Prophecies and the Prophetic Spirit in the Christian Era

An Historical Essay

BY

JOHN J. IGN. VON DÖLLINGER

TRANSLATED WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND APPENDICES

BY

ALFRED PLUMMER
FELLOW AND TUTOR OF TRINITY COLLEGE, OXFORD

RIVINGTONS
London, Oxford, and Cambridge
1873 Βλέποντες φευγή, μαντευόμενοι μάθαι, οἱ λέγοντες· Τάδε λέγει Κύριος, καὶ ὁ Κύριος οὐκ ἀπέσταλκεν αὐτοὺς.—Εζεκ. xiii. 6.
INTRODUCTION
INTRODUCTION

A BERGLAUBE, or extra-belief, we have lately been reminded, is the poetry of life. "That men should, by help of their imagination, take short cuts to what they ardently desire, whether the triumph of Israel or the triumph of Christianity, should tell themselves fairy tales about it, should make these fairy tales the basis of what is far more sure and solid than the fairy tales, the desire itself,—all this has in it, we repeat, nothing which is not natural, nothing blameable. Nay, the region of our hopes and sentiments extends far beyond the region of what we can know with certainty. What we reach by hope and presentiment may yet be true, and he would be a narrow reasoner who denied, for instance, all validity to the idea of immortality, because this idea rests on presentiment mainly, and does not admit of certain demonstration. In religion, above all, extra-belief is in itself no matter, assuredly, for blame. The object of religion is conduct; and if a man helps himself in his conduct by taking an object "of hope and presentiment as if it were an object of certainty, he may even be said to gain thereby an advantage." •

Just as the world sees many instances of men who, like Rienzi and Arnold of Brescia, ont pris les souvenirs pour les espérances, so also it sees many who mistake hopes and longings for possibilities and facts. Whether or no that is in any sense true of the Prophets of the Old and New Testament, it must assuredly is literally true of many of the so-called Prophets of the Middle Ages.
"By the help of their imagination, they took short cuts to what they ardently desired," or greatly dreaded, whether the reform of the Church or the recovery of Jerusalem, the destruction of Rome or the end of the world. So far as they were honest and believed in themselves, they fancied that they were gazing through a window, open to them alone, into the secrets of a not far distant future, while they were really looking into a fantastic mirror which reflected, not the future, but a real or imaginary past. What lay before them was really a blank; they had not the critical power to form a reasonable conjecture; but their minds, charged to overflowing with the memories of the past, saw them again in front. Ils ont pris les souvenirs pour les espérances.

The contrast which strikes us in comparing the

1 Matthew Arnold, Literature and Dogma, pp. 107, 108. London, 1873.
bulk of these mediæval prophecies with those of Holy Scripture, is very similar to that which exists between the false and the true gospels, or again between the miracles of Christ, of His Apostles and Prophets, and the majority of those attributed to saints in later ages. Contrast the Child Jesus in the midst of the Doctors, astonishing them by His understanding and answers, and the caricature of Him causing birds and beasts of clay to fly and skip, in order to surpass His playmates. Or, again, compare the deaths of Ananias and his wife with the food stolen from a parent to give in charity, and then turned into roses in order to conceal the theft and the consequent lie; or the removal of Peter’s chains with the removal of the House of Loretto. On the one side grotesqueness, caprice, want of ethical purpose; on the other, dignity, solemnity, a beneficent aim: fantastic or vain-glorious exhibitions of power, sometimes even to gratify passion or support an immoral cause, instead of manifestations of glory and love, given in order that men might not only wonder and fear, but love and adore.¹ Much such a difference is obvious between the prophetic books of the Bible and the would-be prophecies of later centuries; between Isaiah and Jeremiah and the Commentaries on them, which bear the name of

INTRODUCTION.

Joachim; between the Apocalypse of S. John and the Revelations, which bear the name of Methodius. Here again we have the unmistakeable contrast between what is divine, spontaneous, and disinterested, and what is the result of human elaboration, calculation, and déceit. Where these attempts at prophecy are not monstrous and absurd or demonstrably false, they commonly have a ring of spuriousness which perhaps can more easily be felt than defined, or at any rate they are lacking in the clear-sounding ring of truth and simplicity.

These "lying divinations" are by no means valueless. They are no mere literary curiosities. Many of them throw considerable light on the history of the time; they reflect the thoughts and feelings of the age, its memories, hopes, and fears. Nor is this all. Here again, as ever, the beauty and sublimity of the true is set forth in stronger light by the grotesqueness and meanness of the false. These show us what manner of promises, and threats, and predictions were the result, when men drew from their own imaginations and devised futures of their own, and rewards and punishments of their own, for themselves and their fellow-men.

They show us how no mere human ingenuity, no fraud, however "pious," could have produced such majesty of language and tone (to leave the matter out of the question altogether), as delights us in the Prophets of the Old Covenant. The argument is similar to that lately used to prove the trustworthiness of the Fourth Gospel. "The doctrine and discourses cannot in the main be the writer's, because in the main they are clearly out of his reach." 1

Another point of similarity between the miracles and the prophecies of the Middle Ages remains to be noticed. It is allowed by all critics and historians, whatever their religion and predilections, that mediaeval history contains a vast mass of miracles, so also of prophecies, which are spurious and fictitious,—"so vast indeed, that those who wish to claim credence for some particular ones, or who, without mentioning particular ones, argue that some or other out of the whole body may have been true, still abandon the great body as indefensible." The difficulty of defending any, however few, is consequently great. In the bulk of their testimony the witnesses can be proved to have countenanced falsehood: are they to be believed where it is possible that they may be telling the truth? Possible, because there is no direct evidence to the contrary: for in a discussion of this kind it seems right to start with the hypothesis that miracles, especially miraculous predictions of future events, are not antecedently impossible. To start with a ready-made axiom, that the supernatural (i. e. what seems to be such to us) is à priori inadmissible, is to beg the whole question at the outset. What we have to inquire in each case is, whether the amount of evidence in favour of the prediction is such as to outweigh the antecedent improbability. We must inquire—to quote the well-known canon laid down by Davison—whether the prediction be known to have been promulgated before the event; whether the event be such as could not have been foreseen, when it was predicted, by any effort of human reason; whether the event and the prediction correspond together in a clear accomplishment. There are prophecies in Scripture which can stand this threefold test. The early promulgation, the supernatural foreknowledge, the manifest fulfilment, have been fully ascertained. Can as much be said for any of the prophetic utterances in the Middle Ages? The conclusion arrived at in the Essay which follows is, that this question should probably be answered in the negative. Either the supposed prophecy was published after the event, as in the case of the Joachimite Commentaries, and of the greater part of the Prophecies of Malachias and of Hermann of Lehnin; or else the prediction is nothing more than the result of great human foresight, as possibly the predictions of Savonarola; or else there is no real \(^1\) correspondence between the prediction

1 Literature and Dogma, p. 170.

\(^1\) There will, of course, now and then be remarkable coincidences, e.g. in the case of the great plague in Milan, in 1630, which had been foretold by the astrologers. A large comet had appeared in 1628. Some prophesied war, others famine; but most, judging from its pale and the event, as in the case of the latter part of the two famous Prophecies mentioned above.

The argument against medieval miracles as contrasted with those of the Bible, so ably stated by Canon Mozley in his eighth Bampton Lecture, is to a very great extent parallel to that urged here and in the Essay against the credibility of medieval prophecies; so much so that it may be worth while, mutatis mutandis, to summarize it.

(1.) The grotesque and extravagant form, and (2.) the unworthy objects aimed at, have been already noticed. (3.) The absence of contemporary testimony must in many cases be taken into consideration. That the Prophets and Christ Himself predicted His passion and death and resurrection, and that He actually suffered and died and rose again, are facts attested by contemporary witnesses, and can only be impugned at the peril of invalidating all historical evidence, and involving our whole knowledge of the past in doubt. Very few colour, predicted pestilence, and won for themselves great credit thereby, like those who had preferred λομός to λυμός as the wording in the old Athenian prophecy, Thuc. II., 54. Even the almanac-prophets made great hits sometimes.

¹ Nor is this position much weakened by the fact of an occasional mistranslation in our Version, or of an occasional misinterpretation by the commentators. It may be that "until Shiloh come" should run "so long as the people resort to the sanctuary," and that "kiss the Son" is in reality "be instructed;" or, what is less easy to believe, that "the Branch" in Jeremiah is wrongly identified with Christ;—still there remains an immense amount of Messianic prophecy, of which it is impossible to dispose in this way, and that remainder is sufficient for the argument.
of these later prophecies fulfil even this preliminary condition of credibility.

But this condition satisfied, we have to consider (4.) the character of the witnesses. The characteristic needed is a keen sense and love of truth. Truth is a yoke. To have facts against us is a trial—a trial against which we are constantly disposed to rebel; and this rebellion is easily put into action by representing facts as we wish them to be rather than as they are. The simplicity, the balance and moderation of the Apostolic character, is a sufficient guarantee against any such rebellion in their case. But along with all that is splendid and admirable in the Church of a later age, there appear an ambition and an exaggeration of character, which in themselves are a falling away from strict moral truth, and must detract something from the credibility of witnesses exhibiting such traits.

(5.) The very greatness of their cause was a considerable guarantee for the truthfulness of the Prophets and Apostles. Its aim was to renovate mankind, sunk in the deepest corruption; one of those great undertakings which react upon the minds of those engaged in it, and raise them above insincerity and extravagance. This can scarcely be said of most of the causes, in the furtherance of which these later prophecies were enlisted. Questionable if not spurious developments of Christian doctrines and discipline, to say nothing of merely political and those perhaps immoral ends, give but small guarantee for the truthfulness of their promoters. Let the human intellect once begin to busy itself with ignoble, or even with magnificent schemes in politics, with false or at least doubtful deductions from Christian principles, nay, even with true but minute and remote ones, and the spirit and temper of the Prophets and Apostles is soon exchanged for something very different. Political ambition and religious propagandism have not a reputation for truthfulness.

(6.) Lastly, these would-be Prophets of a later age in many cases uttered their predictions without risk or penalty. True, that not a few of them, like the Prophets and Apostles of old, went about with their lives in their hands, and sometimes most intrepidly lost them. That at least is a test of their sincerity. But it was not so with all. And in no case can the mere willingness to suffer for a doctrine or a cause be considered as in itself a sufficient proof of its truth or of its righteousness.

A consideration of the line of argument briefly stated above will probably lead most thinking persons to acquiesce in the weighty opinion of Bacon respecting these so-called prophecies. His Essay on the subject concludes with these words: "My "Judgement is, that they ought all to be Despised;
INTRODUCTION.

"And ought to serve, but for Winter Talke, by the "Fire side. Though when I say Despised, I meane "it as for Beleeve: for otherwise, the Spreading or "Publishing of them, is in no sort to be Despised. "For they have done much mischiefe: and I see "many severe Lawes made to suppress them. "That, that hath given them Grace, and some "credit, consisteth in three Things. First, that "men marke, when they hit, and never marke, "when they misse: As they doe, generally, also of "Dreames. The second is, that Probable Conjectures, or obscure Traditions, many times, turne. "themselves into Prophecies: While the Nature of "Man, which coveteth Divination, thinkes it no "Perill to foretell that, which indeed they doe but "collect. . . . The third, and Last (which is the "Great one) is, that almost all of them, being "infinite in number, have bee Impostures, and "by idle and craftie Braines, merely contrived and "faigned, after the Event Past."

The prophecies of the Old and New Testament, then, lend no 'authority to the attempts at prophetic

1 Bacon's father might have told him how in his boyhood the astrologers had predicted that on Feb. 1st, 1524, the Thames would flood the whole of London and wash away 10,000 houses. They were implicitly believed. By the middle of January 20,000 persons of all classes had quitted the city with all their belongings. The Thames flowed on as usual till the fatal day was passed; and the astrologers saved their profession from contempt and their persons from violence by saying that they had made a miscalculation of a century!
utterance in later times, except as showing that genuine prediction, far exceeding the limits of mere human sagacity, has actually taken place. But, it may be asked, must not the discredit, which rightly attaches itself to these latter productions, necessariely be reflected upon the whole body of prophecy?
These are nearer to our own day; we know more about the circumstances which gave occasion to them; in many cases we can not merely demonstrate that the whole is a fiction, but can also trace out the exact process of its formation. If we knew as much about the prophecies to which Christians are accustomed to appeal, should we not find very much the same phenomena? Does not this exposure of the so-called Prophecies of Merlin and the Sibyl, of Cyril and of Telesphorus, justify us in saying, “Now we know how prophecies grow or are “made; this is the way in which the books of “Isaiah and Zechariah came into existence, only
“the evidence of the process has in their case “become obscured”?

A natural and perhaps not unattractive argument, but scarcely a very solid one. Hypocrisy, one is told, is the tribute which vice pays to virtue;
and the existence of hypocrisy is some evidence of the existence of virtue. So also the fact of false prophecies is some evidence of the reality of true ones. It is conceivable, of course, that all virtue is a sham, and that all predictions are a fiction, but the balance of probability is the other way. The false prophecies do not discredit the true any more than the spuriousness of the Letters of Plato discredits the authenticity of the Dialogues of Plato; nor so much as the monstrous proceedings and results of the Council of the Vatican discredit the proceedings and results of the Council of Nicaea. But the enormous differences, pointed out already between the prophecies of the Middle Ages and those of Scripture, are sufficient answer to this sort of argument. In the case of products differing so widely in kind, it would be great rashness to argue from the mode of production in one case to the mode of production in the other.

Attempts to lift the veil, which hides from us the future and the other world, are not peculiar to any age or religion. They belong to human nature. It is inevitable that man should have a passionate craving to know something of that which is in store for him hereafter, of that which lies on the other side of the grave. This innate and reasonable longing is legitimately gratified by revelation. But there is a similar longing which is not reasonable, but is bred of curiosity, and the love of what is marvellous and sensational. It is this morbid craving, never absent from human character in the aggregate at any period of its history, which has produced endless pretensions to the prophetic gift, and to the power to communicate with the unseen world. It is the nemesis\(^1\) which, by a natural reaction, comes upon those nations or individuals, who have from the first rejected, or have afterwards discarded, the legitimate means of gratifying this innate longing.

It is vain to say, be content with the present. Man needs something to believe as well as something to see; and, in proportion as faith in an imperfect but sufficient revelation of the future is refused admittance, or allowed to fade away, the ground is clear for a substitute, however miserable. ἐματαυωθησαν ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐσκοτώθη ἡ ἀσύνετος αὐτῶν καρδία. Man is never content with merely forsaking the fountain of living waters; he ever goes on to hew himself out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water. Israel, having cast off Jehovah and slain the Prophets, took to idols, soothsayers, and necromancers. Greece and Rome, having learnt from Epicurus to banish the gods, and from Lucian to laugh at them, became the eager dupes of the miracle-monger, the augur, and the astrologer. Julian discarded Christianity, and believed in magic. The freethinkers of the French Revolution, who followed in his footsteps, rejected the Prophets and Apostles as liars and fools, and accepted without question the impostures of Cagliostro and the Rosicrucians. Nor can our own age afford to throw stones. While our criticism is far too rigorous and searching to leave a vestige of revelation undemolished, we swallow with gaping mouth the spiritual communications of "Mr. Sludge the medium."

\(^1\) See a sermon on the Nemesis of Unbelief, preached before the University of Oxford, Nov. 18th, 1866, by John Jackson, Bishop of Lincoln.

For the ordinary reader, therefore, for the student of history, and for the theologian, this essay on Prophecies and the Prophetic Spirit in the Christian Era will be found to contain material of great interest and value. It is hoped that the notes and references, given by the author, and augmented by the translator, will be of some assistance to those who may wish to investigate the subject more fully for themselves.

A. P.

Oxford,
October, 1873.
This translation has been undertaken with the express sanction of the author.

The translator is responsible for all that appears between square brackets, thus [ ], for the table of contents, the italics, and the insertions in the margin.
THE translation of a work by Dr. Döllinger scarcely needs apology. The present writer was encouraged to undertake a translation of this now celebrated Essay by the very favourable way in which his reproduction of the author's Papstfabeln has been received in England. Soon after he had finished this second work of translation, he found that he was not the first in the field. An English version of the Essay had already appeared in New York, appended to an American edition of his own translation of the Papstfabeln. But for the kindness of his publishers, he would probably have remained in ignorance of this reprint and enlargement of his work. He has, however, taken advantage of the opportunity thus offered, and by a comparison of his own translation with that of Dr. Henry B. Smith,¹ has been able to correct one or two small errors, which would probably otherwise have escaped his notice.

The original of the Essay, Der Weissagungsglaube und das Prophetenthum in der christlichen

¹ Professor in Union Theological Seminary, N.Y.
Zeit, appeared in 1871 in the new series of Von Raumer's Historisches Taschenbuch. Dr. Döllinger intended to supplement it with an essay on Dante as a Prophet, but the press of other work has up to the present time prevented him from fulfilling his intention. The crisis in the Roman Church, which now engrosses all his energy, coupled with his advanced age, renders it only too doubtful whether this second Essay on mediæval prophecy will ever see the light. Meanwhile the present instalment, complete in itself, and exhibiting the author's characteristic clearness, thoroughness, and profound learning, will be read with gratitude by all students of history, and with interest by very many more.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTORY CHAPTER.

Field of prophecy enlarged by Christianity  3
Four kinds of prophecies in Christian times  4
Threafold origin of such prophecies  5

ILLUSTRATIONS.

John of Bridlington  7
Queen Christine  7
Quaker's letter about William III.  8
Cardinal Albius  8
Queen Basina  9
Prophetic acrostic about the Tudors  11
Prophecy attributed to Joachim  12
" Malachias  13
" John Hus  14

II. THE PROPHETIC INSTINCT OF THE EARLY MIDDLE AGES.

EXPECTATION OF ANTICHRIST AND OF THE END OF THE WORLD.

Influence of Jewish sibylline books  17
" " the Apocalypse  18
Predictions respecting Antichrist and the end of the world  20

III. NATIONAL PROPHECIES

are the result of national fears or hopes  23 seldom remain nameless  24
Merlin  25
" mythical in early times  26
Galfried of Monmouth spreads Merlin's fame  28
xxvi  TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Effect of his prophecies on the Welsh .. .. .. 32
His fame spreads in Italy and France .. .. .. 33 Prophecies current in Ireland .. .. .. 35
" " Scotland .. .. .. 36
" " Portugal .. .. .. 37
King Sebastian .. .. .. 38
Pagan divination in the Eastern Empire .. .. .. 41
Book of Visions .. .. .. 42
Disastrous effects of these prophecies .. .. .. 46
George of Trebizond .. .. .. 47

IV. PROPHECIES RESPECTING ROME.
" The Eternal City " .. .. .. .. .. 50
Its destruction expected .. .. .. .. 54
Prophecy of S. Brigitta .. .. .. .. 54
" " S. Francisca Romana .. .. .. .. 55
" " Richard Rolle of Hampole .. .. .. .. 55
" " Brandano of Sienna .. .. .. .. 57
The Babylon of the Apocalypse .. .. .. .. 58

V. THE PROPHETIC TEACHERS.
Prophets not necessarily saintly .. .. .. .. 61
" " infallible .. .. .. .. 62
Failure of Peter Damiani .. .. .. .. 64
" " Gregory VII. .. .. .. .. 65
" " Vincent Ferrer .. .. .. .. 67
" " S. Catherine of Sienna .. .. .. .. 67
" " S. Brigitta .. .. .. .. 68
Reform in the Church at once imperative and impossible 69
Savonarola's unwillingness to be thought a Prophet .. 70
Campanella's " " " " .. .. .. .. 71
Dionysius Ryckel, the " Ecstatic Doctor " .. .. .. 73
Nicolas of Cusa .. .. .. .. .. 74
Visionaries .. .. .. .. .. 75

VI. COSMOPOLITAN PROPHECIES.
Four periods of such prophecies .. .. .. .. 77
(1) Expectations of Antichrist, &c., 800 to 1200 A.D. .. 78
Methodius, Bishop of Patara .. .. .. .. 79
Not the author of the writings which bear his name .. 79
TABLE OF CONTENTS

From them comes the fear of a Turkish inroad ... 81
" " " Gog and Magog ... 82
S. Hildegard ... 86
From her comes the idea of a nemesis on the Clergy ... 89
Italy most productive of Prophets ... 89
Guelph and Ghibelline prophecies ... 90
Dearth of prophetic and other literature in Germany ... 91 Contemporaneous opinion in England ... 98
" " " Italy ... 94
" " " Germany ... 94
Roger Bacon's belief in astrology ... 98
The Flagellants ... 100
The idea of a Papa Angelico appears first in Bacon ... 101
" " Frederick to come ... 102
Dolcino prophesies of both ... 103
His terrible end ... 104

VII. THE FOLLOWERS OF JOACHIM.

(2) Joachim of Flora and his system, 1200 to 1347 ... 106
His fame as a Prophet during his life ... 107
" " Saint after his death ... 110
The Commentary on Jeremiah attributed to him ... 111
Death of Frederick II. a blow to his system ... 112
The year 1260 A.D. ... 112
Conflicting opinions about the value of his system ... 113
Leading ideas in it ... 115
Very few of them realized ... 120
Difference between his writings and the Commentaries ... 121
His doctrines attacked in France ... 122
Gerardino's Introductorius ... 124
John Peter Oliva ... 126
Jacopone da Todi calls the Pope Antichrist ... 129
Dante's view of the Papacy ... 130
Cyril the Carmelite ... 133

VIII. PROPHETIC UTTERANCES FROM 1347 TO 1519.

(3) Rienzi influenced by Cyril ... 137
His Spiritualism ... 139
Shared by Petrarch ... 139
Jean de la Rochetaillade ... 140
TABLE OF CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>S. Brigitta</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Modern application of her prophecies</td>
<td>144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The failure of the Crusades a stimulus to prophecy</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belief in a future reforming Pope</td>
<td>148</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Four such Popes deemed necessary</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prophecies abundant during the Great Schism</td>
<td>152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prophecy of Telephorus</td>
<td>153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It is opposed in Germany</td>
<td>155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(a) by the counter-prophecy of Gamaleon</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(8) by a formal refutation</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Denunciations against the Papacy increase as the Reformation approaches</td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(4) The period between 1450 and 1519.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Savonarola</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nature of his prophetic power</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>His political predictions fulfilled</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fictitious Prophets in Germany</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berthold's Onus Ecclesiae marks the close of the mediaval prophecy</td>
<td>168</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>170</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

APPENDICES.

A. The Lehnin Prophecy                                                | 171  |
B. Instances of persons prophetically summoned to appear              | 213  |
C. Theories respecting Antichrist                                     | 218  |
D. Merlin                                                             | 221  |
PROPHECIES
AND THE PROPHETIC SPIRIT
IN THE CHRISTIAN ERA
INTRODUCTORY CHAPTER

THE character of prophetic utterance in the ancient world was national and patriotic, but for that very reason was confined in its aim to the life of the nation and the conduct of war. There was no thought of a far-seeing view into a distant future. No doubt the Roman Empire exhibited a vast community, uniting together many and various nations, in fact, an Orbis Romanus. But in this Empire people were content with the prophetic announcement, that an unending duration was decreed to it, and beyond this the imperial period produced nothing in the way of prophecy, except, perhaps, vaticinations respecting the life and death of individual Emperors.

With the introduction of Christianity all this was changed. Forthwith, both the horizon of man’s vision was enlarged, and also his sympathy with the destinies of nations, who, in becoming Christianity, by enlarging men’s sympathies, enlarged the field of prophecy.

Nationalities now have a double existence:—
1. their own;
2. their part in the great Christian Commonwealth.

Four kinds of predictions in Christian times:—
1. religious,
2. dynastic,
3. national,
4. cosmopolitan.

confessors of the same creed, had also become members of one and the same vast Church.

From this time forward the destiny of the great nations, who were the representatives of culture and of history, was inseparably united with the progressive development and destinies of the Church universal. And each of these nations lives, so to say, a double life,—its national life, moving in a circle of ideas peculiar to itself; and also a second life, by virtue of which each of the leading peoples of Christendom fulfils the mission assigned to it in the great Christian community. Thus it was that, in the Middle Ages, Germans, French, and Italians, had the conviction, that to each of them a special function and grace had been apportioned, that each was a representative of one of the three great Christian institutions,—the Empire, the Priesthood, and the School.

A closer view of the prophetic material to be found in Christian times will at once show us that we must distinguish four kinds of predictions. We find, that is to say, over and above the purely religious prophecies, dynastic, and also national ones, besides a fourth class, which we may call cosmopolitan. Under the last-named head are reckoned those which have reference to the Christian Church; for since the institution of Christianity, the history and vicissitudes of the Church have been connected in the closest possible way with the great progressive development of the whole human race. That is to say,—predictions respecting the Church are wont to have reference either to a schism that is imminent, or to the healing of a division already existing, or to the judicial punishment of the state of corruption which had arisen and was most painfully felt in the Church. Accordingly these predictions foretell, may be, a vast and longed-for reformation of the Church, or else a reunion of the separated portions of the Christian world. Individual monarchs or whole nations are then pointed out as the specially chosen instruments of these ecclesiastical changes. Or else such a change is represented as at the same time the cause of social and political catastrophes and revolutions; and accordingly events are foretold which belong sometimes to the province of politics, sometimes to that of ecclesiastical affairs, sometimes equally to both. Hence prophecies which have direct reference to the condition of the human race, or to the destinies of the great civilized nations, have always a religious side as well; and, on the other hand, it was impossible to foretell important and far-reaching events and revolutions in the province of religion, without at the same time setting forth correspondingly new phenomena in politics, related to the former as effect to cause.

Prophecies, therefore, since the coming of Christ, betray a threefold origin. First, they arise as the spontaneously generated product of a certain condition of things and of public feeling, without any defined object, without the definite or conscious authorship of any individual person. There are, however, also abundance of others, which have elements of deliberate creation, and which are intended to serve some altogether special interest.

Lastly, there are a third class of prophecies, which at first are only the conjectures or the sympathetic views of a man, who, starting from a right comprehension of the present, and following the laws of causal connection, draws conclusions with regard to the phenomena of a future age, and boldly predicts them as facts. These are then stamped by the result as prophetic announcements.

A few examples will make clear and confirm this conception and division.

Just as the historian is a prophet looking back instead of forwards, so also a prophet is very frequently only a historian looking forwards instead of back, predicting, as future, events which have already taken place. This is especially the case when facts, which really belong to the past, come to be believed as future, as, for example, in the well-known Lehnin prophecy.\(^1\) But the same thing also happens, when, under the protecting form of a prophecy, censure is openly passed on a monarch, or on a government; or on the condition of things in the Church, when a warning is given and an attempt made to turn the destinies of a state in a particular direction. An example of this kind is the song on the Government of Edward III., under the name of John of Bridlington (composed about A.D. 1370), with a gloss in prose, in which the author clothes what he dared not utter openly and without disguise, viz., a rebuke of the infamous coterie of prostitutes and other scandalous facts, in the garb of prophecy.¹

\(^1\) [See Appendix A.]

In more modern days also, no less than in old times, it has been well understood, that a prophecy can be made a very effective instrument in politics, and that a circumstance, for the occurrence of which people are desirous, can be all the more easily realized, if it be predicted beforehand. When Queen Christine wished to become Queen of Poland, she gave orders that a prophecy having reference to that object should be judiciously cir-

¹ Political Poems and Songs relating to English History, edited by Thomas Wright. London, 1859. Vol. I. [pp. 123-215. The piece is a political retrospect of the reign of Edward III., compiled in the form of a supposed old text and a recent commentary.—a form not altogether unknown in modern times. In some MSS. the poem is nameless; but in the copy in the Bodleian Library (MS. Digby, No. 89) the text is said to be the prophecy of John of Bridlington. The name is probably fictitious, and, of course, both text and commentary are by the same hand. The tract is dedicated to Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, and Constable of England. This fact fixes the date tolerably exactly. Humphrey de Bohun succeeded to the title in 1361 and died in 1372. A few lines may be worth quoting as a specimen:—

"Rex insensatus est bellis undique stratus;
"Nobilis est natus, qui dicitur infatuatius.
"Nam perdet gentem regni pro jure loquentem,
"Ac optimates nullus reddet sibi grates.
"Perdet cognatos, pendere sinet veneratos.
"Rex pietae carens Christo non fit bene pares;
"Regnans perdetur, quia gentis non miseretur."—Cap. iij.]
culated by a monk.\footnote{1 "Vous pourriez aussi écrire au Frère (N. N.) qu'il publie adroite-ment la prophétie," one reads in a letter of hers of the year 1669 in Arkengracht, Mémoires concernant Christine, iii., 380.} CROMWELL caused events, which he intended to bring about, to be inserted in the almanach beforehand, and the astrologer in consequence acquired a high reputation. When WILLIAM OF ORANGE and his party in England had determined on the overthrow of King James II., there appeared (in March, 1688) a printed letter, supposed to be written by a Quaker, in which it was announced that the Holy Spirit had revealed to an illuminated member of the Society of Friends, that in the following October a great change would take place in this kingdom, and in the month following William would come hither from over the sea.\footnote{2 Bayle, Œuvres, iii., 240.} The prophet made an error only of about a couple of weeks; otherwise all fitted exactly. As early as the thirteenth century this artifice was applied with good results. When the Popes had determined utterly to overthrow the imperial House of Hohenstaufen, and to allow none of its scions in future to obtain either the German or the Spanish crown, there appeared in Italy, in the year 1256, a prophecy, written in Latin verse, under the name of a CARDINAL ALBIUS—probably the Cardinal-Bishop of Albano. In this, after a general description of an age of anarchy and of tyranny over the Church, it is predicted, that suddenly and unexpectedly a Deliverer will appear in the person of a new King, who shall subdue the South to the glorification of the Mother, that is, of the See of Rome, shall utterly crush the Sicilians and the family of Frederick, and bring to nought all the works of the Emperor Frederick, of his sons, and of his followers. Besides this he shall also make the rebellious people of Rome bow their necks under the yoke of the Pope. In short, he shall accomplish all those things which the papal court at that time desired and needed. The whole had the ring of a programme, written in a poetical strain, for the negotiations respecting the crown of Sicily, which Alexander IV. was at that time secretly carrying on with Prince Edmund of England, and was intended to prepare the way for the victorious success of the latter. And in order that the Italians might not, after the manner of the country, expect rich largesses of money from the coming king, the prophecy did not forget to mention the circumstance, that the heaven-sent Deliverer will be rich indeed in virtue, but very poor in gold.¹

As an instance of a dynastic prophecy may be mentioned the prophetic vision, which Basina of Thuringia, the mother of Clovis, revealed to her husband, the Frankish King Childeric, in the night of their bridal. At her bidding he went three times during the night outside their sleeping-

¹ The prophecy is printed in Lami's additions to the Chronicon Pontificum Leonis Urbevetani, in his Deliciae Eruditorum (1737), p. 323.
chamber. The first time he saw a lion, a unicorn, and a leopard. The second time bears and wolves were shown to him. The third time he saw dogs and smaller animals quarrelling among themselves round about. The lion, said Basina to him, is our son Clovis; his sons will be strong as leopards and unicorns. (That is Theodoric, Chlodomir, Childebert, and Clotaire.) Of them others will be begotten, who in their strength and ravenousness will resemble bears and wolves. (Charibert, Chilperic, and their successors down to Clotaire II.)

Finally there come the last feeble Merovingians, in the period of anarchy, which preceded the change of dynasty. The prophecy is found as early as in a codex of Fredegarii,¹ which reaches to the earlier part of the eighth century, and is therefore previous to the occupation of the throne, which actually followed, by the Carolingians. The intention to prepare the way for this change shines through in the ironical declaration of Basina, that

¹ [Fredegarii Scholasticus. It is by no means certain that the writer who is known by this name ever bore it. In antiquity he comes next to Gregory of Tours as an authority for the history of the Franks. His valuable Chronicle reaches down to the fourth year of Clovis II., A.D. 641. But he was evidently still living at least as late as 658, for he mentions events which were subsequent to the death of Clovis II., e.g. the death of Chintasindus, King of Spain (Chron., lxxxii., sub fin.). There seems to be some inconsistency in placing this author in the earlier part of the eighth century. If one does that, one must go still farther and place him, as Cave and Oudin do, in the second half of the eighth century. This apparently is on the assumption that the two first continuations of his work, down to 674 and 734, are by himself; which seems to be quite erroneous. The third continuation is attributed to him by no one. The story of the vision occurs in his epitome of the history of Gregory of Tours, chap. xii.]
"these kings who resemble the dogs, will be the pillars of this kingdom."
A kind of dynastic prophecy, the origin of which can be easily seen, went from mouth to mouth as a popular rhyme in England during the reign of Queen Elizabeth and also under James I. It ran thus:

"When hempe is sponne;
"England's done."

The word "hempe" indicated the five sovereigns of the Tudor dynasty, Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary and her husband, Philip, and Elizabeth, because the initial letter of these five names form the word "hempe." The prophetic saying undoubtedly had its origin altogether with the people, being the outcome of the feeling, that at the death of the childless Elizabeth, either a war of succession would break out, or a foreigner,—a Scotch king,—rousing more fears than hopes, would ascend the throne.

1 ["Et tertio qua videisti ad discessum, columnae regni hujus erunt:
"et qui regnabunt ad instar canum, et minoribus bestiis eorum consimilis
"erit fortitudo."—Recueil des Historiens des Gaules et de la France.
Tome II., p. 397.]

2 Lord Bacon in his Essays [ed. Aldis W. Wright. London, 1865, p. 151] says;—"whereby, it was generally conceived, that after the "Princes had Reigned, which had the Principall Letters, of that word
"Hempe, (which were Henry, Edward, Mary, Philip, and Elizabeth)
"England should come to utter confusion." In the Civil War, which, however, did not break out till more than 40 years later, one might find a fulfiment of this prophecy.

3 [Bacon gives another interpretation to the prophecy, "which,
"thankes be to God, is verified only in the change of the name: for
"that the King's Stile is now no more of England, but of Britaine."] Among dynastic prophecies we may also reckon the vaticinations respecting the succession of the Popes, of which two in particular have obtained great celebrity. In the earlier years of the fourteenth century a description, under allegorical figures, of the Popes from Nicholas III. to Clement V. was put in circulation under the name of Joachim. In it each of these Popes was sketched in a few short, pithy words, expressing in a symbolical manner the chief events of their respective pontificates. Like the other spurious writings of Joachim, this one also proceeded from the bosom of the Franciscan Order, especially the Zealots or Spiritualists, who concealed themselves here under the name of "the Dove," which had been given to their Order. That a description like this, which depicts most of the Popes of that age in such black colours, and lays such grievous crimes to their charge,—Cælestine V. is the only one who is judged somewhat more favourably,—and which sets them forth in the light of Church tyrants, found such strong sympathy, and was able to maintain itself in such celebrity, is a noteworthy sign of the revolution, which at that time was taking place in the feelings of the Italians. As early as in the Chronicle of the Bolognese Dominican Pipin (in the beginning of the fourteenth century), these would-be prophetical representations and oracles were mentioned and described one by one; and less experienced hands in later times have continued them, partly under Joachim's name, as before, partly under the fictitious name of a certain Anselm, Bishop of Marsica. But while the earlier ones, from Nicolas III. to Clement V. (the standpoint of the author being presupposed), are appropriate and can easily be interpreted, the later ones, which were really composed before the events, lose themselves more and more in meaningless, unintelligible phrases and commonplaces. This fiction has now long since been exploded; but another one of later origin retains considerable celebrity, and is still regarded with respect by many. Altogether different from the sharp censorious tone of the Joachimite production, this one does not attempt to sketch the moral character of the Popes or their mode of administering their ecclesiastical office, but rather to designate each one of them by means of some circumstance of his life expressed in a couple of words, or else with a play upon some single event in his history. An Irish Bishop of the twelfth century, by name Malachi, made well known to fame through Saint Bernard's biography of him, was selected to bear the authorship of this composition, which was made to commence with Pope Celestine II., in the year 1143. Down to the year 1590, or Urban VII., it either fits appropriately, or admits of a not outrageously forced explanation. It was composed in the year 1590, in order to forward the election of Cardinal Simoncelli of Orvieto, as is evident from the fact that the successor to be given to Urban was designated by the words "De antiquitate urbis,"—Orvieto, Urbs vetus. The mottoes which refer to the succeeding Popes can for the most part be explained only by means of absurd and ridiculous interpretations. But because still from time to time one of these vaticinations seemed again to fit appropriately, they have been over and over again printed and turned to account; and to this day there are not wanting persons who believe in them. Supposing, however, that one could without much difficulty explain "peregrinus apostolicus" of Pius VI., and "crux de cruce" of Pius IX., yet certainly the "aquila rapax" of Pius VII. resisted all attempts at explanation.¹
INTRODUCTORY CHAPTER.

On the other hand there is a prophetic saying, which at the time of the Reformation exercised a powerful influence on the views of mankind, and by this means on the course of events;—a pure invention, no doubt, but nevertheless invented without any ulterior object, and having its origin in an altogether natural manner. John Hus is reported to have said at the place of execution, "This day ye are burning a goose" (the meaning of Hus in Bohemian); "but from my ashes will arise a swan, which ye will not be able to roast."² Luther,

¹ [In an article in La Frusta (the satirical organ of the Ultramontane party in Rome), which appeared in the summer of 1871, "aquila rapax" was explained—on the lucus a non lucendo principle—to mean that Pius VII. was the victim of the aquila rapax, Napoleon I. !]
² Opera, ed. Altenburg, v., 599; viii., 864; ix., 1562.
who was the first to quote this saying, and in the most express way turned it to account for himself, most certainly did not invent the story. A passage in a letter of Hus from Constance to the people of Prague gave occasion to it:—"The goose indeed, tame creature that it is, and not able to fly high, has not broken their snare, but other fowls of the air, by the help of the divine Word and of their life, will soar above in lofty flight, and will bring to nought their lying in wait." And besides that, there is the fact that his friend and disciple, Jerome, actually summoned those who condemned him to appear a hundred years afterwards before the judgment-seat of God.¹

None the less is the celebrated visionary announcement of the horrors of the French Revolution by Cazotte, which Laharpe has so dramatically related, indubitably an invention of Laharpe himself. But on the other hand it is true, that thirteen years before the outbreak of the Revolution, a celebrated preacher, Beauregard, declared from the pulpit in Notre Dame; “The temples of God will be plundered and destroyed, His festivals abolished, His name blasphemed, His service proscribed. Yea, what hear I? What see I? In place of hymns in praise of God, lewd and profane songs will be sung here; and the heathen goddess Venus herself will dare here to take the place of the living God, to set herself on the altar, and to receive the homage of her true worshippers.” All this actually came to pass some years later, and that too in the very church in which the prophetic words had been spoken. But he who knows the condition of Paris at that time, he who considers what, for instance, Walpole says on the subject in his letters, can easily imagine how a man like Beauregard, with a deeper insight into the abyss of the corruption of the time, might very easily announce events beforehand, just as they afterwards came to light;—manifestations of a spirit, which had already for a long period of time been working, although at first for the most part only in silence.

¹ Historia et Monumenta Johannis Hus et Hieronymi. Nuremberg, 1715. 1, 121.

² Narratio de Mag. Hieronymo, in the Monumenta, ii., 531. [The Bishop of Lodi again preached the execution sermon, as in the case of John Hus. Taking "He reproached their unbelief and hardness of heart" for his text, he set forth with frightful plainness the proper mode of dealing with heretics. Jerome was allowed to reply. He concluded thus: "Ye are resolved to condemn me in this wicked and iniquitous way, though ye have convicted me of no crime. But after my death I will be in your consciences an ever-gnawing worm. I appeal to the Supreme Judge, before Whom ye shall appear with me, ere a hundred years are passed." Dean Milman thinks that there are no sufficient grounds for doubting, as L'Enfant is inclined to do, the authenticity of these last words. History of Latin Christianity, Book XIII, chap. ix., note s.

For other examples of persons prophetically summoned to appear before the judgment-seat of God, see Appendix B.]
THE PROPHETIC INSTINCT OF THE EARLY MIDDLE AGES EXPECTATION OF THE COMING OF ANTICHRIST AND OF THE END OF THE WORLD

In order to gain a just conception of the half religious, half political prophecies of the Middle Ages in their essential features, we must go back to the early times of the Church.

The first Christians entered on an inheritance, which came down to them from the Hellenic culture of the Alexandrine Jews. For these had at an early age composed sibylline predictions, which set forth to view the final victory of Judaism over Heathenism, and the exaltation of the former to be the religion of the world. Jewish sibylline books or fragments of this kind were spread abroad, partly in the last century before Christ, partly in the first and second century of the Christian era; and then, a little later, Christian ones also came to be added, which were partially recognized by the heathen and by a section of Christians, who took these effusions under their protection, or availed themselves of them as true and original witnesses, giving them the name of "sibylline," as, for example, did the philosopher Celsus. It appeared, however, to the Roman statesman, to be by no means a matter of small moment, that expectations of an approaching dissolution of the Roman Empire and of the utter overthrow of the state religion should be spread abroad in this way. They forbade the reading of these books, or "leaves," on pain of death.

1 [Cf. Westcott's Introduction to the Study of the Gospels, 1867, p. 74.]

So long as the Roman Empire remained in existence in the West, up to the time of the immigration of the barbarians, no field presented itself for the spontaneous appearance of prophecy. The ideas of the Christian world with reference to things to come were from first to last under the influence of their prophetical book, the Apocalypse. While, on the one hand, the pagan Romans maintained that a continuance without end was secured to their Empire, and the eternity of Rome was, so to speak, an official dogma, on the other hand, the Christians were convinced that Rome, drunk with the blood of the martyrs, must fall, the temporal power of Rome must come to nought. Accordingly, all that assumed the character of prophecy among these early Christians had reference primarily to this expected ruin of the Roman Empire, and for interpretation or closer statement of detail resorted to the prophetic book. That out of the ruins of the Empire a new Christian dispensation, a cycle of Christian Empires would arise,—of that the Christians of those early centuries had no notion. They were not in a position to look out beyond the horizon of Roman affairs, and anticipate the still slumbering strength of the barbarous nations, which to them seemed to be mere powers and instruments of destruction. Hence it was that they held to the belief that, with the downfall of the Roman Empire, there would also come an end of the present dispensation of the world, or, to speak more exactly, that the beginning of the end would then commence. They maintained that it was precisely Rome and her temporal power which (because a respite was still allowed to her) still kept afar off the great catastrophe of the end of the world. "Rome—she is the city that still holds and sustains all," says Lactantius. They were all the more firmly possessed by this idea, inasmuch as, by an erroneous interpretation of the passage in S. Paul's Second Epistle to the Thessalonians (ii. 8), they understood "he who letteth"—κατέχων, qui tenet—to mean the Roman Empire, the overthrow of which would be followed by the appearance of "the Man of Sin," and soon afterwards by the end of the world.
Hence it came to pass that in the Christian world there were, properly speaking, no prophecies of universal significance and bearing, until deep into the Middle Ages. The prophetic instincts of mankind found their satisfaction in conjectures respecting the great enemy of Christendom, whom every one was expecting,—Antichrist, who in East and West alike was thought of as a Jew and the setter up of a Jewish dominion. No doubt much was also said about the near approach of the end of the world. The formula "appropinquante mundi termino" is a familiar one in the tenth century. But the appearance of Antichrist must precede the Day of Judgment, and his dominion was to last three years and a half. Accordingly the fancy of mankind preferred to occupy itself with him; always, however, within the limits prescribed by ancient tradition. He was to be of Jewish extraction, and appear in the far East in the midst of Muhammadan surroundings, and as a triumphant warrior and conqueror was to fill the world with the terror of his name. So long then as a person, who could be represented as a Jewish prophet and powerful despot of this description, did not appear, the question of the immediate nearness of the end of the world was altogether out of place. The expectation was at times so impatient of delay, that Antichrist was declared to be already abiding in this or that place, for the present still unrevealed. Further than this, however, of these prophecies.

men could not go; and accordingly Antichrist, the great falling away from the faith which he was to effect, his triumph, his bloody but short-lived temporal dominion,—all this remained as an ever expected, ever dreaded, but still never appearing phenomenon, notwithstanding all the exactness and minuteness of detail with which even his route had been predicted, his acts and fate reckoned up and depicted. Forerunners and pioneers of the great dreaded One appeared in every century.
That is to say, every party regularly accused their opponents of being such heralds and forerunners;
but then the Lord of these servants would never anywhere show himself. From time to time it would be announced, that he was already born, or that he was now nine or ten years old. As, for example, Saint Martin, Bishop of Tours, about the year 380 declared, that Antichrist was already in the world, but as yet still in boyhood. Towards the end of the eleventh century, about 1080, Ra-mieri, Bishop of Florence, was again perfectly certain, that Antichrist was then already born; and some decades later Norbert, Archbishop of Magdeburg, gave a similar assurance to S. Bernard.
The celebrated popular preacher Vincent Ferrer believed himself to be in possession of the most exact information on the subject. The birth of the great enemy of Christianity, he said, had taken place in the year 1403. In the year 1402 he wrote to Pope Benedict XIII., that Antichrist was now nine years old; that this had been revealed to many persons simultaneously; and that it was therefore imperatively necessary to make this fact known to the world, "in order that the faithful might arm themselves beforehand for the terrible conflict in which they would soon have to engage."¹

¹ In Malvenda, De Antichristo. i. 119. [For further particulars respecting the various theories that have been current with regard to Antichrist, see Appendix C.]
MEANWHILE another species of prophecy had sprung up at an early age, having its root in the ground of nationality. We may pretty generally maintain that the prophetic impulse, so far as it is not influenced by religious ordinances, but is a natural outgrowth, is the result of expectations entertained by a whole nation, or very widespread, whether these be hopes or fears. What many people simultaneously desire, without the possibility of bringing it to pass through their own energies,—or again, what presents itself to them as a probable result of preceding events, or of the existing condition of things, clothes itself, in the minds of an imaginative people, in the robe of prophecy.

Even the consciousness of guilt will easily assume the form of prediction. A people in whom the moral standard, and with it self-knowledge, has not yet been extinguished, will, in case of its becoming conscious of a deep degeneracy, of a moral corruption already wide-spread within itself, be unable to shut out the impression that the punishment for such depravity will sooner or later but inevitably come upon it. Supposing then that the expectation of such sentence of retribution should take a concrete, and, so to speak, plastic form,—as is wont to be the case when a people is at a particular stage of civilization,—it at once takes the form of prophecy. The prediction discloses on professed knowledge the special manner in which the chastisement will follow, what catastrophes will come in upon the nation, and even who will be the instrument of vengeance. And what holds good of nations holds good also of particular classes, holds good of corporations and of institutions.

Let a people be oppressed by a foreign power, or violently deprived of territory which it once possessed;—then it is the universally felt longing for deliverance from this yoke, which becomes an announcement of it beforehand. Hence the prophecy is frequently the production, not of one person, but of many; or at any rate it does not admit of being traced back to a single individual. But nevertheless a prediction cannot remain nameless, like a popular song, in the case of which no one asks for the name of its author. The popular mind, which does not trouble itself about the name of the bard, thinks it of the utmost importance to be able to give the name of the Prophet. Where this is wanting, a name is almost always invented; and hence it is, that, quite apart from conscious fiction, we are met by so many mythical personages, or names without owners—κωφὰ πρόσωπα—in the history of modern prophesying.

The very first instance, which it occurs to one to mention here, is a mythical figure of this sort. The Prophet, whose name is celebrated before all others in the early Middle Ages, and on whom so many prophetic utterances, which have since been fulfilled, have been fathered, is Merlin, who may fairly be styled the Orpheus of Britain.

Whether an historical person of this name ever existed, is still a matter of dispute. Nash, in his Introduction to the English romance Merlin, which belongs to the middle of the fifteenth century, endeavours to show, in opposition to VILLEMARQUÉ, that Merlin or Ambrosius is purely a creation of the fancy, and that the British Merlin, whom the Chronicles represented as existing at the end of the fifth or beginning of the sixth century, never existed at all. At any rate, later on he became the hero of a cycle of myths which has become deeply rooted in mediaeval literature; and that, not as a bard, in which character, as Stephens remarks, he is nowhere at all mentioned, but as a Prophet, an enchanter, and the son of a demon.

1 "Geschichte der wälischen Literatur, übersetzt von San-Marte," 1864, p. 166. [History of Welsh Literature.]
From the sixth century onwards the Britons or Kymry, owing to the ceaseless pressure of the advancing Anglo-Saxons, were confined to the western portions of the island, where they maintained a certain degree of independence in a few small states. It has been observed that in the twelfth century the Britons occupied themselves very much with prophecies, and numerous prophetic sayings went about among them from mouth to mouth. They originated with the weaker race, which was always being threatened by its powerful and overbearing neighbour. Consciousness of this condition of things and hopes of a favourable turn of fortune were expressed in their vaticinations. So that Merlin is at bottom the prophetic spirit of the people personified, and every saying was tacked on to his name. As early as the very oldest witness of all, in the British historian Nennius\(^1\) in the ninth century, he appears as a purely mythical figure, as a wonderful youth, who in reality is the son of a Roman Consul unknown to his mother. He discovers in a deep secluded spot the two Snakes, the White one (the Saxons) and the Red one (the Britons), fighting with one another. Seeing, however, that the North Britons

---

\(^1\) [Abbot of Bangor, escaped a massacre of the monks of his house, and took refuge at Chester. The Historia Britonum is among the Cottonian MSS. in the British Museum; but it is almost certainly not the work of Nennius. It is called his solely on the authority of the two Prologues, which cannot be traced to an earlier period than the 12th century.]
also in Scotland had their national prophetic utterances, and that some one was wanted as the reputed author of these sayings, which were current without a name, a second Merlin was invented, a Caledonian one, the duplicate of the first.1 Of this one all that people had to relate was, that he had become mad through seeing two flying snakes,

1 [Thus Ranulph Higden in his Polychronicon. London, 1865. I., 416.]

