the Syriac. See instances in Pricæus and Wetstein, and comp. the Latin viscera. But in this way the relation already expressed in ver. 10 would be only repeated, and that in a form, which would be less in keeping with that spiritual fatherhood. Paul, moreover, statedly uses σπλάγχνα for the seat of the affection of love (2 Cor. vi. 12, vii. 15; Phil. i. 8, ii. 1; Col. iii. 12; Philem. 7, 20; comp. also Luke i. 78; 1 John iii. 17), and so also here, where the person to whom one feels himself attached with tender love (which, according to ver. 10, is certainly felt as paternal; comp. Wisd. x. 5; 4 Macc. xvi. 20, 26) is designated by the lover as his very heart, because its feelings and inclinations are filled by this object. Comp. on this expression of feeling, the Plautine meum corculum (Cas. iv. 4. 14), meum cor (Poen. i. 2. 154). When we set aside προσλαβοῦ as not genuine (see the critical remarks), the verb is wanting, so that the passage is anacoluthic; the apostle is involuntarily withheld by the following relative clause presenting itself, and by what he, in the lively flow of his thoughts, further subjoins (ver. 13 ff.) from adding the governing verb thought of with αἰτῶν, until at length, after beginning a new sentence with ver. 17, he introduces it in another independent connection, leaving the sentence which he had begun with σὺ δὲ αὐτῶν in ver. 12 unclosed. Comp. on Rom. v. 12 ff.; Gal. ii. 16. See generally, Winer, p. 528 ff. [E. T. 709 ff.]; Wilke, Rhetor. p. 217 f. With classic writers, too, such anacoluthic sentences broken off by

Ver. 13 f. Εγώ I for my part.— ἐποιλόμην I was of the mind. Comp. ἡθέλησα, ver. 14, and observe not merely the diversity of notion (βουλομαι: deliberate self-determination, see on Matt. i. 19), but also the distinction of the tenses. The apostle formerly cherished the design and the wish (imperfect ἐποιλ.) of retaining Onesimus with himself, instead of sending him back to Philemon, but has become of the mind (historical aorist ἡθέλησα), etc. Thus ἡθέλα denotes that which supervened on the previous occurrence of the ἐποιλ., and hindered the realization of the latter. Observe that Paul has not used ἐποιλόμην ἂν; that would be vellem.— ἐνέρπεσον for thee, i.e. in gratiam tuam, that thou mightest not need thyself to serve me. ἐνέρπε accordingly is not here, any more than in any other passage of the N. T., used as a precise equivalent to ἄνρι, although the actual relation of representation lies at the bottom of the conception in gratiam; for Paul would have taken the service of the slave as rendered by the master, to whom the slave belonged. Comp. Hofmann. This mode of regarding and representing the matter has nothing harsh about it, nor does it convey any obligation, which Philemon, had he been on the spot, would have fulfilled (Bleek), but simply the trustful presupposition, that Philemon himself would, if Paul had desired it, have ministered to him in the prison. Of this, however, Philemon was relieved by the service of the slave, which in this way stood him in good stead. Schweizer, in the Stud. u. Krit. 1858, p. 430, explains likewise correctly: for thy benefit, but takes this in the sense: "so that it would be a service rendered to thee, imputed to thee, so that I would be under obligation to thee." But this would only have the delicacy and tenderness which are found in it, if the thought: "in order that he might serve me, with a view to place me under obligation to thee," contained the design of Onesimus; if, accordingly, Paul had written something after this manner: δι εζουλετο προς εμαυνον μενεν, ἵνα κ.τ.λ., which, however, would have asserted a self-determination incompetent to the position of a slave. No; as the passage is written, there is delicately and tenderly implied in the ὑπὲρ σου the same thought, which, in accordance with Phil. ii. 30, he might have expressed by ἵνα ἀναπληρῶσῃ τὸ σου ὑπέρημα; comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 17. Thus ingeniously does Paul know how to justify his ἀναπληρῶσῃ κ.τ.λ.—seeing that he would, in fact, otherwise have had no claim at all upon another's bondsman—by the specification of design ἵνα ὑπὲρ σου κ.τ.λ. — διακονοῦ] direct representation by the subjunctive, "ita quidem, ut praeteriti temporis cognitio tanquam praesens effetatur," Kühner, ad Xen. Mem. i. 2. 2.—ἐν τοῖς δεσμοῖς τοῦ εὐγγ. in the bonds, into which the gospel has brought me—in a position therefore (comp. ver. 9) which makes me as needful as deserving of such loving service. — χαρίς δὲ κ.τ.λ.] but without thy consent, that is, independent of it, I have wished to do nothing, and so have left that wish unexecuted, in order that thy good may be not as from constraint, but from free will. The thought of the apostle accordingly is: But as I knew not thine own opinion, and thus must have acted without it, I was disposed to abstain from the retention of thy slave, which I had in view: for the good, which thou showest, is not to be as if forced, but voluntary. If I had retained Onesimus for my service, without having thy consent to that effect, the good, which I should have had to derive from thee through the service rendered to me by thy servant ὑπὲρ σου, would have been shown not from free will,—that is, not in virtue of thine own self-determination,—but as if compulsorily, just because independently of thy γνώμη ("non enim potuisset refregari Philemon," Bengel 1). Observe at the same time that τὸ ἀγαθὸν σου, thy good, that is, the good which thou showest to others, is to be left quite in its generality, so that not the serviceable employment of the slave specially and in concreto is meant, but rather the category in general, under which, in the intended application, there falls that special ἀγαθὸν, which is indicated in ver. 13.

