Will Christ Come Again?

By SHEERA MATHEW, University of Chicago

Will Christ come again? (If so, when?) The question is often put before those who are interested in Christian truth and the future of mankind. Many people have been taught that Christ will come again, but there are also those who believe that it is a question of faith and that it cannot be proved or disproved by scientific means.

In answering this question, we must consider the nature of the Christian faith. The Christian faith is based on the belief in the divinity of Jesus Christ, who is the Son of God and the Messiah of Israel. He was crucified and rose from the dead, and he will come again in glory to judge the living and the dead.

The Bible teaches that Christ will return to earth in the future, and this is a central doctrine of the Christian faith. The return of Christ is often referred to as the Second Coming, and it is a key event in the Christian calendar.

In summary, the Christian faith teaches that Christ will come again, but the exact nature and timing of this event is a matter of faith and not of scientific proof. The Christian faith is based on the belief in the divinity of Jesus Christ and his promises to return to earth in the future.

PRUSSIANISM vs. PEACE.

To the Editor of The Capital:

I am writing to express my concern about the current political climate in the country. It is clear that there is a growing divide between those who support the use of force to resolve conflicts and those who advocate for peaceful resolution. In this context, I would like to highlight the importance of understanding the different approaches to conflict resolution.

Pruussianism, as a political ideology, is based on the belief that military strength is the key to national security and prosperity. It advocates for a strong military and a aggressive foreign policy, which can lead to war and instability.

On the other hand, the philosophy of peace focuses on cooperation and dialogue as means to resolve conflicts. It promotes the idea that negotiation and diplomacy are more effective than force in achieving peace.

In my opinion, it is crucial to recognize the differences between these two approaches and to encourage a more balanced perspective. Peace and security can be achieved through dialogue and understanding, while the use of force should be a last resort.

Sincerely,

[Name]