Ad nevyn in norwallia
Est insula permodica, Quae Bardeseya dicitur;
A monachis incolitur.
Ubi tam diu vivitur
Quod senior praeoritut;
Ibi Merlinus conditur Silvestris, ut asseritur;
Duo fuerunt igitur
Merlini, ut conjicitur, Unus dictus Ambrosius,
Ex incubo progenitus,
Ad Kermerthyn Demetiae
Sub Vortigerni tempore;
Qui sua vaticinia
Profavit in Snavondonia
Ad ortum annis Coneway
Ad clivum montis Eriry;
Dynas-Embreis, ut comperi, Sonat collem Ambrosii;
Ad ripam quando regulus
Vortiger sedit anxius.
Est alter de Albania Merlinus, quae et Scotia;
Repertus est binomius Silvestris Calidonius;
A silva Calidonia,
Qua promsit vaticinia,

* * * * *

Arthuri regis tempore;
Prophetavit apertius
Quam Merlinus Ambrosius.]
had retired into a wood, and there had ended his life. And hence occurred there also just what came to pass in Wales. Many, as the Scottish chronicler FORDUN says, fancied that in the circumstances which arose they recognized the fulfilment of one of Merlin's prophetic utterances. Gradually, however, from the close of the twelfth century onwards, Merlin grew into a Prophet, celebrated in the whole of southern Europe, who, like the SYBIL, had to give his name to new prophetic utterances that were continually appearing. GALFRIED OF MONMOUTH, who was Bishop of S. Asaph about the year 1152, has contributed most towards this in his History of the Britons. It is by him especially that Merlin's fame as a prophet has been spread abroad on the continent. After TURPIN’s Life of Charles the Great, perhaps no book has had such powerful influence on the cycle of mediæval stories as Galfried’s prettily told history of the ancient British Kings. In order to

1 [Origo et gesta regum et principum Britanniae, sive historia Britonum ab Ænead et Bruto. Galfried’s work has been variously estimated as regards its historical value. Some have called him the English Homer, and father of lies. He is believed to have died about 1180, having resigned his see in 1175, apparently because he preferred the court of Henry II. to residence at S. Asaph’s.]

2 [Talpin is another variation of the name, of which, however, Tilpin is the correct form. He was Archbishop of Reims from 753 to 800. The fabulous character of the pretended chronicle, which bears his name—Histoire de la Vie de Charlemagne et de Roland—has long since been exposed. It exists in prose, in French and Latin, and in a metrical form in French. The translation from old French to the vulgar tongue appears to have been made in the time of Philip Augustus. It was this popular version which had such wide-spread influence.] glorify his people, he wove together material borrowed from Gildas, Bede, and Nennius, with popular stories of the Britons, and adornments and amplifications added by himself, and thus produced an attractive, smoothly running historical work, which for a long while imposed upon posterity. His statement, that he had merely translated a British original, which had remained utterly unknown, is doubtless a fiction. He has produced what is certainly an attractive romance, which in its turn has become the direct or indirect source of endless romances and poems, and from which in the stories of Arthur and of the Round Table a broad stream of poetry has flowed into the centuries following.

The lengthy prophetic utterance of Merlin, which Galfried incorporated with his work, but which has also been published separately, had a powerful influence on the imagination, not only of the Britons, but also of other nations, especially of the French, in the Middle Ages. Galfried appears to have spun out still further the definite sayings and fancy-pictures of Merlin which had been preserved by oral tradition, and to have introduced into them a succession in time. It is a prophetic representation of long contests, with varying success, between Britons, Anglo-Saxons, and Normans.

1 [Versio prophetiarum Ambrosii Merlini. This forms the fourth Book of Galfried's history in Cavellat's edition (Paris, 1517), the seventh in Comelin's (Heidelberg, 1587); printed separately with notes by Alain de Lille (Frankfort, 1603).]
The people who came over from Neustria in wood and brazen garments (that is, the Normans) are to take vengeance on the German Dragon, before whom the Red Dragon is compelled to give way. Certain features out of English history in the first half of the twelfth century are joined on, along with the taking of Ireland; and soon afterwards he fixes in a prophetic manner the time for the great national rising of the Welsh people. Then will come the overthrow of the Strangers (that is, the Anglo-Saxons and the Normans). Then will the streams grow ruddy with blood, Armorica will pour out her springs (meaning that the Britons will conquer with the help of their comrades of the same blood from Brittany), and they will be crowned with the crown of Brut (the mythical first British king); the island, moreover, will again be called after the name of Brut (Britain), and the name given by the Strangers (England) will pass away.

Galgfried did not invent these things, but took them out of the popular stories. Not one of the whole number came to pass; rather the very opposite took place; but one understands why Englishmen, like the chronicler William of Newbridge\(^1\) (about the year 1198), should express their displeasure respecting these \textquotedblleft divinationes falla-

\(^1\) [William of Newburgh, surnamed Parvus; born at Bridlington, in Yorkshire, 1180; died an Augustinian Canon of the monastery there, 1208. He wrote \textit{De rebus Anglorum sui temporis libri V.}, 1066–1197; edited by Hearne, 1719; and by Hamilton, 1856.]
cissima," with those who promote and decorate them, in strong language. On the other hand it is astonishing, that, in spite of this, Merlin's reputation as a prophet should have continued to maintain itself, not only with the people of Wales, but also among the French and Germans. Of King Arthur it is said in the prediction, that "his departure shall be doubtful," meaning that it will be uncertain whether he is dead or still living. But the people believed in his being alive and in his return; and according to the remark of the commentator Alanus, even in Brittany anyone would have been stoned by the people who should maintain that Arthur had died like any other man.\footnote{Alanus de Insulis, Prophetia Angelicana, Proef. (1603), pp. 19, 20. [Alanus was a Fleming and monk of Clairvaux; Bishop of Auxerre, 1151-1169; resigned and retired to Clairvaux, where he died, 1182. He wrote a life of St. Bernard.]}

Even the English historians did homage to the universal belief in Merlin and his prophetic sayings. How frequently one reads in them, "Tunc imple-tum est illud Merlini," or, "Ut impleretur Merlini prophetia." Even as early as by Galfried great alterations were made in the story of Merlin. Galfried assigns as his father an evil spirit called Incubus; and one cannot acquit him of the charge of having thereby furthered a sinister delusion, which was subsequently raised to the position of a theological dogma by Thomas Aquinas, and which has cost thousands of men their lives.
According to the belief of the Britons, Merlin had foretold, not only the fall of the British kingdom, the invasion of the Saxons, and subsequently of the Normans, but also the return of the two Kings, Arthur and Cadwallader. He had announced that, in the end, the Red Dragon should conquer the White Dragon, and that the ancient British Kingdom should again be set up. And hence, as the monk of Malmesbury says, fresh risings and insurrections of the prophecy-believing people of Wales were perpetually breaking out; until at last, at the beginning of the fourteenth century, the English enforced a full and permanent submission of the land. Thus the restlessness of the Welsh, their love of revolt and thirst for war, were ascribed to the influence of the prophetic sayings of Merlin.¹ The need of some kind of antidote to prediction, something which might act as water to the far too fiery wine of Kymric hopes, was very pressingly felt. Hence, under the name of the ancient Welsh bard Taliesin, who lived in the sixth century, there appeared a prediction which announced to them, “Your speech and your songs shall ye retain; but of your ancient lands shall nought remain to ye, save only your rough

¹ “Hos consuevit fallere
   “Et ad bella impingere “Merlini vaticinium, [“Et frequens sortilegium,”]

says the monk Ranulph Higden (about the year 1310) in his Polychronicon, ed. Barington. London, 1865, i., 410.
“Welsh mountains.”¹ In order thoroughly to cure the Welsh of their delusion respecting an Arthur still living, who would one day come again, people even went so far in King Henry II.'s time as to arrange the discovery of a grave, and produce a veritable body of Arthur, six hundred years after his death! (For Arthur is said to have died in the year 542 on the island of Avalon.) But the popular belief remained ineradicable for a considerable time longer. And meanwhile Merlin's fame as a Prophet spread over land and sea, so that in the thirteenth century, even in Italy, almost every event, which was either out of the common run or productive of important consequences, was forthwith followed by the discovery of a prophecy of Merlin, which had announced its occurrence long beforehand.

In France, Merlin's reputation stood still higher; for there Celtic sympathy for the oppressed kindred people in the island of Britain, and primitive hatred against the Anglo-Saxons, lent a peculiar authority to the prophetic voice of the British Merlin. In the poetical history of King Philip Augustus, by Guillaume le Breton, King Louis VIII. is at the end formally invited to fulfil the promise of the

¹ In Cambro-Briton, London, 1821, ii., 185, the prophecy, somewhat modernized, runs thus:—

"Still shall they chant their Maker's praise, Still keep their language and their lays,
But nought of all their old domain
Save Wallia's rude and mountain reign."
British Seer, and wrest the sceptre from the "English boy" (that is, the young King Henry III. of England), in order that he, Louis, may reign alone in the two kingdoms. "And thus," adds the poet,
"in accordance with the prophetic saying of the
"Breton Seer (Merlin), the venom of the White
"Snake' (the Anglosaxons) and all its brood will be "utterly rooted out from our gardens."¹

One might have expected that in Ireland prophetic creations, similar to those of Wales, would have been found; nevertheless, Ireland has produced no Merlin. Here it is the ancient Saints of the land—Patrick, Columba, Adamnan, and others,—to whom the prophecies are ascribed. But these vaticinations have no religious character.
They have reference partly to events, and withal very trivial events, in the endless wars between individual Irish chieftains; partly to the invasion of the Danes in the ninth century; or, lastly, to the

¹ Recueil des historiens de France, xvii., 286.
² ["Cum enim quattuor Hibernici prophetas habeant, Melingum, "Braccanum, Patricium, et Kolumkillum (the Colum Cille of Irish "writers, the S. Columba of Bede), quorum etiam apud illas libris adhuc
"exstant Hibernice scripti, &c., &c." Giralda Cantrensis, Ex-of S. Patrick seem to be unknown in Irish tradition. In the Mar-tyrology of Donegal, under S. Berchan, Dec. 4th, a quatrains is preserved giving the four national Prophets as above, excepting that S. Bacannin is substituted for S. Patrick :

"The four prophets of the fine Gaels,
"Better of it the country whence they came,
"Colum Cille, Moling the perfect,
"Brenainn of Bierr (Birr, in King's County), and Berchan."

Note in loco, p. 386.]
IN IRELAND.

Anglo-Norman occupation and gradual conquest. The English writer, Giralddus Cambrensis, has given to his history of the conquest of Ireland, written in the thirteenth century, the epithet of "prophetic"—Historia Vaticinalis;—for his object is to show, that, through the invasion and bloody successes of the English adventurers, Strongbow and De Courcy, ancient prophecies of S. Columba and the other Fathers of Ireland were fulfilled.¹

The suspicion that such sayings of the prophets were invented at the time in the interests of the English conquerors, is heightened by the statement of Giralddus, that De Courcy himself always carried about with him a book of Irish prophecies.² And when it was further foretold in native predictions, that the English would never again be driven from possession of the eastern part of the island, but that finally in the last times they would obtain dominion over the whole of Ireland,—the object of such inventions has no doubt been attained. An Irish scholar, O'Curry,³ has lately subjected to investi-

¹ [Cf. i., 3, 16, 20, 30, 33, 38, 45: ii., 17, 29, 31, 32, 34; iii., Praefatio.]
² In Camden’s Collection; Anglica, Normannica, Hibernica. Frankfort, 1603, pp. 794, seq., 803. "Ipse vere Johannes (de Curci) "librum hunc propheticum, Hibernice scriptum, tanquam operum "sorum speculum pra manibus dicitur habuisse."
³ Lectures on the Manuscript Materials of Irish History. Dublin, 1861. pp. 382-434. [Some persons, however, think that Professor O'Curry goes a little too far when he says, that there can be no doubt that these prophecies are fabrications, either of Giralddus Cambrensis himself, or of John de Courcy. There seems to be no reason for suspecting the honesty of Giralddus. And though De Courcy knew that these predictions were forgeries, that does not prove that he fabricated them himself.]
gation the stock of prophecies extant in Ireland, most of which exist only in manuscript, and has come to the conclusion, that they partly have been composed after the event, partly are inventions made to help on the event. Those prophetic sayings, which in Ireland, as elsewhere, flatter an impoverished posterity, succeeding to a more exalted and wealthy generation, with the prospect of a reaction which shall restore prosperity on the island, appear here to have been preserved rather as family traditions. But the great influence which they still continue to have is shown by O'Curry.1

"He himself," he says, "knew hundreds of persons, and among them well-educated men and women, who neglected the usual means of obtaining a livelihood, in the hope, fed on prophetic sayings, that a great restoration would take place in Ireland; although these prophetic sayings in no single instance stated when this would come to pass."

The Scots also, as one might expect, possess their national prophecies; and a fresh collection of them was published by the Bannatyne Club in the year 1833. But they nearly all of them bear on the very face of them the mark of being compositions which lamely follow the event. A few that are genuine in their own way are the products of the time in which the Scots were prostrate under the superior power of the English; which was especially the case after 1355, and again after 1513. Thereupon national prophecies comforted the downcast people with the hope that "Albania" (Scotland) would again raise itself up, and, in union with the descendants of Brut (the Welsh), cast down their haughty "English". neighbour, and make the soil of England drunk with blood. Later on, after the alliance into which Scotland entered with France, the hope was transferred to the powerful help of the French lilies, and in this case, just as in the other, was never fulfilled.

1 Lectures, p. 431.

At the south-west extremity of Europe, the kingdom of Portugal, owing to its tragical fate, has been in later times a fruitful soil for the growth of Prophets. This small country, thanks to an able dynasty (the second Burgundian), to its expeditions of discovery, and its settlements in Asia and Africa, had, in the course of the fifteenth century, risen to the rank of a first-rate Power, the first in modern times. Its capital became the chief market for the commerce of the world. Under King Emmanuel, rightly surnamed "the Great," the sea-route to the

1 [In 1356 Edward III. made his showy and destructive, but scarcely successful invasion of the Lowlands, an invasion chiefly noted by the mischief done to religious houses. It left marks and recollections very detrimental to Edward's policy in Scotland. In the same year Edward Baliol made an absolute gift and surrender of his crown and kingdom of Scotland to King Edward and his heirs. In 1513 the bloody field of Flodden, "the most disastrous of all in immediate loss" to Scotland. Burton's History of Scotland, iii., pp. 32, 246.]

East Indies was discovered, and Brazil was conquered. After the death of John III., the child Sebastian\(^1\) ascended the throne, and under the misguidance of the Jesuits undertook a war in Africa, with forces altogether inadequate. In the disastrous battle of Alcassar, in the year 1578, Portugal lost its King and its army; and soon afterwards the dynasty of Burgundy was extinguished in its collective male and female representatives.\(^2\) The beaten and vanquished country fell in consequence for sixty years under the hated dominion of Spain; and even under the national dynasty of Braganza\(^3\) has never remounted to its former power and prosperity. In this position of affairs the same thing occurred there as took place in Germany after the death of the Emperor Frederick II.; viz., a deep yearning after the missing King (of whose death in the battle, however, no one could give quite certain tidings) was awakened in the now unhappy nation. The Portuguese clung persistently to the consolation and hope that their King was not dead, that at the right moment he would appear again and break in pieces the Spanish yoke. One false Sebastian

\(^1\) [He was only three years old when the sudden death of his grandfather took place. His father had died before he was born. Sebastian's surname in Portuguese history is "the Regretted."]

\(^2\) [Sebastian was succeeded by Henrique, Cardinal-Archbishop of Evora, almost the only instance of a Bishop-King. He was the last male of the royal house, and of course could have no son. At his death the Pope claimed the kingdom, because the property of Cardinals who die without a will belongs to the See of Rome.]

\(^3\) [Reinstated in 1640 in the person of John IV., "the Restorer."�]
after another came up,\textsuperscript{1} undismayed by the fate which had befallen his predecessors; and the belief that "the Hidden Prince" (o principe encubierto), as he was called, was alive on some distant island, maintained itself ineradicably. The whole store of prophetic sayings since Joachim and Brigitta was ransacked, and some were soon found which could be made to have special reference to Portugal and its glorious future, and thus confirm the Sebastianists in their delusion. Nor was there any want of fresh oracles, which proceeded and spread from the monasteries; and national Prophets arose, among them the tailor Bandarra\textsuperscript{2} in particular, whose comforting verses were learnt by heart by the Portuguese. Confidence in the reappearance of the national King maintained itself in the country even far beyond the limits of a human lifetime, and the fact of the house of Braganza ascending the throne could not destroy it. "One half of the nation," said the Count of Schomberg to King Louis XIV. on coming from Portugal, "is looking for the "coming of Sebastian, and the other half for the \textsuperscript{1} [One appeared in 1585. He was arrested, taken to Lisbon, and condemned to death, but sent to the galleys instead. Two years before, Alvarès, a monk of Cintra, had become a hermit near Ericena. The people believed him to be Sebastian, and he in vain assured them that he was not. At last he was persuaded to take up arms. He gave the Cardinal-Regent some trouble, but finally was captured, brought into Lisbon on an ass, and hung. In 1594 another pseudo-Sebastian appeared in a Spanish convent. He was seized and hung before he had done any mischief.]

\textsuperscript{2} [In 1541 he fell into the hands of the Inquisition, figured in an auto-da-fé, and was near being burnt as a heretic.]
“coming of the Messiah.”¹ Sebastian was to the Portuguese the symbol and pledge of their irretrievably lost national greatness and glory; and the thought of their colonies conquered by the English and the Dutch, of their broken prosperity, of their vanished commerce, kept the hope ever awake, that he, with whose disappearance all this had been destroyed, would bring it back again with return.²

Even after the middle of the seventeenth century, when the house of Braganza was already firmly established on the throne of Portugal, yet another man came forward as a political and religious Prophet, whose name stands very high in the literature of his country, the Jesuit Vieira, the most celebrated preacher of his nation. He merely intended, like the Joachimites, to set forth and explain the already extant prophetic sayings, which were mostly by Spanish and Portuguese monks, including those of Bandarra. After twenty years of investigation and work, mainly on the authority of Bandarra, he published his writings,—a Key to the Prophets, and a History of the Future,³ with the

¹ "Que voulez-vous que je disse à votre Majesté d'une nation, dont la "molié attend le roi Sébastian, et l'autre le Messie." BOUTARIE, Correspondance secrète inédite de Louis XV. Paris, 1867. l., 191. By the second half Schomberg meant the numbers of secret Jews, which still existed at that time among the Portuguese.

² See Miguel D'Antas, Les faux Don Sebastian, étude sur l'histoire de Portugal. Paris, 1866, pp. 450-456. Here one learns that even in the year 1838 there were Sebastianists in the interior of Brazil.

³ Historia do futuro; besides this an unprinted manuscript,—Espe- ranças de Portugal: quinto imperio do Mundo, and a treatise first view of announcing to his hoping and yearning fellow-countrymen, who were still in very many instances Sebastianists, that their King would be awaked again by God, and would raise his Portugal to be the kernel and centre of a new Empire of the world; the fifth, according to the well-known reckoning in Daniel, seeing that the fourth, the Roman-German, had already in a great measure fallen into decay, and on Sebastian's appearance would be fully dissolved. During the time of this fifth kingdom the conversion of all Jews and heathen would follow, and therewith the promise of "one Fold and one Shepherd" find its fulfilment. The Inquisition at Coimbra took cognizance of the matter, the Pope confirmed its sentence, and Vieira was obliged to recant, and was imprisoned for years.

It is very remarkable that the pagan State-institution, prevalent in old Rome, of divining the future, half by way of oracles, half by way of printed in 1856 with the title, Discurso em que se prova a vinda do Senhor Rey D. Sebastian; see D'Antas, p. 453, and the Deductio chronologica et analytica of Serapia Silvius. Lisbon, 1771. II., 328. [The Clavis Prophetarum, on which he was at work for fifty years, was never finished, though he lived to be nearly ninety, 1608 to 1697. He was arrested by the Holy Office, October 2nd, 1665, and released December 24th, 1667, apparently without any retractation being required of him. In 1669 he was invited to Rome, where Clement X. and his Cardinals seemed anxious to make amends to him for his treatment at the hands of the Inquisition by the attention which they paid him. His arrest and imprisonment appear to have been the result of political intrigues, the work of the favourites of Alfonso VI., whose banishment from the court of the wild young King had been recommended by Vieira to the Queen Regent. Weiss sp. Michaud's Biographie Universelle.] omens, was transplanted into the Roman Empire of the East, or else cropped up there afresh. In the imperial library at Constantinople there existed, from the eighth or ninth century, a book with figures, to which were attached so-called sibylline prophecies or explanatory comments. But the comments were not less uncertain and ambiguous in meaning than the figures of men or animals, to which they were intended to serve as explanation. Not very different from this appears to have been the book of Visions (ὀράσεως), of which Bishop Luitprand makes mention in his report of the embassy. The Greeks would have called it after Daniel, he said, but he preferred to call it sibylline. It contained the number of years of each Emperor's reign and the fortune of the Empire under him, which, however, merely means that certain marks and pictures were interpreted to signify these things after the event. And how this was done one sees from the application of the book which, according to the narrative of Zonaras, was made on the occasion of the murder of the Emperor Leo the Armenian. The picture represented a lion with the Greek letter Χ on its back and a man stabbing the lion through the middle of the Χ. It was thereupon discovered that in this the assassination of the Emperor, which had taken place on Christmas Day (the day of Christ, and hence the X), had been fore-shadowed.
There exists an interpretation or paraphrase of these oracles, which professes to be by the Emperor Leo the Philosopher. It has the ring, however, of an original prophetic saying, and promises, in dark and cramped language, the appearance of an imperial deliverer, an oriental Frederick, who shall come to save the Empire and the people. Proceeding from the Ishmaelites (that is, the Muhammadans), he will rule over them, adorned with all virtues, an Archangel of God in the venerable form of an old man, poor as a beggar, and yet not needy. Two Angels, in the form of eunuchs, will accompany him. A voice from heaven will say to the people, "Doth he please "you?" and all will receive him with adoration. As to the time at which this prediction originated there is no clue.¹ The astonishing thing about it is, that it makes the deliverance come from that hereditary foe, the Moslem, unless we have here already an anticipation, that at some time or other a Moslem ruler will subdue the Roman Empire of the East. Then again, the fact that poverty is mentioned as the chief distinctive mark of the rescuing Monarch; although otherwise in oriental Christianity, poverty has by no means the value and religious significance, which western nations were wont to attribute to it from the thirteenth century onwards. Just as the Teutonic West was distinguished precisely by this trait, that the Emperor of its expectation, the hoped-for Frederick, must be the true son of a King and scion of a ruling family, not an upstart stranger. A foreign deliverer could be an object of expectation only in a country in which lasting dynasties and dynastic continuity were almost unknown, and where the name Porphyro-genitus¹ was used as the mark of a rare peculiarity.

¹ Migne, Patrologia Graec, vol. cvii. p. 1141 sq., where it is found together with other oracular sayings of Leo.

Nevertheless, this Byzantine expectation of one called from the deepest poverty to the imperial dignity, of a beggar (πτωχός), whom God shall raise up from his destitution (ἀπὸ πεψίας), maintained itself for a long time. We find it in the tenth century in Nicephorus, the biographer of Andrew Salo.² The longed-for one is to inaugurate a Golden Age in the Byzantine Empire, to humble the Sons of Hagar (that is, the Arabs), and to burn up them and their children with fire. From the twelfth year of his reign will all payment of tribute cease. Illyricum (Bulgaria) and Egypt will again belong to the Empire, and he will at last tame even the fair-haired nations (the Germans and Franks), and wield the sceptre for two-and-thirty years. Thus do the wishes of the Greeks transform themselves into prophetic utterance. But, characteristically enough, this most splendid dominion shall, according to the prediction, be immediately followed by an age of darkness and of the most wicked reigns. Hence a sudden transition from an age of brilliant virtues and of moral purity to a period in which all wickedness shall have shameless dominion,—a reaction, for which the sole reason assigned is (in accordance with Byzantine absolutism) the personal character, will, and example of the Monarch. In the capital at that time people believed that they were already in possession of prophetic assurance, that Constantinople, a city dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and defended by her, would never be conquered by the foe. It will, doubtless, be besieged, they said, but the foe will retire with shame and disgrace.¹ This delusion was most certainly dispelled by the Latin conquest in the year 1204. And later on one finds a sibylline prophecy, which may well have been composed before the year 1453.² Therein it is foretold that the wickedness of Byzantium, the bloodshed and the sins against nature, shall come up as a cry before God, and the enemy shall burst in upon the city, shall annihilate its glory and its honour, shall violate the holy place and the women, shall consign the buildings to the flames, and shall cause the cry of woe to resound over all. After which there is an intimation in dark language of a further reaction which shall one day come to pass.

¹ [Constantine IX. (or VII.), son of Leo the Philosopher.]
² Acta Sanctorum, Maji. VI., Appendix, p. 96.

¹ Such was the declaration of Andrew Salo, l. c. 96.
² It is to be found in Wolf’s Collection,—Lectiones memorabilis, Lauingen, 1600. l., 71.
Disastrous effects of these prophecies.

In the last days of the declining Empire predictions like these produced a most detrimental effect. They perplexed and discouraged men’s minds. In a monastery at Constantinople a tablet was discovered, which, like other Byzantine prophecies, was attributed to the Emperor Leo the Philosopher (886–911). It exhibited in two columns the succession of Emperors and Patriarchs, each name having a space to itself; and it showed that there was only a single empty space remaining, so that the reigning Emperor Constantine would be the last.¹ On the other hand, another prophecy, which was intended to inspire the Byzantines with confidence, was also extant, but in its effects was no less disastrous. It was to this effect, that if the Turks should force their way into the city, and reach even to the column of Justinian, then suddenly an angel would appear and pluck them all out. The consequence of a firm belief in this miraculous rescue was simply this, that the populace refrained from all participation in the defence of the city, and left it entirely to the far too weak garrison.²

¹ [So also during the plague in Milan, 1630, the current prophecies aggravated the disease by causing a belief that escape or recovery was impossible. During the Great Fire of London, a son of Sir Kenelm Digby, setting up for a Prophet, persuaded people that the destruction of London was written in the Book of Fate, and that it was folly to resist. Hundreds, who might have helped, were induced to look on and do nothing.]

Byzantine prophecies exercised even over acute and educated minds is the zealous Aristotelian George of Trebizond, one of the most learned of the Greeks, who were driven into Italy by the Turkish conquest. The old prediction about an Emperor and universal Monarch who should arise from among the Ishmaelites, had brought him in the year 1469 at Rome, where he was a public teacher, to the conviction,—that the reigning Sultan, Muhammad II., the conqueror of Constantinople, was this Ishmaelite, who would forthwith be converted to the Christian faith, and as Emperor Emanuel and sole Monarch of the world call all nations to the true faith; a conversion of the world, which would come to pass entirely of itself, without any special effort on the part of Christians. This innocent hope of his was counted in Rome as a grievous offence; for people supposed that he had the further notion that his "just Emperor" would set on foot a great massacre of the Clergy, which was the wide-spread idea with regard to

1 [Among these have been reckoned Argyropulus (who, however, had probably been in Italy for some years before the capture of Constantinople), Chalcondylus, Andronicus Callistus, and Constantine Lascaris. George of Trebizond is perhaps best known from his controversy with Theodore Gaza and Cardinal Bessarion on the endless question of the comparative merits of Plato and Aristotle. George would seem to have been vastly inferior to his opponents, both in power and temper. He translated several works of the Greek Philosophers and Fathers into Latin, with more rapidity than accuracy. Bessarion says of the translation of Plato's Laws, that, if anyone had leisure enough to care to compare it with the original, he would certainly find as many mistakes as words. Hallam, Introduction to the Literature of Europe, i. p. 147. Biessonade, article in Michaud's Biographie Universelle.] the expected Emperor in the West. George had no such thought. The Byzantine predictions knew nothing of an impending bloody persecution of the Clergy, for in the Eastern Church the relation of the Clergy to the Laity had not been so adverse and hostile as it was at that time in the West. The unhappy man was robbed of his possessions by the Roman magistrates, and thrust into prison; until at last Alfonso King of Naples interested himself on his behalf, and supported him until his death in the year 1483.¹

¹ Confer respecting him Arndt’s Beiträge zur Geschichte und Literatur, ix., 837. [Some say he lived till 1486, which would make him exactly ninety when he died.]
IV

PROPHECIES RESPECTING ROME

There is one city which has offered richer material to the prophetic impulse than many a large kingdom—Rome; the city, which assuredly for two thousand years has been uniquely and unapproachably one of the largest factors in the history of the world; which—huge sepulchre of nations though it be—yet again and again, with the magnetic power of an alluring goal, which every man desires to reach and behold once in his lifetime, draws all mankind to itself. Strange how the view of the lastingness of this city, and of the higher degree of protection guaranteed to it, changed in the course of time into the opposite!

1 [But in spite of the violence of princes, and the speculations of theologians, the old feeling, that Rome is a necessary element in the world’s history, remains indestructible. Though all should hold their peace, the very stones of Rome proclaim this article of faith to every visitor. Hermann Grimm gives expression to this ineradicable feeling in one of his Essays. “One fancies, when the world was created, that]
In her pagan days Rome was accounted as the everlasting, and the title of "the Eternal City" and Mistress of the World in poetry, in history and geography, even in daily public life, was understood of her as a matter of course.

In the time of the Christian Emperors down to the end of the fifth century Rome still retained—at any rate with pagan writers—her name of "the "Eternal City." "She shall live as long as there "are men," says AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS.1 This name gave offence to the Christians. They believed that by the "name of blasphemy," which, according to the Revelation of S. John (xvii. 3, 5), was written on the forehead of the harlot "arrayed in "purple and scarlet colour," was meant this very

"on the spot of the earth where Rome stands, a city must have grown, "sprouting up without the aid of man. In the case of other cities, one "can think, 'here was once a desert plain,' and so forth; in Rome, such "thoughts are almost an impossibility. In Berlin, Vienna, Paris, I can "picture to myself a storm, which should sweep everything from the "ground; but at Rome, it seems as if the very stones must gather them-"selves together again into palaces, were a convulsion to rend them "from one another; as if it were contrary to the laws of existence, that "the heights of the capitol should be without palaces, and temples, and "towers." Not that he believes that this sentiment corresponds with facts. "Practically considered, the thought is a worthless one. Rome "can no doubt be rooted out stock and stem, no less than Babylon and "Persepolis. Nevertheless, this fancy contains something higher than "itself; and this needs must be expressed. The sense of the eternal, of "the incomparable, which comes over us in Rome; the love of all cities "to this one."

1 Rerum Gestarum, Lib. xvi. c. 10, 14. [Cf. the reply of Hor-"misdas to Constantinus, when the Emperor asked him, "quid de Roma "sentiret, 'id tantum sibi dispicuisse' aiebat, 'quod didicisset ibi quo-
"que homines mori.'" Ib. "Urbem auspiciato deis auctoribus in aeter-
"num conditam." Livy, xxviii. 28; iv. 4. Tibullus, II., v.]
appellation of eternal.\footnote{1} With the extinction of Paganism and the downfall of the Roman Empire of the West (that is from 476 onwards) the proud name vanished also, although others still remained; as when the Christian \textit{Ausonius} salutes Rome as “the home of the gods, the Queen or the Head of the World.”\footnote{2} Even after the fall of the Empire, even after the ravages of Alaric the Goth and the sack under Genseric, Rome remained still in the eyes of men—quite apart from its ecclesiastical importance—the First of Cities, the Head of the World. When Totila, King of the Goths, would have levelled Rome to the ground, Belisarius warned him, that, if he laid violent hands on this city, the chief of all cities, he would be guilty of a grievous crime against the whole race of mankind.\footnote{3}

Again in the eighth century we may here and there catch an echo of the ancient view of Rome's

\footnote{3} \textit{Procopius. Bell. Gothic.} [III. xxii. p. 517, ed. Paris, 1662. Totila had already commenced the work of destruction when the Embassy with the letter of Belisarius arrived. Belisarius urges that men of sense add to the beauty of cities; only fools, who are not ashamed to leave behind them this proof of their nature, destroy what others have reared. Rome was not built in a day, nor by one man. To destroy it is to undo the work of centuries. To destroy it is not to destroy a foreign city, but Totila's own. Totila is victorious now; but fortune may change. The preservation of Rome will stand him in good stead; should he ever have to sue for mercy. The destruction of it would be his doom. He has all to lose, and nothing to gain by destroying it.] dignity as temporal ruler of the world, but already mingled with the later ecclesiastical view; as when the Abbess Cengitha in the year 733 made known to Boniface her longing to visit Rome, once the Queen of the World, and there receive forgiveness of her sins.\(^1\) But the existence of the Roman Empire was no longer now, as formerly, united in men’s minds with the continuance of Rome itself. Before the year 800, when the Roman Empire of the West was renewed by Charles the Great, the Empire continued on in the East even in name; for the Byzantine Greeks always called themselves “Romans,” and maintained that they were the only true and lawful heirs and successors of old Rome. And since 800 Rome has never been the capital of the Empire in the West, has never been the residence of the Emperor. When, therefore, in all the centuries between 500 and 1500, just as formerly, the end of the Roman Empire was supposed to be necessarily bound up with the end of the earth’s existence, no one any longer thought of adding to this the notion, that the city of Rome also must share in the same continuance until the end of time. On the contrary,—a closer study of the Revelation\(^2\) of S. John brought men gradually to the conclusion, that the prophecy respecting the sentence of destruction pronounced upon Rome in

---

\(^1\) Besnafch, Opera; ed. Giles, i., 76.

\(^2\) The application of the visions of the Apocalypse, says Hallam (Middle Ages, iii., 387; note h. London, 1856), has commonly been said to have been first made by the Franciscan seceders. But it may the eighteenth chapter was not yet fulfilled, and consequently was still in the future, and would come to pass long before the close of time. According to the Revelation judgment shall come upon the city of the Seven Hills suddenly with death, mourning, famine, and fire, and she shall be utterly burned up.¹ These are things which did not come to pass, even in the storms of the Gothic wars, in which the destruction which took place was but gradual, and confined to certain parts of the city.

S. Benedict of Nursia (about 542) had prophesied its destruction higher, and is remarkably pointed out by Dante. Inferno, xix. 106–114.

> "Di voi, Pastor, s'accore il Vangeliata, > Quando chel, che siede sovre l' acque,
> Puttaneggia co' regi a lui fu vista:
> Quella che con le sette teste nacque,
> Et dalle diec corna ebbe argomento,
> Fin che virtute al suo marito piacque.
> Fatto v' avete Dio d' oro e d' argento, > Eche altro è da voi all' idolatre,
> Se non ch' egli uno, e voi n'orate cento?"

> "The Evangelist you Pastors had in mind,
> When she who sitteth upon many waters
> To fornicate with kings by him was seen;
> The same who with the seven heads was born,
> And power and strength from the ten horns received,
> So long as virtue to her spouse was pleasing.
> Ye have made yourselves a god of gold and silver;
> And from the idolater how differ ye,
> Save that he one, and ye a hundred worship?"

Longfellow's Translation.

Petrarch made a similar application of the Apocalypse. See Cary's note.¹

¹ ["Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."]
declared, that Rome would not be destroyed by foreign nations, but would be visited through the forces of nature,—storms, whirlwinds, and earthquakes, and would perish of itself.¹ More than thirteen hundred years have passed away since then, and of these physical devastations no sign has appeared. Later on the very plain passage in the Apocalypse compelled men to suppose that at any rate there was to be a destruction of Rome by fire. And this destruction was thought to be nearer at hand or further off, just according as people had in their eye either the moral condition of the inhabitants only, or brought this downfall of the city into connection with the corruption in the Church, and the degeneracy and vice of the Papacy, and therefore thought that the retribution on the seat and centre of Church-government was merely a part, a single preliminary, belonging to the great process of Church-reform.

This was the case with the Spiritualists of the Minorite order, who more and more understood the apocalyptic Babylon to mean the Roman Church, grown corrupt and carnal, and now dwelling at Avignon; but at the same time they expected the destruction of Rome by fire. S. BRIGITTA, who lived for many years in Rome, prophesied in accordance with a vision which was communicated to her, that first the sword and then the fire would come upon Rome, after which the plough would pass over its site.\footnote{Revelationes, ed. Antwerp, 1611; p. 257.} S. Francisca Romana, in the year 1436, believed that the destruction of the city was already determined in the counsels of God, though afterwards she supposed that it had been averted by her intercession. Later on, however, she had another vision, in which the downfall of Rome was shown to her as close at hand.\footnote{Acta Sanctorum, Bolland; Martii ii., 147.}

¹ M. Gregorii Dialogi, 2, 15; ed. Bened. II., 240.

In a moral poem of an English monk, \textsc{Richard Rolle of Hampole},\footnote{The Prick of Conscience. It was written in the fourteenth century, in the Northumbrian dialect, and was published a few years ago in London. See the passage, p. 111.} the expected destruction of Rome is already brought into connection with a general separation from the Roman Church, which no one will then obey any longer. About the same time an expectation arose, that the Roman Church would one day commit so monstrous a crime that many Churches would separate from her, whereupon, in accordance with the prophetic saying of S. Paul (2 Thess. ii.), the Man of Sin would appear.\footnote{Anselmi, Opera. Cologne, 1612. In Epist. II., ad. Thessal. 1, 2, II., 42. \textit{[Et nunc revelabitur iniquus. Vel Romanus pontifex, qui tenet nunc ecclesias, teneat illas donec de medio fiat, id est, donec ab ipsa Romanis ecclesiis, que est medium et cor ecclesiarum, fiat iniquitas, ob quam ab ea multis discendant ecclesiae. Ibid. Paris, 1544; p. 205, M, A.]} In Germany it is believed that a German Emperor will destroy first Rome and then Florence.

of Richard Rolle of Hampole.
He connects the destruction of Rome with a general rejection of the Roman Church.
the old metropolis of the Guelf party, so hostile to the Germans and their ruler. Such was the drift of the story and of the expectation during the fifteenth century and part of the sixteenth. In the year 1519, just when Charles V. was elected, a prophecy was brought from England to Venice, to the effect that the new Emperor would subdue all states and nations, and compel the Muhammadans to accept Christianity, but would first burn Rome and Florence with fire; finally he would withdraw to Jerusalem, lay down his crown upon the Mount of Olives, and die. Now Charles burnt neither Rome nor Florence; but he besieged and reduced Florence to please Pope Clement VII., and how his horde of mercenaries captured and sacked Rome in 1527 is known to all the world.

Now, however, Berthold, Bishop of Chiemsee, in his work, The Burden of the Church, written in the year 1519, quotes this very identical prophetic saying, with the remark, that it is said to have appeared in Italy in the year 1505, but that it had first come into his hands in that year—1519. When Berthold wrote, Charles was not yet elected Emperor, so well prepared were people in Germany, when the despatch of May 6th, 1527, came, and the only Emperor, who after a lapse of 180 years once more possessed real power, seemed to be really going to work in earnest to fulfil the prophecy.

1 Sanuto has incorporated it in his large diary. See Rawdon Brown's Calendar of State-Papers in Venice, 1509–1519, p. 566.
2 Onus Ecclesiae, 48, 8, ed. 1531.
It is expressly remarked in the literature of the time, that an event, which now seems so extraordinary and unheard of,—seeing that no other great city met with a similar fate,—made very little impression on this side the Alps. People had expected something much worse.

Even on Rome itself the blow came by no means altogether unexpected. A hermit of Sienna, Bartolomeo Brandano, entered the streets of Rome not long before May, 1527, and cried¹ woe to the doomed city, which should fall a prey to the peoples beyond the Alps, for the grievous sins of the Pope and his Prelates. The Pope had him seized and thrown into prison, and then thrust him out of the city with the threat that, if he returned, he would have him thrown into the Tiber. But Brandano came back and preached again, that the vengeance of God would now come upon the clergy and the city. Clement VII. then had him really thrown from the bridge of S. Angelo into the river; but Brandano saved himself. Being once more thrown into prison, he was set free by the Imperial army, which made his prophecy come true. He appears to have stuck to the heels of Pope Clement; for, when the latter went to Orvieto, Brandano appeared there also and denounced him as a false Pope (on account of his illegitimate birth²)

¹ [Cf. the denunciations of Solomon Eagle and others at the time of the Great Plague in London.]
² [He was a natural son of Giuliano de’ Medici, murdered in the Pazzi conspiracy, fifty years before this.]
whose functions and indulgences were null and void.\footnote{Guicciardini, Storia del Sacco di Roma, in Bernini, Storia delle Eresie, iv. Raynald, Annal., a. 1527; p. 648. All historians of the Augustine Order, which claims Brandano as one of its members, make mention of him. Angiolo Bardi gives the most exact account of him in his Storia di Siena, in Pecci, Notizie storico-critiche sulla vita di Bartolomeo da Petroso chiamato Brandano. Lucca, 1763; p. 20. He had the reputation of sanctity with the populace of the time, and won belief in his prophetic mission.}

In a few years Rome had recovered itself from the terrible blow of the year 1527, and soon became far more rich than it had been before, in spite of its great rupture. Meanwhile the belief, that it was destined in later times to suffer an utter devastation by fire, remained. Rome is now the Babylon of the Apocalypsee, the harlot, who says in her heart, “I sit as Queen,”\footnote{[“How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit as Queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.”—xviii. 7.]} and the word of Scripture, not yet accomplished, delays its fulfilment. Thus as early as the fourteenth and fifteenth century the theory is advanced, that the fall of the Roman Empire will be accompanied by a separation of the nations from the Papal Chair.\footnote{So, for instance, the Abbé Engelbert, De ortu, progressu, et fine Romani Imperii, in the Bibl. Max. P.P. t. xxv.} And not only this, but even the inhabitants of Rome will rise up against the Papacy, which will see itself compelled to take its seat elsewhere; and then forthwith the sentence of doom will be executed on the city, now also a renegade from the faith. It was precisely those theologians, who were the most uncompromising adherents to the temporal power of the Popes, who defended this view. Rome, they said, had been an adulteress from of old. In the contests between the Popes and the Emperors, the Romans had always shown more sympathy with the Emperor than with the Pope. All these sins would one day meet their retribution in that destroying conflagration. The whole Order of the Jesuits for a long time declared itself in favour of this theory and explanation of the eighteenth chapter of Revelation. Thus Ribera, Viegas, Lessius, Bellarmine, Suarez, Henriquez, Cornelius van de Steen (a Lapide), and others.
THE BABYLON OF REVELATION.

Hence there arose the necessity for undertaking a removal of the Papal chair, to anticipate the sentence of doom; for the question respecting the continuance of the see, at any rate, could not be raised. People were thus led to the view, that the connection of the supreme ecclesiastical dignity and power with Rome and the Roman See was at any rate no indissoluble one. For with the destruction of Rome the Bishopric of Rome, in any case, came to an end, and the Church could, and must, never-

1 As early as the thirteenth century this certainly often proved to be the case, and was one of the reasons why the Popes after Innocent IV. (1243–1254) for the most part kept far away from Rome, and preferred to reside in small provincial towns.

2 Thus states in particular the Roman Oratorian, Thomas Bozio. De signis Ecclesiae, Lib. xxiv. cap. 6.

3 Bellarmine shows himself to be very undecided, and oscillates between two contradictory statements. Compare on this Malvenda, De Antichristo, 1, 71, who excuses himself on the ground of the difficulty and obscurity of the question.
theless, still continue. Many, therefore, were of opinion, that just as Antioch, so long as Peter dwelt there, was the seat of the Primate before Rome, and no divine command, making Rome succeed to it, was extant; so in later times also it was possible for the Papal power to be transferred to another city and church.
V

THE PROPHETIC TEACHERS

If one takes a closer view of the prophetic teachers themselves, one soon discovers that, when men of theological culture,—men like Joachim and Savonarola,—imagined that they had received the gift of prophecy, they were at the same time subject to the influence of those views respecting the nature and conditions of this gift, which were traditional in the theology of the schools. Here it was universally taught, that the prophetic gift was in itself no sign of peculiar piety or holiness of life, that indeed even wicked men could receive the gift from God; and appeal was thereupon made to the words of Scripture respecting Caiaphas. There seemed, therefore, to be no presumption in it, no claim to an heroic degree of Christian virtue, when anyone maintained that a revelation respecting future events had been vouchsafed to him.¹ A claim to the gift of prophecy involved no claim to peculiar sanctity;

¹ So says the Dominican Bernardin Paulini, in the oration which he made before Paul IV., when the latter was about to condemn the peculiar spiritual disposition, a particular susceptibility of soul and spirit, the theologians go on to say, is not necessary for the gift of prophecy; and they combat the Rabbis, who require of a Prophet a natural gift, and a high degree of insight and wisdom. But of course, they said, a twofold consciousness must meet together in order to form a true Prophet. That is to say, he must know with absolute certainty, that what is revealed to him is true; and further, he must be convinced with equally strong certainty, that it is God who has revealed it to him. Now, no doubt Prophets like Joachim and others were wont to maintain, that it was not the spirit of the Prophets, but only that of understanding, which had been given to them, so that—no doubt in consequence of special higher enlightenment—they found in the prophetical books of Scripture predictions respecting the events of their own time and of that immediately following it. But that these interpretations were infallibly right, and that every prediction must certainly be fulfilled, no one, so far as the present writer is aware, has maintained. For people were generally accustomed to suppose, that it might sometimes happen even to a Seer to mix up spurious pro-writings of Savonarola; "Ora dunque, se Fra Girolamo fu santo; o "t'è tristo, io non ne parlo; basta che non è impossibile; ch'egli fusse "Profeta, essendo, come si sa, date e concesse le profezie anche ai triati," QUERTI, Vita P. Hieronymi Savonarole, ii., 572. The canon, that even wicked men at times have been true Prophets, has even passed into Canon Law. See in GRATIAN'S Decretum, Can. Multae autem, and Can. Propheta vit, 19, 1.

phecies, which were the result of mere human motives, with true visions, which had the warrant of divine enlightenment. Accordingly Thomas Aquinas maintained that, if the prophetic light be perfect, it brings a lofty certainty, of which God alone is the author, along with it, and that by this feeling of certainty the human recipient recognizes the heavenly origin of his visions;—a criterion in the highest degree precarious, for this feeling very frequently depends merely upon the strength and liveliness of the imagination. At any rate, the canon, that a Prophet is not entirely assured against self-deception, must be allowed by every one who has made himself even moderately acquainted with the field of visions and revelations. Anyhow, people admitted the case of prophetic threats (prophetiae comminatoriae), according to the Scriptural precedent of Jonah and Isaiah, which, if those who were threatened repented, were not fulfilled. And this also was granted, that often the full meaning of the inspiration received is not disclosed to the Prophet; who is always but an imperfect instrument in God’s hand; so that consequently, in many cases the prediction in itself, as given by God, may be true, and yet the organ, the man, impart into it a false signification.¹

¹ Thomas Aquinas draws this out, Summa, 2, 2, quest. 173, art. 4. Lambertini (afterwards Pope Benedict XIV.) elucidates it in his work De servorum Dei beatificatione, Padua, 1743, iii., 443, with reference to S. Bernard’s unhappy attempt at prophecy. The Pope says, moreover, “Fieri potest, ut aliquis sanctus ex anticipatis opinionibus aut
It was not until the great ecclesiastical and political movement in the second half of the eleventh century, that individual men, raised up by the waves of this movement, were led on in the confidence of their heart to attempt the foretelling of specific events. When a man fancied that he lived in an atmosphere of miracles, he easily persuaded himself that he also possessed the gift of prophecy, and such a man was exposed to the temptation of predicting a much-wished-for event, or one, in his opinion, necessary to the plan of divine government in the world. It must be owned that those predictions for the most part failed; and this fact may have cooled and deterred others. Peter Damiani prophesied the death of the anti-pope Cadalous within the space of a year. Cadalous outlived the year, and Peter had no better reply to make to his numerous mocking opponents than this, that Cadalous had at any rate been deposed by a Synod, which might be called death.¹ Damiani’s friend and fellow-combatant,

¹ Petri Damiani, Opera, III., 410, ed. Basset.
Pope Gregory VII., prophesied publicly, Easter, 1080, that the German Emperor Henry would die or be deposed, if he did not submit before the first of June; if this did not come to pass, men were not to believe him, the Pope, any more. The event gave him also the lie.1 But the later chroniclers, who wished to save for the Pope, as High Priest of Truth, the Caiaphas-right of prophesying, even against his own intention, knew how to get out of the difficulty. The chronicle of San-Bavo2 relates, that the Pope had merely declared how it had been revealed to him by God, that the false King would die that year. The Pope meant Henry, but the false king was Rudolf, who actually did die at the time.

It caused great excitement in the whole of Europe, that it should happen to so highly revered a man, and so celebrated a saint as S. Bernard, to be proved a false Prophet. At the bidding of Pope Eugenius III. he had preached a new Crusade in France and Germany, and promised it, in God's name, victory and success. The very opposite took place. By famine, pestilence, and the sword of the Saracens, the army was utterly destroyed; the whole West was thrown into mourning, and Bernard saw himself exposed to the grievous charges of deceit, and seduction of the people. He could only say, that the order of the Pope had been accounted by him as a command from God; the Pope must answer instead of him. And it can scarcely have sufficed him as a consolation, when the Abbate John of Casa-Maria informed him, that the guardian Saints of his monastery, the Martyrs SS. John and Paul, had appeared and revealed, that for this end God had permitted the destruction of the Christian army, in order that the places of the fallen Angel-host in Paradise might be filled up by the souls of Christian warriors, who lost their lives in this campaign.

1 Bonizo, in Oehele, Script. rer. Boic., l., 819.
2 In the Corpus Chronicorum Flandriae, ed. de Smet. Brussels, 1837, 1., 564.