1 Seneca, De Bene/. ii. 4 : "Si vis scire an velim, effice ut possim nolle." Luther aptly remarks: a constrained will is not voluntas, but non voluntas.
The restriction to the given case is impracticable on account of ἀλλὰ κατὰ ἐκούσιον, since Paul in fact did not at all intend to procure the consent of Philemon and to retain Onesimus. This in opposition to the usual interpretation: "τὸ ἀγαθὸν, i.e. beneficium tuum hocce, quo afficiar a te, si hunc mihi servum concedis," Heinrichs; comp. Bleek. But it is an error also, with de Wette, following Estius (who describes it as probable), to understand under τὸ ἀγαθ. σου the manumission of the slave, or to understand it at least as "also included" (Bleek), of which even in ver. 16 there is no mention, and for suggesting which in so covert and enigmatic a fashion there would not have been any reason, if he had desired it at all (but see on 1 Cor. vii. 21). According to Hofmann (comp. his Schriftbeweis, II. 2, p. 412), τὸ ἀγαθὸν σου is, like τὸ χρηστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ at Rom. ii. 4, thy goodness, and that the goodness, which Philemon will show to Onesimus when he had returned into his position as a slave; this only then becomes an undoubtedly spontaneous goodness, when the apostle refrains from any injunction of his own, whereas Philemon could not have done otherwise than refrain from punishing the slave for his escape, if Paul had retained him to himself, in which case, therefore, Philemon might have seemed to be kind compulsorily. This explanation, brought out by the insertion of thoughts between the lines, is to be set aside as at variance with the context, since there is nothing in the connection to point to the definition of the notion of τὸ ἀγαθὸν σου as goodness towards Onesimus, but on the contrary this expression can only acquire its import through the delicately thoughtful ὅπως ὑπὲρ σοῦ μοι διακονήθη ὑπὲρ σοῦ, emphatically prefixed, and ὅπως expresses the idea: "so that it appears as constrained." Comp. Fritzsche, ad Rom. II. p. 360. On κατὰ ἀνάγκη, by way of constraint (in the passive sense), by compulsion, comp. Ver. 15. Paul now supports his course of procedure in 1 That the manumission did take place, has been inferred from the tradition that Onesimus became a bishop. It may have taken place, but it is not meant here.

