CLARENCE A. HUNTER
Formerly with W. M. Poindexter, Topeka, and Director to Max Currenss.

FUNERAL DIRECTOR
BURLINGAME, KANSAS

Will take complete charge of funerals, including casket, barrel, carriages and flowers. My experience of several years with Topeka's largest firm of funeral directors fits me to carry out the wishes of patrons in every detail and in the most correct and satisfactory manner.

Either motor or horse drawn car as desired. All calls answered promptly day or night.

Residence Phone 8, Business Phone 78.

Clarence A. Hunter

WILL CHRIST COME AGAIN?
By CHARLES MATHEWS, University of Chicago.

What do those who say the Bible teaches the return of Jesus teach? Do they teach that Christ is coming to this world to bring in the millennium? Do they teach that Christ is returning to earth to establish the kingdom of God? Or do they teach that Christ is returning to earth to establish the kingdom of God in a spiritual sense, as the outworking of the gospel in this world? These are the questions that are involved in the doctrine of the second coming of Christ.

For those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus, the first question is answerable by the statement that Christ is coming to this world to bring in the millennium. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

For those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus, the second question is answerable by the statement that Christ is returning to earth to establish the kingdom of God. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

For those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus, the third question is answerable by the statement that Christ is returning to earth to establish the kingdom of God. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

Therefore, those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus teach that Christ is coming to this world to bring in the millennium. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

For those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus, the second question is answerable by the statement that Christ is returning to earth to establish the kingdom of God. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

For those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus, the third question is answerable by the statement that Christ is returning to earth to establish the kingdom of God. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

Therefore, those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus teach that Christ is coming to this world to bring in the millennium. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

For those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus, the second question is answerable by the statement that Christ is returning to earth to establish the kingdom of God. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

For those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus, the third question is answerable by the statement that Christ is returning to earth to establish the kingdom of God. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.

Therefore, those who believe that the Bible teaches the return of Jesus teach that Christ is coming to this world to bring in the millennium. This is the view taught by the early Christians, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. They believed that Christ would return to earth to establish the kingdom of God, and they taught that this would be the end of the world. This view was held by the early Christians until the end of the first century, and it was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century. It was the view held by the early Christians until the end of the first century.