2 Epistolas S. Bernardi, ed. Mabillon, ep. 386, Wilken, Geschichte der Kreuzzüge, iii., 273, has grossly misunderstood this in the sense of an ἀρξοκορδοραῖος. [In the Life of S. Bernard (Lib. iii., iv. § 10, auctore Gaufrido) we find the same view of the catastrophe as that taken by Abbate John of Casa-Maria. Nec tamen ex illa profectione Orientalis Ecclesia liberari, sed celestes meruit impleri et laetari. . . . Quis recte sapiens, illorum magis non doleat, qui ad priora, vel pejora forte prioribus scelerà redierunt, quam eorum mortem, qui in fructibus positi tene purgatas varii tribulationibus Christo animas reddiderunt.]
VINCENT FERRER,¹ in the beginning of the fifteenth century, was almost as highly revered in South-western Europe as a saintly man and a preacher of truth, as Bernard in his time. Vincent regarded himself as having received a special call to announce the great fact, that the public appearance of Antichrist would come to pass in a few years, so that mankind might make preparations for the severe contest. He knew for certain, as he wrote to Pope Benedict XIII., that Antichrist was already nine years old; it had been simultaneously revealed to many; demons, compelled by exorcisms, had confessed it.² The eloquent Dominican, no doubt, died in the firm belief that within a few years men would have palpable proof of the truth of his prediction; and it cost his brother-Dominican Antoninus and others some trouble to rescue the honour of the Prophet from the reproach of presumption and superstition.

S. CATHERINE OF SIENNA was accredited by her contemporaries with the faculty of prophecy, just as two centuries earlier it had been attributed to the German Hildegard. But it was destined for posterity to discover, that not to her either had any prophetic sight into the future development of the world's history been granted. She foresaw a great and general Crusade for the conquest of Palestine, and exerted herself to influence Pope Gregory XI. to command one. The Crusade never took place. She announced, that soon a great and thorough reformation of the whole Church would come to pass.¹ The Bride (that is, the Church), she says, who now is foully disfigured and in rags, will then shine bright with beauty and jewels, and be crowned with the diadem of all virtues. All believing peoples will rejoice at having such noble and holy pastors, and the unbelieving peoples, allured by this glory of the Church, will be converted to her. How far have these wishes, transformed into prophecies, of the pious virgin of Sienna been from finding accomplishment! Instead of the great renewal, of the conversion of unchristian peoples, of splendid holiness, a long series of ruinous wars of religion, and a lasting sundering of those nations which are greatest in strength and in vitality.

¹ [A Spanish Dominican preacher of Valencia, confessor and master of the palace to Benedict XIII. He died 1419, and was canonized 1455. Several of his works have been published.]

² The main portion of Vincent's letter is found in Malvenda, De Antichristo, i., 120.

Thus S. BRIGITTA had more rightly prophesied only a few years previously. As organ of the Blessed Virgin, she proclaimed a mighty overthrow (ruina) of the Church to be approaching, and described the rents in the walls, the pillars bowed down to the earth, the clefts in the floor, and so forth.² But even S. Catherine herself seems to have believed that the renewal of the Church in any case would not come about through the Papal Chair; for she declared positively that, if a Pope should attempt to reform the brutalized clergy, a great division would go right through the whole Church.¹

¹ Acta Sanctorum, Bolland, April, III., 924.
² Revelations, 78, p. 293, ed. Antwerp.

There are mainly two opposite currents which go through the souls of those who feel themselves prophetically inspired in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. On the one hand the idea, which had its root deep in the religious consciousness of all, that the condition of the Church was utterly intolerable, and that nothing but the hope of a great reformation near at hand could maintain and support the otherwise failing faith in the truth of Christianity. On the other hand, however, there was also the feeling that the means of effecting this renewal were nowhere to be seen, and that just in the place from which they might have been expected to come, namely Rome, neither inclination nor capacity for it existed. Hence it came to pass that individuals, as, for example, William of S. Amour,² Ryckel,³ Jacobus de Paradiso,⁴ declared

¹ Facient tunc scandalum universale toti ecclesie Dei quod tanquam heres inest poestis scindet et tribulabit eam. p. 925.
² [See p. 123.]
³ [Dionysius a Ryckel or de Leewis, born at Ryckel in the diocese of Liege, a Carthusian monk and most voluminous writer. He wrote a commentary on the whole Bible in seven folio volumes, Cologne, 1533, a commentary on Dionysius Areopagita, Cologne, 1536, eight books, De Fide Catholica, &c., &c. He died about 70 years of age, 1471.]
⁴ [Also a Carthusian; doctor at Erfurth, 1457; author of a number of tracts on ecclesiastical and religious subjects.]
in hopelessness and despair, that really the Church had no longer a future; it would continue in its utter depravity until the appearance of Antichrist, which must now be very near. Others, however, on the contrary—and they appear to have formed the majority—confidently predicted a thorough purification and renewal of the Church, for it was impossible that its Founder should leave it in this crippled state to perish with hunger; but at the same time, in harmony with the predominant popular view, they expected that a bloody tribunal, a fierce prosecution of the clergy, and above all, of the hierarchy, as the chief offenders, would precede the restoration of the Church. Very frequently in the case of men, who were intellectually very gifted, it was the yearning for better things, which was father to the prophecy. The present appeared to them to be intolerable. It was agonizing to them to see the contrast which existed between the circumstances which surrounded them and the demands for a time, which they thought themselves compelled to represent in accordance with their preconceived notions, with their religious belief, with their love for their country. As with peoples, so with individuals. With this yearning, however, was wont to be associated the presentment that the age was lying in travail-pangs, and that the human race was standing on the verge of a great reaction and of new formations. Savona-Rola himself at first shrank from the impulse to take

Even the most hopeful expect that heavy retribution will precede the reform.

In most cases "the wish was father to the thought."

Savona-Rola's unwillingness to be accounted a Prophet.
the office of a Prophet; but it gradually became too powerful in him, and ruled all his thoughts and aspirations. "I do not wish," he said, "to be "accounted a Prophet. That is a name difficult "and perilous to bear, making a man very unquiet,
"and exciting many persecutions against him,
"although, for the love of Christ, these may "willingly be borne." 1 "You are making me," he cries later on to the Florentines, "you are "making me a Prophet by force. 2 The sins
"of Italy force open my mouth. An inward
"fire consumes my bones and compels me to "speak."

How different from Savonarola, and yet at the same time akin to him, is another Prophet of the Dominican Order, the gifted, learned, deep-thinking CAMPA NELLA! In his case also the office of a Prophet was to go hand in hand with efforts in politics. A Calabrian by birth, the misfortunes of his narrow fatherland Calabria, as also the condition of the whole of Italy, then lying low under the oppression of Spain, touched him to the heart.
He saw his people degraded through a dominion which, to use the expression of a recent expert in Italian affairs, was the most wretched which perhaps has ever existed in Christian times. 3 Southern

1 Compendium revelationum, p. 274.
2 So in his Prediche fatte l'anno del 1496, f. 359.
3 Confer Ganganelli, seine Briefe und seine Zeit, by the author of the Römische Briefe (Reumont), Berlin, 1847, p. 32.
Italy was to become a Republic under the theocratic dominion of the Pope; and in order to win partisans and sworn confederates, he prophesied, on the authority of Joachim, S. Brigitta, Savonarola, and his interpretation of the Apocalypse, a great change in Italy for the year 1600. He too said, by the way, like Savonarola, "I am not making myself a Prophet or a worker of miracles; but perchance I see something great." His undertaking, soon betrayed, failed. He passed twenty-seven years in fifty different prisons, and was tortured some seven times, till he at last found an asylum in France. Did the external peace of Italy in the course of the year 1600 undeceive him with regard to his prophecies? In the beautiful and touching poems, in which he breathes out all the changing states of feeling produced by his long life of imprisonment, his anguish and his hope, his trust in God, and his despair, he turns himself complainingly to God;—"Shall then the host of Prophets, that Thou sendest, lie?"—"Why dost Thou let the stars and the Prophets, gifts of Thine, agree to teach deceit?" In his book on the Spanish Monarchy, which he likewise wrote in prison, Campanella shows himself to have still a

---

1 So in the Proemium to his Atheismus triumphatus in Struvi Collectanea Manuscriptorum, Jena, 1713, ii., 68.
2 [Under Cardinal Richelieu, who allowed him a pension. He died in Paris, 1639.]
4 Madrigale, i., p. 144.
belief in prophecy,¹ and says that S. Brigitta predicted the discovery of America.

A man, in whom may be traced with peculiar distinctness the gradual ascendency of the reflective faculty, and of the affections of pain and sorrow generated by it, ending at last in prophetic vision, is DIONYSIUS RYCKEL (or LEWIS), who has been called the ecstatic Doctor of the Church, a priest of the deepest and most earnest piety, and at the same time the most learned theologian of his age. Like all far-seeing men in Germany, like his friend and patron Nicolas of Cusa, he took his stand altogether at the ecclesiastical point of view, that Councils are indispensable and supreme over Popes. All his hopes, like those of every one else, rested on the meeting of a new Council; while he at the same time said that the Popes were exerting all their dexterity and power to prevent this. His incessant and agonizing meditations on the condition of the world and the Church became a vision and a revelation (in the year 1461), and he learns in converse with the Almighty, what was the product of his own reflections, that the measure of the punishment and retribution to be inflicted would be exactly dealt out according to the measure of ecclesiastical corruption. 1 "The Church," he is told, "hath almost utterly turned away from "me and lost its comeliness. In the greater part "thereof, from head to foot, there is no soundness in "it any more. As for the heads thereof, were they "even to swear an oath to amend themselves, "surely they would swear falsely." It was the time (1461) of the vain attempt of Pope Pius II. to bring about a Christian campaign against the Turks after the loss of Constantinople; and Dionysius prophesied that all these efforts must come to nothing, just as in fact was the case. So far from their succeeding, people even expected, with a certain profound feeling of culpability, that an invading army of Turks would within a short time overflood the Latin and Teutonic West as well.

¹ [He used to hear, as he tells us, a voice calling him by his name, and sometimes with other words, whenever any evil was impending; he doubted whether this was his own daemon, or (in accordance with his philosophy, which endued all things with consciousness) the air itself speaking. HALLAM, Literature of Europe, ii., p. 375.]

Ryckel's contemporary and friend, the most profound thinker of his time, Cardinal Nicolas of Cusa, like him became a Prophet, without exactly claiming for his predictions a higher measure of illumination. Cusa also saw through the deep corruption of the Church and its main cause, viz. the despotism and covetousness of the Papacy at that time; and hence he too came to the conviction, to which, after he had outlived the miscarriage of the reforming Councils, he gave utterance as a prophecy;—that the Church would sink still deeper, so that at last she would seem to be extinguished and even the succession of S. Peter and the other Apostles to die out.\textsuperscript{1} Then, however, she would triumphantly raise herself once more in the sight of all doubters.\textsuperscript{2}

1 Opuscula insigniora Dionysii Carthusiani, Doctoris ecstatici. Cologne, 1559. p. 747. In this place are found the three revelations.

Others have been visionary Prophets. The future was shown to them only in symbolical visions, but in such a way, that they forthwith conceived an inward certainty respecting the meaning of these representations. Such were the Dominican \textbf{ROBERT OF UFEZ}, at the end of the thirteenth century, and the German priest and founder of an Order, \textbf{BARTHOLOMEW HOLZHAUSER}, in the middle of the seventeenth century. His Order state respecting Robert, that from his youth he was endowed with a prophetic spirit, which had always accompanied him. He was formally examined respecting this point at an assembly of the Order at Carcassone in the year 1293, and as his answers appeared to be satisfactory, he was allowed to wander through France, Italy, and Germany as preacher and Prophet. While it is specially the corruption of the Church and of the Papal See that Robert of Ufez beholds in symbols, in the visions of Holzhauser it is the yearnings of a spirit cramped up in a narrow sphere that are reflected, a spirit that would correct the history of the world, because \textsuperscript{1} "Nulla major difformitas ab aliquo poterit exoriri, quam ab illo qui sus magna potestatis intuitu licere sibi cuncta credens, in sub-ditorum jura prorumpet," are his words, \textit{De Concord. cathol.}, 2, 27, p. 759, ed. Basil.

\textsuperscript{2} \textit{Opera}, ed. Basil, p. 933.
the course and consequences of the Thirty-years' War had shaped themselves altogether differently from what they ought to have done according to his view. His commentary on the Apocalypse, which formerly had many readers who believed it, is written in the same spirit.
VI

COSMOPOLITAN PROPHECIES

On turning to that kind of prophecy, which has been called cosmopolitan, we find that its history up to the close of the Middle Ages may be divided into four periods. The first period reaches from the time of Charles the Great to the end of the twelfth century. The second era, the Joachimite, extends over the thirteenth and half the fourteenth century. The third division consists of the dark century from 1347 to about 1450; which was the time of the Black Death, of the schism in the Papacy, of the hopes which flashed up and soon sank down again into darkness, of a renovation of the Church by means of Councils. Then follows the fourth epoch of prophecies, which comprises an era of about sixty-seven years, from 1450 to the year 1517. In this epoch prophecy is almost entirely taken up with thoughts of the retribution which was just bursting over Rome, Popes, and Clergy, and with cravings for reformation in the Church, so that prophetic expectation at last became the general mental attitude and the saving anchor of faith to all earnest religious spirits.

In the first period, in the ninth and tenth centuries and to the middle of the eleventh, it is still the appearing of Antichrist and the nearness of the end of the world, towards which the expectant gaze of men is almost exclusively directed. Neither the life peculiar to large towns nor a popular literature had as yet been developed, and no very considerable centres of intellectual life were yet in existence. Hence we know besides little else but the circle of ideas peculiar to the cloister, where men looked neither backwards nor forwards, and where they drew their conclusions with regard to the short duration of the world for the most part only from presages,—from physical or moral phenomena, which they did not comprehend. The ends to which the world itself was working, and its historical progress in civilization, they neither anticipated nor understood. Thus it was a fundamental idea of this and the following age, that the stability and continuance of the existing order of the world was inseparably connected with the duration of the Roman Empire, as renewed or handed on in the Carolingians, and after their extinction transferred to Germany and her kings. And it was for this reason that it was called the Holy Roman Empire of the German nation, because it was accounted as the all-sustaining key-stone of the Christian dispensation in the world, which then, and then only, could be thrown down from its place, when the process of the world's dissolution began. So long as this Empire endured, and the nations did not fall away from it, the end of all things was still far distant. Such was men's belief, such their assertion. And so that general dread or expectation, that Anti-christ would appear and the end of all things draw nigh (appropriquixe mundi termino, as the formula sometimes runs), may have troubled men's minds about the beginning of the eleventh century not merely because a thousand years of Christian history had run out, but much more because that Empire, which Otto I. had raised to so brilliant a position of power, seemed with the death of his grandson, the third Otto, who departed powerless from the world, ready to fall in pieces.

The leading prophetic authorities of this time are Methodius, who came from the Byzantine East, and S. Hildegard. Under the name of that celebrated Bishop of Patara in Lycia, who suffered martyrdom in the persecution of Diocletian, the

Revelations came to light first, no doubt, in Constantinople, and probably in the eleventh century. The author's name was certainly not Methodius, as has been supposed, but he put his testimony into the mouth of that church teacher, because he had written a celebrated commentary on the Apocalypse. The treatise was adapted to the Byzantine Greeks, and was intended to inspire them with consolation, courage, and hope, under the visibly increasing weakness of their Empire and the supremacy of Muhammadanism, then dominant through the whole of Asia. Methodius proclaims victory and conquest to the Ishmaelites (the Arabs) bursting forth from the deserts. God lends them these victories and permits them to subdue so many Christian lands and peoples in order to punish the sins of the Laity no less than of the Clergy. But the Roman Empire (and by it the author and all his fellow-countrymen understood the Greek or Byzantine-Roman Empire of the East) will nevertheless be overthrown by no one for all eternity; its arms are invincible, and it will at last vanquish all empires. Accordingly an Emperor and his son will suddenly fall upon the Ishmaelites, when they fancy themselves most secure, will wrest from them all the lands which they have hitherto conquered, and will impose a yoke of slavery upon their necks, a hundredfold worse than the one with which they had oppressed the Christians. Finally, the last of the Roman (that is, the Greek) Emperors will withdraw to the liberated Jerusalem, and will there lay down his crown at the foot of Christ. Then come the Last Things,—Gog and Magog, Antichrist and the Last Judgment.

This notion of the abdication of the last Monarch in Jerusalem is found in the West also in a work of the Abbot Adso, written about the year 948 at the request of Queen Gerberga. As the imperial tower was not permanently transferred to the Germans until some years later, viz. in the year 961, it is here one of the Frankish kings, who, as the last and most powerful Emperor, will bring the course of history to a close in so pious and humble a way. For—says this Abbot of Moutier-en-Der —the Roman Empire is certainly in the main destroyed; but in the kings of the Franks (and therefore of course in a Carolingian, for the House of Capet had not yet arisen) it will find a lasting continuation.¹ Adso had no anticipation of a German Imperium.

Methodius, however, had a considerable influence on the ideas, which people conceived in the West respecting the course of the world’s history; for it must have been in the first half of the twelfth century that the diffusion of his writings in a Latin translation took place there. In this translation the Turks were substituted for the Ishmaelites (that is, the Arabs); the Roman Empire and Roman Emperors were naturally made to mean Germany and Italy and the Emperors of German extraction; and hence Methodius is the first source of that idea, so long cherished, even down to more modern times, that the Turks will yet again overrun the whole of Germany and water their steeds in the Rhine. Nevertheless, so early as in Otto of Freising, in the preface to his Chronicle addressed

¹ The treatise appended to Augustine’s Works, ed. Bened., iv, 243.
to the Chancellor Reinold, Methodius is quoted as an authority for belief in the continuance of the Roman Empire, which will not be fully destroyed until the end of time.

Another idea, which penetrated deep into the imagination of the Middle Ages, flowed from the same source. From the Apocalypse \(^1\) (xx. 7–9) men learnt, that at the end of time heathen nations from far distant lands, Gog and Magog \(^2\) (Scythians), would gather together against the New Jerusalem and be destroyed. According to the statement of Methodius, Alexander the Great had in days of old shut up the tribes Gog and Magog in the Caspian mountains by a miracle; the mountains, however, will one day open, and then this stream of wild conquerors and destroyers will flow forth

\(^1\) ["And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together in battle; the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them."]

\(^2\) [There appears to be an etymological connection between these two names, but nothing can be affirmed with certainty. Gog would seem to contain the original element, which is perhaps a Persian root. In Gen. x. 2, Magog is a person, son of Japheth; in Ezek. xxxviii. 2, xxxix. 1, 6, a country or people, of which Gog was prince, usually identified with the Scythians. The strong imagery employed by Ezekiel in describing this terrible nation has been transferred in Revelation to the final contest between Christ and Antichrist. In the Koran Gog and Magog are placed north of the Caucasus. From the earliest times there seems to have been a legend that the enemies of religion and civilization lived in that quarter. See Haxthausen's Tribes of the Caucasus, cited in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, article "Magog."] over the world. Herein lies an anticipation of the great inroad of the Mongols in the thirteenth century; but the story is found as early as in the Syrian poems of a Jacobite at the end of the sixth century. And there too it is God Himself, who will one day open the gates of rock to the destruction of the nations. Then the Chronicle of ALBERIC notices on the year 1227, that the Minorite PETER OF BORETH had sent word from Acre, that Antichrist was already growing up and in March would be ten years old. But he adds the remark, that this cannot be true, for the Tower of Babel must first be built again, the closed-up Caspian mountains must be opened, the river Ethan must flow, the idol of Muhammad fall to pieces, and therefore Islamism be extinguished or rooted out.

But the Latin text of Methodius must, as regards the Last Things, have run very differently. The version, that the last Emperor, of Frankish origin, would go to Jerusalem, lay down his crown on the Mount of Olives and there die, is certainly not to be found in the original Greek. It is borrowed from the treatise of the monk Adso, of the tenth century, which in the Middle Ages was generally held to be a work of RABANUS, ARCHBISHOP OF MAYENCE. But this episode also was not always the same. According to ENGELBERT OF ADMONT,

2 In the Recueil des historiens de la France, xxii, 596.
3 De ortu et fine Romani imperii in the Biblioth. PP. Lugdun.
xxv. 378.
COSMOPOLITAN PROPHECIES.

says Methodius, the last Emperor, being unable to withstand the Ishmaelites (that is, the Muhammadans), will lay down sceptre, crown, and shield upon a withered tree, on the other side of the flood, and in the same place give up his life. So that, according to this, the history of the world (before Antichrist) would actually close with a great victory of Islam over believers in Christ—a disheartening, doubt-engendering notion, which causes Engelbert himself to remark that the doctors did not indeed venture to cast it aside, out of reverence for the holy martyr (the pretended author), but nevertheless did not give it much weight. At any rate it has not been retained in the manuscripts; for in the printed⁴ edition the Last Things run quite differently. The Ishmaelites or Turks are utterly conquered and reduced to subjection by the Emperor; but the Christians then, in a long and only too happy state of peace and prosperity, fall into carnal security and luxury, until Gog and Magog make a frightful massacre among them: whereupon the Roman King withdraws to Golgotha, takes the crown from his head, lays it on the cross, and surrenders the Empire of the Christians to God the Father. Thus then at least the shame of a final defeat of the Christians at the hands of their old hereditary enemy, the Turks, was averted; and Methodius continued to ⁴ In the Orthodoxographa, Basle, 1555, p. 397, and in the published edition of Sebastian Brandt. Basle, 1504.

be, especially for the Germans, a book of consolation and hope. Sebastian Brandt says in his preface of the year 1497, that he put it in print because, as he hoped, the triumph promised in it of the Christian Republic over unbelievers and Turks was very near. And again in the year 1518 came the exhortation to the Emperor Maximilian;¹—

Kaiser, schick dich, Gott will dir helf,
Dass du die armen Christenwelf
Widerumb bringest zu einem recht;
Das hat dir Gott den seinen knecht
Zu schanen manigvalt gesanzt, Methodius war er genant;²

and then comes the further statement, that it is prophesied of an Emperor Maximilian, that he will fill the Holy Land with the Christian faith. One more of the many hopes which still remain unfilled.

In a treatise, which the Dominicans composed in the year 1474, in order to calm the mind of Christendom, terrified as it was by the fall of Constantinople,³ Methodius is again the chief authority,

¹ In Lilliencron, iii., 215.
² [Which is thus rendered by Professor H. B. Smith:—

Give ear, O King, for God hath called That thou the suffering Christian world
May'st bring again unto its right,
How oft to arm thee to the fight,
Hath He His holy servant sent,
Methodius, to this intent.]

³ Tractatus quidam de Turcis, prout ad presens ecclesia sancta ab eis afflictur. Nuremberg, 1481.
the "Doctor Authenticus," as he is here called, of course not in the form in which Engelbert read him, but in the more comforting text. Several Fathers, we are here told, have subjected Methodius to a careful examination, the results of which are then given. Germany and France will indeed be devastated by internal wars, but yet will not fall under the Turkish yoke. Whether Rome also would be conquered by the Turks, was briefly asked of Christ by an enlightened monk, to whom divine revelations had been granted; but Christ had answered, that it was as yet not wholesome that he should be told this, nor yet who should be conqueror in the next Turkish war.

The first in the series of Prophets of a later age is S. Hildegard, of Bingen on the Rhine. This German Prophetess certainly stands quite alone in the whole of Christian history, a phenomenon without a parallel. No Prophet has ever acquired so high a reputation; no Saint has ever won such general acknowledgment, such unbounded reverence;—not even S. Bernard, who did homage to her as one to whom higher things had been vouchsafed; though she too was not spared attacks, suspicions, and even mockery and contempt. She herself and her revelations were examined before a great assembly of the Church, under the presidency of Pope Eugenius III., and approved as genuine and true. Three Popes, two Emperors, many Bishops and Abbots, sought her advice, and hoped through her to be admitted to a participation in the divine counsels; and it is remarkable how, in the letters addressed to her by the Popes Eugenius, Anastasius, and Adrian IV., a tone of sincere humility, and confession of their own shortcomings and dereliction of duty, prevails. And at that time Bernard also dared to write his book, De Consideratione, and to warn the Popes (though it must be owned in vain) of their fearful error in straying into the path of despotism and centralization, on which they had already entered.

1 "Qui pro fide mancipatus carcerebus angelo sibi revelante librum "conscriptit" is added. Accordingly every word must of course be considered as infallibly certain and still in course of fulfilment.

1 When, for instance, Eugenius III. writes to her, that he rejoices, that in these times God enlightens her with His Spirit, and has granted to her so much knowledge; “sed quid nos ad haec dicere valemus, qui clavim scientiae habentes, ita quod claudere et aperiere possimus et hoc prudenter facere per stultitiam negligimus.”

2 (The Pope’s whole time is taken up, says S. Bernard, with lawsuits. “Quaeo te, quales est istud, de manae usque ad vesperam ligitare, aut ligantem audire? Et utinam sufficeret diei malitia sua! non sunt liberae noctes. Vix relinquitur necessitati nature, quod corporalis pausationi sufficiat; et rursus ad jurgia surgitur. Dies diei eructat lites, et nox nocti indicat malitiam.” “Numquid ad eum de toto orbe confluebant ambitiosi, avari, simoniaci, sacrilegi, conspicui, incestuosi, et queque istiusmodi monstra hominum, ut ipsius apostolica auctoritate vel obtinerent honores ecclesiasticos, vel retinerent?” “Habent haec infima et terrena judices suos, reges et principes terrarum. Quid fines alienos invaditis? Quid facieis vestram in alienam messem extenditis? Non quia indigni vos, sed quia indignum vobis talibus insistere, quippe potioribus occupatis.” “Plena est ambitiosis Ecclesia; non est jam quod horreat in studiis et moli onibus ambitionis, non plus quam spelunca latrionis in spoliis viato-
Hildegard was to this extent a true German Prophetess, in that by her the degeneracy and iniquity of a Hierarchy, at once insatiably greedy of wealth and lavishly careless of human life, was depicted with that fulness of moral indignation against such abuse of holy things, which is innate in the German races much more than in the Latin; and these facts had not yet developed themselves to such an extent in her time, but from the thirteenth century onwards became notorious enough. The time would come, she declared, in which Princes and peoples would set at nought the Papacy, because they perceived in it no religion any more. Then would individual countries prefer the heads of their own Church to the Pope; while the latter would find himself confined, with authority very much diminished, to Rome and the few surrounding towns.¹ The splitting up of the German Empire was also foretold by Hildegard. Each people and each race would set up its own Princes, under the pretexet, "that the greatness of the Empire had "been to them more of a burden than an honour;" and this very division and weakening of the Empire

¹ Quia enim nec principes nec reliqui homines tam spiritalis quam secularis ordinis in Apostolico nomine ullam religionem tunc invicent dignitatem nominis illius tumc imminent, &c. Liber divinorum operum, in Baluze, Miscellanea, ed. Mansi, II, 447.
would then be followed by the downfall of the papal dignity.

It is undeniably due in a great measure to Hildegard, that the expectation of a heavy retribution on the clergy, and of a bloody persecution of the Priesthood, had, in the Middle Ages, so fast a hold on the spirit of the German nation. She herself foretold a great and thorough secularization of Church-property, and the reduction of the Clergy, corrupted as they were by wealth and cupidity, to a moderate and more equally divided income. In a poem of the fifteenth century, on the Council of Constance, it is said of her representations respecting simony and clerical luxury¹—

Wie hat den schädlich kläglich Lauf
Gesait von Bingen Hiltgart
In Ihrem Buch, die witz, die zart,
Wer ir Buch liest, dass man's wol brüst.²

However, the country in which the existence of Prophets, especially after the commencement of the thirteenth century and continuously to the close of the fourteenth, increased with the most luxurious growth, was Italy. In no other country was life at that time so rich and varied, in none was there such a struggle of rival forces and rival passions.

¹ Liliencron, Historische Volkslieder, i, 248.
² [Thus rendered by Professor H. B. Smith:—
How sadly their course hath marred
From Bingen saith Saint Hildogarde, Within her book of wit and taste,
Who reads, hath well the truth embraced]
It was there that Empire and Papacy, for now more than two centuries, had been fighting with one another like two giants; it was there that France and Germany, now in secret, now openly, contended for the supremacy. The irreconcilable strife between the two parties of the Guelfs and the Ghibellines went through the whole of upper and central Italy, and no one, high or low, could remain aloof from it. While the leaders gave themselves up to astrology (not unfrequently, as in the case of Frederick and Ezzelino, keeping court-astronomers), and undertook nothing of importance without having inquired as to the favourable constellation, the people comforted themselves with prophetic sayings. Guelfs as well as Ghibellines had prophecies of their own. Merlin and Sibyl were made to lend their now typical names to the ever fresh appearing products of the prophetic impulse, which had such power among the people. Michael Scott,\(^1\) the Emperor Frederick’s astrologer, Asdenta of Parma, but, above all, Joachim, stood in high repute. Sibylline prophecies were all the more firmly believed, in that people fancied that the Sibylline Books were still preserved in the Lateran Church at Rome.\(^2\) Scott and Asdenta are placed by Dante among the damned, as false Prophets; and he represents the latter, the shoemaker

---

\(^1\) [See the Lay of the Last Minstrel, Canto II., xiii.–xxii., and the notes quoted by Cary, Inferno, xx., 115, note 9.]

of Parma, repenting in hell that he had not stuck to his handicraft. But the contemporary Salimbene relates, that he found much in him that afterwards came to pass; and that Asdente also educated himself for a Prophet merely by diligent reading of what were then the classics among prophetical writings, viz. Methodius and Joachim, along with the sayings of Merlin, Scott, and the Sibyl.²

In Germany Hildegard remained for a long time without a successor. From the time of her death to near the end of the thirteenth century, or even into the fourteenth, no movements worth naming

---

¹ [*"Quell' altro che ne' fianchi è così poco,\nMichele Scotto fu, che veramente\nDelle magiche frode seppe il giuoco.\nVedi Guido Bonatti, vedi Asdente,\nChe avere intesto al cuio ed allo spago\nOra vorrebbe, ma tardi si pente.\nVedi le triste che lasciaron l'ago,\nLa spola e'l fus in, fecersi indovine;\nFecer malle con erbe e con imago."
* Inferno, xx. 115–123.

"The next, who is so slender in the flanks,\nWas Michael Scott, who of a verity\nOf magical illusions knew the game.\nBehold Guido Bonatti, behold Asdente,\nWho now unto his leather and his thread\nWould fain have stuck, but he too late repents.\nBehold the wretched ones, who left the needle,\nThe spool and rock, and made them fortune-tellers;\nThey wrought their magic spells with herb and image."

LONGFELLOW’S Translation.

² In the Convito, iv., 16, Dante says that "if those who were best known were accounted the most noble, Asdente, the shoemaker of Parma, would be more noble than any one in that city."—See Cary’s Notes.

of a prophetic impulse and spirit among the Germans have been anywhere preserved to us. It must be owned, that German literature is also very scanty from the middle to the end of the thirteenth century, whether in the Latin or the German language; and what we possess in the way of historical monuments and chronicles of this period is more scanty and fragmentary still. It was, however, one and the same momentous event, which was equally decisive, equally pregnant with consequences for both countries, Germany and Italy; although at first Italy was plunged to a much greater degree into irremediable confusion through the results of it. This event was the victory of the Papacy over the Empire; the fall and ruin of the House of Hohenstaufen; which was then accompanied by the weakening and splitting up of the Germano-Roman Empire through the deliberate policy of the Popes, in furtherance of the interests of the Curia, the French kings, and the Guelf party in Italy. It was evident how the Popes, especially the French Popes, an Urban IV., a Clement IV., or a Martin IV., did their utmost to prevent any union in Germany, any powerful royal House, any firm and well-ordered government, from being formed. Men soon perceived, that an Emperor, in the true sense of the word, was, in consequence of the conduct of the Popes at the elections, and of the Guelf interest backed up by French tyranny in Southern Italy, becoming more and more of an impossibility. And yet it was part of the religious consciousness of the world in that age, which regarded the Empire as an indispensable element, an instrument of the one Catholic Church, that the dissolution of the Empire would lead to a general falling away from the Papal Chair. For the idea of a threefold “discessio” was adopted more and more generally (in accordance with II. Thess. ii.)—ab imperio, a sede apostolicâ, a fide. So that it could not fail to appear to many, that the Popes—as if driven on by a fatality, by an irresistible mysterious influence—were labouring to undermine their own power. And then added to this came the conviction, that the downfall of the Empire would be the prelude to the dawn of that tyranny of Antichrist, with all its unspeakable calamities, horrors, and apostasies.

The judgments pronounced by contemporaries afford us the key to the genesis of prophecies and their influence.

In England, where more historical insight and a better mode of writing history was to be found at that time than in all the rest of Europe, the judgment pronounced was trenchant and pragmatical. The Roman Curia, in order to be sole ruler, has brought matters to this, that the Roman imperial power is hopelessly shattered.¹

In Italy, the Sibyl is Guelf and Franco-papal in tone; and proclaims, accordingly, that with the death of Frederick II. the Romano-German imperial power will itself sink into the grave also. The Florentine Guelf, BRUNETTO LATINI, in his work, written in French about 1266, says: "If Merlin and the Sibyl speak the truth, the imperial dignity must come to an end with Frederick. Nevertheless, I do not know whether one is to understand this merely of his family or of the Germans, or of all together." We learn, however, from his contemporary and fellow-countryman, SALIMBENE, that the Sibyl expressed herself very distinctly. "In him"—these were her words—"will the Empire have its end; for, although he shall have successors, yet they will be deprived of the title of Emperor and of the Roman supremacy (fastigium)." Salimbene himself had no doubt that it was determined, in the divine counsels, that from henceforth society should have no more Emperors.

The standpoint of the Germans is shown to us by two contemporaries, the one a man of worldwide experience and great observation, the nameless author of a small treatise of the year 1220, the other, JORDANUS OF OSNABRUCK, in his book on the

---

2 Chron., pp. 167, 373.
Roman Empire.¹ "In the space of five years," says the former, "the Roman Empire, which in "the year 1220 was still so powerful, has sunk so "low, that scarcely anyone thinks of it any more. "On the other hand, the Papacy has mounted so "high, that kings, peoples, the whole world, lie "prostrate at the foot of the Pope and do homage "to him as monarch of the world. The Papacy "can scarcely mount higher, without things de- "generating into a complete subjugation of the "laity. Hence the clergy in the service of the "Roman Church have, with the help of the French, "in a great measure destroyed the Roman Empire "(clerici et Gallici nunc parte magnâ romanum "destruxerunt imperium); and should they be "successful in fully accomplishing this work of "destruction, then will that flood of mischief and "ruin burst in, the harbinger of Antichrist, such "as has never been known in the world heretofore. "But in requital for the outrages which the clergy "have already committed against the Empire, a "sentence of retribution will forthwith be pro- "nounced upon a body so deeply infected with the "poison of simony."

Jordanus expresses himself with more circum- seption; but nevertheless he too maintains that to the Roman Empire the great honour has been granted of forming the wall of defence against Antichrist, who cannot come until the Empire be fallen down; and hence all those who help forward this downfall, are the precursors and pioneers of Antichrist. Such, therefore, above all are the arch-enemies of the imperial power, the Popes. Accordingly Jordanus goes on to say, that the Romans and their Popes had better look to themselves, lest perchance, through a righteous judgment of God, their dominion should be taken away from them for their wickedness. He gives the like warning to the German princes, who were so eagerly enriching themselves at the expense of the Empire. Cardinal Giacomo Colonna wrote a preface to this treatise of Jordanus, in the year 1281, addressed to Pope Martin IV., who was an unwearying foe of the German, and further, of the French power. In it he gives utterance to the anxious thought;—when, therefore, things have come to this point, that the Roman Church, which has already struck out the usual prayer for the Emperor from the liturgy of the mass, can say, we have no king or emperor but the Pope, then will a great and bloody persecution of the clergy break out.¹

In much later times the Belgian chronicler, Dynter, addressed a pathetic warning to the Electoral Princes of Germany, that they should earnestly consider the dangers and miseries which would come upon the world after the Roman Empire was done away.² This was written in the year 1445, just at the time when Germany, in the Hussite wars, had given to the world the spectacle of its lamentable weakness and of its imperial power reduced to a mere shadow.

¹ Waitz, p. 41.
² Dynter i Chronicom, ed. de Ram. Brussels, 1854, l., 166.

But in the thirteenth century, in spite of all the confusion in Germany and Italy, the hope of a happy reaction in affairs at no distant day was nevertheless still kept up by means of prophecies. Roger Bacon,—after Dante, the most richly gifted and versatile spirit of his age,—wrote in the year 1267, that for the last forty years it had been predicted, and many visions had been granted in confirmation, that a just, true, and holy Pope would arise, to reform and purify the Church, deeply entangled as it was in error. He will purify ecclesiastical legislation, will institute a Christian administration of justice; and through his excellence reunion with the Greek Church, the conversion of the Mongols, and the annihilation of the Saracens will follow.¹ All that, Bacon declares, might happen within the space of a year, or even in a still shorter period, if it pleased God and the Pope; and in all earnestness he calls upon Pope Clement IV. to put his hand to the work,—the very Pope, who, as Bacon must well have known, instead of being the institutor of a Christian administration of justice, rather busied himself exclusively with the erection of papal absolutism.

¹ Roger Bacon Opera quaedam hactenus inedita, ed. BREWER. London, 1869. p. 87; confer p. 418.
into a pure despotic supremacy, and with the secure establishment of the tribunal of the Inquisition. But Bacon is of opinion, all is in such an evil plight, that either Antichrist must come, or else a Pope who will purify the Church must arise, and he openly states his belief in the possibility of a great moral and intellectual reaction being accomplished, as it were, at one stroke. And here we cannot but feel astonishment, that even the greatest insight at that time, even minds so unique as Roger Bacon and his contemporary Dante, should have believed in the sudden and complete change of moral tone in whole nations and epochs, and should have possessed so little apprehension of the laws of historical development. This may be explained by the mania for astrology, which prevailed at that time and influenced even these men. The notion was, that the tone and moral bent of an epoch was contingent on a change in the ever-varying position of the stars;¹ that it might, therefore, suddenly spring from one extreme to another,—from virtue

¹ [Throughout the section on astrology in Bacon's Opus Majus, the heavenly bodies are supposed to act entirely through their physical properties—cold, heat, moisture, drought, and so forth. Thus he attributes the wars then raging in Europe to the influence of a comet. But the comet causes war, not as a mere arbitrary sign, nor as exerting a magic influence,—all this he rejects as an old woman's superstition,—but as inflaming the blood and passions of men by its intense heat. This of course is a very unscientific and extravagant notion respecting the influences of the heavenly bodies, and the powers of human observation to detect and estimate their effects; but still it differs immeasurably from the ordinary astrology, which made the course of human history dependent on the varying collocation of the stars.—MILMAN, Latin Christianity, Book xiv., chap. iii., note k.]
and piety to corruption and wickedness, and vice versa;—and that this change was accomplished with the fatelike certainty of an inevitable necessity; in which, however, the freedom of the will, and therefore also the power of standing firm and unshaken in the midst of the stream of ruin, was secured to individuals. This influence of the stars was then further turned to account for the prophetic gift. Those persons, it was said, who, owing to their natural temperament, are peculiarly open to receive astral impressions, are ready adapted to become Prophets. They are, as it were, predestined to this by nature, and thus comprehend with all the more certainty the twofold revelation of God, the immediate by means of inspiration, and the mediate by means of the constellations.¹

Bacon could undoubtedly cite thus much in defence of his position,—that the sudden outbreak of great religious movements was in his time no unheard-of thing. It certainly happened once, that, apparently without any previous agitation, and by an entirely spontaneous impulse in the bosom of the people, a wide-spread conversion took place, and a spirit of repentance and renewal of life revealed itself. Italy, torn to pieces by the fury of factions,² had its moments of exhaustion

¹ Compare what Benedict XIV. quotes on the subject from the writings of an Italian theologian, with the appeal to Albertus Magnus and Aristotle, l. c., p. 436.
² [The lives of such monsters as Eccelin da Romano and his brother Albertic; the ferocious cruelty and ferocious suicide of the one, the and weariness; and men wished to shake off the oppressive nightmare of a party spirit and political hate which poisoned all relations in life, and to be reconciled with one another. Thus in the year 1260 the first great pilgrimage of the Flagellants arose under the influence of prophecies. Thousands of penitents, men and women of every age, wan-tered from town to town, scourging themselves and imploring God’s mercy and peace among men.
It was as if great towns poured the whole stream of their population—sometimes 12,000 or 20,000 men—into a foreign town. The exiled could return; Ghibellines and Guelfs embraced and were reconciled; many crimes were atoned for. It was insatiable lust and hideous death of the other; the immoralities of the clergy, the horrors of the Inquisition—such were the things with which Religion was confronted when it awoke from its long trance.

No wonder it went mad.]

1 [1260 is the date of their first appearance in Italy. The Brotherhood seems to have arisen first in Hungary, under the name sometimes of Flagellants, sometimes of Brethren of the Cross. In 1249 they first entered Strasburg, a company of 200. Above 1000 joined, and they now became almost a nomad tribe, separating in two hordes, one to wander through North, the other through South Europe. All Germany, Hungary, Poland, Bohemia, Silesia, and Flanders, did homage to the mania, and they soon became as formidable to the civil as to the ecclesiastical power. In the early part of the fourteenth century there seems to have been an abatement of these pilgrimages. But in 1334 Venturinus, a Dominican friar of Bergamo, induced about 10,000 persons to undertake a new one; and the frightful ravages of the Black Death in 1348 gave great impetus to this form of fanaticism. But there seems to be good reason for believing that the leaders of these bands of enthusiasts were often the instruments of a secret society, and were acting in concert to promote other objects than those which appeared on the surface.—HECKER’s Epidemics of the Middle Ages.
chap. ii.]
a powerful religious effort of the nation towards self-help. But those in power remained unaffected by it. The Pope acted with indifference, or even with hostility towards the movement.¹ And the fire of enthusiasm, which, if well directed and nourished, might have led to the salvation of Italy, very soon died out.

In Bacon's statement we find for the first time the expression of an idea, which afterwards became naturalized in Italy, viz. that of a Papa Angelico, as he was called by a later age;—the expectation set forth in so many subsequent prophecies, that a Pope, who would establish peace and unity, who would purify the Church, and restore to it the freshness of youth, would one day attain to the See of Rome. He was the Italian counterpart to the longed and hoped for Emperor Frederick in Germany. From the time of the great division of the Empire, all the hopes, wishes, and needs of the German races concentrated themselves in the idea of a strong and very powerful Emperor, who would restore again the ruined Empire, humble the now haughty and despotic Papacy, and strip

¹ [Several Cardinals endeavoured to dissuade him, but Clement VI. issued a bull against the Flagellants, Oct. 20th, 1349. Philip VI., supported by the Sorbonne, forbid their entry into France. Manfred, King of Sicily, threatened them with death; and in other countries they were cruelly persecuted. And not altogether without reason. They set ecclesiastical discipline at defiance, and well-nigh destroyed the influence of the Clergy. And there can be little doubt that these promiscuous and enormous pilgrimages contributed greatly towards the spreading of the Black Death.—Ibid.]
the Clergy of their enormous and misapplied wealth.

For ages the belief continued to be cherished in Germany, that Frederick II. was not dead, and many a false Frederick was able to build on the people’s fancy, and set himself up as a pretender. When one of these false Fredericks was burnt in the year 1289 at Wetzlar, it was reported among the people, that his bones had not been found in the fire; through the Divine power Frederick was still alive, and was destined to drive out the parsons.¹ When this hope was at last extinguished, prophecy stepped in to take its place, and promised the appearance of a third Emperor Frederick. In various forms it went the course of a century, ran like a red thread through many other prophecies, and in the collections of such vaticinations was wont to take the first place. It was reputed to have proceeded from the most considerable of the Prophets—from Joachim himself. Thus much is certain, that it had a deep and lasting effect. The name of Frederick became in consequence full of significance, and whatever Prince or Monarch bore it excited hopes that he was destined to be the instrument of a great and happy revolution. At first it was a Frederick from the East who was expected; a belief to which the natural son of Frederick II., who was called Frederick of Antioch and died in the year 1258, appears to have given occasion. Later on he was called simply Frederick, or the third of this name, the Eagle, who would spread out his wings from sea to sea, or unto the ends of the earth. Through him, or at least in his time, Pope and Clergy were to be imprisoned, scattered abroad, plundered, or even slain. Even in the confessions, which Catharists of south France made before the Inquisition in the year 1321,¹ the expectation which they cherished is declared,—that the third Frederick would arise, enlarge the Catharist (Gnostic-dualistic) Church, protect them, and on the other hand oppress the Clergy and the Church.

¹ Hagen’s Oesterreich. Chronik, in Pessi Scriptores rerum Austr., 1., 1105.

In north Italy a Prophet of the third Frederick kindled a bloody religious war. DOLCINO, who had placed himself at the head of a Mendicant Order of Apostolic Brethren, founded after the pattern of the Minorites,² sent forth his prophetic letters³ one after another from the hiding-place in which he had buried himself, in the first years of the fourteenth century. Aroused by the writings of Joachim, and moving in the same circle of ideas with respect to the periods or eras in the history of the world, he declared, that it had been revealed to him, that Frederick of Arragon would be called to the imperial throne, and would forthwith set on foot a general massacre of the Clergy in a body, and of all religious societies. Thereupon a holy Pope would arise, in whose days the Apostolic Brethren would enjoy perfect freedom, and the whole earth would be converted to the new Everlasting Gospel of the most absolute poverty. Dolcino placed the occurrence of these events at so near a date, that he very soon experienced the refutation of his prophecy by facts. That, however, did not disconcert him. In his next prophetical manifesto he simply placed a longer limit of a year. Being persecuted, Dolcino and fourteen hundred of his followers took up arms, seized and fortified a mountain in the neighbourhood of Verceil, and thus originated a war conducted with all the barbarity of that time, in which he at last succumbed, and with those whom he had led away after him, met with a horrible death. His fol-

¹ Codex Vaticanus, 97. [Cf. Sharon Turner’s History of England. London, 1815. ii., pp. 377–393. Mosheim’s Ecclesiastical History, Part ii., Book iii., v. Cathari was the name by which they were best known in Germany; Paterini in Italy. Their Gnostic dualism was derived from the Paulicians of Armenia.]

² [By Gerard Sagarelli of Parma, then a stronghold of the Spiritualists. After enduring much persecution as a fanatic and heretic, he was burnt by the Inquisition, under Boniface VIII., in the year of jubilee. Dolcino of Novara was his successor.]

³ [Two of his three epistles are extant. See Milman’s Latin Christianity, Book xii., chap. vi.]

1 [I. That of the Patriarchs and Prophets. II. That of Christ and the Apostles. III. The iron or evil age, commencing with the death of S. Silvester. IV. The golden age, commencing with Gerard Sagarelli. The Angels of the Seven Churches were interpreted to signify S. Benedict, Pope Silvester, S. Francis, S. Dominic, Gerard of Parma, Dolcino of Novara, and the future holy Pope.—Ibid.]

2 [Hundreds were burned or drowned. Dolcino and his companion Longino were executed, with hideous cruelty. Their flesh was torn away with hot pincers, and their limbs were then wrenched off. The lowers were scattered far and wide. Continuing to hold fast to the belief in an Emperor who would execute Divine judgment on the Clergy, and in a holy Pope, they fell into the power of the Inquisition, and fifteen years after the death of the Prophet some twenty Dolcinists were burnt in the market-place of Padua.¹

beautiful Margarita of Trent had previously been burnt alive with slow fire before Dolcino’s eyes. These horrors took place in June, 1307. See the well-known message of Muhammad to Dolcino, Dante’s Inferno, xxviii. 55. It is difficult to make out how far Dante sympathised with Dolcino.

¹ Historia Dulcini, cum additamento, in Muratori, Scriptores rerum Ital. ix., 425. [Historical Memoir of Fra Dolcino and his Times, by Mariotti, from which some interesting extracts are given in the notes to Longfellow’s Dante.]
IN the teaching of Dolcino we have the fruit and offshoots of a prophetic system, which raised itself to the position of a spiritual power, and penetrated deep into ecclesiastical literature, in a way which no other system has done before or since; a system which for centuries filled men's minds with hopes and fears, and influenced their ideas respecting the Divine counsels, and respecting the things which were to be expected and accomplished.

The author of this system, Joachim, founder of the monastery of Flora in Calabria, was a profound theologian, trained by the most careful study of the Scriptures; although afterwards, in order to make his writings appear as evidence of wonderful enlightenment, it was maintained that he had been destitute of all training.¹ Joachim himself asseverated that he was no Prophet in the proper sense of the term, only the spirit of understanding had been given to him;—the gift, that is to say, of interpreting rightly the prophetic contents of the Old and New Testaments, and of construing the course of the world’s history and the changeful fortunes of the Church from the prophecies, analogies, and types in the Bible. He himself describes,¹ how one Easter night, in the course of meditation, the whole richness of meaning in the Apocalypse and the agreement of the Old Testament with the New was made perfectly clear to him by a Divine revelation. It had seemed to him as if a flood of dazzling bright light had all at once streamed in upon his soul. And hence he could say to the Abbot Adam of Persigny, in Rome, that he understood all mysteries of the Holy Scripture with the same clearness with which the biblical Prophets themselves had understood them.

HIS PUBLISHED WRITINGS.

He disclaims the title of Prophet.