having given up his previous plan of retaining Onesimus with him, and in sending the latter back, by the consideration that the brief separation of the slave from his master may perhaps have had the Providential destined aim, etc. This destined aim would have been in fact counteracted by the ulterior keeping apart of the slave from Philemon. — τάχα] easily, perhaps, Rom. v. 7. So also in classical writers, but more frequently conjoined with ἄν. Comp. for a similar use of ίσως, Luke xx. 13, and Buttmann, ad Soph. Phil. p. 180. Chrysostom aptly remarks: καλῶς τὸ τάχα, ἵνα εἶξον ὁ δεσπότης ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἀπὸ αὐθάδειας γέγονεν ἡ φυγὴ καὶ διεστραμμένης διανοίας, καὶ οὐκ ἀπὸ προαιρέσεως, λέγει τάχα. A categoric assertion, although appropriate to the expression of a firm confidence, would have been less sparing of the feelings in the relation of the injured master to the fugitive slave, than the problematic mode of expression; it may readily be, that the way of the μοίρα Θεοῦ has been such, etc. — ἐγκρίθη] εὐφήμως καὶ τὴν φυγὴν χωρίσμον καλεῖ, ἵνα μὴ τὸ ὄνοματι τῆς φυγῆς παροξυσά τὸν δεσπότην, Theophylact. The aim of soothing underlies also the choice of the passive expression, as Chrysostom says: οὐκ εἶπεν· ἐγκρίθησεν ἑαυτὸν ... οὐ γὰρ αὐτὸν τὸ κατασκευάσμα τὸ ἐπὶ τούτῳ ἀναχωρήσας κ.τ.λ. — πρὸς ὄραν] Comp. 2 Cor. vii. 8; Gal. ii. 5; 1 Thess. ii. 17. This relative statement of time leaves it entirely undefined, how long the brief stay of Onesimus with Paul lasted. — ἰδα] divine destined aim therein. Chrysostom and Jerome already refer to Gen. xlv. 5. — αἰώνιον] not adverb, which is αἰώνιος, but accusative, so that the adverbial notion is expressed by way of predicate. Winer, p. 433 [E. T. 582]; Kühner, II. 1, p. 234 f. Erasmus aptly observes: "ipsum jam non temporarium ministrum, sed perpetuo tecum victurum." The notion itself, however, is not to be taken as the indefinite perpetuo (Calvin, Grotius, and many), or more precisely per omnem tuam vitam (Drusius, Heinrichs, Flatt, Demme, and others), in connection with which Beza and Michaelis point to the ordinances of the law with regard to the perpetua mancipia (Ex. xxi. 6; Deut. xv. 17); but—as is alone consonant with the N. T. use of the word concerning the future, and the Pauline doctrine of the approaching establishment of the kingdom—in the definite sense: for ever, embracing the expiring αἰών οὕτος and the αἰών μέλλων attaching itself thereto, and presupposing the Parousia, which is still to be expected within the lifetime of both parties; but not, that the Christian brotherly union reaches into eternity (Erasmus, Estius, de Wette, and others); so in the main also Hofmann: "as one who remains to him for ever, not merely for lifetime;" comp. Bleek. — ἀπέκβησαν] Comp. Phil. iv. 18; Matt. vi. 2. The compound expression (mayest have away) denotes the definitive final possession.

Ver. 16. Altered relation which with the αἰώνιον αὐτῶν ἀπέκβησαν was to take effect, and thenceforth to subsist, between Philemon and Onesimus. — ὃς ὁ δούλος] in this is implied not a hint of manumission, but the fact that, while the external relation of slavery remains in itself unchanged, the ethical relation has become another, a higher one (ὑπέρ δούλον), a brotherly relation of affection (ἀδελφός ἀγαπ.). Christianity does not abolish the distinctions of rank and station, but morally equalizes them (comp. on ἰσότητα, Col. iv. 1; 1 Tim. vi. 2), inasmuch as it pervades them with the unifying consecration of the life in Christ, 1 Cor. vii. 21 f., xii. 13; Gal. iii. 28; Col. iii. 11. To the ὃς the following ὑπέρ is correlative: not further in the quality of a slave, but in a higher manner than as a slave; ἀδελφόν ἀγαπ., as a beloved brother, is then the exegesis of ὑπέρ δούλον. And the latter is conceived of thus: so that he is beyond and above a δούλος, is more than such. Comp. Plato, Rep. p. 488 A; Legg. viii. p. 839 D: ἵναι τιμάζειν ὑπέρ ἀνθρώπων; 2 Macc. ix. 8. — μάλιστα ἐμοὶ κ.τ.λ. belongs to ἀδελ. ἀγαπ. In that view μάλιστα has its reference in the relation of Onesimus to his fellow-Christians, with whom he has hitherto been brought into connection; among these it was Paul, to whom he stood most of all—that is, in higher degree than to any other—in the relation of a beloved brother. — πώσος δὲ μάλλον σοι] since he is thy property, and does not enter into merely temporary connection with thee, such as that in which he stood with me; see ver. 15. — καὶ ἐν σαρκί καὶ ἐν κυρ. specifies the two domains, in which Onesimus will be to him yet far more a beloved brother than to the apostle, namely, in the flesh, i.e. in the sphere pertaining to the material nature of man, in things consequently that concern the bodily life and needs, and in the Lord, i.e. in the higher spiritual life-sphere of fellowship with Christ. Accordingly, ἐν σαρκὶ Philemon has the brother as a slave, and ἐν κυρίω the slave as a brother; how greatly, therefore, must he, in view of the mutual connection and interpenetration of the two relations, have him, as well ἐν σαρκὶ as ἐν κυρίω, as a beloved brother! How much more still (πόσον δὲ μᾶλλον) must Onesimus thus be such an one to Philemon, than to the apostle! The two domains of life designated by ἐν σαρκὶ and ἐν κυρίω—which, connected by καὶ ... καὶ, exclude the conception of ethical contrast—are to be left in all their comprehensiveness. Influenced by the erroneous presupposition of manumission (see on ver. 15), de Wette thinks in ἐν σαρκὶ of the family-relation into which the manumitted one enters.