Three Popes, Lucius III., Urban III. (1185), and Clement III. (1188), charged Joachim not to conceal the disclosures which God had vouchsafed to him, but to publish his writings, which he had submitted to the judgment of the Roman See;—the Concordia, the Psalter, and the Commentary on the Apocalypse.² King Richard of England and

¹ Comment. in Apocal., p. 39.
English and French Bishops of high standing asked him for advice. The news of the appearance of a Prophet like Joachim caused already during his lifetime—he died in the year 1202—great excitement, even in the distant north, and even where his writings were still unknown. His contemporaries mention his name in their Chronicles, frequently with the remark, that one must wait to see whether his prophetic utterances would be confirmed by the result,—all was as yet still uncertain. And yet in fact, up to about the year 1220, very little of the prophetic contents of his writings was known. This, in the main, was all that was understood (and with astonishment) by people, that he had said to the King of England and his Bishops, that ere long an Antichrist would appear on the Papal Chair, he whom the Apostle Paul designates as the Man of Sin and of presumptuous wickedness; that he was already born.\footnote{Benedicti Abbatis Petropolitani, p. 153. [In Rome, and that he was then fifteen years old. King Richard replies that if Antichrist has been born in Rome destined to occupy the Apostolic See, then no doubt the reigning Pontiff, Clement III., is Antichrist. "Hac autem diebat quia papam illum odio habebat."—Roger de Hoveden, ap. Savile, reg. Angl. Script., p. 388.]} Seeing that Joachim’s views were not yet known as a connected whole, this aroused general excitement. People did not know that Joachim found more than one Antichrist in the history of the Church and in the prophetic intimations in the Bible, and that with his conviction of the deep corruption of the Church and of the pestilential influence of the Roman Curia was very closely connected the thought, that the whole mass of corruption in Rome must ere long manifest itself in a concentrated form, in a single personality, viz. a Pope.

1 BENEDICTI ABBATIS PETROBURGENS. Gesta Regis Henrici. London, 1867. ii., 151-155. [Joachim explains the seven heads of the dragon in Revelation to be Herod, Nero, Constantius, Maumet, Melsemutus (Abdalmumen?), Saladin, and Antichrist. Hoveden's variations at this point of the narrative are very remarkable, and help to illustrate the subject of Dr. Döllinger's Essay. Professor Stubbs, who quotes Hoveden at some length, comments on his variations as follows. "It would appear from this that the text was originally written before the death of Saladin, who was not killed, but died a natural death; and before the failure of Richard's crusade, the success of which is here predicted. Hoveden, on the other hand, writing after the event, removes all that is definite in the prophecy relating to Richard, and omits all reference to the death of Saladin. It is possible, however, that Hoveden's version was written before 1194, to which year the recovery of Palestine is fixed; or if written after the death of Saladin in 1193, is intended to suggest a non-natural interpretation of the prophecy of his loss of Palestine."]

Nevertheless Honorius III. declared after the death of the Abbot, that whereas Joachim had under his own hand submitted all his writings to the judgment of the Apostolic See, and had confessed his adhesion to the Creed of the Roman Church, declaration was to be made throughout the whole of Calabria, that the Pope considered him to be a true Catholic.\footnote{Lamberti (Benedict X IX.), De servorum Dei beatificatione, ii., 248, gives the text of the decree. [Dante places Joachim in the Heaven of the Sun with Nathan the Prophet, John Chrysostom, Anselm, &c.}

\footnote{"Rabano dè qui, e lucemi da lato
Il Calaviense abate Gioacchino, Di spirito profetico dotato."—Paradiso, xii., 139–41.]}

but does not alienate Honorius III. from him;
This decree of the Pope was directed, in the first place, against the Cistercians, who spared no pains to bring about the condemnation of a man whom they hated, who had withdrawn with his congregation from their Order, or, at any rate, the condemnation of his writings. And they made the most of the condemnation pronounced by Innocent III. on an expression respecting the Trinity, in which Joachim had found fault with Peter Lombard.¹

Joachim left behind him the reputation of having been as saintly a man as he was enlightened a Prophet. Miracles in abundance were related of him. In the Churches of Calabria a cultus was paid to him as to other Saints, and, moreover, the Bollandists have included him in their great work on the lives of the Saints. Many actually cherished the notion, that in him a true Prophet had been vouchsafed to the Christian world for the first time since the Apostles, and that the right key to the understanding of the history of the world and of the Church had been afforded for the first time by his writings.

From the middle of the thirteenth century onwards appeared other writings, hitherto unknown, under the name of Joachim,—his Commentaries on Isaiah and Jeremiah. Supposing that they were genuine, the exact fulfilment of so many historic predictions in the time which falls between 1202 and 1240 would be the most wonderful phenomenon in the history of prophecy. They were, however, composed by Italian Minorite monks, though entirely in the spirit and manner of Joachim. Through these new writings, especially through the Commentary on Jeremiah, which was everywhere received with full confidence as a genuine production of the Calabrian Abbot, the Joachimite doctrine, for the first time, forced its way into wider circles, and formed for itself a peculiar school of Joachimites. It was said that an aged Abbot of the Order of Flora had entrusted the writings of Joachim to the Minorite monastery in Pisa, for fear lest the Emperor Frederick should destroy his convent.\(^1\) Hence it came to pass that it was precisely the Minorites who were the energetic spreaders of these writings. A contemporary relates that it was about the year 1250 that Joachim’s prophecies came forth to the world, when the Cardinal de Porto sent them to Germany.\(^2\) Simultaneously with this the Minorite, Adam Marsh, sent passages from Joachim to Bishop Grostète of Lincoln, which then, for the first time, were brought from the continent to England, “in order that he might know whether the sentence of punishment pronounced upon Prelates and Clergy, Princes and people, would soon take effect.”\(^3\)

1 Salimbene, p. 101.
3 Adam de Marisco, Epistolæ, p. 147, in the Monumenta Franciscana, ed. Brewer.
In Italy Joachimites were to be found among the Guelfs no less than among the Ghibellines. Salimbene mentions numbers of them. Notaries, physicians, judges, and other men of letters assembled regularly in the dwelling of one of the leading Minorites, Hugo de Barcola, to hear his lectures on Joachimism. A professor of theology, Rudolf of Saxony, gave up scholastic studies, in order to devote himself entirely to this prophetic Theology. But now the whole edifice of Joachimism was violently shaken by events which altogether failed to correspond with the prophetic calculations. In the year 1250 came the death of the Emperor Frederick II., to whose government so important a position was assigned in this system, and therewith was accomplished the complete triumph of the papal over the imperial power;—in entire contradiction to the prophecy of Joachim, which had promised a much longer life—seventy or seventy-two years—to the Emperor; and, at the same time, had predicted for the Church,—that meant, according to the current phraseology of the Italian Guelfs, the Papacy—a Babylonian Captivity of seventy years, that is, subjection under the imperial power for a period of that duration. Ten years later people were once more undeceived in a remarkable way. According to the Joachimite system the second period in the world's history, the epoch of the Son, was to last 1260 years; and therefore, in the year 1260, the new and third epoch, that of the Holy Ghost, was to commence, and with it a great metamorphosis and glorification of the Church. The Joachimites, who for the most part belonged to the Minorite Order—at that time most popular and influential—had by their preaching excited great expectations among the lower orders in Italy, and had awakened a great religious enthusiasm, which found a vent in the pilgrimages of the Flagellants in this year.¹ But there it stopped. In other particulars, all went on, both in world and Church, in the usual way. The Curia and the Hierarchy either remained indifferent to the movement which had seized upon the people, or held themselves in hostile opposition to it. The Minorites could not long hide from themselves the fact, that in the dominant ecclesiastical circles there was not the slightest motion in the direction of reform; nay rather, that those very evils, which seemed to them to be so intolerable, and the urgent causes of heavy and near-approaching punishment, were still in the full course of further development. "At that time," says Salimbene, "after the experiences of the years "1250 and 1260, I entirely abandoned the Joachimite doctrine; and I am determined not to believe "any more what I do not see."² His determination certainly did not remain steadfast; for in his latter days, when he wrote his Chronicle (about 1284), he was certainly once more a believing Joachimite. Hugo had said to him, that it was only the carnally minded who rejected Joachim's prophecies, because he announced the coming of unpleasant things, many and grievous sufferings and trials.

¹ [See p. 100.]
² Dimisi totaliter istam doctrinam, et dispono non credere, nisi quae videro.—Salimbene, p. 131.

But Joachim himself declared his computations of time to be uncertain; it was not his intention to give a definite year for the coming of the event. The Joachimites in general knew how to help themselves. The one party said, that the third period of the world's history, that of the Holy Ghost, had undoubtedly commenced with the year 1260, and the Flagellant movement was the sign of its arrival. The characteristic mark of this epoch, the power and activity of the religious Orders was also an actual fact. Others, as Ubertino of Casale, would have it, that Joachim was right in assigning the number of 1260 years to the second era; only they must be reckoned from the resurrection, not from the birth of Christ. So that the age of the Holy Ghost would not commence until the year 1293. ¹ In fact the honour and prophetic reputation of Joachim was dear to the heart of every true Minorite. For the Seer was believed to have predicted not merely the appearance and high ecclesiastical significance and dignity of the order, but also to have announced this,

¹ The formula employed again and again in Salimbene is "in tertio statu operabitur Spiritus Sanctus in religiosis."—Salimbene, pp. 123, 240.
DEVELOP HIS PREDICTIONS.

—that while the Dominican Order would be visited with the threatened punishment along with the rest of the Clergy, yet the Minorite Order would continue in prosperity to the end of the world. JOHN OF PARMA himself, the universally revered General of the Order, was obliged, after his retirement as a Joachimite, to submit to a rigorous examination.
And his successor and judge, BONAVENTURA, threatened to have him condemned as a heretic, so offensive did his views respecting the existing and future circumstances of the Church appear to be;
and nothing but the protection of the Pope\(^1\) saved him. This was all the more surprising, in that Bonaventura—as one sees from his Commentary on the Apocalypse—held views respecting the corruptions in the Church and the main cause of them, viz. the simoniacal Roman Curia, very similar to those of his predecessor in office.

A survey of the Joachimite system shows that it certainly contained germs of a serious nature, if one considers them in comparison with the then prevailing form of doctrine and ecclesiastical discipline.

The history of the human race, according to the

\(^1\) AFFO, Vito del beato Giovanni di Parma. Parma, 1777, p. 125.
Affo will not admit the presence of Bonaventura at this examination without proof of the fact; because he might have been out of Italy at the time. Moreover John of Parma was beatified by Pius VI., and a feast in his honour was introduced into the Order.
teaching of Joachim and his school, runs its course in three great eras:—that of the Father, the pre-Christian, or, taking as types the three chief Apostles, the Petrine age;—then that of the Son, or the Pauline age (from Christ to 1260);—and lastly that of the Holy Ghost, or the Johannine epoch. Nevertheless the two last periods will not be sharply or palpably separated from one another. But unobservably, in small, hidden, silent beginnings will the one gradually pass into the other; so that time between 1200 and 1260 forms at once the end of the second and the beginning of the third period. The Church (chiefly in consequence of the corrupt conduct of the Popes) is altogether carnal, turned into a brothel and a den of thieves, although God has still left behind in her a seed of blessing and of grace. The Clergy are despised on account of their vices, the Prelati are adulterers.

1 [It will be well to insert here a remark and quotation from the Preface to Mr. MacCarn’s translation of Kirche und Kirchen. “A literal translation of the word Prätaten into English as Prelates might lead to a gross misapprehension. In England, Ireland, and Scotland, the universal signification given to the word prelate, corresponds precisely with Johnson’s definition of it—an ecclesiastic of the highest order and dignity. Our Prelates are either archbishops or bishops; but it will be seen by the annexed account given of the Roman Prelates, that they are far different, in every respect, from members of the episcopal order.”

“The Prelatura” (observes Mr. Lyons, in his letter to the Marquis of Normandy, No. xxxi.) “is essentially an Ecclesiastical Body: its members, whether they actually take orders or not, are looked upon as belonging to the clergy. They wear the religious habit; they are expected to act, think, and speak as Churchmen. They form a body apart from the rest of the community. They have ecclesiastical and hirelings, the Cardinals and Papal Legates are avaricious plunderers sucking the blood of the Churches. Thus is the Christian community led astray and ruined. Whosoever goes to Rome to transact anything there, forthwith falls among thieves,—the Cardinals, notaries, and so forth. For Rome, the city of all Christian impurity, is the centre whence all abomination radiates in Christendom; with her then must the judgment of God also begin. The chief instruments of God’s vengeance are, besides unbelievers, the Saracens, the Germans, those Chaldeans of later times, and the Roman Empire with the Emperor. France, the Egypt of later times, the reed, on which the Papacy leans and it pierces its hand, is conquered by the Germans and its power broken, although the neighbouring lands round about will submit to its yoke. The German Imperium will be a rod of correction to the grievously sinning Italians also. Impending retribution.
ATTACK ECCLESIASTICAL ABUSES.

In the embittered contest between Empire and Papacy both these two strong powers will fall to pieces. The Pope will attempt to destroy the bulwark of the Empire by inviting barbarous nations to attack it, and by arbitrary interference with the tenure of the highest dignities. The Emperor, Ulrichs. It is true they have not all of them irrevocably taken a vow of celibacy; nay, I believe there are even some rare instances of prelates actually married. But if a prelate marry, his career is almost inevitably closed—his hopes of high office and of the cardinalate are at an end.”—The Church and the Churches. London, 1862, p. x.]
however, will deprive the Pope of all temporal sovereignty and of all territory. But then comes the time of the conversion and glorification of the true Church. Men recognize the fact now, that a perverse striving after a sovereignty, which does not become the Church, can only lead it into a perpetually increasing servitude. After the Empire shall have done its work as an instrument of retribution, the sentence of vengeance will be executed upon it by means of the Saracens (the Beast from out of the sea) and of ten kings from the East. But the Saracens will then be annihilated by the Tatars coming down from the North. The instrument, of which God will make use in purifying the corrupt Church and in instituting the Great Sabbath or age of the Holy Spirit, will be an Order of contemplative hermits, who, matured and enlightened by many years of study perfected in lonely retirement and by prayerful meditation, will proclaim the true Gospel to mankind. To this Order will also of course belong that preacher, who, according to Joachim's statement, will be sent from God (either alone or in company with others) to teach men the love of heavenly things and the

1 In most passages of the authentic writings of Joachim mention is made of only one Order, a society of hermits clad in black. In some passages, however, he speaks of two Orders, of which one will furnish martyrs for the Truth, the other will devote itself to combating heretics. In the Commentaries on Jeremiah and Isaiah it is the two new Mendicant Orders, the Minorites and the Dominicans, which are plainly indicated in the prophecy.—Comm. in Apocal., p. 142.
contempt of things temporal. By means of these men the chairs of those carnally-minded teachers will be overthrown, viz. the Italian Legists and Decretists; those sycophants, who (especially they of Bologna, the Valley of Tophet) do homage to the avarice and tyranny of ecclesiastical Princes by their doctrines. At last, when the great Sabbath of rest for the nations of Christendom under the guidance of true Pastors begins, and the contemplative Church celebrates her triumph, then also will take place the conversion of the Jews and infidels, even of the Tatars. With regard to the appearance of Antichrist in the interim, there are contradictory statements in the writings of Joachim. They admit, however, of reconciliation; for Joachim supposed that there will be several Antichrists, sometimes succeeding one another, sometimes contemporaneous with another, and that the nearer the history of the world approaches its end, the more numerous will they become.

Such in its main features is the prophetic picture of the world’s history, which, sketched out by Joachim, and continued in his imaginative spirit (the Commentary on Isaiah can scarcely have been written before the year 1266, or thereabouts), had for centuries a direct or indirect influence on men’s expectations and ideas with regard to the future, especially in Italy. The view of the German nation and Empire, which is here set forth, is altogether that of the Guelf party, which saw in the Germans nothing more than an army of robbers, tyrannical oppressors of subjugated nations, and which declined to recognize the higher function of the imperial power, as it was conceived at that time by Dante. “The Empire of the Germans,” to quote the Commentary on Jeremiah, “has always been “severe and cruel to us. Therefore must the Lord “ destroy it with the sword of His wrath, so that all “ kings shall tremble at the sound of its overthrow.”

1 Comm. in Apocal., p. 137.

In these and similar utterances one recognizes the spirit of the Neapolitan Minorites. Of the fundamental ideas and chief circumstances, which the authors of these writings professed to behold in their prophetic mirror, only a very small number were realized in fact. Of the two powers, which were mutually to shatter one another to pieces, the Papacy and the Empire, the former, viz. the Roman Curia, had certainly just at that time won a complete victory over the German Empire, which at last was stretched defenceless at its feet; but the Papal See experienced no diminution, either of its possessions or of its dignity, at the hands of the Germans and their Emperor—at any rate not in the succeeding centuries, and never at the hands of an Emperor. But when in the year 1303 the day of Anagni came, and shortly after it the pontificate of Clement the Fifth, the disciples of Joachim might reasonably find in this the fulfilment of their master's prophecy, that France was the reed that should pierce the hand of the Pope who should lean upon it.¹

But between the genuine writings of Joachim and the Commentaries on Isaiah and Jeremiah there exists, it must be owned, a considerable difference, both in the general tone and in the judgment pronounced, which, however, was not observed by contemporaries. Above all with reference to the Papacy. Between the two sets of writings there is an interval of half a century, during which the Popes had with giant strides drawn nearer their goal, Dominion over the whole world; and the corruption, which spread from the Curia into all ranks of society and all measures of policy in the Church, had increased in proportion. Joachim had, so to speak, written under the eyes of the Popes, and for their good. The Minorites, who composed the Commentaries on Isaiah and Jeremiah, wrote under the cover and disguise of his name; and their standpoint, as Spiritualists and professors of the new doctrine of poverty, of itself inclined them to uncompromisingly severe condemnation of the Popes and of their avaricious and grossly luxurious court. Whereas Joachim, although he too in various passages in his writings recognized in the Roman Curia the fountain of mischief, yet always spoke of the Papal See in terms of the deepest respect.

¹ [Clement V. was governed all his life by the will and pleasure of Philip the Fair, King of France. William de Nogaret, the implacable foe of Boniface VIII., though excommunicated, resolutely prosecuted his own cause and that of King Philip against Boniface, in the papal court; a transaction which, I believe, is without a parallel. Philip wished to have the body of Boniface disinterred, and publicly burnt. With great difficulty Clement averted this infamy by his entreaties and advice; but in everything else he had to obey the king. Accordingly, he abrogated the laws enacted by Boniface; granted the king five years' tithes; absolved Nogaret from all crime, after imposing on him a slight penance, which he never performed; restored the inhabitants of Anagni to their former reputable and good standing; and held a General Council at Vienne, A.D. 1311, that Philip's pleasure might be gratified in the suppression of the Templars. In this Council, likewise, various things were decided according to the pleasure of the king, whom Clement dared not offend, being terrified by the melancholy fate of Boniface. — Mosheim's Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, Book III., ii., 2, § 7.]
The Joachimite doctrines assailed most strenuously in France; condemned by a Synod.

It was not by the Popes, nor in Italy, as one might have expected, but in France, that the prophetic system of Joachim was assailed by the native theologians and Bishops, and stigmatized as a perilously false doctrine by no account to be tolerated in the Church. In Provence the Joachimite doctrine had already produced a literature of its own, when in the year 1260 a Synod at Arles thought it its duty solemnly to condemn the theory of the three epochs, and of a second outpouring of the Holy Spirit, as propounded by Joachim. This condemnation, said the Bishops, would have been pronounced much sooner, had not the writings of Joachim, especially his chief work, the Concordia, been concealed till quite lately in certain monasteries, and hence had escaped notice. Otherwise, said they, the Papal See would undoubtedly along with the writings of Gerardino have censured Joachim also, who was the source whence they had flowed.

---

1 Harduin, Coll. Concil., VII., 512. [Quae omnia debet detestari, abominari, et abjicere, quilibet Christianus. . . . ne subditi nostri de cetero talibus utantur, aut ea ultra recipiant, sub anathematis internatione prohibemus.]

Somewhat later the Parisian theologian, William of Saint Amour,\(^1\) combated Joachimism, without, however, being acquainted with the later Joachimitic writings, the Commentaries on Jeremiah and Isaiah. William found that all the signs of the near approach of Antichrist were already present, the Roman Empire had come to an end with Frederick II., and the gift of miracles was taken away from the Church. Accordingly it was by no means Joachim’s epoch of the Holy Spirit, but exactly the opposite that was to be expected.\(^2\) He refuses to recognize any consolation in the future for mankind and the Church; and it is a remarkable sign of the times, that the Rector of the first High School in the world declares that the prophetic utterances of Joachim are to be rejected precisely because in them a long period of peace and prosperity, a happy old age lasting for many centuries longer, is promised to the Church and the Christian world. The dark picture which he drew of the lamentable circumstances of the deeply distracted Church, did not

---

William of S. Amour assails Joachim for promising an age of prosperity to the Church.

---

\(^1\) [So called from Saint-Amour, the place of his birth and of his exile. Being in Franche Comté it was not yet part of the kingdom of France.]

\(^2\) The treatise is not the work of Oresme, Bishop of Lisieux, under whose name Martene, Ampliss. Coll., ix., 1273, seq. has printed it, but (as the author of the Histoire littéraire de France, xxii., 470, has already seen) of William of Saint-Amour.
differ very much from the representations of the Joachimites (always excepting the mission of the new Mendicant Orders, which he accounted as utterly mischievous); but the two parties drew opposite conclusions from similar facts. The Joachimites maintained—if we did not hold out to ourselves the promise of a brilliant future with a purified and well-ordered Church, we should be driven into utter perplexity respecting the Church and doubt respecting her divine origin and mission. William of Saint-Amour on the other hand contended—the days of a Church well-pleasing to God and not fallen away from her original constitution and the purpose for which she was founded lie far behind us; the Church has no promise of a better future; she can do nothing but wait for the appearance of her great adversary.

During the same years in which the two fresh utterances of advanced Joachimism, the commentaries on the two Prophets, appeared, the Minorite, GERARDINO OF BORGO-SAN-DONNINO, collected together three genuine writings of the Abbot of Flora into one whole, under the title of the Everlasting Gospel, and prefaced it with an Introduction, which, although Joachimite in thought, nevertheless sounded to most of the party like a wanton distortion of the true doctrine. Indulgent as the Papal See had on the whole shown itself towards Joachimism, a condemnation was in this case inevitable; and it accordingly was pronounced by a commission of Cardinals at Anagni in the year 1255, the Bishop of Akkon, who had come from France on purpose, acting as prosecutor.¹ In his Introductorius Gerardino had announced the commencement of the third period of the world’s history, the era of the Holy Spirit, for the year 1260, that is, only six years from the current time. Thereupon would the New Testament, the epoch and economy of the Son, be closed and abrogated, or “made void,” just as the first epoch, that of the Old Testament, had been abrogated by the New; for, he added immediately, by the Gospel of Christ is no one brought on to perfection. Under the conduct of the Minorite Order, developed to the fulness of maturity, all metaphors and riddles will vanish in the sunlight of the new Church of the Holy Spirit. And just as at the beginning of the New Covenant three personages shone out, Zacharias, John the Baptist, and the man Jesus, so also in the third, the epoch of the Spirit, three will be the pillars of the edifice, Joachim, Dominic, and Francis.²

¹ [William of Saint-Amour seized upon the book as a weapon with which to drive out both the Mendicant Orders from the University of Paris. Alexander IV. commanded its immediate destruction. To possess it entailed excommunication. No one dared avow himself as its author. Dominican and Franciscans mutually accused one another of having produced it. The tone is Franciscan.—Milman, Latin Christianity, Bk. xii., chap. vi.]

² See sentences from the Introductorius in Duplessis d’Argenté, Collectio judiciorum, i., 163. [Mosheim is very severe on the “foolish’ Everlasting Gospel, and still more so on the “detestable,” and “infamous” Introductorius. “This book is not a monument of the pride
Gerardino's fate was terrible. He refused to recant, and was condemned to imprisonment for life; and in prison, after eighteen years, he died. No one troubled himself further with his Introductorius, which after six years was refuted simply by facts. But the Joachimite doctrine and system of prophecy continued to maintain itself in the Minorite Order, and two considerable men, Peter John Oliva and Ubertino di Casale, lent it new impulse. They were joined by an influential party of Spiritualists, as in Joachimite language those men were called, who wished to see utter poverty, in the sense and spirit of their founder, maintained in the Order. Joachim's prophetic authority remained undiminished; only men found that his chronological statements rested on pure conjecture, and therefore were not to be adopted rigidly, always provided that the number 1260 be of necessity maintained as a chronological indication of the great crisis in the world's history, in accordance with the theory that the apocalyptic days were to be understood as years.

The whole duration of the world and of the Church was now mapped out into seven periods, in "and insolence of all the Mendicant Orders, but of the impious folly of "a part, and a very small part, of the Franciscan family;" i. e. the Spirituals, and perhaps not all of them. Book III, ii. 2, § 34."

1 [These seven ages of the Church are thus given by Milman:—
I. That of her foundation under the Apostles.  II. The age of the martyrs.  III. The age of the exposition of the faith, and the confutation of insurgent heresies.  IV. That of the Anchorites, who fled into the desert to subdue the flesh, enlightening the Church like the each of which a great and severe contest had a place. The fifth epoch, extending into the thirteenth century, is the time of complete ruin in the Church, in which the See of Rome, along with the most extensive development of power, contributed also in the highest degree to the universal corruption. Simultaneously with the sixth epoch the third great era, the age of the Holy Ghost, had begun; in reality it had done so with the appearance of S. Francis, some hundred years or so previous to this, only then the world was still flooded with the dregs of the fifth epoch. But the carnal Church with its false Popes is growing ripe for judgment, and the time in which the Spiritualists will conquer, and the Church of the Spirit show itself openly and hold sway, freed from the poison of temporal possessions, is no longer far off. Then will the Church have full leisure and power, and will still last long enough to accomplish the conversion as well of the Jews as of the whole heathen world. Oliva's Commentary on the Apocalypse was the favourite book of the Spiritualists, and of their party,¹ now very numerous, especially in Italy and the south of France, which continued to sustain itself on these prophecies, from year to year expecting the victory and manifest appearance of the Church of the Holy Ghost. As they refused to acknowledge the Popes who succeeded John XXII., they were subjected by the Popes to a terrible persecution, in which 114 Spiritualists ascended the scaffold, and many more died in close imprisonment. Oliva's bones were dug up and burnt, and his writings forbidden, until Sixtus IV., himself a Minorite, caused them to be examined afresh and declared orthodox, for all that had been considered as offensive could be explained in a right sense.²

It could not be denied that these victims of papal inquisitorial tribunals led a pure, self-denying life, in accordance with the rule of their founder. All the deeper in consequence was the abhorrence felt towards Rome and the Curia, for causing the execution of just those men, who, in the judgment of the people, were the flower of the Catholic Church. Before this the Joachimite Commentary

¹ Oliva was called the "Doctor Columbinus," because the party had chosen the dove as their symbol. The Commentary is still unprinted; but the Articles from it laid before a papal Commission under John XXII. are sufficient to give one a knowledge of its representations. Ubertino's chief work is his Arbor vitae crucifexae (Venice, 1485), written in the year 1305, in which he goes so far as to declare Boniface VIII. and Clement V. to be false Popes.

on Jeremiah had said, "As it (the Curia) hath violently slain, so shall it also be violently slain," and these prophetic sayings acquired, in the course of the age immediately following, more and more of a strong anti-papal colouring. Hence arose the fearful thought, that the Papal Chair had really been for some time the seat of Antichrist himself, or would hereafter become so.

For deep was the impression, which the whole bearing of Boniface VIII. made upon his contemporaries;—this audacious proclamation of the dogma respecting the universal dominion of the Pope, this tyranny wholly founded on fear and terror, this undisguised immorality. The astonishment and horror of religiously-minded men at the appearance of the "new Lucifer" on the Papal Chair, is expressed in glowing words of satire by the celebrated poet of the Minorite Order, Jacopone da Todi. The Joachimite idea, that the Chair of S. Peter would for a long time become the spoil of an adversary of Christ, who would bear in himself all the marks of the predicted Antichrist, won in the eyes of many a look of increased probability.

Men were all the more convinced that they had seen a "Man of Sin and Son of Perdition," actually sitting in the Temple of God and bedecked with the papal tiara, when in the year 1310 Pope Clement V.

---

1 The passage is found in the oldest editions of his poems; in the later ones it has slipped out. Toselli, however, has printed it in his Storia di Bonifacio VIII. (Monte Cassino, 1848), i., 286.
subjected his predecessor Boniface, who had then been in his grave seven years, to a public prosecution, and opened a lengthy process of inquiry, which lasted more than a year, against him. A number of men of the highest position, Prelati, Abbots, Counts, and other noblemen came forward as eye- or ear-witnesses to accuse the late Pope of infidelity, of heresy, of the most utter contempt for all morality,—men of whom Clement himself testified afterwards, when he quashed the proceedings, that they were in the highest degree worthy of credence, and had only been induced to make these statements through zeal for the Catholic faith.

And here too the greatest Italian of his time, Dante, who, although in a way peculiar to himself, was also a Joachimite, had his word to say:

"He who usurps upon the earth my place,
My place, my place, which vacant has become Before the presence of the Son of God,—"

Only the poet did not, like the Spiritualists or Fraticelli, from the fact of the Papal Chair being _in God's sight_ vacant, draw the conclusion, that all the acts which such a usurper did upon earth were

---

1 ['Quegli che usurpa in terra il loco mio, Il loco mio, il loco mio, che vaca
Nella presenza del Figliuol di Dio, Fatto ha del cimiterio mio (Rome, S. Peter's burial-place) cloaca
Del sangue e della puzza, onde il perverso, Che cadde di quasei, laggù si placa."

In the _Inferno_, xxvii. 85, Dante calls Boniface VIII. "the Prince of "the new Pharisees"—il Principe de' nuovi Farisei; and in xix. 53 assigns him a place in hell before his death.]
null and void. On the contrary, Boniface VIII. was to him the rightful Vicar of Christ upon earth, though a usurper in heaven, as Dante's celebrated condemnation of the attempt at Anagni proves.¹

The expectations of the Joachimite Spiritualists at the commencement of the fourteenth century embraced the following points; — a universal, severe, and bloody retribution on the now utterly

¹ "Perché men paga il mal futuro e il fatto, Veggio in Alagna entrar lo fiordaliso,
E nel Vicario suo Christo esser cotto.
Veggiolo un‘ altra volta esser deriso:
Veggio rinnovar l‘aceto e il fele,
E tra nuovi ladroni essere anciso.
Veggio il nuovo Pilato si crudele,
Che ciò nol sazia, ma senza decreto
Porta nel tempio le cupide vele."

Purgatorio, xx. 85–93.

"That less may seem the future ill and past,
I see the flower-de-luce (banner of Philip the Fair) Alagna enter,
And Christ in His own Vicar captive made.
I see Him yet another time derided;
I see renewed the vinegar and gall,
And between living thieves I see Him slain.
I see the modern Pilate so relentless,
This does not sate him, but without decreal.
He to the temple bears his sordid sails!"

Longfellow's translation.

And here I will not forego the pleasure of quoting a few lines, very much to the point, from Dean Church's exquisite essay on Dante, written more than twenty years ago, and now not so well known as it deserves to be. Can no friend persuade him to give it to the world again, as he has recently given to us again his essays on S. Anselm?
"Dante," writes Mr. Church, "did the work in his day of a great "preacher. Yet he has been both claimed and condemned as a dis-
"turber of the Church's faith.

"He certainly did not spare the Church's rulers. He thought that "they were betraying the most sacred of all trusts; and if history is at carnal Church, in which the few righteous were to be found only like rare grains of gold in a huge sand-heap;—a simoniacal Pope (the so-called mystic Antichrist), who will cause divine attributes to be claimed for him, divine honours to be paid to him, the incarnate type and exemplar of ecclesiastical abomination;—an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the Spiritualists, in order to arm them for the fight with the last and great Antichrist;—these were the circumstances which innumerable adherents of the strict Minorite party in Italy and

"all to be relied on, he had some grounds for thinking so. But it is confusing the feelings of the Middle Ages with our own to convert every fierce attack on the Popes into an anticipation of Luther. Strong language of this sort was far too commonplace to be so significant. No age is blind to practical abuses, or silent on them; and when the Middle Ages complained, they did so with a full-voiced and clamorous rhetoric, which greedily seized on every topic of vilification within its reach. It was far less singular, and far less bold, to criticise ecclesiastical authorities, than is often supposed; but it by no means implied unsettled faith or a revolutionary design. In Dante's case, if words have any meaning—not words of deliberate qualification, but his unpremeditated and incidental expressions—his faith in the Divine mission and spiritual powers of the Popes was as strong as his abhorrence of their degeneracy, and desire to see it corrected by a power which they would respect—that of the temporal sword. It would be to mistake altogether his character to imagine of him, either as a fault or as an excellence, that he was a doubter. It might as well be supposed of Aquinas."—Essays and Reviews, p. 78. London, 1854.

On Boniface in particular he elsewhere remarks, "If strength and energy had been enough to make the Church's influence felt on government, there was a Pope who could have done it—a man who was undoubtedly the most wondered at and admired of his age, whom friend or foe never characterized, without adding the invariable epithet of his greatness of soul—'the magnanimus peccator,' whose Roman grandeur in meeting his unworthy fate fascinated into momentary sympathy even Dante."—Ibid. p. 55.]
the south of France had in view at that time, and for long afterwards.

A prophetic saying, which was circulated at that time and later along with those of Joachim, gave rise to much conjecture, and, so far as people understood it, was firmly believed. A Greek of Constantinople, so said the story, Cyril by name, who then was General of the Order of Carmelites, had received it in the year 1192, written on two silver tablets, from the hands of an Angel. This Cyril-prophecy, written in language of studied obscurity, and for the most part scarcely intelligible, with a strong admixture of foreign words and bombastic ornament, is one of the many fictions of the Carmelite Order, and hence is frequently interpreted by members of this Order, but in contradictory ways.

It commences with the year 1254, and first of all predicts the contests between the Houses of Anjou and Arragon respecting Naples and Sicily. Then the ruin of the Church, of the Roman See, and the grievous guilt of the degenerate Clergy and of the religious Orders are set forth, and mention is made of a heavy retribution to come.

1 For instance, instead of saying that the Holy Spirit has departed from the Church, it says—evolavit palumba nicipicans in corona. The Mendicant Friars are called Pochotrophite, instead of ptchotrophite, &c.

2 Divinum Oraculum, S. Cyrillo Carmelita solemni legatione angeli missum, cui adj. Commentarius Philippi a Trinitati. Lyons, 1663. The other commentaries are quoted in the Bibliotheca Carmelitana of Cosmas de Villiers. Aurelian, 1752, i., 358.
The imperial eagle is exhorted—"Awake, spread "thy wings, strike home with thy beak!" The chief point of the whole seems to lie in the last chapter, in which a denunciation is pronounced against the three Orders of the Minorites, the Dominicans, and the Carmelites, and the arts of seduction and sordid means of gain in vogue among the Mendicant Friars are depicted.

The author of the prediction himself afforded a key to the interpretation of his riddle, although a very unsufficient one. That is to say, he fathered an explanation of the prophecy on the Abbot Joachim, with the fiction that Cyril had sent the prophetic saying from the East to Calabria and had asked him for an interpretation. Seeing that the text of the prophecy is so obscure, that with a little imagination an indication might be found in it for every conceivable circumstance, it remained for a time in high reputation. Rienzi thought that he saw his mission most clearly denoted in it; and Telesphorus made use of it for other purposes, and laid it at the foundation of his prophetic edifice.

The celebrated physician Arnold of Villanova esteemed this Cyril-prophecy so highly, that in his writings he declared it to be more precious than all the biblical writings.1 Probably he meant that as they were written on a tablet by the hand of an

---

1 Compare the censure pronounced on his writings by a court of the Inquisition at Tarragona in the year 1316, in Villanueva, Viage literario a las Iglesias de España, xix., 321.
Angel himself, while the biblical books proceeded only from men, the former must be prized higher than the latter. Arnold was in other points a zealous Joachimite and Spiritualist, and a most audacious Prophet. For it seemed to him that the whole Church of the West, through the exceeding measure of its sins, was already utterly and irretrievably destroyed; and hence, he thought, all must now hurry speedily to the end. Accordingly, about the year 1297, he fixed the year 1316 for the appearance of the last great Antichrist, and the year 1335 for the end of the world. His theories were afterwards condemned by a tribunal of the Inquisition in Spain.

Religious corporations, which, like the Minorites and the Dominicans, had become influential powers in the world, when they had reached the height of their power and importance could hardly fail to imagine that their appearance had been announced by Divine Providence beforehand. The Minorites had accordingly taken care that in the writings of Joachim a very clear prediction should be found, which should represent two Orders as rising like shining stars out of Umbria (Assisi) and Spain, for the preaching of the Gospel. Joachim had even caused the peculiar dress of the two monastic Orders to be painted in a picture exposed to view in the monastery of Flora, and had charged his monks that, whenever men came to them in this

---

1 Gregorius de Lauro, Joachimi mirabilis veritas defensa, p. 170.
clothing, they were to receive them with kindness and reverence.¹ By this means Joachimism received fresh support, in spite of the unfavourable judgment which the great Dominican theologian, Thomas Aquinas, pronounced respecting Joachim. For Thomas refused to account him as more than a well-meaning man, who had, by means of conjectures, foretold some things that were true, but in others had deceived even himself.²

² THOMAS in lib. iv., sentent. dist. 439, i. art. 3.
THE NATURE OF PROPHETIC UTTERANCE FROM THE FOURTEENTH CENTURY TO THE DAWN OF THE REFORMATION.

Cyril's silver tablets exercised no small influence on the ideas of the Roman Tribune of the people, Cola di Rienzi, who had trained himself among hermitlike Spiritualists and Fraticelli in the Apennines. As the tables of stone to Moses on Mount Sinai, wrote Cola to the Emperor Charles IV., so had these of silver been given to Cyril on Mount Carmel; and he could not but believe these prophecies, for Dominic, Francis, and the reigning Pope were so plainly denoted therein. So then by Cyril, Merlin, and Joachim, the persecution of the poor and lowly eremites, then being carried on by the Pope and his Inquisitors, had been announced beforehand.

1 [For two years and a half after his first fall and flight in December, 1347. These were the Spiritualists who revered the memory of Celestine V., and amid the wild Apennines which flank the kingdom of Naples treasured up the unfulfilled prophecies of the British Merlin, of Joachim, and of Peter John Oliva. The "August Tribune" became a tertiary of the Order, and fasted and prayed with the austerest.—Gibbon, Decline and Fall, chap. lxx., notes 50, 51. Milman, Latin Christianity, Bk. xii., chap. 2.]

In Rienzi indeed the whole fervour of an enthusiastic Joachimism was united with keen political insight and a talent for ruling which bordered upon genius. Like all Joachimites, he believed firmly in the near approach of the third epoch, the Church of the Holy Spirit. Already one finds in him the idea of a future saintly Pope, a Pope attached to evangelical poverty, a "Papa Angelicus," as he was called a little later, a second Cælestone, who will not (like the first) abdicate, but rather with the support of a pious Emperor will effect a revival of the Church and the reformation of the Clergy. But at the same time Rienzi had the idea of ruling Rome almost as a Dictator under a republican form of government, and attempted to unite the torn and distracted Italy in a Confederation under the leadership of Rome. And yet in this son of an innkeeper on the Tiber the enthusiast and visionary were stronger than the statesman. Even after his first fall, when the Emperor Charles put him in prison, he was possessed by a firm belief that Cyril had foretold his suffer-

1 [Rienzi himself claimed to be a natural son of the newly-crowned Emperor, Henry of Luxemburg, born in the house of the Transteverine innkeeper.]
ings,\(^1\) but that he was still the chosen instrument of God, by means of which, along with the coming regeneration of the Church, the political problem of resuscitating the fallen Roman Empire and of creating a united Italy with Rome for its capital, would be brought to a solution. At bottom he held very much the same opinions as those very Spiritualists or Fraticelli, who at that time, and also for long after, were condemned to death at the stake, wherever hands could be laid on them. He also was accused of heresy;\(^2\) but nevertheless no sentence of death was pronounced on him at Avignon, or at any rate was never carried into effect. Later on, ruling for the second time in Rome, and this time with a commission from the Pope himself,\(^3\) he met his death at the hands of the populace of Rome as a tyrant. It can scarcely be doubted that even the classically educated Petrarch, who gave so friendly a welcome to Rienzi as the saviour of Italy, shared the Tribune’s faith in pro-

Though a Spiritualist in opinion he is not persecuted for heresy.

\(^{1354}\)

Petarch shared his views to a great extent.

\(^1\) PAPENCORDT [Cola di Rienzi und seine Zeit. Hamburg and Gotha, 1841], p. 241.

\(^2\) [“And for these works of love the Pastor calls me a schismatic, a heretic, a diseased sheep, a blasphemer of the Church, a man of sacri-lege, a deceiver, who deals with unclean spirits kept in the Cross of the Lord, an adulterator of the holy body of Christ, a rebel and a persecutor of the Church; but ‘whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth’; as naked I entered into power, so naked I went out of power, the people resisting and lamenting my departure.”—Letter to the Archbishop of Prague in Papencordt. MILMAN I. c.]

\(^3\) [The new Pope, Innocent VI., thought that Rienzi’s knowledge of Rome and the Romans might, under the direction of Cardinal Albornoz, be made to serve the interests of the Papacy.]
prophecy. Only he, who for so long had seen with his own eyes in Avignon the corruption of the papal Curia and the havoc made of the Church by open simony, was much more impressed by the expectation of a heavy and by no means transient retribution, than by the confident hope of a simultaneous regeneration in Church and State, with which Rienzi was filled. In a sonnet,¹ which has become famous, he declares that Rome and the Roman See will one day hereafter—not so soon as I could wish, he adds—be swallowed by a great Muhammadan Empire, the Sovereign of which would reside at Bagdad.² Then would its proud towers be burnt up, and its idols lie shattered in the dust. But then also a golden age—he means the Joachimite age of the Holy Spirit—would begin.

The form of prophecy peculiar to those times, a combination of Joachimism with the Spiritualism of the Minorites, showed itself at that time incorporated in the person of the unhappy Franciscan, Jean de la Rochetaillade. But his visions conducted him to prison, where Pope Innocent VI.

² 'Baldacco' is Petrarch's word. Italian commentators do not seem to have known that this means Bagdad, which at that time was considered as the capital of the whole non-Christian world, the Rome of paganism. Thus Baldwin of Ninove says, "Hae civitas Bandas (Bagdad) est caput totius Paganismi, sicut Roma Christianismi."—Corpus Chronicorum Flandriae, ed. Smets, ii., 713.
endeavoured to render him harmless. Like most Seers of the later centuries, he also professed not to be actually a Prophet, but only an enlightened inquirer, to whom the Holy Spirit had disclosed the interpretation first of the Apocalypse, and secondarily of the prophetic utterances of Merlin and Joachim. Froissart, who judges him on the whole very favourably, depicts him as a Priest and a man of culture no less pious than intellectual; and probably it was from this man’s visions that Petrarch derived his expectation of the spread of Muhammadan dominion over western Europe, or at any rate over Italy. Jean de la Rochetaillade felt himself specially strong just where Joachim had shown himself to be weak, viz. in fixing exact dates for the immediate future: and he saw his way to compressing within the narrow space of a few years (1356 to 1370) a marvellous profusion of extraordinary complications, of radical catastrophes and sudden revolutions. Changes, which, according to the experience of the past, would require centuries for their accomplishment, were foretold as coming to pass in a few months. For him as a genuine Spiritualist it is precisely the observation or transgression of his Order’s rigid rule of poverty that is the inmost kernel of the history of the world.¹

¹ He says in so many words in his prophetical commentary:—

According to his notion, the transgressors of the rigid rule of poverty in the Order are the true causes of all the plague and calamities with which mankind are now visited. The salvation of the world and of the Church can now only come from two "poor cord-wearers" (Cordelarii, i.e. Franciscans), of whom the one will become Pope and the other Cardinal; though first, however, blows will fall, so heavy and so crushing, that the whole Church would be destroyed by them, if that were at all possible. But then, even before the year 1370, the great "Restoration" will begin. The whole world will be converted, will unite itself in one Church, and willingly submit itself to the universal dominion of the Pope.

The monk had given his prophetic utterances so near a limit, that the exposure of the error very soon commenced; and the court at Avignon considered itself justified in detaining the Prophet, now proved to be false, in prison till the day of his death. Several of his predictions, however, did come to pass,—so Froissart tells us on hearsay.

Two prophetic women, who coming close in succession in the previous, that is, the fourteenth century, received high honour both during their lifetime and after their death. Of these the one, viz. Catherine of Sienna, was and remained a special authority for Italians in particular, while the other, Brigitta, was prized and diligently read as a divinely-enlightened Prophetess in the whole of western Christendom. Brigitta was for her own and following time to a certain extent what Joachim had been till then; for even from the close of the fourteenth century Brigitta and Joachim were commonly mentioned together as the two chief prophetic authorities. The visions and revelations, which she left at her decease, were examined and approved by Popes and Councils, and defended by considerable theologians, such as Torquemada. But it will always remain an astonishing phenomenon, that these writings, which discuss at such length and so searchingly the corruption prevalent in the Church, were so highly prized by the leaders and spokesmen of the Church itself, that is, by the very men who themselves did nothing towards remedying the state of things there denounced. They contained the gravest charges against the Popes, dark representations of the Roman Curia, their venality, their simoniacal corruption; they drew frightful pictures of the degeneracy of the Clergy, and also of the great religious Orders; and all this was put by Brigitta into the mouth of God Himself. And nevertheless the Roman See allowed Joachim to be honoured as a saint;¹ and it canonized not only Brigitta, but also Bonaventura,² who in short cutting words had pointed out the Curia as the great whore clothed in scarlet, and Vincent Ferrer,¹ who fifty years after Brigitta painted the ruin of the Church in still darker colours. These Prophets usually exhibited in the distant future, or even as already quite close at hand, a comprehensive and miraculous purification and renovation of the Church, which was to be accomplished by visible intervention of celestial powers. Such, however, is not the case with Vincent and Bonaventura. But when this change and general conversion never once came to pass, or else made people wait a long time for it, then the result could not fail to be, that men (in doubt whether the Church had any vital power, seeing that she was no longer equal to the task of reforming herself) at last took the matter into their own hands and determined to carry the work of reformation through to the end; if necessary, even amid the storms of a violent and unsparing revolution. It is only lately that attention has been once more directed in Italy to S. Brigitta, whose form for a long time seemed as it were to have perished from view. She declares that the Leonine city, or, as she expresses it, the part of the city from the Vatican and S. Peter's to the Castello di S. Angelo, and from thence to S. Spirito, had been shown to her as a plain surrounded by a very strong wall, in which various dwellings stood, all along the wall; that is to say, just like a Belgian Beguine convent. At the same time she had heard

¹ [But an attempt to procure his formal canonization at Rome in 1346 seems to have been unsuccessful.—ROBERTSON, History of the Christian Church. London, 1866, III., 212.]

² [The "Seraphic Doctor." He died at the Council of Lyons in 1274. Gregory X., Pope by Bonaventura's nomination, the Emperor, and the whole Council attended his funeral. Sixtus IV., a Franciscan Pope, canonized him in 1482, and in 1587 Sixtus V. made him the sixth Doctor of the Church.]

¹ [See note, p. 67.]
a voice saying: "The Pope, who loves the Church "as I and my friends have loved it, will take pos"session of these places, that he may be able the "more freely and peacefully to summon his coun"sellors unto him." This has not been overlooked in very recent times; and the Saint and Prophetess so highly esteemed by the Church, and canonized moreover for this very gift of prophecy, is made to say to the present Pope, that he would have more peace and freedom for ecclesiastical deliberations, if he and his were confined to the Leonine city, than as the ruler of a state."

Precisely in the fourteenth century, when what was unnatural and horrible was as readily believed as it was frequently realized in fact, and when the history of the states of Europe seemed to proceed in sickly convulsions, prophetic utterance, so soon as it attached itself to definite indications of time and concrete events, usually went quite astray. Here is an example. The year 1348 and two years following are among the most extraordinary of that time, and the most pregnant with events. Accordingly the chronicle of Michael de Leone quotes the prophecy of a "great Astrologer" respecting the year 1348. "One man will be "Lord of all; the Roman Empire will be raised "up. The tyrant, the King of France will fall

1 Revel., 6, 74.
2 Compare the treatise of Gennarelli, which appeared quite lately in Florence, Capitolii per la libertà religiosa e pontificia.
"with his Barons; the Pope with his Cardinals "will be brought to nought." Added to that we have predictions of terrible famine and mortality, some commonplaces about meteorological phenomena, and a couple of unintelligible denunciations. Now here we have certainly a possible intimation of the frightful pestilence of the Black Death, which at that time filled the whole of Europe with terror; but the rest is altogether wrong. The Roman Empire was at that time so far from being raised up, that rather the reign of Charles IV., which commenced just then, must be noted as a moment of still deeper degradation of the Empire. King Philip of France did not fall, and the Pope and his Cardinals sat quietly at Avignon. Here again, no doubt, we have a case of prophecies which are only transformed wishes.

The unhappy results of the Crusades, and the general unwillingness to renounce the long-cherished hope of winning back Palestine and the Holy City, generated in southern Europe a special kind of prophetic sayings. As early as the year 1205, in a treatise entitled De semine

---

1 In Bömer, Fontes rerum German, 1, 434, ‘Dissipabitur’ is the word he uses of the Pope and the Cardinals.

2 [MILMAN gives a saying of Ockham, quoted in Wolffi Lectiones, p. 496, in which Charles IV. is described as “mancipium Avinonen-sium sacrificulorum a quibus imperium emerat.” But the “Golden Bull,” due perhaps rather to Charles’ good fortune than to his wisdom, must ever redeem his reign from insignificance.]
scripturarum," it was prophesied, that in a hundred years the Holy Land would be won back, and the Church would be freed from simony as the cause of its loss. Some years later a whole string of similar attempts at prophesying, each more positive and definite than its predecessors, were made in South Italy. In this work the Carmelites, who fancied they had a claim to certain places in Palestine, were specially active. They represented Christ as having revealed to one of their mythical Saints, Angelus, that a holy and powerful King of the House of France would, in conjunction with the Pope, undertake a "Passagium," and deliver the Holy City out of the hands of the infidels. When then the Spanish House of Arragon obtained the supremacy in Naples, other essays at prophesying were made, promising these Princes or their successors a great World-Empire, brilliant conquests in North and South, and among them even the taking of Jerusalem. For this Joachim is once more made to lend assistance, and along with him JOHANNES AQUITANUS and JOHANNES RALA were quoted as authors of similar prophecies. It was well for

---

1 See respecting it the Notitia Saxuli in Karajan's Zur Geschichte des Concils von Lyon, p. 104.
3 They will be found in the Bollandists (l. c., p. 822), who took them from the treatise of Johannes Bonatus, De prophetis sui temporis, Naples, 1660.
those pious women, Catherine, Brigitta, and for those generally who troubled themselves at that time with the condition of the Church, that they lived only in the present and in a visionary future, while the past and the chain of causes and effects, which had conduced to the existing state of things in the Church, were unknown to them. They supposed that the corruption which lay before their eyes was something accidental, which had crept in quite in the most recent times, and which, therefore, by a sudden revulsion, a more abundant outpouring of heavenly grace, might again be made to disappear. The knowledge, which they did not possess, that this state of things was the result of the mutilation and deliberate destruction of ecclesiastical rules and institutions, would have plunged them into a labyrinth of doubts and pangs of conscience, and would have utterly unnerved them. Those well-meaning predictors of a Papa Angelicus, who now became so abundant in Italy, declared, that a simple-minded, pious man, who had passed his life in voluntary poverty and earnest asceticism, a second Celestine V., a stranger to all political aims and efforts, if raised to the Papal Chair, would suffice for the thorough reformation of the whole Church in the shortest space of time. In reality, for many centuries not a single Pope had effected any serious or lasting amelioration whatever in the condition of the Church; and among the Popes who followed one another in a long series from 1300 to 1500, there was not one in whom the faith of the people could have fancied even for a single day, that it recognized the prophesied Papa Angelico.¹

But still he was looked for with longing throughout all Italy, just as the right Emperor Frederick was looked for in Germany. In the year 1514 Giulio de' Medici, afterwards Pope Clement VII., then Vicar-General of the Bishop of Florence, caused a monk of the name of Theodore to be put in prison for deluding the people with a story, that an Angel had revealed to him, that he, Theodore, would become the Papa Angelico, "for whom the nations of Italy were looking."² It was laid to the charge of Savonarola by his enemies, that, at the bottom of his coming forward in Florence publicly as a reformer, there was nothing more nor less than the intention of making himself Papa Angelicus. And moreover his followers really believed, that he had been chosen out for this purpose; and all the more so, because Prospero Pitti, who passed in Florence for a prophetically enlightened Priest, had some time before foretold, along with other events, the appearance of the bold preacher-monk, and the simultaneous arising of the

¹ The name arose merely through the misinterpretation of a passage in the old Latin poem, which was attributed to Tertullian. It is Hermas, the author of the Pastor or Shepherd, who is there spoken of, and this Shepherd or Angel is designated as angelicus pastor.

² Cambi, Storie Fiorentine, III., 60. Moreni, Memorie della Basilica di S. Lorenzo, II., 311.
Angelico as quite close at hand. However, there people had not the slightest desire for any such Pope, who of course would have been obliged to commence with stopping the Romans' most productive sources of gain; and the Prophet was laughed at as crazy.²

Obviously this expectation of an "Angelico Pope" sprang up on Italian soil. With the simplest means and in the shortest space of time,—though certainly, as was the general supposition, not until after a great massacre and a secularization of the Church property, which had become mere source of revenue for Priests,—he was to accomplish the giant work of a reformation, of a Church in very truth once more become evangelical. People soon discovered, however, that a single Angelicus would not be equal to this task, and so at a very early period—probably in the first instance towards the end of the fourteenth century—the prophecies lengthened out the single chosen one to a succession of four Angelic Popes.

¹ Guicciardini, Storia d'Italia, 3, 7.

The first who was supposed to have uttered this prophecy was the aged Rabanus, Archbishop of Mayence. He had acquired the reputation of a Prophet through an accidental error, in that he was held to be the author of Adso’s treatise on Antichrist; and now he was credited with the authorship of a prognostic, in which the four saving Popes were briefly indicated. Joachim also, in a supposititious treatise called the Book of Flora, and a so-called Dandalus, from whose pen people believed that they possessed a Revelation respecting the Popes, were said to have borne testimony to the four hope-inspiring Popes.\(^1\) Through the third of them the temporalities were to be utterly rooted out of the Church—a point which betrays the Joachimite and Minorite origin of the prediction,—and the fourth was to wander through the whole world as a preacher and promulgator of the Christian faith. Then, however, the final catastrophe would begin.

Thus the opposition between the two schools or tendencies of the Joachimite and anti-Joachimite, the sanguine and the pessimists, continued for centuries. The monkish writer Giovanni delle Celle, of Florence, expressed this opposition succinctly and conclusively in a treatise directed against the \(^1\) Berthold, Bishop of Chiemsee, Onus Ecclesia, 60, 8, 9, gives the passages.

Fratelli. "They say that the world will be "renovated. I say that it will go to ruin." Thus far, that the Church was in a most lamentable condition, that she was grievously diseased, and so disfigured as not to be recognisable, both parties were agreed. But the one side said; she can and she will be restored, though not without a terrible and bloody retribution coming first: after that, however, a long and blessed time of prosperity will follow for the Church. The other side declared, that the sickness of the Church would not lead to a new birth, but—so far as all symptoms indicated— to death, and that the catastrophes, which, according to biblical and traditional prophecy, are partly to precede, partly to accompany the appearance of the great Adversary, had already begun, or at any rate were close at hand. History has proved that both parties were wrong. In the time of the great Schism (1378–1455) prophecy, as Henry of Lagenstein tells us, was in full bloom. Seers into the future sprang up in abundance, who prophesied from the course of the stars, or from conjectures formed according to arbitrary rules, and found hearers. They had their vaticinations beautifully copied out and ornamented, as if they were literal revelations from the Holy Spirit. In short, they floated over the end of the Schism in a sea of prophecies, all of which ended ignominiously. The fate of one of these Prophets is told us by Henry of Langenstein. A learned monk, who was supposed to be a holy man, came to the monastery of Eberbeck from France. He had received revelations respecting the short duration of the Schism, and knew for certain that it would last only a few years. But when the years went by, and the Schism still continued, he said that he had not weighed the words of the Holy Spirit carefully enough; the Schism, as he now saw, would not come to an end till somewhat later. This limit, however, also passed, and the twofold Schism became a threefold one. Thereupon he was seized with such a feeling of shame, that he flung away his monk’s dress, fled from the monastery, and plunged miserably clad as a layman into the neighbouring forests.

2 Henrici de Hassia, Liber contra vaticinia Telesphori, Thesaur. Anecdot., 1, 2, 516.
TELESPHORUS

A late outcome of the circle of ideas and prophetic store of the Joachimite School is the treatise of the supposed hermit TELESPHORUS. He was a native, according to his own account, of Cosenza, and at the time of the Great Schism, towards the end of the fourteenth century, professed to have lived in the neighbourhood of Thebes, that is to say, of the place where formerly the ruins of Thebes stood. He tells us how, by the counsel of an angel, who appeared to him in the year 1386, he had plunged deeply into the study of the pro-prophetic sayings of Cyril and Joachim, of Merlin, Dandalus, the Sybils, and the Chronicles of the Popes. The outcome of this study is with him the glorification of France and its King, and the French Popes. The slaying of the Antipope (the Italian one), who will be put to death at Perugia in the year 1393, is to put an end to the Schism. Whereupon there then follows a great renovation of the Church, and a return of the Clergy to apostolic poverty; for all riches and possessions will be taken from the Clergy. At the same time great wars will be waged between the nations of Europe, in which the two close allies, the true (that is the French) Pope and the French King, will be victorious. For he is the true Pope, for whom this King has declared himself; because the Kings of France in all papal schisms have always ranged themselves on the side of the rightful Pope, and he must be victorious, who is aided by the Pope; for which reason the French King must be so.

But it is very remarkable, that this Guelfically inclined Joachimite, who conceals himself under the name of Telesphorus, also appropriated to himself the stories, now more than a hundred years old, of the expected restorer of the Empire and the Church, the Emperor Frederick III.; only in order to reverse them. About the year 1409—so runs his prophecy—will this German Frederick arise from the seed of the second Frederick, and make himself Emperor, will smite down the Roman Church and set up a German Antipope, will cause a general massacre of the Clergy, and then will withdraw from Italy to France. King Charles is taken prisoner by him, but, being freed from prison by a miracle, defeats and slays this German Emperor. Whereupon the Papa Angelicus, who meanwhile has been raised to the Chair of S. Peter, deprives the German Princes, once and for ever, of their right of electing the Emperor, nominates the French King Charles Emperor, and crowns him. Both of them, the Emperor and the Pope, then go on an expedition to Palestine, which they completely conquer. Then follows the conversion of all mankind, and peace throughout the world.\footnote{Telesphorus was printed at Venice in 1515; but this edition is so rare, that moderns, such as Papenbrock and Morheim, know Telesphorus only from manuscripts. The present writer used the Venetian edition. Muratori also has printed the beginning of it in the Antiquitates Ital., iii., 949.}

Thus this prophecy, so pretentious in its appearance, and claiming to be founded on the authority of an Angel, develops itself as a programme of French hopes and political aims moulded into this prophetic form; and it was certainly much read and believed. To transfer the imperial power to the royal House of France had for long been a pet scheme of French Princes and statesmen. In Germany an attempt was made to weaken the effect of the vaticination in two ways,—one by a counter-prophetic effusion, the other by a theological refutation.

Two attempts made in Germany to meet this prediction.
The prophetic Anti-Telesphorus of the Germans is said to have borne the name of GAMALEON, to have been a relation of Pope Boniface IX., and to have imparted to this Pontiff his insight into the future in the year 1390.¹ Like Telesphorus, he too makes a French King be crowned Roman Emperor by the Pope. This potentate will wrest the Empire from the turbulent Germans; Rome and Italy will become dependent on him. The Clergy, as the Prophet goes on to say, have destroyed all empires of this world and all principalities. At last they will wrest the Empire from the German nation and afterwards strive utterly to annihilate all temporal Princes. Then, however, the Roman Emperor will march forth from the Lilienfeld, will conquer Rome, put to death all lords and tyrants of the Roman Empire, and capture the King of France; and in future there will be no more mention of the Kingdom of France, but only of the German Empire. A German Patriarchate is then founded at Mayence, the countries and nations of Germany are greatly exalted and honoured, and live with their new Shepherd—which means, no doubt, the Patriarch of Mayence, who is to be exalted to the dignity of Pope;—after which one more expedition to the Holy Land, the final one, will be undertaken.

¹ His prophecy is to be found in the Collection of WOLFGANG LAXIUS, Fragmentum vaticinii ejusdem Methodii, &c. Vienna, 1547. f. hiij.
LAZIUS has omitted the long description of the ruin of the Church in quoting this prophetic effusion. But in it one already begins to hear the first sounds of thoughts and purposes, which came to the surface later on in the great Peasants' War.

The theological refutation of Telesphorus was undertaken by the most considerable theologian of that time,—HENRY OF LANGENSTEIN. His book shows above everything, that Joachimism in Germany, no less than in France, had decided opponents. Henry rejects as an heretical notion of Joachim and his disciple Telesphorus, their speaking of the "leprosy of the Church that has become "an harlot,"—an idea which was quite frequent in the Italian Joachimites, especially since the Guelf party had adopted the practice of making Pope and Church convertible terms, and of calling themselves the Church party. In Germany, however, this still had a strange and offensive sound. People were ready enough to admit that the Roman Curia might deserve the apocalyptic designation; but they could not tolerate that the whole Church should be so called. Henry of Langenstein found it not less offensive that the Prophet of Cosenza should say to the Laity, that in appropriating Church property, and in robbing the Clergy, they were being the executors of the Divine will.¹

¹ Had he had a closer acquaintance with the still numerous Spi-ritalists and Fraticelli in the South of Europe, he would easily have recognized a member of this community in Telesphorus. For to the Henry, no doubt, saw through the fact, that the Prophet was taken up with homage and flattery to be paid to the French court; without, however, remarking what the connection was. Genoa, that is to say, was at that time to be brought under the dominion of France; which also came to pass about Christmas time in the year 1386. But Telesphorus sent his book a little while beforehand with a letter of dedication to Antonio, the Doge of Genoa; without doubt in order to instruct him that the Republic (which, however, still recognized the supremacy of the Emperor) would do better in submitting to the French King Charles VI., inasmuch as he in a short time would himself be Emperor.

In fine, the nearer the human race approached to the great epoch of the Reformation, and the division of Christendom, the more threatening became the prophetic voices, the more sharply was their sting directed against the Papacy. Just as in former times the Irish used to relate of their Saint Columba, that God had espoused to him the Spirit of prophecy in the form of a marvellously beautiful Queen,1 so one might say, that prophecy at this time wore the face of a Gorgon that turned all to stone, or that, at any rate at the best, it was like a sorrowful widow clad in garments of mourn-

1 Aeta Sanctorum, Bolland. January 11, 830.
ing. There was no longer any need of a special prophetic gift. Everyone believed that he was able to announce with certainty the sudden coming of a great catastrophe. Centuries before this the revered Bishop of Lincoln, Grostête, had declared on his deathbed, that only with fire and sword could a cure of the Church's wounds be effected. And in like spirit a man of altogether different temperament, but the keenest observer of his time, Machiavelli, said,—"One of two things must come upon the Roman Church, either utter ruin or a very heavy chastisement." At the same time also Pico di Mirandola expected, as he stated in his address to Leo X., that in Italy, of whose condition in Church matters he gave a horrible description, the hard and bloody punishment at the hands of an avenging Providence had already commenced, and that still worse was to come.

A little before this Italy had seen in one of her great men the most famous Prophet since Joachim, the Dominican preacher Girolamo Savonarola. He, however, had to pay for his firm belief in his call to be a seer, and for the boldness of his warnings, with his life. On the prophetic powers of Savonarola the opinions of his contemporaries were as divided as those of men of recent times.

---

But, nevertheless, it is becoming more and more generally acknowledged, that this extraordinary man (as the best of his biographers, Villari, has expressly said) was really possessed of a special gift of divination. The historian Comines, who never mentions him but in terms of high admiration, declares that he himself had been told things by Savonarola, which no one believed, and which had all come true. Machiavelli at any rate did not dare to contradict his prophesying, “because one must speak with reverence of so great a man.” 1 Guicciardini preferred to withhold his judgment, until time should have decided respecting Savonarola’s predictions.

Two statesmen have stated with regard to themselves, that in the Commonwealth in which they lived, nothing of importance had ever come, which they had not foreseen. Cicero makes this statement respecting himself; 2 and the other, the Frenchman Du Bair, goes still further, and assures us, that, not only in public life, but also in his

---

1 Discorsi, i., 12, p. 272.
2 It will be found in his Epistolae ad Familiares, vi., 6. [“Si te ratio quaedam etruscae disciplinae, quam a patre, nobilissimo atque optimo vire, acceperas, non fessilis: nec nos quidem nostra divinatio fallet, quam tum sapientissimorum vivorum monumentis, atque praecipia, plurimoque, ut tu scis, doctrinæ studio, tum magno etiam usu tractandæ reipublicæ, magnaque nostrorum temporum varietate successi sumus. Cui quidem divinationi hoc plus confidimus, quod ea nos nihil in his tam obscuris rebus, tamque perturbatis unquam omnino fessilis. Discerem que antea futura dixissesm, ni vererer, ne ex eventis fingere viderer, &c.” Ceccina, to whom the letter is addressed, belonged to an Etruscan gens.]
private life, nothing happened, which he did not in each case see coming beforehand. It would seem as if Savonarola was a similarly organized nature.

Savonarola's prophecies were partly the result of natural insight and unusual keenness of vision, partly had their origin in biblical studies as conclusions which he drew from the course of Jewish history and applied to Christian, partly (to conclude) were interpretations of visions, which he had had. For he himself tells us of two enormous crosses, which appeared to him along with other wonderful figures on the night of Good Friday in the year 1492, and the way in which he interpreted them. The saintly Pope of the future also, in whose speedy appearance he believed, had been shown to him in a vision. He had seen his figure and face without knowing as yet who he was, and whether he was an Italian or a foreigner. That the inclination to believe in his own and other people's visions was developed in him to the pitch of superstition, is shown by his putting faith in the Angel's voice, which his fellow Dominican Maruffi declared that he had heard.\(^1\) Hence it was his fortune, that his political prophesying came to pass, while his religious ones remained unfulfilled. His predicting the utterly unexpected expedition of the French under Charles VIII. into Italy, and the expulsion of the Medici from Florence, confirmed and spread his reputation as a Prophet. But he announced and depicted with the greatest distinctness a speedy and utter devastation of Rome with fire and sword, because Rome was the great seductress and source of vices for the whole of Christendom.\(^2\)

1 This statement of Du Bair's, who was President of the Parliament of Provence at the time of the Civil War and under Henry IV., and the first parliamentary speaker of his century, is in MÉNAGE, Observations sur la langue française, II., 110. Between the Roman, however, and the Frenchman there is this difference,—that Du Bair attributes his own foresight to a sagacity which he owes to nature, whereas Cicero believed that his divinatio was due to many years' study and to a long political experience gradually acquired in public business.

2 Compendium revelationum, Ulm, 1469. Fol. 9.

3 Oracolo della renovazione, Fol. 115.

This destruction never came to pass. He further declared, that, after many grievous plagues and visitations, with which God intended to visit His Church, she would be raised up again, as she had been in the time of the Apostles. The idea from which Savonarola started was this;—if the Church is fallen so low, is poisoned so utterly and entirely, as we see to be the case in the Latin Church, especially in Italy, then a revival \textit{must} come without further delay, otherwise one would have to suppose, that God had irrevocably rejected this Bride, as of old he rejected the Synagogue, and had left her helpless to her ruin; a supposition, which, according to all principles of faith, was untenable. However, a reformation, such as he conceived and desired, has never yet come about. He was not more happy in the assurance, that the regeneration of the Church would be accompanied by the general conversion of all unbelievers. On the other hand, he foresaw quite rightly that his profession of Prophet and the whole position, into which he was forced by others rather than had forced himself, would bring about his destruction. He yearned, he said, to return into port from the deep sea, out on to which he had drifted; but this was no longer possible. The cause, which he represented, would conquer; but he himself would in consequence suffer death; "for the Master, who wields the hammer, flings it, when he has done with it, away." At the end of March, 1498, he continued to preach;—"Rome will not quench this fire, and if this were quenched, God would kindle another, and it is already kindled everywhere, only they do not know it." On the 23rd of May he was executed, according to the judgment of the Pope, as a heretic; according to the opinion of his Order and of his numerous disciples, as a witness to the truth. An office was dedicated to him as to a sainted martyr, and persons, who themselves were canonized at Rome, such as Catherine Ricci and Philip Neri, have honoured and invoked him as such.

\(^1\) See \textit{Villari}, l. 296.

\(^2\) \textit{Oraulo della renovazione della chiesa}. Venice, 1543. Fol. 101. Here all that is prophetic in reference to the Church has been collected from the writings of Savonarola by the Florentine Dominican, \textit{Luca Bettini}.

Near the time of the Reformation a kind of PROPHETIC UTTERANCE FROM 1350 TO 1519.

popular treasury of prophecies grew up in Germany,—at once expressing and fostering the national wishes and expectations. Methodius, Joachim, Brigitta, Hildegard, and the so-called sibylline revelations, Germany possessed in common with the whole western world. A man like Savonarola, who claimed to possess prophetic gifts and won recognition from others, never arose in Germany. But the names of mythical personages were invented to father the prophetic sayings which arose in the mind of the people. Thus they had a hermit Prophet, JOHN LICHTENBERGER; and when in the Lay on the Cologne War, 1475, it is said that

"Publicly three years ago
A man of Mainz foretold it so;
John Lichtenberger is his name,
In all the land well known to fame;" ¹

this merely means that the Lichtenberger prophecies were known in all Germany; not by any means that the living Prophet himself was a universally known personage. The prophecies which bore his name were a favourite book and widely spread, as the number of editions up to 1528 shows. They are a mixed collection, not all by one author, having reference to Germany and more particularly the Netherlands, and belonging

¹ "Das hat vor dreien Jahren offenbar
Geweisaget einer von Mainz furwar, Johann Lichtenberger ist er genannt,
In dem ganzen Reich wolbekannt."

In LILIENCRON, HISTOR. VOLKSIEDER, II., 58.
to the latter part of the fifteenth century. A Lollard (pietist) Reinhard, with a book On Great Tribulations, and then the Sibyl and Brigitta were made use of in this collection; and a great massacre of the Clergy in the time of the Emperor Maximilian was foretold. And Luther, who published a fresh edition of Lichtenberger in the year 1527, remarks in the preface, that after the Peasants' War of 1525 the Clergy rejoiced, because now the prophecies of Lichtenberger were fulfilled and the danger consequently over.

For some time past there certainly had been a feeling of great anxiety, with regard to the approaching catastrophe, diffused among the German Clergy. They felt how much hate and suspicion had accumulated in all sections of the nation against an order which morally had sunk so low, and which was systematically corrupted from the head downwards. Two Priests in South Germany, Wolfgang Aytinger in Augsburg and Joseph Grünpeckh in Ratisbon, gave expression to this gloomy expectation at the time; the first in the year 1496 in a Commentary on Methodius, the other in the year 1508 in a Mirror of Vision, the very title-page of which exhibits a church in flames, falling into ruins. While Aytinger attributes the evil mainly to the ecclesiastical corruptness of the 1 Tractatus super Methodium. Augsburg, 1496.

2 Speculum naturalis, coelestis et prophetica visionis. Nuremberg, 508.
Roman Curia, which has become an infernal abyss devouring everything; Grünpeckh declares, that for several years the expectation, that a mighty storm would shortly break over Church and Clergy, was spread far and wide over Germany; wherever men, or even women and children, were gathered together and conversed, there the saying was repeated, that there soon would be an attack made on the Clergy. Such attempts at prophecy were spread among the masses, partly by pious and well-meaning persons, who, however divinely enlightened, were of limited intellectual powers, partly by the mischievous, who had in view a plundering of Church property. Grünpeckh gives as his opinion, that a worse state of corruption than that which in his time prevailed in the clerical order can scarcely be conceived: nevertheless he adds a warning to the effect, that the Laity need not exult so much over the visitation which threatened the Clergy, for the dregs or poison at the bottom of the cup given to the Clergy, would at last have to be drunk by them—the Laity. Another Priest, John Hagen,¹ Dean of S. Leonard in Frankfort, wrote still more openly at that time, and as a result of his astrological studies prophesied a great change in the Church, a deprivation and humbling of the haughty Clergy;—“With perfect justice we Clerics are objects of universal hatred; we deserve it.”

Fear, sorrow, and bitterness, from the middle of the fifteenth century onwards, filled Germany with attempts at prophecy. The discontent of the Laity was not greater than that of the Clergy themselves, ever since the Papal See had rendered vain all the hopes of Church reform which had been built upon the Council of Basle. A prophetic voice of this kind from the Clergy was attributed to the most famous German theologian of his time, Henry of Langenstein, commonly called Henry of Hesse, but is no doubt of later origin. It complained that since Nicholas III. every Pope and every Bishop had been guilty of simony; and it promised a reformation of the Roman Church through the instrumentality of the Germans, the Franks, and their Emperor. For that the succour for the ruined Church must come, if at all, from the Laity, and above all from a pious Emperor, was always keenly felt. Saint Brigitta herself, as she tells us, was told by Christ, that the King, for whom she had just then been praying, must assemble together wise and religiously enlightened men, and with them take counsel, how the ruined walls of the Church might be built up again, the Clergy be cured of their arrogance, and again be made humble and chaste. "For my Church hath of a truth "estranged itself all too far from me."

Hence it came to pass that prophetic sayings of German origin were much taken up with a Pope

1 Denis, Codices MS. theologici Biblioth. Vindob., p. 1572.
2 Revelationes, 6, 26, p. 436.
that was to arise in Germany, who, according to one prophecy, would first of all be raised by the Princes to be Patriarch of Mayence, but afterwards would be crowned as Pope upon German soil. As Patriarch of the Church of Germany he would place the crown on the head of an Emperor chosen from out of the Rhineland, and the latter would then take up arms against the Lily-Emperor (that is, the French usurper of the imperial dignity, whom Telesphorus had predicted), would slay him and take Rome. John Wünschelburg, Priest in Amberg, was said to have announced this from the pulpit in the year 1409,¹ that is to say at the time of the Great Schism, when the idea had occurred to not a few that the best way of reconciling the rival claims of the French and the Italians to the possession of the Papacy might be the creation of a German Pope.

We may regard the work of Bishop Berthold, written in the year 1519, on the Burden of the Church,² as the close and limit of mediæval prophecy. The author is still altogether within the Joachimite circle of ideas; he holds to the theory of the seven epochs of the Church; his sources and authorities are Methodius, Cyril, and the Abbot of Calabria, along with those Prophets whom the

¹ Jo. Wolphi, Lectiones memorab., i., 728.
² Using "burden" in the sense of Isaiah, xiii. 1. [The burden of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amos did see], as equivalent to "prophetic sentence."
Church had canonized, Vincent Ferrer, Catherine of Sienna, Brigitta, and Hildegard. In a very searching way he draws a dark picture of the depth and universality of the Church's degradation, and reflects upon the Roman See as the chief cause of the evil; at the same time his views and expectations as to the immediate future are the gloomiest that can be conceived. Of the great historical significance of Luther he has not the slightest suspicion, and notices the Lutherans merely as a mischievous party just coming into existence. He has no doubt about the extermination (exterminium) of the Papal See; but this will be followed by its re-establishment and glorification. And one sees clearly in his case how powerful at that time in Germany the conviction was, that the national spirit of the Italians, incorporated in its worst elements in the papal Curia, had done grievous harm to the well-being of Germany, politically no less than morally and religiously; and that now both nations, the Italians first, as had already been the case since 1510, and the Germans no doubt not long after them, would have to pay the penalty in bloody wars and revolutions.

Akin to this, and yet inspired by an altogether different spirit, is the Nollhart of the Swiss poet, Pamphilus Gengenbach. All the prophetic per-

---

1 Pamphilus Gengenbach, by Gödeke. Hanover, 1856, pp. 77, &c.
SONAGES, with whom the Germans were so familiar—Methodius, Cyril, Joachim, Brigitta, Reinhard—are here quoted. The Pope, the Emperor, the King of France, and the Sultan ask questions, and the answers which they receive form a complete prophetic course of history in the past and in the future, down to the appearance of Antichrist. The object of it seems to have been to give the Emperor Maximilian a hint, that he was under an obligation to fulfill the prophetic sayings, which make the Emperor or King of Germany conquer Rome and reform the Church.

"And pray who may this Emperor be?" asks Maximilian, when Brigitta told him that a King should entirely reform the Church, and bring back to the Empire that which it had lost. Thereupon his own name is named to him, and Methodius gives him the further comforting assurance that the Roman Empire will never fall.

"My thoughts are not your thoughts." "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my thoughts higher than your thoughts."¹—With these words of the Prophet, which doubtless have already occurred to many a reader, the present account of the Prophets of the first fifteen centuries after Christ may close.

¹ Isaiah, lv. 89.
APPENDIX A

THE PROPHECY OF HERMANN OF LEHNIN

THIS pretended prophecy, attributed to a certain monk Hermann, who is supposed to have been an inmate of the monastery of Lehnin in Brandenburg about the year 1300, is celebrated in Germany where political and theological fanaticism have often made use of it as a weapon against the reigning family in Prussia. The literature on the subject is considerable. The titles and a brief account of some of the treatises already in existence will be given below. A further discussion of the forgery is among the works which the world may hope to see from the pen of Dr. Döllinger, if his life is spared.

A brief study of the prophecy will suffice to convince any impartial reader that it is a forgery. The lines agree with historical events down to the year 1690. After that all is vague or demonstrably false. One or two apparent coincidences with history subsequent to 1690 are remarkable, and will be discussed at the proper place. The attempts which have been made to force other details in the latter part of the prediction into agreement with known facts are so monstrous that to state them is sufficient to ensure their rejection. No person not interested in the genuineness of the prophecy would tolerate them for an instant. For the present then we may assume that the forgery was perpetrated about 1690, evidently by a Catholic, who had a righteous horror of the Reformation, and was well read in the annals of the House of Brandenburg. Some attempts will be made hereafter to show who the forger was.

But the history of the document itself is such as to once to rouse suspicion. Its defenders tell us that it was kept secret on political grounds for many years in a private family.¹ When this family became extinct, the MS. passed into other hands, and thus became known in Berlin first at the close of the seventeenth century. We cannot, however, get back much farther than 1693, in which year Martin Weise, private physician to the Elector, and Martin Frederick von Seidel both died. The former is known to have copied the prophecy, the latter to have commented on it. The Berlin librarian De la Croze says,¹ that in 1697 the late Herr von Schönhausen showed him a copy of the prophecy, which appeared to De la Croze to be more than fifty years old. It was probably intended to appear old. Professor Giesebeck is mistaken in supposing² this to be the earliest notice of the prophecy. George Peter Schulz had a copy in Berlin, where he was Professor at the Ritter-akademie 1709 to 1711, which he printed 1723 in Das Gelehrte Preussen (ii., 289), of which he was editor. Twelve years before it was printed Des Vignoles attacked it as being probably a forgery, but placed it as early as the time of John Sigismund. His criticism, written in French, was translated in Oebirch's Beiträge zur brandenburgischen Geschichte. John C. Beckman, Professor at Frankfort on the Oder, who died 1717, translated the prophecy into verse. In 1721 some portions of the MS., which had now begun to attract considerable attention, were printed. Then came Schultz's edition in 1723, as mentioned above. He omits lines 51, 58, 80, 83, possibly out of consideration to the reigning House, especially Frederick William I.; although this does not explain the omission of 58, nor yet the non-omission of other lines. In 1736 Frederick II., then Crown Prince and not expected to survive his father, caused the prophecy to be explained by Nazmer, and said with regard to the passage, "Qui sequitur pravos imitatur pessimus agros, &c.," which was commonly supposed to refer to Frederick William's successor, "Je ne serai pas pessimus; je mourrai donc." 1 And Denina 2 says of him, "Il se moquoit assez de toutes les prédictions. Néanmoins il parut curieux de voir un certain livre de prophéties dans le goût de Nostradamus, qu'on disoit avoir été trouvé dans le vieux monastère de Lehnin." During the first years of Frederick II.'s reign several editions of the prophecy appeared in Germany, some of them under the name of Zoroaster, who is thought to be G. P. Schulz. Meanwhile J. C. Weise, Minister at Lehnin, had been making a still more serious attack on the prophecy than that of Des Vignoles. Weise's for some years remained unpublished, but was made use of by Henkel in Frater Hermannus Lehninensis redi-vivus. Leipzig, 1745. Küster wrote to the same effect in 1741; and in 1746 Weise published his criticisms under the title Vaticinium metricum D. F. Hermanni Monachi in Lenyn, oder Bruder Her-manns vorgegebene Weissagung, erläutert durch einen Erforscher der Wahrheit. Berlin, 1746.

¹ Or again, that it had been found built up in an old wall or in a chimney, at the end of the reign of Frederick William or beginning of the reign of Frederick III., who now and then came to Lehnin for heron-hawking; or that a monk of Lehnin had engraved the prophecy on brazen plates, and that it had thus been preserved. The variety of the stories goes far to prove their falsehood. A writer in the Allgemeine Anzeiger der Deutschen, 1807, no. 241, was bold enough to say, that he had had in his possession a MS. of the prophecy written in 1481 by a monk of Lehnin named Burkhardt, of which, however, some kind friend had relieved him six years before. Perhaps the fiction was only intended to attract attention to the prophecy.

¹ Oebirch's Beiträge zur brandenburgischen Geschichte. Berlin, 1761. p. 328.
174 EARLY EDITIONS OF THE PROPHECY.

1 Journal secret of the imperial ambassador von Seckendorf.
2 Essai sur la vie et le règne de Frédéric II. Berlin, 1788. p. 454.

The Royal Library at Berlin possesses four MSS., which are the oldest known, belonging, according to the inscriptions, to the beginning of the eighteenth century. None of them appear to be original. Another was taken from the State Archives in Berlin to be shown to Frederick William II. in 1796. It was never returned, and is supposed to be lost. But another came to the Archives in 1821 in the Kindlinger¹ legacy. It differs greatly in readings from the other four; but the variations in the text appear to be very capricious,—lines transposed or omitted, just as suited the fancy of the copyist.

With regard to the general tone of the prophecy one may adopt the judgment of Friedrich Wilken contained in a MS., left by him and published by his son in Schmidt's Zeitschrift für Geschichte. Though it would be presumptuous to say that no one, however gifted, can ever see into the future, yet only those who are highly gifted can do so. One looks for dignity, gravity, and seriousness, both in tone and language. The wit, the jester, and the scoffer, have not much in common with the Prophet. On these grounds the Lehnin prophecy stands condemned at once. One is, however, a little surprised when Wilken goes on to urge the excellence of the Latinity as an argument against the genuineness of the prophecy. Wie sollte nur ein Mönch dazu kommen, in so reiner und gelehrter lateinischer Sprache, welche keine Spur männischer Bildung trägt, sich ausdrücken?

¹ Nicolas Kindlinger was originally a Minorite at Münster, then in succession keeper of the Archives at Essen and Fulda, and finally parish priest in his birthplace Neudorf in Rheingau. He died 1819.

The texts of the prophecy vary somewhat, as has been already remarked. The text here adopted is GIESELER’s, which is taken from the Leipzic edition of 1808, with the correction merely of typographical errors. Gieseler considers that this edition is the work of a monk from the abbey of Huysberg (suppressed 1804), being a copy of the original. The original, he attributes to NICOLAS VON ZITZWITZ, Abbot of Huysberg, about 1690.

Vaticinium b. fratri Hermanni, Monachi quondam Lehnicensis, Ordinis Cisterciensis, qui circa annum 1300 floruit, et in Monasterio Lehninensi vixit. Ex libro meptò, ex quo constat, hoc vaticinium jam ante annos 400 consignatum esse.

Nunc tibi cum cura, Lehnin, cano fata futura, Quae mihi monstravit Dominus, qui cuncta creavit.
Nam licet insigni, sicut sol, splendescs igni,
Et vitam totam nunc degas summe devotion,

5 Abundentque rite tranquillæ commoda vite;
Tempus erit tandem, quo te non cernis eandem,
Imo vix ullam, sed 1, si bene dixero, nullam.
Quae te fundavit gens 2 haec te semper amavit;
Hac pereunte peris, nec mater amabilis eris.

10 Et nunc absque mora propinquat flebilis hora,
Qua stirps Ottonis, nostræ decus 3 regionis,
Magna ruit fato, nullo superstite nato,
Tuncque cades primum sed nondum venis ad imum.

1 sed a. l. aut.  2 gens a. l. stirps.  3 11. decus a. l. terris.
THE PROPHECY.

15 Interea diris angetur Marchia miris.
Nam domus Ottonum fiet spelunca leonum,
Ac erit exclusus vero de sanguine fusus,
Quando peregrini veniunt ad tecta Chorini.
Cerberoas fastus mox tollit Cesariae astus,
Sed parum tuto gaudebit Marchia acuto.

20 Regalis Leo rursum tendit ad altera cursum,
Nec dominos veros huc terra videbit et heros.
Omnia turbabunt rectores, damnaque dabunt.
Nobilitas dives vexabit undique ives,
Raptabit Clerum nullo discrimine rerum,
Et facient isti quod factum tempore Christi:
Corpora multorum vendentur contra decorum.

25 Ne penitus desit, tibi qui, mea Marchia, praesit, Ex humili surgis, binis nunc inclyta burgis,
Ascendisque facem jactando nomine pacem,
Dumque lupos necas, ovibus praeordia secas.
Dico tibi verum, tua stirpe longeva dierum
Imperii parvis patriis dominabitur arvis,
Donec prostrati fuerint, qui sunt honorati
Urbes vastabant, dominos regnare vetabant.

30 Succedens patri tollit privilegia fratri:
Non faciet bustum, non justum credere justum.
Defosso variis bellis sortisque procellis
Mox frater fortis succedit tempore mortis, Fortis ille quidem, sed vir vanissimus idem.

35 Scandere vult montem, nequeat cum scandere pontem
En acuet ense, miseri o Lehninenses!
Quid curet fratres, qui vult excindere patres!
Alter ab hoc Martem sequit ludicicare per artem, Auspicium natis hic prebet felicitatis.

40 Quod dum servatur, ingens fortunis paratur.

1 14. miris a. l. minis, curis.
2 20. tendit a. l. tendet. altera a. l. aethera. The private life of Sigismund was such that aethera can hardly be the true reading, at least if aethera is to mean Heaven.
3 40. This line in some versions runs Dum cogitat montem vix potest scandere pontem. The reading in the text comes from the Kindlinger MS. now in the State Archives at Berlin. There is also a variation between montem, pontem and montes, pontes. The reading Dum cogitat, &c., is probably a correction, to avoid the clumsiness of the double scandere.
THE PROPHECY.

Hujus erunt nati conformi sorte besti.
Inferet at tristem patriae tunc femina pestem,
Femina serpens taebe contacta recentis.
Hoc ad undem durabit stemma venenum.

Et nunc is profet, qui te, Lehnin, nimis edit, Dividit ut cultor, atheus, acsortor, adulter.
Ecclesiam vastat, bona religiosa subhastat.
Ite, meus populus, protector est tibi nullus,
Hora donec veniet, nova qua restitutio fiat.

Filius amentis probat instituta parentis,
Insipiens totus, tamen audit vulgo devotus;
Nec sat severus, hinc dictur optimus herus.
Huic datur ex genere quinos qualis ipse videre.
Anno funesto loco vitam linquit honesto.

Postulat hinc turbae praonii natus in urbe.
Sae ceteri subolem, sovet hic formidine prolem,
Quod timet obscurum, certo tamen eceo futurum.

Forma rerum nova mox fit patiente Jehova.
Mille scatet naves, cujus duratio brevis,

Multa per edictum, sed turbans plura per ictum.
Quae tamen in pejus mutantur jussibus ejus,
In melius fato converti posse putato.

Post patrem natus est Principe Marchionatus.
Ingenio nullos non vivere sinit inultos

Dum nimium credit, miserum pecus lupus edit,
Et sequitur servus Domini mox fata protervus.

Tunc venient, quibus a burgia nomina tribus,
Et crescit latus magno sub Principe status,
Securitas gentis et fortitudo regentia.

Sed nil juvat, prudentia quando cubabit.
Qui successor erit, patria haud vestigia terit.
Orate, frater, lacrymis non parcite, matres!
Fallit in hoc nomen, lesti reginmis omen.
Nil supereat boni, veteres migrare coloni!

Et jacet extinctus foris quassatus et intus.

1 48. tabe a. l. labe.
2 58. quinos a. l. quinque.
3 69. This line is sometimes given, Ingenio multos non vivere, &c., sometimes, Ingenio multos qui vivere, &c. Neither of which makes good sense.
4 74. Et a. l. est.
THE PROPHECY.

Mox juvenis fremit, dum magna puerpera gemit.
Sed quis turbatum poterit refingere statum?
Vexillum tanget, sed fata crudelia planget,
Plantium hinc\(^1\) austris vitam vult crederis claustris.

85 Qui sequitur, præces imitatur pessimus aves,
Non robur menti, non adsunt numina genti.
Cujus opem petit, contrarius hic sibi statit.
Et perit in undis, qui miscet summa profundis.

Natus floreat, quod non sperasset, habebit,
90 Sed populus tristis siebit temporibus istis.
Nam sortis mirae videntur fata venire,
Et Præcips nescit, quod nova potentia crescit.

Tandem sceptrum gerit, qui stemmatis ultimis erit.
Israel nefandum seculs audet\(^2\) morte piandum,

95 Et pastor gregem recipit, Germania Regem.
Marchia, cunctorum penitus oblieta malorum,
Ipsa suas audet sovere, nec advena gaudet,
Frisonaque Lehnnini surgent\(^3\) et tecta Chorini,
Et veteri more Clerus splendescit honore,\(^4\)

100 Nec lupus nobili plus insidiatur ovili.

EXPLANATION OF THE PROPHECY

Lehnin is two German miles from Brandenburg and three from Potsdam. The rich Cistercian monastery was founded by Otto I., son of Albrecht der Bär, about 1180. At its dissolution it possessed two small towns and sixty-four villages. It was the parent monastery of Chorin, Himmelspforte,

\(^1\) hinc a. l. hie, his, sic.
\(^2\) audet a. l. audit.
\(^3\) surgent a. l. surgunt.
\(^4\) The Leipsic edition of 1807 makes this verse contain a date, which some have supposed to be intended by the author of the prophecy as the date of its completion. By printing the verse thus—et Vexter More CLerVs spLenDesClsIt honore
we get—V + I + M + C + L + V + L + D + C + I = 5 + 1 + 1000 + 100 + 50 + 5 + 50 + 500 + 100 + 1 = 1812.
But this piece of ingenuity does not seem to be older than the Leipsic edition.
and Neuzelle; and appears to have been the usual burial-place of the Electors.

The first thirteen lines refer to the "Ascanische Periode," as it is called. The "Ascanische Haus"\footnote{1 The following are the leading members of the House:—} seems to derive its name from the castle Ascanienburg near Aschersleben. It became extinct after having held the Mark Brandenburg for about 170 years. Albrecht der Bär was made first Elector by Barbarossa in the Reichstag at Merseburg, 1152.

The next six lines (14 to 20) refer to the "Bairische Periode," when the Mark passes to the Bavarian House, the arms of which were a golden lion on a black field, to which reference is perhaps made in v. 15, as well as to the House of Luxemburg, the arms of which were a blue lion on a gold field. Unless the 'spelunca leonum' refers to the

\textsuperscript{1} The following are the leading members of the House:—

\begin{itemize}
  \item Albrecht der Bär d. 1168 or 1170.
  \item Otto I. d. 1198.
  \item Otto II. d. 1206.
  \item Albrecht II. (2nd son) d. 1220.
  \item John I. d. 1266. Otto III.
    \item ruled together. Conrad d. 1304.
  \item Henry of \item Sangershausen d. 1285, John II.
    \item (6th son). no son.
  \item John III.
  \item Waldemar I. no son.
  \item Otto IV. der \item Schütze or der \item Geschossene d. 1298, no son.
  \item John IV.
  \item Waldemar II.
    \item d. 1322, no son.
    \item d. 1322, no son.
\end{itemize}

The House became extinct therefore in 1322.
detestation in which these Princes were held, like the 'Cerberos fastus' below. These were times of trouble and bloodshed, the small potentates round the Mark all pressing into it (v. 14). The agnates of the extinct "Ascanische Haus" would have claimed the Mark, but the Emperor Louis¹ the Bavarian maintained, that, male issue having failed, the Mark fell to him as a fief, which he granted to his son to the exclusion of the agnates (v. 16). During these dangerous times many fugitive clergy took refuge in the monasteries of Lehnin, &c. (v. 17). A pretended Waldemar claimed to be the son of Conrad, who had died 1319, and with the help of the Emperor Charles IV. won the Mark for awhile. He is said to have been in reality Jacob Rehbock, a miller of Sandersleben; his likeness to the deceased Elector and the hatred felt against the Bavarian rulers greatly helped his cause. But Charles IV. having obtained an agreement, that, if Louis and Otto died childless, the Mark should come to the House of Luxembourg, threw over the pretender, who died 1356. Otto tried to secure the succession for his nephew Frederick, but Charles IV. compelled him to sell

¹ Emperor Louis the Bavarian.

Louis the elder receives Louis the Roman, Stephanus Otto = daughter of Brandenburg as a fief; born in Rome 1323; Fieblat, d. 1376. Charles IV. from his father 1322, d. 1365, no sons. and again 1324; Frederick.
resigned the Mark to Louis the Roman about 1349.
the Mark to Wenzeslaus, son of Charles, for 200,000 florins (v. 18). But the Mark by no means enjoys security or prosperity (v. 19).

The next seven lines (20 to 27) refer to the rule of the House of Luxemburg, which was mainly carried on by deputies, the Princes being for the most part non-resident. Wenzeslaus' misgovernment ended in his giving up the Mark to his brother Sigismund, who in 1382 married Maria, daughter of Lewis, King of Hungary and Poland. Lewis died the same year without male issue, and Sigismund soon had enough to do to protect Hungary against Charles of Anjou and the Turks. In 1387 he became Emperor; and now the Lion of Hungary had other things to do than attend to the Mark (v. 20), and it rarely even saw him (v. 21). In 1388 he mortgaged it to Jodocus of Moravia, who sold offices and towns wholesale (v. 22). In 1411 he died without sons, and the Mark reverted to Sigismund. He did not revert to it, but put in Frederick of Nuremberg as administrator. During most of this period the Mark had been the prey of robber chieftains, John and Dietrich Quizow, Puttlitz, Bredow, Rochow, &c.

In these first three periods we have mere generalities about the rulers of Brandenburg. The author now goes more into detail and devotes a line or two to each Prince of the House of Hohenzollern; with v. 27 we commence their history.

Frederick of Nuremberg (v. 27 to 35) was a good ruler. Sigismund, having no sons, made over the Mark to him for 400,000 gold florins, and Frederick was solemnly invested at Constance, where he was attending the Council, 1415. Thus the Burggraf of Nuremberg became Markgraf of Brandenburg (v. 27, 28). But his place was no sinecure: his name might mean peace—Friedrich (jactando nomine pacem), but with such people as the brothers Quizow to manage not much peace was to be enjoyed. In 1414 he had stormed three robbers' nests and captured John von Quizow. Later on he hunted out Dietrich and other robber chiefs. He had wars with many of his neighbours, especially the Hussites, wars which, though in the main successful, cost much blood and treasure (v. 30). His family¹ held the Mark longer than any other (v. 31); but owing to the power of the nobles and the privileges of the towns, the authority of the Markgraf was much limited (v. 32), until the turbulent nobles were subdued, and the Hussites conquered at Tangermünd (v. 33, 34). He died in 1440.

Frederick II (v. 35 to 38), though only second son, succeeded his father, the elder son John being a man of quiet, studious habits, as it would seem, who at his father's request, consented to be dis-inherited (v. 35), an arrangement which the pro-

¹ Frederick I. of Nuremberg d. 1440.

John (Alchemista) Frederick II. = Hedwig, daughter of Albertus (Achilles). d. 1464, no son. d. 1471. John d. before his father.
phant condemns (v. 36)—a death-bed request cannot make what is not right right. Frederick II, "with the iron teeth," had tedious wars with Saxony, Poland, Bohemia, and Pomerania. On one occasion the food was shot out of his hand, as he was raising it to his mouth. Chronic nervousness was the result, and the following year, 1470, he ceded the government to his brother Albertus (v. 37, 38). He died in 1471.

Albertus (v. 38 to 43) was the wonder of the age for prowess and strength; hence his sobriquet of Achilles: but at the same time he was very vain (v. 39). He was excommunicated by the Pope, and is said to have thought of crossing the Alps in arms, to take Rome. There is a story that the monks of Lehnin took away a bridge before his eyes, to prevent the excommunicate Elector from entering the monastery. A broken bridge stops a leader, who thought of crossing the Alps (v. 40)! He had feuds with the Prince-bishops of Würzburg and Bamberg. If he would attack such dignitaries, what could the monks of Lehnin expect from him (v. 41, 42)?

Johannes Cicero (v. 43 to 46) was left to

---

1 Albertus (Achilles) d. 1486.
Johannes (Cicero) d. 1499.
Joachim I. (Nestor) = Elizabeth of Denmark.
Albert, Cardinal Archbishop of Mainz.

eight sons
eleven daughters died 1535.
govern the Mark when only sixteen, during the frequent absence of his father. When he came of age, 1476, his father gave up the government to him entirely. He was peacefully inclined, and in 1474 won great fame by concluding peace between Casimir, King of Poland, his son Vladislaus, King of Bohemia, and Matthias, King of Hungary. The father and son readily agreed to peace. Matthias was not so ready. In a four hours' speech, the youthful peace-maker persuaded him (v. 43), and hence the name of Cicero. His eloquence was none the less forcible, in that he had 6000 men at his back as a last argument. He was economical as well as peaceful in his government, and largely increased his domain (v. 44, 45).

Both his sons became Electors, Joachim of Brandenburg, Albert of Mainz (v. 46). Why Joachim I. was called Nestor, is not clear. He was a scholar and a linguist; and in the movement of the Reformation was more strongly opposed to Luther than his brother, the Archbishop of Mainz. But his wife Elizabeth, daughter of John I. of Denmark, followed Luther (47, 48), and in 1528 had to fly from her angry husband in consequence. On his death-bed he made both his sons swear to remain true to Catholicism: both, however, became Protestants. Joachim died in 1535. It is important to remark, with a view to testing the truth of the prophecy, that according to v. 49, eleven Protestant rulers of Brandenburg are to follow Joachim. Then the House is to return to Catholicism.

I. The next five lines (50 to 55) refer to Joachim II. In 1539 he openly embraced Protestantism, and in 1542 he commenced to protestantise the monastery of Lehnin. Luther's Catechism and Melancthon’s Loco Communis were introduced, and most of the monks were removed to Frankfort to learn Protestant doctrine (v. 50 to 54). Joachim's concubine was Anna von Sydon, and he is said to have kept a harem (v. 51).