Ver. 17. Ὑδὲν] resuming; see on ver. 12, where the request, to which utterance is only now finally given after the moving digressions vv. 13–16, was already to be expressed.—The emphasis, and that in the way of furnishing a motive, lies upon κοινωνία: if thou hast me as a partner, if thou standest in this relation to me,—according to which consequently the refusal of the request would appear as proof of the contrary. As to this use of ἐξεύω, comp. on Matt. xiv. 4. The notion of the κοινωνία is not to be restricted more narrowly than is implied in the idea of Christian fellowship, and so of common believing, loving, hoping, disposition, working, and so forth; while Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, and others bring out only the partnership of the φρονεῖν and the striving; whereas others, as Estius, Rosenmüller, Heinrichs, Flatt, et al., explain κοινωνία as friend, and Beza and Bengel refer it to the community of property: “Si mecum habere te putas communia bona, ut inter socios esse solet” (Beza); comp. Grotius. The ὡς is: so as if thou receivedst me, as if I now came to thee; for see ver. 12. Theophylact: τίνα οὖν ἄν κατεδυσάτησε; τίς γὰρ οὖν ἄν ἐθέλησε Πάυλον προσδέξασθαι, Erasmus: “recipias oportet velut alterum me.” On προσλαβοῦ, comp. Rom. xiv. 1, xv. 7.

Ver. 18. And herein the offence against thee, with which Onesimus is chargeable, is not to present an obstacle. — ei indication in a hypothetic form, so as to spare the feelings: Attic politeness, see Herbst, ad Xen. Mem. i. 5. 1; Bornem.
ad Conviv. iv. 3; Winer, p. 418 [E. T. 562]. — τι ηδικησε Comp. Col. iii. 25; Gal. iv. 12; Acts xxv. 10. In what the wrong done to Philemon by Onesimus, and without doubt confessed to the apostle by the latter, actually consisted, is hinted in what follows. — η δειλινησι — oweth (anything). This applies to a money-debt (see ver. 19). Accordingly the slave had probably been guilty, not merely in general of a fault in service which injured his master (Hofmann), but in reality (comp. already Chrysostom) of purloining or of embezzlement, which Paul here knows how to indicate euphemistically. The referring it merely to the running away itself, and the neglect of service therewith connected, would not be (in opposition to Bleek) in keeping with the hypothetical form of expression. — τοντα] the τι, which he ηδικησε σε η δειλινησι; hence we have not, with Grotius, Flatt, and others, to explain these two verbs of different offences (the former as referring to theft at his running away, the latter to defalcation). — ειμι ελλογα] set it down to my account; " me debitorem habe," Bengel. Friendly pleasantry, which in ver. 19 becomes even jocular (μετα χαριτω της πνευματικης, Chrysostom), with which the subsequent ει λγω σοι κ.τ.λ. is very compatible (in opposition to Hofmann), if it is correctly apprehended. On the form ελλογαω we have not, with Fritzsche, ad Rom. v. 13, at once to pronounce against it: " nulla est " (comp. Matthis: " stultum est"), since ελλογηω likewise is only with certainty preserved in Rom. l.c., and in Boeckh, Inscr. I. p. 850. It is true λγωω, in Lucian, Lexiph. 15, means to be fond of speaking; but this single passage, in which the simple form is preserved, does not suffice to negative the use of the word in the sense of reckoning.