II. John George (v. 55 to 60) was a still more zealous Protestant than his father (v. 55). He was a Lutheran and persecuted the crypto-Calvinists, the more moderate followers of Melancthon. Yet he sent help to Calvinists abroad, such as the Elector Gebhard and Henry of Navarre. In the latter case, the helping force was defeated and driven back by the Duke of Guise. He saw two of his predecessors, his grandfather and

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{John I.} & = \text{Elizabeth of Denmark,} \\
\text{d. 1535.} & \\
\text{Joachim II.} & = \text{Magdalena, daughter of} \\ \text{d. 1571.} & \text{George, Duke of Saxony.} \\ \text{John George} & \\ \text{d. 1598.} & \\
\text{Joachim Frederick} & = \begin{cases}
1. \text{Catherine, daughter of John of Kistrin,} \\
\text{d. 1508.} \\
2. \text{1603 Eleanor, Princess of Prussia.} \\
\end{cases} \\
\text{John Sigismund} & = \begin{cases}
\text{Anna, Princess of Prussia. Bishop of Strassburg,} \\ \text{d. 1819.} \\
\text{John George, Christian William,} \\ \text{Archbishop of Magdeburg, d. 1685.} \\ \end{cases} \end{align*}
\]
father, Joachim I. and II., and three of his successors, his son, grandson, and great-grandson, Joachim Frederick, John Sigismund, and George William (v. 58). He died in 1598, a year in which fever and quinsy were fatally prevalent (v. 59).

III. Joachim Frederick (v. 60 to 63) though a sickly child lived to be over sixty. He was very anxious that his son, John Sigismund, should remain Lutheran, and the prophecy represents him as fearing his son's apostasy. In 1613, John Sigismund did turn Calvinist, in order (it is said) to gain the help of the Dutch in claiming the heritage of Cleves (v. 61, 62), just as Joachim II, is said to have turned Lutheran, in order to seize the rich abbeys, &c., in his domain. Others interpret these two lines of the division of Cleves, which Joachim Frederick wished to keep undivided in the family.

IV. John Sigismund (v. 63 to 68) becoming Calvinist is the 'nova forma rerum.' Among his many faults (v. 64) are mentioned drinking, and a temper so violent as to affect his health. The 'duratio brevis' of his reign was ten years. His change of religion caused the greatest commotion among the Lutherans, which his edict of 1614, exhorting both Lutherans and Calvinists to mutual toleration, did not allay. It ended in a riot, in which lives were lost and the houses of Calvinists stormed. The famous box on the ear which John Sigismund gave to the Count Palatine Wolfgang William in Wesel had before this caused much bloodshed (v. 65). The prophecy seems to hint that the increased hatred of the Lutherans against the Calvinists may lead to the former becoming better disposed towards the Church (v. 66, 67). It is worth noting that John Sigismund's wife and his father's second wife were sisters, Anna and Eleanor, Princesses of Prussia.

V. The rule of George William¹ (v. 68 to 72) falls in the time of the Thirty Years' War, in which Brandenburg suffered greatly, in spite of George William's attempts to stand well with both parties. He deceived both, and was deceived by both, while his people's lands were constantly ravaged (v. 70). He made an alliance with Gustavus Adolphus in 1631, surrendering the fortress of Spandau. He died Nov. 20th, 1640, and his Minister, Adam, Count of Schwarzenberg, died a few weeks after him (v. 71).

VI. Frederick William, the great Elector and founder of the State of Prussia (v. 72 to 76), far surpassed his predecessors in the art of government. By the Peace of Westphalia, 1648, he

¹ John Sigismund = Anna, Princess of Prussia.
   d. 1619.

George William = Elizabeth, daughter of
   d. 1640.
   Frederick IV. Elector of the Palatinate.

Frederick William
   d. 1688.

Frederick III. (I. as king)
   d. 1713.
gained the reversion of Magdeburg, which fell to him in 1680 after the death of Augustus of Saxony. Thus he was the first who included three Burgs in his title (v. 72),—Brandenburg, Nuremberg, and Magdeburg. He reformed finances, promoted commerce and agriculture, welcomed French refugees to strengthen native manufactures, &c. The devastation of the Thirty Years' War was soon changed into great prosperity (v. 73, 74).

VII. The reign of the Elector Frederick III. (v. 76 to 81), afterwards King Frederick I., marks the turning point in the prophecy, i.e. it is here that it changes from one-sided history to an attempt to predict the future.

Frederick took a decided part in the war against France, and moreover helped the Emperor against the Turks. In a year he almost doubled his army. The great Elector left 24,000 men; Frederick raised it to 40,000. This involved con-

\[\text{Frederick I.} \quad = \quad \text{Sophia Charlotte of Hanover,} \\
\quad \text{d. 1713.} \\
\text{Frederick William I.} \quad = \quad \text{Sophia Dorothea of Hanover, daughter of George I.} \\
\quad \text{d. 1740.} \\
\text{Frederick II.} \quad = \quad \text{Elisabeth Christine, Princess of Brunswick-Bevern.} \\
\quad \text{d. 1786.} \\
\text{Augustus William} \quad = \quad \text{d. 1758.} \\
\text{Frederick William II.} \quad = \quad \text{d. 1797.} \\
\text{Frederick William III. Louis} \quad = \quad \text{d. 1840.} \\
\text{d. 1796;} \\
\text{Frederick William IV.} \quad = \quad \text{d. 1881.} \]
scriptions and increased taxation. The monasteries suffered no less than the people. The Brethren had to lament the burdens imposed on the convents, as mothers had to lament the conscription of their sons (v. 77). The peace-promising name of Friedrich is again a mockery (v. 78, cf. 29). In the former reign Protestants had migrated into Brandenburg after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, 1685. Frederick invited many more, who were quartered on the lands of dispossessed inhabitants, especially of the monasteries (v. 79).

With v. 80 we begin the attempted prediction, which will be seen to be a hopeless failure. Neither the general result prophesied, viz. the return of Brandenburg to Catholicism, and consequent downfall of the Protestant Hohenzollerns, nor the particulars foretold of the individual rulers have been fulfilled; some of the attempts to make the latter fit known facts are simply laughable.

To begin with, the miserable end predicted of Frederick III. (v. 80), whom the author evidently abhors, never came to pass. On the other hand his promotion to the dignity of King, which a true prophet would surely have known and disclosed, is not mentioned.

VIII. (v. 81 to 85.) Frederick III. being in weak health, the pseudo-prophet conjectures that his heir will succeed young, and in the vehemence of youth will put down all opposition with a high
THE ATTEMPTED PROPHECY BEGINS. 191

hand; meanwhile the Church—magna puerpera—sighs and groans (v. 81). But violence is of no avail, except to produce civil war (v. 82, 83).
Austria—flantibus his austris—uses its influence on the Catholic side, new monasteries are built, and, the Catholics being the most faithful subjects, the baffled persecutor has to rely upon them for support (v. 84). Perhaps the prophet was hardly rash enough to mean that Frederick III.'s successor would end his days in a monastery. In any case, the prediction is singularly unlike the reign of Frederick William I.

IX. (v. 85 to 89.) The next ruler is supposed to follow the evil example of his ancestors in keeping up the differences created by them. He applies to Lutheran Princes for help, but they turn against the Calvinist (v. 87). He turns everything upside down, and himself perishes in the confusion (v. 88).
A strange picture this of the successes and victories—astounding all Europe—of Frederick II.!

X. (v. 89 to 93.) The confusion of the last reign was such that the next heir is surprised at being able to succeed to the government at all (v. 89).
(N.B. There is not a hint through all this that the rulers are now kings.) The people already Catholic at heart, content themselves with weeping, but do not rebel (v. 90): they see that their deliverance is approaching as the power of the Church

1 Austria being south of Brandenburg; besides which there is no doubt a play upon the words.
increases (v. 91); but their ruler sees this not (v. 92). This then is a description of the reign of Frederick William II!

XI. (v. 93 to the end.) We have reached the eleventh and last spreader of the poison of heresy (cf. v. 49). The Jews, not the faithful Catholics, bring about the final catastrophe. The Jews had been driven out of Brandenburg by John George, in 1671, on account of the pretended high treason of the Jew Lippold, and they were not readmitted until the reign of the great Elector, in 1671. Hence in the author's time they were a new and unwelcome sight in Brandenburg, and he uses them as a convenient deus ex machina to bring about the necessary catastrophe, for which he does not wish to make the Catholics responsible (v. 94). Protestants will return to the Church, and Germany will receive a King (v. 95). Brandenburg will flourish again—a Mark still, not a Kingdom,—and the foreign refugees, so hateful to the prophet, will no longer enjoy the land (v. 96, 97); the monasteries of Lehnin and Chorin will be rebuilt, and they will all live happily ever afterwards (v. 98 to 100). Such is this prophet's idea of the reign of Frederick William III.

Some of those who defend the prophecy as genuine, arrange the last few divisions differently so as to make not Frederick William III, but his successor the undenum stemma.¹ In any case the prophecy has not been fulfilled: but by this arrangement mox juvenis fremit, dum magna puerpera genuit, &c., is made to refer to Frederick II.,¹ and a great hit is thus claimed for the prophet. In March, 1744, Maria Theresa was expecting her confinement and also news of the result of the Prussian attack. Her first son Joseph was born just about the time of the battle of Mollwitz. But if the magna puerpera is to be taken literally at all it must refer to a Brandenburg Princess; the prophecy is not concerned with Austria.

¹ This became necessary when facts proved that Frederick William III, was not the last of his House. It was accomplished in one of two ways;

Briefly to sum up the case against this fictitious prediction:—

(1) The verses are not those of a monk of the thirteenth century, e.g. the name Jehovah (v. 63) would be unknown to him. It does not occur in the Vulgate, and a monk of that time would know no other version.

either the text of v. 73 was changed from 'magno sub Principe' into 'sub utroque Principe,' so that v. 72 to 75 referred to both the great Elector and his successor, as in the Leipsic edition of 1807; or v. 75 was separated from the preceding three and assigned singly to Frederick III., as in the Frankfurt und Leipzig edition of 1808. Of course it is difficult to make twelve names fit with 'ad undenum stemma,' but this has been comfortably interpreted to mean the poison of Protestantism will last at least until the eleventh generation. Bouverot follows the plan of the edition of 1807, Von Schütz that of the edition of 1808. Boost has a slightly different arrangement; he complains of Wilken for making 72 to 75 refer to Frederick William the Great alone, which of course makes the rest of the prophecy out of joint, whereas only 72 and 73 refer to the great Elector, 74 and 75 to Frederick III.

¹ It has already been noticed that Frederick II. as Crown Prince considered his father as the 'juvenis' and himself as destined, if he lived, to be the 'pessimus' who was to succeed, according to the prophecy, which of course he laughed to scorn.
(2) The first 79 lines agree well with history, though they give a far from impartial view. The substance of them appears to have been taken from Annales Marchiae Brandenburgicæ of A. Angelus, Frankfort on the Oder, 1598, fol., and from the Brandenburgische Cederhain of J. W. Reutsch, Baireuth, 1682, 8vo. The remaining 21 lines do not agree with history at all.

(3) The change of the Mark into a Kingdom is not foretold.

(4) Though the acquisition of Magdeburg is alluded to (v. 72), no notice is taken of the further addition of Neufchatel and Mecklenburg.

(5) No mention is made of the greatness of Frederick II., nor of his augmentation of Prussia; nor yet

(6) of the time when the Hohenzollerns will have seven Burgs in their title. Cf. the King’s title in the Gesetzsammlung for 1817, p. 18.

(7) Neither Frederick William III. nor his successor has been the last of the House.

(8) Neither the world nor Germany has become Catholic.

It will be instructive to give one or two of the desperate attempts to make the last 21 verses agree with facts.

v. 84. Flantibus his austris—the blowing of the south wind is the offers of marriage from Naples and Parma to the daughter of Maria Theresa, and from Parma and Spain to her sons. Or, as Bou-verot prefers, Flantibus austris means 'declining in health' (he cites Hor. Od. II. xiv.), and claustris refers to Frederick II. at Sans-Souci.

v. 88. Et perit in undis refers to Frederick William II. dying of dropsy, the waves being the water from his own body! Besides the absurdity, dropsy is the hereditary disease of the family. Frederick William I. and Frederick II. both died of it. Others, less daring, make in undis refer to the chateau near Berlin, Pfaueninsel, which had much water about it, where the king died. Bouverot says he died in a bath.

v. 94. The sæclus nefandum is supposed to refer to the death of Prince Frederick Louis at the hands of his brother the Crown Prince, afterwards Frederick William III. The latter had abused his younger brother for being polite to Madame Lichtenau, their father's mistress. But this involves reading 'audit' for 'Audet.' In the prophecy the Jews do not hear of the monstrous wickedness, which is pointless, but commit it. Bouverot remains true to 'audet,' and explains that in February, 1840, some Jews at Damascus were accused of murdering a Catholic Priest and his servant, and of using their blood "pour la confection de leurs pains azymes." "La figure dont s'est servi le frère Hermann en s'exprimant dans 94 comme si la nation tout entière eût été coupable de l'assassinat en question, constitue en rhétorique l'emploi du tout pour une partie du tout!"
196 EDITIONS OF THE PROPHECY IN GERMANY.

It has been remarked already that the literature on the subject of this pseudo-prophecy is considerable. The forgery itself harmonized so well with the hopes of zealous Catholics and the angry feelings of Prussia's enemies, that we need not wonder at its being so widely accepted. It may be worth while to enumerate a few of the works written in defence of its authenticity.

This is probably a rare book. It was the first on the subject of the prophecy that the present writer saw, an advantage for which he is indebted to the kindness of Dr. Döllinger. It was preceded by _Frater Hermann von den Schicksalen der Mark Brandenburg und ihrer Regenten._ Leipzig, 1807.

And followed by

1 It is the one from which Gieseler took his text, and which he considers to have been the work of a Benedictine, the last librarian of the Abbey of Huysburg.

2 It bears the motto, "Prophetias nolite spernere; omnia autem probate, quod bonum est tenete."—Thess. I. v. 20. Giesebrecht supposes Kindlinger to be the writer, on account of the similarity between this and the Kindlinger MS. in the Royal Archives at Berlin. With the date 1812 (v. 99), although the author doubts whether it was intended by the prophet, he says the 44th Hamburger Zeitung agrees, which gives an extract from the Journal de Paris, Mars 10, 1807, to this effect. In Versailles an old book has again been brought to light, with the title, FRANCE, AND BELGIUM.

Twenty years later there appeared in France

The course of events induced the author of the last to write again and at much greater length on the same subject.

This is one of the most remarkable productions. In it Bouverot almost assumes the tone of a prophet himself. Persuaded that the 'merveilleuse Prophétie' is a divine revelation, and that the then reigning King of Prussia, Frederick William IV., is to be the last of his House, who will become Prophecies for all time, from the year 1521 to the end of the world. Author, Joseph Justo, of Naples. The Paris Academy has handed over this work of twenty-four pages to the Minister Louvois. For 140 years it has proved true. On 1806 it says, "Lay in store of oats and provisions, for at the end of August will come a great war and spread to many lands; the people will suffer death and many defeats. In 1807 much snow will fall early in February, and hence great floods." Most important, however, of 1811; "It will be hard to support the oxen in the severe winter. From this year begins a hundred years' peace in Christendom. Bread, wine, and clothing in abundance." Thus in 1812 will come the peace and prosperity promised in the concluding lines of the Lehnin Prophecy.

King of united Germany if he turns Catholic, Bouverot considers it his duty to convince the world of this. Together with his explanation of the prophecy he publishes his letters to the King (then Crown Prince) and to the Minister of Religion in May, 1839, and another letter to the Bishops of France and Belgium in 1841. In his letter to the Crown Prince he says that other commentators "ont, par leurs explications, plus ou moins intéressé la curiosité, mais aucun d'eux n'a fourni les véritables renseignements, dont la lecture pouvait seule être pour les princes de votre auguste famille d'une utilité réelle, solide et essentielle. C'était à moi, suivant les adorables décrets de la providence divine, qu'étaient réservés le genre et le degré de pénétration d'esprit, qu'il fallait pour démêler les sens de divers passages de la prophétie, que personne précédemment n'avait été en état d'expliquer. Cette disposition dans le cours des choses m'a paru être un indice auquel je devais reconnaître que c'était à moi qu'était assignée d'en haut la mission de faire parvenir sous les yeux de Votre Altesse Royale des écrits de l'espèce de ceux ci-joints."

Bouverot sometimes quotes without acknowledgment¹ the Paris edition of 1830, the title of which runs thus:—

Prophétie du Frère Hermann de Lehnin, annonçant

¹ Was this also written by Bouverot? It is not mentioned at all by Gieseler, to whom I am indebted for the titles of one or two of the works quoted, which I have not seen.
de deux choses l'une: ou que les princes de la famille royale de Prusse se réuniront à l'Église catholique, ou qu'ils périront tous du vivant de S. M. le roi de Prusse actuel. A la Libraire de Hivert, 1830.

The treatise concludes with these words:—"S'il arrive un jour que la prophétie du Frère Hermann soit accomplie dans toute son intégrité, elle prendra alors sa place parmi les merveilles les plus étonnantes de la puissance de Dieu, parmi les bienfaits les plus touchants de sa bonté, parmi les plus précieuses instructions qui aient été données aux hommes."

Bouverot soon found an echo in Germany.

Herr v. Schütz gives up the absurd interpretations of Et perit in undis (v. 88)—möchte ich zu sehr blos zufällig finden; they have no connection with miscet summa profundis. Rather, Frederick William II. mixed up religion and revolution, and raised a storm in the midst of which he died. He is also dissatisfied with some of Bouverot’s interpretations—e.g. Israel’s sceled nefandum (v. 94) is the marriage of Christian women with Jews. The law regards these unions as marriage, but such women are only Jews’ concubines or worse. O diese armen Geschöpfe (Bordeldirne) stehen noch viel reiner da, als alle jene Christenmädchen, die sich von Juden zu ihren H... erkaufen lassen. This is a sceled morte piandum. Herr v. Schütz is not bloodthirsty, far from it; — nichts weniger wie blutdürstig gesinnt; — still the old decree of mors civilis against the Jews is worth considering again, and perhaps reviving.

But the most curious work of all on this subject is probably

_Die Weissagungen des Mönchs Hermann zu Lehnin über Preussen, und jene des Benedictiners David Speer zu Benedict-Beuern über Bayern_,

This strange production contains material which will serve to illustrate the general subject of Dr. Döllinger's Essay; it will therefore be worth while to give a somewhat longer notice of it than of its predecessors.

The author takes as his motto "Nihil est in historia pura et illustri brevitate dulcius," and, by way of acting up to it, he commences with Adam and works through Jewish and Christian history, as a means of throwing light on a supposed prediction of the thirteenth century!

He notices three kinds of prophecies:—

(1) Those which foretell single definite events, without fixing the time of their occurrence.

(2) Those which also fix the time.

(3) Those which foretell a series of coming events, the verification of which must be left to history.
EXAMPLES.

(1) The charter of the Klaren-Nonnen Convent, at Mayence, in which the foundress in the eighth century (!) declares that the Prince, who should secularize the convent, should be smitten with leprosy and die an outcast from the land and people. The Elector Emmerich Joseph von Breitenbach in the eighteenth century, refused to touch it when urged to do so by the Illuminati. His successor, Charles Joseph von Erthal, fulfilled the prophecy. He died leprous and in exile, last Archbishop and Elector of Mayence.

The prophecy of the nun, Elizabeth Barton, the holy maid of Kent, on the reign and life of Henry VIII.

The prophecy on the Jesuits. One of their first founders said, three hundred years ago, "times will come, in which the Jesuits will be driven out like dogs; and again other times will come, in which they will return like nobles." And what is needed, asks Herr Boost, to bring this prophecy to accomplishment? Must not the irreligion, dissoluteness, and cupidity of Princes, and the blindness of a Pope, have reached the highest pitch, to hunt out in the most shameful way 22,000 of the most active (sic) children of the Church? Must not streams of blood flow, whole kingdoms be overthrown, whole dynasties be driven out, in order that those, who were driven out like dogs, return like nobles?

(2) The prophecy of Cardinal d'Ally, theologian and astronomer, in 1414, respecting the great conjunction of Saturn in 1789. Works printed in Venice 1492. "Si mundus usque ad illa tempora duraverit, quod solus Deus novit, multae tumc magnae et mirabiles alterationes mundi et mutationes future sunt et maxime circa leges." Humboldt wonders that this prediction has attracted so little attention. La fins des temps, par Eugène

The prophecy of John Müller, Bishop of Ratis-bon, d. 1476.

"Post mille expletos a partu virginis annos Et septingentos rursus abire datos, Octuagesimus octavus, mirabilis annus, Ingruet secum tristia fata feret.
Si non hoc anno totus malus occidet orbis,
Si non in nihilum terra fretumque ruet,
Cuncta tamen mundi sursum ibunt atque deorsum
Imperia, et luctus undique grandis erit."

See FELLER, Dict. Hist., Tom. VI. p. 253, where it is remarked, that these verses are quoted in Jour. Hist. et Littéraire, October 15, 1787, and with a slight change of wording have been applied to the Huguenots in 1588, and the expulsion of the Stuarts in 1688.

CARDANUS, De varietate rerum, Lib. II., cap. ii., wrote in the sixteenth century, "Necessa est an.
Ch. 1800 magnam mutationem futuram esse in
lege Christi. Quoted by LESSING, Theologischer
PROPHECIES ALTOGETHER VAGUE.

Nachlass, p. 231, and applied to the theological "Aufklärerei," which had begun in his time.¹

Prophecy of the Frenchman Cazotte.

(3) The language of this third class of prophecies is often obscure, and requires a special gift in order to interpret it.

The prediction of the parish priest Holzhauser in the seventeenth century. "Religio opprimi videtur; sed integrorum regnorum mutatione firmabitur amplius." And again—

"Sub bello ingenti Germania tota dolebit, Gallus omnis erit totius origo mali."

and "Germania misere lacerabitur," and "Omnes depauperabuntur."

To this class belong the prophecies of S. Hildegard, of Hermann of Lehnin, and of the Benedictine Speer. The last-mentioned prophecy was circulated in Bavaria at the time of the dissolution of the monastery of Benedictbeuern in 1803. It professed to be written by a monk of this abbey, one Simon Speer, in 1699, and to have been preserved among the archives of the monastery. The subject-matter of it was Benedictbeuern and the Dukes of ¹ But Herr Boost omits to mention that Lessing quotes it as an instance of a false prophet’s prediction being fulfilled. Cardanus, says Lessing, was höchstens nur ein sehr gelehrt Charlatan. "Quod si ita est, necesse est an. Ch. 1800, &c.," are Cardanus’ words. Now the ‘quod si ita est’ is not true; therefore Cardanus’ grounds for his prediction are gone—non est ita. He had said—if x, then y; but y has happened without x preceding. Moreover he said that the change might come a little before or a little after 1800.

204 POPULAR EDITIONS OF THE PROPHECY.

Bavaria; and with the alteration of a few expressions and the omission of sixty-six lines it is taken word for word from the Lehnin Prophecy. Oddly enough, Herr Boost not only believes in its genuineness, but thinks that it proves the genuineness of the Lehnin Prophecy also! ¹

About the same time appeared one or two cheap popular editions of the latter fiction, in pamphlet form, which contributed to give it a much wider circulation, e.g. Die höchstdenkwürdige Weissagung des hochwürdigsten Pater Abt Hermann v. Lehnin über Preussens ältere und neuere Geschichte von 1322 bis 2000. Bremen, 1848.

The forgery has been thoroughly exposed by various writers already mentioned; by Frederick Wilken in a paper Ueber das s. g. Vaticinium Lehninense written in 1821, but first published after the author’s death in Schmidt’s allgem. Zeit- schrift für Geschichte, VI., Berlin, 1846; by Professor Giesebrecht in a paper contributed to the same volume, Die Weissagung von Lehnin und Christoph Heinrich Oelven; and by Dr. J. C. L.

¹ In conclusion he quotes an ‘uralte Prophesieung,’ which says

In vero gaudebis, post tenebras lucem videbis;
Nanque ante ortum duo decimi (seculi) bestia et scortum
Precipites ruent in Abyssum, nec inde resurgent, Et signum Crucis splendebit in gloria lucis
Cum fide et lege unus pastor cum uno grege.
Gieseler in a small treatise of which much use has been made in the present Appendix, *Die Leh.
minische Weissagung gegen das Haus Hohenzollern, als ein Gedicht des Abtes von Huysburg, Nicolaus von Zitzwitz aus dem J. 1692 nachgewiesen, erklärt und in Hinsicht auf Veranlassung und Zweck beleuchtet.
Erfurt, 1849.

It remains to say something of the probable author of this celebrated fiction, so far as anything definite can be ascertained.

The prophecy itself tells us something. The author is evidently a zealous Catholic, who regards the Reformation as a plague, who abhors the reformed Creed adopted by John Sigismund even more than Lutheranism, and who hates the House of Hohenzollern. He is probably not a native of Brandenburg; a native would scarcely have given only the black side of the history of his country, omitting all its glories; nor would he easily have separated the hopes of the future from the Hohenzollerns. Still this is mere probability. The attitude assumed by many German Ultramontanes at the present day with regard to the Papacy and its hope, France, as against the German Empire, forbids one to argue with any certainty from patriotic tendencies, when they are brought into collision with religious fanaticism.

Some have supposed Andrew Fromm, Provost of S. Peter's in Berlin, to have been the author. In 1666 he was deprived, and in 1668 became a Catholic. But there is no evidence whatever in favour of this view. Moreover we have seen that the prophecy was not written before 1690, and Fromm died in 1685.

More persons have been of opinion that Martin Frederick Seidel composed it. Weise, Kuster, and Wilken supported this view. Seidel was a practised writer of Latin verse, and was well read in the history of Brandenburg. Moreover a copy of the prophecy with emendations and corrections was found in his library. But the forger would not have written notes on the prophecy, as Seidel did, thus attracting attention to himself. And Seidel was no Catholic, but a zealous Lutheran, and in character not likely to be guilty of an underhand attack on the ruling House.

A much better case may be made out for the conjecture that Christopher Henry Oelven was the author. Such a production is not unlike this strange man, who chafing against the present revelled in an imaginary past. He too was a writer of Latin verses, especially anagrams, delighted in the marvellous, and believed in the possibility of acquiring the art of prophecy. One of his anagrams is quite in the spirit of the prophecy.

“Friedericus Ludovicus Princps Arausoniensis” into “Fili, Caesar eris, Dux purpureusque Sionis “Vincendo.”

which proved false, however, for the infant died in May, 1708, being only six months old. Compare also his epigram on the same child.

"Sit pietas, sit justa Fides, sit Pacis in armis, Cura tibi: hoc nomen vult, Frederico, tuum;
Tum gere bella ferox, sed non nisi ab hoste coactus, Sic Ludovice, tibi Vincere Ludus erit."

The use of the words 'Jehovah' (v. 63) and 'Israel' (v. 94) in the prophecy are like 'Dux Sionis' in the anagram. Twice in the prophecy (v. 29, 78) there is a play on the name Friedrich, as in the first two lines of the epigram; and the pun, 'Ludovice'—'Vincere Ludus,' is somewhat like the 'per edictum'—'per ictum' in the prophecy (v. 65).

But this is very far from conclusive; and on the other side it must be remembered that Oelven never betrayed any leanings towards Catholicism, which, with his hasty and impetuous nature, he would almost certainly have done, had he possessed any. Still less had he any ill-will against the House of Hohenzollern. Rather the contrary, as the verses quoted above show. They are quite irreconcilable with the prophecy. Professor Giesebrecht of Munich, formerly of Berlin, is the principal advocate of the theory that Oelven is the criminal.

Dr. Gieseler, however, contends for another author, viz. Nicolas von Zitzwitz, Abbot of Huysburg. Gieseler is surprised that the statement of J. C. Harenberg has not attracted more attention; viz. that the Abbot John Fabricius told him in Helmstädt in 1726, that Zitzwitz was the author. Harenberg is not altogether a trustworthy person, but there is no reason for doubting the truth of this statement. Zitzwitz and Fabricius were intimately acquainted; both had much at heart the reunion of the Evangelical Church with the Catholic, and this Lutheran Abbot was prepared to make concessions to his Catholic friend, such as no Lutheran theologian had ever made before. It is quite conceivable that Zitzwitz confided to him in the course of frequent deliberations, that he had written the famous Vaticinium himself. Fabricius did not tell Harenberg until twenty-two years after the death of Zitzwitz, and Harenberg did not divulge the secret till long after Fabricius' death.

This statement of Harenberg's is confirmed very remarkably by the author of the Frankfort and Leipsic treatise on the prophecy, 1808. Internal evidence shows that he was a Benedictine, and he states in his preface, that, as librarian of an abbey some thirty years before (about 1777), he had found the MS. of the prophecy written in the hand of a well-known learned Prelate in the time of the great Elector and of King Frederick I. There can be little doubt that the Benedictine writer was the last librarian of the abbey of Huysburg, which was abolished in 1804, and that the well-known learned Prelate is Zitzwitz. From the heading of the MS.—ex libro Mspto, ex quo constat, hoc vaticinium ante annos 400 consignatum esse—the ex-librarian supposes that Zitzwitz had really copied the prophecy from a codex of the fourteenth century. He has no idea that the supposed copy is the original, with a lying heading, in order to conceal the real author. He prefers this version of the prophecy to all others that he has seen; but in his explanation of the prophecy he does not scruple to adopt other readings, when they suit his interpretation better than the one in his own text.

Nicolas von Zitzwitz was born of Lutheran parents in Pomerania, 1634. Under the influence of George Calixtus he joined the Roman Catholic Church, and in 1656 became a Benedictine. As Prior of Corvey, and afterwards Abbot of Huysburg, he displayed very great powers of organization and management, and also occupied himself much with literary work, especially the archives of Huysburg. But the work which he, perhaps, had most at heart was the reconciliation of the Lutherans with the Catholic Church. This object he shared with Bishop Spinola, and they two entered into relations with two Lutheran theologians, Molanus of Loccum, and Fabricius, Professor of theology at Helmstadt. Some writings of Zitzwitz on the subject are still extant. One cannot, of course, wonder at his believing that the reasons which induced him to become a Catholic would sooner or later induce the bulk of Protestants to do the same. Such ideas were not uncommon... among Catholics at that time. Protestantism was about to become historical. How deeply Zitzwitz cherished this hope is seen from what he said shortly before his death to his Prior. The latter was lamenting that the Abbot could not live longer in order to complete his efforts for reunion. "You too, my dear Prior, will scarcely live to see those days of blessed union. But still we will congratulate ourselves and thank the Lord, that we have seen the tree full of blossom. The fruit also will come, and our posterity will perchance gather it, without having to shake the tree." These words are quite in the spirit of the prophecy. The reconciliation of Protestantism with Catholicism, to which so many look forward, will certainly come to pass, although not so speedily as people think. The toil hitherto expended has not been thrown away; the ripe fruit will one day fall of itself, without special trouble being expended on gathering it.

Nor is this general harmony of tone between the prophecy and the known hopes and longings of Zitzwitz all. Other feelings appear in the prophecy; and it is not difficult to trace the causes of them in the circumstances of the time. Brandenburg was then swarming with thousands of the reformed faith, exiles for the most part from Catholic countries, and the Mark thus became the home of a strong and bitter opposition to the Papacy. In spite of that, the jealousy existing there between the Lutherans and Protestants of the reformed creed appeared to work in favour of Catholicism. Frederick III., according to the prophet's view, had estranged the hearts of his subjects by welcoming these exiles. Still more had he done so by his oppressive taxes, a burden which pressed heavily on the monasteries. Hence the bitterness of the prophet against the Elector; and he confidently predicts, that the reigning House and the bulk of its subjects will more and more fall into decay, and that this very fact will prepare the way for the ultimate triumph of Catholicism.

And Zitzwitz, not being a Brandenburger by birth, had no innate feelings of loyalty to the House of Hohenzollern, such as might have restrained him from making such a prediction.

But after all we have here nothing more than a probable hypothesis. Dr. Gieseler makes out a very good case for, or rather against Zitzwitz, but he can scarcely be said to have proved it.

One other person has been conjectured as the author, the Jesuit Wolf, who, 1685–86, was chaplain of the Austrian Embassy in Berlin.

The precise authorship, however, is a matter of comparatively small moment. The important points to know are the fact of the forgery and the time of its perpetration; and these the prophecy itself tells us. It will perhaps always be famous as a literary curiosity; but one will probably not be wrong in concluding that it can never again be used to serve ecclesiastical or political interests.
Nevertheless in days in which the legend of Pope Silvester in its grossest form is still cited as history,¹ it would be rash to speak positively on this point. Experience seems to show, that the amount of audacity, which some persons can exhibit in reiterating exploded falsehoods, is practically unlimited.

¹ In the 99th number of the Augsburg Sicon is the following statement respecting Pope Silvester; "At the same time the holy Apostles Peter and Paul appeared to the Emperor Constantine and commanded him to seek baptism at the hands of the Pope, and then establish the Christian religion in the whole Empire. While being baptized he was miraculously cured of his leprosy .... Pope Silvester gave moreover numerous directions in accordance with apostolical traditions, e.g. that the sacred chrism should be consecrated by a Bishop, that the Priest should anoint the head of the baptized with the chrism, that Deacons should wear dalmatic and maniple, that corporals and altar-cloths should be made of linen." (!) See Deutscher Merkur for Jan. 4th, 1873, and for an exposure of the fiction Dr. Döllinger's Fables respecting the Popes, p. 89, English Translation.
APPENDIX B

INSTANCES OF PERSONS PROPHETICALLY SUMMONED TO APPEAR BEFORE THE TRIBUNAL OF GOD.

THIS is a species of prophecy, of which one or two famous instances occur in medieaval history, respecting which one much desires more definite and more certain evidence. It is difficult to decide in each instance, whether the prophetic summons, or the death within the stated time, is a fiction or not; or again, supposing that both may be accepted as facts, whether it is a case of mere coincidence, or whether the prophecy itself has contributed to its own fulfilment, either by terrifying the subject of it to death or by inciting others to assassination; or lastly, whether the utterer of the summons, under the influence of intensified feeling, was really able to forecast the future in a way, which to persons in ordinary circumstances seems supernatural. The present generation is not very ready to accept the last as a probable or even possible alternative. But psychological science has not yet reached the point where a dogmatic judgment on the question can be given with certainty; and probably those who have the best right to be heard on the subject, would be among the most unwilling to decide peremptorily what the human mind can or cannot do under very extraordinary conditions. The phenomena are too rare and too unsatisfactorily recorded to render a conclusive induction possible.

The case of Jerome of Prague has been noticed already in the text. Besides this there is the still more celebrated instance of Ferdinand IV., King of Castile, "the Summoned." The summoners in this case were two twin brothers, Pedro and Juan, Counts of Carvajal. Don Pedro and the Marquis of Benavides were in love with the same lady, Leonara Mantiquez de Lara, and she favoured Don Pedro. The result was a challenge from the Marquis, which was accepted by the Count. In the duel Pedro was assisted by his brother, the Marquis also by a relation. The two brothers killed their opponents in honourable combat, as the witnesses declared, and under strong provocation. The duel delayed the marriage, and before it could take place another suitor appeared in the person of the Duke of Velasco, favourite of Ferdinand IV. One day, as the King was returning from a banquet, the Duke accused the two brothers of having assassinated the Marquis at Palencia by night, as he was leaving the palace. The King in a fury ordered the Carvajals to be thrown from the precipitous walls of the castle, without either trial or examination. They protested their innocence in vain, and at last in despair summoned their judge to appear before the tribunal of God within thirty days. Ferdinand went on with his military occupations, and feeling somewhat unwell retired to Jaén. Here he received news of the success of his arms, at which he was greatly elated. After dinner he took a siesta, and from this he never awoke. He was found dead in his bed by his servants on the last of the thirty days from the death of the Carvajals, September, 1312. Hence his name, the Emplazado or Summoned.

Another scarcely less famous instance is that of Jacques du Molay, Grand Master of the Templars, burnt at Paris, March 18th, 1313, to the eternal infamy of Clement V. and Philip the Fair. Dean Milman thus continues:—"The wonder and the pity of the times which immediately followed, arrayed Du Molay not only in the robes of the martyr, but gave him the terrible language of a prophet. 'Clement, iniquitous and cruel judge, I summon thee within forty days to meet me before the throne of the Most High.' According to some this fearful sentence included the King, by whom, if uttered, it might have been heard. The earliest allusion to this awful speech does not contain that striking particularity, which, if part of it, would be fatal to its credibility, the precise date of Clement's death. It was not till the year after that Clement and King Philip passed to their account. The poetic relation of Godfrey of Paris simply states that God would revenge their death on their unrighteous judges. The rapid fate of these two men during the next year might naturally so appal the popular imagination, as to approximate more closely the prophecy and its accomplishment. At all events it betrayed the deep and general feeling of the cruel wrong inflicted on the Order; while the un lamented death of the Pope, the disastrous close of Philip’s reign, and the disgraceful crimes which attainted the honour of his family, seemed as declarations of Heaven as to the innocence of their noble victims.”

Clement V. died at Roquemaure on the Rhone, April 20th, 1314. His remains were treated with such neglect, that the catafalque caught fire, and his body was half burnt before anyone attended to it.

Philip survived him only a few months. He died at Fontainerbleau from the effects of a fall from his horse while hunting, November 29th, 1314. His Minister, Enguerraud de Marigni, was hanged in 1315.

Another example, less well known, is reported

1 Latin Christianity, Book xii., chap. v.
in the annals of the House of Brittany. John VI., Duke of Brittany, had four children, Francis I. (grandfather of Anne, the wife of Charles VIII. and Louis XII., Kings of France), Peter II., Giles, and Isabel. Giles was murdered by his brother Francis, and shortly before he breathed his last he summoned the fratricide to appear before the judgment-seat of God within forty days. Francis is said to have died on the fortieth day. Giles, after having been kept a prisoner for four years, was put to death (by suffocation, according to some) in the castle of la Haudinaiet in 1450. Francis received the news of his brother's death while prosecuting the siege of Avranches. The summons was brought by the friar, who had confessed the murdered man. Francis certainly died in the summer of that same year, but apparently more than two months after the murder.
APPENDIX C

THEORIES RESPECTING ANTICHRIST

It would be difficult to sum these up more succinctly than is done by Professor Jowett in his essay On the Man of Sin, appended to his commentary on the Epistles to the Thessalonians.

"Whether the prophecy of the man of sin is fulfilled or unfulfilled,—whether it is to be explained from the immediate circle of the Apostle's life, or from the distant future,—whether it relates to an individual or to an idea, to the Pharisees or the Gnostics,—whether 'the man of sin' be Nero as Chrysostom imagined, or the impersonation of heresy, as Theodoret and others, or the pope as the reformers, or the reformers as the pope, or Mahomet as the Greek Church, or the Emperor Caligula as Grotius, or Titus as Wetstein, or Simon Magus as Hammond, or Simon the son of Gioras as Usteri and Le Clerc, or Cromwell as Englishmen who were his subjects sometimes said, or the French revolution, or Napoleon as the last generation, or some embodiment or power of evil which is yet to come, as was the opinion of several of the Fathers, and is also that of some modern writers; — whether 'that which letteth, and he which letteth, and will let until he be taken out of the way,' is the Roman Empire, which was likewise a common opinion of the Fathers, or the German Empire, as was maintained by the early opponents of the papacy, or the purpose of God that the Gospel should be first preached, as was held by Theodore of Mopsuestia and Theodoret, or the outpouring of spiritual gifts as Chrysostom inclined to think, or Nero as Wetstein, or Vitellius, who was proconsul of Judea in Caligula's time, as Grotius, or Elijah the prophet, who 'must first come' according to the Jewish belief, or St.
Paul himself, as a recent interpreter; — whether the temple of God is the Christian Church, or the temple at Jerusalem, or both, or neither, that is to say some temple hereafter to be built, or the temple of the human soul, a figure which the Apostle elsewhere employs; — whether the coming of Christ be His coming to judge the world at the last day, or the anticipation of that judgment on the Jews in the destruction of Jerusalem, or the one the lesser, the other the greater fulfilment of the same prediction; — are some of the principal questions which in ancient or modern times have been raised by interpreters respecting the second chapter of the Second Epistle to the Thessaloninians."

Dr. Newman, in his Essay on the Patristic Idea of Antichrist, following in the steps of the Fathers, as the title of his essay indicates,—"for, to say the least, they are as likely to be right as commentators now,"—endeavours to arrive at reasonable conclusions with regard to some of the questions stated in the paragraph just quoted; e.g. that Antichrist has not yet come, that ὁ κατέχουν is probably the power of Rome, that Antichrist is probably an individual, that a great apostasy will precede Antichrist, that he will have a religion and will institute a great and terrible persecution, &c. &c. This is not at all the place to discuss these questions. Besides the great work of Malvenda cited in the text there is an inexhaustible amount of literature on the subject extending almost from the Apostolic age down to our own time. Confessedly very incomplete lists of writers best worth consulting on the subject will be found in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, articles 'Antichrist' (in the Appendix), 'Daniel,' and 'Revelation.'

1 Discourses and Arguments, London, 1872.
2 De Antichristo, Rome, 1604.
APPENDIX D

MERLIN

ONE of the most elaborate works on Merlin is that by THOMAS HEYWOOD in the time of Charles I. The Life of Merlin surnamed Ambrosius, His Prophesies and Predictions Interpreted; and their truth made good by our English Annals. London, 1641. Heywood gives a good many of these pretended prophecies; which are very probably his own composition in many cases, if not in all. They fit known history with marvellous exactness, and go no further than Heywood’s own day. There is not the vaguest attempt at predicting what is to come to pass in England or elsewhere, either during or after the reign of Charles I.

One or two specimens of Heywood’s attempts may be worth quoting, e.g. of Edward III., the Black Prince, and Richard II., we have the following:—

“A numerous issue shall his Lionesse bring,
Black shall the first be, and though never King,

1 The book is to a very great extent a summary of English History, with these pretended prophecies scattered up and down it.
Yet shall he Kings captive, but ere mature,
Die shall this brave Whelp of a Calenture,
And then behind him shall he leave a kid
To undoe all both sire and grandaire did.
Sport shall the young kid in his youth, and play,
'Gainst whom shall rise the Hedg-hog and the Gray:
And then the hohnayle and the clowed shoone,
Shall the kid's glory, strive to eclipse at noone:
But by a Daulphin (of the city lov'd)
That black disastrous cloud shall be remov'd."

By the Daulphin, Heywood explains, is meant William Walworth, "who was free of the Fish-mongers, and they give the Daulphin in their Escutchion." To oppose Richard III.,—"a hunch-back'd monster, who with teeth is born,"—

"From forreigne parts, a native Whelp shall land
Who shall the long divided blood unite,
By joyning of the Red Rose with the white."

Henry VIII., we are told,

"From the sceptarchy (sic) of Hils,
That Europe awe, and triple-crown, that fills
The Christian world with terror, takes the power
And brings it home unto his British bower:
Blunting the horns of all the Bashan Bula,
And rooting from the Land the razord skulls."

Which good work was all to be undone again, for—

"Then shall the masculine Scepter cease to sway,
And to a Spinster, the whole Land obey,
Who to the Papall Monarchy shall restore
All that the Phonix had fetcht thence before,
Then shall come in the faggot and the stake,
And they of convert bodies bonfires make."

"Men shall her short unprosperous Reign deplore
By losse at sea, and damage on the shore:
Whose heart being dissected, you in it
May in large characters find Calice writ."
From which it appears that Heywood was a good Protestant, and Merlin a very great Prophet indeed. Heywood says that the prophecy about the hempe was among the many assigned to Merlin at that time, but the version, which he gives, is very differently worded from that given by Bacon, 1—

"When hempe is ripe and ready to pull,
Then Englishman beware thy skull."

And although the "great feare, that some troubles might have rose about the Crowne," after Elizabeth's death, was not fulfilled, "yet proved this "augury true, though not according to the former "expectation or imagination; for after his (James') "happy and peaceable proclamation and Inauguration, there was great mortality, not in London "only, but through the whole Kingdome, from "which the Nation was not quite clean in seven "yeeres after."

Heywood thinks that Merlin was certainly a Christian, but is in doubt as to whether the spirit by which he prophesied was devilish or divine. He considers the story of his miraculous birth not incredible, but inclines to the opinion that the Prophet's mother invented the story, in order to save a human father from punishment and herself from shame. Of Merlin's end he tells us nothing.

It seems to be impossible to settle, and almost

---

1 See page 11.
futile to discuss, how far Merlin the Prophet and Magician is, or is not, identical with Merddhin the Bard; and whether there ever existed a real personage corresponding to either name. The former is the reputed author of many prophecies, the worker of many miracles, who at last fell a victim to the wiles of "lissome Vivien." The latter is the reputed author of a poem called Afallenau or the Apple-trees, who fought under King Arthur against the Saxons, and after their victory fled in a frenzy of grief into the woods. The Afallenau¹ is printed in the Myvyrian Archæology of Wales (London, 1801, vol. i.), and defended as genuine by Turner in his Vindications of the genuineness of the ancient British Poems of Aneurin, Taliesin, Llywarch-Hen, and Merddhin (London, 1803).

The literature on the subject is considerable. Besides the works already mentioned, there are also quoted, a French translation of his prophecies, attributed by Barbier to Robert de Borron, Paris, Ant. Verard, 1498; the same, Paris, Phil. Lenoir, 1528; an Italian translation, Venice, 1480; the same, Florence, 1495; a Spanish translation, Burgos, 1498; Vie de Merlin de Geoffroy de Monmouth, by F. Michel and J. Wright, Paris, 1838; Contes populaires des anciens Bretons, by Ville-Marqué, Paris, 1842; Les Romans de la Table

¹ Together with five other pieces, viz.: To Yscolan, Merddin's Oracles from his Grave, Invocation to Pigs, Dialogue between Merddin and his Sister, and the Impulses.

Merlin, although the first and greatest, is not the only name on the list of British Prophets. There is Peter Wakefield of Pontefract, a Yorkshire hermit, who was put forward by the Clergy to prophesy that King John would cease to reign on Ascension Day next following, viz. 1211, the thirteenth year from his coronation. The prediction caused much excitement, and other prophecies were invented and fathered on Peter. John waited till the day was past, and then, as Peter had nothing better to say than that the Pope reigned and not John (the King was then under excommunication), John had the Prophet hung as a troubler of the public peace, "and his sonne also with him, least any more false prophetes should aryse of that race."

Then there is Mother Shipton, in the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII., who is said to have foretold the suppression of the monasteries, the King's marriage with Anne Boleyn, the fires of Smith-

1 So says Richard Grafton, in his Chronicle at large and meere History of the affayres of England. 1569, p. 106.
field, and the execution of Mary of Scots. Her epitaph, as reported, ran thus:

"Here lies she who never lied;
Whose skill often has been tried,
Her prophecies shall still survive,
And ever keep her name alive."

Robert Nixon, the Cheshire idiot, was a contemporary of hers. He appears to have been conscious of the Battle of Bosworth and its results at the time of its occurrence, although far away from the spot. Henry VII. heard of this and sent for him. Nixon was very unwilling to go, saying he should be clammed, starved to death. He was treated kindly; but on one occasion, to save him from the jeers of the servants, he was locked up, and forgotten for three days. He was found lying on the floor dead of starvation.

Further particulars will be found in CHARLES MACKAY'S Memoirs of extraordinary Popular Delusions (vol. i., pp. 168–203, London, 1841), from which some of the above has been taken.
BY THE SAME AUTHOR AND TRANSLATOR.

Fables respecting the Popes of the Middle Ages.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

The Guardian.—"We must not dismiss the subject without bearing testimony to the excellence of Mr. Plummer's translation. . . . It is no small praise to give to any translation to say that it reads like an original composition, and that praise is justly due to Mr. Plummer. He has prefaced the work with an interesting introduction of his own, and has also added some useful notes and appendices."

The Daily News.—"A work which has excited great interest in theological circles is Dr. von Döllinger's 'Fables respecting the Popes of the Middle Ages.' A remarkably good translation of this book, which men of all parties will read and value as a notable contribution to ecclesiastical history, has been published by Rivingtons, from the pen of Mr. Alfred Plummer. The translator has supplied an able and useful introduction."

The Standard.—"We rejoice that it is intended to proceed with the translation of Dr. Döllinger's very numerous works. There could be no more valuable contribution to ecclesiastical literature, and Mr. Plummer is thoroughly competent to the task. We shall await the rest of the series with great interest, confident that, like the present volume, they will be acceptable to hundreds who are very indifferent to ordinary theological works."

The Saturday Review.—"Mr. Plummer has done his work as a translator creditably, and has added an interesting introduction and some useful appendices of his own. . . . For that large class of English readers to whom German is still a sealed book, Mr. Plummer's clear and readable version of a work of considerable historical interest, and displaying all the profound and conscientious research for which the author is distinguished, will be a valuable boon.”

The Lambeth Review.—“Mr. Plummer has done his editorial work very well. In an interesting and very useful introduction he has formed a sort of nexus of the history, which binds together the separate papers of the volume. He has supplied the body of the work with careful explanatory notes, not by any means overdone; and the appendices he has added complete the work, by the addition of matter that could not well be spared. The translation is free, and might, so far as freedom goes, have been original writing, as nothing of the Germanic ring lingers about it. It is good nervous English.”

The Church Times.—“*The long and able introduction.”
“The translation is such as may be read easily, no slight praise by the way, and the side-notes indicating the contents of the paragraphs are highly serviceable in a work of this kind. Students of Church history who find an English book less trouble than a German one, will thank the translator for the pains which he has taken in their behalf.”

The Church Herald.—“*This is a work which many will be glad to have the opportunity of enjoying in an English garb. Dr. Döllinger, one would think, must be proud that so able a translator’s handiwork will introduce his volume so favourably to English readers.”

London Quarterly Review.—“*We welcome the appearance in a good English translation of another volume of the writings of this learned and accomplished author. . . . No work of Dr. Döllinger’s with which we are acquainted equals this in patient critical inquiry; while we have all the advantages of a severely chastened, clear, and luminous style.”
A SELECTION FROM THE

BOOKS

PUBLISHED DURING 1869, 1870, AND 1871, BY

MESSRS. RIVINGTON,
HIGH STREET, OXFORD; TRINITY STREET, CAMBRIDGE; WATERLOO PLACE, LONDON.