Ver. 19. Promissory note under his own hand, in which by the elsewhere so weighty εγω Παυλος (Gal. v. 2; 2 Cor. x. 1, al.)
the friendly humour of the connection is rendered the more palpable through force of contrast. Whether Paul wrote the whole Epistle with his own hand (the usual view; see already Jerome, Chrysostom, and Theodoret), or only from this point onward, cannot be determined. In the latter case the raillery comes out the more prominently. — ίνα μὴ λέγω σοι κ.τ.λ.

Comp. 2 Cor. ii. 5, and the Latin ne dicam: “est σχῆμα παρασιωτῆσως sive reticentiae, cum dicimus omittere nos velle, quod maxime dicimus,” Grotius. The ίνα denotes the design which Paul has in the εγραψα... ἀποτίσω; he will, so he represents the matter, by this his note of hand avoid saying to Philemon—what he withal might in strictness have to say to him—that he was yet far more indebted to the apostle. Without sufficient reason, Wiesinger after a harsh and involved fashion attaches ίνα, notwithstanding the intervening clause, to τούτο έμοι ἔλλογα, and then takes the σοι, which according to the usual view belongs without emphasis to λέγω, as emphatic (sc. ἔλλογα); “that reckon to me, not to say: to thee.” So too Hofmann, according to whose arbitrary discovery in the repetition of the έγω the emphatic έμοι is held “to continue sounding,” until it finds in the emphatic σοι its antithesis, which cancels it. Why should not Paul, instead of this alleged “making itsound on,” have put the words ίνα μὴ λέγω σοι, δι' κ.τ.λ. (because, according to Hofmann) immediately after τούτο έμοι ἔλλογα, in order thereupon to conclude this passage with the weighty έγω Παύλος κ.τ.λ.? Besides, there would be implied in that emphasizing and antithetic reference of the σοι a pungent turn so directly and incisively putting him to shame, that it would not be in keeping with the whole friendly humorous tone of this part of the letter, which does not warrant us in presupposing a displeasure on Philemon’s part meriting so deeply earnest a putting him to shame (Hofmann). The very shaming hint, which the passage gives, is affectionately veiled in an apparent reticence by ίνα μὴ λέγω σοι κ.τ.λ. Chrysostom already says aptly: εντρεπτικῶς ἄμα καὶ χαριέντως.

— The σοι added to λέγω is in keeping with the confidential tone of the Epistle. Paul would not willingly remind his friend of his debt. — καὶ σεαυτόν] also thine own self, δι' έμοι γὰρ, φησι, τής σωτηρίας ἀπτήλαυσας καὶ ἐντείθεν δήλον, ὡς τής ἀποστολικῆς ἡξιώθη διδασκαλίας ὁ Φιλήμων, Theodoret. Through his conversion he was indebted to the apostle for his own self, namely, as subject of the ζωή αἰώνιος. The same view is found at Luke ix. 25. See on that passage. — προσφέρεις insuper debes, Herod. vi. 59; Dem. 650, 23; Thucyd. viii. 48. 6; Xen. Cyrop. iii. 2. 16, Oec. 20. 1; Polyb. v. 88. 4. 8, viii. 25. 4; Lucian. Sacrif. 4. The conception, namely, is: "not to say to thee, that thou (namely, because I have made thee a Christian) owest to me not merely that, which I have just declared my wish to pay to thee, but also (καὶ) thine own self besides."

With due attention to the correlation of καὶ and πρὸς, the force of the compound would not have been overlooked (Vulgate, Luther, Flatt, and others).