A SHADOW OF DANTE. Being an Essay towards Studying Himself, his World, and his Pilgrimage. By MARIA FRANCESCA ROSSETTI. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

"The 'Shadow of Dante' is a well-conceived and inviting volume, designed to recommend the 'Divina Commedia' to English readers, and to facilitate the study and comprehension of its contents."—ATHENAEUM.

"And it is in itself a true work of art, a whole finely conceived, and carried out with sustained power— one of those reproductions and adumbrations of great works, in which mere servile copying disappears, and which are only possible to a mind which, however inferior to its original, is yet of the same order and temperament, with an unusual faculty for taking the impressions of that original and reflecting them undimmed. It is much to say of a volume like this. But it is not too much to say, when, after going through it, we consider the thorough knowledge of the subject shown in it, the patient skill with which the intricate and puzzling arrangements of the poem, full of what we call the conceits and puzzles of the contemporary philosophy, are unravelled and made intelligible; the discrimination and high principle with which so ardent a lover of the great poet blazes his excesses; the high and noble Christian faith which responds to his; and, lastly, the gift of eloquent speech, keen, rich, condensed, expressive, which seems to have passed into the writer from the loving study of the greatest master in his own tongue of all the inimitable harmonies of language—the tenderest, the deepest, the most awful."—GUARDIAN.

"The work introduces us not merely to the author's life and the political and ecclesiastical conjectures under which he lived, but to the outlines of the Catholicised systems of ethics, astronomy, and geography which he interpreted in classifying his spirits and assigning them their dwellings; as also to the drift of his leading allegories; and finally, to the general conduct of his poem—which is amply illustrated by citations from the most literal verse translations. We find the volume furnished with useful diagrams of the Dantean universe, of Hell, Purgatory, and the 'Rose of the Blessed,' and adorned with a beautiful group of the likenesses of the poet, and with symbolic figures (on the binding) in which the taste and execution of Mr. D. G. Rossetti will be recognised. The exposition appears to us remarkably well arranged and digested; the author's appreciation of Dante's religious sentiments and opinions is peculiarly hearty, and her style refreshingly independent and original."—FALL MALL GAZETTE.

"It bears traces throughout of having been due to a patient, loving, and appreciative study of the great poet, as he is exhibited, not merely in the 'Divina Commedia,' but in his other writings. The result has been a book which is not only delightful in itself to read, but is admirably adapted as an encouragement to those students who wish to obtain a preliminary survey of the land before they attempt to follow Dante through his long and arduous pilgrimage. Of all poets Dante stands most in need of such assistance as this book offers."—SATURDAY REVIEW.
A DEVOTIONAL COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPEL

THOUGHTS ON THE STUDY OF THE HOLY GOSPELS.

Characteristic Differences in the Four Gospels.
Our Lord’s Manifestations of Himself.
The Rule of Scriptural Interpretation furnished by our Lord.
Analogies of the Gospel.
Mention of Angels in the Gospels.
Places of our Lord’s Abode and Ministry.
Our Lord’s Mode of Dealing with His Apostles.
Conclusion.

A HARMONY OF THE FOUR EVANGELISTS.

Our Lord’s Nativity.
Our Lord’s Ministry—Second Year.
Our Lord’s Ministry—Third Year.
The Holy Week.
Our Lord’s Passion.
Our Lord’s Resurrection.
OUR LORD’S NATIVITY.
The Birth at Bethlehem.
The Baptism in Jordan.
The First Passover.

OUR LORD’S MINISTRY.
SECOND YEAR.
The Second Passover.
Christ with the Twelve.
The Twelve sent forth.

"There is a better companion to be found for the sermon than the beautiful 'Devotional Commentary' on the Gospel Narrative,' by the Rev. Isaac Williams. . . A rich mine for devotional and theological study."—GUARDIAN.

"So many are the depths and so innumerable the beauties of Scripture, that there is some difficulty in describing the manifold excellences of Williams’ Exquisite Commentary. Deriving its profound appreciation of Scripture from the writings of the early Fathers, it is only what every student knows must be true to say that it extracts a whole wealth of meaning from each sentence, each apparently faint allusion, each word in the text."—CHURCH REVIEW.

"Stands absolutely alone in our English Literature; there is, we should say, no chance of its being superseded by any better book of its kind; and its merits are of the very highest order."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

"It would be difficult to select a more useful present, at a small cost, than this series would be to a young man on his first entering into Holy Orders; and many, no doubt, will avail themselves of the republication of these useful volumes for this purpose. There is an abundance of sermon material to be drawn from any one of them."—CHURCH TIMES.

OUR LORD’S MINISTRY.
THIRD YEAR.
Teaching in Galilee.
Teaching at Jerusalem.
Last Journey from Galilee to Jerusalem.

THE HOLY WEEK.
The Approach to Jerusalem.
The Teaching in the Temple.
The Discourse on the Mount of Olives.
The Last Supper.

OUR LORD’S PASSION.
The Hour of Darkness.
The Agony.
The Apprehension.
The Condemnation.
The Day of Sorrows.
The Hall of Judgment.
The Crucifixion.
The Sepulchre.

OUR LORD’S RESURRECTION.
The Day of Days.
The Grave Visited.
Christ Appearing.
The Going to Emmaus.
The Forty Days.
The Apostles Assembled.
The Lake in Galilee.
The Mountain in Galilee.
The Return from Galilee.

"This is, in the truest sense of the word, a 'Devotional Commentary' on the Gospel narrative, opening out everywhere, as it does, the spiritual beauties and blessedness of the Divine message; but it is something more than this, it meets difficulties almost by anticipation, and throws the light of learning over some of the very darkest passages in the New Testament."—ROCK.

The author has skilfully compared and blended the narratives of the different Gospels, so as to give a synoptical view of the history; and though the commentary is called 'devotional,' it is scholarly and suggestive in other respects. The size of the work, extending as it does, over eight volumes, may deter purchasers and readers; but each volume is complete in itself, and we recommend students to taste a sample of the author’s quality. Some things they may question; but the volumes are really a helpful and valuable addition to our stores."—FREEMAN.

"The high and solemn verities of the Saviour’s sufferings and death are treated with great reverence and ability. The thorough devotionalness which permeates the book commends it to our heart. There is much to instil if the re-habitation of these useful volumes for this purpose. There is an abundance of sermon material to be drawn from any one of them."—WATCHMAN.
THE STAR OF CHILDHOOD. A First Book of Prayers and Instruction for Children. Compiled by a Priest. Edited by the Rev. T. T. Carter, M.A., Rector of Clewer, Berks. With Six Illustrations, reduced from Engravings by Fra Angelico. Royal 16mo. 2s. 6d.

"All the Instructions, all of the Hymns, and most of the Prayers here are excellent. And when one uses the cautionary phrase, 'most of the,' &c., we do not mean to imply that all the prayers are not excellent in themselves, but only to express a doubt whether in some cases they may not be a little too elaborate for children. Of course it is no means follows that when you use a book you are to use equally every portion of it; what does not suit one may suit a score of others, and this book is clearly compiled on the comprehensive principle. But to give a veracious verdict on the book it is needful to mention this. We need hardly say that it is well worth buying, and of a very high order of merit."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

"Messrs. Rivington have sent us a manual of prayers for children, called 'The Star of Childhood,' edited by the Rev. T. T. Carter, a very full collection, including instruction as well as devotion, and a judicious selection of hymns."—CHURCH REVIEW.

"The Rev. T. T. Carter, of Clewer, has put forth a much needed and excellent book of devotions for little children, called 'The Star of Childhood.' We think it fair to tell our readers, that in it they will find that for children who have lost a near relative a short commemorative prayer is provided; but we most earnestly hope that even those who are not willing to accept it using the book will not be rejected, for it is a most valuable one."—MONTHLY PACKET.

"One amongst the books before us deserves especial notice, entitled 'The Star of Childhood,' and edited by the Rev. T. T. Carter: it is a New Year's Gift. It is a manual of prayer for children, with hymns, litanies, and instructions. Some of the hymns are illustrative of our Lord's life; and so are added reduced copies from engravings of Fra Angelico."—Penny Post.

"Supposing a child to be capable of using a devotional manual, the book before us is, in its general structure, as good an attempt to meet the want as could have been put forth. In the first place it succeeds, where so many like efforts fail, in the matter of simplicity. The language is quite within the compass of a young child; that is to say, it is such as a young child can be made to understand; for we do not suppose that the book is intended to be put directly into his hands, but through the hands of an instructor."—CHURCH BULLETIN.

"To the same hand which gave us the 'Treasury of Devotion' we are indebted for this beautiful little manual for children. Beginning with prayers suited to the comprehension of the youngest, it contains devotions, litanies, hymns, and instructions, carefully proportioned to the gradually increasing powers of a child's mind, from the earliest years until confirmation. This little book cannot fail to influence for good the impressionable hearts of children, and we hope that even it will be in the hands of all those who are blessed with Catholic-minded parents. It is beautifully got up, and is rendered more attractive by the capital engravings of Fra Angelico's pictures of scenes of our Lord's childhood. God-parents could scarcely find a more appropriate gift for their God-children than this, or one that is more likely to lead them to a knowledge of the truth."—CHURCH UNION REVIEW.

"The Star of Childhood" is a first book of Prayers and instruction for children, compiled by a Priest, and edited by the Rev. T. T. Carter, rector of Clewer. It is a very careful compilation, and the name of its editor is a warrant for its devotional tone."—GUARDIAN.

"A handsomely got up and attractive volume, with several good illustrations from Fra Angelico's most famous paintings."—UNION REVIEW.

BY THE SAME COMPILER AND EDITOR.

BOUND with the Book of Common Prayer, 3l. 6d.

THE WAY OF LIFE: A Book of Prayers and Instruction for the Young (at School). Imperial 32mo, 1s. 6d.

THE GUIDE TO HEAVEN: A Book of Prayers for every Want. For the Working Classes. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.; limp cloth, 1s.

THE PATH OF HOLINESS: A First Book of Prayers, with the Service of the Holy Communion, for the Young. With Illustrations. Crown 16mo, 1s. 6d.; limp cloth, 1s.

"On the whole we have rarely met with a more clear, intelligible and persuasive statement of the truth as regards the important topics on which the volume treats. Sermon 11, in particular, will strike the one by its eloquence and beauty, but we scarcely like to specify it, lest in praising it we should seem to disparage other portions of this admirable little work."—Church Times.

"The Rev. George Body, who has acquired a considerable reputation as a preacher of the mission type, gives to the general public the series of lectures on 'The Life of Justification,' which he delivered at All Saints, Margaret Street, in Lent 1870. These discourses show that their author's position is due to something more and higher than mere facility of expression, and flexibility of voice. He appears as having drunk deeply at the fountain of St. Augustine, and as understanding how to translate the burning words of that mighty genius into the current language of to-day." Union Review.

"It is excessively difficult to review or criticise, in detail, a book of this kind, and yet its ability, its spirituality, its searching sense and thoroughness, and its frequent beauty, too, make us wish to do something more than announce its publication.

... The style is eminently clear, free from redundance and prolixity."—Literary Churchman.

Few saw Religious and those brought into immediate contact with them are, in all probability, acquainted with the French treatise of Guillard, a portion of which is now, for the first time we believe, done into English.

... Hence the swiftness of such a book as this for those who, in the midst of their families, are endeavouring to address them in the spirit of life. Hundreds of devout people, living in the world have been encouraged and helped by such books as Dr. Neale's 'Sermons preached in a Religious House.' For such the present work will be found appropriate, while for Religious themselves it will be invaluable."—Church Times.

"A most successful attempt to adapt the higher lessons of what is called the religious life to the daily and ordinary Christian course, and its lessons are full of nervous power."—Church Review.

ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM'S LITURGY. Translated by H. C. Romanoff, Author of "Sketches of the Rites and Customs of the Greco-Russian Church," &c. With Illustrations. Square crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

"The clever author of 'Sketches of the Rites and Customs of the Greco-Russian Church' has given us a very interesting description of the various ceremonies connected with 'The Divine Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom.' It is rather an explanation than a translation of the liturgy, and may be profitably studied in connection with Dr. Neale's work on the Liturgies of the East. The illustrations afford considerable help in understanding the text, and the style is so attractive that it will win many readers who might shrink from a formal liturgical treatise."—Church Times.

"Mr. Romanoff gives a translation of the Liturgy of Chrysostom, with explanatory remarks derived chiefly from Russian manuals, in the book now before us. It is written for the general reader, and does not profess to give all the words of the office, nor does it describe the rite with that minuteness which would make the book one of reference for liturgical students. But these characteristics make the book more interesting to a wider circle of readers; and in these days of easy travelling, when so large a number of Englishmen are not content with the old-fashioned traditional visit to Switzerland or the Rhine, but prefer visiting more distant lands, there must be an increased number of travellers to whom this book would be a very useful guide."—Athenæum.

JOHN WESLEY'S PLACE IN CHURCH HISTORY, determined with the aid of Facts and Documents unknown to, or unnoticed by, his Biographers. By R. Denny Urrin, M.R.I.A., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, etc. With a New and Authentic Portrait. Small 8vo. 5s. 6d.
Old Testament—Genesis and Exodus. 2s.
St. Matthew and St. Mark. 2s.
The Four Gospels, in one volume. 3s. 6d.

HOUSEHOLD THEOLOGY: A Handbook of Religious Information respecting the Holy Bible, the Prayer Book, the Church, the Ministry, Divine Worship, the Creeds, &c., &c. By JOHN HENRY BLUNT, M.A. New Edition. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"The reader will gladly acknowledge the impartiality of treatment and liberality of tone which are conspicuous in every page. It is distinctly a learned book. The author is not a second-hand retailer of facts; he is a painstaking, conscientious student, who derives his knowledge from original sources. We have said that he does not command a brilliant style; but he is by no means a dull writer—on the contrary, he is always readable, sometimes very interesting, and shows considerable skill in the grouping and arrangement of his facts."—Times.

"Mr. Blunt gives us, in this volume, an instalment history of the Reformation, in the just proportions of a history, and written carefully from contemporary documents and evidence. . . . with scholarly knowledge, with an independent judgment, and with careful support given to each statement by quotation of evidence. And Mr. Blunt has given greater effect to his narrative by a skilful division and grouping of his subjects. Undoubtedly, he writes upon very definite views and principles, but these views and principles are not forced upon the facts, but are deduced from them as their necessary results. The true account, indeed, of his book is, that it is a sketch of the reign of Henry VIII., in its theological changes, which proves in detail the Church view of these changes. And if that view is the true view, how can a true history do otherwise? The merit of a history is, that it allows facts to evolve views, and does not pervert or conceal facts in order to force upon them preconceived views of its own. And when we characterize Mr. Blunt's volume as stating the Church's case throughout, we conceive it to be an ample justification to say that if he is to relate the facts fairly he could not do otherwise; that he fairly alleges the facts, and the facts prove his case. We hold the book, then, to be a solid and valuable addition to our Church history, just because it does in the main establish the Church case, and bring it ably and clearly before the public, upon unanswerable evidence, impartially and on the whole correctly stated."—Guardian.

"Their calm criticism of the proceedings of the Council, their dignified remonstrance against the proceedings of the Roman Curia, and their outspoken fears as to the results which will follow upon the proclamation of the dogma of Infallibility, must have done much to strengthen and consolidate the Opposition as it is called in the Council. . . . A word as to the translation. It reads like an English work—the similarity between this and 'Junius' will suggest itself at once."—ATHENIUM.

"It is not much more than a twelvemonth since we noticed at some length the English translation—an act of remarkable worth—of 'Junius' on the Pope and the Council, which has since passed rapidly through three editions, and has commanded hardly less attention in this country than in Germany. 'Junius' closed with a sorrowful prediction that, whatever else might be of the Vatican Synod, it would have no claim to be considered a free assembly, and the volume now before us is an illustration from 'Junius' beginning to the end of the justice of that anticipation. The two books, though evidently emanating from different authors, have much in common. Both, as we are assured, are 'exclusively the work of Catholics'; both represent the same school of religious thought; both give evidence of deep learning, though there is of course more scope for its direct application in the earlier volume; both are written with consummate ability and unmistakable earnestness, and in a clear and lucid style; and both, we may add, are admirably translated. The English reader, if he had not referred to the title page, might easily suppose that the Letters were from the pen of a countryman of his own. But it is not in grace of style, still less on any artificial ornament, that the book depends for its grace and permanent interest. It tells a plain unvarnished tale, the more impressive from its severe and terrible simplicity, which intimately concerns the credit and prospects of the Papacy and Roman Catholic hierarchy, and bears indirectly, but not less really, on the international relations of the Catholic Church and it will probably take years before we see the end of it—this collection will retain a permanent value as a faithful record of one of the most remarkable phenomena of the present eventful century, which must inevitably leave its mark for good or for evil, though in a very different way from what its promoters designed, on the future of Christianity and the Christian Church."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

A GLOSSARY OF ECCLESIASTICAL TERMS. Containing Brief Explanations of Words used in Theology, Liturgiology, Chronology, Law, Architecture, Antiquities, Symbolism, Greek Hieroglyphic and Medival Latin; together with some account of Titles of our Lord, Emblems of Saints, Hymns, Orders, Heresies, Ornaments, Offices, Vestments and Ceremonial, and Miscellaneous Subjects. By Various Writers. Edited by the Rev. ORBY SHIPLEY, M.A. Crown 8vo. 18s.

"Mr. Shipley and his coadjutors deserve great praise—the chief share being of course the editor's—for the industry and care with which this 'Glossary' has been compiled and for the completeness which it possesses. We have not found, as far as our search has gone, anything missing or anything like a blunder. . . . Its brevity is especially admirable; it would be difficult to find as much information crowded into equal space."

—SPECTATOR.

"The last fruits of Mr. Orby Shipley's unwearying toil as an editor, lie before us in the form of 'A Glossary of Ecclesiastical Terms,' a volume of more than 200 pages of small type, containing without doubt the very greatest number of vocabularies we have seen in a dictionary of the kind."—UNION REVIEW.

"The laborious and painstaking work, and will be found of very great service as a book of reference."—CHURCH TIMES.

"Mr. Shipley deserves the cordial thanks of Churchmen for his laborious work. The book is admirably arranged, the double columns and the use of special type for the headings of the several paragraphs, not only making it a handsome piece of typographical work, but rendering it thoroughly clear for reference. It is a Dictionary which laity and clergy alike ought to possess, and we trust it will have, as it deserves, a large sale."—CHURCHMAN'S SHILLING MAGAZINE.

NOTITIA EUCHARISTICA. A Commentary, Explanatory, Doctrinal, and Historical, on the Order of the Administration of the Lord's Supper, or Holy Communion, according to the Use of the Church of England. By W. E. SCUDAMORE, M.A., Rector of Ditchingham, and formerly Fellow of S. John's College, Cambridge. 8vo. 28s.
A KEY TO THE KNOWLEDGE OF CHURCH HISTORY
(Modern). Edited by the Rev. John Henry Blunt, M.A. Forming a New Volume of “Keys to Christian Knowledge.” Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.

A KEY TO CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE AND PRACTICE
FOUNDED ON THE CHURCH CATECHISM. By the Rev. John Henry Blunt, M.A.
(Forming a Volume of “Keys to Christian Knowledge.”)
Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.

“Of cheap and reliable text-books of this nature there has hitherto been a great want.
We are often asked to recommend books for use in Church Sunday-schools, and we therefore take this opportunity of saying that we know of none more likely to be of service both to teachers and scholars than these ‘Keys.’”— Churchman’s Shilling Magazine.
“This is another of Mr. Blunt’s most useful manuals, with all the precision of a school book, yet diverging into matters of practical application so freely as to make it most serviceable, either as a teacher’s suggestion book, or as an intelligent pupil’s reading book.”— Literary Churchman.
“Will be very useful for the higher classes in Sunday-schools, or rather for the fuller instruction of the Sunday-school teachers themselves, where the parish priest is wise enough to devote a certain time regularly to their preparation for their voluntary task.”— Union Review.
“Another of the many useful books on theological and Scriptural subjects which have been written by the Rev. John Henry Blunt. The present is entitled ‘A Key to Christian Doctrine and Practice, founded on the Church Catechism,’ and will take its place as an elementary text-book upon the Creed in our schools and colleges. The Church Catechism is clearly and fully explained by the author in this ‘Key.’ Numerous references, Scriptural and otherwise, are scattered about the book.”—Public Opinion.

THE PSALMS. Translated from the Hebrew. With Notes, chiefly Exegetical. By William Kay, D.D., Rector of Great Leighs; late Principal of Bishop’s College, Calcutta. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

“Dr. Kay’s exegetical notes, though brief, are for the most part admirable, and we can on the whole cordially recommend this portion of the word.”—Church Times.
“Like a sound Churchman, he reverences Scripture, upholding its authority against scrpul; and he does not denounce such as differ from him in opinion with a dogmatism unhappily too common at the present day.
He has learned to guard against rash conclusions worthy of attention; or perhaps to adopt them without inquiry. It is superfluous to say that the translation is better and more accurate on the whole than our received one, or that it often reproduces the sense of the original happily.”—Athenæum.
“Dr. Kay has profound reverence for Divine truth, and exhibits considerable reading, with the power to make use of it.”—
British Quarterly Review.
“The execution of the work is careful and scholarly.”—Union Review.
“To mention the name of Dr. Kay is enough to secure respectful attention to his new translation of the Psalms. It is enriched with exegetical notes containing a wealth of sound learning. Occasionally, perhaps too closely condensed. Good care is taken of the student not learned in Hebrew;
we hope the Doctor’s example will prevent any abuse of this consideration, and stimulate those who profit by it to follow him into the very text of the ancient Revelation.”—John Bull.

HISTORICAL NARRATIVES. From the Russian. By H. C.
Romanoff, Author of “Sketches of the Rites and Customs of the Greco-Russian Church,” &c. Crown 8vo. 6s.

“These narratives have been translated from the Russian by M. Romanoff. They relate to certain Russian customs, and to one or two Russian celebrities. English readers will be most interested by the sketches given of the lives of the Empress Catherine and the Emperor Paul. The particulars given of Catherine’s peculiarities and habits of life, and of her favourites, are curious, and very characteristic of the Sensibilities of the North.

Two of her favourites are glanced at—Orloff and Potemkin—and we are told that when Catherine, at the age of sixty-two, heard of the death of the latter, she felt it so keenly that she wept. The narratives are from sources of unquestionable veracity.”—Standard.
“The reader will find ‘Historical Narratives’ an entertaining and instructive book, and will not regret the few hours spent in its perusal.”—Nation (N.Y.)

RECOLLECTIONS OF OBER-AMMERGAU IN 1871. By Henry Nutcombe Oxenham, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
Messrs. Lidington's Publications

CONSOLING THOUGHTS IN SICKNESS. Edited by Henry Bailey, B.D., Warden of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury. Large type. Fine Edition. Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.
Also, a Cheap Edition, 1s. 6d.; or in paper cover, 1s.

"The valuable characteristic of this work with every one, thoughtful Christian, in a word, by all who perceive and lament the growing tendency to prefer the classic epistolary style, the argument, the acritical controversy, or multiplied activities to the practice of private devotion. Aids to prayer offers both encouragement and help to those who aspire to higher attainments in the Divine Life. Every page bears the impress of a matured judgment, and of an experimental acquaintance with a subject confessedly difficult, and of supreme importance."—Record.

"Eloquently, ably, and practically written."—English Churchman.

"Aids to Prayer" has deservedly reached a second edition. The sermon method of treatment has been wisely discontinued."—John Bull.

"Mr. Bickersteth is already known to fame as the author of a very successful and beautiful epic poem on the difficult subject of 'Yesterday, To-day, and for Ever.' His verses have the genuine ring of poetry, and his touch is often delicate and masterly, always truthful and tasteful. . . . The more recent poems of Mr. Bickersteth are instinct with the spirit of true poetry, full of original power and conception, and are often imbued with a delicate sweetness and truth of feeling all their own. Like Keble, Mr. Bickersteth is essentially a Christian poet, and the greater part of these poems appeal, and with success, to the deepest and most devoted sympathies of the soul. In many of the more recent poems we find much that reminds us of Tennyson."—Standard.

"Carefully written, with some mastery of language and verisimilitude, and with some rhetorical force."—Spectator.

"We therefore gladly commend to our readers this pleasant volume, which embodies many happy and tender thoughts, and gathers up many waifs and strays of past years which ought not to perish."—Christian Observer.

A KEY TO THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. By John Pilkington Norris, M.A.
(Froming a Volume of "Keys to Christian Knowledge.")
Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"It is a remarkably well-written and interesting account of its subject. 'The Book of the Acts' gives us the narrative of St. Luke with exactly what we want in the way of connecting links and illustrations. One most notable and praiseworthy characteristic of the book is its candour. . . . The book is one which we can heartily recommend."—Spectator.

"Of Canon Norris's 'Key to the Narrative of the Four Gospels,' we wrote in high approval not many months ago. The present is not less carefully prepared, and is full of the unadorned results of sound learning and patient thought."—London Quarterly Review.

"This little volume is one of a series of 'Keys' of a more or less educational character, which are in the course of publication by Messrs. Lidington. It gives apparently a very fair and tolerably exhaustive résumé of the contents of the Acts, with which it deals, not chapter by chapter, but consecutively in the order of thought."—School Board Chronicle.

"Few books have ever given us more unimpaired pleasure than this. It is faultlessly written, so that it reads as pleasantly and entertainingly as if it had not the least intention of being an 'educational' book. It is complete and exhaustive, so far as the narrative and all its bearings go, so that students may feel that they need not be hunting up other books to supply the lacunae. It is the work of a classical scholar, and it leaves nothing wanting in the way of classical illustrations, which, in the case of the Acts, are of special importance. And, lastly, it is theologically sound."—Literary Churchman.

"This is a sequel to Canon Norris's 'Key to the Gospels,' which was published two years ago, and which has become a general favourite with those who wish to grasp the leading features of the life and work of Christ. The sketch of the Acts of the Apostles is done in the same style; there is the same reverent spirit and quiet enthusiasm running through it, and the same instinct for seizing the leading points in the narrative."—Record.

A SELECTION FROM THE SPIRITUAL LETTERS OF S. FRANCIS DE SALES, BISHOP AND PRINCE OF GENEVA. Translated by the Author of “Life of S. Francis de Sales,” “A Dominican Artist,” &c., &c. Crown 8vo. 6s.

“...This is a necessary sequel, and an appropriate companion, to the ‘Life of S. Francis de Sales,’ by the same able translator, which was published a few months since. It is a collection of epistolary correspondence of rare interest and excellence. With those who have read the Life, this book will be of great interest, as the writer has been a strong desire to know more of so beautiful a character as S. Francis de Sales. He was a model of Christian and religious virtues, and one of the most illustrious and perfect persons that ever lived. His life and writings are the best guide to all who seek to live a holy and Godliness life. He has left us a body of work which has been and will be for ever a source of inspiration and encouragement to all who desire to live a holy life. His writings are filled with truth, wisdom, and practical advice. He is a model of Christian perfection, and his life is a guide to all who desire to live a holy life.”

—CHURCH HERALD.

“A few months back we had the pleasure of welcoming the Life of S. Francis de Sales. Here is the promised sequel—the Selection from his Spiritual Letters—then announced—and a great book it will be to every believer. The Letters are addressed to people of all sorts—to men and to women—to laity and to ecclesiastics, to persons living in the world, or at court, and to the inmates of Religious Houses. And what an idea it gives one of the widely ramifying religious virtues for all time, and one everything relating to whom, so great were the accomplishments of his mind as well as devotion of his heart, has a charm which delights, instructs, and elevates.”

—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

S. FRANCIS DE SALES, BISHOP AND PRINCE OF GENEVA. By the Author of “A Dominican Artist,” “Life of Madame Louise de France,” &c., &c. Crown 8vo. 9s.

“To those who have read the previous works by the author of this Life of S. Francis de Sales, it is unnecessary for us to say a word of commendation of the present volume. It is written with the delicacy, freshness, and absence of all affectation which characterized the Life of the same author, and which render these books so very much more pleasant reading than are religious biographies in general. The character of S. Francis de Sales, Bishop of Geneva, is a charming one; a simple, pure, and perfect life; it was difficult to conceive. His unaffected humility, his freedom from dogmatism in an age when dogma was placed above religion, his freedom from bigotry in an age of persecution, were alike admirable.”

—STANDARD.

“The author of ‘A Dominican Artist,’ in writing this new life of the wise and loving Bishop and Prince of Geneva, has aimed less at historical or ecclesiastical investigation than at a vivid and natural representation of the inner life and mind of the subject of his biography, as it can be traced in his own writings and in those of his most intimate and affectionate friends. The book is written with the grace and gentleness which characterize the productions of its author, and cannot fail to please those readers who can sympathize with all forms of goodness and devotion to noble purpose.”

—WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

“A book which contains the record of a life as sweet, pure, and noble, as any man by divine help, granted to devout sincerity of soul, has been permitted to live upon earth. The example of this gentle but resolute and energetic spirit, wholly dedicated to the highest conceivable good, offering itself, with all the temporal uses of mankind, existence, to the service of infinite and eternal beneficence, is extremely touching, and a book worthy of acceptance.”

—DAILY NEWS.

“One cannot wonder at its having been thought desirable to introduce to excellent work as this to English Churchmen. We say to English Churchmen, because it must be especially, although it is intended, we learn, that his life shall be immediately followed by a translation of the ‘Spiritual Letters of St. Francis de Sales,’ together with the ‘Essais de S. François de Sales,’ and the ‘Traité de l’Amour de Dieu,’ by Bishop Belley—works which the perusal of the present volume must create a strong desire to possess.”

—CHURCH REVIEW.

“The accomplished author to whom we owe the recent life of Père Besson, the Dominican, has laid us under a fresh debt of gratitude by a later work, a biography of S. Francis de Sales, Bishop and Prince of Geneva. It is not a translation or adaptation, but an original work, and a very charming portrait of one of the most winning characters in the long gallery of Saints. And it is a matter of entire thankfulness to us to find an distinctly Anglican writer setting forward the good Bishop’s work among Protestants, as a true missionary task to reclaim souls from deadly error, and bring them back to the truth.”

—UNION REVIEW.
Messen's. Ridington's Publications

RIVINGTON'S DEVOTIONAL SERIES.
Elegantly printed with red borders. 16mo. 2s. 6d. each.

THOMAS À KEMPIS, OF THE IMITATION OF CHRIST.
Also a Cheap Edition, without the red borders, 1s., or in Cover, 6d.

"A very beautiful edition. We commend it to the Clergy as an excellent gift-book for teachers and other workers."—Church Times.
"This work is a precious relic of medi eval times, and will continue to be valued by every section of the Christian Church."—Weekly Review.
"A beautifully printed pocket edition of this marvellous production of a man, uho, out of the dark mists of piety, saw so much of experimental religion. Those who are well grounded in evangelical truth may use it with profit."—Rock.
"A very cheap and handsome edition."—Church Review.
"This new edition is a marvel of cheapness."—Literary World.

THE RULE AND EXERCISES OF HOLY LIVING. By JEREMY TAYLOR, D.D., Bishop of Down and Connor, and Dromore.
Also a Cheap Edition, without the red borders, 1s.

THE RULE AND EXERCISES OF HOLY DYING. By JEREMY TAYLOR, D.D., Bishop of Down and Connor, and Dromore.
Also a Cheap Edition, without the red borders, 1s.

The 'HOLY LIVING' and the 'HOLY DYING' may be had bound together in One Volume, 5s.; or without the red borders, 2s. 6d.

"An extremely well-printed and well get up edition, as pretty and graceful as possible, and yet not too fine for real use. We wish the devotions of this beautiful book were more commonly used."—Literary Churchman.
"We must admit that there is a want of helps to spiritual life amongst us. Our age is so secular, and in religious movements so bustling, that it is to be feared the inner life is too often forgotten. Our public teachers may, we are sure, gain by consulting books which show us contentedness and self-renunciation may be increased; and in which the pathology of all human affections is treated with a fulness not common in our theological class rooms"—Fremman.

"The publishers have done good service by the production of these beautiful editions of works, which will never lose their preciousness to devout Christian spirits. It is not necessary for us to say a word as to their intrinsic merits; we have only to testify to the good taste, judgment, and care shown in these editions. They are extremely beautiful in typography and in the general getting up."—English Independent.

"We ought not to conclude our notice of recent devotional books, without mentioning to our readers the above new, elegant, and cheap reprint, which we trust will never be out of date or out of favour in the English branch of the Catholic Church."—Literary Churchman.
"These manuals of piety written by the pen of the most beautiful writer and the most impressive divine of the English Church, need no commendation from us. They are known to the world, read in all lands, and translated, we have heard, into fifty different languages. For two centuries they have fed the faith of thousands upon thousands of souls, now we trust happy with their God, and perhaps meditating in Heaven with gratitude on their celestial truths, kindled in their souls by a writer who was little short of being inspired."—Rock.
"These little volumes will be appreciated as presents of inestimable value."—Public Opinion.
"Either separate or bound together, may be had these two standard works of the great divine. A good edition very tastefully printed and bound."—Record.

Also a Cheap Edition, without the red borders, 1s., or in Cover, 6d.

"The Messrs. Ridington have published a new and unabridged edition of that deservedly popular work, Bishop Wilson on the Lord's Supper. The edition is here presented in three forms, suited to the various members of the household."—Public Opinion.
RIVINGTON'S DEVOTIONAL SERIES—Continued.

"We cannot withhold the expression of our admiration of the style and elegance in which this work is got up."—PRESS AND ST. JAMES' CHRONICLE.

"A departed author being dead yet speaketh in a way which will never be out of date; Bishop Wilson on the Lord's Supper, published by Messrs. Rivington, in bindings to suit all tastes and pockets."—CHURCH REVIEW.

"We may here fittingly record that Bishop Wilson on the Lord's Supper has been issued in a new but unabridged form."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

INTRODUCTION TO THE DEVOUT LIFE. From the French of Saint Francis of Sales, Bishop and Prince of Geneva. A New Translation.

"A very beautiful edition of S. Francis de Sales' 'Devout Life': a prettier little edition for binding, type, and paper, of a very great book is not often seen."—CHURCH REVIEW.

"The translation is a good one, and the volume is beautifully got up, and it will prove admirably as a gift book to those who are able to appreciate so spiritual a writer as St. Francis."—CHURCH TIMES.

"It has been the food and hope of countless souls ever since its first appearance two centuries and a half ago, and it still ranks with Scarpina's ' Combattimento Spirituale,' and Arientes's 'Memorials Vita Sacerdotalis,' as among the very best works of ascetic theology. We are glad to commend this careful and convenient version to our readers."—UNION REVIEW.

"We should be curious to know how many different hands 'The Devout Life' of S. Francis de Sales has been translated into English. At least we know of a great number, and it seems to us to be a pity that Messrs. Rivington have not issued another translation of it. The style is good, and the volume is of a most convenient size."—JOHN BULL.

"To readers of religious treatises, this volume will be highly valued. The Introduction to the Devout Life is preceded by a sketch of the life of the author, and a dedication prayer of the author is also given."—PUBLIC OPINION.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE CONCERNING EVIL THOUGHTS: wherein their Nature, Origin, and Effect are distinctly considered and explained, with many Useful Rules for restraining and suppressing such Thoughts; suited to the various conditions of Life, and the several tempers of Mankind, more especially of melancholy Persons. By WILLIAM CHILCOT, M.A.

"An elegant edition of an old devotional manual by a clergyman who was a rector in Exeter at the beginning of the last century. It seems to contain a great deal of valuable truth as to the sources of evil thoughts and the mode in which they may be expressed."—ENGLISH INDEPENDENT.

"The book is worthy of a careful perusal, and is one which once known is likely to be resorted to again and again, a characteristic not always to be met with in works of our own day."—RECORD.

"Messrs. Rivington have done all that publishers could do to give strengthening matter a cheerful form."—CHURCH REVIEW.

THE ENGLISH POEMS OF GEORGE HERBERT, together with his Collection of Proverbs, entitled JACULA PRUDENTUM.

"This beautiful little volume will be found specially convenient as a pocket manual. The 'Jacula Prudentum' or proverbs, deserve to be more widely known than they are at present. In many copies of George Herbert's writings these quaint sayings have been unfortunately omitted."—RECORD.

"George Herbert is too much a household name to require any introduction. It will be sufficient to say that Messrs. Rivington have published a most compact and convenient edition of the poems and proverbs of this illustrious English divine."—ENGLISH CHURCHMAN.

"An exceedingly pretty edition, the most attractive form we have yet seen from this delightful author, as a gift-book."—UNION REVIEW.

"A very beautiful edition of the quaint old English bard. All lovers of the 'Holy' Herbert will be grateful to Messrs. Rivington for the care and pains they have bestowed in supplying them with this and withal convenient copy of poems so well known and so deservedly prized."—LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.

"A very tasteful little book, and will doubtless be acceptable to many."—RECORD.

"We commend this little book heartily to our readers. It contains Herbert's English poems and the 'Jacula Prudentum,' in a very neat volume which does much credit to the publishers; it will, we hope, meet with extensive circulation, and be bought at a moderate price."—CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.
NEW THEOLOGICAL DICTIONARY.

DICTIONARY OF DOCTRINAL AND HISTORICAL THEOLOGY. By various writers. Edited by the Rev. John Henry Complete in one volume of 833 pages, imperial 8vo (equal to six 8vo volumes of 400 pages each), and printed in large readable type, 42s. or half-bound in morocco, 52s. 6d.

1. NATURE OF THE WORK. This Dictionary consists of a series of original Essays (alphabetically arranged, and 575 in number) on all the principal subjects connected with the Doctrines of the Christian Church. Some idea of the subjects, and of the length of the articles, may be formed from the following titles of those which occupy the work from page 700 to page 720.

SIGN. Spinozism. Suffragan.
Socinianism. Subdeacons. Superstition.
Soul. Substance. Supremacy, Papal.

2. OBJECT OF THE WORK. The writers of all the Essays have endeavoured to make them sufficiently exhaustive to render it unnecessary for the majority of readers to go further for information, and, at the same time, sufficiently suggestive of more recondite sources of Theological study, to help the student in following up his subjects. By means of a Table prefixed to the Dictionary, a regular course of such study may be carried out in its pages.

3. PRINCIPLES OF THE WORK. The Editor and his coadjutors have carefully avoided any party bias, and consequently the work cannot be said to be either "High Church," "Low Church," or "Broad Church." The only bias of the Dictionary is that given by Revelation, History, Logic, and the literary idiosyncracy of each particular contributor.
But the Editor has not attempted to assist the circulation of the book by making it colourless on the pretense of impartiality.
Errors are freely condemned, and truths are expressed as if they were worth expressing; but he believes that no terms of condemnation which may be used ever transgress the bounds of Christian courtesy.

4. PART OF A SERIES. The Dictionary of Theology is complete in itself, but it is also intended to form part of a Series, entitled, "A Summary of Theology," of which the second volume, "A Dictionary of Sects, Heresies, and Schools of Thought," is in the press.

"Taken as a whole the articles are the work of practised writers, and well informed and well theologians. ... We know no book of its size and bulk which supplies the information here given at all; for less which supplies it in an arrangement so accessible, with a completeness of information so thorough,
and with an ability in the treatment of profound subjects so great. Dr. Hook's most useful volume is a work of high calibre, but it is the work of a single mind. We have here a wider range of thought from a greater variety of sides. We have here also the work of men who evidently know what they write about, and are somewhat more profound (to say the least), than the writers of the current Dictionaries of Sects and Heresies."—Guadian.

"Mere antiquarianism, however interesting, has little place in it. But for all practical purposes its historical articles are excellent. They are of course, few of necessity, a good deal condensed, yet they are wonderfully complete; see for example such articles as 'Athens,' 'Catholica,' 'Catholicism,' 'Conversion,' 'Convocations,' 'Evangelical,' 'Father,' 'Infant Baptism,' &c., &c. But the structure of the book lies in the theology proper, and herein more particularly in what one may call the metaphysical side of doctrine:—see articles on 'Conception,' 'Doubt,' 'Dualism,' 'Election,' 'Eternity,' 'Everlasting Punishment,' ' Fatalism,' and the like. We mention these characteristic of the book. At the same time other more practical matters are fully dealt with. There are excellent and elaborate papers on such words as 'Eucharist,' 'Confession,' 'Blood,' 'Cross,' 'Antichrist,' to say nothing of the host of minor matters on which it is most convenient to be able to turn to a book which gives you at a glance the path of a whole library in a column or a page. Thus it will be obvious that it takes a very much wider range than any undertaking of the kind in our language; and that to those of our clergy who have not the fortune to spend in books, and would not have the leisure to use them if they possessed them, it will be the most serviceable and reliable substitute for a large library we can think of. Again, while keeping strictly within its province as a Dictionary, it contains to be marvellously suggestive of things which a serious minded man will take with him and ponder over for his own elaboration and future use. As to its not being a key to the whole article on Doubt, it is treated of under the successive heads of:—(1) its nature; (2) its origin; (3) the history of the periods of Doubt; (4) the consciousness—or actual experience of Doubt, and how to deal with its different phases and kinds; (5) the relations of Doubt to action and to belief. To explain a little we will here quote a paragraph or two, which may not be unacceptable to our readers. ... The variety of the references given in the course of this article, and at its conclusion, show how carefully the writer has thought out and studied his subject in its various manifestations in many various minds, and illustrate very forcibly how much reading goes to a very small amount of space in anything worth the name of 'Dictiony of Theology.' We trust most sincerely that the book may be largely used. For a present to a clergyman on his ordination, or from a parishioner to his pastor, it would be most appropriate. It may indeed be called 'a box of tools for a working clergyman.'—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

'Soldiers is an English work of equal magnitude born so peremptorily with Catholic instincts, and at the same time seldom has a work on theology been so free from the drift of rhetorical incrustation. Of course it is not meant that all these remarks apply in their full extent to every article. In a great Dictionary there are compositions, as in a great house there are vessels, of various kinds. Some of these at a future day may be replaced by others more substantial in their build, more proportionate in their outline, and more elaborate in their detail. But admitting all this, the whole remains a home to which the student will constantly recur, sure to find spacious chambers, substantial furniture, and (which is most important) no cincture light.'—CHURCH REVIEW.

"The second and final instalment of Mr. Blunt's useful Dictionary, literally but a part of a more comprehensive plan, is now before the public, and fully sustains the main favourable impression created by the apojacame of the first part. Within the sphere it has marked out for itself, no equally useful book of reference exists in English in the elucidation of theological problems. ... Entries which display much care, research, and judgment in compilation, and in addition, such lucid explanation of theological problems, ... The fact that the utterances are here and there somewhat more guarded and hesitating than quite accords with our judgment, is in no way as far as it protects the work from the charge of inculcating extreme views, and will thus secure its admission in many places where moderation is accounted the crowning grace."—CHURCH TIMES.

"The writers who are at work on it are scholars and theologians, and earnest defenders of the Christian faith. They evidently hold fast the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and have the religious instruction of the rising generation, while keeping strictly within its province as a Dictionary, it contains to be marvellously suggestive of things which a serious minded man will take with him and ponder over for his own elaboration and future use. As to its not being a key to the whole article on Doubt, it is treated of under the successive heads of:—(1) its nature; (2) its origin; (3) the history of the periods of Doubt; (4) the consciousness—or actual experience of Doubt, and how to deal with its different phases and kinds; (5) the relations of Doubt to action and to belief. To explain a little we will here quote a paragraph or two, which may not be unacceptable to our readers. ... The variety of the references given in the course of this article, and at its conclusion, show how carefully the writer has thought out and studied his subject in its various manifestations in many various minds, and illustrate very forcibly how much reading goes to a very small amount of space in anything worth the name of 'Dictionary of Theology.' We trust most sincerely that the book may be largely used. For a present to a clergyman on his ordination, or from a parishioner to his pastor, it would be most appropriate. It may indeed be called 'a box of tools for a working clergyman.'—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

"Soldiers is an English work of equal magnitude born so peremptorily with Catholic instincts, and at the same time seldom has a work on theology been so free from the drift of rhetorical incrustation. Of course it is not meant that all these remarks apply in their full extent to every article. In a great Dictionary there are compositions, as in a great house there are vessels, of various kinds. Some of these at a future day may be replaced by others more substantial in their build, more proportionate in their outline, and more elaborate in their detail. But admitting all this, the whole remains a home to which the student will constantly recur, sure to find spacious chambers, substantial furniture, and (which is most important) no cincture light."—CHURCH REVIEW.

"The second and final instalment of Mr. Blunt's useful Dictionary, literally but a part of a more comprehensive plan, is now before the public, and fully sustains the main favourable impression created by the apojacame of the first part. Within the sphere it has marked out for itself, no equally useful book of reference exists in English in the elucidation of theological problems. ... Entries which display much care, research, and judgment in compilation, and in addition, such lucid explanation of theological problems, ... The fact that the utterances are here and there somewhat more guarded and hesitating than quite accords with our judgment, is in no way as far as it protects the work from the charge of inculcating extreme views, and will thus secure its admission in many places where moderation is accounted the crowning grace."—CHURCH TIMES.

"Messrs. Rivington have published very opportunely, at a time when Churchmen are thinking with satisfaction of the new blood infused into the Chapter of St. Paul's, sermons by Henry Melvill, who in his day was as celebrated as a preacher as is Canon Liddon now. The sermons are not only cast in elegant language, but are replete with matter which the younger clergy would do well to study."

John Bull

"Henry Melvill's intellect was large, his imagination brilliant, his ardor intense, and his style strong, fervid, and picturesque. Often he seemed to groan with the inspiration of a prophet."—American Quarterly Church Review.

"It would be easy to quote portions of exceeding beauty and power. It was not, however, the charm of style, nor wealth of words, both of which Canon Melvill possessed in so great abundance, that he relied on to win souls; but the power and spirit of him who said, 'I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men to me.'"

Record.

"Every one who can remember the days when Canon Melvill was the preacher of the day, will be glad to see these four-and-twenty of his sermons so nicely reproduced. His sermons were all the result of real study and genuine reading, with far more theology in them than those of many who make much more profession of theology. There are sermons here which we can personally remember; it has been a pleasure to us to be reminded of them, and we are glad to see them brought before the present generation. We hope that they may be studied, for they deserve it thoroughly."—Literary Churchman.

"Few preachers have had more admirers than the Rev. Henry Melvill, and the new edition of his Sermons, in two volumes, will doubtless find plenty of purchasers. The sermons abound in thought, and the thoughts are couched in English which is at once elegant in construction and easy to read."—Church Times.

"The Sermons of Canon Melvill, now re-published in two handsome volumes, need only to be mentioned to be sure of a hearty welcome. Sound learning, well-weighted words, calm and keen logic, and solemn sweetness mark the whole series of mastery discourses, which embrace some of the chief doctrines of the Church, and set them forth in clear and Scriptural strength."—Standard.

A HELP TO CATECHISING. For the Use of Clergymen, Schools, and Private Families. By James Beaven, D.D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Toronto. New Edition. 1sno. 2s.

"A volume like this is worth two of Church History. In many respects, indeed, it is the subject of history itself; and with Mr. Medd's introduction and Mr. Walton's editorial work we may be said to have both subject and history thereof. The volume should be in the hands of every member of the Church of England; we may say, 'it should be in the hands of every student of Church History.'—Athenaeum.

"We welcome the reasonable appearance of this work, which indeed supplies a long-felt want, for 'the First Book has been hitherto accessible to very few. . . . It is especially important at the present time that the principles of the first Reformers should be understood; and no one can look through this edition without gaining some definite information on that point. We commend this new edition of the First Prayer Book, with its introduction to the study of all that are desirous of understanding the principles of those who originated the reform of our public Services."—Church News.

"The more that English Churchmen become acquainted with the Reformed Prayer Book, as our English Divines reformed it, apart from the middle of foreign—i.e., the better people became acquainted with 'Edward VI.'s first book,' the better both for themselves and for the English Church at large. We are therefore delighted to welcome this handy and handsome reprint, with which every pain has been taken to make it as accurate as possible."—Literary Churchman.

"Mr. Walton deserves the very best thanks of Anglican Churchmen, for putting this most important volume within their reach in so convenient and handsome a form."—Church Review.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE USE OF CANDIDATES FOR HOLY ORDERS, And of the Parochial Clergy; with Acts of Parliament relating to the same, and Forms proposed to be used. By Christopher Hodgson, M.A., Secretary to the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty. Ninth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 8vo. 16s.

"Real poetry wedded to words that breathe the purest and the sweetest spirit of Christian devotion. The translations from the old Latin Hymnal are close and faithful renderings."—Standard.

"As a Hymn writer Bishop Mant deserves a prominent place in the esteem of Churchmen, and we doubt not that many will be the readers who will welcome this new edition of his translations and original compositions."—English Churchman.

"A new edition of Bishop Mant's 'Ancient Hymns from the Roman Breviary' forms a handsome little volume, and it is interesting to compare some of these translations with the more modern ones of our own day. While we have no hesitation in awarding the palm to the latter, the former are an evidence of the earliest terms of that yearning of the devout mind for something better than Tate and Brady, and which is now so richly supplied."—Church Times.

"This valuable manual will be of great assistance to all compilers of Hymn-books. The translations are graceful, clear, and forcible, and the original hymns deserve the highest praise. Bishop Mant has caught the very spirit of true psalmody, his metre flows musically, and there is a tuneful ring in his verses which especially adapts them for congregational singing."—Rock.

PARISH MUSINGS; OR, DEVOTIONAL POEMS. By John S. B. Monsell, LL.D., Rural Dean, and Rector of St. Nicholas, Guildford. Fine Edition. Small 8vo. 5s. Cheap Edition, 18mo, limp cloth, 1s. 6d.; or in Cover, 1s.

ENGLISH NURSERY RHYMES. Translated into French. By John Roberts, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. Square 16mo. 2s. 6d.

The SHADOW of the CROSS. Illustrated by Birkeret Foster and G. E. Hicks.
The DISTANT HILLS. Illustrated by Samuel Palmer.
The OLD MAN'S HOME. Illustrated by J. C. Hosley, A.R.A., and Birkeret Foster.
The KING'S MESSENGERS. Illustrated by C. W. Cope, R.A.