Ver. 20. Yea, brother, I would fain have profit of thee in the Lord. — εὐθὺς not beseeching (Grotius and many), but confirmatory (comp. on Matt. xv. 27), as always: verily, certainly. It confirms, however, not the preceding κ. σεαυτόν μοι προσφέρεις (de Wette and Hofmann, following Eisner), — against which may be urged the emphatically prefixed ἐγώ (it must in that case logically have run: σοῦ ἐγώ ὑναίμην), — but the whole intercession for Onesimus, in which Paul has made the cause of the latter his own. He, he himself, would fain have joy at the hands of his friend Philemon in the granting of this request; himself (not, it might be, merely Onesimus) is Philemon to make happy by this compliance. — ὑναίμην

Expression of the wish, that this might take place (Kühner, II. 1, p. 193); hence the counter-remark of Hofmann that it is not "I would fain," but "may I," is unmeaning. Comp. Eur. Hec. 997: ἥκιστ' ὑναίμην τοῦ παρόντος, Ignat. Eph. 2: ὑναίμην ὑμῶν διὰ παντός, Rom. 5: ὑναίμην τῶν θηρίων... εὐχομαι κ.τ.λ. On the expression very current from Homer's time (Odys. xix. 68, ii. 33), ὑνίναμαι τινος, to have advantage from a thing or person, to profit thereby, comp. Wetstein; on the different verbal forms of the word, Lobeck, ad Phryn. p. 12 f.; Kühner, I. p. 879 f. In the N. T. it is ἀπαξ λεγόμ.; but the very choice of the peculiar word supports the usual hypothesis (although not recognised by de Wette, Bleek, and

1 With this καὶ, ἀδελφί the humorous tone has died away, and, when Paul now inserts the need of his own heart and his hearty confidence as to the compliance of his friend, the intercession receives the seal of its trustful assurance of success, and therewith its close. Chrysostom already aptly observes that the καὶ, ἀδελφί applies generally to the προσφέρεις requested, so that the apostle "ἀδελφίς τῶν καριτιστέρων πάλιν ἵνα τοῖς προτέρω τῶν σπουδαίων." Hofmann) that Paul intended an allusion to the name Onesimus. 1 There is the additional circumstance that the emphatic ἐγὼ ingeniously gives point to the antithetic glance back at him, for whom he has made request; comp. also Wiesinger, Ellicott, Winer. — ἐν κυρίῳ gives to the notion of the ὀναίμυν its definite Christian character. Just so the following ἐν Χριστῷ. Neither means: for the sake of (Beza, Grotius, Flatt, and others). No profit of any other kind whatever does Paul wish for himself from Philemon, but that, the enjoyment of which has its ground in Christ as the ethical element. Comp. χαίρειν ἐν κυρίῳ, and the like. — ἀνάπαυσον κ.τ.λ. let me not wish in vain this ἐγὼ σου ὀναίμ. ἐν κυρίῳ! Refresh (by a forgiving and loving reception of Onesimus) my heart; τὰ σπλάγχνα, seat of loving emotion, of the love concerned for Onesimus, comp. ver. 7; not an expression of love to Philemon (Oecumenius, Theophylact), nor yet a designation of Onesimus (ver. 12), as is maintained by Jerome, Estius, Storr, Heinrichs, Flatt, and others.

Ver. 21. Conclusion of the whole matter of request, and that "as if for a last precaution" (Ewald), with the expression of the confidence, to which his apostolic dignity entitled him (ὑπακοὴ), although in accordance with ver. 8 he has abstained from enjoining. This, as well as the εἰδὼς δὲ κ.τ.λ., appended by way of climax as an accompanying definition to the πεποίθος δὲ κ.τ.λ., could not but entirely remove any possible hesitation on the part of Philemon and complete the effect of the letter. Comp. already Chrysostom and Jerome. — καὶ ἵνα δὲ λέγω what, i.e. what further deeds of kindness over and above the receiving back which was asked for, the apostle leaves absolutely to his friend, without, however, wishing to hint in particular at the manumission of Onesimus (Bleek and Hofmann, following older expositors); comp. on ver. 13 f. The certainty, however, that his friend will do still more, makes him the less doubt that at the least what is requested will be done. Thus there is contained in this εἰδὼς κ.τ.λ. a thought-

1 The allusion would have been more easily seized, if Paul had written in some such way as: ταῖς ἐν Χριστῷ ἐν οἷς ἐνίκησας ὑμᾶς. But, as he has expressed it, it is more delicate and yet palpable enough, especially for the friend of whom he makes the request.
fully contrived incitement. — ἀγωγός] namely, in that which I have written. Observe the different tenses. — καὶ] not merely that which I say, but also.