New Editions. Square crown 8vo., 2s. 6d. each.
The Four Allegories in one Volume. Square 16mo. 5s.
The Cheap Editions may still be had, 18mo., 1s. each, or 6d. in Paper Covers.
A MEMORIAL VOLUME OF SERMONS. By the late Rev. John Henry Holford, M.A. With a short Biographical Preface by the Rev. E. H. Bickersteth, M.A. Small 8vo. 5s.

PRAYERS AND MEDITATIONS FOR THE HOLY COMMUNION. With a Preface by C. J. Ellicott, D.D., Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. With rubrics and borders in red. Royal 32mo. 2s. 6d.

"Devout beauty is the special characteristic of this new manual, and it ought to be a favourite. Rarely has it happened to us to meet with so remarkable a combination of thorough practicalness with that almost poetic warmth which is the highest flower of genuine devotion. It deserves to be placed along with the manual edited by Mr. Keble so shortly before his death, not as superseding it, for the scope of the two is different, but to be taken along with it. Nothing can exceed the beauty and fulness of the devotions before communion in Mr. Keble's book, but we think that in some points the devotions here given after Holy Communion are even superior to it."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

"Bishop Ellicott has edited a book of 'Prayers and Meditations for the Holy Communion,' which, among Eucharistic manuals, has its own special characteristic. The Bishop recommends it to the newly confirmed, to the tender-hearted and the devout, as having been compiled by a youthful person, and as being marked by a peculiar freshness. Having looked through the volume, we have pleasure in seconding the recommendations of the good Bishop. We know of no more suitable manual for the newly confirmed, and nothing more likely to engage the sympathies of youthful hearts. There is a union of the deepest spirit of devotion, a rich expression of experimental life, with a due recognition of the defects of age, such as is not always to be found, but which characterises this manual in an eminent degree."—CHURCH REVIEW.

"The Bishop's intention is attached to 'Prayers and Meditations for the Holy Communion,' intended as a manual for the recently confirmed, nicely printed, and theologically sound."—CHURCH TIMES.

"In freshness and fervour of devotion, few modern manuals of prayer are to be compared with it. Its faults are a few exclusive submissiveness, and a want of realizing the higher Catholic teaching. Thus, the Holy Sacrifice has not its due prominence, the sacrament of Penance is ignored, our full communion with the saints departed is obscured, and the Catholic Church on earth as an outward organisation is put too much in the background. The book, in short, is strictly Anglican, but with a strong tendency to mysticism. For all that, it has a warmth of feeling and a reality of devotion which will endure it to the hearts of many Catholics, and will make it especially a most welcome companion to those among the young who are earnestly striving after the spiritual life."—CHURCH HERALD.

"Among the supply of Eucharistic Manuals, one deserves special attention and commendation. 'Prayers and Meditations' merits the Bishop of Gloucester's epithet of 'warm, devout, and fresh.' And it is thoroughly English Church besides."—GUARDIAN.

"We are by no means surprised that Bishop Ellicott should have been so much struck with this little work, on accidentally seeing it in manuscript, as to urge its publication. It perfectly fulfils the Bishop's commendation. The devotion which it breathes is truly fervent, and the language attractive, and as proceeding from a young person the work is altogether not a little striking."—RECORD.

THE STORY OF THE GOSPELS. In a single Narrative, combined from the Four Evangelists, showing in a new translation their unity. To which is added a like continuous Narrative in the Original Greek. By the Rev. William Pound, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Principal of Appuldurcombe School, Isle of Wight. 2 Vols. 8vo. 36s.

THE HIDDEN LIFE OF THE SOUL. From the French. By the Author of "A Dominican Artist," "Life of Madame Louise de France," &c. Crown 8vo. 5s.

"The Hidden Life of the Soul," by the author of "A Dominican Artist," is from the writings of Father Grou, a French refugee priest of 1799, who died at Lutwirth. It well deserves the character given it of being "earn nest and sober; and not 'sensational.'"— GUARDIAN.

"Returns fifty and sixty short readings on spiritual subjects, exquisitely expressed, and not merely exquisite in expression, but pre senting a rare combination of spiritual depth and of strong practical common sense. We have read carefully a large number of them, for, after reading a few as texts, we could not lay it down without going much further than was sufficient for the mere purpose of re flecting on the book. The author was one Pierre Grou, a native of Calais, born in 1727, who in 1799 found an asylum from the troubles of the French Revolution at Lutwirth Castle, known doubtedly to many of our readers as the ancestral home of the old Roman Catholic family of Wely, where he died in 1803. There is a wonderful charm about these readings—so calm, so true, so thoroughly Christian. We do not know whether the reader will find it so, but it is material for a consecutive series of meditations for the faithful at a series of early celebrations they would be excellent, or for private reading during Advent Lent."—LITURGY CHURCH MAN.

"From the French of Jean Nicholas Grou, a French Priest, who, driven to England by the first Revolution, found a home with a Roman Catholic family at Lutwirth for the ten re maining years of a retired, studious, devout life. The work bears internal evidence of being of a spirit which had been fed on such works as the 'Spiritual Exercises,' the 'Imitation of Christ,' and the 'Devout Life of St. Francis of Sales,' and which has here reproduced them, tested by its own life-experi ence, and cast in the mould of its own individ uality. How much the work, in its present form, may owe to the judicious care of the Editor, we are not sure; but as it is pre sented to us, it is, while deeply spiritual, yet so earnest and sober in its general tone, so free from doctrinal error or unaw遂sement settle ment, that we confidently recommend it to English Church people as one of the most valuable of this class of books which we have met with."—CHURCH BUILDER.

THE WITNESS OF ST. JOHN TO CHRIST; being the Boyle Lectures for 1870. With an Appendix on the Authorship and Integrity of St. John's Gospel and the Unity of the Johannean Writings. By the Rev.
STANLEY LEATHES, M.A., Minister of St. Philip's, Regent Street, and Pro fessor of Hebrew, King's College, London. 8vo. 15s. 6d.

CATECHETICAL NOTES AND CLASS QUESTIONS, Lite ral and Mystical; chiefly on the Earlier Books of Holy Scripture. By the Crown 8vo. 5s.

"Unless we are much mistaken this will be one of the most practically useful of the various posthumous works of Dr. Neale, for the publia tion of which we are indebted to the S.
Margaret's Sisters and Dr. Neale's literary executors. Besides' class notes—lecture notes as most people would call them—on the earlier books of Holy Scripture, there are some most excellent source notes on the Sacraments, and then a collection of notes for catechising chil dren. Throughout these notes are supplemented from other of Dr. Neale's papers, and in particular we would specify an admirable appendix of extracts from Dr. Neale's sermons (chiefly unpublished), bearing upon points touched on in the text."—LITERARY CHURCH MAN.

"The writer's wide acquaintance with Medieval theology renders his notes on the Old Testament peculiarly valuable."—JOHN BULL.

HERBERT TRESHAM. A Tale of the Great Rebellion. By the late

"We cordially welcome a new edition of Dr.
Neale's 'Herbert Tresham.' The scene is laid in the time of the great civil war, and vivid pictures are drawn of some of the startling events that then disgraced the history of this country. The martyrdom of Archbishop Laud is vividly and fearlessly treated in its author could equal, while the narration of the disas trous battle of Naseby, and the disgraceful surrender of Bristol by Prince Rupert, afford proof of the versatility of his genius."—CHURCH TIMES.

"A pleasant Christmas present is Dr.
Neale's 'Herbert Tresham.' Such a book is well calculated to correct current views of 17th century history."—SOUTHERN REVIEW

"Nothing could be more admirable as a Christmas present."—CHURCH NEWS.
SELECTIONS FROM MODERN FRENCH AUTHORS.
With English Notes. By Henry Van Laun, Master of the French Language and Literature at the Edinburgh Academy. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. each.

Honorable de Balzac.

H. A. Taine.

"This selection answers to the requirements expressed by Mr. Love in one of his speeches on education, where he recommended that boys should be attracted to the study of French by means of its lighter literature. M. Van Laun has executed the task of selection with excellent taste. The episodes he has chosen from the vast 'Human Comedy' are naturally such as do not deal with passions and experiences that are proper to mature age. Even thus limited, he had an overwhelming variety of material to choose from; and his selection gives a fair impression of the terrible power of this wonderful writer, the study of whom is one of the most important means of self-education open to a cultivated man in the nineteenth century."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Or bound with the Sermon "Life in Death," 3s. 6d.

THE MANOR FARM: A TALE. By M. C. Phillpotts, Author of "The Hillford Confirmation." With Illustrations. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"The Manor Farm, by Miss Phillpotts, author of the 'Hillford Confirmation,' is a pious story, which amongst other things shows the good influence, a selfish girl became a useful and gentle daughter. The story is a capital illustration of the value of perseverance, and it is a book that will be very useful in parochial reading-ladies."—John Bull.

"A pretty get-up and prettily written little book above the average of the class it belongs to."—EDINBURGH COURANT.

"The twofold object of this work is to present the English with correct descriptions of the ceremonies of the Greco-Russian Church, and at the same time with pictures of domestic life in Russian homes, especially those of the clergy and the middle class of nobles; and beyond question, the author’s labour has been so successful that, whilst her Church scenes may be compared as a series of most dramatic and picturesque tableaux, her social sketches enable us to look at certain points beneath the surface of Russian life, and materially enlarge our knowledge of a country concerning which we have still a very great deal to learn."—ATHENÆUM.

"The volume before us is anything but a formal liturgical treatise. It might be more valuable to a few scholars if it were, but it would certainly fail to obtain perusal at the hands of the great majority of those whom the writer, not unreasonably, hopes to attract by the narrative style she has adopted. What she has set before us is a series of brief outlines, which, by their simple effort to clothe the information given us in a living garb, reminds us of a once-popular children’s book which we remember a generation ago, called 'Sketches of Human Manners.'"—CHURCH TIMES.

THE MACCABEES AND THE CHURCH; Or, the History of the Maccabees Considered with Reference to the present Condition and Prospects of the Church. Two Sermons preached before the University of Cambridge. By CHR. WORDSWORTH, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"The most simple, the richest, and the most perfect sacred poem which recent days have produced."—MORNING ADVERTISER.

"A poem of the most pleasing, moving, and noble of introspective study; full of noble thoughts, beautiful diction, and high imagination."—STANDARD.

"He is a man who cultivates at once reverence and earnestness of thought."—GUARDIAN.

This tastefully bound volume is a record of the life of Père Besson. From childhood to his premature death in April 1861, at the age of forty-five, he was pre-eminently suited to a life of self-denial, and so full of love and charity, that his purity of heart formed the warmest admiration, and we feel sure the perusal of it will give pleasure to our readers."—CHURCH HERALD.

"Whatever a reader may think of Père Besson’s profession as a monk, no one will doubt his goodness; no one can fail to profit who will patiently read his life, as here written by a friend, whose sole defect is in being slightly unctuous."—ATHENÆUM.

"The life of Père Besson, who gave up an artist’s career, to which he was devotedly attached, and a mother whose affection for him is not inly likened to that of Monica for St. Augustine, must be read in its entirety to be rightly appreciated. And the whole tenor of the book is too devotional, too full of expressions of the most touching dependence on God, to make criticism possible, even if it was called for, which it is not."—JOHN BULL.

"The story of Père Besson’s life is one of much interest, and told with simplicity, candour, and good feeling."—SPECTATOR.

"A beautiful book, describing the most saintly and very individual life of one of the companions of Lacordaire."—MONTHLY PACKET.

"We strongly recommend it to our readers. It is a charming biography, that will delight and edify both old and young."—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.
THE CHURCH BUILDER. A Quarterly Journal of Church Extension in England and Wales. Published in connection with The Incorporated Church Building Society. With Illustrations. Volumes for 1870 and 1871. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d. each.

"Anyone who wishes for simple information on the subjects of Church-architecture and furniture, cannot do better than consult ‘Stones of the Temple.’ Mr. Field modestly disclaims any intention of supplanting the existing regular treatises, but his book shows an amount of research, and a knowledge of what he is talking about, which make it practically useful as well as pleasant. The wood-cuts are numerous and some of them very pretty."—Graphic.

"A very charming book, by the Rev. Walter Field, who was for years Secretary of one of the leading Church Societies. Mr. Field has a loving reverence for the beauty of the domus manu. Viri, as the old law books called the Parish Church. Thoroughly sound in Church feeling, Mr. Field has chosen the medium of a tale to embody real incidents illustrative of the various portions of his subject. There is no attempt at elaboration of the narrative, which, indeed, is rather a string of anecdotes than a story, but each chapter brings home to the mind its own lesson, and each is illustrated with some very interesting engravings. The work will properly command a hearty reception from Churchmen. The footnotes are occasionally most valuable, and are always pertinent, and the text is sure to be popular with young folks for Sunday reading."—Standard.

"Mr. Field's chapters on brasses, chancel screens, crosses, encaustic tiles, mural paintings, parches and monuments, are agreeably written, and people with a turn for Ritualism will not doubt find them satisfying. The volume, as one has said, is not without significance for readers who are unable to sympathise with the object of the writer. The illustrations of Church-architecture and Church ornaments are very attractive."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE HAPPINESS OF THE BLESSED CONSIDERED as to the Particulars of their State: their Recognition of each other in that State; and its Differences of Degrees. To which are added Musings on the Church and her Services. By Richard Mant, D.D., sometime Lord Bishop of Down and Connor. New Edition. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d.

"A welcome republication of a treatise once highly valued, and which can never lose its value. Many of our readers already know the falseness and dissimulation with which the author treats his subject, which must be one of the most delightful topics of meditation to all whose heart is where the only true treasure is, and particularly to those who are entering upon the evening of life."—Church Review.

"The value of this book needs not to be referred to, its standard character having been for many years past established. The edition in which it reappears has evidently been carefully prepared, and will be the means of making it more generally known."—Bell's Messenger.

EXAMINATION OF CONSCIENCE UPON SPECIAL SUBJECTS. Translated and Abridged from the French of Tronson. Forming a Volume of THE ASCETIC LIBRARY: A Series of Translations of Spiritual Works for Devotional Reading from Catholic Sources. Edited by the Rev. Orby Shiple, M.A. Square Crown 8vo. 5s.

“It is a much larger and more elaborate work than is usually devoted to this subject, and arranged on a different plan. The chief virtues and sins have each a section given to them, and the examination is cast in the form of a meditation, with first, second, and third points. The enquiries made of the soul are very searching, and are so framed that self-knowledge, and as a consequence self-condemnation, most necessarily result from the conscientious use of the book. It is especially adapted; the that much is required of being studied from the ordinary manuals, and who are yet aiming at a higher life than common. For Religious houses it would be invaluable, while in private, more especially, perhaps, to mistresses of novices. It strikes us as a book highly suggestive to those who conduct orders.”—Church Times.

“This is volume IV. of the series known as the Ascetic Library, and of all the volumes of the series yet published it strikes us as by far the most useful. . . Singularity practical and judicious, so that it is difficult to say to what class of persons it will be most useful—men who take it for personal use, those who adopt it as a guide in religious exercises, or the preacher who uses it as a help in the composition of sermons addressed to the conscience rather than to the intellect. There are some excellent pages on Devotional Reading; while as to the subject of penitence it may give some idea of the method of the book to mention the headings of its successive sections: ‘Fruits of Penitence,’ viz.:—Hatred of Sin, Self-Aversion, Love of the Cross, Peace of Heart.”—Literary Churchman.

“It is a pleasing sign to see such books as these re-called for the supply of so great a need. No one but a master of the spiritual life could have compiled a set of reflections so searching and yet so concluding as the book before us. We had a difficulty in laying open to itself the mind of the most spiritual, to reveal the self-deceptions and snares lying in its way, and invaluable, more especially, perhaps, to mistresses of novices. It strikes us as a book highly suggestive to those who conduct orders.”—Church Review.

“Louis Tronson’s self-questionings and meditations range over a wide field—from faith and love to God, from the dearest practised in working and rising, conviction, and travelling. We should be far from asserting that his book contains nothing good; on the contrary, much of it is excellent in sentiment and devout in expression may be found in it.”—Record.

SERMONS ON SPECIAL OCCASIONS. By Daniel Moore, M.A., Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, and Vicar of Holy Trinity, Paddington; Author of Hulsean Lectures on “The Age and the Gospel,” “Aids to Prayer,” &c. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

“The Sermons which Mr. Moore has here collected in a single volume, though preached to widely differing audiences, are all distinguished by the dominant characteristic which marks all his writings—a calm sobriety of thought, feeling, and expression, well fitting the topics which he selects, but not likely to command very novel and striking thoughts, or to meet the special requirements of an eager, busy, and intellectual age. Whether preached before the Queen and the Royal Prince, to a more select audience, or to assembled thousands under the dome of St. Paul’s, they speak the same quiet thoughtful message, clothed in the same chastened language, and aiming at one effect.”—Staaan.

“We do not wonder at Mr. Moore’s long continued popularity with so many hearers; there is something pleasing and so much genuine desire to discharge his duty as a preacher visible through all the volume. We feel it is done with selfless arrangement of the subject, admirable clearness, and in a style both of thought and language, the prime qualification of all, “in doctrine, uncorrupted.”—London Quarterly Review.

THE SHEPHERD OF HERMAS. Translated into English, with an Introduction and Notes. By Charles H. Hoole, M.A., Senior Student of Christ Church, Oxford. Small 8vo. 4s. 6d.

"These Essays will be found to have something to satisfy most classes of readers; the lovers of legends proper, the curiosi in popular delusions, the initiated in Darwinism and Madame Blavatsky's theories, and, if, on the chapters on Tell and Goliath, we are a little struck with the close following of Dante's touch, in his preface to the Divine Comedy, it must be owned that there are chapters—e.g., those on the Diminishing Red, The Man in the Moon, and the Seven Sleepers—which present new matter, and deserve the praise of independent research."—QUARTERLY REVIEW.

"If the hour be ever, it is sometimes fanciful and overbold in his conclusions; but he conducts us through marvellous ways—ways which he has studied well before he undertakes to guide others; and if we do not always acquiesce in his descriptions or arguments, we seldom differ from him without hesitation."—SPECTATOR.

"We have no space to linger longer about a book which, apart from its didactic pretensions, is an exceedingly amusing—nay, it may be said, a collection of old stories and legends of the middle ages."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

"That, on his first visit to England, found seed of mediavel mythology, Mr. Barings-Gould should have cultivated as examples of its richness the most brilliant of the flowers that grow in it, is scarcely to be wondered at. But it shows how fertile is the soil when he is enabled as he is to do exercise to the extent which he has presented to us. The myths treated of in the present volume vary in interest, but are all well worth reading."—NOTES AND QUERIES.

THE LIFE OF MADAME LOUISE DE FRANCE, daughter of Louis XV. Known also as the Mother Térèse de St. Augustin. By the Author of "Tales of Kirkbeck." Crown 8vo. 6s.

"Such a record of deep, earnest, self-sacrificing, pious, beneath the surface of Eristian life, during what we all regard as the worst age of French godlessness, ought to teach us all a lesson. To hope and faith, by observing how they may best serve us through the mysterious ways—ways which he has studied well before he undertakes to guide others; and if we do not always acquiesce in his descriptions or arguments, we seldom differ from him without hesitation."—LITERARY CHURCHMAN.

"On the 15th of July, 1737, Marie Lesziona, the wife of Louis XV., and daughter of the deposed King of Poland, which Prussia helped to depose and plunder, gave birth to her eight female child, Louise Marie, known also as the Mother Térèse de St. Augustin. On the death of the Queen, the princess, who had long felt a vocation for a religious life, obtained the consent of her royal father to withdraw from the world. The Carmelites convent of St. Denis was the chosen place of retreat. Here the novice was passed, here the final vows were taken, and here, on the death of the Mère Térèse, Madame Louise began and terminated her experiences as prioress. The little volume which records the simple incidents of her pious seclusion is designed to edify those members of the Church of England in whom the spirit of religious self-devotion is reviving. The substance of the memoir is taken from a somewhat diffuse 'Life of Madame Louise de France,' compiled by a Carmelite nun, and printed at Autun; and the editor, the author of "Tales of Kirkbeck," was prompted to the task by the belief, that 'at the present time, when the spirit of religious self-devotion is so greatly reviving in the Church of England,' the records of a princess who quitted a dazzling and profligate court to lead a life of obscure piety will meet with a cordial reception. We may remark, that should the event prove otherwise, it will not be from any fault of workmanship on the part of the editor."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"The annals of a consecrated life, under ordinary circumstances, would not probably be considered very edifying by the reading public of the present generation. When, however, such a history presents the novel spectacle of a royal princess of modern times voluntarily renouncing her high position and the splendour of a court existence, for the purpose of enduring the asceticism, poverty, and austerity of a severe monastic life, the case may well be different."—MORNING POST.

THE PRIEST TO THE ALTAR; or, Aids to the Devout Celebration of Holy Communion; chiefly after the Ancient Use of Sarum. Second Edition. Enlarged, Revised, and Re-arranged with the Secretes, Post-Communion, &c., appended to the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, throughout the Year. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

A KEY TO THE KNOWLEDGE OF CHURCH HISTORY. (Ancient.) Edited by JOHN HENRY BLUNT, M.A. (Forming the third Volume of Keys to Christian Knowledge). Small Svo. 2s. 6d.

"It offers a short and condensed account of the origin, growth, and condition of the Church in all parts of the world, from A.D. 1 down to the end of the fifteenth century. Mr. Blunt's first object has been conciseness, and this has been admirably carried out, and to students of Church History, compressed feature will readily recommend itself. As an elementary work, 'A Key' will be specially valuable, inasmuch as it points out certain definite lines of thought, by which those who enjoy the opportunity will be guided in reading the statements of more elaborate histories. At the same time it is but fair to Mr. Blunt to remind us that, if little changes were made, the little volume contains everything that could be consistently expected in a volume of its character. There are many notes, theological, scriptural, and historical, and the 'get up' of the book is specially commendable. As a text-book for the higher forms of schools the work will be acceptable to numerous teachers."—Public Opinion.

"It contains some concise notes on Church History, compressed fact and character, and we think it likely to be useful as a book of reference."—John Bull.

"A very large and reliable collection of the main facts and incidents connected with Church History."—Rockhampton Guardian.

"It will be excellent, either for school or home use, either as a reading or as a reference book, on all the subjects it treats, and its usefulness is certain to increase; to the second edition it will add the controversies of the first fifteen centuries. It is both well arranged and well written."—Literary Churchman.

THE POPE AND THE COUNCIL. By JANUS. Authorized translation from the German. Third Edition. Crown Svo. 7s. 6d.

"A profound and learned treatise, evidently the work of one of the first theologians of the day, discussing with the scientific fulness and precision proper to German investigation, the great doctrinal questions expected to come before the Council, and especially the proposed dogma of Papal Infallibility. There is probably no work in existence that contains at all, still less within so narrow a compass, so complete a record of the origin and growth of the infallibility theory, and of all the facts of Church history bearing upon it, and that too in a form so clear and concise as to put the arguments within reach of any reader of ordinary intelligence, while the scrupulous accuracy of the writer, and his constant reference to the original authorities for every statement liable to be disputed, makes the monograph as a whole a perfect storehouse of valuable information for the historical or theological student."—Saturday Review.

"Beginning with a sketch of the errors and contradictions of the Popes, and of the position which, as a matter of history, they held in the early Church, the book proceeds to describe the three great forgeries by which the Papal claims were upheld—The Isidorian Decretals, the doctrine of Constantine, and the decrees of Gratian. The last subject ought to be carefully studied by all who wish to understand the true policy of the Papal system of law, devised not for the protection of a people, but for instruments for grinding them to subjection. Then, after an historical outline of the general growth of the Papal power in the tenth and eleventh centuries, the writer enters upon the peculiarly episcopal and clerical question, pointing out how various and intricate the papal power had grown. The monastic orders and the Inquisition, gradually withdrew the conduct of affairs from the Bishops of the Church in general, and consolidated the Papal influence. For all this, however, unless we could satisfy ourselves with a mere magnified table of contents, the reader must be referred to the book itself, in which he will find the interest sustained without flagging to the end."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"In France, in Holland, and in Germany, there has already appeared a multitude of disquisitions on this subject. Among these several are the acknowledged compositions of men of high standing in the Roman Catholic world,—men admirably entitled to speak with the authority that must attach to established reputation; but not one of them has hitherto produced a work more likely to create a deep impression than the anonymous German publication at the head of this notice. It is not a piece of merely polemical writing; it is a treatise dealing with a large subject in an impressive though partisan manner, a treatise grave in tone, solid in matter, and bristling with forcible and novel illustrations."—Speculator.

"Rumour will, no doubt, be busy with its conjectures as to the name which lurks beneath the nom de plume of 'Janus.' We do not intend to offer any contribution towards the elucidation of the mystery, unless it be a contribution to say that the book bears internal evidence of being the work of a Catholic, and that there are not many Catholics in Europe who could have written it. Taking it all in all, it is no exaggerated praise to characterize it as the most devastating assault on Ultramontanism that has appeared in modern times. Its learning is copious and complete, yet so admirably arranged that it invariably illustrates without being worked in one direction, invariably tending to throw the rule of the Church into the power of Rome; and all the great institutions, like the monastic orders and the Inquisition, gradually withdrew the conduct of affairs from the Bishops of the Church in general, and consolidated the Papal influence. For all this, however, unless we could satisfy ourselves with a mere magnified table of contents, the reader must be referred to the book itself, in which he will find the interest sustained without flagging to the end."—Times.

Messen's Livington's Publications 23

"This is one of the few volumes of published sermons that we have been able to read with real pleasure. They are written with a chastened elegance of language, and pervaded by a spirit of earnest and simple pietry. Mr. Williams is evidently what would be called a very high Churchman. Occasionally his peculiar Church views are apparent; but only a few passages here and there, these sermons will be read with profit by all 'who profess and call themselves Christians.'—Contemporary Review.

"This is a new edition of a very popular—

THE WITNESS OF ST. PAUL TO CHRIST: being the Boyle Lectures for 1869. With an Appendix, on the Credibility of the Acts, in Reply to the Recent Strictures of Dr. Davidson. By the Rev. STANLEY LEATHES, M.A., Professor of Hebrew, King's College, London, and Incumbent of St. Philip's, Regent Street. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

A KEY TO THE NARRATIVE OF THE FOUR GOSPELS. By JOHN PILKINGTON NORRIS, M.A., Canon of Bristol, formerly one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools. (Forming the Fourth Volume of Keys to Christian Knowledge.) Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"This is very much the best book of its kind we have seen. The only fault is its shortness, which prevents its going into the details which would support and illustrate its statements, and which in the process of illustrating them would fix them in the minds and memories of its readers. It is, however, a great improvement upon any book of its kind we know. It bears all the marks of being the condensed work of a real scholar, and of a divine too. The bulk of the book is taken up with a 'Life of Christ' compiled from the Four Gospels so as to exhibit its steps and stages and salient points. The rest of the book consists of independent chapters on special points."—Literary Churchman.

"This book is no ordinary compendium, no mere 'crumb-book'; still less is it an ordinary reading-book for schools; but the schoolmaster, the Sunday-school teacher, and the seeker after a comprehensive knowledge of Divine truth will find it worthy of its name. Canon Norris writes simply, reverently, without great display of learning, giving the result of much careful study in a short compass, and adorning the subject by the tenderness and honesty with which he treats it. . . . We hope that this little book will have a very wide circulation and that it will be studied; and we commend it to those who take it, and will not readily put it down again."—Record.

"This is a golden little volume. Having often to criticise unsharply volumes published by Messrs. Rivington, and hearing the deep High Church brand, it is the greater satisfaction to be able to commend this book so emphatically. Its design is exceedingly modest. Canon Norris writes primarily to help 'younger students' in studying the Gospels. But this unpretending volume is one which all students may study with advantage. It is an admirable manual for those who take Bible Classes through the Gospels. Closely sullied in style, so that all is clear and weighty; full of unseasoned learning, and pregnant with suggestion; deeply reverent in spirit, and altogether Evangelical in spirit; Canon Norris's book supplies a real need, and ought to be welcomed by all earnest and devout students of the Holy Gospels."—London Quarterly Review.

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE CATHEDRAL SYSTEM VINDICATED AND FORCED UPON MEMBERS OF CATHEDRAL FOUNDATIONS. Eight Sermons, preached in the Cathedral Church of the Holy and Undivided Trinity of Norwich. By EDWARD MEYRICK GOULBURN, D.D., Dean of Norwich, late Prebendary of St. Paul's, and one of Her Majesty's Chaplains. Crown 8vo. 5s.

"It is the first work of its class that needs no apology for its introduction, as it is really much needed especially by teachers, who would fail without the aid of its principles to account for many of the effects in modern music, used in direct opposition to the teaching of the schools. It is difficult, if not impossible, to give a more elaborate description of a book destined to effect an entire change in musical teaching without entering into details that could not but prove uninteresting to the general readers, while to the musician and amateur, the possession of the book itself is recommended as a valuable confirmation of ideas that exist to a large extent in the minds of every one who has ever thought about music, and who desires to see established a more uniform basis of study. The great and leading characteristic of the work is its logical reasoning and definitions, a character not possessed by any previous book on the subject, and for this Dr. Stainer's theory is certain to gain ground, and be the means of opening an easy and pleasant path in a road hitherto beset with thorns and briars of perplexing technicalities."—Morning Post.

"Dr. Stainer is a learned musician, and his book supplies a manual of instruction as well as a rich repository of musical tradition in the form of classical quotations from the great masters."—John Bull.

"Dr. Stainer, in his thoughtful book, sees clearly of amalgamating opposing systems in order to found a theory of harmony. He bases his work on the tempered scale, and he develops and illustrates his theory by questions and exercises for the use of students. His opening exposition of the rudiments of music is clear: when he reaches the regions of harmony he comes on debatable ground."—Athenaeum.

"To the student perplexed and chained down by the multitudinous rules of the old theorists, we cannot give better comfort than to advise him to read forthwith Dr. Stainer's ingenious and thoughtful book. It is exceedingly well got up, and from the clearness of the type used, very easy and pleasant to read."—Choir.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER: A Review of Public Events at Home and Abroad, for the Year 1870. 8vo. 18s.

* * All the Volumes of the New Series from 1863 to 1869 may be had, price 18s. each.

"Well edited, excellent type, good paper, and in all respects admirably got up. Its review of affairs, Home, Colonial, and Foreign, is fair, concise, and complete."—Mining Quarterly.

"Solidly valuable, as well as interesting."—Standard.

"Comprehensive and well executed."—Spectator.

"The whole work being well-written, and compiled with care and judgment, it is interesting reading for the present day, will be more useful as a work of reference in future years, and will be most valuable of all to readers of another generation. Every student of history knows the worth, for the time that it covers, of the old 'Annual Register'; and this new series is better done and more comprehensive than its predecessor."—Examiner.

"This volume of the new series of 'Annual Register' seems well and carefully compiled. The narrative is accurate, and it is obvious that the writers have striven to be impartial."—Athenaeum.

"The whole of the compilation, however, is readable, and some of its more important parts are very well done. Such is, among other historical portions, the account of the situation in France before and at the beginning of the war. The narrative of the military events is clear, comprehensive, and attractive."—Nation (New York).

"For that large class of English readers to whom German is still a sealed book, Mr. Plummer's clear and readable version of a work of considerable historical interest, and displaying all the profound and conscientious research for which the author is distinguished, will be a most valuable boon."—Saturday Review.

"Those who are acquainted with the German edition of this book of Dr. Döllinger's will be surprised, perhaps, to see the moderate pamphlet size swollen into its English dress to the size of a comely volume. This may partly be accounted for by the long and able 'Introduction' from the pen of the translator, and by Notes and Appendices with which he has elucidated portions of the text. The translation is such as may be read easily, with no slight praise by the way, and the side notes indicate the contents of the paragraphs are highly serviceable in a work of this kind. Students of Church History who find an English book less trouble to read than a German one will thank the translator for the pains which he has taken in their behalf."—Church Times.
THOUGHTS ON PERSONAL RELIGION; being a Treatise on the Christian Life in its Two Chief Elements, Devotion and Practice. By EDWARD MEVRICK GOULBURN, D.D., Dean of Norwich. New Edition. Small 8vo. 6r. 6d.

An Edition for Presentation, Two Volumes, small 8vo. 10r. 6d.
Also a cheap Edition. Small 8vo. 3r. 6d.

DEVOTIONAL COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPEL ACORDING TO S. MATTHEW. Translated from the French of Pasquier Quesnel. Crown 8vo. 7r. 6d.

"We can hardly give him (Pasquier Quesnel) higher praise than to say that he reminds us in many ways of the author of the 'Imitation.' There is the same knowledge of human nature, shrewdness of observation, intimate acquaintance with the spiritual, difficulties, and temptations of the spiritual life, and that fervour and concentration which result from habitual meditation and prayer."—CLERICAL JOURNAL.

"This Commentary is what it purports to be 'devotional.' There is no criticism, no suggestion of difficulties, no groupings of 'verses readings.' Its object is to give 'the spiritual soul of Holy Scripture, and this object is admirably carried out. We are glad to be able to give it our hearty and unqualified approval."—John Bull.

The work which many devout persons feel for a Commentary on the Scriptures with individual, practical, and devotional application, can hardly be better satisfied than by that of "Quesnel."—Church News.

"This translation is based upon that made by the Non-juror Russell, and it has been especially adapted for the use of members of the English Church in private devotion. It is a very acceptable manual for the religious, and its simple and practical character may be gleaned from the following comment."—English Independent.

THE HILLFORD CONFIRMATION: A TALE. By M. C. PHILLPOTTS. 18mo. 1r.

APOTOLICAL SUCCESSION IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By the Rev. ARTHUR W. HADDAN, B.D., Rector of Barton-on-the-Heath, and late Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford. 8vo. 12r.

"Mr. Hadden's estimate of the hearing of his subject, and of its special importance at the present juncture is characteristic, and will well repay attention. . . . Mr. Hadden is strictly argumentative throughout. He abjures with some strictness from everything which would divert either his reader or himself from accurate investigation of his reasoning. But his volume is thoroughly well written, clear and forcible in style, and fair in tone. It cannot but render valuable service in placing the claim of the Church in their true light before the English public."—Guardian.

"Among the many standard theological works devoted to this important subject Mr. Hadden will hold a high place."—Standard.

"We should be glad to see the volume widely circulated and generally read."—John Bull.

"A weighty and valuable treatise, and we hope that the study of its sound and well-reasoned pages will do much to fix the importance, and the full meaning of the doctrine in question, in the minds of Church people. . . . We hope that our extracts will lead our readers to study Mr. Hadden for themselves."—Library CHURCHMAN.

"This is not only a very able and carefully written treatise upon the doctrine of Apocalyptic Succession, but it is also a calm yet noble viadication of the validity of the Anglican Orders; it well sustains the brilliant reputation which Mr. Hadden left behind him at Oxford, and it supplements his other profound historical researches in ecclesiastical matters. This book will remain for a long time the classic work upon English Orders."—Church Review.

"A very temperate, but a very well reasoned book."—Westminster Review.

"Mr. Hadden ably sustains his reputation throughout the work. His style is clear, his inferences are reasonable, and the publication is especially well-timed in connection with the forthcoming Ecumenical Council."—Cambridge University Gazette.

Also, a School Edition, without the Appendix. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d.

(Copies may be had without the Answers to the Exercises.)

"We may congratulate Mr. Girdlestone on having produced a thoroughly philosophical book on this most useful subject. It appears to be especially suited for older students, who, having been taught imperfectly and irrationally in the earlier part of their school career, desire to go over the whole ground again from the beginning; but in the hands of an intelligent and discriminating teacher, it may also be perfectly adapted to the comprehension of young boys."—TIMES.

"Mr. Girdlestone's Arithmetic is admirably suited to the requirements of higher forms in schools, and for men at the Universities. Mr. Girdlestone shows himself a thorough teacher; processes are lucidly explained, and practical solution of problems well given."—GUARDIAN.

"We must content ourselves with this brief general notice of the work, which we consider one of the highest order of its kind—far, very far superior to those of former days."—NAUTICAL MAGAZINE.

"Mr. Girdlestone's definitions are concise but explicit, and quite plain to modest understandings. So successful a work has rapidly won favour, and the first edition having been exhausted, a second has now been issued, bearing further marks of the author's comprehensive ability. An Appendix contains examination papers of Oxford, Cambridge, Winchester, Eton, &c., and will be found most useful to students preparing for public examinations. This book should rank as a standard one of its class."—EXAMINER.

PHYSICAL FACTS AND SCRIPTURAL RECORD; OR, EIGHTEEN PROPOSITIONS FOR GEOLOGISTS. By W. B. GALLOWAY, M.A., Vicar of St. Mark's, Regent's Park, and Chaplain to the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Hawarden. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE GREEK TESTAMENT. With a Critically Revised Text; a Digest of Various Readings; Marginal References to Verbal and Idiomatic Usage; Prolegomena; and a Critical and Exegetical Commentary. For the use of Theological Students and Ministers. By HENRY ALFORD, D.D., late Dean of Canterbury. New Edition. Four Volumes. 8vo. 102s.

The Volumes are sold separately as follows:—
Vol. I.—The Four Gospels. 25s.
Vol. II.—Acts to II. Corinthians. 24s.
Vol. III.—Galatians to Philemon. 18s.
Vol. IV.—Hebrews to Revelation. 32s.

DEAN ALFORD'S GREEK TESTAMENT, with English Notes intended for the Upper Forms of Schools and for Pass-men at the Universities. Abridged by BRADLEY H. ALFORD, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE NEW TESTAMENT FOR ENGLISH READERS: containing the Authorized Version, with a revised English Text; Marginal References; and a Critical and Explanatory Commentary. By HENRY ALFORD, D.D., Dean of Canterbury. New Edition. Two volumes, or four parts. 8vo. 34s. 6d.

The Volumes are sold separately, as follows:—
Vol. 1, Part I.—The Three first Gospels. 12s.
Vol. 1, Part II.—St. John and the Acts. 10s. 6d.
Vol. 2, Part II.—Hebrews to Revelation. 8vo. 16s.
ARISTOPHANIS COMOEDIAE. Edited by W. G. GREEN, M.A., late Fellow of King’s College, Cambridge. Classical Lecturer at Queen’s College.

THE ACHARNIANS AND THE KNIGHTS.
This Edition of the Acharnians and the Knights is revised and especially adapted for Use in Schools. Crown 8vo. 4s.

P. TERENTII AFRI COMOEDIAE. Edited by T. L. PAPILLON,
M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford, and late Fellow of Merton.
ANDRIA ET EUNUCHUS. Forming a part of the “Catena Classicorum.” Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

CLASSICAL EXAMINATION PAPERS. Edited, with Note and References, by P. J. F. GANTILLON, M.A., sometime Scholar of St John’s College, Cambridge ; Classical Master in Cheltenham College. Crown
8vo. 7s. 6d. Or interleaved with writing-paper for Notes, half-bound
10s. 6d.

HISTORIÆ ANTIQUÆ EPITOME: Founded on the Two Firs Portions of the Lateinisches Elementarbuch, by Jacobs and Doering. By the Rev. THOMAS KERCHEVER ARNOLD, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity

THE Iliad OF HOMER, from the Text of Dindorf. With Preface and Notes. By S. H. REYNOLDS, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford. Books I. to XII. Crown 8vo. 6s. Forming a Part of the “Catena Classicorum.”

MATERIALS AND MODELS FOR GREEK AND LATIN
PROSE COMPOSITION. Selected and arranged by J. Y. SARGENT,
M.A., Tutor, late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford; and T. F. DALLIN,
M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Queen’s College, Oxford. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

PROGRESSIVE EXERCISES IN LATIN ELEGIAIC
VERSE. By C. G. GEPP, B.A., late Junior Student of Christ Church, 8vo. 3s. 6d. Tutor’s Key, 5s.

THE PROPERTIES OF TRIANGLES AND THEIR CIRCLES TREATED GEOMETRICALLY. By C. W. BOURNE, M.A., Assistant Mathematical Master at Marlborough College. Fcap. 4to. 2s. 6d.

A HANDY BOOK ON THE ECCLESIASTICAL DILAP-DATIONS ACT, 1871. With Remarks on the Qualification and Practice of Diocesan Surveyors. By EDMUND G. BRUTON, Fellow of the Royal 3s. 6d.
DEMOTHEISI LOWATIONES PRIVATAE. Edited by the Rev. ARTHUR HOLMES, M.A., Senior Fellow and Lecturer of Clare College, Cambridge; and Preacher at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall.

DE CORONA. Forming a new Part of "Catena Classicorum."

Crown 8vo. 5s.

"Mr. Holmes has compressed into a convenient shape the enormous mass of annotation which has been accumulated by critics, English and foreign, on Demosthenes' famous oration, and has made no trifling contributions of his own. . . . In purely critical questions the notes show all the subtle scholarship which we should expect from so renowned a classic as Mr. Holmes."—SPECTATOR.

"This is the latest of that excellent series 'Catena Classicorum.' . . . Mr. Holmes has a high reputation at Cambridge, and his notes on the De Corona show an accurate and painstaking scholarship."—RECORD.

"With so admirable an edition of this great and difficult speech of the greatest of ancient orators, there can be no valid reason why any schoolmaster should exclude the De Corona from the classical course of his pupils. Its points of law, its historical allusions, its illustrations of Greek scholarship, upon which Mr. Holmes's notes give every assistance, are far too valuable to be lost sight of either by pupil or master. It is by far the most scholarly and the most useful edition we have yet seen of Demosthenes."—STANDARD.

RIVINGTON'S MATHEMATICAL SERIES

ALGEBRA. Part I. By J. HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A., of Gonville and Caius College, and late Lecturer at St. Peter's College, Cambridge. 12mo. 2s. 6d.

With Answers, 3s.

"The design of this treatise is to explain all that is commonly included in a First Part of Algebra. In the arrangement of the chapters, I have followed the advice of experienced teachers. I have carefully abstained from making fresh books in such common use. The only work to which I am indebted for any material assistance is the Algebra of the late Dean Peacock, which I took as the model for the commencement of my treatise. The examples, progressive and easy, have been selected from university and college examination papers, and from Old English, French, and German works."—From the Preface.

"It is evident that Mr. Hamblin Smith is a teacher, and has written to meet the special wants of students. He does not carry the student out of his depth by sudden plunges, but leads him gradually onward, never beyond his depth from any desire to hurry forward. The examples appear to be particularly well arranged, so as to afford a means of steady progress. With such a judicious teacher will have abundant supply of examples and problems for those who need to have each step ensured by familiarity, and he will be able to allow the more rapid learner to travel onward with ease and swiftness. We can confidently recommend Mr. Hamblin Smith's books. Candidates preparing for Civil Service examinations under the new system of pen competition will find these works to be of great value."—CIVIL SERVICE GAZETTE.

EXERCISES ON ALGEBRA. Part I. By J. HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A. 12mo. 2s. 6d. Copies may be had without the Answers.

ELEMENTARY TRIGONOMETRY. By J. HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A. 12mo. 4s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY HYDROSTATICS. By J. HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A. 12mo. 3s.

ELEMENTS OF GEOMETRY. By J. HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A.

Part I., containing the First Two Books of Euclid, with Exercises and Notes, arranged with the Abbreviations admitted in the Cambridge Examinations. 12mo. 2s.; limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

Part II., containing the Third and Fourth Books of Euclid, with Exercises, &c. 12mo. 2s.; limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

Parts I. and II. bound together, 3s.

Part III., to complete the Volume, is just ready.

ELEMENTARY STATICS. By J. HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A. 12mo. 3s.
THE ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF. By S. BARING-GOULD, M.A., Author of "Curious Myths of the Middle Ages."
Vol. II. CHRISTIANITY. 8vo. 15s.

"The ability which Mr. Baring-Gould displays in the treatment of a topic which branches out in so many directions, and requires such precise handling, is apparent. His pages abound with the results of large reading and calm reflection. The man of culture, thought, philosophical cast, is mirrored in the entire argument. The book is sound and healthy in tone. It excites the reader's interest, and brightens the path of inquiry opened to his view. The language, too, is appropriate, neat, lucid, often happy, sometimes wonderfully terse and vigorous."—ATHENEAUM.

"Mr. Baring-Gould has undertaken a great and ambitious work. And no one can deny that he possesses some eminent qualifications for this great work. He has a wealth of erudition of the most varied description, especially in those particular regions of mediæval legend and Teutonic mythology which are certain to make large contributions to the purpose he has in hand. It is a contribution to religious thought of very high value."—GUARDIAN.

"Mr. Baring-Gould's work, from the importance of its subject and the lucid force of its exposition, as well as from the closeness of argument and copiousness of illustration with which its comprehensive views are treated, is entitled to attentive study, and will repay the reader by amusement and instruction."—T.

"There is very much in the book for High Churchmen to ponder over. This remarkable book teems with striking passages and it is written in a quiet, self-possessed, loving spirit, and our hope is that any of our readers take up the book to read, they will read it through to the end, since by so doing will they alone be able to enter into the spirit of one who in these times will have much power for good or evil in our Anglican Church."—CHURCH REVIEW.

"The book is a very remarkable one, which very few of our modern divines could have written, and none but those who study it with care and a keen intelligence will be able to understand or appreciate. Within our present limits, we can but glance at its general characteristics, and must still leave the knotty problems in divinity which it leaves unsettled to be discussed and settled by the more learned judges. But in spite of the magnitude of his subject, its difficulty, grandeur, and importance, we are bound to add that he has managed to deal vigorously and wisely with many of these topics, and again and again opens to the reader new lines of thought of the deepest interest and most profound importance. More devotional readers it will do little more than annoy and disappoint; but all who are really in earnest, and love the truth well enough to work hard for it, will here find much worthy of their most careful study."—STANDARD.

"Mr. Baring-Gould's book is interesting, learned, ingenious; bringing contributions to his thesis from most divergent sources, he fits them in with masterly completeness and logical consistency."—NONCONFORMIST.

SCENES FROM GREEK PLAYS. Rugby Edition. Abridged and adapted for the Use of Schools, by ARTHUR SIDGWICK, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby School, and formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.
EURIPIDES. Iphigenia in Tauris. The Cyclops.
Small 8vo. 1s. 6d. each, or 1s. in paper cover.

VERSCIULI ALIQUOT LATINI. By WILLIAM ALMACK, of St. John's College, Cambridge, and one of the Masters of Bradfield College.
Crown 8vo. 4s.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ARISTOTLE'S ETHICS. Books I.—IV. (Book X., c. vi.—ix. in an Appendix.) With a Continuous Analysis and Notes. Intended for the Use of Beginners and Junior Students. By the Rev. EDWARD MOORE, B.D., Principal of S. Edmund Hall, and late Fellow and Tutor of Queen's College, Oxford. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

"A charming collection from the best writers of passages suitable in seasons of sickness and affliction."—Church Times.

"A very valuable collection of extracts from writers of every school. The volume is elementary."—Church Times.

"A very useful collection of devotional extracts from the histories of good men of very various schools of thought."—John Bull.

"We are bound to admire the extreme beauty and the warm devotion of the majority of passages here collected to smooth the soul that sorrow, even though penned by men from whom we differ so much in doctrine."—Record.

A KEY TO THE KNOWLEDGE AND USE OF THE HOLY BIBLE. By the Rev. J. H. Blunt, M.A. (Forming a Volume of "Keys to Christian Knowledge.") Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"Another of Mr. Blunt's useful and workmanlike publications, which will be most acceptable as a household book, or in schools and colleges. It is a capital book too for schoolmasters and pupil teachers."—Literary Churchman.

"As a popular handbook, setting forth a selection of facts of which everybody ought to be cognizant, and as an exposition of the claims of the Bible to be received as of supernatural origin, Mr. Blunt's 'Key' will be useful."—Churchman.

A great deal of useful information is comprised in this book which will no doubt be extensively circulated in Church families."—Clerical Journal.

"We have much pleasure in recommending a capital handbook by the learned editor of 'The Annotated Book of Common Prayer.'"—Church Times.

"Merits commendation for the lucid and orderly arrangement in which it presents a considerable amount of valuable and interesting matter."—Record.

A KEY TO THE KNOWLEDGE AND USE OF THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. By the Rev. J. H. Blunt, M.A. (Forming a Volume of "Keys to Christian Knowledge.") Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.

"A very valuable and practical manual, full of information, which is admirably calculated to instruct and interest those for whom it was evidently specially intended—the lady of the Church of England. It deserves high commendation."—Churchman.

"A thoroughly sound and valuable manual."—Church Times.

"To us it appears that Mr. Blunt has succeeded very well. All necessary information seems to be included, and the arrangement is excellent."—Literary Churchman.

"It is the best short explanation of our offices that we know of, and would be invaluable for the use of candidates for confirmation in the higher classes."—John Bull.

THE BOOK OF LESSONS. Containing the Proper Lessons and Psalms for Sundays and Holy Days, together with the Daily Lessons from the Calendar. Crown 8vo. 9s.

THE BOOK OF DAILY LESSONS. Containing the Lessons selected from the Old Testament, together with the New Testament, according to the Revised Tables of 1871. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

HYMNS AND POEMS FOR THE SICK AND SUFFERING. In connection with the Service for the Visitation of the Sick. Selected from various Authors. Edited by T. V. Fosbery, M.A., Vicar of St. Giles's, Reading. New Edition. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SICKNESS; ITS TRIALS AND BLESSINGS. New Edition. Small 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Also a Cheap Edition, 1s. 6d.; or in paper cover, 1s.

MISCELLANEOUS POEMS. By HENRY FRANCIS LyTE, M.A. New Edition. Small 8vo. 5s.

CATECHESIS; OR, CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION PREPARATORY TO CONFIRMATION AND FIRST COMMUNION. By CHARLES Wordsworth, D.C.L., Bishop of St. Andrew's. New Edition. Small 8vo. 2s.