Ver. 22. This further commission too—what a welcome, and wisely closing, indirect support to the intercession for Onesimus! τολῆ γάρ ἡ καὶ ἡ τιμὴ Παύλου ἐνδήμωντος, Chrysostom ; and so the apostle, in fact, wished soon himself to see what effect his intercession had had. — ἀμα δὲ καὶ] that is, simultaneously with that, which thou wilt do in the case of Onesimus. This is the sense of the adverbial ἀμα in all passages,1 even Col. iv. 3 ; Acts xxivv. 26 ; and 1 Tim. v. 13 (in opposition to Hofmann), and among the Greek writers, so that it by no means expresses merely the conception of being joined, that the one is to associate itself with the other (Hofmann), but the contemporary connection of the one action with the other; Suidas: ἐπὶ τοῦ κατὰ τον αὐτὸν καρπὸν. Bleek erroneously renders: at the same time also I entreat thee; so, too, de Wette, as if ἀμα δὲ καὶ παρακαλῶ or the like were in the text. — ἔτοιμαξε μοι ξενίαν] Paul hoped at that time for a speedy liberation; his ulterior goal was Rome; the journey thither, however, he thought of making through Asia Minor, where he also desired to come to Colossae and to take up his quarters (Acts xxviii. 23) as a guest with Philemon. Comp. Introd. to Colossians, § 2. Observe, moreover, that ἀμα δὲ καὶ presupposes so near a use of the ξενία, as doubtless tallies with the shorter distance between Caesarea and Phrygia, but not with the distance from Rome to Phrygia, specially since, according to Phil. i. 25 f., ii. 24, Paul thought of journeying from Rome to Macedonia; hence it would have been inappropriate and strange on his part, if, starting from Rome, he had already bespoken a lodging in Colossae, and that, too, one to be made ready so without delay. — ὑμῶν and ὑμῖν apply to the persons already named, vv. 1, 2. To extend the reference further, namely, to "the body of Christians amidst which Philemon lives" (Hofmann), is unwarranted. The expression is individualizing. On χάρισθα, may be granted, i.e. liberated

1 Where, namely, there is mention of the combination of two expressions of activity, which takes place or ought to take place (as here). What ἀμα is as ἀμα, ἀμα is as ἄμα (Ammonius, p. 13).
in favour of you, comp. on Acts iii. 14, xxvii. 24; on διὰ τ. προσευχ. ὑμ., Phil. i. 19. This hope was not fulfilled. Calvin leaves this doubtful, but aptly adds: "Nihil tamen est absurdi, si spes, qualem de temporali Dei beneficio conceperit, eum frustrata fuerit."

Ver. 23 f. Salutations from the same persons, Col. iv. 10—14. — ὁ συναχισμάτων μου] See on Col. iv. 10. Here it further has expressly the specifically Christian character.¹ Comp. δέσμιος ἐν κυρίῳ, Eph. iv. 1. — The Jesus Justus mentioned at Col. iv. 11 does not here join in the greeting. The reason for this cannot be ascertained. It is possible that this man was absent just at the moment of Paul’s writing the brief letter to Philemon. According to Wieseler, p. 417, he was not among those in the abode of the apostle under surveillance (in Rome).

Ver. 25. See on Gal. vi. 18.

"It is some five or six years since this work first made its appearance, and now that a second edition has been called for, the Author has taken the opportunity to make some alterations which are likely to render it still more acceptable. Substantially, however, the book remains the same, and the hearty commendation with which we noted its first issue applies to it at least as much now."—Rock.

FROM IGNATIUS TO THE PRESENT TIME.

AS EDITED BY DR. FERDINAND PIPER, PROFESSOR OF THEOLOGY IN BERLIN.

Translated from the German, and Edited, with many additional Lives,
BY H. M. MACCRACKEN, D.D.

The above comprises a translation of the well-known work of Dr. Piper of Berlin. It contains biographical summaries of the lives of 125 distinguished Christian Teachers, from the immediate successors of the Apostles, down to a recent date.

The German Biographies, which include men of nearly every age and nation, are written by well-known and eminent divines. Among those Biographies are the following:

By Dr. Semisch of Berlin:

By Dr. Piper:
Polycarp.

By Dr. Hagenbach:
Clement of Rome, Athanasius, Cæolampadius, Beza, Renata.

By Dr. Krummacher:

By Dr. Ranke:

By Dr. Heubner:
Luther.

By Dr. Henry:
Calvin.

By Dr. Tholuck:

By Dr. Back:
Wesley, etc. etc.

To these are added the Biographies of a number of eminent Americans, e.g. Jonathan Edwards, Bishop White, Lyman Beecher, Timothy Dwight, Charles Hodge, Assburt, Wayland, Alexander, Barnes, etc. This forms not the least attractive part of the work.

"It will be interesting and valuable, not alone to the mere student, but to the general reader, who wishes to know, without the necessity of laborious toil, as much as can be fairly expected of many of the most illustrious leaders of the Church of Christ."—Christian World.

"We can cordially recommend these volumes to those who care lovingly to trace the finger of God in the progress of His own cause."—Daily Review.

"This is a very interesting and useful hagiology. . . . The collection is one of remarkable value and interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"A really new idea, executed with most commendable care and skill. . . . The "lives" are well written, full enough to be really instructive without being wearisome; and the volumes are a most instructive illustration of the "doings of God in the history of the Church." a witness of the continued power and grace of the Spirit first given in fulness at Pentecost. We feel sure that as the work becomes known it will be valued and read."—Freeman.

CHEAP RE-ISSUE OF STIER'S WORDS OF THE LORD JESUS.

To meet a very general desire that this now well-known Work should be brought more within the reach of all classes, both Clergy and Laity, Messrs. CLARK are now issuing, for a limited period, the Eight Volumes, handsomely bound in Four, at the Subscription Price of TWO GUINEAS.

As the allowance to the Trade must necessarily be small, orders sent either direct or through Booksellers must in every case be accompanied with a Post Office Order for the above amount.

'The whole work is a treasury of thoughtful exposition. Its measure of practical and spiritual application, with exegetical criticism, commends it to the use of those whose duty it is to preach as well as to understand the Gospel of Christ.'—Guardian.

New and Cheap Edition, in Four Vols., demy 8vo, Subscription Price 28s., THE LIFE OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST:
A Complete Critical Examination of the Origin, Contents, and Connection of the Gospels. Translated from the German of J. P. Lange, D.D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Bonn. Edited, with additional Notes, by MARCUS DODS, D.D.

'We have arrived at a most favourable conclusion regarding the importance and ability of this work—the former depending upon the present condition of theological criticism, the latter on the wide range of the work itself; the singularly dispassionate judgment of the Author, as well as his pious, reverential, and erudite treatment of a subject inexpressibly holy... We have great pleasure in recommending this work to our readers. We are convinced of its value and enormous range.'—Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette.

BENGEL'S GNOMON—CHEAP EDITION.

GNOMON OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

By JOHN ALBERT BENDEL. Now first translated into English. With Original Notes, Explanatory and Illustrative. Edited by the Rev. ANDREW R. FAUSSET, M.A. The Original Translation was in Five Large Volumes, demy 8vo, averaging more than 650 pages each, and the very great demand for this Edition has induced the Publishers to issue the Five Volumes bound in Three, at the Subscription Price of TWENTY-FOUR SHILLINGS.

'They trust by this still further to increase its usefulness.

'It is a work which manifests the most intimate and profound knowledge of Scripture, and which, if we examine it with care, will often be found to condense more matter into a line than can be extracted from many pages of other writers.'—Archdeacon Hare.

'In respect both of its contents and its tone, Bengel's Gnomon stands alone. Even among laymen there has arisen a healthy and vigorous desire for scriptural knowledge, and Bengel has done more than any other man to aid such inquirers. There is perhaps no book every word of which has been so well weighed, or in which a single technical term contains so often far-reaching and suggestive views... The theoretical and practical are as intimately connected as light and heat in the sun's ray.'—Life of Perthes.
